Virginia Tech rugby club wins national championship

By Savannah Webb, intern for University Relations

The Virginia Tech men's club rugby team won the Division I-AA Men's Collegiate Rugby Championship in Houston, Texas, recently in a whirlwind trip that was in and out in 24 hours.

"We're only a club team. We have player coaches, don't have a lot of funds, and have to manage all the logistics ourselves," said Danny McKillop, the club's former president. "It was in the middle of finals week, so we had to figure out how to get everyone — I think it was 23 of our players — down to Houston and back pretty quick."

The team arrived in Texas in mid-December at 8 p.m. and competed in the championship the next day at 3 p.m. That evening they flew back to Blacksburg.

That left little time for the Hokies, who were considered the underdogs in the game against West Chester University, to celebrate their hard-earned victory.

"We were all happy and taking pictures in the locker room after the game," said Brandon Eng, who was the MVP of the championship game playing from the scrum-half position, which links the forwards and the backs on the field. "It was Danny McKillop's last game, so we gave him the trophy, and we were excited to celebrate with him. After that, we had to head straight to the airport for a flight back to Blacksburg."

According to Julie Rhoads, assistant director for sport clubs at Virginia Tech, the trip cost between $10,000 and $15,000, all of which had to be raised by the players. They took to social media to ask alumni and fans for financial support and received more than $12,000 in donations.

"We have a great, great alumni network," McKillop said. "We wouldn't have been able to go to Houston without all of their donations."

The support from alumni didn't stop with the game. Most recently, two alumni — John Gluck and Adam Kaufman — pledged to match any donations made by March 31, which will go toward hiring a professional coach for the rugby team. Fernando Anduaga, a senior majoring in business information technology, is the team's student-coach.

On top of winning the championship, the team hopes that a professional coach will carry their momentum and bring continued success in the future.

"We would like to become [Division I] eventually," said Collin Weigert, the club president. "Right now, we're trying to build up a good foundation of money and resources."

The rugby club team has come far since its founding in 1968. After starting out with 18 players, the sport club had grown to include 68 members as of January.

"This is a brotherhood," Anduaga said. "These are friends and relationships you'll have for years. If you're looking for an open space where you can be yourself and form a brotherhood, this is the place to be."

Students can get involved in the club through GobblerConnect or stay updated on games and other events via Instagram.

A total of 1,263 students are involved in the 29 sport clubs that Virginia Tech offers.

The Virginia Tech Recreational Sports Department plans to host a celebration to honor the national champion rugby club team during one of its spring home games.

Glencoe Mansion, Museum & Gallery has opened a new gallery exhibit, "We the Women: Portraits of Empowerment" featuring the photography of Alex Moral, who is based in Blacksburg.

A celebration of Women's History Month, the exhibit will be on display through April 30. The mansion will host an opening reception for Moral on Friday, March 4, from 5 to 6:30 p.m.

Moral's work captures female empowerment in different forms while embracing diversity, body and self positivity, and the stories that celebrate womanhood.

Moral says that her photographs "capture her interest in embracing womanhood and understanding women's emotions." She has an eye to capture a single, powerful moment in time that not only invites the viewer to connect and resonate with the depicted women, but also serves to inspire the viewer, both women and men alike.

Prior to moving to the USA in 2015, Moral worked for six years in Spain, Germany, and England as a professional photographer, specializing in women's portraiture. Currently, she is pursuing a Master of Fine Arts in photography at Radford University.

Moral's exhibit is an ever growing collection that received The Puffin Foundation grant award in 2018. The exhibit is free and is appropriate for all ages. In accordance with Glencoe's guidelines, face masks are required for entry into the museum.

Civil War Weekend 2022 to honor iconic founder and historian James I. 'Bud' Robertson Jr.

By Andrew G Adkins

The legacy of James I. "Bud" Robertson Jr. lives eternally in the hearts and minds of those he educated.

It's cemented in the walls of the Virginia Center for Civil War Studies, and it breathes in the stories he told and passed on for generations to come.

"What would Civil War Weekend be without Bud?" asked Paul Quigley, the James I. Robertson Jr. Associate Professor in the Department of History. "This event brings people together to share extraordinary stories in a way only he could envision."

This year, the annual Civil War Weekend at Virginia Tech will honor the remarkable life and work of the acclaimed Civil War historian and the Alumni Distinguished Professor Emeritus of History at Virginia Tech, who passed away in 2019.

