

Virginia General Assembly recognizes VT's 150th anniversary

Virginia lawmakers recently took time away from crafting budgets and passing new laws to commend Virginia Tech for its 150th anniversary.

Sen. John Edwards, D-Roanoke, introduced a written resolution as "an expression of the General Assembly's admiration for the institution's extraordinary history." Senate Joint Resolution 101 was agreed upon by the Senate of Virginia on Feb. 14. Similarly, on Feb. 17, Del. Jason Ballard, R-Giles, introduced House Joint Resolution 235. The resolution was agreed upon by the House of Delegates on Feb. 17.

Virginia Tech President Tim Sands and VT professor Laura Sands went to Richmond and were recognized on the floor of the House and Senate chambers on Feb. 23. Others in attendance included Edward Baine, vice rector of the Board of Visitors; Elizabeth Hooper, associate vice president of government and community relations; and Brent Pry, head football coach.

The Virginia Tech Board of Visitors will meet on April 4 to consider tuition and mandatory fees. Prior to that, on March 22, the board will hold a public comment opportunity.

Virginia Tech Board of Visitors to consider 2022-23 tuition and fees at April 4 meeting

The Virginia Tech Board of Visitors will meet on Monday, April 4, at 1:15 p.m. in 2100 Torgersen Hall (620 Drillfield Drive) on the Blacksburg campus to consider tuition and mandatory fees for the 2022-23 academic year.

As part of that consideration, Virginia Tech will hold a public comment opportunity on Tuesday, March 22, at 1:45 p.m. in Assembly Hall at the Holtzman Alumni Center (901 Prices Fork Road), also on the Blacksburg campus. Several members of the Board of Visitors will be on hand as university officials provide an overview of proposed tuition and fees ranges and receive public comment in accordance with guidelines posted to the Virginia Tech Board of Visitors website.

Virginia Tech's tuition and fees strategy is intended to support the university's strategic plan within the context of the various budget implications of the state's general assembly actions and other major initiatives that impact university costs in the upcoming year.

Over the last several years, the board has prioritized the affordability of a Virginia Tech education while making targeted investments that enhance the value to students and the commonwealth and continue to position the university as a leader in teaching, research, and innovation.

As a result of these continued efforts, the board has been able to limit the average tuition increase to just 1 percent per year over the last three years and has kept tuition increases well below inflation for the last six years.

On April 4, the board will consider a combination of cost containment and revenue enhancement strategies that will address employee compensation and benefit increases (including graduate assistants), fixed cost increases, continued investment in academic programs including faculty, and the enhancement of high-demand student support services.

To further advance affordability, the university will continue working to expand private philanthropy in support of the university and increase student financial aid programs, namely the university's Funds for the Future program that offsets the cost of tuition and fee increases on returning students with family incomes up to $100,000.

The following ranges of tuition and educational and general (E&G) fee adjustments for fall 2022 will be considered by the Board of Visitors. Final decisions are contingent upon the outcome of the Virginia General Assembly session when total mandated costs and the level of state support are fully understood by the university. The university is hopeful that additional state support will help to continue to moderate tuition increases.

Carilion hospital visitation returns to green-level restrictions

Effective Tuesday, March 8, all Carilion Clinic hospitals transitioned to green level restrictions for inpatient visitation. The primary change is permitting two visitors per day for adults during their stay. Previously, they were allowed only one in most cases.

Green visitation allows inpatient visitors with the following guidelines:

Adult patients are allowed two visitors. If deemed appropriate by the care team, children may visit if accompanied by an adult, and children do not count as visitors.

Pediatric patients are allowed two visitors over 18 (must be family members).

Emergency Department patients are allowed two visitors.

Labor and Delivery patients are allowed two visitors.

End-of-life patients are allowed up to four immediate family members.

Same-day surgery patients are allowed one visitor while being prepped. Once the patient is in a room, two visitors

County, Radford City have emergency food and shelter funds available

Montgomery County and the City of Radford have been awarded federal funds through the emergency food and shelter national board program.

