(10.30 am)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, Mr Rabinowitz.

MR RABINOWITZ: May it please your Ladyship --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just before you start, I have a number of things I want to say.

First of all, I understand that some of the members of the press would like there to be more seats for members of the press and/or members of the public. Could you speak to Mr Tim Pollen in the first instance to see whether health and safety considerations will enable us to put a few more chairs in the room.

The second thing is that so far -- and this really, Mr Rabinowitz, is addressed to you and Mr Sumption and all other counsel and their clients as well as members of the press and the public: you may all use electronic communication, whether it's Twitter, anything on your mobile phones, but please may I ask you all to have sounds on your mobile phones turned off so we don't get during the course of the trial irritating mobile phone text bleeps or whatever.

Secondly, if there is any abuse or I consider that there is any abuse of the use of electronic communication, that is to say if I consider that people are inappropriately communicating to witnesses who are going to go into the witness box after the witness who is in the box, if I consider that there is any inappropriate communication and that is brought to my notice, then I may have to reconsider the permission that I'm giving to everybody to use electronic communication.

The next thing is please could there be complete silence in court and no moving about in court when witnesses are being sworn in. That is part of the formal process and it is very important that at that moment in time there is complete silence and no rustling in the court.

The next thing is -- and this is addressed to counsel and solicitors and witnesses -- please could you make absolutely sure that nobody even takes a mobile phone into the witness box. Can I have your assurance that that will be done? It's not just a sound issue, it's also a communication issue.

MR RABINOWITZ: Indeed.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Or a prompting issue. Okay.

Yes, Mr Rabinowitz. Sorry, there's a request at the back of the court. Yes?

MEMBER OF THE PRESS: Sorry, from the members of the national press, there are only four members -- as far as we know -- here. The entire back row is taken up by members of the public, no seats were reserved for the press, and in the annex it's a written feed only and not an audio feed.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Okay, just a second. More than four seats should have been reserved for members of the press in accordance with my instruction. Is Mr Pollen in court?

MR POLLEN: My Lady, the entire back row was reserved for press and public but not just press.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: But not just press, okay. How many seats were specifically reserved for the press?

MR POLLEN: It was all reserved for the press and the public, the entire back row.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. So we need more seats for the press. Right.

What I'm going to do, gentlemen of the press, is I am going to shut the court at 1 o'clock. At 1 o'clock I will discuss with Mr Pollen what the arrangements should be specifically for the press because it's quite right that members of the press take priority over members of the public at least to an appropriate and limited extent. We can see what we can do.

MR RABINOWITZ: There are two seats here, my Lady.

Certainly for the openings, it may be possible to get a few more seats in there. There certainly are two here which would be available.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, we're not having anybody sitting there for the time being.

MR RABINOWITZ: Not for the next few days.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I'm going to be very sexist here and if there's a pregnant lady of the press, she can come and sit down here.

Mr Pollen, we can put four seats there presently, four or five there, and I will discuss with Mr Pollen after no doubt the members of the press have bent his ear during the course of the morning, in the break, as to what the allocation should be between members of the public and members of the press.

MEMBER OF THE PRESS: And there are some lawyers in the gallery.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. I will also identify with counsel how many lawyers are, as it were, back-spilling out. But they also may be of course not just directly involved in this case.

Okay, can we get four or five more chairs down there, Mr Pollen, for members of the press.

MR POLLEN: They're on their way.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: One of you can come up here, first come, first served. We'll see what we can do for the rest of you.

MEMBER OF THE PRESS: Thank you very much.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I don't know whether in the inquiry or the inquest they had a daily allocation of press seats, I'll try and find out how it was done because we don't want to have you all arriving at 8.30 every morning to get seats. That's not a practical way of doing things.

MEMBER OF THE PRESS: With the inquest there was a live audio feed into the annex.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: We don't have that here. You all realise this is the first day of the building opening so we'll have to be flexible and see what we can do to accommodate it.

Okay. We'll get a few more seats in there. Basically, we'll just have to keep the liaison up, members of the press.

Mr Rabinowitz.

Opening submissions by MR RABINOWITZ

MR RABINOWITZ: As your Ladyship knows, I appear in this matter for Mr Berezovsky together with Mr Gillis QC, Mr Masefield, Mr Colton, Mr Forbes Smith, Mr Isaac, Ms Campbell, Mr Milner and Ms Shah. My learned friends Mr Sumption QC, Ms Davies QC, Mr Jowell QC, Mr Henshaw, Mr Eschwege, Mr Harrison and Mr Morrison -- I apologise if I've left anyone out -- all appear for Mr Abramovich, the defendant. Of course, also before your Ladyship in relation to this hearing are Mr Ali Malek QC and Ms Tolaney QC and Ms Jeavons for Mr Anisimov, Mr Adkin and Mr Pringle for the family defendants and Mr Mumford for the Salford defendants.

Your Ladyship is of course aware that the claim by Mr Berezovsky against Mr Abramovich falls into two separate but overlapping parts. There is first the Sibneft claim, by which Mr Berezovsky seeks damages from Mr Abramovich totalling in excess of $5 billion; and secondly there is the Rusal claim, by which Mr Berezovsky seeks damages on account of profits from Mr Abramovich totalling at least $564 million.

