Small Business Saturday draws crowds to Shinnston

Holiday shoppers swarm Shinnston

By Erin Beck

Small Business Saturday drew a flurry of deal hunters from Shinnston and both surrounding areas to downtown. Window shoppers and gift-givers to local gravitated businesses offering discounts on presents, seasonal décor and holiday treats candy.

Dale's Daily Deals was especially busy. Several shoppers noted they'd been impressed with the discounts there.

"These are great deals here at Dale's Deals," Shingleton said. "These have been the best ones."

They had also just made a few purchases at Home Style. They were specifically in search of toys for South Harrison High School's annual toy run for children in need.

By Erin Beck

Volunteers dished out Thanksgiving Day dinner to a record number of people last week, according to Pastor Kevin Nuzum, whose church holds the annual event.

Nuzum said volunteers served about 400 meals, including curbside pick-ups, deliveries and a small group of dine-ins.

That's the highest number Nuzum, who grew up in the church and previously served as youth pastor, can remember in decades.

He remembers years when about 100 meals were served. Back then, churchgoers would prepare food and bring it, and the dinners specifically went to those who frequent the Lord's Pantry.

Now about 400 people regularly pick up food at the Lord's Pantry. The dinner is open to anyone in the Lincoln feeder area, and they buy in bulk.

Nuzum said some people who called to reserve an order described this year as a greater struggle for them, whether that was because of higher food costs or less discretionary income.

People could pick up Lord's Pantry, and the Lord's Pantry is serving a greater number of possible through dopeople.

The church did not set any income requirements. But most of the deliveries went to apartments where people live who are lowincome, lack transportation, or are older, he said. He also said the event draws older and single people who have no need to purchase reservation forms at the ingredients to prepare dinner for a group.

The event is made See "Grateful" on Pg 3.

The coronavirus, a cautionary tale

As the curtain seemed to be closing on the COVID-19 epidemic, I breathed a sigh of relief that I had escaped the virus. I can't say that it was that much of an inconvenience for me. I was able to do most everything that I had wanted. I kept a supply of masks in my car and put one on when necessary. I was anxious to receive the vaccine and drove up to Morgantown to have my first two shots. I knew the virus was dangerous and a list of people who were affected. I knew an increasing number of them and sadly, some friends died after contracting COVID. As things progressed, I took the first of three booster shots and did not have a reaction to any of them.

In the spring of 2022, my wife and I were able to take our granddaughter on a trip to Paris that had been delayed when the virus hit in 2020. The trip was wonderful but there was still a lot of concern, and many people were wearing masks throughout our trip. The United States required that everyone coming into the country be required to take a COVID test and we awoke at 5 a.m. one day to take the test before we flew home.

I have to say that I was a bit nervous waiting for the results of the tests, since it would have required being quarantined in a French hotel for ten days,

OPINION

By Mac Warner WV Secretary of State

State elections are a model

Congratulations, West Virginia! Once again, West Virginia has executed a great election and demonstrated to the nation how to hold an election and deliver results on election night.

Consider that vote counting continued in other states more than a week after Election Day, while West Virginia held true to its pledge to provide confident results on election night. Our success story is a powerful precedent and evidence that West Virginia is a national leader in election administration. We conducted a near flawless election without limiting access or making concessions on security. The essence of honest elections is to make the voting experience simple and easy for the voter, all while following a secure election process structured by well-thought-out laws and careful planning.

We have leveraged technology, from voting machines to GIS mapping and texting. Actual implementation of the technology has been done via meticulous preparation and training by county clerks, their staff, and our field investigators. In 2016, only 16% of registered voters in West Virginia were using state-of-the-art voting equipment. Now, with the help of millions of dollars of funding available to every county, West Virginia is on track to have 95% of registered voters in the state voting on the latest technology by 2024. This new equipment is ADA compliant and completely disconnected from the internet. Clerks train poll workers extensively on the equipment, thereby making the voting experience easy and safe for voters. Our clerks, election workers, and investigators deserve a huge pat on the back for their hard work and dedication to election integrity.

