Energy Express focuses on a series of weekly themes centered around student art and readings. The first week theme was "Myself."

WVU Extension Service's Energy Express Combines Education and Summer Fun

By Stephen Smoot

Children rising into grades first through sixth in Mineral, Grant, and Hampshire counties have benefited for years from a program that is now seeing its inaugural summer in Pendleton County.

Energy Express has come to the area, the 48th site in the 26th county since the program commenced over three decades ago with two pilot locations. Mineral County has the longest running Energy Express program site in the state.

Tanya Wehrle and Corrie Wagoner assist in organizing and running the program for WVU Extension Service. Wagoner shared that "the kids are having fun. They don't know they've learned."

Wehrle followed by saying that Energy Express does not resemble "a traditional classroom where it's work, work, work." That said, as Wagoner explained, the program started as one wedding child nutrition with enrichment of reading skills. The goal all along has lay in "preventing the summer slide by use of colorful and captivating books," as well as art and vocabulary development.

Each summer brings a new set of broad themes around which activities center. This summer focused on each person's relationships with others. In week one, students focused on "Myself."

Pendleton County participants also enjoy the benefit of WVU Extension Service partnering with Experience Learning and the Pendleton County Library. Students go to a weekly library program on Wednesdays. Experience Learning takes the children

Presentation Set To Focus on County Leaders

Two local authors, Dyer Anderson and Erick Hedrick, will provide an indepth presentation on the biographies of a few Pendleton County leaders at 2:30 p.m. Sunday at the Ruddle Presbyterian Church. Refreshments will be served.

The program is being sponsored by the Pendleton County Historical Society.

Summer Reading Program Underway

The Pendleton County Library's free Summer Reading program, which this year carries the theme "Color Our World" is being held each Wednesday morning through July 23. The section for toddlers is from 10 to 10:45 a.m., while those of elementary school age will take part from 10:45 to 11:30 am. There are live presenters and engaging activities planned for both each week. At noon on July 26 the summer party will wrap things up on a high Registration is required, and children must

The intensity of last year's drought meant that those will see conditions similar to conditions persisted through Franklin. most of the ninth wettest month and will see the full May in the 131 years of from 11 a.m. through 9 p.m. onslaught of summer heat keeping records, an average Monday by the National of 2.69 inches higher than normal. To date, 2025 has served as the 49th wettest year of that 131-year span.

> Over the past 30 days, the North Fork and South Fork valleys, as well as the southern tier have seen between 150 and 200 percent of the normal average rainfall. A corridor roughly following the South Branch River extending south of Franklin witnessed between 200 and 300 percent of the average rainfall amounts seen between 1991 and 2021.

> Constant rain and cloud cover kept temperatures cool as well. The South Branch and South Fork valleys saw average temperatures between one and three degrees below the 30-year average. Most of the western tier experienced between three and four degrees below normal.

The highest elevations around the Allegheny Mountain and Spruce Knob area saw temperatures dive between four and six degrees colder than a typical 30-day

Conditions changed drastically last weekend as the full force of summertime heat hit the state and region.

In Franklin, temperatures will range in the mid-90s through today, then drop slightly to the low 90s starting on Friday. Starting today there will be a 30 percent chance of rain or thunderstorms, rising to 40 percent by Saturday.

The north and western areas of the county will likely not see temperatures extending past the 85 to 90 degree range, but will see 40 percent chance or less of showers starting today.

Sugar Grove, Brandywine, and the Fort Seybert areas

A heat alert was issued Weather Service. That was the only one issued for Pendleton County at the time of publication. The warning covered the South Branch and South Fork, but not the North Fork or that valley's surrounding ridges and mountains. That said, residents should check the National Weather Service or the Facebook page Pendleton County WV Office of Emergency Management 911 for updates on the severe heat and its potential impact on people and the area.

The National Weather Service issues three kinds of heat alerts. Each one marks a specific level of danger. An "Extreme Heat Watch" urges those in the affected area to "be prepared." It states that people should "reschedule outdoor activities in the coming days. Make sure that children, the elderly, and pets have a place to cool off during the heat.

Second, a heat advisory "is issued for dangerous heat conditions that are not expected to reach warning criteria." It instructs that "if you must be outside, be sure to drink plenty of water and take frequent breaks in the shade.'