As your Ladyship will no doubt have observed from the very long written opening documents, those claims, both the Sibneft and the Rusal claims, have given rise to an enormous number of issues, both issues of fact and issues of law. At bottom, however, my Lady, this is a case about two men who -- and this is common ground -- worked together to acquire an asset -- that is Sibneft -- that would make them wealthy beyond the wildest dreams of most people and who in the process, we say, became and remained good friends; until, that is, Mr Berezovsky, who had adopted a high political profile in Russia, not least through his control of certain media outlets, fell out with those in power in the Kremlin and was forced to leave his home and create a new life abroad, leaving Mr Abramovich in a position where he was in effect required to make a choice: to remain loyal to Mr Berezovsky, his friend and mentor and the person to whom he owed his newly acquired great fortune, or instead, as we submit, to betray Mr Berezovsky and to seek to profit from his difficulties.

As your Ladyship knows, it is our case that Mr Abramovich at that point demonstrated that he was a man to whom wealth and influence mattered more than friendship and loyalty and this has led him, finally, to go so far as to even deny, as he does before your Ladyship, that he and Mr Berezovsky were actually ever friends.

So one of the major issues your Ladyship will now have to resolve relates to the true nature of the relationship between Mr Berezovsky and Mr Abramovich. Were they in fact friends and partners, as Mr Berezovsky contends? Or was the relationship between them altogether much more sinister, as Mr Abramovich, I think for the first time in the context of this litigation, has sought to suggest? Namely, according to Mr Abramovich, that it was a relationship in which Mr Abramovich, of his own volition and as a result of his offering and agreeing to pay vast sums of money, in effect hired Mr Berezovsky, at the time a very substantial figure on the Russian stage, simply to provide Mr Abramovich with services that were basically criminal in nature, involving both corrupt political patronage and unlawful physical protection from Chechen criminal gangs or, to use the Russian word, "Krysha", a roof.

We submit that the answer to this question is obvious, but your Ladyship will of course be able to make up your mind about this once you've seen both men give evidence and heard all of their evidence being tested by cross-examination. As your Ladyship knows, Mr Berezovsky is to be the first witness in this trial. Mr Abramovich too, we have been told, will be coming to give evidence, although that is unlikely to be before November.

What I propose to do now, in what your Ladyship has asked should be relatively short openings, is first to say a little bit more about the general legal framework in which each of the two claims arise so that your Ladyship will have this firmly in mind when you come to hear the evidence; and secondly to identify for your Ladyship some of the more important documents that are likely to be central to the issues that your Ladyship is going to have to determine.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just at that juncture,

Mr Rabinowitz -- this is something I mentioned at the technical rehearsal on Thursday -- am I going to have an agreed list of headline issues?

MR RABINOWITZ: Indeed your Ladyship will have that. That is in the process of being agreed and I hope that certainly by the end of openings your Ladyship will have that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: That's fine.

MR RABINOWITZ: Your Ladyship will also have an agreed chronology which again the parties are currently working on agreeing.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Fine, very well.

MR RABINOWITZ: Can I therefore turn first to the Sibneft claim and that is the intimidation claim.

As your Ladyship will by now be well aware, Mr Berezovsky's case in relation to Sibneft is that Mr Abramovich intimidated him into selling his very substantial interest in Sibneft to Mr Abramovich himself at a very substantial undervalue and that he did so in effect by making threats to Mr Berezovsky and his partner, Mr Patarkatsishvili, the threats being first that unless Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili sold those interests to him, he, Mr Abramovich, would take steps with a view to the interest being effectively removed from them by those in the Kremlin, led by President Putin, who had come to regard Mr Berezovsky as his enemy; and secondly, that again unless they sold those interests to him, Mr Abramovich, at a price he was willing to pay, he, Mr Abramovich, would take steps with a view to preventing the release from custody of Mr Berezovsky's close friend Mr Glushkov, a man who, so Mr Berezovsky considered, was only in prison in the first place in order to place pressure on Mr Berezovsky to give up his interests in ORT, the television channel that had provided unfavourable coverage about President Putin and his policy.

In making these threats, Mr Abramovich was obviously, we submit, also threatening to breach the terms of what we submit was his partnership with Mr Berezovsky. As your Ladyship will know, Mr Berezovsky contends that as a result of this intimidation, he and his partner, Mr Patarkatsishvili, were pressured into selling their Sibneft interest to Mr Abramovich for very substantially less than they were worth and that they did so by way of the Devonia Agreement.

So far as concerns the elements of the tort of two-party intimidation that Mr Berezovsky would have to establish, as regards English law those elements are perhaps most clearly set out -- and I'm not asking your Ladyship to turn this up now -- in a Court of Appeal decision in this case in the context of the strike-out application that Mr Abramovich pursued and lost. That case is reported at [2011] EWCA Civ 153.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I've read that.

MR RABINOWITZ: Can I just identify the four elements of two-party intimidation that Lord Justice Longmore set out.

First, that there should be a threat by the defendant -- in this case obviously Mr Abramovich -- to do something unlawful or something which is illegitimate to threaten. It is not enough that there is a warning given; there must be a threat.

Secondly, that the threat must be intended by the person making the threat -- in this case again Mr Abramovich -- to coerce the claimant -- in this case obviously Mr Berezovsky -- to take or refrain from taking some course of action.

Third, that the threat must in fact coerce the claimant to take such action.

And fourth, that as a result of this conduct the claimant must suffer loss and damage.

