Historic Woolwine building lost in Saturday fire

By Taylor Boyd

The former Patrick County CO-OP building in Woolwine caught fire Saturday, February 7, resulting in a total loss of the commercial property.

Thomas Industrial Fabrication was renting the building from Wade's Produce as a working warehouse.

Woolwine Volunteer Fire Department Chief Bennett Shough said the fire started around 3:30 a.m.

"It was very cold and very windy. It was a big fire with the wind driving the fire, and everybody about froze to death," he said.

Firefighters were on scene till about 2:30 p.m. containing the fire.

"The wind was driving the fire. There was just so much involved - the building's so big, it was just hard to contain. We couldn't get inside it because it was caving in in places, and there's so much stuff inside the building. We didn't know what was in there, so we didn't want to go in. (See Fire p. 7)

Winter storms strain local businesses

By Taylor Boyd

Due to the recent winter weather and icy road conditions, many businesses throughout the county have been closed, some for days.

Icy precipitation kicked off the weather in late January, with multiple snowfalls and frigid temperatures following soon after.

Poor Farmers' Market and Concord Corner Store owner Felecia Shelor said both businesses essentially came to a grinding halt when the weather turned cold. However, Shelor felt like she had to keep Poor Farmer's Market open to serve the community.

"We're the only business in the community that sells diesel, and we have food in the deli, and we try to be there for the road crews, the local contractors, farmers, and people who have to be out," she said.

Despite being one of the only businesses open in Meadows of Dan, Shelor said business was slow, with only about 40-50 customers each day.

"Many of those are the same people coming in more than once a day, like the VDOT crews," she said of Virginia Department of Transportation crews working to clear the roads.

After a week of being closed, Concord reopened on Friday.

"That's a problem because we have employees who need to make money. We keep that store open primarily because we need to keep our staff employed in the winter, so we have to open it back up when the roads are good enough," she said. (See Winter Storms p. 6)

Former delegate Charles Poindexter remembered as devoted public servant

By Taylor Boyd

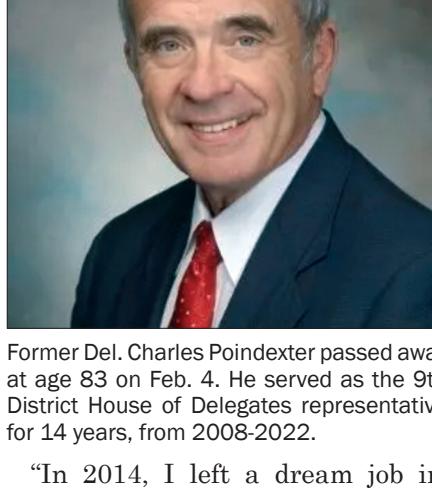

Former House of Delegates representative Charles Douglas "Charlie" Poindexter died at his home on Wednesday, Feb. 4. He was 83.

Poindexter served in the House from 2008-2022, representing the 9th district, which included Patrick, Henry, and Franklin counties.

He also represented the Union Hall District on the Franklin County Board of Supervisors for eight years.

The House of Delegates adjourned in Poindexter's honor on February 5.

Will Pace, Poindexter's legislative assistant for eight years, said his tenure working for Poindexter will always be among the highlights of his life.

Former Del. Charles Poindexter passed away at age 83 on Feb. 4. He served as the 9th District House of Delegates representative for 14 years, from 2008-2022.

January at the Patrick County Library

"Rest is not laziness. It is a crucial part of the cycle of life, a period of renewal that prepares us for what's ahead."—Louise Wallace

January was a month of reflection and resetting. Sam has returned from maternity leave and we are so glad to have our team back together. Joni started a new chair yoga program, which has been a hit. Another change we made this month is the Lego Club has been switched to the first and third Monday of the month. Emme's Book Bingo went well, and one participant left with three or four books.

The Book Bedazzling Club was well attended. We had three teenagers present, which was amazing. They helped me come up with ideas on activities teenagers in 2026 are interested in. Stay tuned for future teen programming here at the Patrick County Library. I love this bedazzling group. Every time we meet, we have new members. It's so nice to meet new people and through asking questions and creating relationships, learn what people are interested in and create opportunity for our community here at the library.

Our Dolly Day Celebration had an amazing turnout. Thirty-one people came and helped us celebrate Dolly Parton's 80th birthday. Cowboy hats were made, cookies and cupcakes were eaten and Mrs. Sam read some of Dolly's books that are in our library. If that wasn't enough, Emme led line dancing in the meeting room, proving that there was fun for one and all. Thank you to all who participated and we look forward to next year's celebration.

Decade's trivia night was scheduled for January 15, and unfortunately it was so cold outside that no one attended. But I am determined because Abby works so diligently on her trivia questions, making sure they are age appropriate and proven correct and I know this event is enjoyed. We rescheduled trivia night for the following Thursday, and we had two teams come out. We had so much fun. It was interesting to see that the questions from 1990-2020 were just as tricky as the questions from the 1920-1960s. Contestants dressed up in 1940s through 90s attire, with some dressed in 2020 fashion. I really enjoy seeing people attend Trivia Night and display their creativity in their outfits. The goal in my mind when players leave the library on trivia night is having learned a factoid and having laughed out loud at least once. I am proud to say this goal has been met each trivia night.

During our Senior Social meeting in January, we used this day as an opportunity to plan our meetings for the entire year. I am so excited about all the events we came up with. We have educational programs, creative programs, and some food programs in the works. If you are interested in more information on the Senior Social Programming, please look for the Year at a Glance setup I have posted in the library.

Due to inclement weather, Norma Bozenmayer and I decided we should reschedule the Bears in VA program that we had scheduled for January 24, to February 14th at 11am. I encourage everyone to come out and learn about black bears. There is no registration or age limit.

The last week of January was spent essentially at home, stuck in place, due to winter weather and temperatures that stayed below freezing. The Patrick County Library was open on Friday, January 30th from 12-2pm. We had to reschedule or cancel a couple of events. They were the Basic Technology Class part 2: Smart Phones and National Shelfie Day. The Basic Tech Pt. 2 Smart Phone class has been rescheduled for Thursday, February 26th at 1pm.

If you are a bookmobile patron, our staff safety and the safety of our patrons are our top priority. There may be times when the library is open but the bookmobile remains parked at the library due to parking safety issues. Should you have a question or concern, please contact the library.

With January ending in such a wintery fashion, I can honestly say that I hope February loves us and brings some clear, warmer days. I hope you all come by the library to see us and stock up on some good reading materials.

Until next month, Happy Reading!

Chamber Chat for January

By Rebecca Adcock

After what felt like seven hundred days of January, we have finally made it to February – bringing along much of the same cold, ice, and snow. Still, as I look out on this snowy first day of the month, the sunshine reflecting off the snow is a good reminder that even winter has its bright moments.

If weather or winter disruptions knocked your January plans off track, take this as your sign: February is a fresh start.

January is always a busy time for the Chamber as we kick off our annual membership drive, begin Spring magazine ad sales, and map out events and programming for the year ahead.

Looking back, 2025 was a strong year for the Chamber, made possible by our members, partners, and community. From business support and leadership programming to tourism promotion and community events like Stuart Spooktacular and Hometown Christmas, the work we do together truly reflects our motto: Community Is Our Business.