Montgomery County has been chosen to receive $23,378 for Phase 39 and $72,256 for Phase American Rescue Plan Act (ARPA).

Radford City has been chosen to receive $5,589 for Phase 39 and $17,267 for Phase ARPA to supplement emergency food and shelter programs in the county.

Additional state-set-aside funding may be applied for. A local board will determine how the funds awarded to Montgomery County, Radford City, and Floyd County are to be distributed among the emergency food and shelter programs run by local service agencies in the area.

crimination, 5) have demonstrated the capability to deliver emergency food and/or shelter programs, and 6) if they are a private voluntary organization, have a voluntary board. Qualifying agencies are urged to apply.

Former East Mont coach, teacher faces sexual battery charges

James Michael Hodge, a 43-year-old Dublin man and former golf coach and ROTC instructor at Eastern Montgomery High School, has been charged with the sexual assault of two children under the age of 14.

This past week, Hodge appeared by a video link at a Montgomery County bond hearing where he asked for release until his trial.

He is currently being held at the Western Virginia Regional Jail on three counts of aggravated sexual battery and a misdemeanor count of assault and battery. Investigators say the incidents involved students under Hodge's watch.

Hodge tendered his resignation in December and is no longer employed by the Montgomery County school system. He had also served as an ROTC director at Auburn High School. No details have been released in the case as to where the students were enrolled.

Dog sledding a passion project for Virginia Tech alumna

Large parts of Alaska feature a stunning landscape of snow-capped mountains, beautiful rivers and creeks, and magnificent wildlife. The wilderness in this state of few people — caribou outnumber humans by a substantial amount — tends to overwhelm, and silence resonates as its loudest sound.

For many, the beauty and remoteness of this place make it the perfect location to live, and for Paige Drobny '97, it certainly is.

Drobny feels that way even though living here means surviving crushing cold for half the year. She remains undeterred, even though living in her world means driving a dogsled 54 miles to the nearest town and then hopping in a truck for an additional three-hour drive just to get groceries.

In fact, the nearest town to her, Cantwell, once had 6 inches of snowfall — in July.

"There is just so much open space and so few people," Drobny said. "I just love being out in nature and having it so close and accessible and not having that many people around to enjoy it."

Drobny and her husband, Cody Strathe, also love Alaska for another reason. The state offers them the perfect opportunity to pursue their passion in life — sledding with their dogs.

Drobny and Strathe met in Seward, Alaska, in 2004 after Drobny, who graduated with a degree in biology and a minor in chemistry from Virginia Tech's College of Science, took a job as a fisheries biologist. They started dating and eventually moved to Fairbanks to pursue master's degrees at the University of Alaska Fairbanks.

They eventually married, but while in Fairbanks, they adopted a few Alaskan huskies from the animal shelter because they loved animals and loved being outside. The dogs served as companions on their exploration trips throughout Alaska.

They adopted a couple more dogs and took even more trips, including a caribou hunting excursion on the North Slope. Then, a friend suggested a new hobby.

"We had amassed a few dogs that we thought were really good, and someone was like, 'Oh, you should try racing with them as a way to see new places and explore new trails,'" Drobny said. "So, I signed up for the Yukon Quest 300. I was told that was the hardest 300-mile race in the state, so I thought, 'OK, I'll do this one, and I'll hate it, and we can go back to our normal life of traveling with dogs.'"

So in 2010, Drobny and Strathe put together a team, and she hopped on a sled built by Strathe. She finished the 300-mile version of the Yukon Quest in the dead of winter, surviving the snow-packed, treacherous route and occasionally braving temperatures that dipped to 40 below zero.

Drobny finished sixth in that race. But something strange happened at the finish line.

"When I got to the point where I was finished with my race, there were people continuing on and doing 1,000 miles," she said. "I was sort of heartbroken. I didn't want to stop. I wanted to keep going, and the dogs were having so much fun that I was addicted and hooked."

