JOSH ELLINGSON
OAKLAND

Josh Ellingson relocated to California from Flint, Michigan during the "dot com boom" of the late 1990s. He started out by selling self-published books at comic conventions in the Detroit area. Moving on from web production art, Ellingson found a niche in illustrating for various technology related magazines. Today, he contributes to various international publications and participates in art exhibitions nationwide. Ellingson's art is vivid, humorous, and sometimes dark. Much of it touches upon machinery, technology and visions of the future. His work has been featured on everything from handheld games to custom vinyl toys. Ellingson can still be found selling his art at various comic conventions around the country. Ellingson enjoys sketching and traveling when not managing his studio.