As we move into 2026, the Chamber will continue focusing on supporting local businesses, hosting educational opportunities, promoting Patrick County, and serving as a resource for our community.

This month, we are continuing our partnership with Patrick & Henry Community College to offer entrepreneurial classes locally, and on February 24, 2026, we will host two programs: an ADA Digital Compliance workshop at 12:00 noon, and a Community Committee Interest program at 5:30 p.m., in partnership with the Patrick County government.

Thank you to our members for your continued support – your business, our community make us stronger together!

Welcome to new chamber members: Daniel's Auto Glass & Tint, Disaster Relief Food Ministry, Hedges Workwise, Thomas Heating & Air LLC, and Healing Waters Day Spa.

Adcock is the executive director of the Patrick County Chamber of Commerce

Area agencies say governor's order won't impact operations

By Taylor Boyd

Gov. Abigail Spanberger's recent executive order outlining statewide law enforcement standards will not change operations for local agencies, officials said.

The order directs state law enforcement agencies to align policies and training with principles focused on public trust and community safety and ends certain federal immigration enforcement agreements.

However, authorities in Henry and Patrick counties, and the City of Martinsville, said they are not affected by the directive.

Patrick County Sheriff Dan Smith said Spanberger's executive orders do not pertain to anyone but state law enforcement.

"She's their boss. Nothing was changed with us," he said.

Smith noted individual localities will also decide if they will cooperate with the United States Immigration and Customs Enforcement.

"Anytime we have somebody in our jail that is an illegal alien that has detainees on them, we've always cooperated in the past, and we will continue to do so," he said.

Henry County Sheriff Wayne Davis said that while "there has been some confusion within the community about what Governor Spanberger's Executive Order means for Henry County, I want to be very clear: this order applies only to state law enforcement agencies — primarily the Virginia State Police and the Department of Corrections. It does not apply to sheriffs or sheriff's offices in the Commonwealth."

Davis added that his office "will continue to cooperate fully with all federal law enforcement agencies, including U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement. Our mission, our authority, and our partnerships remain unchanged."

By rescinding the order, Martinsville Police Chief Chad Rhoads said Spanberger reset the state's directive to where it was late last year.

"Political back and forth is what it is. It doesn't really affect the way we do things. It doesn't affect the way we do business," he said.

U.S. Rep. Morgan Griffith, R-Salem, said, "law enforcement officials are important public safety servants in Virginia's Ninth District. A core function of their mission is to protect Virginia communities, and I believe cooperation between local, state, and federal officials helps accomplish that goal."

"I believe Governor Spanberger's action to terminate 287(g) agreements directly undermines this goal and potentially pits local communities, state law enforcement, and federal law enforcement against each other. This creates danger for all involved," Griffith said.

"This executive directive can be seen as encouraging behaviors and actions that obstruct federal law enforcement," he said. "Because the public safety needs of our communities are in Virginia's best interest, I urge Governor Spanberger to rescind this harmful executive directive."

Spanberger, a former federal law enforcement officer, said the order issued last week is based on core values that emphasize preserving human life, protecting vulnerable people, and upholding the U.S. and Virginia constitutions.

The order outlines six guiding principles:

- Law enforcement exists to preserve life, protect vulnerable people and uphold the Constitution.

- Public trust is essential to effective policing and should be built through professionalism, transparency, accountability and consistent community engagement.

- Virginia law enforcement does not engage in fear-based policing or actions that discourage people from seeking help.

- Police efforts should focus on enforcing criminal law and protecting public safety, not on administrative enforcement of civil status.

- Strong training, recruitment and retention help ensure officers have clear standards and sound preparation.

- Partnerships among law enforcement agencies, residents, educators, faith and civic leaders, businesses and local governments are critical to safe communities and a strong economy.

The executive order directs state law enforcement agencies to review all policies, training and practices to ensure they align with those standards.

— Outdoor burning — restrictions begin Feb. 15

Virginia's 4 p.m. burning law takes effect Feb. 15 and runs through April 30.

The law prohibits open-air burning before 4 p.m. if the fire is within 300 feet of woods or dry grass that could carry flames into forested areas. Burning is allowed between 4 p.m. and midnight, provided the person starting the fire takes proper precautions and remains in attendance at all times.

Some localities may have additional outdoor burning restrictions. Residents are encouraged to check with their local government before starting any outdoor fire.

Officials remind residents that anyone who starts a fire is responsible for suppression costs if it escapes, even if permits were obtained and precautions were taken.

Violations of the law are a Class 3 misdemeanor, punishable by a fine of up to $500.

Spanberger's "Affordable Virginia Agenda" advances in the General Assembly

Eight of the bills rolled out by Gov. Abigail Spanberger and Virginia legislators in December as part of their "Affordable Virginia Agenda" have already passed through the House of Delegates or Senate — including legislation to protect the long-term supply of affordable housing, improve grid efficiency to lower prices for ratepayers, and expand programs that help Virginians improve the energy efficiency of their homes.

"Virginia families deserve leaders who are fully focused on delivering relief and making the Commonwealth more affordable. That's why I got to work before day one — together with House and Senate Democratic leadership — to roll out our Affordable Virginia Agenda. My administration is focused on working with our partners in the General Assembly to lower healthcare, housing, and energy costs for Virginians in every community across our Commonwealth," said Spanberger. "I look forward to signing these bills — and every piece of legislation in our agenda — into law to bring down costs for Virginians."

In the opening days of her administration, Governor Spanberger is using the full power of her office to make life less expensive for Virginians. On her first day in office, the Governor signed executive orders to start building a stronger, more affordable future — including by directing her cabinet secretaries and all executive branch agencies to quickly identify ways to reduce costs for families. Governor Spanberger also made clear in her first joint address to the General Assembly that she will work with anyone — from either party — to drive down costs.

A list of the "Affordable Virginia Agenda" legislation passed by the Virginia House of Delegates or Senate includes:

- HB2 (Del. Carr) — Reducing heating and energy costs for Virginians who need it most
- HB3 (Del. LeVere Bolling) — Establishing a Virginia Weatherization Task Force to improve energy efficiency
- HB4 (Del. Bennett-Parker) — Empowering localities to preserve and protect the long-term availability of affordable housing
- HB15 (Del. Price), SB48 (Sen. Rouse) — Improving protections for Virginia renters (passed by House and Senate)
- HB220 (Del. Hope), SB630 (Sen. Carroll Foy) — Eliminating additional fees on healthcare premiums (passed by House and Senate)
- HB 434 (Del. LeVere Bolling) — Optimizing grid utilization to get more out of the current distribution system.

Smyth County doctor faces child exploitation charges

A 68-year-old doctor, who worked at Smyth County Community Hospital and allegedly had a sexual relationship with an underage female coworker that included exchanging explicit images with the victim, was arrested last week by the FBI.

Michael Kevin Patrick, of Sugar Grove, Va., was charged via federal criminal complaint with receipt of child sexual abuse material (CSAM).

A criminal complaint is merely an accusation. The defendant is presumed innocent until proven guilty.

