Glencoe Mansion announces new art exhibit

Reception May 16 for "Voyager" by Nick Milinazzo

RADFORD- Glencoe Mansion has announced a new art show, "Voyager," by Roanoke based artist Nick Milinazzo.

The show will be on display May 8 through June 23. There is an opening reception Thursday, May 16, from 5 - 6:30 p.m.

Milinazzo presents "Voyager," which takes the audience through the progression of his work spanning the past three years. As Milinazzo explores new styles and iterations of his work, he says his voyage is also a way of self-reference. Using composition, color theory, and reflection, "Voyager" is a stunning exhibition that allows for open interpretation and is visually engaging. The opening reception falls on the same day as his milestone 40th birthday.

"When I begin a painting, I have no preconceived notions as to what the end-product will look like," said Milinazzo. "Through a process of intuition and spontaneity, I attempt to coax the image out of a panel. This involves both the building up and subsequent

Floral expert lists favorites, shares how to make them last

Mother's Day means big day for floral industry

Mother's Day celebrations in the United States bring family together — and bring a lot of business to the floral industry, with flowers one of the most popular gifts.

"Mother's Day is one of the top floral holidays. It is in the running with Valentine's Day," said Barbara Leshyn, floral design instructor for Virginia Tech's School of Plant and Environmental Sciences. "Although floral sales on Valentine's Day can top Mother's Day, Valentine's Day has competition — for example, chocolates and teddy bears — but what do you get mom for Mother's Day? Flowers!"

Christiansburg businessowner jailed for tax offenses

A Christiansburg businessman was sentenced Tuesday to 78 months in prison for evading the payment of employment taxes, filing false tax returns and obstructing the IRS.

According to court documents and evidence presented at trial, between approximately January 2008 through December 2009, James C. Jones Jr. owned and operated Lifeline Ambulance Service Inc. He was responsible for paying to the IRS approximately $200,000 in Social Security, Medicare and income taxes withheld from his employees' wages. After Jones failed to do so, the IRS assessed the outstanding employment taxes against him personally.

When the IRS attempted to collect those taxes, Jones lied, claiming that he did not have the assets to pay the taxes. In fact, Jones owned several Caribbean beachfront condominiums, multiple foreign bank accounts and a classic "muscle" car collection. Jones later continued trying to thwart the IRS's collection efforts by filing false 2013 through 2018 tax returns that did not report the rental income from his Caribbean properties and claimed false deductions.

After Jones received a subpoena for records of foreign bank accounts from the Justice Department, he falsely reported that he did not have any responsive records, when in fact, he possessed those records as the director and owner of a number of foreign holding companies.

Jones's conduct caused a tax loss to the IRS of at least $1.5 million.

In addition to his prison sentence, U.S. District Judge Michael F. Urbanski for the Western District of Virginia ordered Jones to serve three years supervised release and pay a fine of $250,000 and $394,508 in restitution to the United States. Jones was also ordered to pay the costs of prosecution.

Acting Deputy Assistant Attorney General Stuart M. Goldberg of the Justice Department's Tax Division, U.S. Attorney Christopher Kavanaugh for the Western District of Virginia and Special Agent in Charge Kareem Carter of the IRS Criminal Investigation Division's Washington D.C. Field Office made the announcement.

Mother's Day

Q: What are the most popular Mother's Day flowers?

"Interesting enough, bedding plants are hugely popular for Mother's Day gifts. It is planting season, and everybody has the gardening bug, especially moms. Most often, these gifts are annuals meant to give color to flower beds and for building decorative pots. Favorites include geraniums, impatiens, hydrangea, coleus, snap dragons, celosia, and marigolds, to name a few. Most purchases are made based on what's 'mom's favorite.'"

Q: How about flowers selected for Mother's Day bouquets?

"With cut flowers, we have reached a point where flowers are very personalized. Roses, carnations, lilies, and peonies are historic favorites, but tulips, orchids, and Gerbera daisies are definitely in the running, too."

Q: What tips do you have for making bouquets last?

"Use a vase that is the proper size for your flowers. Height and the size of the mouth of the container are important. You want your flowers to sit a good two inches above the rim of your vase. The wider the mouth of the vase, the more flowers you will need to fill it, and of course the smaller the mouth, the less flowers it will take to make the arrangement look full. Following the directions on the flower food packet, mix and fill your vase with water. Remove all the leaves that would be below the rim of your vase. Using garden pruners, not scissors, cut the stems at a sharp angle before you place your flowers in the vase."

