ARROW HEART SEMILLON SINGLE VINEYARD WINE

La Colline is farmed by Anton Roux, a direct descendant of the Huguenot refugee Paul Roux who arrived in Franschhoek in 1689. This vineyard was planted by Anton's grandfather in the year 1936 on the southern slope of Dussenberg. It's situated between 310 and 350m above sea-level. During summer, these tightly planted bushvines form a slightly wild looking mess of life and grapes. In winter they resemble a crowd of drunkards cart wheeling across the slope. It is a beautiful old thing.

As is typical in the Cape's older Semillon vineyards, there are some dark skinned Semillon vines inter-planted with the light skinned Semillon. This oddity is virtually extinct in the rest of the world, and so affords us a chance to make something uniquely South African.

The 2014 bottling consists of three quarters dark skinned, one quarter light skinned Semillon. The dark skinned grapes were fermented on skins for a few days prior to pressing. - Bottled unfiltered and unfiltered. Fear not the sediment.