Our election personnel attended numerous meetings wherein we helped make policies that required communication between states and the federal government and facilitated communications between states as well as with our county officials.

Our systems were under constant guard leading up to Election Day by an extensive network of cybersecurity protections and close coordination with our West Virginia National Guard, State Office of Technology, Fusion Center, Secretary of State Office of Information Technology, SOS Investigations Staff, and federal partners at the Department of Homeland Security and Cybersecurity and Infrastructure Security Agency.

Another technological tool in bolstering voter confidence has been our first-in-the-nation "See Something, TEXT Something" campaign. Along with our 877-FRAUD-WV hotline, more than a dozen messages were sent by concerned citizens and instantaneously acted upon by our investigation team deployed throughout the state.

All of West Virginia should be proud of our elections and the example we set for the rest of the nation. Our Legislature has done a great job of prescribing the rules by which we run elections, and officials throughout West Virginia have done a great job of following those election laws. Accordingly, our voters have confidence in the process, and our citizens enjoy having results reported on election night.

Congratulations to everyone who worked, voted, ran for office, or simply enjoys living in a state that has become an election model for the rest of the country.

Mac Warner is serving his second term as the West Virginia Secretary of State. A graduate of the U.S. Military Academy at West Point and the West Virginia University College of Law, Secretary Warner retired from the U.S. Army with 23 years of service at the rank of Lt. Colonel.

waiting to be allowed to travel home. Thankfully, would be a great gag gift to bring home. I had we all tested negative and were able to complete our trip without a problem.

In the past several months, it seemed that people had quit talking about the virus and moved on to other things. When I went to work out in the mornings, I would rarely see anyone wearing a mask and even my doctor's office had quit requiring masks. The news had mentioned that this year might be a bad one for the flu, so I scheduled my flu shot and got it shortly before Thanksgiving. I was glad I got it since my wife was planning our Thanksgiving dinner and I was looking forward to it, with all the family together for the first time in a long time.

I had a trip to Kansas City scheduled for the National League of Cities Conference and once again, there were just a few participants wearing masks, and people were crowded into the meeting rooms like before the pandemic. As I was walking through the vendors' expo, I saw a stuffed animal in the shape of the coronavirus, and I thought that planned to give it to my granddaughter when we had Thanksgiving dinner and tell her I brought home the "coronavirus" from Kansas City.

Unfortunately, my joke was not as funny when I woke up a couple days after returning from Kansas City with a sore throat and my wife said I should take the at-home test for COVID. I put the drops on the test strip and watched as the two pink lines appeared, which indicated that I was positive for COVID. That meant no Thanksgiving dinner, and I was isolated in my house while everyone else was enjoying the holiday. It seems to be a mild case and my doctor feels that by having all the booster shots, I should be fine in a few days.

My words of wisdom are that the virus is still among us and to not take this virus lightly. Wear your mask if you are going to be in crowded areas and make sure to keep up with your boosters. Good health to you and have an Amazing week!

Churchgoers could "adopt a turkey" from their "wall of turkeys" for an about $30 donation to help out.

Nuzum, who said more volunteers served this year, said he was thankful for the volunteers' efforts. Cub Scouts and members of North Shinnston Baptist Church were among those helping, he said.

Many have volunteered for years. Cooking began at 7:30 a.m., packaging began at 10:30 a.m., and most everything was delivered by noon when the small dine-in began.

Due to pandemic-related food supply chain problems, they had to purchase food from places like Sam's Club earlier this year, Nuable.

Michelle Cari, of Shinnston, owns Salem Does Yarn and sells stuffed animals and mushrooms with soft fabrics, including hand-dyed yarn. She said everything is also child friendly. She uses acrylic for kids with wool allergies and also offers customs. Her shop is called Salem Does Yarn after her cat Salem. She has an Instagram, @ salemdoesyarn, and an Etsy shop, Salemdoesyarn. etsy.com.