According to court documents, Juvenile Victim 1 (JV1) began working at Smyth County Community Hospital in December 2023, when she was 16 years old. Shortly after starting her job, JV1 met Patrick in an elevator. JV1 told Patrick she was 17 years old, in high school, and interested in the medical field.

The two began talking regularly at work.

In late 2024, JV1 and Patrick started eating lunch together and communicating regularly via text messages and phone calls. Eventually, Patrick and JV1 engaged in sexual conversations with one another and exchanged nude pictures of themselves via text message.

In addition, Patrick started having a physical relationship with JV1 at his home and at work. During that span of time, JV1 was 16 years old. Patrick told JV1 that he was "looking forward to" her birthday, that the relationship had to be "secret," and that he "needed" her. After JV1 turned 17, and after Patrick believed JV1 had turned 18, Patrick had sexual intercourse with JV1.

Patrick and JV1 exchanged more than 19,000 text messages with one another. After Patrick's activities were discovered, he deleted his text messages with JV1.

The case was investigated by the Federal Bureau of Investigation and the Marion Police Department.

Virginia is a top state for wildlife-vehicle collisions, and this bill could help reduce them

By Elle Cota

Capital News Service

Virginia, which ranks among the top 10 states for wildlife-vehicle collisions, could soon have a voluntary grant fund for wildlife corridors that better protect drivers and animals.

Del. Shelly Simonds, D-Newport News, introduced House Bill 597 this legislative session, to create a nonreverting grant fund in the state treasury, supported by voluntary contributions, to be used for wildlife corridor and wildlife crossing projects.

Because the fund is nonreverting, any deposited money would remain available across fiscal years, including the use of voluntary contributions and grants rather than general tax increases.

If passed, the director of the Department of Wildlife Resources will administer the fund in collaboration with the state's Transportation, Conservation and Recreation, and Forestry departments.

Eligible applicants would include state agencies, local governments, metropolitan planning and non-profit organizations, regional transportation authorities, Indian tribes and academic institutions.

"There's already this wildlife corridor action plan," Simonds said. "Now, the question is having some funding that's stable to try to implement some of these goals."

The fund could also receive voluntary contributions through the Department of Motor Vehicles and individual state income tax checkoffs, as well as donations and grants and any future appropriated funds.

The DMV would provide an electronic donation option and clearly state contributions are optional. The income tax check-off would follow existing rules for entities entitled to voluntary contributions, including a $10,000 minimum contribution over three years.

"It's a really appropriate opportunity for people to be able to donate to a fund when they're renewing their driver's license or doing operations at the DMV," Simonds said.

Simonds added the proposal supports collaboration between agencies and data-sharing to help local-level planning, while also training staff on the cost and safety benefits of wildlife crossings.

"Sometimes moving the needle on issues like this takes time, but we are here," Simonds said. "We are all committed to doing this."

Improved data collection helps determine where wildlife crossings are most effective, as many collisions go unreported, said Connor Ransom, conservation associate for Environment Virginia.

Health Care Progress

Morgan Griffith

Representative

At the beginning of February, Congress passed an appropriations package to fund various federal agencies and projects.

I helped secure federal funding for Ninth District communities through some of the 12 appropriations bills. Some of this funding will support local communications equipment upgrades, nuclear energy research and transportation infrastructure.

The February government funding measure, which I supported, not only included some of the needed appropriations bills but also featured important health care policies.

One such policy concerns Pharmacy Benefit Manager (PBM) reform.

I have written about the problems of PBMs in the past and previously co-sponsored legislation.

PBMs, which are responsible for negotiating drug prices, serve as an intermediary between insurers, drugmakers, and patients.

In many cases, PBMs account for the drug price increases that patients and pharmacies face. These increases are fueled in part by PBM rebates, hidden fees and other actions.

The government funding measure contained provisions that challenge the practices of these middlemen, which sometimes cause consumers to pay more out of pocket costs. This is in spite of the fact that PBMs were originally formed to lower consumer costs.

Congress has acted to compel PBMs, group health plans and issuers to provide more prescription drug spending data.

We also give the Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services (CMS) authority to impose monetary penalties on PBMs that violate certain contract terms related to Medicare Part D and to track payment trends to pharmacies.

I believe these transparency reforms will help efforts to bring accountability to our drug pricing system, weed out unfair, predatory practices and reduce drug prices across the country.

The same week that Congress passed the most recent government funding package, one major PBM, Express Scripts, agreed to a settlement with the Federal Trade Commission (FTC).

As part of the agreement, Express Scripts will take several actions to increase transparency for plan sponsors and rein in its practices that led to artificially inflated list prices.

The PBM reforms Congress passed hopefully builds off this momentum.

Another target of our government funding measure? Cancer.

Congress expanded Medicare coverage of multi-cancer early detection screening tests. On screening, the tests do have significant false positives so don't panic if it says you have cancer, but for the first time we have tests that can pick up cancers like pancreatic cancer before there are no viable treatments.

The package also funded research efforts into pediatric cancer.

I was proud to help advance these bills from the Energy and Commerce Subcommittee on Health.

Other provisions in the government funding bill extend the authorities of a number of key health care programs and services.

Rural health stands to benefit!

One of the program extensions protects the Medicare-dependent Hospital program.

This program provides boosted reimbursements to small, rural hospitals that serve a high proportion of Medicare patients. As a result, these hospitals can better support their communities in these rural areas.

As our rural communities age and our reliance on Medicare persists, some hospitals in our part of the state will qualify for this program and the federal dollars that come with it!

These are not the only in-person medical operations in Virginia's Ninth District supported by the government funding extensions.

A second health extender supports the work of Community Health Centers (CHCs).

Because of the lack of a sufficient presence of health care providers in rural Virginia, CHCs help fill some of this void. There are 61 in Virginia's Ninth District alone!

CHCs will continue to play a major role in serving the medical needs of Virginia's Ninth District.

While support for rural community access to in-person providers is essential, some still face barriers.

That is why in the government funding measure, Congress also extends program authority for telehealth flexibility.

Rural communities, which lack sufficient and immediate access to in-person providers, can receive more prompt attention and care via telehealth services.

As a staunch advocate of rural health care solutions, this extension will allow many communities in rural America to more easily access health care services.

It is great that this Congress has extended these program authorities. The above policy reforms and extensions continue the critical work of our health care professionals to deliver necessary care, resources and support to rural America.

I will continue using my position as Energy and Commerce Health Subcommittee Chairman to protect these programs for rural America.

These programs are a piece of the puzzle to meaningful rural health care solutions. They represent my interest to make health care more affordable, more accessible and more accountable for you.

Social Security as a Child

By Russell Gloor

Obviously, minor children normally aren't working and contributing to the Social Security program toward their future retirement, but that doesn't mean Social Security isn't there to protect them.

In real life, there are two main situations where minor children can collect Social Security benefits based upon a parent's earnings record – 1) if the parent is living and collecting their personal Social Security retirement (or disability) benefit, or 2) if a parent is deceased and was eligible for Social Security benefits.

This is a real life stories about minor children who are the surviving dependents of a parent entitled to (but not necessarily collecting) Social Security retirement or disability benefits.

