Local musician releases second single

Addie Levy is known for her bluegrass music talent in southwest Virginia and is quickly making a name in Nashville.

Addie Levy started learning to play bluegrass music at the age of 10 and formed a band called Gate 10, which performed several times in downtown Christiansburg, Radford, and around the area.

But it was an appearance at Dollywood that really gave her an understanding of what the music world was all about.

She appeared in several specials at the amusement park and even got a chance to meet Dolly herself. This led to a move to Nashville with the hope like all musicians of making it big. She married, changing her name to Pratt and has now released two singles.

Her first, "Blue Mountain," was released last month, and speaks to the feeling of nostalgia while remembering her early start.

"I had written this song back in 2021 driving back and forth to the Wohlfahrt Haus Dinner Theatre (in Wytheville) when we were performing Smoke on the Mountain Homecoming," said Levy. "I was inspired by Infamous Stringdusters cover of 'Just Like Heaven' with their resounding lick through the song and knew I needed to write one like that. It's inspired by the Blue Ridge Mountains and the fact that they provide so much comfort no matter what has been going on."

Levy plays the mandolin and handles lead vocals on Blue Mountain.

She said the response to the release has been amazing.

"I've been fortunate to have been featured on two Spotify editorial playlists and hit 5,000 within a month and some change. It's been played on radio stations all over."

The move to Nashville has been great for the Pulaski County High School graduate.

"I have fallen in love with the (music) scene here (in Nashville) and getting involved playing music all over. I have been playing at the bluegrass spots around town, fiddling down on Broadway, and traveling with bands playing for them. My hopes are to work towards a full-time position with a touring band and continue to play music full-time."

This past week, she released her second single called "Ring Around the Roses." Both singles can be found at: YouTube or on Spotify, or on her we page <https://www.addielevy.com>.

The next step is an entire album, and Levy said that could take place by the spring.

Business students get firsthand advice from local entrepreneurs

RADFORD - More than Radford business students recently got firsthand lessons on the challenges facing today's entrepreneurs, straight from a pair of local professionals who've successfully weathered an array of recent storms from the pandemic to inflation.

That Oct. 16 meeting was part of an ongoing discussion, hosted annually at Kyle Hall by the Department of Economics to mark World Food Day, which is observed every fall by the member states of the United Nations and which recognizes the founding of the UN Food and Agriculture Organization.

Across 90 minutes, the two guests

– Keith Weltens, co-owner and chief operating officer of Long Way Brewing in Radford and Seth Locklear, co-founder and brewhouse manager of Iron Tree Brewing in Christiansburg – discussed business topics as well as this year's theme, "Water is Life, Water is Food."

Weltens said Long Way draws from the New River and is "very fortunate in that the water never stops ... and it's very well maintained. So, we don't have a lack of water, but certainly the quality of that water is important."

In a further regional tie, Weltens' Long Way Brewing is located in Radford's former Seventh Day Adventist Church on Second Street and partners in that spot with the Radford Fairlawn Daily Bread, a nonprofit organization that provides free meals to those in need.

Both breweries debuted under the shadow of the coronavirus pandemic – Long Way opened its doors in December 2020, and Iron Tree followed in 2021.

"Our timing worked out well," Locklear explained, saying that Iron Tree launched "right as Covid regulations were starting to open up."

"We had nice groups from Christiansburg, ready to actually go out and do something, and that helped us get started," he said.

During the question-and-answer session, students asked Weltens and Locklear about brewery start-up costs, supply chain issues, the current role of marketing and advertising, the influence of social media and the specific choice by both owners to locate their businesses in the New River Valley.

"To live in Blacksburg costs the same as to live in Austin, Texas. Let that sink in. Austin, Texas is godawful expensive," Weltens said. "Radford is half that."

"So, can you afford the opportunities that Blacksburg would give you? Or would you have to look at opening up something else somewhere else?" he asked, reminding them that as business students with easy access to information technology, they're in a unique position to find out most things they need to know to start their own enterprises and calculate the budgets they'll need to go forward.

"You will figure that out because that's your investment in you," Weltens told them.

Locklear advised the audience to "know your skill set" and use it to their advantage. He holds a degree in construction management and got into the business as a home brewer who was encouraged by friends who liked his product.

