Preservation Alliance Announces Grant Award Recipients

Whole Number 7058

The Preservation Alliance of West Virginia is proud to introduce the first four recipients of the newly established Fund for Historic Schools Grant, as well as four recipients of Saving Historic Places Grants.

Recipients of The Fund for Historic Schools Grants include: Rupert School (Greenbrier County), Calhoun County High School, Bluestone School in Bramwell (Mercer County), and Waiteville School (Monroe County)

PAWV executive director, Danielle Parker said, "The goal of both the Fund for Historic Schools and Saving Historic Places Grant (SHP Grant) is economic development. For the schools program, special attention is placed on vacant schools because of the serious negative effects their vacancy and deterioration have on rural communities. While the SHP Grant helps to save endangered historic places. In all cases, these projects have high levels of community support, demonstrable reuse plans, and potential for positive economic growth in disadvantaged communities. We look forward to being able to contribute subgrant awards to the rehabilitation of these historic buildings, and we would like to thank our funder, the National Park Service, for making this possible through a Paul Bruhn Historic Revitalization Grant."

West Virginia Attorney General Patrick Morrisey won the Republican primary in the governor's race Tuesday, following a campaign waged against two main targets - the federal government and transgender children. In his primary campaign, Morrisey had said he planned to continue fighting against federal environmental regulations that harmed West Virginia and its fossil fuel industries, at a time when cheaper alternatives that are less damaging to the planet's climate are taking over the energy industry. He also promoted his record joining federal lawsuits over immigration, transgender kids playing sports and vaccine mandates. Morrisey unsuccessfully defended a state law banning trans girls and women from participating on female sports teams, and he also filed a lawsuit over trans girls using girls bathrooms and locker rooms, a right the Biden administration still protects. Former Delegate Moore Capito finished in second to Morrisey, followed by Chris Miller, Huntington businessman and son of Rep. Carol Miller, and Secretary of State Mac Warner. On Tuesday, Justice easily won the Republican nomination for the U.S. Senate with over 60% of the vote, according to unofficial results. He beat Rep. Alex Mooney, who has represented West Virginia in Congress for the last decade. Justice, who owns The Greenbrier and coal companies, frequently touted himself as a businessman who could bring the state more economic growth. But his family's business empire has for years been the target of lawsuits over not paying taxes, government safety and environmental fines, and debts to workers and other businesses. But while he repeatedly says West Virginia is enjoying record prosperity, critics have said his revenue estimates were repeatedly set unusually low. And nearly one in five West Virginians still live in poverty, including 11 counties classified as "in persistent poverty" by the U.S. Census Bureau with a poverty rate of 20% or higher continually for the past three decades. Justice will face Wheeling Mayor Glenn Elliott who won the Democratic nomination over organizer Zach Shrewsbury and former Massey Energy executive Don Blankenship. Elliott was endorsed by outgoing Sen. Joe Manchin, who announced late last year that he would not seek reelection.

Today, registered Republicans outnumber Democrats when the opposite was true in 2016. The party holds supermajorities, which means two-thirds or more majorities, in the state Senate and House of Delegates. The switch followed years of the GOP's sweeping campaign warning West Virginia of then-President Barack Obama's "War on Coal," with billboards plastering the state based on the president's efforts to decrease carbon emissions. While environmental rules played a role, coal production was already on the decline because of competition from natural gas and increasingly cheaper renewable energy. In 2017, Justice, who'd been given Manchin's stamp of approval running as a Democrat, flipped to a Republican as well, saying at a rally with Trump in Huntington that the Democratic Party had "walked away" from him.And West Virginia, once known for its prevalence of laborfriendly but otherwise conservative "West Virginia Democrats," has increasingly shifted rightward since, with the state Legislature achieving powerful supermajorities in 2020 and growing it in 2022. But despite GOP promises of jobs and a growing population, the workforce participation rate remains the lowest in the country and the state continues to grow older as younger people leave. After decades of population decline, West Virginia went from three congressional districts to two during 2020 redistricting.