Minor Child Benefits from a Deceased Parent: "Three young sisters"

Cheryl and Bernie had three little girls – Jennifer (8); Rebecca (6); and Danielle (4). Bernie was a corrections officer, and Cheryl was an Administrative Assistant for a prestigious local law firm. But one day while battling a bad cold, Cheryl developed a severe, debilitating headache and went to the local hospital Emergency Room for treatment. Turned out Cheryl had bacterial meningitis, an infection which caused her brain to swell, putting her into a deep coma from which she never recovered. Cheryl succumbed several days later at only 35 years of age, leaving behind a devastated family, including her three young daughters.

The trauma was obviously severe for Cheryl's entire family, but through the dark cloud of the family's loss, Social Security was there. Although Cheryl had been in the workforce only about a dozen years, she had been contributing to Social Security from her earnings during those years, thus entitling her surviving minor children to Social Security benefits from Cheryl's earnings record.

As Cheryl's surviving spouse, Bernie contacted the Social Security Administration and applied for surviving minor child benefits for each of his girls, which were readily approved after Bernie provided Cheryl's death certificate and his daughters' Social Security Numbers to the Agency. And though it could never make up for the loss of their mother, each of Cheryl's daughters shared a portion of the Social Security benefit Cheryl had earned up to the day she died.

How much did each of Cheryl's children get? Well, the maximum benefit available to a surviving minor child is 75% of the deceased parent's full entitlement, but whenever there are multiple dependents the Family Maximum applies.^[1] Each of Cheryl's children received an equal portion of Cheryl's personal Family Maximum. And, although each received less than 75% of Cheryl's earned entitlement, each child collected their share until they were 18 years of age (thus no longer minors).^[2]

Who Received the Children's Social Security?

Bernie was appointed Representative Payee for each of his girls and was obligated to use funds received only for the girls' behalf, which Bernie chose to do by creating a college ("529 plan") savings fund for each girl into which each child's Social Security benefits were deposited.

Jennifer's minor child benefits stopped when she became 18 and, at that time, Cheryl's Family Maximum was shared only by Rebecca and Danielle (making each of their payments higher). And when Rebecca became 18, Danielle received her full 75% of Cheryl's earned entitlement. Monies accumulated over the years were saved and used to help fund each girl's college tuition.

As an aside, Bernie – still in his late 30s – was technically entitled to Social Security "child in care surviving spouse benefits" but could not collect that benefit because he continued to work full-time. Further, Bernie claiming child-in-care surviving spousal benefits would have only detracted from the amount his daughters could collect because the total amount of benefits paid by Social Security were limited by the Family Maximum.

The rest of the story

Although SS benefits were paid to Bernie as Representative Payee, that additional money did not impact Bernie's income tax obligation. The Social Security money was used for the children's benefit (even saving it counts), so it is not taxable by the IRS.

[1] The "Family Maximum restricts how much can be paid on one parent's SS record.

[2] Minor children can collect benefits until they are 18 years of age, or up to 19 if they are still in High School.

Sorry, Not Sorry — Part 1

So you're in this relationship and every time something goes wrong, whether or not you had anything to do with it, you end up saying Sorry! and taking the blame.

Maybe it's your boss. Maybe it's your colleague. Or your roommate. Or a parent. Or your spouse...

This can happen naturally between people, even if they're emotionally healthy because sometimes, we're all blind to our own mistakes.

But if it is an ongoing pattern, you might be dealing with a narcissist. And narcissists tend to become abusers over time.

One of the most common conversations I have with people in abusive situations (both in leadership and in marriages) revolves around questions such as:

How much should I shelter them from their own consequences? Should I say sorry even when things clearly aren't my fault? How often should I keep covering for them so nobody finds out what they're really like? Should I keep adjusting my own behavior to not trigger the abuse, instead of holding them accountable for their own choices and actions?

Stop Taking Their Responsibility

It can be terrifying to stop taking responsibility for another person's actions.

Often, it feels easier to shoulder the other per-

Patrick Pioneers

Dr. Powell Benton Reynolds

By Beverly Belcher Woody

The mountains of Patrick County have long sent forth sons and daughters whose lives have reached far beyond their birthplace. One such individual was Dr. Powell Benton Reynolds, a native son whose career in education, ministry, and public service touched thousands and brought distinction to both West Virginia and his Virginia home.

Powell Benton Reynolds was born in Patrick County, Virginia, on January 9, 1841, the son of James B. Reynolds and Roxana Shelor Reynolds. Like many young men of his generation, his early adulthood was shaped by the Civil War. In 1861, he enlisted in the Confederate army, first serving in Company D, Fifth Kentucky Infantry, and later in Company K, Fiftieth Virginia Infantry. He was captured in the autumn of 1864 and imprisoned at Point Lookout, Maryland, one of the war's largest prison camps. He was paroled on April 9, 1865; the very day General Robert E. Lee surrendered at Appomattox.

After the war, Reynolds turned his attention to education and self-improvement. He attended Richmond College (now the University of Richmond) from 1865 to 1870, preparing for a lifetime devoted to learning and teaching.

His early career included leadership positions in higher education. From 1872 to 1884, he served as president of Shelton College in St. Albans, West Virginia. He then became president of Buckner College in Arkansas from 1884 to 1885.

In 1885, Dr. Reynolds began the work for which he would be most widely remembered when he joined the faculty of West Virginia University. Over the next three decades, he became one of the institution's most respected and beloved educators. He served in a variety of roles, including professor of English literature, metaphysics, philosophy, political science, and later as university chaplain. From 1893 to 1895, he served as acting president of the university.

Students across the state knew him affectionately as "Petie," and he was remembered for his gentle, patient, and companionable nature. Former students, scattered throughout the United States, spoke of his lasting influence on their lives.

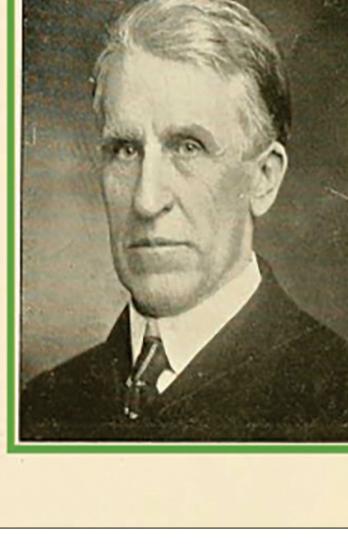

His contributions were recognized through honorary degrees, including a Master of Arts from West Virginia University in 1887 and a Doctor of Divinity from Richmond College in 1890. In addition to his academic duties, he was an ordained Baptist minister and for many years carried on active ministerial work alongside his teaching.

Dr. Reynolds also participated in public life. Independent in his political thinking, he generally supported Democratic principles but was not strictly bound to party candidates. In 1882, he was the candidate of the Prohibition Party for his district. Later, he served as secretary of the Women's Compensation Commission for 1911–1912.

Though much of his life was spent in academic surroundings, he remained closely connected to his community and church. He counted hundreds among his friends and neighbors and was active for many years in the Baptist church. His passing was mourned not only locally, but throughout the state and nation.

Dr. Reynolds died at his home in Morgantown on December 29, 1914, at the age of 73. He had been in declining health since being overcome by heat the previous summer, and his final illness was attributed to uremic poisoning. During his last days, his children gathered at his bedside, and he passed peacefully.