"Getting into brewing was a

Izaak Walton League hosts the Battle of Badges law enforcement tactical competition

Lori Graham

Contributing writer

Battle of the Badges 2023 brought together 82 law enforcement officers in a unique environment for camaraderie, training and competition on Saturday, Nov. 4 at the Izaak Walton League facility in Christiansburg.

Officers from Montgomery County and the City of Radford participated in the event.

The Izaak Walton League is a national organization that "helps to conserve, maintain, protect, and restore the soil, forest, water, and other natural resources of the United States and other lands; to promote means and opportunities for the education of the public with respect to such resources and their enjoyment and wholesome utilization," according to their website at <http://www.cburgiwla.org/>.

The organization is located on Izaak Walton Lane in Christiansburg and maintains a large and active membership. Each new member must be sponsored by a current member and complete an orientation and safety training session. Members are expected to complete volunteer hours as the organization is run completely through the support of the individuals that utilize the facility.

Membership dues and applications can be found on their website.

Mike Brosius, Vice President of the Izaak Walton League, traveled between stages by golf cart assisting in keeping the event running smoothly on Saturday, and served as guide to media as the Battle of the Badges event was underway. Brosius explained that the organization does quite a bit of outreach to the youth in the area, educating students on stormwater waste management, soil conservation, fish and wildlife, and weapon safety.

President of the Izaak Walton League Pete Jobst was also on-site to assist in the operations of the event. Jobst explained the types of outreach they do for Montgomery County youth in cooperation with the school system.

"A lot of guys think this is just a shooting range, right, but this isn't. It's more community now," Jobst said. "Montgomery County Schools, they do their Stormwater Days down here; approximately 750 middle-school students in two days."

The Izaak Walton League funds the transportation for the students to come to the location where they can learn more about water conservation and management, among other things. Another great feature at the facility is their fisheries. The club holds a free fishing rodeo for youth. These are just some of the events that the League holds every year.

"Everything here is sponsored by the shooting sports," Jobst said.

"We wouldn't be here without firearms," Jobst said. "That's tough for people to digest sometimes, but if you look at all the things we are able to do because of it, I think you have to look at the fact that we are safe gunowners and we train people."

Preston Woodrum is the organizer of the Battle of the Badges event that began in 2022 with 39 competitors from law enforcement, more than doubling that number this year. The shooting competition and training involves law enforcement to perform on six different staged environments with a variety of barriers to move behind and around, shooting from around or through vehicles, buildings, and are scored on accuracy and speed. Only the current shooter on the range will have ammunition in their weapon and they must use their service weapon to participate.

"Most law enforcement training, shooting wise, you are just standing in one spot, shooting at a target that is three yards from you. Here, we have targets that move, you run around, they are engaging targets while they are on the move," Woodrum said.

Safety is of the highest priority at the event. A trained law enforcement officer closely runs behind each competing shooter holding a box that measures accuracy among other things, but this person also serves a role in safety.

"He's doing two things. He's keeping the time, but most importantly, he's making sure at all times, the muzzle of other guns are off range, keeping everyone safe, and he [the current shooter] is not turning around and flagging people. The dew in the morning, grass could be wet, if somebody falls, keeping him as safe as possible," Woodrum said. "Making sure that when the shooter is finished, that he unloads, and being sure that all officers are safe. It is a dry range, so the only time officers have ammo in their weapon is when they are on the range."

Woodrum emphasized the importance of local law enforcement coming together to train and socialize together.

"If something bad happens in the county, we are all going to go," Woodrum said. "Everybody from every jurisdiction within Montgomery County is going to show up, so this is an opportunity to train with all these guys in the various agencies, if that day would come, or when that day would come, they know who they are responding with."

Law enforcement officers from all over the eastern part of the United States, including Ohio, Maryland, and Pennsylvania made the trip. Two United States Federal Marshalls were also in attendance at the event and helped in making the event safe and fun for everyone.

The winners of the 2023 Battle of the Badges competition are:

- 1st - Colin Shine
- 2nd - Robbie Hearn
- 3rd - Matt Corkey
- 4th - Trevor Merrell
- 5th - Andy Metro

"Prizes were donated by businesses and six pistols were donated to give away. We reached out to other sponsors as well," Brosius said.