The event returns March 25-27 to the Inn at Virginia Tech for the first time since 2019. Registration is available until March 4.

VFW Post #5311 in Christiansburg recently recognized Warm Hearth Village resident Cindy Rethwill with a Quilt of Valor in appreciation for her service in the U.S. Army from 1974-78.

Christiansburg VFW post presents Warm Hearth resident with Quilt of Valor

Christiansburg VFW Post #5311 recently presented Warm Hearth resident Cindy Rethwill with a Quilt of Valor recognizing her service in the U.S. Army.

Jenny Fields of the New River Valley QOV quilters presented Rethwill with the quilt. Any service member or living veteran who served in the Army, Marines, Navy, Air Force, or Coast Guard is eligible to receive a quilt of valor. Members of the activated National Guard and activated or active duty-special work (ADSW) reservists are also eligible.

Mardy Baker, Warm Hearth's Director of Life Enrichment nominated Rethwill for the award last November. "Our resident veterans hold a special place in our hearts," Baker said. We are proud of their service to our country and are delighted when they are recognized by other organizations that value them as we do."

A Quilt of Valor (QOV) is a quality handmade quilt that can be quilted by hand or machine. The quilts are awarded to service members or veterans who have been touched by war to say thank you for their service and their sacrifice for this country. A QOV must be a specific size, have the appropriate label, and be awarded and recorded.

Rethwill was trained as a Military Personnel Clerk (Unit Clerk) and later cross-trained in logistics. Her first duty station was Fort Bliss, Texas, and then Camp Casey, Korea, and Baumholder, Germany. She is considered a Vietnam era veteran though she didn't serve there. Her unit was the last training cycle designated as the Women's Army Corps; after that, all units were co-ed.

"I am very proud to be recognized for what I have always felt was a privilege to serve my country even in a small way," Rethwill said. At the ceremony, a younger woman recipient thanked Rethwill for leading the way for women like her and said if Rethwill hadn't done her part back then, the doors wouldn't have been open for her.

"It was an extremely emotional moment, and it was difficult to hold back the tears. All we could do was hug each other and say thank you," said Rethwill.

Donor continues sister's legacy of support for Hokies with scholarship at Virginia Tech Carilion School of Medicine

By Josh Meyer

Like with everything in her life, when it came to being a Virginia Tech fan, Nancy Lucas went all out. Whether it was wearing Chicago Maroon and Burnt Orange every Friday before game day, yelling her support during a key play (even on the road in Charlottesville), or driving to Blacksburg in the wee hours to greet a victorious team bus at Cassell Coliseum, Nancy was a Hokie through and through.

In honor of Nancy's passion in life, her sister, Susan Lucas, established the Nancy Lucas Memorial Hokie Physician Scholarship at the Virginia Tech Carilion School of Medicine. Nancy Lucas unexpectedly passed away at age 55 in 2014. The scholarship now continues her support of Hokies as it is awarded to Virginia Tech graduates who enroll at the School of Medicine.

"My sister was an amazing, compassionate health care professional and a fervent Hokie fan, in addition to being my best friend," Susan Lucas said. "It was very important to me to continue her legacy by assisting a Hokie graduate to become a physician that will perpetuate her passion."

Nancy Lucas was a member of the last graduating class of Salem's Andrew Lewis High School in 1977. She was a graduate of Radford University, University of Virginia School of Nursing, and received her certification as a Wound, Ostomy, and Continence Nurse (WOCN) from Emory University in Atlanta. She worked as a nurse at LewisGale Medical Center in Salem where she is remembered fondly for her heartfelt patient care.

Alexandra "Ali" Toloczko, Class of 2025, is the first recipient of the Nancy Lucas Scholarship and is proud to have Virginia Tech roots.

"I am a second-time, and second generation, Hokie! My dad was a Hokie, my boyfriend was a Hokie, and his dad was as well, so you could say it runs in the family," Toloczko said. "Returning to Virginia Tech, after leaving for a hiatus in Texas, has felt like coming home," she said. "At Virginia Tech, I obtained a degree in chemical engineering, an interest which I am now able to pursue through analytical thinking and research as a future physician."

Toloczko aspires to be a physician innovator, coupling her knowledge of engineering with her medical education to ulimately, like Nancy, improve patients' lives.