Republicans set to maintain supermajorities in state Senate and House

Republicans currently hold supermajorities in the state Senate and House. After Tuesday's primary election, they are poised to maintain strong control of both chambers in the November general election. In the 34-member Senate where only half are up for election this year, 16 Republicans are sitting senators, seven more are running unopposed and six are competing in districts won by GOP candidates by more than 60% during the midterm election. All told, that's at least 29 seats that will be or are likely to be held by Republicans after the November election. But the leadership of the chamber will change. Senate President Craig Blair lost a primary challenge from Tom Willis, an attorney and veteran. He isn't alone. Incumbent state Senators Robert Karnes, known for his far-right stance on social issues, Mike Maroney, a member of Senate leadership, and Chandler Swope, who represents Mercer County, lost primary challenges. In the 100-member House of Delegates where elections are held every two years, 40 Republicans will run unopposed and 32 are running in districts where the GOP candidate won more than 60% of the vote in 2022.

This project, spearheaded by The 1982 Foundation, will receive $275,000 for window rehabilitation and replacement work. For more information, visit https://www.the1982foundation.org/.

Dr. Lyn Guy, former Superintendent of Monroe County Schools, advocates for saving meaningful, but defunct, school buildings from neglect and demolition and instead, putting them to good use: Schools can again become "cherished places, where a small community has a community center, dedicated organizations, and many, many volunteers, who hold it dear."

My Home Among the Hills

My first year in fourth grade is drawing to a close and one teacher day. While this is the last week, it is a very busy one. I am sticking to my one day at a time mantra while continuing to work on crossing items off my to-do list.

I started off last week with two days off due to election day. This couldn't have come at a better time. I needed that extra time off to recoup and regroup after a particularly hectic week that ended with a trip to Kennywood Park. I spent Monday catching up at my home among the hills. I cleaned, swept, and dusted while the washing machine and dishwasher did their jobs. Then I tackled the task of moving my winter clothes to the guest room closet and bringing my summer clothes into my bedroom. I even put away my winter shoes, hats, scarves, and gloves.

On Tuesday I helped my parents with a few projects before I went grocery shopping to get ready for Cookbook Club. The theme this time was foods that remind you of your mom. I had quite a few options to choose from, but I went with something that we call Angel Food Fluff. This dish is simple and delicious. You simply tear up an angel food cake into bite-size pieces and place them in a large bowl. Then you stir in a container of Cool Whip and add fresh blueberries and strawberries. It is light, fluffy, and scrumptious.

Once my dish was complete, I grabbed my notebook and headed to the library for a board meeting that was taking place before Cookbook Club. This was our yearly budget meeting, and I am thrilled to say there are some really exciting additions and improvements coming to the library in the near future. I don't want to give away too much, but I will say our little library will be receiving a bit of a new look in the near future, and I couldn't be happier about that. Once the meeting was over, I joined the Cookbook Club members for one of the most delicious meals our club has had yet.

On Wednesday I headed back to school determined to begin work on my end-of-the-year checkout list. I want to be able to walk out of the building on the 28th and not think about school for a while. During my planning period, I made a real dent in the list, and I feel confident I can finish it all by the end of this week. I was glad I got so much finished because I had a haircut right after school and couldn't linger to do anything else. As always, I enjoyed my time with Crystal and walked out with a short and sassy summer hairdo.

I continued to cross items off the list through Thursday and Friday. I also finished my lesson plans for the year and finalized my grades. This week is going to be a very busy one with special activities planned every day, so it felt good to know these tasks were completed. I went home, ate some dinner, and read a little before I went to pick up the family to head to Glenville to watch the Dirt Devils play softball. The weather was wet and chilly, but the game kept us on the edge of our seats. It was a tie score when time ran out, so the game went into overtime. It took two extra innings, but the Calhoun girls came away with the win and a ticket to the championship.

I climbed into bed Friday night tired but happy. Thankfully, the championship was held in Glenville, and it didn't start until 1:00. This allowed me to sleep in and have a slow Saturday morning. The weather was sunny and warm for the game, and the Dirt Devils won their second championship in front of a cheering

Sunday was spent going to church and then spending some time on my parents' back deck. I am really looking forward to relaxing and reading there on summer afternoons soon. I am now preparing for my last Sunday school night for this school year. I don't have to pack a lunch because tomorrow I will be meeting the 4th graders at the middle high school for their move-up day where they will meet their new teachers, tour the building, and learn about next year's classes. The rest of the week includes the 4th Grade Celebration, Field Day, and an Awards Assembly. I'm tired just thinking about it all. I am very ready to say goodbye to Miss Walburn for a few months and be simply Mellody. The clock is ticking. Summer, here

Soil Testing for Effective Lawn & Garden Fertilization

If you want a great garden, you've got to have great soil. Working from the ground up by soil testing is the best way to make sure your garden is the best growing environment. Testing your soil is as easy as it is important for a healthy lawn as it tells you exactly what your soil needs. This way, you can buy the right additives for your lawn, and nothing more, making it healthier and saving you money.

additives for your lawn, and nothing more, making it healthier and saving you money.