The outpouring of money and prizes was incredible. Sponsors listed on the back of printed t-shirts for the event were Powerzone, Kesler Contracting, Dominion Door and Hardware, Inc., All Call Towing, Gunbutter, Timney Triggers, New River Engraving, Sentry, Alien Gear Holsters, Blue Alpha, HighCom, Fire Rescue Tactical, Vortex Optics, Iceman Design, PACT, HRT, High Speed Gear, and of course, the Izaak Walton League of America. OPINION

Car dealerships bring back great memories of Christiansburg

Evans "Buddy" King
Columnist

I've written a couple of columns in the past on my memories of downtown Christiansburg during my youth. They were well received by those who grew up in my era, and so I thought I might try another piece on businesses I remember from that time. In this one, I'm going to focus on the car dealers I remember.

I have come to realize that any attempt at this sort of stroll down memory lane is a mere snapshot in time, sometimes with a blurry lens, so please forgive any errors or omissions. While my law firm carries "e and o" coverage on me for my mistakes at work, I have no such thing for my columns, so no claims please. And apologies in advance for any errors or omissions.

While this story will likely be of more interest to folks who grew up in Christiansburg during this period, I hope it also provides a glimpse of what the town was like then, when the economy was not nearly as developed, locally or nationally or internationally, as it is now. Simpler days.

Most businesses in the area in those days were locally owned. The car dealerships were no different. There were fewer choices and who you bought from was important to friendships and relationships. (For example, my good friend from CHS days Connie B., whose family owned the "News Messenger" until just a few years ago, told me that her family only shopped at businesses which advertised in their newspaper. Made sense. My dad preferred doing business with people who supported the public schools).

My earliest memory of car dealerships in town is of Epperly Pontiac, located just across the railroad tracks in Cambria, next to Bane Coal and Oil. It was owned by Paul Epperly whose son Larry was a classmate of mine and teammate in various sports from first grade through twelfth. Larry's mom Nina and my mom, along with Ruth Lester (Larry's mom), were leaders of the Cub Scout pack we were in. We all went to the same church and family lore had it that the Kings and Epperlys were in fact even related, a fact borne out by ancestry.com.

All three of the male Epperlys, Paul and his sons, Jimmy and Larry, had a distinct walk, leaning forward and attacking. I recall that if you happened to be in their car lot "just looking" at stickers, you knew you would not be able to escape if Paul, or later Jimmy, came out of their building looking to sell you a car. They got on you quick. They epitomized service and hometown friendliness. And they liked to sell!

I remember that we had a couple of Pontiacs when I was living on Cherry Lane. These cars had front hoods which had been used in World War II as landing strips for fighter planes. To say they were big does not begin to do them justice.

Paul knew that if my dad selected a Pontiac as the family car of choice, my Aunt Maggie would get one too. A big decision of that nature would always be shared throughout my mother's family. So, two for one for Paul.

Before the "Pontiac era" of the King family, which started when I was around the fifth or sixth grade, my folks had Chevrolets (a classic 57 and a 62 Bel Aire) purchased from Ward Teel at Teel Chevrolet, I believe.

Later, Teel-Harvey for a short while, until Mr. Harvey (father of another classmate and great friend of mine, George Jr.) moved to Radford and started his own very successful dealership. In fact, over the years Mr. Harvey eventually acquired all of the General Motors dealerships in the market - running the gamut of Chevy, Pontiac, Buick, Oldsmobile, and Cadillac. This feat was equaled by my mom and dad, who became more affluent after I was out on my own and my dad's retirement paid him more than he had made while working. I remember how thrilled my parents were to finally buy a Caddy at the end of the "GM progression", which they owned the last 10 years of their lives, "putting" 12,000 miles on over those years. Truly, a "grocery store, beauty parlor and church on Sunday" car.

Another iconic Christiansburg business of those days was Homer Cox Ford. Homer was quite the character and salesman and was married to the lovely Georgia Cox, who was my homeroom and math teacher in the seventh grade and probably the first teacher I had a crush on.

While I don't think I ever had a "bad" teacher in those days (and with my superintendent dad, would not have been allowed to say it even if it had been so), my teachers in grades one through six trended towards "matronly" and "school marmish." If you looked up "opposite of matronly" in the dictionary, Georgia's picture would have been there. She was also an excellent and entertaining teacher who made school fun (at least as much fun as math can be), and I'm sure I was far Scammers are like viruses: they continually evolve in response to the latest news and trends. Here are two scam variations that experts have seen trending so far in 2023.