BLACKSBURG — Warm Hearth Village (WHV) resident Cindy Rethwill, who received a Quilt of Valor (QOV), in 2022, and Jenny Fields of the New River Valley QOV quilters recently coordinated the nominations for six WHV residents and one volunteer to recognize them for serving in the armed services.

All seven quilts were made by the New River Valley QOV quilters.

A Quilt of Valor is a quality handmade quilt that can be quilted by hand or machine. The quilts are awarded to service members or Veterans who have been touched by war to say thank you for their service and sacrifice for this country. A QOV must be a specific size, have the appropriate label, be awarded and recorded. Including this ceremony, 379,981 quilts have been awarded.

The recipients were: Stefan Jaronski for serving in the U.S. Air Force; Joseph Flanigan, Pascal Hovis, Myrl Jones, Kim Kirk (WHV volunteer), and Sanford Ritchey for serving in the U.S. Army and Tyler Will for serving in the U.S. Navy.

"I was very proud to be recognized for what I have always felt was a privilege to serve my country even in a small way," said Rethwill. "I wanted other Veterans in our village to receive the same honor. I was pleased with how many of our residents came to the ceremony," she added. Rethwill also recently organized a Veterans Social Group so Vets could gather monthly to talk to about their experiences. Rethwill explained, "For some this is the only form of therapy for PTSD, etc. they may ever get and it's helpful to have a sort of group therapy."

Recipient and resident Joe Flanigan has a family history of service.

"I didn't want this for myself," he said. "I was happy to receive this on behalf of my stepson and dad who were in the Navy, my uncle who was in the Army and my grandfather who was in the Marine Corps. I am saving the quilt to give to my children," he added.

Warm Hearth Village congratulates everyone on receiving this honor and thanks all Veterans for their service.

Q&A with Radford University's Sustainability Manager

Aysha Bodenhamer '10

You may know Aysha Bodenhamer '10 as a Radford University alumna and faculty member in the Department of Sociology. Earlier this year, however, Bodenhamer began a new role, serving as her alma mater's newest sustainability manager. It's a position she said will allow her to do more to "instill a culture of sustainability" in the Highlander community by engaging "every partner possible across the campus to make Radford the go-to university for sustainability."

What sparked your interest in sustainability in your professional and personal lives?

"I have always been environmentally focused. In fact, when asked the question as a kid – "What do you want to be when you grow up?" – my answer was "a garbage man." Looking back, I think this was the narrow worldview of a five-year-old who wanted to do something environmentally related.

All jokes aside, growing up in Appalachia, self-reliance was a big part of my upbringing. Every year, we had a big garden, and most of the meat we ate was either fish my dad caught or venison he hunted. I didn't really think of these things as being sustainability-related until much later in my life when I learned more about food systems and factory farms.

At Radford University, while I was an undergraduate student, I learned more about environmental sociology and Appalachian studies. Due to my experiences conducting research on environmental attitudes and traveling to mountaintop removal coal sites in West Virginia, I knew I wanted to focus on environmental issues and community in graduate school.

While I was a master's and doctoral student at North Carolina State University, I honed my skills to focus on environmental issues pertaining to extractive industries (i.e., coal) and the externalities they produce in the forms of environmental harms and health impacts. These research experiences helped me realize the complex realities of our daily lives – our dependency on fossil fuels and electricity and our taken-for-granted unawareness of these institutions, processes and policies that unknowingly affect so many people and regions.

Since coming back to Radford University as a professor of sociology, I've continued to develop my interest in environmental issues. I worked on a recycling project early on and learned a lot about sustainability from Appalachian State University's programs. It always left me a little jealous that we didn't have more of those programs at Radford. One of my favorite and more popular classes to teach has been SOCY 370: Environmental Sociology. This class is always a lot of fun because I teach students the humanistic side of environmental issues. Most people have very little exposure to the sociological side of environment issues and find it very enlightening. The culmination of these experiences gave me the courage to take the leap in hopes of doing more across the university to instill a culture of sustainability across our campuses."

What should the Radford University community know about campus sustainability initiatives, and how can it continue to build on previous sustainability efforts?

"Most people probably don't know that Radford has a longstanding history of sustainability. Radford University was actually one of the first universities in Virginia to create a recycling program.