"Before coming to VTCSOM, I attended Rice University and obtained a master's degree in bioengineering with the Global Medical Innovation program," Toloczko said. "Unfortunately, I also obtained student loan debt. Although financial independence is important to me, it comes with the added burden of paying for school. This scholarship allows me the flexibility to pursue my passion in medicine with less financial burden, a gift which I am very grateful for. Someday, I hope to be able to pay the scholarship forward, but for now I hope that I can show Ms. Lucas my gratitude by working diligently to follow my dream to innovate the future of medicine."

Nancy was living in Florida when Susan Lucas was diagnosed with breast cancer in 2004 and she decided to move back home to support her sister. The pair bonded over the Hokies and were virtually inseparable, attending every home football game together as well as multiple bowl games. They also traveled to craft shows together, selling Hokie-related jewelry that Susan Lucas crafted with her Go Tech Go! Designs business.

Today, Susan fondly remembers the special years she spent with Nancy and all their adventures cheering on Virginia Tech.

"It has been exciting to see the evolution and growth of VTCSOM and the amazing students that I have met through serving on the Multiple Mini Interviews admission process," Susan said. "These graduates have a personal approach, in addition to medical expertise, that reminds me of Nancy's deep dedication to her patients."

Virginia Tech researchers developing new vaccine for swine coronavirus

To address climbing economic losses from swine that contract the porcine epidemic diarrhea virus, Virginia Tech researchers in the College of Agriculture and Life Sciences and Virginia-Maryland College of Veterinary Medicine are researching a nanoparticle-based vaccine to curb this highly contagious coronavirus among swine.

Because of PEDv being in the coronavirus family, the researchers hope to gain knowledge and insight in order to swiftly produce vaccines against human coronaviruses and their variants.

The disease emerged in the United States in 2013 and has since caused around $600 million in annual losses to swine producers. When combined with increased food prices for consumers and decreased exports of hogs, the associated loss amounts to more than $900 million annually in the U.S.

While there are two commercially available vaccines for the virus commonly known as PEDv, neither is effective in preventing the disease.

Mike Zhang, the principal investigator of the project and a professor in Virginia Tech's Department of Biological Systems Engineering and Turner Faculty Fellow, saw the urgency for an effective vaccine against this virus.

With a four-year, $630,000 grant from the USDA National Institute of Food and Agriculture, Zhang and co-principal investigator X.J. Meng, a University Distinguished Professor of molecular virology in the Virginia-Maryland College of Veterinary Medicine, are researching a nanoparticle-based vaccine to curb this highly contagious coronavirus among swine.

Because of PEDv being in the coronavirus family, the researchers hope to gain knowledge and insight in order to swiftly produce vaccines against human coronaviruses and their variants.

"This project will give us the opportunity not only to develop a vaccine for swine, but gain insight into coronaviruses," Zhang said. "While the viruses are different from each other, they share a lot of similarities. A lot of things that we learn from this project can be used to develop vaccines against human coronaviruses in the future."

Meng, also a professor of internal medicine at the Virginia Tech Carilion School of Medicine, the director of the Center for Emerging, Zoonotic, and Arthropod-borne Pathogens, and the interim director of the Fralin Life Sciences Institute, lent his help with his renowned knowledge as a virologist.

"PEDv is one of the most devastating illnesses in the swine industry," Zhang said. "Right now, we don't have a good mitigation method. We want a safe and reliable tool in the arsenal of those in industry and our research will lead to that."

Over the last few years, vaccine development has targeted a safer, more effective way to deliver an immune response. So far, that target has landed on nanoparticle-based vaccines, to safely deliver a strong immune response in hosts to protect against disease.

"Once you decorate the nanoparticle with viral proteins, the nanoparticle looks like a virus particle," Zhang said. "Once you give that to the animal, it can have a very strong immune response toward the viral proteins on the nanoparticle to protect the vaccinated animals from the invading virus."

With the nanoparticle platform, the immune response can last quite a long time once injected into the subject. The initial shot could last as long as six months with a booster needed to complete the vaccine series, a common practice among vaccines of varying delivery platforms.

"If we formulate the nanoparticle well, the immunity the vaccine can provide protection for is around half a year," Zhang said. "But we have not tested beyond that duration using the nanoparticle delivery platform. It's an extremely important subject to tackle."