The makeup of the soil can differ from one part of the garden to another, so it's important to test more than one area. Testing the soil is a key step if you want to know what nutrients it's made of, how acidic or alkaline it is, and other important details that affect the health of your plot.

Soil testing is a cost-effective and eco-friendly approach to lawn fertilization. Precisely identifying what nutrients the soil lacks allows gardeners to invest in targeted nutrients, ensuring the garden receives exactly what it needs for optimal health without overspending on unnecessary fertilizers.

Such precise application not only saves money by avoiding the waste associated with overfertilization but also prevents nutrient runoff and environmental pollution. This contributes to a more sustainable garden care routine, ensuring the garden remains an eco-friendly aspect of the landscape while receiving the proper nourishment to thrive.

Interpreting Soil Test Results
Interpreting a soil test might seem a little daunting at first, but it's quite straightforward once you understand the basics. The results from a soil test provide valuable information about the nutrients present in your soil, its pH level and other important characteristics that affect plant growth.

Soil pH - The pH scale runs from 0 to 14, with 7 being neutral. Numbers below 7 indicate acidic soil, while numbers above 7 mean the soil is alkaline. Most plants prefer a slightly acidic to neutral pH (around 6.0 to 7.0). If your soil's pH is outside your plants' preferred range, you'll need to make adjustments.

Nutrient Levels - The three main nutrients listed are macronutrients that plants usually need in larger amounts—nitrogen (N), phosphorus (P), and potassium (K). These are the primary nutrients that plants need to grow, and they're often listed as N-P-K on fertilizer packages.

Once you've received the results of your soil test, using it is a lot like using a map to arrive at a healthy production plot. Instead of guessing or using a one-size-fits-all approach, you can target specific deficiencies to make sure your garden and plants get the right balance of nutrients. This promotes healthier, more vibrant growth. With this approach, your garden care becomes more efficient, effective, and eco-friendly.

What Makes a Community? What Makes it a Happy One?

with a common characteristic or interest living together within a larger society

I grew up in Marietta, Ohio. Nestled in a wide valley where the Muskingum River meets the Ohio River, Marietta is a historic, private college town with a solid business base, sound health system, and multiple opportunities for recreation and tourism. For the most part, Marietta has it all - everything you look for in a community.

A community is a social unit of members who share a common network of some sort — a connection of values, interests, goals, and kinship. Positive communities inspire their members in ways that promote a sense of self-discovery and group connection, encourage members to express their beliefs and values, and build relationships with others.

I moved to central West Virginia in 1992 when I transferred to Glenville State College (now University). I worked odd jobs after graduating in 1994, and in 1999, turning down permanent employment at a temporary worksite in Chicago, Illinois, Frank and I returned to central West Virginia and settled here on his family's farm not far from the Calhoun/Gilmer County line.

We're about the same distance from Grantsville, the county seat of Calhoun, and Glenville, the county community - a group of people seat of Gilmer. Over the past 20 years, I have worked and interacted in both counties. They both lie in the donut hole of West Virginia. Neither are intersected by an interstate. Their populations have been aging and shrinking. Both were wounded by the loss of manufacturing.

> Since I moved to "depressed" region of Appalachia, I have taken an interest in community and economic development. One of my best friends (lost to Covid), worked in economic development for several decades. I have attended multiple conferences on such topics, read multiple books, and have a knack for seeing potential.

> years dancing back and forth over the Calhoun/Gilmer County line, I'm always making note of the vast differences in the community differences of the two counties. And I've always been perplexed by the way each county is the opposite of what you'd expect.