My Lady, the parties are, I believe, broadly agreed about the requirements of English law in this regard. Indeed the only element of the tort about which, as I understand it, there may be some dispute between the parties relates to the first of the elements I've identified, that is to say whether the threat must be to do something unlawful or whether it is enough that the threat is to do something which it is illegitimate to threaten, as in the law of duress or indeed the crime of blackmail. But since, as we submit, the threats made here were in fact on any basis, we allege, unlawful, that is unlikely to be a point that will detain your Ladyship very long.

Those are the elements of the tort and needless to say of course Mr Abramovich disputes that any of these elements are satisfied on the facts of the case. But as your Ladyship will have picked up, the legal framework for this claim has of course become more complicated as a result of the fact that, as your Ladyship will recall, earlier this year Mr Abramovich withdrew his acceptance that English law is the law that governs the claim, so that one of the issues that you will have to now consider in the context of the Sibneft claim is the question of the proper law of the claim.

There are three possible candidates for the proper law, namely first that the intimidation claim is to be governed by English law; secondly that the intimidation claim is to be governed by French law; and third that the intimidation claim is to be governed by Russian law. So far as concerns your Ladyship, however, your Ladyship need not be concerned about any differences between English law and French law, the parties having agreed that for present purposes they are to be treated as the same, the only difference being that French law does not have a limitation period that would be even arguably applicable here.

Of course, if your Ladyship --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: That is agreed, is it?

MR RABINOWITZ: It is certainly agreed -- I believe it's agreed, yes. I see Ms Davies is nodding so that appears to be agreed.

If your Ladyship concludes that in fact the applicable law is Russian law, then you will need to come to terms with the Russian law on this issue, although it appears that the experts for the parties, Dr Rachkov for Mr Berezovsky and Mr Rozenberg for Mr Abramovich, broadly agree that if Mr Abramovich did what Mr Berezovsky has said he did, then this would constitute a tort in Russian law as well. Indeed, as your Ladyship will see in due course, once one cuts through issues that are minor or theoretical, the only dispute between the experts so far as Russian law is concerned -- the only dispute of real substance, that is -- is a dispute about the application of the limitation provisions as they exist under Russian law.

So far as the proper law issue is concerned, as your Ladyship will have seen from the written openings, it is Mr Berezovsky's case that the proper law applicable to the Sibneft claim should be either English or French. Mr Abramovich, by contrast, contends that the proper law should be Russian law. In due course that is a dispute that your Ladyship will need to resolve.

So that, in very brief and general outline, is the legal framework in which the Sibneft claim arises. Given that, in our submission, most of the differences between the parties about the law are unlikely to be determinative of this claim, I am not proposing at this stage to say much about the law.

My Lady, the Sibneft claim, in our submission, is very likely to turn on the facts. Whilst there are a number of factual issues that arise and that matter, there are, I submit, two central factual issues that lie at the heart of the Sibneft claim. They are these: first, the 1995 agreement.

As your Ladyship knows, it is common ground now between the parties that there was indeed an agreement made in 1995 between Mr Berezovsky, Mr Abramovich and Mr Patarkatsishvili relating to the creation and in some form or other the acquisition of Sibneft. The dispute between the parties relates to what it was that was agreed.

Mr Berezovsky of course says that what the parties agreed was that the three men, Mr Berezovsky, Mr Abramovich and Mr Patarkatsishvili, would work together towards the creation and acquisition of Sibneft and that they would be partners in this enterprise with Mr Abramovich being entitled to a 50 per cent share in the ownership of Sibneft when created and acquired, as per the plan, while Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili would together also be entitled to 50 per cent.

Mr Abramovich, however, whilst he acknowledges first that there was an agreement made in 1995 relating to Sibneft and secondly that without Mr Berezovsky's assistance he could never ever have obtained Sibneft, indeed it would never even have been created, nonetheless contends that the agreement made between these three men was not that they would act together as partners in this way but rather that their collective efforts would be directed towards ensuring that he and he alone was to acquire ownership of this incredibly valuable entity whilst they, in return for their efforts towards ensuring that he and he alone acquired Sibneft, would in effect simply be rewarded from time to time with unspecified payments made by Mr Abramovich, although we submit it is what revealing that Mr Abramovich's case as to precisely what he says this money was to be paid for has changed from time to time as this case has progressed.

That is the first key factual issue: what was it that was agreed in 1995 and, more particularly, did Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili ever in fact acquire an interest in Sibneft at all?

The second key issue of course relates to whether or not Mr Abramovich was guilty of intimidating Mr Berezovsky by, in the period leading up to April 2001, making the threats alleged by Mr Berezovsky. I ought, I think, just to say something about this issue, this second issue, the intimidation issue.

The first point to make about this issue, my Lady, is that whilst there is little in the way of contemporaneous material that provides direct confirmation of intimidation, that I would submit is not terribly surprising. Blackmailers will offer tend to favour oral threats as opposed to setting it all out in writing.

The second point to make -- and this flows from the first -- is that given, as one would anticipate, the absence of written material evidencing the making of threats here, one is therefore driven back in seeking to resolve this issue first to an evaluation of the evidence of both parties, the person who says he is threatened as well as the person who denies being guilty of blackmail; and secondly to what one might call the inherent probabilities of this matter, which, as your Ladyship will recall, was one of the factors stressed by Lord Goff in the Grace Shipping authority as being likely to help the judge to get to the bottom and to the truth.