The onset of "extremely dangerous heat conditions" will trigger an "Extreme Heat Warning." It urges all to not perform work or other tasks outside, but to "drink plenty of water and take frequent breaks" if that cannot be avoided.

It also says "stay indoors in an air conditioned space as much as possible, including overnight." Also vital, "check on family and neighbors."

Pendleton County Farm Crawl Promises History, Fun, Food, And Farming Education

The Ouelette family's OMG Acres will join the first annual Pendleton County Farm Crawl. Their goal is to run their land in such a way as to preserve the history and natural beauty of the historic Trumbo farm in Fort Seybert.

By Stephen Smoot

This Saturday, Pendleton County will witness a perfect recipe for family fun. Take the fundamentals of the history and culture of local farming, add a healthy helping of food, then add in a dash of education and entertainment. Finally, finish off with the inclusion of visitors from all ages enjoying the experience of learning about farming from the 1700s to today.

The final result? Pendleton County's first annual Farm Crawl.

As many Americans in urban and suburban areas have lost contact with where food comes from and how it gets to their table, agricultural states like West Virginia have created innovative ways to get visitors and locals alike back on the farm.

Indeed one recent study showed that 40 percent of Americans have never met a farmer. This lack of contact has contributed to the federal government especially attempting policies that reflect inferior knowledge of farms, farming, and farmers.

Jessica Hoover, one of Pendleton County's two West Virginia University Extension agents, and Annie Humes, new executive director of the Pendleton County Convention and Visitors Bureau, seek to change that.

Humes related that she and Hoover "have both had the opportunity to hear" from officials in Hampshire County and elsewhere who have seen great success in linking farms together in an agricultural tourism event.

Once they reviewed the successes elsewhere. Humes shared that their reaction was "absolutely! Let's do it!'

Hoover, through the West Virginia University Extension Service, "was responsible for coordinating the crawl in Pendleton County."

The original model came from the idea of "pub crawls" that became popular in college towns about 20 years ago. Frostburg, Maryland, adapted the idea to create a more family-friendly wintertime hot cocoa crawl. Patrons have a

PCB Puts the 'Community' In Community Bank

By Stephen Smoot

On Tuesday last week, most of the Franklin area hunkered down as heat and humidity coincided with a planned maintenance outage by Mon Power.

Not the staff of Pendleton Community Bank, however. From there came an army of Kelly green T-shirt clad volunteers who sallied forth into the county to perform community service volunteer work.

"Our team loves it," shared Monika Marshall, PCB representative, who added, "it's a chance to have a day for team building and do something fun in the community." The idea started last year when the area faced another planned power outage. "In the past when the bank closed, people stayed home and we paid them," explained Marshall. Last year they came up with a different idea, to send staff into areas of the community that needed light volunteer help.

Marshall stated, "We replicated the idea and picked new organizations to support." Calls went out to different community organizations and teams of volunteers deployed to each.

With summer temperatures rising that day, some staff for whom exposure to heat might be dangerous traveled to Pendleton Manor to perform volunteer work and visit with residents.

Others went to Warner's Drive-In to help the arts and culture nonprofit spruce up their facility. "At their new stage, they needed folks to rake rocks up," said Marshall. Volunteers there also filled in potholes in the driveways where rain had washed out certain spots.

Taylor Southerly and Tammy Clutter, as well as the whole PCB team, stepped up to help a number of community organizations.

Others split up to give needed and appreciated help to the Upper Tract, Franklin, and South Fork Volunteer fire departments. In Franklin and on the South Fork, they cleaned up the cook shacks that will soon go into use for community fundraising events. They also cleaned equipment and vehicles.

UTVFD's Facebook page shared the appreciation that all of the departments felt at PCB's staff lending a helping hand. "Today the support Pendleton Community Bank gave to us goes above and beyond!" the post stated. It went on to add that "the employees spent their day helping others when they could have been complaining about no power."

"But instead they helped clean the Upper Tract VFD Training Center and Upper Tract VFD Firehouse and apparatus."

Others worked on projects at Brandywine Elementary School.

PCB also showed its appreciation to its hardworking volunteers by providing a picnic lunch at Ruddle Park.

"For us, it's a part of who we are," said Marshall. "One of our core values is being community-centered." She explained that the day of service helped them to "live out that value in a meaningful way."

Free Quilt Documentation Event Scheduled

A "West Virginia Quilt Documentation" event will be held at the Landes Art Center in Petersburg from 10 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. on July 11 and 12. Doors will open at 10 a.m.