"Wrong number" texts seem harmless, but they are a means of establishing a conversation that turns into a relationship that can last for weeks or months.

Eventually, the new friend explains how they've made a lot of money investing in crypto, or gold futures, and they can show you how, too. Be on guard for these 'errant' texts - don't respond and block the number.

The new twist on package delivery scams comes with a text from a "driver" who can't find your house. They may ask you to click on a link which could install credential-stealing malware onto your device. Don't trust links, period. If you're awaiting a delivery and get a text, contact the carrier through a means you know to be legitimate to see if there's a problem. Tip: there won't be.

Be a fraud fighter! If you can spot a scam, you can stop a scam.

- November 6, 2020: $2.03/g (U.S. Average: $2.10/g)
- November 6, 2019: $2.35/g (U.S. Average: $2.64/g)

West Virginia- $3.26/g, down 6.1 cents per gallon from last week's $3.32/g.

"For the seventh straight week, we've seen the national average price of gasoline decline. With cooler weather comes cooler gasoline prices, and as we inch closer to the Thanksgiving holiday, prices will continue to fall virtually coast to coast. Eight states are now seeing average gas prices below $3 per gallon," said Patrick De Haan, head of petroleum analysis at GasBuddy. "While the national average is now at its lowest since March, the decline is likely to continue for at least another couple of weeks, with California likely soon falling below $5, while more states fall under $3. Millions of Americans already have access to $2.99/gal or cheaper, and I expect that number to continue to grow this week."

Patricia's love for her daughter was immeasurable, and she took immense pride in Sara's accomplishments and boasted about her daughter's achievements to anyone who would listen. Her love extended to her beloved grand-

In remembrance of Patricia Boyle, we kindly request that, instead of traditional condolences, you share your cherished memories and photos of her to celebrate her life. Patty's spirit was filled with love, compassion, and kindness and though her life was regrettably cut short, we aim to honor her beautiful legacy by preserving the profound love she shared with those around her. Radford University partners with SVCC for Honors College pathway

RADFORD - Radford University and Southwest Virginia Community College (SVCC) have reached a transfer agreement granting SVCC Honors students guaranteed admission to Radford's Honors College, beginning with the fall semester in 2024.

A memorandum of understanding was signed by officials from both institutions, including Radford University President Bret Danilowicz and SVCC President Tommy Wright, on Friday, Nov. 3 in a ceremony inside Martin Hall on the Radford main campus.

"At Radford University, we strongly believe in creating opportunities for students from Virginia's community colleges and we are proud to partner with Southwest Virginia Community College and its Honors College," said Danilowicz. "This new agreement allows high-achieving students to find a perfect fit for their educational and career goals within one of Radford's richest and fastest-growing learning environments. The unique experiences of the Honors College are more accessible than ever, as transfer students who are Virginia residents can now benefit from the Radford Tuition Promise, which covers tuition costs for those with household incomes of $100,000 or less."

The transfer agreement provides SVCC associate's degree graduates with an advanced educational opportunity in Radford's Honors College. Eligibility is open to SVCC students who complete credit hours within the Honors core curriculum, conduct a capstone research project, participate in community service, and have earned a 3.5 grade point average (on a 4.0 scale) at SVCC and any other institution.

"We are excited to partner with Radford University to provide a pathway for Southwest Virginia Community College Honors College students to smoothly transition into the Radford Honors College," said Southwest Virginia Community College President Tommy Wright. "This partnership will open doors for students at both institutions to access a world of opportunities and reflects our commitment to empowering our students for success in their academic and personal journeys."

Students who transfer to Radford's Honors College will enjoy the full benefits of participation in an academic program and Living-Learning Community (LLC) defined by intellectual curiosity and active educational engagement. Individuals who complete the 27-credit hour honors curriculum graduate as Highlander Honors Scholars, the highest academic distinction for Radford undergraduates. Those who complete the 15-credit honors curriculum graduate with the Highlander Honors Distinction. Both achievements appear on the student's diploma and include special regalia at graduation.

"Providing a seamless transfer between the two honors programs allows SVCC students to create important connections before they transfer to Radford," said Provost and Senior Vice President for Academic Affairs Bethany Usher, Radford University. "This partnership enhances the abilities of SVCC Honors students to be immediately involved with our notable undergraduate research and other programs when they arrive here. Radford University benefits from having these bright and curious students enrich our campus."