Dr. Reynolds married twice. His first wife was Virginia Henrietta Woolwine of Patrick County, whom he married on January 30, 1868. Virginia was born on March 7, 1844, to Thomas Woolwine, postmaster of Rock Castle, and Sarah "Sally" Adams. Her paternal grandparents were John Woolwine and Margaret Haymaker of Montgomery County, Virginia, while her maternal grandparents were Isaac C. Adams and Exoney Ingram of the northern district of Patrick County. Virginia's brother was Captain Rufus Woolwine of the 51st Virginia Infantry, who later served as Sheriff of Patrick County.

Powell and Virginia had three children: Wayland Fuller Reynolds (1869–1939), Maybelle Fuller Reynolds Glasscock (1870–1942), and Horace Bushnell Reynolds (1872–1876). Virginia died on January 12, 1873, shortly after the birth of Horace.

Dr. Reynolds's second wife, Marietta Love Reynolds of Putnam County, West Virginia, also survived him. Seven children were born to this marriage, with two living at the time of his death: Mrs. L. D. (Ethel) Arnett of Morgantown and Boyce W. Reynolds of Chicago.

Dr. Reynolds was also survived by one brother and three sisters who remained in Patrick County, a reminder that despite his wide influence, his roots in the Blue Ridge were never far removed.

For nearly thirty years at West Virginia University, and for many years before in other institutions, Dr. Powell Benton Reynolds shaped young minds and left a lasting impression on thousands of lives. His story stands as another example of how the values of faith, education, perseverance, and service, carried from the hills of Patrick County, could influence communities far beyond its borders.

Today, his life remains a point of pride for Patrick County — a testament to the enduring legacy of its people and the quiet strength of a mountain upbringing.

Information on Dr. Powell Benton Reynolds was found in Patrick County birth, marriage, death, and census records, as well as in The Daily Telegram (Clarksburg, West Virginia), Wednesday, December 30, 1914, page 5; The Enterprise, January 4, 1915; The Baltimore Sun, January 3, 1915; and The Courier-Journal (Louisville, Kentucky), December 30, 1914, page 4.

Social Security Matters

Why is my Social Security Retirement Benefit So Small? – Ask Rusty

Dear Rusty: Can you help me understand? I have paid into Social Security since I started working in 1978. I did have a lot of tax deductions, but I don't understand why I only receive $350 a month from Social Security. Signed: Befuddled Senior

Dear Befuddled Senior: Your Social Security benefit is based upon your average monthly earnings for the 35 years over your lifetime that you earned the most while contributing to the Social Security program (however, your benefit isn't based on your contributions to SS). Your average lifetime earnings amount is called your "AIME" or "Average Indexed Monthly Earnings," which are adjusted for inflation for years before you turn 60. Your earnings (your net earnings if self-employed) are provided to the SSA by the IRS. Your average lifetime earnings number (your "AIME") is subjected to a formula which calculates your "Primary Insurance Amount" or "PIA," which is the SS benefit you receive if you start benefits in the month you reach your full retirement age. Your personal full retirement age (FRA) depends on the year you were born which, if you were born in 1960 or later, is age 67. However, if you claim Social Security before reaching your FRA, you will get only a percentage of your PIA (reduced from what you would get if you claimed at your FRA).

For example, if you claimed at age 62, you would only get 70% of the amount you would have gotten had you waited until age 67, or if you claimed at age 63 you would get 75% of your age 67 benefit. The reduction is less as you get closer to your FRA; if you claimed at age 65, you'd get about 87% of your full retirement age amount.

You can see your lifetime Social Security earnings record at your personal "my Social Security" online account at www.ssa.gov/myaccount (you will need to first create that online account), or you can call Social Security at 1.800.772.1213 to request an "Earnings Statement" be sent to you. That statement will show your lifetime earnings by year, the 35 highest of which were used to calculate your PIA (your Social Security benefit at your FRA). Generally, your Social Security FRA benefit will be about 40% or less of your average indexed monthly earnings.

So, to recap, your SS retirement benefit isn't based on your contributions to the program; it's based on your average monthly lifetime earnings. If you had less than 35 years contributing to the program, SS would still use 35 years in the benefit formula by using zero dollars in earnings for some number of years, which would result in a smaller AIME. Thus, if you claimed before your full retirement age of 67, your SS benefit was reduced because you claimed early. And if you had less than 35 years of SS-covered employment, your AIME was less, resulting in a smaller PIA. And that is likely why your monthly Social Security retirement benefit is low.

One other thought to consider: if you are married and your spouse's monthly SS benefit is considerably more than yours (e.g., more than twice as much as yours), you may want to explore your options for spouse benefits.

I hope this explains how your SS benefit is calculated, but if you still question your monthly SS retirement amount, I suggest you first obtain your "Earnings Statement" to review the lifetime earnings SS has on file for you. If there are any discrepancies in your Social Security's earnings record, there are correction remedies available to you. If that is the case, please feel free to contact us again for more information.

son's consequences than to confront the behavior pattern and risk the blow-up that may follow. It can be terrifying to insist on accountability when someone is hurting you and choose to only accept responsibility for your own choices, rather than taking on the weight of theirs. Abusive personalities will project blame for their actions to everyone around them, in full expectation of others picking up the load.

We are trained, perhaps even brainwashed, by the abusive person to accept that their perception of reality is always right. To believe that confronting them equals being controlling. To feel that pointing out areas that need change or growth must naturally be disrespect or paranoia. We don't like conflict, we don't enjoy being blamed for motives we don't have — so we cower, and retreat behind a smiling mask, say sorry, and stay silent...

This happens in corporate offices when that one girl keeps stealing credit for everyone's ideas but no body wants to be the one to "out" her, so she keeps on doing it to every new employee.

It happens when sexual abuse victims are too scared to speak out, too ashamed to admit what happened, and so the charming and trusted predator stays free to continue abusing with impunity.

It happens in families when there's that one relative who makes everyone walk on eggshells at every family get together, because nobody wants to brave the firestorm that would come from an intervention.

It happens when wives keep secrets about their husband's pornography addictions, while the entire family suffers from his secondary addictive cycles and the atmosphere of deceit and disengagement that ultimately results.

Wood Brothers Racing Race Report: Bowman Gray

Josh Berry and the No. 21 Motorcraft/Quick Lane team emerged from a marathon Cook Out Clash at Bowman Gray Stadium with a 12th-place finish after winning the preliminary Last Chance Qualifier to earn a spot in the 200-lap main event, which was impacted by the same winter weather that pushed the race from Sunday to Wednesday night.

For the second straight year, Berry raced his way into the Clash starting field with a top-two finish in the 75-lap Last Chance Qualifier. In 2025, it took an aggressive drive to second to advance. This year, Berry started on the pole, briefly lost the lead to AJ Allmendinger, then powered back to the front, leading the final 59 laps to beat second-place finisher Austin Cindric by 7.4 seconds. By the time the checkered flag flew, Berry had lapped up to the ninth-place driver.

"We just struggled a little bit on the restarts," Berry said between races. "With the cold temperatures,

I was locking the left front and got it locked up a little bit under AJ and washed him out. But once we were able to settle in and get some heat in the tires, I felt good about our car."

