A BEER 300 YEARS IN THE MAKING

7.5 % ALC/VOL

BORN, BRED, AND BREWED IN TEXAS

22 FL OZ

In the early 1700's, when British Pale Ales first landed on Indian shores, the brewing world changed forever.

Over the next 300 years, the idea of what constitutes an IPA evolved drastically, incorporating changes to its malt composition, alcohol content, and hopping rates. It wasn't until 1835 that the pale ales shipped to India were first termed IPAs.

The third beer in our Inner Circle Series pays homage to the India Pale Ale by emulating the Burton-on-Trent IPA. Every effort was made to adhere to historical accuracy, starting with the malt.

Working closely with Blacklands Malt, we recreated the Burton White Malt by maintaining low moisture content and kilning at exceptionally low temperature, thereby keeping down color development. Using only East Kent Golding, we mirrored the hopping schedule and rates of the brewers that invented the style.

The ale then spent the next four months in oak barrels, emulating the journey to India. To ensure historical accuracy, each barrel was inoculated with Brettanomyces to recreate its natural introduction from years of barrel stave reuse and reconstruction on that trade route.

Earthy, lemony, oaky, and effervescent, when you open a bottle of Archetype Historical IPA, you're reliving part of history.