> The quality of a community is measured by the level of engagement and happiness individuals can draw interactions. community Note that community quality is not measured by income, employment, status, economic class, or education. What price can you place on a sparkling night sky? On being treated with respect? On volunteerism and knowing your neighbors? On farm fresh eggs with biscuits over three inches high?

My advice for all you 2024 high school graduates out there: "Look out for number one and try not to step in number two."

I'm lying of course, since that was the advice Rodney Dangerfield as Thornton Melon in the movie "Back to School" gave to the graduating class at Grand Lakes University. Funny movie and surprisingly good advice. However, it is not the advice old people like me should be giving to young people like those graduating from high schools and colleges this year. That advice is a little less succinct and a little drier.

My advice for young people? Try it while you are young (not drugs or illegal things) so you won't be older and find yourself asking, "What if?" Do that because the saddest words of tongue or pen are the words "it might have been.

Find the one, the thing, or the idea you love, grab onto it, and give it your best every day with every breath. Do that so you won't be my age wondering if you had done everything you could and questioning how things may have turned out if you had.

I have had the wonderful opportunity in my life to interact with so many young people, being allowed by God to put two daughters and a grandson through the rigors of growing up and graduating from high school. I am so proud of them all.

I have been further blessed by being allowed to interact with so many young athletes. I appreciate what athletes, and anyone who participates in extracurricular activities, had to do to be allowed to participate and the discipline they had to have to participate. I thank each one I have interacted with for their time and indulgence. It has been my privilege.

But I have found a few pithy comments from others I hope they can use. To wit:

- Always be a first-rate version of yourself, instead of a second-rate version of somebody else. — Judy Garland
- You may never know what results will come of your action, but if you do nothing there will be no result. — Mahatma Gandhi
- The noblest question in the world is: What good may I do in it? Benja-
- Success is stumbling from failure to failure with no loss of enthusiasm. —Winston Churchill
- Opportunity is missed by most people because it is dressed in overalls and looks like work. --Thomas Edison

• In the long run, we shape our lives, and we shape ourselves. The process never ends until we die. And the choices we make are ultimately our own responsibility. -- Eleanor Roosevelt

These pithy quotes ought to change your life as you go from the protected world of childhood to the unprotected world of real life which brings me back to my original advice.

"Look out for number one and try not to step in number two."

THE POLITICAL FALLOUT: Now that the primary election is over, and all the losing candidates have picked up their campaign signs, how did things go for me? They went quite well even though Chris Miller did not win the nomination for governor. I have no problem with Patrick Morrisey, I just preferred Miller.

But, hey, Miller won Calhoun County. Not by much but he won Calhoun and 12 other counties setting himself up as a person to be dealt with if he ever decides to run again.

I did not "lose" many votes in the primary election although I lost Miller and Mike Stuart, who I voted for because he is a friend of mine.

In the upcoming general election, I will say I am voting for at least one Democrat but I don't consider it blasphemy because I think the Democrat is more Republican than the Republican is. At least I won't have to write in Hamilton Burger this time. On to November.

CLEANING UP: Recently a group of community leaders including Dr. Mark Sarver of Glenville State University, LKVDC Director Shelia Burch, Ridgeview News Publisher Shari Johnson, Commissioner Craig Arthur, Commissioner Roger Propst, Superintendent of Schools Michael Fitzwater, American Medicine Company representatives Robin and Crystal Mersh, businessman Eric Lupardus, Calhoun Banks CEO Martha Haymaker, real estate agents Derek Villers and Rhonda Cain, and Calhoun Gilmer Career Center Director Bryan Sterns met to talk about what Calhoun County needed to address while making a pitch for a manufacturing company to come to the county.

They are addressing those needs and hopefully can get everything to fall into place because it could get as many as 500 jobs to come into the area with many paying upwards of $100,000. That sure tops what the Rubber Fabricators Incorporated brought to Calhoun back around 1960 and that influx of jobs kept the county rolling for several years. I hope we can pull it off and if we do, it will be done against some opposition which is a bit surprising, but it shouldn't be.

GRADUATIONS: I have been through several graduation ceremonies including mine, my first wife, my daughter, my adopted daughter, my grandson, and all his siblings the youngest two this year from Belpre High School.

The next two in line are eight and four. My great-granddaughters. I hope to make it to their graduations so I can give them some unwanted words of wisdom, which I hope is better than "Look out for number one and try not to step in number two."