The volunteers from the "West Virginia Quilt Documentation Project" will be present to document quilts made in or residing in West Virginia. This ongoing effort aims to preserve West Virginia's quilt artistry and history for future genera-

Roberta Gellner, project coordinator, emphasizes the significance of documenting quilts for future generations.

"These quilts hold immense pride for West Virginians, and taking the time to have them photographed and documented ensures that their stories are not lost." Gellner stated. "Volunteers from across the state will examine the quilts and record pertinent information about them and their creators. This data will be stored in the West Virginia Culture Center Archives and The Quilt Index (www.quiltindex.org), a comprehensive national database of quilts from various regions.'

Each quilt owner is limited to two quilts per event to provide equal opportunities for participation. Quilts must have been made before 1975.

Well-loved, well-worn quilts, family heirlooms, and treasures are welcome, as are quilts with unknown makers.

Quilts should be brought as they are. Please refrain from washing, repairing, or altering them in any way solely for documentation purposes. The documentation process typically takes approximately 45 minutes and provides an opportunity for the owner to photograph their quilt while displayed and learn about the pattern, timeframe, fabrics, and techniques used in its construction.

The quilt documentation is provided free of charge.

Quilt owners must make an appointment to bring their quilt for documentation. To schedule an appointment, contact JoAnn Harman at 304-703-2059.

The event will also receive local support from the Grant County Historical Society and the Grant County Community Educational Outreach Service. Mitchell Earns Top Honors at WVU

Cody Mitchell was selected to receive a 2025 West Virginia University Foundation Outstanding Senior Award. This award was established in 1995 and marks the 30th anniversary of the WVU Foundation.

The Outstanding Senior Award honors students for their contributions and achievements in scholarship, leadership and service. Only the top-ranking academic scholars of the 2025 class were eligible for this award. Being selected for this means he was in the top 1 percent of the graduating seniors at WVU. The field of applicants was exceptional, and only a selected few were chosen for the honor.

"Every year, I continue to be in awe of the WVU Outstanding Seniors," said Corey Farris, dean of students. "They have made incredible contributions to WVU, the state, and the nation. As the top 1% of their graduation class, I have no doubt their futures are bright. We'll continue to see great accomplishments that make our world better from these outstanding AmeriCorps volunteer college students serve as "mentors" that lead classes, teach, and engage the children. This year, 154 college students throughout West Virginia assist the program. They receive an educational award, a living allowance, and credit for community service hours.

They are joined by seven junior volunteers, mostly in middle school grades, but some as old as 17. "We did a lot of training in the first two days," said Wagoner, "so they'd understand what's expected of them." Wehrle and Wagoner recruited them in the months preceding the program. Two have siblings participating.

sion, after which she said, "Yes, it's about inspiring a fear." They also discussed the meaning of "compassion."

Next to reading, art takes a main stage in the daily activities. Wehrle, who has organized art shows at Franklin Elementary School, explained that the focus lay on "found art," or objects one can make from items that most people would otherwise toss in the trash.

Earlier, children in one class found a millipede on a sidewalk. Fascinated with the creature, they reproduced it by using "found art," including popsicle sticks to represent its myriad legs. She explained that the art uses very broad themes. The children, however, have wide latitude in how they use art to express themselves within the themes.

Energy Express boasts tremendous success in achieving improvement. In 31 years, the program has served 1.7 million healthy meals to approximately 84,000 children. Nearly 90 percent of children involved increase or maintain their reading level, ensuring that skills learned remain in place going into the next fall.

In the opening days, the students were read to from a book called "Magic Ramen: the Story of Momofuko Ando." This work shared the origin of ramen noodles and the story of the culinary craftsman who created it. Some classes recreated ramen with Play Doh, but a more ambitious challenge

For the open house on July 16, toward the end of the session, the children will make homemade noodles for inclusion in a spaghetti dinner. They will not be ramen, and they will have more original character than uniformity, but they will help to tell in a unique way the story of those who enjoyed and learned from their time in the program.

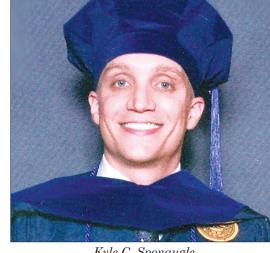

Parents and others who come will also see the walls of art that accumulated during the several weeks. Wehrle told of how the program does not send art home until the end of the term. "They can see all the art of the whole program," she added.

menu of different locations to go and enjoy different styles of the same theme.

