"Songs & Stories" to showcase local talent

Shinnston singer and songwriter Andy "A.M." Benson had a vision for the music scene in town, and he is determined to bring it to fruition.

"I've been tossing an idea around for a while about doing some kind of songwriter showcase," Benson said. "I didn't want to do an open mic, but something similar just to hear original music. That was my goal with this because this area is saturated with music."

As a songwriter himself, he said that he wants to hear what other songwriters are doing. Benson said he was talking to Brendan Gallagher of Black & Teal Concepts one day about his idea, and Gallagher suggested that Benson put on showcases similar to Nashville writers' rounds which feature up and coming singers and songwriters to be discovered.

"They go out and they do these songwriter rounds, and they share their songs that they've written," Benson added.

With Gallagher's encouragement, Benson decided to move forward full speed, and Songs & Stories was born.

Songs & Stories is meant to showcase local musicians' work in an intimate setting that will allow each singer and songwriter to perform their original songs alongside sharing stories about their inspiration for each song and their writing methods.

Benson plans for Songs & Stories to be broken into installments, and he said, "Each installment of Songs & Stories will ideally feature four musicians and will be regional to make sure local musicians aren't having to travel too far to bring their music to you. This will be a much more intimate type of show to get the crowd involved and something brand new for music lovers to check out."

Council: ballot measure could be "catastrophic"

By Erin Beck

With no opposition, Shinnston City Council passed a resolution during their Oct. 11 meeting in opposition to Amendment 2, which is on the Nov. 8 General Election ballot.

Amendment 2, which would be added to the West Virginia Constitution, would authorize the Legislature to exempt business machinery, equipment and inventory, as well as vehicles, from property taxes. It would give the Legislature control over 27 percent of total property tax revenue – an estimated $515 million. The vast majority goes to county governments, municipal governments and school districts.

The resolution states, "Whereas, the City of Shinnston finds that the residents of the State of West Virginia, including the hardworking residents of Shinnston, will ultimately pay for the significant corporate tax cuts contemplated by the Legislature in anticipation of the passage of Amendment 2, such as new sales taxes, higher real property taxes, other fees, and/or a combination...," and "the loss of funds could Take a trip to memorable Mannington

I had the pleasure of visiting the town of Mannington this past week and meeting with Mayor Lora Michael. Over the years I have driven through Mannington many times and when I worked for the West Virginia Housing Development Fund, we did several projects in the town. West Virginia Commissioner of Agriculture

Inflation Reduction Act is threat to food resiliency

The Inflation Reduction Act (IRA) is being touted as a big win for climate change as it makes available hundreds of billions of dollars for renewable energy. These industries will have access to loan guarantee and financial assistance programs making expansion viable in the United States. At the same time, it puts a burden on fossil fuels, disincentivizing the industry and expediting the move away from these energy sources. We all know this is a bad deal for West Virginia, but the unknown is how these policies will impact other industries such as agriculture. As the second largest exporter of agricultural products in the world, the United States, just as much as West Virginia, has a lot to lose under this deal.

The quickest to build and the fastest growing sector of renewable energy is solar. In theory, all you need is some panels, land and access to plenty of sunshine. Any farmer understands the importance of the sun. What those farmers also understand is how valuable soil and prime farmland are to the production of crops. These areas are best suited for raising crops because the soil is nutrient-rich, flat, and gets plenty of precipitation, as well as sun. For those same reasons, solar companies continue to seek these areas for their own type of farming. Now you have two sectors, crucial to the future of the United States, competing for the same resources. The only difference is our federal government is now incentivizing one over the other.

Despite increased funding, the reality is the world cannot solely run on renewables no matter how much folks hate fossil fuels. Fertilizer, for example, is still one of the largest inputs to agriculture production. When energy prices skyrocketed earlier this year, so did the cost of fertilizer. At the same time, diesel prices were typically a dollar more than regular fuel prices which continued to put a strain on farmers who use heavy machinery. Truckers, who transport most of the food in the United States, also saw the squeeze, forcing many out of the industry. As much as folks want to see every vehicle run on electricity, tractors, heavy machinery and much of the agricultural industry just aren't there yet.