Walking tour plans progress

In between Christmas shopping Saturday, Shinnston Development Authority President James Coulter provided an update on a proposed sidewalk and crosswalk project.

During a previous SDA meeting, Coulter had encouraged creating a walking tour through town, with signs letting pedestrians know how far they'd walked, and replaced crosswalks offering more accessibility, especially for those with disabilities.

"It's going to cause you to walk by a place like this, not just drive by it, so when you're walking by it you look in the window and you're like 'I want to go buy something there," he said, standing in Home Style during Small Business Saturday.

Coulter said he planned to take measurements for signs while City Manager Chad Edwards had been working with state roads officials on returning the crosswalks. There had been talk of four crosswalks, but Coulter said plans for the one by Saltwell Road had been scrapped due to the heaviness of traffic there.

The other three cross Pike Street; walk boxes will also be turned back on, Coulter said.

A new season begins in Morgantown

The West Virginia men's basketball team started the season on fire. The Mountaineers jumped out to a 4-0 record with three of them coming at the Coliseum. Wins over Mount St. Mary's, Morehead State, and Penn were impressive in front of WVU fans. The Mountaineers won those three contests by a 23.3 average margin of victory.

The backyard brawl at rival Pitt could not even offer a close contest for the 'Eers. The decisive 81-56 win over the Panthers was indeed satisfying to fans that would cheer a win over Pitt in anything from lawn darts up, but this year's Panther squad is not much to speak about. Veteran mentor Bob Huggins is fresh off of being inducted into the Naismith Memorial Basketball Hall of Fame (Class of 2022) and has been around long enough to know that a good start is just that and nothing more.

The tune up wins allowed an opportunity to see how different combinations of players might mesh together. Huggins has a deep, talented roster that looks really good in warmups, and the 10-12 players that show unlimited potential are all jockeying for playing time. The hope is that the competition in practice will help with player development and team cohesiveness at the same time. Huggins is looking to kill more than one bird with one stone.

Watching the veteran mentor on the sideline against Mount St. Mary's and Penn, he appeared to be doing more watching than anything else. Let's face it, if you removed Huggins and the rest of the coaching staff, the Mountaineers would have won both of those lockups rather easily.

Huggins was observing his troops to see how they would react in various situations. He has been rather quiet about his real thoughts concerning this group. He knows that his words can make a difference in the preparation and the play of his players. When the time is right, he will praise and critique to mold his team how he sees fit.

Thanksgiving is a special holiday that brings family together for all of the right reasons, and the Mountaineers spent the holiday in Portland, Oregon participating in the Phil Knight Legacy Tournament. After WVU broke bread, they had their win streak broken by #24 Perdue.

The Boilermakers jumped out to an 11-point halftime lead and looked poised to put the 'Eers away early. The time arrived for WVU to play a good team and it took them some time to adjust. Once they found their footing, the Mountaineers battled back to trail by four with 5:30 left in the

The fight back effort drained the tank, and they did not get any closer, eventually losing 80-67. There are going to be games that are lost and there is nothing good that comes out of them. After the setback, Huggins mentioned being 4-0 prior to this game and the reason was that his squad was better than the previous opponents. In other words, they would have to play better and, more importantly, be ready to play when the ball is tossed up.

The message was received, and the next night against Portland State, WVU came out ready to play. Instead of trailing at the break, the Mountaineers grew a 17-point lead at intermission. They kept the foot on the gas and never held less than a double-digit lead in the second half.

At the time this article was written, the third game of this event had not been played. That will bring another chapter for another day, but for now, Huggins has remined us that he still has what it takes to motivate his players. He still has the pulse of his team and, in time, will transform them into the best team they can be. How good they will be is determined later, but for now, enjoy watching the legend work.

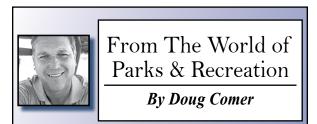

That will do it for now. Until next week...take care and God bless!