Until next time stay safe but don't live life in a bubble.

The Grandparent Visitation Act

Eleanor cringed every time there was another blow-up between her son and daughter-in-law. It was painful to watch. They were arguing almost non-stop over money, the kids, the car, everything. Their divorce was coming.

She was especially concerned about her three young grandchildren. What was going to happen to them? Would Eleanor still be able to see them as much as she did now? Bake cookies with them? Have picnics?

A friend from church told her that the Grandparent Visitation Act controls this type of situation. On the Internet, she looked it up at WV Code sec. 48-10-101, et. seq.

Eleanor read that reasonable visitation with a grandchild can be ordered by a circuit court or family court judge when two conditions are met: (1) it is in the best interest of the child, and (2) visitation would not substantially interfere with the parent-child relationship.

Under the Grandparent Visitation Act, the primary focus for the court would be to evaluate and give priority to the parents' preferences for their child along with considering the best interests of the child.

Even if parents are not married, separated, or having problems, a grandparent can apply for court-ordered visitation when appropriate. In recent years, the concept of visitation by a "psychological parent," someone who is not a grandparent or family member, has been considered by courts in West Virginia.

When such a person has played a substantial role in the daily life of the child with the consent and encouragement of the child's legal parent or guardian, that person may qualify as a psychological parent who can be given visitation rights by the circuit court or family court.

Visitation rights and other legal issues faced by West Virginia residents age 60 and over can be discussed by calling 800–229–5068, the West Virginia Senior Legal Aid hotline. A staff attorney will provide assistance at no charge.

USDA Shifts Gardening Zones

The U.S. Department of (USDA) Agriculture recently released a new version of its Plant Hardiness Zone Map (PHZM), updating this valuable tool for gardeners and researchers for the first time since 2012. USDA's Plant Hardiness Zone Map is the standard by which gardeners and growers can determine which plants are most likely to thrive at a location. The new map—jointly developed by USDA's Agricultural Research Service (ARS) and Oregon State University's (OSU) PRISM Climate Group—is more accurate and contains greater detail than prior versions. The map is available online at https://planthardiness.ars. usda.gov/.

The 2023 map is based on 30year averages of the lowest annual winter temperatures at specific locations, is divided into 10-degree Fahrenheit zones, further divided 5-degree Fahrenheit halfzones. Like the 2012 map, the 2023 web version offers a Geographic Information System (GIS)-based interactive format and is specifically designed to be user-friendly. Notably, the 2023 map delivers to users several new, significant features and advances. The 2023 map incorporates data from 13,412 weather stations compared to the 7,983 that were used for the 2012 map.

Approximately 80 million American gardeners and growers represent the most frequent users of the USDA Plant Hardiness Zone Map. However, they're not the only ones with a need for this hardiness information. For example, the USDA Risk Management Agency refers to the map's plant hardiness zone designations to set certain crop insurance standards. Additionally, scientists incorporate the plant hardiness zones as a data layer in many research models, such as those modeling the spread of exotic weeds and insects.

Plant hardiness zone designations represent what's known as the "average annual extreme minimum temperature" at a given location during a particular period (30 years, in this instance). Put another way, the designations do not reflect the coldest it has ever been or ever will be at a specific location, but simply the average lowest winter temperature for the location over a specified time. Low temperature during the winter is a crucial factor in the survival of plants at specific locations.

The map includes 13 zones across the United States and its territories. Each zone is broken into half zones, designated as "A" and "B." For example, zone 7 is divided into 7a and 7b half zones. When compared to the 2012 map, the 2023 version reveals that about half of the country shifted to the next warmer half zone, and the other half of the country remained in the same half zone. That shift to the next warmer half zone means those areas warmed somewhere in the range of 0-5 degrees Fahrenheit; however, some locations experienced warming in the range of 0-5 degrees Fahrenheit without moving to another half Temperature updates to plant hardiness zones are not necessarily reflective of global climate change because of the highly variable nature of the extreme minimum temperature of the year, as well as the use of increasingly sophisticated mapping methods and the inclusion of data from more weather stations. Consequently, map developers involved in the project cautioned against attributing temperature updates made to some zones as reliable and accurate indicators of global climate change (which is usually based on trends in overall average temperatures recorded over long periods).