"This is a good duration to target," Zhang said, "because a body really doesn't need a lot of antibodies circulating to provide a good immune response."

VT Neuroscientist Sujith Vijayan receives award to study neural dynamics during sleep

Scientists have long known that when people sleep, the brain performs memory magic.

People who sleep for eight hours after learning something new perform better than those who learn the new task during the day and are tested eight hours later without sleeping in between. More recently, scientists have discovered that odors and sounds presented during sleep can influence brain activity to further enhance the learning and memory benefits of sleep.

Now, Sujith Vijayan, an assistant professor in the School Neuroscience, part of the Virginia Tech College of Science, has received a $696,000 National Science Foundation CAREER award to study whether the brain's work during sleep can also help people learn tasks associated with brain computer interfaces.

Vijayan's research involves brain computer interfaces – often shortened to BCIs – that allow an individual to use their brain activity alone to control an external device like a wheelchair or a cursor on a computer screen. Such interfaces can help people who have been disabled by neuromuscular disorders such as amyotrophic lateral sclerosis (ALS), spinal cord injury, or stroke regain functions so that they can live more independently.

Until now, research into the effects of sleep on BCI task learning has entailed a few animal studies, which suggest there may be potential for human learning improvements.

But the specific ways that sleep affects learning of BCI tasks "remain a mystery," Vijayan said. His aim is not only to discover details about those specific means, but also to investigate whether the manipulation of sleep through auditory signals might be used to enhance BCI learning.

Vijayan expects that these studies will not only have translational power but also allow for a deeper understanding of the role of sleep in learning and memory at a very basic science level.

All stores will open by 10 a.m. every day, apart from some stores which regularly open later on Sundays. Store closing times, which were not part of the month-long adjustment, will remain the same. Closing times vary by store.

"With COVID-19 case numbers once again falling in Virginia, we are now able to return to our normal operating hours," said Travis Hill, chief executive officer of Virginia ABC. "We truly appreciate our retail team's dedication and flexibility throughout this pandemic, and we look forward to serving our customers with expanded hours soon."

All ABC stores have been observing reduced hours since Jan. 24, opening daily at noon in response to increasing numbers of COVID-19 cases making staffing difficult.

As an alternative to in-store shopping, customers can place orders online at www.abc.virginia.gov for curbside pickup or home delivery in nearly all areas of the commonwealth.

ABC continues to monitor information regarding COVID-19. Future decisions related to ABC store operations will be made based on the best information available to ABC and implemented on a case-by-case basis.

The legendary James I. "Bud" Robertson Jr. became founding director of the Virginia Center for Civil War Studies in 1999.

an optional extension for a two-night field trip to Harpers Ferry and Antietam from March 27 to 29.

Robertson, who became founding director of the Virginia Center for Civil War Studies in 1999, created Civil War Weekend, with the first event held 31 years ago. Quigley and fellow organizers had planned to dedicate the 2020 Civil War Weekend to Robertson but postponed the observance in light of the COVID-19 pandemic and need for physical distancing.

Quigley said he's thrilled to hold Civil War Weekend in person this year following last year's virtual programs.

Throughout the weekend, Robertson's former students, close friends, and longstanding professional collaborators will share memories and lessons learned from the beloved scholar.

"Whether you knew Bud personally, took in his lectures, or only encountered him through his books, we invite you to join us in Blacksburg as we celebrate his extraordinary contributions to Virginia Tech and the world," said Quigley, who serves as director of Civil War Weekend.

In addition to Quigley, speakers include:

William C. "Jack" Davis, historian, award-winning author and editor of more than 50 books in Civil War and Southern history, and retired executive director of the Virginia Center for Civil War Studies; Ron Maxwell, one of the nation's most noted indepen-

Montgomery County WORSHIP DIRECTORY

YOU ALONE

Read Numbers 18:1 through 19:22

Monte had given his son one job: Shovel the walk. Monte returned to see messy piles of snow haphazardly scattered about. The boy had convinced his younger sister—who could barely lift the shovel—to do it for him so he could play video games. Monte promptly unplugged the game and sent the boy out to finish the job.

Similarly, God gave Aaron and his sons enormous responsibility. He expected them—and them alone—to follow through.