Mountain State Maple Days, of which Pendleton County has emerged as a premier participant, utilizes the same model.

Hoover last January described the single day event as "a self-guided tour through participating Pendleton County farms and agribusinesses" which will provide "an inside look at daily operations and allows participating stops to showcase what they offer.'

A lucky number of seven establishments will welcome visitors from near and far. Some, such as Swilled Dog and Dry Run Spirits Distillery, participate in the permanent spirits trail connecting Pendleton and Randolph counties. Dry Run and another participant, Mountain Cajun Getaways, also feature prominently in Mountain State Maple Days.

Swilled Dog operates in Upper Tract, Dry Run Spirits Distillery in Dahmer, and Mountain Cajun Getaways calls Circleville home.

The Pendleton County Farmers Market in Franklin, which will participate in the crawl, has served as a hub for agriculture education, entrepreneurship, and promotion of local farmers and gardeners selling their broad spectrum of products. Additionally, Blackthorn Lavender has produced and sold a number of goods produced from lavender grown on their Sugar Grove land.

OMG Acres represents a new entry in the field of area agricultural interests opening their gates

Avery Ouellette and her husband, Dan's, journey to joining the Farm Crawl started a decade ago in Washington DC. Says Ms. Ouellette, they were "craving more time in nature close to the mountains."

Along with their friend, Mark Mueller, they started evaluating their options in the mountains of both the Old Dominion and the Mountain State. They spent "a couple of years looking at different properties" until they happened upon a historic farm for sale in Fort Seybert. They "immediately fell in love with the beautiful piece of land" that was farmed by the Trumbo family.

A Trumbo family member from Brock's Gap in Virginia was attached to the garrison at Fort Seybert, but along with several other men, were absent on a task that took them away from the fort during the infamous massacre led by Chief Killbuck. Mary Lee Keister Talbot's book, "The Dyer Settlement and the Fort Seybert Massa cre," penned in 1937, shared that "very early. . . word got into the middle colonies, especially Pennsylvania, that there was very beautiful and fertile country in the river valleys to the southward." This included the South Fork River that graces the Fort Seybert area.

Interestingly enough, that publication also calls the stream "Moorefield River."

The beauty of the land and the region that served as a magnet for so many grew into an inspiration for the family's efforts toward conservation.

> After obtaining the land in August of 2017, the Ouellettes started strategizing different ways to develop their holding while maintaining a mission to protect the natural beauty and functions of the land. "We wanted to be thoughtful about nature and the agricultural aspects to preserve," Avery Ouel-

The year 2020 brought a double shock to their efforts. COVID hampered any work they wished to do. Even worse, their friend and partner, Mueller, received a diagnosis of pancreatic cancer.

Though expected to pass in months, Mueller survived for years, passing in November 2022. According to his obituary, "he spent thousands of hours" at OMG Acres "(cunningly recruiting friends to perform unpaid manual labor) restoring the beauty of the land and its buildings." Part of the legacy of Mueller includes his work on the historic buildings of the property, including the Trumbo cabin, which served as one of the first white settlements in the area, as well as a historic church.

"It's really amazing," said Avery Ouellette. While the property remains a work in progress, the family has proudly offered access during the Farm Crawl to visitors from afar and locals seeking to reconnect with family and area history.

Farm crawlers can also learn about family farming history on the opposite side of Pendleton County. Sites Homestead, located under the imposing limestone cliffs of Seneca Rocks near the Discovery Center, also joined the official itinerary.

Jeremiah Hyslop, from the United States Forest Service, explained that the purpose of including the Sites Homestead lay in "educating the public about relevant cultural history and supporting our community."

Hyslop wrote in short description of the landmark in 2024 that the family that originally spelled their name in the more Germanic Seitz, constructed a home there in 1839. He added that "the Sites family originally resided in a pen log cabin, which was called such because it was approximately one log long and one log deep. Some 30 years later, the family expanded the farmhouse to the two-story structure which stands today."

Ever since, the Homestead has served as a witness to history and a monument to the hardy families that hacked their livelihoods from the wilderness.

Part of the story of the Homestead also lies in studying how the land supported families unteer, who holds status as a master gardener, and also an AmeriCorps worker assigned to the Appalachian Forest Natural Heritage Area, has developed a garden project. Its goal lies in "focusing more on vegetables that have cultural significance and heritage plants that have been propagated from the garden for 25 years."