The race started an addiction that continues today. In each year since, Drobny or Strathe or both have competed in various dog sledding events. In 2012, Drobny competed in the Yukon Quest 1000 and finished 14th in the 1,000-mile gauntlet, and the following year, she ran her first Iditarod, the nation's premier dog sledding event.

She competed in her ninth Iditarod this year with a career-best finish of seventh coming both in 2019 and 2020. She has pocketed more than $75,000 in prize money, though that barely covers the care for their dogs.

For her and Strathe, though, they simply love being in the frozen landscape and providing happiness for their dogs, who were born to run in this environment.

"We sort of live, eat, and breathe taking care of dogs and living in winter conditions," Drobny said. "We have the right gear for it, so we can stay warm at 50 below. We live in a stormy area, so we're used to traveling in windy conditions and in storms. We train for it, so none of those things that we see in the race are something that we haven't seen before in training."

Drobny and Strathe are involved in other ventures that they run out of their home and provide much of their income. She runs a fisheries consulting business, helping to write grants and proposals for research projects, and he established Dog-Paddle Designs in which he designs and builds skin-frame kayaks, wooden paddles, and dogsleds.

They also give tours of the Alaskan wilderness, and later this summer, they're opening a high-end lodge that they built on their property, called Susitna Adventure Lodge. Couples, families, or groups can stay at the lodge and fish, hike, bike, or simply enjoy Alaska's real backcountry.

The multiple enterprises led Drobny to get her Master of Business Administration last year through Quantic, an online program based in Washington, D.C.

"I feel like my biology degree prepared me for a career in biology, but didn't prepare me to run the back end of a business," Drobny said. "While we were getting along and doing it just fine, I felt like there were holes in my education and that I could use more help in certain areas. So when

Paige Drobny has become a veteran of dog sledding, and while she loves racing, she loves the connection that she has with her dogs and seeing the beautiful Alaskan landscape even more. Photo courtesy of Paige Drobny.

I found this online degree program, it felt like the right fit. I didn't want to go anywhere. I wanted to be home with my dogs and my husband, so it was a great way to fill some holes in my education and do it from home."

The two of them stay busy with those ventures throughout the spring and summer. But in September, their focus shifts toward training their dogs for upcoming races, and in particular, the Iditarod.

In many ways, training dogs for 1,000-mile races resembles the way humans train for a marathon. Drobny and Strathe start out running the dogs in a harness three or four miles a day and gradually increase the distance. They build in recovery days for the dogs, and on some days, they run the dogs at a faster pace. On other days, they run a little slower pace.

They build up to 25 to 30 miles a run and then start training the dogs on the routine of camping. The dogs gradually get used to running and camping.

"The routine is dialed in early-on in training, and as we progress, we add more miles and stack miles on miles," Drobny said. "As we get closer to the Iditarod, we'll have done 300- to 400-mile training runs a couple of times until the dogs have the routine down pat. When we get to the race, there is nothing they haven't seen in training except for the full 1,000 miles."

A race almost serves as a continuation of training for the dogs, though working out the logistics for a 1,000-mile race presents additional challenges for Drobny and Strathe. They buy meat for the dogs in 50-pound blocks and cut it up. They pack, organize, and haul 2,000 pounds of food for a 1,000-mile race. They keep track of 1,000 little booties that the dogs wear, hundreds of gloves, repair kits, and 1,600-lumen lights to guide the lead dog in poor weather.

For Drobny and Strathe, though, this is what they love to do. And for the dogs, this is what they were born to do.

"Our main goal is to give the dogs the best life that we can," Drobny said.

Drobny hasn't been back to Virginia Tech since she graduated, and she returns to the lower 48 only to visit her family or her husband's family. When she and her husband vacation, they find somewhere in Alaska to explore. They love living on the last frontier and plan to spend a lifetime exploring it.

"I can't imagine living anywhere else, but that will probably change at some point," Drobny said. "It's not an easy lifestyle, so at some point, we'll probably want something easier, but for now, this is perfect."