In 1991, President Donald Dedmon signed the Talloires Declaration, the first official statement made by university presidents to show a commitment to sustainability in higher education. In 2008, under President Penelope Kyle, we created an Office of Sustainability and the sustainability steering committee. Since then, we've made several sustainability commitments, including STARS (Sustainability Tracking, Assessment, and Rating System), in which we have a silver rating.

We conduct an annual greenhouse gas inventory, and most recently, the Radford University Board of Visitors approved our Path to 2040: The Radford University Sustainability & Climate Action Plan. The Path to 2040 is currently our biggest initiative. It's an 80-page document outlining our plans to infuse sustainability across the campus while also achieving net carbon neutrality by 2040. Every cornerstone of the university is touched by this plan, including things like improving our curricula, contracts and procurement, energy and efficiency, etc. etc.

Data suggests that Gen Z students are increasingly looking for an opportunity to make a difference, and sustainability is at the top of their list for what they're looking for in a college experience.

Right now, I'm looking to engage every partner possible across the campus to make Radford University the go-to university for sustainability.

Lofty goals, I know, but I think they align well with President Bret Danilowicz's vision and the direction we're going as a university by focusing on the region in which we live, Appalachia, and how we can make it better."

How do you plan to get students more involved with sustainability at Radford?

"I intend to make sustainability the new norm at Radford University.

This takes a couple of things – students need to learn about their impact on the Earth, and they need to get outside. They need to feel connected to nature and this place in which we live. Get off your phones and go breathe some fresh air. It's important, and it's healing to feel grounded.

My intention is to make sustainability fun and informative. A few initiatives are already happening, but I anticipate more – the Freshman Float, in which students get to tube down the New River. The ReNew the New program that kicks off the fall semester with a river cleanup. The Alternative Spring Break trip we've sponsored for more than 10 years, where students volunteer to plant trees on former surface mines or work on the Appalachian Trail. RU Outdoors is doing some amazing programming. The Green Team is active and engaged. Now is the time to get involved!

Aside from outdoor programming, we are a university, and we have amazing research capacity as a primarily undergraduate-serving institution. I'm encouraged by all the environmental research happening at the Student Engagement Forum, the Wicked Festival and the Innovation Challenge.

We want to increase environmentally focused internships. I'm already seeing a shift on campus among our faculty and students, and I only think it's going to get better.

I've been encouraged by Chartwells' use of reusable containers and more plant-based meals in the dining hall. I'd like to see less plastic on campus, more reusable water bottles and better awareness about how much waste we produce as a university.

Last year, we took 2,149,140 pounds of waste to the landfill. We also recycled 232,598 pounds of recycling, a 10.8% diversion rate, which isn't bad, but we can do better. Increasing awareness goes a long way. Being mindful of our actions instead of mindlessly consuming everything all the time and then throwing it away. We must change these habits if we want to achieve a sustainable future.

In the future, I want to see more renewable energy projects and the development of more sustainability-related curricula. Students help drive these changes, so get involved and let your voice be heard!"

How have you been involved in promoting sustainability on campus before taking the sustainability manager position?

"I've been involved with sustainability since I started as a professor in 2017. I have served on both the sustainability steering committee and the Selu steering committee since then. I was appointed by President Brian O. Hemphill to serve on the Presidential Sustainability Task Force, which was the group that created the 2040 Plan.

My teaching and research interests have always been environmentally focused. I've given countless presentations about environmental issues in Appalachia. I've mentored several students in their environmental research. I've taken students to the coalfields to plant trees. I could go on and on, but I think you get the picture. Ultimately, I love this region and this university, and I think we have so much potential to be the hub of Southwest Virginia by focusing on how we can be good stewards in the region and by making this a better place."

Expert offers homeowners safety advice for yard equipment care to prevent injuries

Most equipment used in lawn care and landscaping is simple and straightforward to use. However, if it is not operated carefully, it has the potential for accidents and injuries.

“Proper lawn equipment safety is not just about protecting yourself, but also those around you,” said Mike Goatley, a professor in the School of Plant and Environmental Sciences and a Virginia Cooperative Extension specialist. “By following safety guidelines, you not only prevent injuries but also ensure the longevity of your equipment. Proper handling and maintenance not only protect you from harm but also enhance efficiency and effectiveness.”

safer and to reduce the number of mishaps, it’s important to follow general safety rules:

Receive training prior to operating a machine.

Use personal protective equipment and protective clothing for personal protection.

Never allow additional riders on machines. Most machines are designed only for one person — the operator.

Ensure that no bystanders are present.

Refuel the equipment only when its engine is turned off and cold.

