The tea broth has a slightly light and smooth taste, with a mouthfeel that is easy to drink and has a subtle sweet aftertaste with a hint of freshness. The tea emits a unique fragrance of tangerine peel, complemented by alluring scents of cherry tomatoes and dried fruits. In the lingering taste, there is a faint sweetness reminiscent of malt sugar, along with a refreshing green aroma of slight licorice. The dried tea leaves themselves appear dry and are dark brown in color, showing aged and sturdy leaves, while the brewed tea broth has a slightly orange-red hue and is clear and bright.