As profits continue to shrink for the farmer due to inflation and rising fertilizer costs, producers may have to make the ultimate decision and take their farm out of production. Then that farmer will do what any reasonable person would and utilize that land in other ways. With an abundance of funding for renewables and a move away from fossil fuels, solar becomes an enticing option for our producers. The problem is once we take that land out of production, we weaken our country's food system resiliency. As we saw during the pandemic, any major stresses on our food system can have devastating effects on our population. With the world population on the rise, it's vital we continue to increase our ability to feed the world. As the saying goes, "with food there are many problems, without there is only one."

Regardless of where you land on this debate, for our country to be energy and food-independent, we must find a compromise utilizing all sources of energy. Increasing domestic production of these two sectors not only lessens our reliance on foreign sources but builds assurance for the American people. If we are truly to make a better America, we must find a way to balance the needs of our economy, environment and trade agreements. The problem with the energy debate right now is we are too focused on the morality of energy sources, instead of using common sense to achieve self-reliance. If the left wants to bring an end to fossil fuel use in America, that spells disaster for West Virginia's economy and brings a new threat to American agricultural production - the loss of farmland.

Simmerman, alleged that NAJ, which owns the abandoned home severely damaged by fire at 101 Charles St., had created a public nuisance in violation of city and state code.

The lawsuit refers to NAJ, LLC as a "shell entity utilized by its owners to purchase real estate properties at tax sales throughout West Virginia, including in the City," and that on those properties, "there are located materials, conditions and substances which create a public nuisance(s), namely dilapidated and dangerous buildings, and other offensive and unsightly matter in excessive amounts and quantities." She worked there for eight years before working at the VA hospital, where she is still employed as a urology physician assistant. It is a small hospital so getting to know many of the staff and having regular patients makes it a wonderful place to work. It gives her great joy to serve our veterans.

She states that she has not done many notable things in her life but is so very honored to have been chosen to be a part of this group of women and hopes to continue to be a better person who gives back more than she takes.

Cancer screenings increase the chance of spotting signs of early cancer development in an individual who would otherwise be showing no symptoms. Though it may be common to think, "cancer could never happen to me," it is important to never leave your health to chance. Those with a family history of cancer, or other lifestyle or health factors that increase their risk for cancer, should talk to their doctor about receiving a cancer screening.

How do I know if I need to be screened?

- Change in bowel or bladder habits
- Nagging cough or hoarseness
- Thickening or lump in the breast or elsewhere
- · A sore that does not heal
- Change in a wart or mole
- Unusual bleeding or discharge
- Indigestion or difficulty in swallowing

Is there a way to screen for all types of cancers?

There are several cancer screening tests available, but certain tests are commonly done on a routine basis. The other screenings will be determined by the assessment obtained from your primary care.

- Breast cancer mammograms are the best at detecting breast cancer.
- Colorectal cancer almost always develops from precancerous polyps in the colon or rectum. Screening tests can find precancerous polyps and they can be removed before they turn into cancer.
- Cervical cancer pap test can find abnormal cells in the cervix. HPV looks for the virus that can cause these cells to change. Pap tests can find changes early for a better chance of being cured.
- Lung cancer history of heavy smoking. If you are a current smoker or you have quit within the past 15 years, then you need to be screened.

Do I need a doctor's referral to get screened?

Your primary care will get the appropriate cancer screenings in place for the cancers that are routinely screened. The primary care will ask you several questions during your yearly physical to determine if other screenings are needed.

Can I get a cancer screening without insurance?

You can get free screenings at different locations by watching the media outlets. United Hospital Center offers a free women's screening, men's screening, and a skin screening one time a year. Watch wvcancercenter.com for offerings.

Do I need to have symptoms to get screened?

No, screenings are for prevention, to detect a potential problem or disease in a person that does not yet have symptoms.

Early detection is key; you want to detect a condition at the earliest stage to treat it most effectively.

What happens after a cancer screening?

- After a cancer screening, you will receive your results.
- Depending on the results you may need additional testing.
- The doctor performing the tests will let you know the next steps in the process.