Can I just make a few short observations in relation to this question of inherent probabilities and how your Ladyship is likely to be assisted by this in the context of the intimidation issue.

Your Ladyship will recall that the following matters are all common ground in relation to this issue: first, that at the end of 2000 the parties -- that is to say Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili on the one hand and Mr Abramovich on the other -- concluded a transaction whereby Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili sold their interests in ORT to Mr Abramovich. Your Ladyship is aware that the divestment of ORT from Mr Berezovsky's control and influence was, says Mr Berezovsky, something very keenly sought by the Russian government itself, Mr Berezovsky's control of this really being at the core of his dispute with Mr Putin.

Secondly, it is also common ground that following the ORT sale there was a further agreement of some kind made between the parties in 2001.

It is thirdly also common ground that as a result of that agreement made between the parties in 2001, Mr Abramovich agreed to pay and did pay Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili a sum of $1.3 billion for something at least.

Fourthly, it is also common ground that following these events starting with the ORT sale and culminating in the agreement made between the parties and the payment to Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Berezovsky of the $1.3 billion, Mr Abramovich and Mr Berezovsky ceased entirely to be friends at all. So that, I would suggest, one might surmise again that something happened between the parties during this time to mean that Mr Berezovsky was unwilling thereafter to have anything whatever to do with Mr Abramovich.

Of course, that falling out -- and there is no dispute that there has been such a falling out -- occurred notwithstanding that on Mr Abramovich's case, his taking the ORT shares off Mr Berezovsky's hands and his payment for them of a sum of over $150 million involved him doing a very big favour for Mr Berezovsky. Indeed, his willingness to pay Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili the sum of $1.3 billion for, on Mr Abramovich's case, no interest in anything at all, it simply being in the nature of a goodwill payment, was an even bigger favour.

My Lady, we submit that against the backdrop of these areas of common ground, there are four points in particular that we would emphasise that your Ladyship will need to bear in mind when considering the inherent probabilities of each side's case.

First, your Ladyship will wish to consider whether Mr Berezovsky's case can in fact be squared with the sudden and dramatic end of his friendship with Mr Berezovsky, his old mentor, following the events that I've described, all of which are common ground.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Sorry, I'm not following you here, you said first that I would wish to consider whether Mr Berezovsky's case --

MR RABINOWITZ: Sorry, I meant to say Mr Abramovich's case, my apologies.

Your Ladyship will wish to consider whether

Mr Abramovich's case can in fact be squared with the sudden and dramatic end of his friendship with Mr Berezovsky, his old mentor, following the events which I've described, all of which are common ground.

If Mr Abramovich is to be believed that he was being generous in both taking the loss-making ORT off of Mr Berezovsky's hands and later agreeing to a substantial pay-out of $1.3 billion to Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili, one would expect that Mr Berezovsky would have been eternally grateful to Mr Abramovich. But instead, one finds exactly the opposite: one finds the friendship coming to a bitter and conclusive end. On Mr Abramovich's case we submit that there is no real explanation for this at all.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Give me the date for the falling-out.

MR RABINOWITZ: It starts in December 2000, my Lady. There is a dispute between the parties as to whether they ever saw each other again, as your Ladyship knows.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: We submit on Mr Abramovich's case there is no explanation for this at all. On Mr Berezovsky's case there is: it was because he was betrayed and because he was blackmailed by someone who had been his friend and partner.

Secondly, if Mr Abramovich can be shown, as we say he will be, to have put forward a false case as regards the ownership interests in Sibneft and Rusal, then the question for your Ladyship will of course be: if Mr Abramovich had nothing to hide in terms of the allegations made, then why would he, Mr Abramovich, have chosen not to be open and honest about these matters? Why would he put forward what we will be submitting is a dishonest case unless, of course, he had something also to hide on intimidation?

Third, and again just looking at the inherent probabilities, Mr Abramovich's case is, we would submit, difficult to square with the sale of Sibneft at what we and our experts will say was a massive undervalue. Mr Berezovsky's case is, of course, not. Just so your Ladyship has this, we submit that at the time of the sale of Mr Berezovsky's interests in Sibneft, his interests were worth at the very least $2.9 billion and as much as $6.6 billion.

If your Ladyship therefore concludes, having heard the expert valuation evidence, that Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili did not receive anything approaching the full value for their ownership interests in Sibneft, then I would submit, in the absence of any evidence that Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili were being very generous to their former friend and were seeking to confer very substantial benefit on him -- and I can tell your Ladyship that there is no such evidence nor even any such suggestion by Mr Abramovich -- then that in our submission is again a very powerful indicator of the presence of coercion.

Fourth and finally on the inherent probabilities, your Ladyship will, in the course of the trial, get to hear a lot of evidence about the ORT intimidation, including, as your Ladyship will have picked up from the written openings, whether or not there was a meeting in Cap d'Antibes in December 2000. As your Ladyship may be aware, Mr Abramovich has gone to great lengths to try to establish a convincing alibi for his movements in December 2000. We are getting new witness statements almost every second day on this.