Along with academic programming, Honors College students have a dedicated residence hall in Floyd Hall and uniquely tailored scholarly and social opportunities within the LLC. In addition, Honors College students gain access to advising from the college's faculty fellows and receive priority course registration.

"The Honors Program at Southwest Virginia Community College prepares students to be future leaders in our communities and provides opportunities to accelerate their education through experiential learning activities," said SVCC Vice President of Academic and Student Services Robert Brandon. "Having a pathway for these talented and motivated students to continue their journey at Radford University ensures that there will be no gaps in their quest for excellence. The sky is the limit for these students."

New generation learning to play "the people's instrument" thanks to The Blues Initiative

Lori Graham

Contributing writer

The Blues Initiative, supported by the New River Blues (NRB) Society and Christiansburg Institute, is impacting the next generation of young musicians by teaching the sweet sounds and rhythm of blues music and providing free harmonicas to children ages 8-18.

Thor Hanes, blues musician, singer, NRB Society Board Member and instructor, led the group of children, with their parents accompanying them, on learning about the rich history and sound of blues music. Hanes explained just how far an interest in blues music could take a passionate musician, even at a young age, and local organizations are wanting to see that happen.

"If you wanted to proceed with music, we'd really like to try to help you," Hanes said. "You would get to play at gigs, and you would get to play at local events, festivals, performances; if you played with a band, people would love it."

A blues convention happens every January and blues organizations like the New River Blues Society help youth 21 years of age and under to get the practice and support they need to get to the event, Hanes said.

Chris Sanchez, Director of the Christiansburg Institute, joined in the fun with the children during the presentation held at the Blacksburg Library. He asked the children to express what they think the blues is, leaving the young observers stumped. Sanchez then shared what he knows about the music genre.

"I don't know what the blues really is, but we have some friends that we are growing with at the CI and the New River Blues Society," Sanchez said. "We know blues has been a big tradition at the Christiansburg Institute."

The Christiansburg Institute was the only school for black students in Southwest Virginia prior to desegregation. Sanchez said the school had a great music program and that he and present staff member, Scanning Technician Demiah Smith, were excited to be a part of the Blues Initiative.

The introductory course began with Hanes teaching the young audience about the birthplace of the blues, and why rhythm is so important in learning to play. The class's first exposure to the blues was presented through the Twelve Bar Blues, a very popular chord progression in music; on the harmonica, and it consists of three chords.

"Blues started in places like New Orleans and Mississippi and spread out from there. Went to Kansas City, went to Georgia, went to Chicago, went to Blacksburg," Hanes said. "Simply put, rhythm is dividing music into equal parts."

Hanes followed through with his promise to the children that they would be playing the blues in 30 minutes. After passing out a free harmonica to every child, they were taught the "huff and puff" method of breathing in and out on the harmonica through holes. Reeds inside the harmonica vibrate to produce notes. Versatile and lightweight, it is called "the people's instrument."

"Why is it called the people's instrument?" Hanes asked. "I'm going to go to Chris Sanchez for this one. Chris, why is it called the people's instrument?"

"Everyone can breathe," Sanchez said.

"Playing harmonica is breathing in rhythm," Hanes said.

Stacie Hanes on acoustic guitar, and Dan O'Donnell on bass guitar, accompanied two brave, and very young souls who performed in their first jam session that night. Standing behind the microphone to play before their first audience with their newly acquired harmonicas, were Emerson and Ethan Herrera, six-and-four-year-old siblings. The young Herreras played with freedom and expressed an astounding rhythm for such a young age.

Handouts were given to each child and their parents with information on what was presented during the session as well as additional songs they could play applying single-note production on the harmonica.

Parents wanting more information on the program, or adults 18-21 years of age, interested in learning more about the Blues Initiative should reach out to NRB Society Blues members Vernon Kelley or Thor Hanes through the organization's website at www.newriverbluessociety.com or through their Facebook page.

The Rising Silo in Blacksburg also hosts a blues event every Wednesday evening showcasing local blues groups and is open to everyone.

Beginning harmonica players, six-year-old Emerson Herrero and four-year-old Ethan Herrero, jam on their new harmonicas, accompanied by Stacie Hanes on acoustic guitar and Dan O'Donnell on bass guitar.

President of the New River Blues Society Vernon Kelley speaks to children and their parents about how excited their organization is to support the Blues Initiative, exposing and encouraging youth to the historical tradition of Blues music.

