The EAGLE KNIGHT

The war was the main concern of the ancient Aztec Empire in Mexico (1325 BC-1521 BC). It was known that the army was made up by a great selection of warriors divided in six orders, SNAKE, JAGUAR, WOLF, DEER, COYOTE and GRASSHOPPER.

It was a right of nobility to be able to be selected into the army but only the merits of war could give them the degree of these six special orders that only a few reached, and as a gift they would receive the honor or the mission to accompany the sun, when they died. Legend tells that there were no other orders within the military army, until one day an honest, brave and courageous warrior changed the story, all for a great love.

This young man was in love with an Aztec princess. He wanted to ask for her hand to marry, and to be able to unite his life with his beloved. But there was a great impediment, the warrior had no title of nobility or anything to offer to gain the acceptance and the hand of the princess. So he decided to confront the orders and demonstrate what he was able to do. He was sent out to many battles and numerous tests were put upon him in order to see if he could survive, but tirelessly and repeatedly he won each one of them.

When he was in the most important battle, the warrior demonstrated not only his bravery, and courage, but the skill of directing troops.

In that most important battle the enemy had killed the leader of the troops and without a second thought the warrior immediately took to being in command after seeing his fellow warriors discouragement by the death of their leader.

After he returned from the war, the council of the orders met and decided in recognition of the brave warrior, to grant him the title of a brand new order, "EAGLE KNIGHT", and with this title he gained lands and treasures that he could never imagine.

The father of the princess decided to give his daughter's hand in marriage. Today the princess and the "EAGLE KNIGHT" are together beside the sun demonstrating to the world that love does not comprehend obstacles, barriers, wars or titles of nobility, love destroys bridges, crosses across walls, and wins battles to succeed.