OPINION

Buddy King: The Valleydale Pigs and sportsmanship

Many things were significant parts of my life at different points in time but are no longer around. I thought it might be interesting to recount some of those.

A great example is black and white television. Do they still make them? Are there any still around? My family did not have a color TV until I was 12 or 13 years old. In fact, we had no television at all until I was around 7. Reception was not great in our end of town and they were darn expensive.

My grandmother and aunt lived across town and did have a "television set," as we called them in the day, so when the folks wanted to watch something, we would go to Junkin Street for a visit. I am told that they particularly liked to take me there to watch the "Hooray for Valleydale" commercials.

Valleydale was a pork processing plant in Salem that closed in the early 2000's, and the cartoon commercial featured a band of marching pigs apparently celebrating their coming demise. It's worth googling "Hooray for Valleydale" to watch. These commercials literally "trumpeted" the four basic food groups of my childhood - bacon, sausage, wieners, and smoked ham - produced by the wonderful folks at Valleydale.

I am told I liked those marching pigs more than anything else aired at the time, even more than Huckleberry Hound or Yogi Bear. Color television was a rarity in most of America well into the 60's. In fact, CBS did not have color programming for several years after NBC was rubbing it in with the peacock promoting "living color" when its shows came on the air. Worth another google: Check out "NBC Peacock introduction."

My dad, who liked "affordable" innovation, did make one attempt at giving us the color television experience. He bought some sort of cellophane type wrap which would adhere to the screen and give the appearance of a color broadcast. Sort of. Depending. The bottom 1/3 was green to emulate grass, the middle 1/3 was yellowish, and the top was light blue to depict the sky.

I may not remember the colors correctly. I do remember that this "poor man's color television" worked reasonably well for outdoor scenes on westerns like "Bonanza," not so well for courtroom scenes on Perry Mason. I don't think it took off.

Another part of my life at one point that is now "missing in action" is the pay telephone phone booth. These things were critical to the practice of law during the first half of my professional life. I traveled fairly frequently during the "litigation stage" of my career, and whenever there was time in airports, I would rush up and down the terminal hallways looking for an open booth to jump in and call the office for messages.

I also remember being at many a legal seminar and racing out on breaks to what was usually a bank of 10 or so pay phones against the wall in some hotel conference area, trying to beat 100 or so other lawyers wanting to "check in" with their secretaries. No enclosed booths here, just phones on the wall and the buzz of a dozen or so lawyers talking at once. Amazingly, 20 years after I last used it,

I can still recite my 14-digit AT&T credit card number.

There are other parts of my early professional life that are no longer around. Like whiteout and curly paper faxes. Thankfully, both were short-lived.

Whiteout was a tiny bottle of white liquid that a skilled office worker could use to "repair" typographical errors or substantive misstatements in a contract or a brief. Obviously, pre-computer and pre-word processing days, this stuff was applied "over top" of the mistake and prevented the need to "tear it up and start all over." My first secretary at the firm, the wonderful Betty Mucha, could do this better than anyone ever. The final product didn't resemble what we have come to expect in recent years, but it was state-of-the-art triage early in my career.

Another tool of the trade early in my life at the firm was the "curly paper fax." The contraption that spit these things out technically was called a telecopier, and, along with overnight delivery services, should take the credit and shoulder the blame for increasing both the efficiency and the stresses of modern-day life.

I don't remember how prevalent the fax machine was at the start of my career, but I do recall hearing from older lawyers in the firm that using regular mail to send out drafts of contracts or court pleadings or even "heated responses" provided some time for reflection and cooling off that made law practice more civilized before the fax came into being. The fax machine allowed the user to respond without a cooling-down period and also greatly enhanced the pace of work.

I often compare it to ping pong, i.e., constant back and forth across the net. Emails have further exacerbated the pace and ease of spewing venom of course.