As Hoover explains, the event in Pendleton County is part of "statewide efforts to promote agritourism in the state" as it works to "promote and celebrate the thriving agritourism industry we have in the county."

The Pendleton County Farm Crawl will take place between 10 a.m. and 4 p.m. Saturday.

Smell of Summer Hay Hangs in the Air

Word came down the Fork from Hometown Cycles, that Mike Eye has been serenading his whip-poorwills with his banjo. There seems to be a delightful "forest concert" going on each evening.

The scent of newly cut hay hangs in the air. It is the smell of summer, which officially arrived on Sunday of the 21st. Each day will get a little shorter as time ebbs toward the season of fall. That smell of summer brings back memories of long hot days in the hayfield when grass was cut the hard way, by a horse and mowing machine. It still involves hard labor today with the hot summer sun involved.

Adventure Race Puts Spotlight On County

It is interesting, to say the least, when a recreational even involving national participation by serious athletes takes place in this county and almost no one know about it.

It's even more noteworthy

when that event has taken place two years now in a row. The event is the Potomac Highlands Expedition Adventure Race, an epic, 60-hour outdoor adventure race which, most recently, took place at Seneca Rocks, Spruce Knob, the Nelson Rocks Via Ferrata, Dolly Sods, the Sinks of Gandy, the South Branch River and North Fork Mountain from May 28 through May 30.

Teams of two, three or four outdoor adventure athletes of either gender brought their mountain bikes and NASCAR-like support crews to the Princess Snowbird campground at Yokum's Vacationland in Seneca Rocks on Friday, May 28, to begin the first leg of what promoter Brad Hunt describes as "a 60-hour race terrain in the eastern US and includes mountain biking on everything from paved roads to single-track" but also includes hiking, running and self-belayed climbing at Stu Hammett's now three-yearold Via Ferrata at his Nelson Rocks Preserve in Judy Gap.

"Via Ferrata" is Italian for 'iron way." As described in the September, 2004, issue of "Washingtonian" magazine, "Iron lungs and steel cables are secured to rock faces to allow non-climbers to ascend difficult terrain.'

This is called "self-belayed" climbing. In practical terms, it means that, if a climber makes a misstep, the fall will be caught.

In even more practical terms, unlike the inherent risks of free climbing, Via Ferrata climbers can enjoy the thrill of adventuring on faces of Tuscarora sandstone sheers without worrying about hurtling hundreds of feet through the air to an agonizing death on the ground below.

There are other adventure races in the eastern US, but only the PHEAR race in Pendleton, Grant and Randolph counties (but mostly Pendleton) includes a Via Ferrata as part of the

Old Thorn Creek Bridge Being Replaced

A new two-lane bridge spanning the Thorn between McCoy's Mill and Grant Propst's Tavern four miles south of Franklin soon will facilitate traffic in the Thorn and Sandy Ridge areas. The new bridge will be 61 feet, seven inches long and 23 feet, five inches wide. It is being constructed by Bilco Construction Company, Inc., of Charleston at a cost of $598,998. According to Mike Cutlip, superintendent on the job, the new bridge will replace an old single lane bridge that was moved there in 1977 from Route 33 just east of Franklin where it spanned the South Branch of the Potomac. It was constructed there in 1905. The new bridge will be operational about the last of October.

Lime in Whitewash Protects Bark On Tree Trunks

Have you ever wondered why tree trunks are painted white? The white paint is a white wash...the lime ingredient keeps bugs and ants away. It also discourages rabbits, deer and mice from gnawing at the tree bark, or woodpeckers from drilling holes that might kill trees. A lot of tree farmers paint their tree bark to prevent sun scald...particularly on the south side of the tree.

Many times, trees line long, curved lanes and the white on the trees help to guide drivers up to their house, especially at night. "Tree Tag" is the name that children love to play; however, many hard bumps can be a result. Whitewashing trees up to the height of the tallest child will quickly remedy that problem. Fruit tree farmers use whitewash...they contend that bugs don't like to climb on the paint because of the lime. Whatever the reason, the tree treatment seems to work.

The Return Of the Bicycle

For the first time since the turn of the century, the bicycle may be on its way to becoming an important mode of transportation for Americans, a trend that the Federal Energy Administration salutes as one of many valid conservation measures in this time of energy shortages.

