TEXAS ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGE COMMISSION

LA COLLINE VINEYARD

La Colline is farmed by Anton Roux, a direct descendant of the Huguenot refugee Paul Roux who arrived in Franschhoek in 1688. This vineyard was planted by Anton's grandfather in the year 1936 on the southern slope of Dassenberg. It's situated between 310 and 350m above sea-level. During summer, these tightly planted bushvines form a slightly wild looking mess of life and grapes. In winter they resemble a crowd of drunkards cart wheeling across the slope. It is a beautiful old thing.

As is typical in the Cape's older Semillon vineyards, there are some dark skinned Semillon vines inter-planted with the light skinned Semillon. This oddity is virtually extinct in the rest of the world, and so affords us a chance to make something uniquely South African.

For this bottling, the dark and light skinned grapes were picked together as they grow in the vineyard, whole bunch pressed and fermented together. - Bottled unfinned and unfiltered. Fear not the sediment.