Thor Hanes demonstrates playing a tiny harmonica at the children's group lesson held at Blacksburg Library.

Dealerships

from the only kid with a crush on her. A few years ago I realized that my late wife strongly resembled Georgia, which explains a few things!

Homer's dealership was on Roanoke Road, next to the original Wade's Supermarket at the foot of Ellett Drive. Homer was entertaining and friendly and a regular at Round Meadow Country Club and the better restaurants in the county. Later, as an adult on trips to town to visit my folks, I would occasionally be lucky enough to run into Homer and Georgia in a restaurant and have a drink with them. I never lost the crush.

A few more memories of Christiansburg car dealers. Before Teel and Teel-Harvey Chevrolet, there was Adair Chevrolet, owned by a good friend of my dad's, Jimmy Adair. I have three memories of Adair Chevrolet.

First, I remember that the scoreboard at the football field at the old CHS was made of wood and shaped like a large football attached to a platform showing the scores by quarters where some lucky kid got to climb up a ladder and hang numbers just like at Fenway Park. I also remember that the scoreboard bore the name Adair Chevrolet.

The second thing I remember about Adair Chevrolet is that my cousin Joe scored most of the touchdowns rung up on that board and his girlfriend (or one of them) was Jimmy's daughter Patty, a beautiful girl with flaming red hair as I recall.

My third memory of Adair Chevrolet is of the iconic (to me at least) photograph on the Christiansburg edition of "Images of America", taken of a driver's education car parked in front of the old CHS, circa 1955. The driver side door of the car read "Donated by Adair Chevrolet Corp." In addition, to iconic, this picture is also ironic - my dad was principal of the school at this time and was in this picture, but was cut off on the book cover.

I can't write about car dealers from these days without mentioning Paul Duncan, who moved to Blacksburg during my early grade school years and started Holiday Ford. His son Gary, who has gone on to a tremendously successful career in the car business in his own right, was one year ahead of me in school and lived right around the corner on Second Street. I thought he was the coolest kid in town and was devastated when the family moved. For several years when we would run into each other, usually at parties or football games in Blacksburg, Gary would say, "we went to different schools together."

huge jump for me, coming from the construction industry," he recalled. "The skills that I've learned, I've been able to use. We did all the renovation work ourselves in our building, and my wife is an interior designer, so we were able to make it what it is now."

The World Food Day Lecture Symposium is a faculty-led, student-run lecture series currently coordinated by Assistant Professor of Economics Jennifer Elias. She said this year's event was primarily attended by students studying economics, management, entrepreneurship and higher education, but it's open to all.

"We're always looking for new ways to demonstrate that economics is everywhere, and this event allowed us to combine that message with some helpful advice from our guest speakers," Elias said. "Most of the questions revolved around either setting up, financing or marketing a business, so I think that many of our students are looking to become business owners in the future."

Steven Ingram, a first-semester freshman and marketing major from Mechanicsville, Virginia, was one of the attendees, and he said he found himself drawn into the discussion.

"I'm interested in advertising and ad design, creative problem solving," he noted. "Part of the reason I liked hearing about their experiences is ... they're people who have gone through it themselves, and they have points of view on stuff I hadn't even thought about."

"When I think of advertisement, I think of Google ads and Bing. Actually thinking about the people and the community isn't something that had occurred to me until he [Locklear] talked about how local promotion and word-of-mouth worked for him."

"Being here and hearing people that have started their own businesses is super cool, and they've done it in a community that I feel like I'm a part of now," Ingram said.

"I came for the class credit, but I'm leaving with a lot more than that."

RADFORD SPORTS

From the gridiron: Region playoffs start this week Radford secures home field advantage, Christiansburg at home for first round

Marty Gordon
NRVsports@ourvalley.org

Radford High School will enter this week's region 1C playoffs with an unblemished record, thus meaning they will control their own destiny at home for the entire region postseason.

Radford finished atop of the regional points list at 27.4 total. Gretna is second, Glenvar third and Appomattox fourth.

Quarterback Landon Clark leads Radford into the postseason after accounting for over 3,000 yards of total offense. The recent Elon-signee has completed 133 passes on 219 attempts for 2,247 yards with only three interceptions. This includes 28 touchdowns.

