According to the Mesoamerican ancestral worship, the priests were the only ones who could establish a channel of communication with the gods. To achieve it, they practiced ritual drinking of agave made from agave. Such drinks were exclusively for religious ceremonies and for the old men in the lefty sector of society. The gods of the drinks were called collectively sextaia rotochinia in Nahuatl (400 rabbits). The number 400 was synonymous of uncountable and uncountable. It was believed that the spirit of the four hundred rabbits carries on to this day in each bottle of this fine mezc.