Turn off the engine and remove the switch key when the equipment is parked or left unattended, or when troubleshooting, unclogging, and repairing a machine.

Make sure that all safety guards and shields are in place and intact prior to operating a machine.

Equip all tractors with rollover protective structures.

Display a slow-moving vehicle emblem on lawn care equipment that is taken on roadways.

Maintain proper speed.

Avoid operations on steep slopes to prevent equipment rollover.

Additionally, personal protective equipment is important for lawn equipment because it helps prevent injuries and ensures the user’s safety. Wearing personal protective equipment while operating lawn equipment can reduce the risk of accidents and long-term health issues, Goatley says.

Personal protective equipment includes: Protective glasses or goggles to shield the eyes from debris; hard hats to protect from bumps and falling objects; gloves to protect hands from cuts, abrasions, and skin irritations; and protective devices for ears.

Continuous exposure to high noise levels can cause hearing loss, and workers should be protected from outdoor power equipment noise. Hearing loss may occur when one is exposed to noise levels of 85 decibels or greater continuously. The sound level and the sound pressure level double for every 3 dB and 6 dB rise in sound level, respectively.

The safe exposure period halves for every 5 dB rise in sound level. In other words, if the allowable exposure time to a noise level of 90 dB is eight hours per day, it goes down to four hours per day when one is exposed to a noise level of 95 dB.

Don’t operate yard or lawn equipment if: you have health issues, extreme weather conditions exist, air quality is poor (and you lack proper protective equipment) or sun exposure is extreme.

Most equipment used in lawn care and landscaping is simple and straightforward to use, but it has the potential for accidents and injuries if it is not operated carefully.

While it is impossible to control the weather, it is possible to protect the human body. When working in the cold, one should dress appropriately to keep warm. For example, bulky clothes, such as a snowmobile suit, may not be appropriate when working in the cold.

In hot, humid conditions, people may lose a significant amount of water due to excessive perspiration. Under these conditions, people must drink enough water to compensate for the loss and to maintain normal body temperature.

Working in high temperature and high humidity conditions may also cause the body to overheat quickly due to reduced evaporative cooling resulting from reduced sweat evaporation.

It is also important to wear protective clothing for the sun and, if allergic to bees, wasps, hornets, and/or yellow jackets, to take safety precautions.

“Do everything you can to protect yourself from the harmful effects of repeated exposure to the sun, especially the generous use of sunscreen,” Goatley says.

OBITUARIES

Reinhold, Peggy Lou Thomas

Peggy Lou Thomas Reinhold, formerly of Dublin, passed away April 26, 2024 in Bridgewater, Va. at age 100.

Peggy grew up in Clearwater Fla. and graduated from Florida State College for Women in 1945 with a degree in Psychology. She received her master's degree in Christian Education from the Presbyterian School of Christian Education in Richmond, where she met and married the Rev. Robert William [Bob] Reinhold. The Reinholds served as missionaries in the Democratic Republic of the Congo from 1949-1974 where Peggy worked with many programs educating women. On returning to the States, Peggy taught kindergarten in Washington Co., Va. and Preschool in Paris, Missouri where Bob led Presbyterian churches. They later retired to Claytor Lake. Peggy was an avid student of the Bible and often taught the Bible lessons for Presbyterian Women Circles. She was also a faithful member of PEO, an education-based organization for women, and took special interest in their programs for international students. In her retirement, Peggy spent many hours processing canceled postage stamps for "stamps for Missions" to help fund literature and continuing education for evangelists in the Congo. She moved to Harrisonburg, and then to Bridgewater in recent years as her health declined.

Peggy is survived by her five children, Bill Reinhold (Ginnie) of Bridgewater, Va.; Tim Reinhold (Kay) of Tampa, Fla.; Beth Gold (Ron) of Pittsboro, N.C.; Ruth Low Reinhold (Russ) of Albuquerque, N.M.; and Martha Kincaid (Scott) of Radford, along with 11 grandchildren and 11 great-grandchildren.

A family memorial service will be held at New Dublin Presbyterian Church at a later date.

WORSHIP DIRECTORY

ON GUARD

Read 1 Chronicles 7:1 through 9:44

It was a great privilege and honor to be one of the men chosen to be gatekeepers at the entrance to God's house. Even more awesome was the responsibility of four principal gatekeepers who guarded the rooms and the treasures.

They would spend the night stationed around the house of God, because they had to guard it; and they had charge of the key for opening it each morning (1 Chronicles 9:27).

