667 Neighbor of the Beast Our American India Pale Ale uses bountiful amounts of American two row malted barley and a sprinkle of Munich and Caramalt in combination with two bold whole cone American hops. The hops are evenly ratioed throughout the boil, based on their alpha acid content, to create a nectarous combination of both hop's bittering, flavoring, and aroma characteristics. Post-fermentation, 667 is dry hopped with vast amounts of a third American hop. The beer is named after a phrase someone scrawled into the wall of our favorite college watering hole.

Tasting Notes: Orange nectar with a frothy white head; medium malt body; seriously choked full of pineapple and grapefruit flavor and aroma finishing with hints of peach and honey. A hop head's soured hallucination.

Ingredients: American Two-Row, Munich, Caramalt, and Red Malted Wheat. Simcoe, Centennial, and Citra hops. House Yeast.

ALC/VOL 7.0% OG 1.062 FG 1.012 IBUs 66.7 16.9 FL. OZ.

Our ale is unfiltered and unpasteurized.
Decant with care as some yeast settling is normal.

Lone Pint Brewery is a grassroots insurrection with the true beer lover in mind. We are dedicated to creating distinctive local Texas ales that are tasty, hoppy, and quaffable. We use raw whole cone hops for bittering, flavoring, aroma, and dry hopping in our brews. However, an equally important ingredient is the renewable energy that powers our Brewery. The spent grain is fed to a local dairy farmer's cows and the spent hops live on in our beer.

Craft brewing is an American institution. Our brewhouse and tanks are from Nevada, our boiler from Pennsylvania, our kegging machine from California, our chiller from Oregon, and our mill from Canada (close enough, eh!). Point being, we kept the love at home, doing our part to ensure that craft brewing will always remain an American institution.