Unlike hamburgers and baseball, the bicycle wasn't invented in the United States. That honor goes to Baron Von Crais of Germany. His two-wheeled forerunner of the bicycle was just wonderful going downhill. Unfortunately, the baron had not worked out a propulsion system other than having the rider take leaping strides along the pavement. When a rider came to a steep, uphill grade, he had to push or carry his 50-pound vehicle up the hill—a sight inconvenience.

Then an American, Colonel Albert A. Pope of Boston, decided to build the proverbial "better mousetrap" after viewing a model of Von Drais' bicycle at the 1876 Philadelphia Centennial Exposition. He commissioned W. S. Atwell to build a bike of new design. It weighed 70 pounds, cost $313.00, and provided pedal propulsion. In 1880, the first year that records are available, 6,000 bicycles were sold; by 1974, there were 75 million bikes in use.

The Federal Energy Administration hopes that more people will consider the merits of using this fuel-saving mode of transportation. Many cities and towns are providing special bike lanes, and some bus companies are providing bike racks at bus stops to make it easier to get to and from public transportation. Federal Energy Administrator Frank Zarb says, "We can conserve our gasoline and money, by making better use of this nonpolluting way to go."

More people than ever are riding bikes for economy and health.

Even so, the severe meat pinch will endure through the summer months, with prospects for improvement in the fall when increased marketings should not only permit greater supplies for civilians but also resumption of limited shipments

Though the government chopped military allocations and pegged civilian allotments around present levels, the amount available for home consumption will remain dependent upon supplies in the quarter.

MOUTH OF SENECA "The Weather"

If you think this has been the coldest spring and summer, please read the following from an old clipping which reads as follows:

"The year 1816 was known throughout the United States and Europe as the coldest ever experienced by any person then living. There are persons in Northern New York who have been in the habit of keeping diaries for years, and it is from the pages of an old diary begun in 1810 and kept unbroken until 1840 that the following information regarding this year without a summer has been taken.

"January was so mild that most persons allowed their fires to go out and did not burn wood except for cooking...February was not cold...March came in like a small lion and went out like a very innocent sheep.

"April came in warm, but as the days grew longer, the air became colder, and by the first of May, there was a temperature like that of winter, with plenty of snow and ice. In May the young buds were frozen dead, ice formed half an inch thick on ponds and rivers, corn was killed and cornfields were planted again and again... When the last of May arrived in 1816, everything had been killed by the cold.

"June was the coldest month of roses ever experienced in this latitude. Frost and ice were as common as buttercups usually are. Almost every green thing was killed; all fruit was destroyed. Snow fell 10 inches deep in Vermont. There was a 7-inch fall in the interior of New York state and the same in Massachusetts. There were only a few moderately warm days. Everybody looked, longed and waited for warm weather, but warm weather did not come.

"It was also dry; very little rain fell. All summer long the wind blew steadily from the north in blasts, laden with snow and ice.

Mothers knitted socks of double thickness for their children and thick mittens. Planting and shivering were done together, and farmers who worked out their taxes on the country roads wore overcoats and mittens. On June 17 there was a heavy fall of snow...

"July came in with snow and ice. On the 4th of July ice as thick as window glass formed thruout New England, New York and in some parts of Pennsylvania... To the surprise of everyone, August proved worst of all. Almost every green thing in this country and Europe was blasted by frost... Very little corn ripened... There was great privation and thousands of persons would have perished in this country had it not been for the abundance of fish and wild game.'

Neighborly Alliance Nurtured Strong Pioneer Communities

Sugar Grove

By Paula Mitchell

Neighbors were essential for survival and community during the pioneer days. They relied on each other to overcome the challenges of settling in a harsh environment.

They interacted and supported each other by relying on mutual aid. Oftentimes someone had a surplus of food and they would share with neighbors. The demanding tasks like building barns and houses gathered folks in the neighborhood to come and help. This would be called "raising bees." Then there would be various tasks like fetching water, protecting crops, and managing livestock.

Close bonds were formed which included social gatherings and parties. There was a strong sense of unity in the shared struggle of existence. What was crucial was knowing and supporting one's neighbors for survival in times of danger. Actually, the neighborly relationships were built on interdependence, cooperation, and strong sense of community. This was the essence and heart of pioneer life.