If testing shows normal results, then you are finished

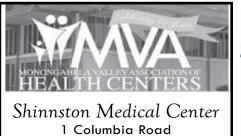

- until the next screening is needed. Important to always let your primary care know if something is bothering you, looks different, or just
- does not feel right. Early detection is key for the best outcome.

It seems that things never really slow down here at Parks and Recreation, and that is a good thing because it shows that our presence matters in the community. Whether it is improving the facilities and grounds, organizing programs and events for the kids, or lending a hand through community projects, we are always there to lend a hand.

Education has been positive for the department because our fall enrichments have allowed for thousands of kids to either visit the facility or we come to them. "Talent" From Pg 1.

round series. The first installment will take place at The Soapbox in Shinnston at 413 Pike St. on Friday at 7 p.m. It will feature Harrison County musicians Benson, Beverly, Austin Glaspell, and Silas Matheny. There will be a $10 entry fee at the door.

"I am going to do this perpetually, ideally," Benson said in regard to how many installments he plans to have.

"I want to do it regionally Benson added. though," "It'll be different with every region, and the long-term goal is to have the Songs & Stories brand come into Marion County or come into (Monongalia) County and Taylor County, and then all of a sudden, you've got groups of musicians that are playing together."

Overall, Benson plans to grow Songs & Stories as a foundation for local musicians to showcase their talents and to spread the original music scene throughout the Mountain

"The biggest thing I want to share is that there are fantastic musicians right here in our midst, and it's kind of unnecessary for people to spend five or $600 to drive halfway across the country to listen to their favorite singer when they could pay 10 bucks to go down the street and hear somebody that could potentially be that same artist in five years," Benson said. "[Songs & Stories will be] a lot more intimate setting where you're sitting in a room with 25 people, and you hear a song that really hits you. That's a different feeling than being in a crowd of 2,000 people."

Featured Musicians

A.M. Benson

"It's kind of a universal language

Benson, who goes by A.M. Benson when performing, will be among the first set of performers for the first installment of Songs & Stories.

"I would consider myself—if I'm narrowing it down to a genre, it's going to be more country/ Americana," Benson said, describing his music. "It's a little bit of folk but...country and Americana are the best way to categorize it overall."

He also said, "I'm really into the storyteller side of songwriting. A lot of my influences are folk musicians [like] Townes Van Zandt, and it's very lyrically based. They're a little bit more intricate musicians, though."

The stories that Benson is passionate about telling through his music are usually about everyday life.

"Everybody struggles with different things to different degrees, and something that has always been there for people in general is music. It's kind of a universal language," Benson added.

Although he said, cannot write a happy song to save my life," his songs are also about triumphs and overcoming aspects of life, alongside sadness.

He said that music is a way for people to relate to one another, as well.

"You hear a song, and you go, 'OK, I'm not the only one that feels that way,' or, 'I'm not the only one that was sad when my best friend got hurt or when I lost my grandmother," Benson said. "It makes them relate to the artist in a way that the artist is conveying a little bit of honesty, and the listener can hear that."

Benson will be featured with three other local artists at The Soapbox on Friday at 7 p.m.

Allen Beverly

"There's a grain of truth to every song"

Singer and songwriter Allen Beverly is another featured artist for the first installment of Songs & Stories.

Beverly grew up on his family farm in Sardis, and he still resides there today. He is also a Lincoln High graduate, so he has a strong connection to Shinnston.

Music was a passion of Beverly's long before he could talk.

"I've always kind of sang, I guess. Even when I couldn't use words, Nana and my momma always said. It was just an instinct," Beverly said. "I was always around music. My grandma on my momma's side was the queen of country music in Cleveland, Ohio back in 1968, and that's something the family clinged to and everything."

He added, "She and my great grandfather and a few others in the family cut a couple of records in Nashville, out in Vegas, and a couple of different places, so I was raised up around that."

Before getting into country music himself, he sang metal, rock, punk, and whatever else he could get his hands on. He said, "[I] somehow went full circle back to a semi-country sound."

"I basically just write about neat stories that I can tell," Beverly said. "I like to tell a story with every song I do...there's a grain of truth to every song."

He also said, "I try to move people in some way, shape, or form. I try to be relatable because I am relatable. I'm just some guy that grew up in the middle of nowhere with nothing to do but play around with sticks and stones, and every so often, pick on my guitar."