But the "curly paper fax" created logistical issues. Eventually, "straight paper faxes" came into existence and solved the problem in large part, but the early version printed pages on rolled paper, leading to a machine that had the capability of spitting out a 100-page contract in no particular order if no one was there to play goaltender.

In my early years, our tender of the mailroom where the fax sat was the irascible Margaret Goldsboro (or the "Widow Goldsboro" as our managing partner Herb called her then). Margaret was an attractive, entertaining and colorful personality who was a firm icon, but she was in her 80's by this point and her reflexes had slowed. So, if you walked in and caught her at the wrong time, fax pages all over the floor and coming at her like water out of a fire hose, you would hear words that would make a sailor embarrassed.

Notwithstanding these moments, she was a cultured and devout Catholic lady. She was just no match for the curly paper fax.

Despite the rush of nostalgia these long gone things produce in me, I really don't miss black and white television or pay phone booths or fax machines (curly or otherwise), except for those marching pigs. But a few things I do miss from the earlier part of my life.

I miss when we lauded amateur sports and believed that one of the main reasons to participate in athletics was to learn sportsmanship and teamwork and believed respect for others was one of life's highest values.

Maybe those things will make a comeback someday.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Town Council Blacksburg: Support Neighbors and Neighborhoods

Blacksburg is at a tipping point. After recent unpopular town council votes (Sheetz and others), neighbors are asking, "Who is listening to us and our concerns?"

The Legacy Apartment building proposed for the corner of South Main Street and Country Club Drive is another example where neighbors are calling on the Blacksburg Town Council to "support neighbors and neighborhoods." The recent housing study reported that 60% of Blacksburg residents were opposed to high rise apartments. The same study noted that 78% were in favor of lower density housing.

Legacy is a 4/3 story high-density apartment building. A petition that is currently circulating has 575 signatures of neighbors who are opposed to the Legacy Apartment Building. A review of the online letters to the town council shows over a hundred letters in opposition to Legacy and only four in support (two housing agencies not located in Blacksburg, one person who lives outside of Blacksburg, and one graduate student). It is clear from the survey, petition, and letters to the town council that Blacksburg residents do not want the Legacy Project in this location. Town Council, listen to your neighbors.

A misinformation campaign claims the neighbors do not want "affordable housing." The truth is that the neighbors have said strongly and consistently that they want affordable housing on that corner but in lower density. The land is currently zoned R-5 and would support 50 bedrooms of affordable housing in townhomes, duplexes, triplexes, or small apartment buildings.

The developer is pushing for a change of zoning that will nearly triple the density to 142 bedrooms and 288 occupants, which could include students. Neighbors are saying this density will cause too many problems: child safety, traffic, setbacks don't allow for improvements to Country Club Drive, and pedestrian and biker safety on Country Club Drive.

I am asking the town council to support neighbors and neighborhoods and vote NO to Legacy.

Rick Johnson Blacksburg

Editor, Blacksburg is a special place. It's home. The community, the people, the diversity of thought makes it one of the best towns in the entire commonwealth.

Over the past few weeks, I've been disturbed by what I see as unintentional division caused by a project that would bring hundreds of affordable housing units to the town.

First and foremost, let me be clear: we need affordable housing in the town. Period. Full stop. But the way in which it has been gone about has actually caused many members of my community to be set against others, which is not the Blacksburg way. The leaders of our town, who love Blacksburg as much as I do, may be blind to this.

But what's happened is that instead of working with the members of the community to find an approach that works for the residential style of the neighborhood (that could bring affordable housing to Blacksburg, but in a way that plans for future growth and that is zoning appropriate for the community), they've settled on a prescriptive solution that many disagree with. To say I'm disheartened is an understatement.

Blacksburg is stronger together. We always have been. And I hope the town will work with my friends in the impacted community to find a solution that accomplishes both goals. In an era of partisanship and division, we shouldn't settle for any less.

are allowed. No visitors are permitted for COVID-19 patients, and shared spaces (bays, waiting areas, etc.) remain visitor-free zones. "Patients' support systems play crucial roles in their experience, so we are excited to welcome back additional visitors in a limited capacity," said Patrice M. Weiss, the chief medical officer and executive vice president for Carilion. "While green-level visitation is less restrictive, it's important to note that we remain vigilant against COVID-19. Protections like masking and screening requirements remain in place to keep our patients, visitors, and staff safe."