Berry said advancing to the main event was a relief.

"It's a long night when you don't make this race."

It turned out to be a long night anyway.

Starting 21st in the main event, Berry steadily worked his way forward and was running 13th at the halftime break. During the break, sleet began to fall, prompting teams to switch to treaded tires designed for wet-track conditions. The change initially worked in Berry's favor as he climbed into the top 10 by Lap 115, but four laps later he was involved in one of the Clash-record 17 caution periods that plagued much of the second half of the race.

Berry returned to the track one lap down in 22nd place before rejoining the lead lap at the three-quarter mark of the non-points exhibition. With laps under caution not counting, the race stretched to three and a half hours in length.

With 35 laps remaining, Berry was running 19th but continued to move forward, advancing into the top 15 by Lap 175 and climbing to 12th by Lap 185. He held that position through the remainder of the race.

Berry and the No. 21 team now turn their focus to Speedweeks at Daytona International Speedway, where qualifying for the Daytona 500 is set for Feb. 11, followed by the Great American Race on Feb. 15.

Winter Storms

Stuart Family Restaurant owner Terry Dalton said his business has seen about a 60 percent decline due to the weather.

"The biggest thing is at night, (with) people not coming out due to ice freezing back up," he said.

Even breakfast and lunch hours are slower "because people are bound at home and not going to work."

"So not only do we lose the lunch crowd, but we lose the people that are at work, they're actually at home now," he said.

In addition, January typically is the slowest month, Dalton said, and added that Friday-Saturday are the restaurant's biggest days. Because of the weather, the restaurant has been closed on some Fridays and Saturdays.

"When churches are closed, you lose your Sunday crowd too." Even if churches are open, there are "not as many people going with this cold air, weather, and wind," he said.

However, despite the conditions, Dalton noted that many of his regular customers are still coming in.

"Some of your seniors aren't coming as much just because it is cold outside, and that does affect them as well," he said.

After being closed the last week of January, Coffee Break owner Denny Alley said the restaurant was finally able to reopen on Feb. 3.

"We just weren't able to get out of the house," he said of the impromptu closure.

Alley said the Feb. 3 reopening was packed with many members of the Tuesday morning music crowd.

"All the guys showed up playing today, so we've had a good crowd. There's not an open seat in the house," he said.

While the weather kept a lot of people indoors, Alley said younger customers are more likely to venture out.

"The senior citizens tend to stay in. As a rule, in bad weather, the older people don't tend to come out. They're afraid they'll fall and things like that," Alley said.

While the snow hasn't stopped Wood's Cold Storage & Supply from opening, co-owner Johnnie Wood said business has slowed down a little bit.

"We have closed early and opened late some mornings, primarily because we have to do things on the farm, feeding cattle and so forth, before we open the store. So, it takes a little bit longer to feed with the cold and snow," he said.

Wood estimated customer traffic has dropped by about half.

"People just aren't out and moving around," he said.

Clay & Twig, a Critz garden center, has been closed for over two weeks due to the winter conditions.

Jonathan Witt, owner, said he's unable to set his products out because they'll go bad in the weather.

"I've kind of lost a bit there. I'm currently trying to work on it. As far as climate control in the barn, I don't have any way to heat it or cool it to keep my products" viable, he said.

While he intended to reopen late last week, Witt hopes to reopen later this week on Friday.

the state chapter for a national organization.

Ransom suggested expanding tracking systems statewide, like VDOT's carcass removal data, to provide a clearer picture and improve planning.

A dedicated fund could help Virginia leverage federal matching grants for wildlife crossing projects, allowing state contributions to be paired with federal dollars and maximizing the impact of voluntary donations without requiring large allocations from the state budget, Ransom said.

Virginia already has wildlife crossing projects near the Great Dismal Swamp National Wildlife Refuge in Chesapeake, under the Fairfax County Parkway at Fort Belvoir, and on Interstate Highway 64 west of Charlottesville, where fencing helps guide animals to underpasses.

Simonds also introduced HB 596, which focused on implementation rather than funding. The bill directed the secretary of Natural and Historic Resources, in coordination with the secretary of Transportation, to convene an interagency group to advance priorities in the Wildlife Corridor Action Plan. HB 596 did not advance out of the House rules studies subcommittee. A budget proposal of $100,000 was connected to the bill.

HB 597 follows earlier wildlife corridor legislation by Sen. Dave Marsden, D-Fairfax. Measures establishing the Wildlife Corridor Action Plan in 2020 and requiring agencies to incorporate corridors into planning in 2021 were enacted, while similar grant fund proposals in 2024 and 2025 did not advance.

HB 597 was assigned on Jan. 20 to the Appropriations subcommittee on Commerce, Agriculture and Natural Resources, where it remains under consideration.

of working in state government. Charles and his wife Janet, welcomed me like family, and it was like a family. Honestly, I was worried at first (a new job will do that), but I cherished the experience working for Delegate Poindexter, especially making new friends in Franklin County. When I was elected in 2016 to the Chatham Town Council, he provided important advice and lessons to serve in elected office," he said in a Facebook post.

Pace said he tries to emulate Poindexter, who never asked for the spotlight or attention, but just wanted to get the job done to help his community.

"Virginia would be better off with many more Charles Poindexters, and it is unfortunate that we have fewer people in elected office like Charles Poindexter. I learned so much from Charlie. I will always be grateful to Charlie and the impact he has had on me. I have lost a father-figure, mentor, colleague, and friend. I love you, Charlie, and I am going to miss you. Janet, Sherrie, Walker, his brother Gary, and the entire Poindexter family are in my thoughts and prayers. May God bless the Gentleman from Franklin County, Charles Poindexter," Pace wrote in a social media post.

State Sen. Bill Stanley, R-Moneta, spoke about Poindexter during the February 5 session, and described him as "one of the finest men Southwest Virginia ever produced."

"Charlie Poindexter was the real thing. He was a man of deep conviction, quiet strength, and unwavering devotion to his community, his Commonwealth, and his country. He was a farmer, an engineer, a father, a husband, and for more than two decades a dedicated public servant who never forgot where he came from and never forgot who he was serving," he said.

For all his accomplishments on the national stage, which he accomplished with his typical no-nonsense approach, Stanley said Poindexter's heart was always in the hills of Franklin County.

"He never stopped farming that family land there nearby to my farm in Glade Hill. It was the 1792 Poindexter Family Homeplace. On hot summer days when most of us were staying inside and staying cool in the air conditioning, you could find Charlie out there on a tractor harvesting hay, doing hard work that his father had done before him," he said.

Stanley said Poindexter wasn't a politician, but a true citizen legislator.

"His staff would tell you he never changed from the day-to-day when he walked into the General Assembly building to the day that he left and went back to the farm. Charlie always remained true to himself, true to his values, and true to his constituents," he said.

U.S. Rep. Morgan Griffith, R-Salem, said Poindexter was a dedicated public official whose service to Franklin, Henry, and Patrick Counties lasted more than a decade.

"I enjoyed working with him in the House of Delegates to promote the Republican Party and deliver solutions for rural communities. I am praying for his wife, Janet, his family, and his community as we mourn the loss of a good man, a legislative leader, and rural community advocate," he said.

