The SLEEPING WOMAN

Thousands of moons ago in Mexico, a young man, a warrior strategist who was famous skill in the art of war, met a beautiful young woman with whom he fell instantly in love with. He decided to go to her father and ask for his permission to marry her and unite their lives forever, however, her father was not a very important man in the war to make a decision in his favor.

He would give his daughter's hand to that young warrior but in exchange he asked the warrior to fight in his name. The young man accepts, and promised to return victorious, in order to obtain the love of his life.

It was a prolonged and tedious war and the warrior had not been seen for some time. The young woman began to anguish and suffer for her love.

One day she saw a vision that the young warrior had died in battle and for this reason the woman became more sad than ever, and became sick longing for her love. Long, anguished nights passed by until one morning her father found her immersed in a deep, eternal sleep.

The next morning the sun was shining down on the valley and the sounds of victory were heard. Leading all of the warriors in the sounds of victory was the young man. He was coming forward with a great joy that he could now be happy beside his beloved. His heart broke when he learned of such unfortunate news.

He cried out to the sky, asking the gods for an explanation. He then carried the body of his beloved and climbed across the valley and up to the mountain, there he lay on the top of the mountain and decided to watch her sleep eternally, with a torch burning.

The gods, seeing that act of love, decided to eternalize the couple by covering their bodies with snow and enshrining them for eternity.

There is the sleeping woman and her warrior in love, with his burning torch of fire.

Throughout the centuries we can still see these two lovers, on top of these two great mountains in Mexico, known as Iztaccihuatl and Popocatepetl.