Beverly said that everyone told him to take his music seriously, and within the last couple years, he has settled down into focusing on his music and taking it seriously like everyone advised. In regard to Songs &

Stories, Beverly said he is a big advocate for the local music scene, and he believes people should support it

"I think it's [Songs & Stories] a great opportunity for people to actually sit and listen to what the songwriter has to say," he added. "A lot of these folks have some stories that y'all need to hear."

"We want to be real people

I feel like songwriters truly are," Beverly said.

He also just released a four-song album called the "Volga Sessions." He said, "It's just me and an acoustic guitar." To listen, it is on music streaming platforms like Spotify, Apple Music, and Amazon Music.

Catch Beverly alongside Benson at The Soapbox on Friday at 7 p.m.

Silas Matheny

Lost Creek native Silas Matheny draws inspiration from his roots and where he was raised for his music.

"There's a big field behind our house, and we always drove old cars and fixed them up," Matheny said. He also shoots competition bow and enjoys bow hunting, all of which serve as inspiration in his songwriting process.

He focuses on a type of music called roots music.

"It's just a mix of old country and blues. When people think of country they think of a banjo, fiddle, and a guitar, but with roots music, it kind of mixes that Americana vibe with the bluesy rock guitar, and you kind of just have a really nice fusion that flows well amongst all people," Matheny said. "It's not just country people on this side and rock people on this side."

The style of his music is "like a blues-bluegrass style," as well.

"My style is roots overall, but roots can be anything," Matheny said. "But if I had to pick a main thing, it would be, like I talked about, that Americana, blues, rock just all mixed together that forms a really nice, flowing piece of music...it can speak to anybody." He said everybody can relate to it somehow.

he likes to He said categorize himself as multi-instrumentalist because he said he is usually able to fill in for anyone in any genre with just about any instrument. He plays guitar, fiddle, banjo, drums, harmonica, and piano.

In regard to Songs & Stories, Matheny said, "It's a lot about grasping the younger generation because if they like something, they'll post it everywhere, they'll talk about it, they'll get other people listening to it. I think that if it grasps the attention of the younger generation, it'll really be something big because even though you're always telling a story, and it's coming from your heart when you're on stage playing roots music or blues or bluegrass or anything like that, it's not speaking the words and explaining it to people."

He also explained a little bit about how Songs & Stories will be, "Short little segments explaining what your song's about, how it came to you, and how it should connect to other people. I think that'll really hit people right in their hearts, and it'll just take off." Matheny's overall goal as a musician is to find a way music.

"I don't expect to play the arenas like Alan Jackson or somebody like that, but I could definitely see myself being like John R. Miller where he can at least make a living off his music, and he can do the thing he loves to make a living off of it," Matheny added.

He has released a number of songs on all streaming platforms. His latest new release is called "1813" and it is available on Spotify, Apple Music, and YouTube.

"1813" is a West Virginia inspired song and emphasizes many Mountain State motifs that can be relatable for any West Virginian, as well as pull at the heartstrings.

Matheny will be sharing his West Virginia melodies alongside Benson Beverly on Friday at The Soapbox at 7 p.m.

Austin Glaspell

"You just gotta throw your soul into it"

Austin Glaspell is a Lost Creek native who has had a passion for singing ever since he was little.

"I've always considered myself a singer [even] before I'm a guitar player, and I always loved to sing growing up," he said. "I consider myself a rock and roll, blues, folk, country guy. You can put all those in one category-just Americana music."

Glaspell's motivation comes from his best friend, Jesse Johnson, who he grew up with and taught him how to play guitar and sing harmony. After three years of them playing music together, Glaspell said Johnson passed away from kidney cancer.

"He's literally the driving force of why I keep doing this and my songwriting too," Glaspell added. "There's a force behind it, and when I'm really pouring it out in my music at a show or something, that's the kind of stuff that's on my mindthose people in my life that have affected my life, and I just pour it out."

In regard to Songs & Stories, Glaspell said he is excited about having it in the

"What I'm most excited about is just to have different music venues and different styles of music and original music by local artists," he said. "The world seems to forget that there are local musicians out there with original music, so [Songs & Stories] gives everybody an opportunity to hear that side instead of just cover bands."