No doubt some nights must have felt especially long, but falling asleep while on duty was not an option. The gatekeepers needed to remain alert to any sound or movement that might indicate the treasures they guarded were in danger.

Today many churches install electronic security systems, although they probably rely on a person to make sure all the windows and doors are locked each night. But when it comes to guarding that which is most important—our children and youth—nothing can replace the prayers of parents and the church family.

Challenge for Today: Ask the Lord for the name of a young person He wants you to safeguard with prayer.

Gilmore, Donna Marie Wright

Donna Marie Wright Gilmore, 74, went to be with her Heavenly Father Saturday, May 4, 2024, at Radford Health and Rehab.

She was so loved and will be missed by her family, church, and her many friends.

Donna was born in Radford Feb. 19, 1950, to parents, Robert H. and Gaynell Beamer Wright. She graduated from Radford High School and attended Radford College. She met her husband of 54 years, Guy Gilmore, on a date set up by her Aunt Gilda Williams and they married in 1969.

Donna gave birth to two children, Chadwick Alton Gilmore in 1972 and Laura Marie Gilmore Robinson in 1975. Donna devoted her life to raising her children. After being a stay-at-home Mom for many years, she entered the workforce when her children got older at Legg Mason with family members. She worked there for over 20 years utilizing her sweet spirit and helpful mindset with the clients there.

One of Donna's greatest joys was being a GG to her five grandchildren, Hunter, Clayton, Kyle, David and Hope. In 2011-2012 she stepped in to help raise Laura's children, Kyle and Hope, while Laura was at UVA hospital with David who was fighting cancer. That could not have been easy but she did it with grace and love, supporting all of us like she always did. In retirement Donna not only loved being a GG, but she was active at the Radford Clothing Bank and loved cooking for family and friends when they were going through a hard time. If you were ever on the receiving end of one of her home cooked meals delivered to your door you were indeed blessed. She loved others so well and her gift of thoughtfulness and hospitality inspired us all.

Donna was predeceased by her parents, Robert H. and Gaynell Wright; brother, Robbie Wright; and in-laws, Russell and Katherine Gilmore. She is survived by her husband of 54 years, Guy; and children, Chad (Annette) of Moneta, Va., and Laura (Mike) of Marion, Va. She had five grandchildren, Hunter Ison (Karleigh), Clayton Gilmore, Kyle Robinson, David Robinson, and Hope Robinson. Donna also had many special friends, extended family members, and church family.

Donna's celebration of her beautiful life was held Wednesday, May 8, 2024, at Calvary Baptist Church. Graveside services were held immediately after the service in Highland Memory Gardens in Dublin.

In lieu of flowers, the family requests donations be made to the Radford Clothing Bank, 2000 West St., Radford, VA 24141, as Donna loved serving there with her friends.

The Gilmore family is in the care of Mullins Funeral Home & Crematory in Radford.

Researchers search for solutions to construct a comprehensive workforce

At the perimeter of any construction site, you will find large fences designed to keep construction materials in and danger out.

But those aren't the barriers that keep more people from joining the construction workforce.

Virginia Tech researchers say it's the invisible barriers that need to be deconstructed. While many in both industry and academia tout best practices to recruit and retain a more diverse crew, Myers-Lawson School of Construction researchers have found the "perfect answer" doesn't exist — yet.

"A lot of companies present what they're doing as a best practice, and yet in some cases, they don't even know if it works within their own organization because the data isn't there," said Josh Iorio, assistant director for Myers-Lawson. "There's a ton of space here for improvement."

With more than a decade of experience at Virginia Tech, Iorio has seen efforts to grow the construction industry in many shapes and sizes. In 2014, he began to join the university's InclusiveVT efforts. During that time, he coordinated a speaker series, poster projects, and mentorship programs to boost knowledge about diversity and inclusion in construction education. But in the industry, he heard stories of women being treated differently, people being harassed, and racial slurs.

"I'm sitting across from parents with concerns about their daughter going into the industry. Initially, I told them things were changing and getting better and that's the old industry, but I didn't know," said Iorio. "I saw it as being unethical to basically say things are getting better without any evidence."

Iorio said that honesty set him on a path to take a real look at representation in the industry. Through years of leading inclusion and diversity efforts within the school of construction, Iorio saw a further disconnect between industry and academic efforts. Both acknowledged problems such as a lack of women, a lack of a diverse and robust workforce, and low retention rates, but there was little to no research about how to fix the problems.