But Clark is not one-dimensional as he has also run for 20 scores on 73 carries for 659 yards. He should also be happy to get his number one target, Max Kanipe, back for a playoff run. Kanipe, who had caught 39 passes for 961 yards, suffered a knee injury in week seven and has not played since.

A (3-7) James River will travel to Radford. JR finished 0-7 in the Three Rivers District and lost to Radford 56-0 on Oct. 6.

Their only wins came 41-15 over Parry McCluer, 34-16 over Randolph-Henry, and 13-12 over Buffalo Gap.

JR has been outscored 355 to 108 this season.

The Region C postseason does include some more familiar teams for Radford as Glenvar and Floyd both made the playoffs. Floyd is the number seven seed and Glenvar is third.

In their last game of the regular season, James River was shutout 43-0 to Patrick County for its seventh straight loss.

Christiansburg will finish as the number four team in points of the Class 3 Region D and will host a familiar foe in Abingdon.

This past week, Abingdon slid by Lee High 56-43 as Owen Barr rushed for 252 yards on just 16 carries. He scored three touchdowns on the ground and another two on the receiving end. Abingdon (6-4) finished with 562 yards of total offense, while their defense gave up 475 by Lee.

QB Luke Honaker finished the evening six of 11 for 138 yards with three touchdowns. Tyke Thompson added 132 yards on 15 carries.

These two schools met in week number two with Christiansburg rolling to a 45-7 win, but this is a different C-burg team without Tanner Evans, who had 136 yards passing and combined on four scores for the visitors.

Matt Annis also rushed nine times for 107 yards but has missed the past two weeks with a foot injury. He is expected back for this playoff start.

The team's rushing game was limited to only Jaylin Joplin in the final regular season game in a loss to Salem.

Overall, Annis has rushed 73 times for 607 yards. In the absence of Evans, sophomore Izaiah Cotto has taken over the reins of the offense, rushing 104 times for 76 yards with eight touchdowns.

Joplin has rushed 42 times for 366 yards, meaning the Blue Demons will have rushed this season for over 3,000 yards as a team.

With Evans in the lineup, the play calling was 40 percent passing with 787 yards. Since his season-ending injury, the team has only completed 16 passes for 73 yards. Cotto is five of 16 with an interception.

Christiansburg sat out the week with a bye in the final week of the regular season and enters the playoffs with a 7-3 record with a two-game losing streak (Patrick Henry and Salem).

Some other familiar names could await Christiansburg in the playoffs in the form of Pulaski, William Byrd and Lord Botetourt. Pulaski is the number seven seed. Botetourt is number three. Magna Vista, who finished the regular season beaten, is the Class 3 Region D top seed. Byrd leapfrogged Christiansburg to take the second seed.

Christiansburg advances to region finals

Addison Reasor (right) pounds the ball past a Lord Botetourt defender at the net in Christiansburg's 29-27, 22-25, 32-30, 25-18 win on Thursday. The win advances the Blue Demons to the region championship and gives them a trip to the state semi-finals. Reasor had 12 kills in the contest.

CHS's Volleyball team reacts after winning their third game against Lord Botetourt to move to the Region D championship against Hidden Valley, which was slated to be played Tuesday night.

Braelynn Williams (center) and Katy Hoover (right) respond to an attempted kill by Lord Botetourt. Williams finished with eight kills.

Two from East Mont All-Pioneer, Christiansburg's Dalton River Ridge coach of year

Marty Gordon
NRVsports@ourvalley.org

The Pioneer District has announced its 2023 all-district volleyball team with two from Eastern Montgomery High School, being named to the first-team, senior Hailey Akers and sophomore Olivia Boone.

Teammates Maddie Boone, Brookelyn Kingery, Caiden Roupe and Macie Akers were named to the second-team.

Christiansburg finished second in River Ridge District volleyball play with a 21-4 record, and for that, Christiansburg coach Lisa Dalton was named the district coach of the year. The team was scheduled to play Hidden Valley early this week for the region championship but will advance to state play no matter the result.

Christiansburg's Addison Reasor and Ela Shepherd were named the first-team announced this past week. Blacksburg's Emma Castle and Su Kato joined them on the first list.

Christiansburg placed two to the second-team in Reese Hall and Blythe Akers, while Blacksburg placed two on the second team in Audrey Stenger and Rowan English.

Braelynn Williams of Christiansburg was announced for the honorable mention list.