"But only you and your sons may serve as priests in connection with everything at the altar and inside the curtain. I am giving you the service of the priesthood as a gift. Anyone else who comes near the sanctuary is to be put to death" (Numbers 18:7).

Has God placed a burden on your heart? Is He pointing you toward work that will expand His kingdom? You are uniquely gifted and in just the right place to effect divine change in this world. Don't wait for someone else to do the job the Lord has given you. He wants you, and you alone, to follow through.

Thought for Today: The work of the Kingdom changes our hearts as it changes our world.

MONTGOMERY SPORTS

Christiansburg trio to play at Emory & Henry

Marty Gordon
NRVsports@ourvalley.org

In the wake of one of Christiansburg High School's best football seasons in eight years this past fall, the Blue Demon senior trio of Casey Graham, Tyrique Taylor, and Drew Lloyd has announced they will continue playing football at Emory and Henry College this fall.

The Blue Demons finished the fall as the top seed in the region with a 9-1 regular season record. The team set a school record with 22 interceptions, outscored opponents 463-157, and set a new single-season school record for passing and receiving. Graham, Taylor, and Lloyd were a big part of that success.

All three were all-county honorees. Graham was the News Messenger/News Journal player of the year and the offensive player of the year. He finished the season completing 106 passes on 169 attempts for 1,850 yards and 18 touchdowns. He also rushed 39 times for 235 yards with seven touchdowns.

Taylor was last fall's defensive lineman of the year with 30 tackles for the season, five for loss with seven sacks.

FROM THE SIDELINES

This basketball season might not be all what Virginia Tech fans had expected, but last week's win over Georgia Tech put several things in motion. For one, the Hokies now have their postseason dreams in their own hands.

With three games remaining, Tech needs to win out and finish strong going into the ACC tournament in Brooklyn. At least one win in the conference "show" could also help the cause.

The Hokies faithful are not known to be patient, and biting nails might have to be allowed over the next two weeks.

On the court Wednesday night, there was much to cause concern. Virginia Tech started the game shooting 1-8 from the field with a Nahiem Alleyne 3-pointer opening the scoring. Georgia Tech responded with a 9-0 run, its largest of the half. Until Mutts' dunk with 12:19 remaining in the first half, Alleyne was the only player to score for the Hokies. Despite struggling from deep, shooting 3-14, a perfect outing from the free-throw line (7-7) kept Virginia Tech in the game and trailing only 34-30 at the half.

After intermission, the Hokies came back to even it up at 41-41 before going on a 7-0 run, finished off by Maddox's jumper, to seize a 48-41 lead with 9:50 to go in the contest. The Yellow Jackets narrowed the margin before the game was over, but the Hokies held on for the 62-58 win. Virginia Tech capitalized on seven Georgia Tech turnovers in the half, collecting 10 points off those turnovers.

Meanwhile with the defeat, Georgia Tech sits locked at the bottom of the conference standings, tied with Clemson and N.C. State. The result marks the Jackets' fifth loss in the last six contests.

In looking at the numbers:

The win is the Hokies' third straight road win in league play.

Coach Mike Young secured the 200th conference victory of his career.

The win eased the Hokies above .500 in conference play with three games remaining.

The Hokies are now 6-1 in February.

Keve Aluma ranks third in the ACC in scoring at 17.6 points per game.

Hokie reserves are averaging 15.5 points per game. Tech's 25 bench points Wednesday night were the second most in an ACC game this season (32, @ FSU).

Justyn Mutts' triple-double earlier this season is only the program's second ever (Chris Clarke in 2016). Mutts is one of three ACC players to record a triple-double this season (Alondes Williams of Wake Forest and Windell Moore, Jr., of Duke are the other two.)

Hunter Cattoor drew a charge in the UNC game, running his season total to 11. He also ranks sixth in the ACC in 3-pointers made.

As a team, the Hokies are No. 5 in the country for 3-point field-goal percentage. Wednesday's contest did move the needle on a downward trend slightly, but the team is still one of the hottest in the nation from behind the arc. Despite being the ACC's best 3-point shooting team, Virginia Tech shot below .300 from deep for the fourth consecutive game of the season.

Virginia Tech had 39 rebounds, the second-most in any conference game this season (41, vs. Syracuse).

The Hokies cleaned up on the offensive glass, collecting a season-high 15 offensive rebounds.