But if, as we say it will be, Mr Abramovich's case that the Cap d'Antibes meeting did not take place in December 2000 can in due course, once we have heard from Mr Abramovich, be exposed as false, and if as a result your Ladyship concluded that, contrary to what Mr Abramovich would have you believe, the Cap d'Antibes meeting did indeed take place, then I would submit that this too gives rise to a very strong inference that Mr Abramovich's claim that he in no way intimidated Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili into surrendering their interests in Sibneft to him at a gross undervalue is also unlikely to be true.

These are of course all matters we will need to pursue with Mr Abramovich when he comes to give evidence in due course. I am not sure that there is much I want to or can say about them now.

Can I then next turn just to say something briefly about the Rusal claim.

As your Ladyship knows, the core of the Rusal claim depends very substantially on whether the interests that Mr Abramovich acquired in the Russian aluminium industry in 2000 were, as he says, acquired solely for himself with no partners of any kind whatsoever, that being his case, or whether, as Mr Berezovsky says, here too those assets were acquired by these three men, Mr Abramovich, Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili, acting together.

As you know, it is Mr Berezovsky's case that when these assets were originally sold, that is in early 2000, by, among others, the Trans-World Group and Mr Anisimov, they were acquired jointly by and for Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Abramovich.

When, in March 2000, it was agreed that these assets would be combined with assets held by Mr Deripaska's group, leading ultimately in December 2000 to the creation of Rusal, Russian Aluminium, it is again

Mr Berezovsky's case that the assets which were part-owned by Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili were only permitted to be used in this way on the basis of an agreement by Mr Abramovich that he would hold half of the shares allocated in consideration of those assets being contributed to form this combined company, that is to say 50 per cent of Rusal, on behalf of and on trust for his partners, Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili, it being agreed by Mr Abramovich, as would in any event be expected from such an arrangement, that he would not sell any part of the Rusal shares to be allocated in respect of the contribution of those assets without first getting the agreement of Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili, who might otherwise be left holding only an unprotected minority within Rusal, much to the detriment of the value of those shares.

As your Ladyship knows, the claim in relation to Rusal arises because in September 2003, in what Mr Berezovsky contends was a total disregard of the promise that he had made, Mr Abramovich sold 25 per cent -- that is half of the 50 per cent Rusal holding that was in his name or the names of his holding companies -- to Mr Deripaska for some $1.578 billion, Mr Abramovich netting that sum being common ground in this case.

It is also common ground that in carrying out that sale, Mr Abramovich failed even to tell Mr Berezovsky or Mr Patarkatsishvili that this is what he was proposing to do; he simply sold those shares without reference to them.

What is also common ground in relation to this claim -- indeed this cannot be disputed -- is that the consequence of Mr Abramovich's actions in this regard was to leave the remaining 25 per cent holding in Rusal as a minority stake, with Mr Deripaska's group holding the remaining 75 per cent, so that when an attempt was made in July 2004 to dispose of this remaining 25 per cent to Mr Deripaska, he was willing only to pay some $450 million for that stake; that is to say less even than a third of what Mr Abramovich had taken for himself.

The net effect of Mr Abramovich's disregard, we submit, of his fiduciary and contractual duties owed to Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili is, therefore, to have caused them very substantial loss. So this claim is brought, as your Ladyship knows, as a claim for breach of trust and breach of fiduciary duty and breach of contract.

As your Ladyship will have seen in relation to Rusal, also there is a major dispute as to the proper law that should govern that claim. Mr Berezovsky's case is that the proper law governing both the breach of trust and fiduciary duty claims and also the breach of contract claim is English law. As your Ladyship will also have seen, Mr Abramovich disputes this and contends that the Rusal arrangements, if in fact they existed, would be governed by Russian law.

As your Ladyship again will appreciate, the issue as to the proper law governing the Rusal claim is an important one because if Mr Berezovsky accepts that Russian law were to be the proper law governing the Rusal arrangements, then the Rusal claim would be bound to fail because it is accepted by Mr Berezovsky that Russian law does not recognise the concept of a trust.

Again, so that in outline is the shape of the Rusal claim. Whilst of course there are again a number of issues that your Ladyship will need to consider, we submit that hereto your Ladyship's conclusion on this claim will largely depend on your Ladyship's finding in relation to two key factual issues, namely first, who were the individuals who acquired the aluminium assets from the Reuben brothers, Mr Chernoi, Mr Bosov and Mr Anisimov in early 2000? Was it just Mr Abramovich all by himself, as he is contending, or were Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili his partners in that acquisition? In our submission, my Lady, the evidence very strongly points here to Mr Abramovich not being the sole acquirer of those assets in early 2000.

The second key factual issue that arises in relation to Rusal is this: who were the parties with an interest in those assets when they came in December 2000, and in accordance with the agreements made in March 2000, to be combined with the aluminium interests of Mr Deripaska to form Rusal? And what, if anything, was agreed by the parties at the meeting at the Dorchester Hotel in London on 13 March 2000?

My Lady, subject of course to the issue of the proper law of the claim, an issue that is itself very likely to be one determined by your views as to which of Mr Abramovich or Mr Berezovsky is telling the truth about these matters, if your Ladyship is with Mr Berezovsky on these two key factual issues, then I would submit it is very likely that your Ladyship will decide the Rusal claim in favour of Mr Berezovsky.

