Washington State Parks

Steamboat Rock State Park

Steamboat Rock State Park is a beautiful camping park 12 miles south of Grand Coulee in Grant County. This 3,522-acre park is named for a columnar basalt rock butte that rises 800 feet above

Banks Lake and, with a surface area of 600 acres, dominates the main park.

Situated in the middle of the eastern Washington desert, Steamboat Rock State Park offers lush, green lawns, rocks for climbing and freshwater lake swimming and boating for those who want respite from the hot summer sun. Miles of horse trails are open for day use, and a hiking trail leads to Northrup Lake, a natural forest area. Several watercraft launches are available.

Four campground areas and a large day-use area are on sweeping green lawns, protected from winds by tall, dramatic poplar trees. In the warm seasons, the surrounding areas are carpeted with wildflowers, adding to the gray-green brush of the Scablands landscape. In the winter, the park offers opportunities for Nordic skiing.

The park lies within the larger Steamboat Rock State Park Recreation Area, which includes the Northrup Canyon Natural Area and Castle Rock Natural Preserve. A well-engineered road built in the late 1800s winds through and up the south side of Northrup Canyon. Named for one of the area's original homesteaders, it was used by stage coaches and freight wagons.

Nearby Grand Coulee Dam provides tours, a visitor's center and a nightly laser-light show, as well as a variety of amenities.

Overnight accommodations

Steamboat Rock State Park has 26 standard (tent) campsites and 144 utility spaces with water, electric and sewer. Maximum site length for RVs is 50 feet. Tents must be placed on designated tent pads, and vehicle tires must remain entirely on the pavement at all times. Boat trailers may be parked on the lawn, provided the tow vehicle does not back onto the lawn.

There are 44 primitive campsites with vault toilets at Jones Bay (no water available), 36 primitive campsites with vault toilets at Osborn Bay (no water available) and 12 boat-in campsites (with water) north of the main campground launch (these sites are not reservable).

The park also offers three cabins in the Bay Loop. Each cabin is furnished with a queen-size futon, a bunk bed that sleeps three, small end table, microwave, mini-refrigerator, heater and air conditioner. Cabins accommodate up to five guests.

All primitive sites are first come, first served. Northrup Canyon has five campsites for equestrian campers. These sites require a reservation. To reserve, call the park at (509) 633-1304. Reservations for individual campsites and cabins are available for stays between March 15 and Oct. 15. Reserve online at www.parks.state.wa.us or call (888) CAMPOUT or (888) 226-7688.

Park history

The rock was once an island in the Ancient Columbia River bed. When the Columbia returned to its original course after the Ice Age floods subsided, the river left this massive landmark standing. Steamboat Rock has long been used as a natural landmark – first by Native American tribes, later by pioneers and more recently, by military aircraft flying training missions.

Park amenities and facilities

All lawns are irrigated daily. Mosquito control occurs in evenings as weather permits, as required by the Grant County Mosquito District.

The park has seven boat ramps at three locations on Banks Lake and 320 feet of dock for boat handling. Five moorage buoys are at the north end of Steamboat Rock.

The following amenities also are available:

- Fishing pier accessible to those with disabilities
- Basketball court
- Sand volleyball court
- Stand-up paddle board and kayak rentals