Merging theory and practice

Enter building construction Assistant Professor Alireza Shojaei. While the majority of his work is focused on revolutionizing the construction industry through digital innovation, he also seeks to innovate hiring and retention practices using data.

"This work is personal for me. I lived in three different countries on three different continents and saw firsthand the impact and the importance of working with people from different backgrounds and different societies," said Shojaei.

Shojaei sees workforce challenges as complex issues involve economics, social sciences, and political initiatives. He and graduate student Mohammad Hossein Heydari are taking an in-depth look at the individual pieces of the bigger puzzle. Their first deep dive focused on the areas where academic leaders offered ideas for potential best practices.

Their research found several scholars offering suggestions for an industry standard including: female mentorship or role model programs; increasing the number of women in managerial positions; unifying communication practices; flexibility in work-life balance

Transparent promotion criteria; return-to-work training for new mothers; and sharing success stories.

Based on those suggested measures, they then looked at the last 13 years of construction labor data from the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics for indications of whether those ideas translated into noticeable changes within the construction industry. Combining the qualitative data from the literature and the quantitative data from the labor statistics, they uncovered trends that pointed them toward future exploration:

Women make up roughly 11 percent of the workforce, but 50 percent of the population. They are by far the most studied group. Efforts have been made to increase the number of women in the workforce, but so far, the data trends do not indicate significant growth.

Female students outside of construction programs mention the industry's poor image as a deterrent, even in some cases where they have family ties to construction.

When women are on a job site, there tend to be lower accident rates and higher safety performances, but it's not known if one causes the other.

There is a high rate of injury among Hispanic workers in construction. While many say this is caused by a communication issue, the researchers found that it is only one of many factors including higher productivity pressures, poor safety climates, and supervisor pressures.

There is limited information about other ethnic groups, LGBTQIA+, and people with disabilities. Researchers say it's not because those sections of the population are not in the construction industry, but rather a hesitation to self-report due to external fears or pressures.

"The research over time is increasing, but not fast enough to generate the knowledge we need to be able to solve the problems that we've identified. We need a concerted effort between the people whose job it is to conduct research and the people whose job it is to recruit and retain within construction," said Iorio, who is serving as the connection point between construction industry executives and researchers. "What we found is that there aren't any obvious best practices, right? That's the punchline."

Data can unlock solutions to help both individual companies and the industry as a whole, but that data needs to come from the companies themselves, which requires buy-in and transparency.

"Hopefully, what comes of this is that the industry will see there's still a lot of work to be done. The researchers need access and support from those in the industry. We don't need all of your data, but rather specific kinds of data so that we can prove some of these theories that we're presenting here," said Iorio.

With specific data, the researchers could investigate subfactors that affect recruitment and retention within companies including location, sector of construction, safety, company policies, profits, and more. The research team recently added graduate students Hossein Naderi and Reachsak Ly to review industry articles and journals for similar suggestions about best practices.

"We need to talk to people; we need to conduct surveys, collect data, and see if we can connect these policies to the results that we are seeing and see what is and is not effective," said Shojaei.

Partnership for industry progress

The researchers found companies are hesitant to provide data due to fears of being judged or facing consequences. With over a decade of work in this area, Iorio is helping companies dismantle those fears through transparency. In 2021, he began to host "elephant in the room" discussions to bring together people who work on inclusion and diversity efforts within their own companies. There, the group had honest conversations about the issues and potential solutions that exist across the spectrum.

"The future of the industry is focused on smart construction and technology. But if we don't have people, there's no industry of the future," said Iorio. "This type of work takes time and money, both of which are valuable resources for a company's bottom line. What we want to offer is research-backed inclusion and diversity models that have tangible results so companies can invest in the best areas to yield the best results."

Over the years, Iorio has worked closely with several companies that believe in this vision for the future of the industry, including construction management consulting firm MBP and its co-founder and CEO, Blake Peck. He has seen the industry change over many decades and envisions a partnership with the research team as a pathway for more people to enter the industry and keep the story of this dynamic industry alive.

"We have a great story here in the construction industry, but we unfortunately keep it a secret," said Peck. "I hope this research sheds light on the great work we do, our desire to increase representation and the importance of implementing strategies and processes that are specifically designed for the rewarding and dynamic nature of construction."

In the long run, researchers hope these efforts not only elevate the experience of current industry workers, but open more doors for a new generation of leaders. This summer, Shojaei and his team plan to publish a knowledge database to give people a chance to access the available data.