Visitation is assessed every week based on community positivity rate, the spread of COVID-19, and mask compliance. Patients living in an area considered high-risk by the CDC should continue to use mitigation strategies like masking and social distancing.

"Even as community spread decreases, we're continuing to care for hospitalized COVID-19 patients who are severely ill," said Dr. Weiss. "In February, 82% of our hospitalized COVID-19 patients were not fully vaccinated or boosted. Vaccines remain the best possible tool for protection from severe illness."

Virginia Cooperative Extension to partner in providing three-part webinar series on managing small-acreage property

To help grow businesses, Natural Area Management Services, in partnership with the Virginia Cooperative Extension, is hosting a three-part webinar series to provide services to small-acreage clients.

The series runs from 2 to 4 p.m. on March 10, 17, and 24 and uses a case-study approach in which instructors will demonstrate how to utilize a checklist to assess a property, develop a land care plan, and implement various land management practices.

The program was created by the Woods in Your Backyard Partnership, which is composed of Penn State Extension, University of Maryland Extension, Virginia Cooperative Extension, the Alliance for the Chesapeake Bay, and the Virginia Department of Forestry.

The first webinar on March 10 will provide a brief overview of the Woods in Your Backyard educational program and resources available and will also describe the potential benefits offering these services can provide businesses. In addition, the webinar will explain how to communicate a message to clientele and what their motivations and interests are for natural area services. This session concludes by developing a land-care plan for the case study property. The plan will include a map of the property along with descriptions of the various habitat units and management recommendations. The session features a variety of experts including:

Jonathan Kays, a forestry extension specialist with the University of Maryland Extension;

Adam Downing, an extension forestry agent with Virginia Cooperative Extension;

Julianne Schieffer, an extension urban forester, with Penn State Extension; and

Craig Highfield, the director of Forest Programs for the Alliance for Chesapeake Bay.

The second webinar on March 17 covers two of the specific management practices determined as a high priority in the checklist and outlined in the land care plan for the case-study property. The first management recommendation covers how to improve tree health and habitat by thinning overcrowded trees and releasing chosen or crop trees. Finally, this session will discuss how to identify and mitigate the negative impacts of deer overabundance. The session will feature:

Joe Rossetti, a hardwood forest habitat initiative coordinator for the Virginia Department of Forestry;

Jonathan Kays, a forestry extension specialist with the University of Maryland Extension; and Luke Macaulay, a wildlife management specialist with the University of Maryland Extension.

The final session on March 24 covers two additional high-priority practices in the Natural Area Management Services checklist and is described in the land care plan for the case-study property. The first practice discusses how to convert unused lawn areas into a haven for wildlife by converting them to woods and meadows. This session will conclude by examining the invasive plant problems on the case-study property and how best to control them. The experts featured in this session are:

Craig Highfield, the director of forest programs for the Alliance for Chesapeake Bay;

Ryan Davis, the program manager of Chesapeake Forests for the Alliance for the Chesapeake Bay; and Dave Jackson, a forest resources educator for Penn State Extension.

The webinar series costs $35, which includes the handbook and checklist, or $15 without the handbook or checklist. Visit Virginia's Urban Forest Council to register or receive more information. Attendees can receive continuing education credits for the International Society of Arboriculture, the Society of American Foresters (pending approval), and Maryland Licensed Tree Experts (pending approval).

A three-part webinar series to help grow businesses that partners Natural Area Management Services and the Virginia Cooperative Extension will run on Thursdays, March 10-24, and will cover a variety of topics designed for green industry professionals, land managers, and foresters on managing a small-acreage property through a case-study approach.