Older siblings cared for younger siblings. Pioneer families stayed close together in later years as well, with multiple generations sometimes living under the same roof, or close by.

There was always work to do. Women had "workings" where they helped each other harvest beans, peas, and vegetables. And it held true that when people gathered together, they talked and developed close ties to each other. Their survival

Yes, the pioneers enjoyed getting together, by visiting and building family relationships. Reunions and Christmas were important traditions. Reunions instilled a sense of pride in family, distant kin, and cousins.

As time marches on, traditions, customs, and neighborliness have been affected by the changes of society. Has it been for the better? Let the reader decide.

Life's little instructions include the following:

- 1. Never talk bad about the food when a person is the guest.
- 2. Don't eat the last piece of something one didn't buy.
- 3. Dress well, no matter what the occasion.
- 4. Never be ashamed of where one came from.
- 5. Attend a reunion.

Generator Safety Paramount During Periods of Extreme Weather

By Stephen Smoot

Though it is not clear yet what started the fire in a Franklin residence last week, extreme weather conditions can leave residences reliant on portable generators to maintain power to essential needs, such as freezers, oxygen machines, and more.

These differ from the larger systems that come professionally installed and have a high capacity to provide power to a residence, business, or government office.

Brian DiFalco from the Franklin Volunteer Fire Department explained some of the dangers that can emanate from these helpful devices. He shared some tips on how to stay safe when using them.

First, "make sure they are not close to combustibles." This advice holds not only for gasoline powered, but also propane generators. Care should be taken to keep them a safe distance away from combustible materials, which can include different types of siding. Do not place under a wooden deck or other covering. At least 60 inches should separate a generator from combustible items and three feet from non-combustible, as well as an 18 inch separation between the device and a wall.

Additionally, the National Fire Protection advises placement in a location convenient for maintenance and also access by first responders. Keep vegetation closely cropped to at least three feet from the generator and adhere to general maintenance requirements for it.

These include, according to firefighterline. com, regularly inspecting equipment, checking oil levels, cleaning equipment, cleaning or replacing air filters, and checking fuel lines for leaks or damage. Also use appropriate cords and outlets and regularly check for problems.

DiFalco also advises that one should never operate a generator inside. Even when outside, ensure that a running generator should operate in a well-ventilated area. He warns that the potentially deadly gas "carbon monoxide will spread" unless "far enough away from the home." Carbon monoxide can enter through nearby open windows, cracks, or small holes and accumulate in poorly venti-

Another problem that commonly occurs lies in overloading portable generators. DiFalco states that one should "only use it to power essential appliances, not your whole house.' Prioritize needs, such as health care equipment, freezers and refrigerators, air conditioning when temperatures rise, and other needs. Overloading a generator can result in the outbreak of fire.

By Stephen Smoot

In the middle of a month of storms battering Pendleton County, Mon Power held a planned outage for the area in and around Franklin.

Businesses, government offices, and residences, where possible, turned to generators to keep refrigerators, freezers, air conditioners, and more running as crews performed routine maintenance. At about 9:30 a.m. last Tuesday, the Franklin Volunteer Fire Department responded to a call concerning a fire possibly involving a generator.

FVFD once again saw a quick response prevent a larger disaster. They were dispatched to an older home on the 300 block of High Street. Within five minutes, Engines 23, 26, 22, and Tanker 23 reached the scene.

The fire breached the walls and consumed the inside of the structure. As Brian DiFalco with the FVFD reported on Facebook, "upon arrival, crews found heavy fire on the rear of Crews ran a hose to the rear of the home and extinguished the fire on the exterior rear wall, then confronted the blaze inside. A crew "made an aggressive interior attack through the front door." There they found "high heat and no visibility" as they tracked down flames consuming three rooms in the back of the house.

Although the fire was out by 9:50, crews continued to pump water into the building to ensure that the fire did not

With homes constructed on that street in close proximity, the timely arrival of the FVFD and the efficient work of firefighters not only prevented the fire from burning the entire home, but also from spreading to neighboring residences.

DiFalco also praised the help of the staff of Pendleton Community Bank. Since the planned outage prevented the bank from opening, staff went around the county to do community service. Streamlined CDL Medical Certification Began June 23

Effective June 23 holders of Commercial Driver's Licenses in West Virginia will no longer be required to submit a medical examiner's certificate to the West Virginia Division of Motor Vehicles. Instead, the medical provider conducting the physical examination will directly enter the information into a secure database, which will automatically be transmitted to the DMV. Under the new process, medical providers will have until the close of business the day following the examination to input the information into the system. As a result, CDL holders will no longer need to submit a paper copy of their medical examiner's certificate to the DMV. While the certificate can still be obtained from the provider, it is not necessary for submission to the DMV.