Stuart Vice-mayor Dave Hoback said he worked with Poindexter during his tenure with the West Piedmont Planning District Commission (WPPDC).

"I always found him to be a very cooperative and affable individual. One of the things that I remember about him most distinctly was every year the PDC would develop a legislative agenda that would map out our positions and views and different legislative issues, and would typically invite every member of the General Assembly from the region to attend. I think Charlie came every time, I don't think he ever missed one, and we were very appreciative of that," he said.

Hoback said Poindexter was also a straight shooter.

"If he thought he could help you with something, he would tell you that. If he didn't think he could help you or was not in favor of what you were asking, he would tell you that as well," he said.

Hoback noted this attitude isn't always commonplace with legislators.

"Hearing something honest and direct was always appreciated," he added.

Veteran Service Organization member W.C. Fowlkes described Poindexter as "a mighty fine fellow."

"I was chairman of the Republican Party when he came into the district, and I had the honor of working with him just about the whole time he was here. He was well-liked, well-known, well-accepted, and that just sums it up," he said.

Del. Wren Williams, R-Stuart, said Poindexter dedicated more than two decades of his life to public service in Southside Virginia.

"Charlie was a farmer, a man of deep conviction, and a tireless advocate for the communities he loved, and I ask that you join me in keeping his family in your thoughts and prayers," he said.

Del. Eric Phillips, R-Martinsville, said Poindexter did a lot for Virginia's 9th district, including securing funds for the U.S. 58 expansion in the Meadow of Dan area.

"That was a lot of Charlie Poindexter's work, so obviously, it's always sad to see someone like that go. He was a good guy who did a lot of good things for our area," he said.

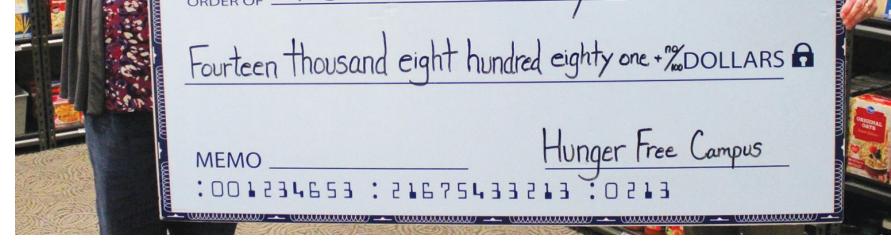

When he saw Poindexter give speeches, Phillips said he always liked the way he delivered them because Poindexter seemed to become a different person.

"He would really perk up when he gave a speech, and he always ... used a little humor. I always thought about that when I thought of Charlie," Phillips said.

P&HCC's Patriot Pantry Receives Hunger-Free Campus Grant

Patrick & Henry Community College's (P&HCC) Patriot Pantry has received $14,881 from State Council for Higher Education for Virginia's (SCHEV) Hunger-Free Campus (HFC) grant program.

"I am exceptionally excited to receive these funds! During the month of January, the pantry was operational for only 9 days, during which time we served 49 students (with 20 of those being first-time pantry visitors). Food insecurity is a real concern for many of our students; and, fortunately, word about the pantry is spreading. While this is phenomenal, it also means that there is a huge need to be met and we cannot operate absent the support of grants like this. Because of HFC, we will be able to keep our pantry shelves stocked so we can keep feeding our students and their families," said pantry coordinator Heather Luther.

HFC funds are granted for:

• Expanding and updating storage capacity, including new shelving, containers, refrigerators, and other equipment such as microwaves, coffee makers, food safety materials, carts or dollies, and reusable bags

• Supporting current and new inventories with more nutritious foods; hot meals; vegetarian, gluten free, and dairy free options; and individual meal kits.

• Introducing key card access and/or a check in kiosk to assist with data collection, track pantry usage, and help maintain a consistent food supply and pantry standards.

• Enhancing student outreach through posters, digital communication, and materials for orientation and residence life.

• Developing educational initiatives focused on nutrition literacy, cooking skills, and applying for benefits such as SNAP.

• Strengthening relationships by identifying new partnerships and opportunities for collaboration.

To learn more about Patriot Pantry or to make a donation, contact Heather Luther at hluther@patrickhenry.edu or call 276-656-0356.

State commits $14.5 million annually to boost college internships

Virginia has launched a new statewide program aimed at expanding paid internship opportunities for college students while helping employers build a future workforce.

The initiative, called InternshipsVA, will provide guidance, grants and recruitment support to Virginia businesses interested in creating paid internships. The state has committed $14.5 million annually to fund the program.

InternshipsVA is part of a broader effort to attract and retain workers in Virginia. Funded through the Commonwealth Innovative Internship Fund and Program, it offers financial incentives and technical assistance to employers, particularly small and mid-sized businesses.

Participating employers may qualify for grants covering up to 50% of undergraduate interns' wages. The program also provides regional internship managers to assist with program design and recruiting, free internship postings through a partnership with Handshake, and training resources for employers.

Gov. Abigail Spanberger announced the program in Richmond alongside leaders from the Virginia Chamber of Commerce, the Virginia Economic Development Partnership, the Virginia Business Higher Education Council and the State Council of Higher Education for Virginia.

"Virginia's students need more hands-on opportunities to connect with real-world careers," Spanberger said, adding that the program is designed to help students gain experience before graduation while encouraging them to stay in the state for work.

Employers seeking more information about InternshipsVA can visit vedp.org/internshipsva.

Snow can play helpful role in garden soil enrichment and root insulation

Beneath the ice-glazed blanket of snow testing Virginians' patience is the promise of a verdant spring. While frozen conditions disrupt life on the street level, plants and grasses are insulated from extreme cold as slow-melting snow provides steady moisture and atmospheric nutrients.

Depending on conditions, soil-enriching elements like nitrogen and phosphorus attach to snowflakes falling through the atmosphere, explained Scot Ferguson, a Virginia Cooperative Extension agent in Hanover County.

Homeowners can be intentional in utilizing "the poor man's fertilizer." When clearing snow onto garden beds and mulched areas, a tiresome chore becomes a down payment for spring.

Moving snow to landscaped and natural areas can introduce "a little bump of nitrogen," he said. "You'd want to relocate snow along the drip line of the shrub or tree, kind of like you would with mulch."

As snow melts, fertilizing nutrients are slowly released into the soil. And come spring thaw, the gradual melt is a steady source of moisture for roots.

"Plants are probably not getting super waterlogged, and you're not dealing with runoff," Ferguson said. "They will be quite hydrated and trying to transpire!"

Landowners in rural Virginia managing pasture and grassland typically spend between $4 and $10 per acre for professional nutrient management planning. Ferguson said they welcome the gentle deposit of nutrients resulting from snowfall.

"And for bigger landowners with cover crop programs, that's where they find the bang for their buck," he said.

Native plant species are adapted to Virginia's climate, but some ornamentals like boxwood or tender perennials can sustain cellular damage from a quick-moving cold front.

Even a modest layer of snow protects soil from extreme temperature fluctuations, reported North Carolina Cooperative Extension. This insulating effect stabilizes soil temperatures, preventing harm to plant roots.