Glaspell never forgets the soul in his music. "I sing and play straight from the soul," he said. "You just gotta throw your soul into it and your genre will be whatever genre you're meant to be. You just gotta be yourself."

He said that being himself and letting his soul shine through in his music is what it is all about.

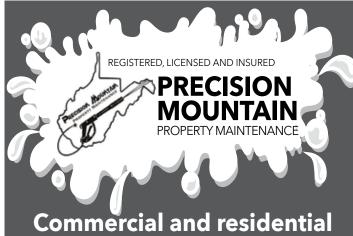

"Just being myself and letting the blues come out and rock and roll, country, and everything that we've all grown up on around here, and letting that be a part of who I am and seeing where it goes," Glaspell said.

When writing his songs, he said inspirations come in spur of the moment. "When it comes, I make sure that I have pen and paper and my guitar around, and I'm just picking around and letting it flow," Glaspell said.

In his songs, he likes to tell stories about what is going on in his own life, and he also enjoys writing folk stories about different pastimes, as well as old America and current things going on around him.

Glaspell's new "Feeling Better" is a rock and roll slow jam, and he said, "It's about a love that brings you back to yourself, and it's nothing toxic. A lot of the things we go through in life are toxic...and it's about love that's not toxic. It's love that's good for you."

century.

From the late 19th century 1917, Mannington's population grew from around 700 to over 4,000 and it had its own trolley system, electricity, theaters, schools, fire department and other amenities. My dad, who grew up in Hundred, West Virginia always spoke of Mannington as being a thriving town in his youth and he remembered many times going Mannington.

Mayor Michael told me of some of the plans for the town. Her face lights up when she talks about the recent award vacant and dilapidated houses. She has photos of each of the houses taped to her file cabinet and said she can't wait for the day that she gets to pull each of the photos down as they are demolished. She said she spends a good bit of time each day calling state officials and others to put in a plug for her town. You can tell she has a passion for the town and seems to enjoy her job, even with the occasional setback.

Some things that I noticed on my visit were a beautiful mural that is painted on an old, red three impressive arches in the brick building in the center of town. It covers the entire side of the building and may be one of the biggest murals in the state. It features a scene of an old oil derrick with a barn, set against the green countryside and a cloud-filled sky. Murals have become a great way to attract visitors and give the town an identity and focal point for a snapshot of history.

I always encourage cities and towns that to "go big" with attractions like murals. Since most murals are viewed at a distance, using the entire side of a building gets people's attention and is memorable. of a grant to remove some In addition, with everyone having a camera on their phone, having a mural as a focal point is a great place for visitors to take pictures.

> Another stunning feature of Mannington is the beautiful Mannington Public School, built in 1902. This red brick building is one of the most significant school buildings in the state and shows the investment that was made when Mannington growing as an oil and natural gas producer. The building has a large clock tower and front. You can almost imagine schoolchildren in the early 1900s walking through those arches on their way to class.

If you like large Victorian houses, Mannington several on almost every street. Many are kept in pristine condition and have wrought iron fences and wellkept shrubbery. One could spend a day in Mannington just admiring the buildings, having lunch in one of the many restaurants or enjoying the downtown park. The park was constructed on land that once housed the Wintergarden Hotel and Restaurant, which burned down in a devastating fire several years ago.

If you are looking for a pleasant drive and a beautiful small town, you cannot go wrong by putting Mannington on your bucket list. And don't forget to stop by City Hall and say hi to Mayor Lora Michael, Amazing small-town mayor!

TCU in a homecoming tilt. The Horned Frogs are a perfect 6-0 and are riding high after a 43-40 double overtime win over Oklahoma State.

Currently, the Mountaineers are in the middle of the pack in the conference standings. TCU and Kansas State are the only remaining unbeatens, and they play each other this Saturday in a prime-time lockup. Let's just imagine that the Horned Frogs upend the Wildcats, and WVU takes care of business in Texas because it would increase the value of that homecoming showdown with TCU.

The conference title is indeed up for grabs, and WVU has put themselves in position for a run at the crown. What else could Mountaineer Nation ask for?