Hokie Mekhi Lewis named most outstanding wrestler at ACC championships

Virginia Tech's Mekhi Lewis was named the Most Outstanding Wrestler at the recent ACC championships.

After a full day of wrestling at the 2022 ACC Championship, the Virginia Tech wrestling team returned to Blacksburg with three ACC champions and eight qualifiers for the 2022 NCAA Championships in Detroit.

Korbin Myers, Mekhi Lewis, and Nathan Traxler all won ACC championships as the Hokies finished second behind NC

State. Sam Latona and Bryce Andonian finished second, Hunter Bolen finished third, and Collin Gerardi and Connor Brady both claimed fourth to round out the Hokie placers.

Lewis, the 2019 ACC champion and national champion at 165 returned to the top of the podium at a new weight after knocking off the #2 and #1 seeds enroute to his second ACC championship title.

Myers went back-to-back at 133-pounds by defeating career rival Micky Phillippi of Pitt. Graduate transfer Nathan Traxler was dominant in the finals, posting a 9-6 victory to capture the title at 285.

All eight placers earned allocations to the 2022 NCAA Championships in Detroit March 17-19.

Radford boys advance at state

Nate Wesley scored 20 points in the Radford boys' 67-49 win Friday night over Virginia High at Roanoke College. The win sent the Bobcats to the state Class 2 semifinals.

Weekend meant racing, remembering at Motor Mile Speedway

The weekend at Motor Mile Speedway near Radford involved more than just racing. Remembering Daniel Williamson was also a part of it.

Williamson was a former crew chief, mechanic, spotter, driver and all-around racing local legend in the world of local and regional racing who died in November from complications due to COVID-19. He was only 35.

Over the years, Williamson established a reputation as a man who was everyone's friend, and who helped anyone out who asked whether that person was a racer, a crew member of his own team, or even a competitor.

Cory Dunn, Derrick Lancaster, Dennis Holdren, and Stacy Puryear were among those to whom Williamson lent his time and his talents.

Motor Mile Speedway remembered Williamson over the weekend and dedicated the "Ice Out Opener" to his memory. His wife and sons were given the honor of shouting out those most famous words in motorsports: "Drivers, start your engines." Williamson's sons also got to wave the green flag before the start of the races.

Long-time late model stock car driver and fan favorite Mike Looney lost his father this week; however, Mike Looney did what he says his father would have wanted. He strapped himself into his race car, took the pole, and won both twin 60-lap events for the Late Model Division.

"I know dad would be mad if I didn't come here and race. It's what we do," said Looney after the first win. After an eight-car invert moved him back to eighth for the start of the second race, Looney retook the lead in twenty laps.

When Looney got to the microphone, he thanked his dad, saying he, "didn't want to cry in front of all of these kids as they might think he is a wimp or something."

Pit reporter Caroline Cook wiped away her own tears and told Looney, "Real men cry, Mike. We are all with you." With the two wins in the twin 60-lap events, Looney is now two races in towards the Six Pack Challenge.

If the same Late Model driver wins all six races in the challenge, he wins $10,000. The remaining races in the challenge are in July and August.

Kyle Dudley finished second in both twin Late Model Division events, Cory Dunn finished third in race one, and Kres Vandyke finished third in the second.

The Sportsman Division also had twin 30-lap races. Karl Budzевski won the first, Daryn Cockram won the second, and they both finished third in the race they didn't win. Kyle

SUBMITTED PHOTO

Mike Looney took both Late Model events Saturday at Motor Mile Speedway near Radford.

Barnes finished second in both events.

In the Super Streets Division, Joshua Gobble was the winner with longtime Motor Mile racers Hank Turman and Ray Sowers finishing second and third.

In the Mod-4's Division, Brittany Cockram, daughter of the aforementioned Daryn Cockram, came home the winner, followed by Johnathan Hall and Drew Holdren.

In the UCAR & Pure 4's Division, Ben Barker got the checker first, followed by Jamie Lafon and Kirby Shipman.