"And if it's warm enough under there, the snow forms an insulating blanket, and grass will certainly grow," Ferguson said. "Snow still allows sunlight to penetrate its surface. If the plant can move water, if the ground isn't frozen, then plants and grass can probably photosynthesize!"

Though six more weeks of winter weather is predicted, temperatures can fluctuate.

"Your flowering plants may come into bloom when we have warm weather," said Mark Viette, retired host of In the Garden, a video series presented by Virginia Farm Bureau Federation. Milder days may be followed by "a real cold spell."

He advised protecting flowering plants with a sheet or soft cover, warmed with an incandescent lamp rated for outdoor use.

Laurel Hill's Many Histories: J. E. B. Stuart and Orange County, Virginia

By Tom Perry

Continuing with the theme of J. E. B. Stuart and his visits to the homes of former Presidents of the United States, we visit Montpelier, thirty miles to the north of Monticello, the home of James Madison. Stuart and Madison are not two names you automatically think of as having a connection, but the two men have many connections in Orange County, Virginia.

During the War Between the States, James Madison's former home, Montpelier, was owned by Frank and Thomas Carson, two Irish brothers with banking interests in Baltimore. Confederate officers did not occupy the Montpelier house as a headquarters, but it was a landmark that drew many visiting soldiers. Frank Carson hosted a ball given by General J.E.B. Stuart at Montpelier in 1863. It was not the first time that Stuart and Madison's families had crossed paths.

Bethenia Letcher, the daughter of William Letcher, was born at Laurel Hill in 1780, just before her father was murdered by a Tory, a person who favored the British during the American Revolution. Bethenia married David Pannill on October 29, 1798.

David Pannill descended from the "Rappahannock" Pannills. Thomas and Catherine Pannill settled on 2500 acres along the Rappahannock River in present day Orange County in 1673. Their son, William, born circa 1670, married Frances Sterne and lived in Richmond County. William II married Sarah Bailey of Middlesex County and lived in Orange County. William III, born in 1737, married Ann Morton and produced fourteen children. The sixth child, David, was born in Orange County, Virginia, on January 15, 1772.

On January 4, 1801, Bethenia gave birth to her first child, a daughter she named Elizabeth Letcher Pannill, the mother of J. E. B. Stuart. The second child, William Letcher Pannill, came into this world on September 10, 1803, just months before his father's death. David Pannill died in November 1803, leaving a wife and two small children. His tombstone reads, "He had a warm, generous heart, was just to all men, and died among many friends who sincerely regretted the death of their best friend and benefactor." Bethenia found herself in the same situation as her mother over twenty years earlier.

On February 3, 1809, the United States Congress organized the Illinois Territory with Alexander Stuart, the grandfather of J. E. B. Stuart, serving as one of three territorial judges. Stuart began a career serving on the state and federal levels of the judiciary in the Illinois and Missouri territories and then in the states. On July 17, 1809, Governor Edwards of Illinois took the oath of office before Judge Stuart. On July 9, 1813, Alexander Stuart resigned as judge, but returned on February 9, 1814. President James Madison and Secretary of State James Monroe commissioned Stuart as a United States Judge. Territorial records listed Judge Stuart as being double paid in Illinois and Missouri on April 27, 1814. On April 3, 1816, Governor William Clark (of Lewis and Clark) of Missouri granted a pardon on the advice of Alexander Stuart.

At noon on October 5, 1829, former President of the United States, James Madison, rose to call a meeting to order in Richmond, Virginia. He stood in the Capital of Virginia, designed by his old friend Thomas Jefferson. The assembled ninety-eight men were to revise the 1776 Virginia Constitution. As the elder statesman spoke, thirty-four year old Archibald Stuart no doubt marveled at the men around him.

Archibald Stuart, the father of J. E. B. Stuart, found himself in the presence of several giants of Virginia and American History at the convention. Madison had once written, "If men were angels, no government would be necessary." Standing before Archibald Stuart this day, he was one of the last "Founding Fathers," and he spoke on constitutional matters as few could. Today, we consider him the "Father" of the United States Constitution. James Madison still had seven years to live, and on this day, he nominated the former fifth President, James Monroe, as President of the Convention. The Chief Justice of the United States, Virginian John Marshall, seconded the nomination. Madison, Marshall, and Monroe, who crossed the Delaware River with George Washington in 1776, were joined in the assembly by the infamous John Randolph of Roanoke and the future tenth President of the United States, John Tyler, who lived long enough to serve in the government of the Confederate States of America. Archibald Stuart served as a Delegate to the Virginia Constitutional Convention from October 5, 1829, until January 15, 1830. Among others serving from the 21st Senatorial District were Joseph Martin of Henry County, Benjamin W. S. Cabell, and George Townes of Pittsylvania County. The Convention of 1829-30 revised the 1776 Constitution of Virginia. Stuart served on a committee charged with "Bill of Rights and matters not referred to foregoing Committees." Described as a "reformer," Stuart voted 80% of the time for change in the constitution. He was one of only four (See Laurel p. 14)

Girl Scout Lock-In held in January

Patrick County Girl Scout Troop #1302 held its yearly Lock-In in Jan. at Providence UMC.

The night started with a spaghetti dinner and chicken nuggets. The girls enjoyed their meal then started working on Solutions Superstar badge. Lots of problem solving, creative thinking, and real world solutions went into this badge as well as lots of fun. Girls enjoyed lots of snacks throughout the night as they worked and played. Then girls began to settle down and climbed into their sleeping bags and watched some movies. Finally sleep hit them all and the night went well. Next morning breakfast started the day. Next it was clean-up time and girls headed home. Much thanks to Providence UMC for allowing the girls the use of the fellowship halls for the evening delegates east of the Blue Ridge, along with Henry A. Wise, calling for a "white basis" in representation that challenged the authority of piedmont plantation owners and increased the power of the western part of Virginia. While that measure failed, along with a resolution on dueling, an amendment passed to make the removal of corrupt or incompetent judges "more efficient." Stuart supported opening the right to vote to "leaseholders," not just property owners.

In the summer of 1862, the Army of Northern Virginia fought its way into the history books. After pushing McClellan away from Richmond, Robert E. Lee's Army of Northern Virginia took the initiative and began to move north. J. E. B. Stuart had one nearly disastrous stop in Orange County. Union cavalry almost captured Stuart after Georgian Robert Tombs failed to guard a river crossing.

Stuart fled the porch of the house he was sleeping on, losing his plumed hat and nearly his dignity as a prisoner of war. Stuart repaid the Union by raiding Catlett's Station and capturing the dress uniform of the Union army commander John Pope and several hundred thousand dollars in greenbacks. Stuart jokingly sent a telegram proposing a swap of the prisoners, his hat for Pope's uniform. No reply came in response. Stuart received a promotion to Major General in the summer of 1862. He was twenty-nine years old and would command Lee's cavalry for the rest of his life. The following year, he would visit James Madison's Montpelier.

James Madison's Montpelier eventually came to be owned by the DuPont family. They donated the property to the National Trust for Historic Preservation, which has restored the home to its appearance in Madison's time. Showing the influence of Thomas Jefferson's architectural vision, the home once hosted James Ewell Brown "Jeb" Stuart.
