When I told my friends and colleagues I would be the first in Portugal to make a pure Alicante Bouschet, the general consensus was that I was aluado, meaning moonstruck, or crazy... But why not? This grape produces some of the world's most deeply-coloured wine and is prized for that very quality in some of Portugal's top reds. We produced Aluado north of Lisbon, on our historic family estate, Quinta de Porto Franco, where careful selection in the vineyard and winery has produced a superb wine. Its incredibly deep colour appears black in the glass and the aromas and flavours are just as intense. Full bodied and boldly structured, yet with a delicious freshness, Aluado exudes damson and black cherry flavours, accompanied by exotic spices and hints of mocha. This is the quintessential steak wine and superb with roasts and barbecues. It might even leave you feeling a little aluado.