This change is designed to help drivers update their medical records more quickly and accurately, reducing the risk of issues such as downgrades or being placed out of service due to an expired medical card. The DMV encourages all CDL holders to stay current with their medical certifications to ensure uninterrupted service.

Additionally, there will be no paper medical certificates accepted after June

Public Service Commission Welcomes Comments

The writer supposes it would come as no surprise to one that most of the comments received at the Public Service Commission are from people who are complaining about their utility services or the rates they must pay.

The public is invited to comment on any and all cases before the commission. It certainly is a person's right, and the commission welcomes the comments.

There are multiple ways by which a person can file comments with the commission. These include filing online, by mail, or physically coming into the commission to state one's mind while the commission is in session.

Formal comments are comments filed in cases that are docketed by the commission as regular cases, or what is termed as formal cases. In those instances, they are given a case number and proceed through the commission's entire process. In such cases, the commission publishes the information that is involved.

For example, when a sewer company seeks a rate increase, that company must file a petition with the commission, opening a case.

Public Service Commission Chairman Charlotte Lane's Column

The company tells what it is seeking. The commission gives that case a number to track it, and it becomes a formal case. The commission generally then requires the utility or petitioning party to publish a notification in a local newspaper about what the company is seeking.

Then the public is invited to comment on that case and any other that becomes a formal proceeding.

Last year, the public filed a total of 1,467 formal comments with the commission.

Of that number, 1,168 were in the form of a protest against what the utility was seeking.

Another 299 were filings made in support of what was being asked of the commission.

The combination of alcohol and hot temperatures can increase dehydration and case a person's Blood Alcohol Content to reach a higher level more quickly. This can lead to impaired judgment, slowed reaction time and loss of coordination. Elevated BAC levels can impact the body's ability to process the alcohol consumed and lead to a life-threatening situation, such as heat exhaustion, heat stroke or even death.

Recreational activities on the water pose a greater risk of injury and death when alcohol is consumed. In 2024, there were 15 boating incidents, with six fatalities in West Virginia. The WVDNR Law Enforcement Section will be working throughout the summer season to enforce the laws and keep everyone safe. The WVDNR Law Enforcement Section's efforts increase for "Operation Day Water," a nationwide enforcement campaign designed to heighten awareness and enforcement of boating under the influence, will take place during the Fourth of July weekend. According to Capt. Goodson with the WVDNR, last year 63 natural resource police officers participated in 'Operation Dry Water: and 815 vessels wee contacted. The first meeting of the Pendleton County Board of Education was one of the briefest of the year, but consequential moves still took place.

After reciting the Pledge, the board members and others present heard their president, J. D. Wilkins, give the customary invocation. He prayed, "We thank You for the day and thank You for the school year that we had."

First, the board considered a short slate of retirements and resignations. They then went to approve the posting of the positions of administrative mentor and extracurricular also received supplemental pay changes.

J. P. Mowery then stepped in to give the treasury and finance reports. The former report showed that it was, as Mowery explained, "another good month for the month of May cash flow wise." He reported a month ending balance of $3.178 million after one of the last batches of tax receipts

The interest report also showed good results. With a 4.39 percent interest rate, the balance in the bank earned approximately $86,000 for the month and $112,000 for the year to date. "That, again, is very good," stated Mowery, who shared that the budget only anticipated $75,000 in interest.

Mowery then brought up option for workman's compensa-

Sonny O'Neil, board member, questioned Travelers estimate of total expected claims of $59,000 from the school system, saying that "for no claims in five years, that seems high." Mowery explained that the insurance company takes into account the possibility of a claim with "extreme" costs, such as hospitalization, when coming up with that number.

He also stated that he had asked the same question of experts around the state.

Board members then took up a request from the Christian Assistance Network to renew their lease of the Kline Building for their food pantry operation. Charles Hedrick, superintendent, informed the board that "it's the same terms we've had," that include a nominal lease of $10 for the year.

It was approved.

The final act of the meeting was Nicole Hevener taking the oath of office to assume the position of Pendleton County Schools superintendent on July 1.