I say that because of course, as I've already indicated, there can be and is no dispute that in fact Mr Abramovich, acting unilaterally and without regard to any interests of Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili, did sell his shares to Mr Deripaska in September 2000 for close to $1.6 billion. So that if there were a trust arrangement in respect of these interests or a fiduciary relationship or a contractual agreement that Mr Abramovich would not sell without first obtaining the consent of his partners, then Mr Abramovich would have to accept that he acted in contravention of his obligations under the Rusal arrangements.

There can moreover also be no serious dispute that this left the remaining and unsold 25 per cent, which by virtue of his conduct of Mr Abramovich had turned into a minority holding, having a very substantially lower value. Therefore there can also really be no dispute that Mr Abramovich's conduct will have caused Mr Berezovsky to suffer very substantial loss and damage.

So that again in outline is the Rusal claim.

My Lady, having identified obviously in very summary terms what we would submit are the key factual issues, indeed probably the key issues in this case, I was proposing next to show your Ladyship some of the documentary evidence that is likely to assist your Ladyship in resolving these and other issues.

As will be obvious to your Ladyship, I plainly don't have the time to show your Ladyship all the documents that are going to be material but what I would submit would be helpful at this stage is to show your Ladyship a small selection of documents that in our respectful submission are of particular significance because in a case rather lacking in contemporaneous documents, there are nonetheless certain documents that stand out like a beacon because, more than most, they do give one an insight into the contemporaneous views of the parties as to what was actually going on. They are in the main also documents that your Ladyship is unlikely to be taken to for a very long time, until at least we get to hear from Mr Abramovich.

I ought also just to say this about the documents: that is that inevitably, given the way these issues arise as well as the time when the material events occurred, your Ladyship will find there is more material that may assist your Ladyship in relation to the Rusal claim than there is in relation to the Sibneft claim -- again, as I submit, that is not surprising given the very different nature of the two claims -- although, as your Ladyship will see, even in relation to the Sibneft claims there are some very important documents that your Ladyship does have to guide your Ladyship.

I know it's not yet but I don't know what time your Ladyship wants to break?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I will break about 11.45 I think, or maybe a bit earlier. If you get to a break, let me know.

MR RABINOWITZ: Can I just ask your Ladyship before we launch into the documents: is your Ladyship using the electronic documents?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I hope to be because, as you see, all I asked for and all I have are the written openings, the witness statements and the pleadings in hard copy.

MR RABINOWITZ: Right. Perhaps we can see how that goes and if we need to change courses then --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. I would rather deal with it electronically because that's how I work, but if it's going to take too long then obviously I'll switch to hard copy.

MR RABINOWITZ: Can I then just begin by taking your Ladyship to some Rusal-related documents.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just for the purposes of my note, I like to annotate the hard copy of the skeleton arguments where possible. Should I be looking therefore at the first section of your skeleton written openings where you're dealing with Rusal, like section G?

MR RABINOWITZ: Section G, page 219.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: If the documents are there then it's quite nice for me to highlight them there, as it were, rather than making a separate note.

MR RABINOWITZ: I'm afraid I won't be able to give you page references to the skeleton on each page.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: That doesn't matter.

MR RABINOWITZ: Can I therefore ask your Ladyship please to go first to the document that your Ladyship will have -- I think all the references, unless I say otherwise, will be in the H(A) bundles. So H(A), bundle 17, page 33, please H(A)17/33. Your Ladyship should have there --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: H(A)17, page 33?

MR RABINOWITZ: That's right. Your Ladyship should have there, when it comes on to your screen, a document in English headed:

"Agreement.

"Moscow, 10 February 2000."

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, thank you.

It's taking too long to load.

MR RABINOWITZ: I have put together a bundle of the documents that I'm likely to refer to, which I can hand to your Ladyship. It's a composite.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Let me just try once more.

Mr Fleming, I'm going to need your help. Just bear with me, Mr Rabinowitz. (Pause)

MR RABINOWITZ: My Lady, I wonder if this would be a good moment to take a break. We could take the transcript writers' break now. That will give people ten minutes to --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, okay, to see whether it's a real difficulty or just a local difficulty. I'll take ten minutes.

(11.18 am)

(A short break)

(11.35 am)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I'm having more discussions at the luncheon break about seating for members of the press and the public, but in the meantime I'm afraid you'll have to stand.

Yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: Does your Ladyship now have on a screen H(A)17, page 33? If your Ladyship finds that this isn't working the way your Ladyship would like it to, as I say, I have produced a composite file containing the documents that I'm likely to be taking your Ladyship to today.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, okay. I think it is working now but what I'll do is pass me up the hard copy and maybe it's just me who needs some more training.

MR RABINOWITZ: I have some for my learned friends as well.

(Handed)

Your Ladyship should find this document at tab 2.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I have it.

MR RABINOWITZ: They all, as your Ladyship can see, have the bundle references at the bottom of the page. I will continue to give the bundle references for those who do choose to follow electronically.

At tab 2, as I said earlier, this is an English translation of a Russian language agreement. For those who would like the reference to it, that's at H(A)17, page 38, the Russian language. It's an agreement dated 10 February 2000 by which the aluminium assets were originally sold by Trans-World and the other sellers to -- and I will put this neutrally -- the Abramovich interests.

Can I invite your Ladyship to look at the following provisions. First, the definition of the parties, top line:

"Roman Abramovich, Evgeniy Shvidler, Badri Patarkatsishvili and companies represented by them (hereinafter, 'Party 1') ..."

