Iteration 18: Nature Of Ego & Self

36"x24" • Acrylic on Canvas

This piece explores a Magritte inspired design while incorporating a fine distinction of philosophical imagery. The faces serve almost as a split of ego (or by some viewers, perhaps even male and female energy) in us all. The tree is a symbol of growth, development and connection with nature's process. The only geometric element tying it to the rest of the series is the box. The hexahedron, which represents earth/ground, seems quite subtle but for this reason it can be held as a symbol of personal compartmentalization that we must break out of, much like a seed. It appears like a chunk of flesh, a piece of ourselves from which we separate.