Pickleball is creating quite a racket in the area

Quietly, Pickleball has emerged as one of the fastest growing sports across the country. I know, this is not hot off the press news, but this game has opened its range from young to old, and equal to golf, it is definitely one of the sports that no matter the age, you can play.

To give those an idea who have never played, just imagine playing tennis on a smaller court with a smaller racket but use the strategies that you find when playing ping-pong. The rules take a little time to get used to, but once you do, let the competition begin.

Currently, I am a newbie but hooked on the game. Gym teachers have taught the game for decades, and the parks department even brought the sport as part of the life-time sports enrichment during our outdoor adventures program. The game is a workout too.

Now that I have piqued your interest, onto the rules of the game:

The game is most commonly played as doubles and the court is reduced in size compared to a tennis court. To start the game, the serve must be determined either by honor, guessing a number, or playing even/odds. The server's arm must be moving in an upward arc when the ball is struck and contact with the ball must not be made above the waist. Just like tennis, the serve must make it into the back serving box diagonal to where the server begins play for it to be legal.

After the serve, the return must be struck after the bounce and the same applies after the return crosses the net to the opponent's side. From there, the goal is for the ball to bounce power, just depending on your situation.

Scoring points only happens when the team is serving the ball. Games normally go to 11, and you have to win by at least two points. Before each serve, you announce the score and who is serving. At the beginning, there is just one serve by the team, and once there is a "fault" the other team has two chances to accumulate points. For example, to open the match, the server says "0-0-2." That allows everyone to know the score and who the server is. Pretty similar to ping pong scoring. You are allowed only one serve unlike tennis.

Here is the caveat to playing this game: there is a non-volley zone, otherwise known as the "kitchen." This area is only 7-feet on both sides of the net, and volleying is prohibited within the area. The rule prevents players from executing smashes from a position within the zone. If you smash a shot, and your momentum takes you into that zone, then you have committed a fault and lose the point or the serve. The only way to step into the zone is if the ball actually bounces into the area. This is when players try to dink or dunk the ball with soft shots performed on purpose.

As mentioned previously, the rule for faults twice or place the ball where your opponent is any action that sops play because of the rule cannot return. It is a game of finesse and violation. If you are the receiving team and you commit a fault, then the serving team gets a point, and if the serving team violates, then it is a loss of serve or a side out.

> The easiest thing to do is get online and watch some YouTube videos about the rules to see how the game is played because it will be easier to understand. Locally, there are plenty of places to play this game. When the weather is right, you will see a packed house at Veterans Park, and during the cold or windy days, you can make a trek to the Bridge in Bridgeport and see the basketball courts being transformed into Pickleball courts.

> If interested in to getting involved, you can find a Pickleball group on Facebook and simply send them a message, and they welcome new players to the game.

Giving thanks for Tiger Woods

By Bill Nestor Sports Editor

Thanksgiving is a special holiday because it has been able to keep its original meaning throughout the years. Christmas, and even Easter to some extent, have been commercialized and have fallen victim to the almighty dollar. Corporate America has not found a way to infiltrate Thanksgiving and all that it stands for in our country. The trick is to try to remain thankful all year long while truly giving God thanks for all of those blessings that he provides us with day in and day out.

The golf world is extremely thankful to have the best golfer of the times back on the course just in time to celebrate Christmas. Tiger Woods and his son

Charlie have confirmed that they will be participating in the PNC Championship at the Ritz-Carlton Golf Club Orlando, Grande Lakes, December 15-18.

The tandem is hoping that the third time is the charm. Two years ago, they finished seventh, and last year they garnered a runner-up finish. Tiger, by all accounts, is looking like a real threat to compete for major championships again while Charlie is developing into an impressive young golfer with a bright future. The dynamic duo is looking to enact some revenge on John Daly and his son, as well as several other big-name participants. I hate to wish time away, but I'm really looking forward to seeing how far Tiger has brought his game since we last saw him. Anytime you have a chance to see a legend play, it is a blessing, and in mid-December we will have a golden opportunity.