Your Ladyship sees who parties 2 to 5 are.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: Just so that your Ladyship has this, the "companies represented by them" is a reference to the four offshore companies through which the aluminium assets were to be acquired. We're going to see the names frequently: Runicom Fort Limited, Palmtex SA, Galinton Associated Limited and Dilcor International Limited.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: Those companies, your Ladyship, were bearer share companies and the ownership is, of course, a matter of dispute in these proceedings. That's a matter which I'll come back to in a moment, if I may.

That is who we are told the parties are, or at least, as your Ladyship sees, party 1 to the agreement by which the aluminium interests were acquired.

Can I next ask your Ladyship just to glance at clauses 1 to 3 of this agreement, which, as your Ladyship will see, explain first what the assets are that are being acquired and secondly what part of those assets or shares are owned by each of parties 2 to 5, who, as your Ladyship sees, were the sellers.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: As I say, one need only glance at that for present purposes.

Then clauses 4 and 5 are important. Clause 4:

"Party 1 shall acquire from Parties 2 and 3 all their shares and interests in business of BRAZ for 300 conditional units (150 [conditional units] to Party 2 and 150 [conditional units] for Party 3)."

Your Ladyship may wish to note at that stage, a conditional unit, if your Ladyship goes to H(A)17, page 36 H(A)17/36, clause 20 tells us that:

"... 1 [conditional unit] under this Agreement shall be equal to 1,000,000 (one million) US dollars."

So where you have a clause which says 300 conditional units, that's $300 million.

Then clause 5:

"Party 1 shall acquire from Parties 2, 3, 4 and 5 all their shares and interests in business of KrAZ and other Siberian Complex industries for [$250 million] ([$125 million] to Parties 2, 3, 4; and [$125 million] to Party 5)."

If I can ask your Ladyship next to go to clause 9 on page 34 H(A)17/34, the following page, your Ladyship sees clause 9:

"Title to the shares defined in para 1 of this Agreement shall be transferred from Parties 2-5 to Party 1 within 3 business days after Party 1 effects the first payment under para 6 of this Agreement subject to the account of Party 1 in depositary and registry being open."

Then, again, just glancing back at who party 1 is said to be, as your Ladyship sees, this is not confined to Mr Abramovich at all but also includes Mr Patarkatsishvili, who, as your Ladyship will see from a great deal of evidence in this case, plainly considered that he was acting also or representing Mr Berezovsky. Party 1 also includes, as your Ladyship saw, the four offshore companies, Runicom Fort, Dilcor, Galinton --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: -- into whose name the acquisition was made.

As I've already noted, the beneficial ownership of those companies is in dispute. But what is perhaps interesting, as I shall show your Ladyship, is that in other documents that your Ladyship will see, these companies are from time to time identified as belonging to Sibneft or the Sibneft shareholders. That, as your Ladyship will see, is a matter of some significance.

In any event, just pausing here, if one takes this contract at face value and if one takes the view that the people writing the agreement understood and meant what they said, this would suggest that Mr Abramovich's case that he and he alone was the purchaser of the aluminium assets from these parties is very unlikely to be correct.

This fact, my Lady, that this acquisition was not one made by Mr Abramovich alone, is not just something that is suggested on the face of this contract; it is, as you will hear in due course, also what was thought by the counterparties to the contract, a number of whom are going to come to court and say that they understood that they were selling to a group of which Mr Berezovsky was part.

It is also clear from the press reporting at that time, the reference in the press reporting of this acquisition being consistently to the acquisition having been made by the Sibneft shareholders, and more specifically by Mr Berezovsky and Mr Abramovich.

I don't propose to take your Ladyship to those now but can I perhaps give your Ladyship two or three references to that. There is a Financial Times report of 12 February which is at H(A)18, page 12 H(A)18/12; there is a BBC report of 12 February 2000 at H(A)18, page 13 H(A)18/13; and there is a Moscow Times report of the same date --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: These are all referred to in your skeleton?

MR RABINOWITZ: They are.

But again, my Lady, the matter obviously doesn't stop there because the February 2000 agreement is by no means the only contract made at this time that suggests that Mr Abramovich's case that he and he alone acquired the aluminium assets is very unlikely to be correct.

Can I next ask your Ladyship please to go to the next substantive contract that was made in relation to these aluminium assets and that is the document that your Ladyship will find in -- I'm going to give a bundle reference first -- H(A)16, page 47T H(A)16/47T. The Russian language version is at H(A)16, page 47 H(A)16/47T. Your Ladyship will find that in this opening bundle I have handed up at tab 1.

Your Ladyship should have there a document headed "Preliminary Agreement".

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I do.

MR RABINOWITZ: This, for your Ladyship's note, it doesn't seem to carry a date but it's an agreement that was made in early March 2000. As your Ladyship may recall from the written opening, this agreement titled "Preliminary Agreement" is the agreement that ultimately led to the formation of Rusal. It led to the formation of Rusal by combining the aluminium assets acquired from the Trans-World Group and Mr Anisimov and others in February 2000, as a result of the agreement I've just shown your Ladyship -- that's the 10 February agreement -- together with aluminium assets that were held by Mr Deripaska's group.

If I can just show your Ladyship the preliminary agreement. Your Ladyship sees from the top of this agreement Mr Abramovich alone is identified as party 1 and Mr Deripaska alone is identified as party 2. Then clause 1 identifies the aluminium assets that are to be the subject of this agreement.