Although a paper version of the 2023 map will not be available for purchase from the government, anyone may download the new map free of charge and print copies as needed.

New Phone Scam Targeting Homeowners

The West Virginia Office of Energy (WVOE) warns a new phone scam is targeting homeowners across the state.

Energy officials say people are receiving calls from scammers claiming to represent the "West Virginia Power Company" or other, legitimate power companies that operate in West Virginia, including Appalachian Power and FirstEnergy. The callers offer to perform free in-home services, funded through federal grants, to make households more energy efficient. Scammers then ask for personal information, including the victim's full name and home address, which can be used to commit identity theft and other crimes.

"If the caller cannot provide their company's West Virginia business license and details about the grant funding the project, it is likely a scam," says Nicholas Preservati, director of the Office of Energy. "You should never give out personal information over the phone without first making sure the call is legitimate."

When in doubt of a caller's legitimacy, homeowners are encouraged to ask for information to call back later. This includes the name of the company, a phone number, and their business license number, which can be crosschecked on the Secretary of State's website, sos.wv.gov.

Some utilities have their own energy-saving programs that customers can sign up for, like AEP's TakeCharge WV, but there is currently no grant providing this type of free service for all West Virginia residents. The Office of Energy will inform the public of any such initiatives in the future. More information about WVOE's current and pending projects can be found at energywv.org.

If you feel that you have been victim to a scam, contact the Attorney General Office's Consumer Protection Hotline at 1-800-368-8808 or visit ago. wv.gov.

New EMS Treat-inplace Law Takes Effect

CHARLESTON, W.Va. - A bill signed into law by Gov. Jim Justice is expected to provide much-needed relief to West Virginians in need of emergency services and first responders this month. The new "treat-in-place" protocols take effect on May 1, 2024, and will allow for patients with qualifying conditions to be treated in the comfort of their own homes. It is a move the governor said will help alleviate long wait times in emergency rooms and keep ambulances from being tied up at the hospital.

"This is a victory for not only the countless lives that will be saved, but the EMS providers they depend on to answer their call," said Gov. Justice, who signed the bill into law on March 9, 2024.

The measure also gives EMS companies the ability to bill for certain services provided in the home that do not require ambulance transport to the hospital. West Virginia Department of Health Secretary Sherri A. Young, DO, MBA, FAAFP, who oversees the state's Office of Emergency Medical Services, said the initiative will free up EMS units to respond faster to emergencies.

"Too often, we hear of hospitals on red diversion and patients being diverted to other facilities. These are critical minutes this law gives back to the patient. One 911 call that goes unanswered is one call too many and I'm proud to be a part of this effort that will help make sure there are ambulances available for anyone who has to make that call."

The Department of Health's Office of Emergency Medical Services Director Joseph Ratliff said Medicaid will also be able to bill for services rendered. "This gives EMS units across the state the added support they need to operate which will in turn save lives." OEMS has developed the education for the protocols and will send them out through the state system to the agency training officers. The training officers educated providers on the protocols before the May 1st start date.

Fishing Licenses in WV Increase 27% in 5 Years

A new study looking at the U.S. states where fishing popularity has grown the most places West Virginia with the fifth largest growth.

Fishing is among the nation's most popular pastimes, with more than 50 million Americans going fishing each year. The growth of fishing has also become an important component of conservation and habitat restoration efforts in the U.S., as revenue derived from fishing licenses helps finance federal, state, and local programs for wildlife

Some U.S. states have seen more rapid growth in the popularity of fishing recently than others. Researchers calculated the percentage change in the number of fishing license holders per capita over the last five years and then ranked states accordingly.

These are the key takeaways from the report:

According to Google Trends data, search interest in the term "fishing rod" has increased by more than 90% since 2004. Searches for "how to fish" are up nearly 250%, and searches for "where to fish" are up by almost 400%. Each of these search terms also saw pronounced spikes during the COVID-19 pandemic.

Since the late 1960s, the total number of fishing license holders in the U.S. has risen by more than half, from 20.5 million to 31.0 million.

Over the last five years, West Virginia experienced a 27.3% increase in fishing license holders per capita, and fishing license revenue in West Virginia decreased by 7.7% during that span. Overall, West Virginia ranks 5th on the list of states where fishing is growing most in popularity.
