History

Palouse Falls has long been a location used by Native American tribes. The falls were first documented in 1841, during a survey of the region led by Captain Charles Wilkes of the United States Navy (U.S. Exploring Expedition).

Palouse Falls State Park was dedicated on June 3, 1951. The 105 acres that make up the park were donated by several parties, including The Baker-Boyer National Bank of Walla Walla (73 acres), J.M. McGregor of the McGregor Land and Livestock Company (22 acres), Mrs. Agnes Sells of Washtucna (9 acres) and others.

Palouse Falls was designated as the state waterfall by the Washington State legislature on March 18, 2014. The bill designating the waterfall was written by 3rd, 4th, 5th and 6th grade students of the nearby Washtucna School.

Welcome to Palouse Falls

Palouse Falls State Park is a 105-acre camping park with unique geology and history. The park offers a dramatic view of the official state waterfall.

Palouse Falls drops from a height of about 200 feet and is particularly spectacular in spring and early summer because of the high volume of water flow.

The park also offers many recreational opportunities, including hiking, bird watching, picnicking, and a fully accessible hiking trail that overlooks this natural wonder from an observation shelter with historical displays.