If your Ladyship glances at clause 2.1, dealing with party 1, that's the Abramovich interests, they are set out, the aluminium interests said to be held by party 1 and these correspond to the aluminium interests acquired under the February agreement that we've seen made by the Sibneft shareholders, if I can put it that way.

Can I next ask your Ladyship to go to clause 4 on page 48T H(A)16/48T:

"The parties agree that in addition to the standard terms the Agreement shall by all means include the following terms ..."

Just pausing there. What this agreement is about, my Lady, is an agreement between these people that they will enter into an agreement for the purposes of combining their assets and in due course forming Rusal. This isn't, if you like, the merger agreement itself; it's a preliminary agreement which was intended to lead to the merger agreement.

Then just going back to clause 4:

"The parties agree that in addition to the standard terms the Agreement..."

And that's the agreement that they're intending to enter into:

"... shall by all means include the following terms..."

Just glancing at 4.1:

"Parties 1 and 2 warrant that, together with their partners (not including TWG or any companies and/or individuals related thereto or affiliated therewith), they own the assets and that the stated assets have not been pledged as security for the obligations of Parties 1 and 2 and are not subject to any third party rights, disputes or attachments."

This on its face, my Lady, I would suggest would appear to be a warranty both by party 1, Mr Abramovich, and by party 2, Mr Deripaska, that each of them own the relevant assets together with their partners. Of course, if, as Mr Abramovich now contends, he in fact didn't have any partners at all with whom he owned these assets, this would be a very odd warranty to be given; indeed I would submit it would be a misleading warranty.

Can I ask your Ladyship next to look at clause 4.2:

"Party 1 warrants its and its partners' concerted will to sign the Agreement on the terms determined herein, and shall be fully liable to Party 2 for any action (omission) by its partners associated with the performance hereof."

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: Again, your Ladyship sees a warranty has been given by Mr Abramovich not only for himself but also in respect of his partners. As your Ladyship will note, this makes clear that the understanding of the contracting parties here was that Mr Abramovich had more than one partner who was agreeing to merge these aluminium interests. Indeed, as you see, he is in fact offering an indemnity in relation to their concerted will and as regards their actions and omissions with regard to entering into the agreement.

Again, my Lady, if Mr Abramovich, as he would have you believe, did not have any partners at all, this again is a rather bizarre provision for him to be agreeing to because obviously if he had no partners, what on earth would he be doing giving a warranty about his partners' concerted will? This would just be nonsense.

Of course the document does make sense if, as Mr Berezovsky has said, he and Mr Patarkatsishvili were partners with Mr Abramovich in the acquisition of the aluminium assets. Mr Abramovich was of course warranting that they would consent to the merger and offering indemnities for them.

Of course this would also help explain the Dorchester meeting, which took place around eight or nine days later, as a meeting of the principals: that is to say when all the partners on Mr Abramovich's side were present, so that Mr Abramovich could show that his partners really did consent to the merger arrangements which formed the subject matter of the preliminary agreement.

In other words, my Lady, just as with the earlier agreement, if one is to allow for the possibility that the parties wrote down what they believed to be the true position, if one just allows for that possibility, this fatally undermines Mr Abramovich's case that he had no partners and is strongly supportive of Mr Berezovsky's case that Mr Abramovich did indeed have partners.

Can I, before leaving this document, make two further points about it. Can I first ask your Ladyship to go to clause 14 of this contract, page 49T

H(A)16/49T:

"The Parties agree that the Agreement shall be governed by English law. Any dispute or disagreement arising out of the Agreement which cannot be resolved by negotiation shall be referred to the Court of Arbitration of the UK Chamber of Commerce and Industry, London, for resolution in accordance with the rules of this court of arbitration. A dispute or disagreement may be referred to this court by the Party concerned upon the expiration of thirty days from the date on which a claim notice was given to the other Party."

As is clear from this, one has here an agreement -- and just standing back, one needs to think about what this agreement is about. It's made entirely between Russian businessmen, that is to say Mr Abramovich, Mr Shvidler, Mr Deripaska and Mr Bulygin. We are told that they are the people who were present when this was made; all Russian businessmen. Apparently, we are told, agreed between them whilst they're all together in Russia. As I've said to your Ladyship and as would perhaps be obvious, it was made in the Russian language; this is of course a translation we're looking at. And it was to deal with Russian aluminium assets.

Despite all of that, the parties chose to include an express provision that the arrangements they were going to make between themselves in relation to these Russian assets should be dealt with not under Russian law but under English law.

Can I just make this point. Your Ladyship will see they agree that the agreement shall be governed by English law. In other words, it's not this agreement that is to be governed by English law; it's the arrangements to be entered into in relation to Rusal.

Perhaps, if I ask your Ladyship just to go back to clause 2 on page 47T, your Ladyship can see why I say that:

"This Preliminary Agreement is executed in connection with the Parties' intent to conclude an Agreement in respect of the Parties' title to the following assets..."

So this is looking forward to the agreement that is to be made and in looking forward to the agreement that is to be made, these Russian businessmen in Russia dealing with Russian assets say that the arrangements must be dealt with in accordance with English law. That makes it perhaps a slightly unusual provision because it is looking forward to an agreement that is to be made and saying that in that contract there should be an English law provision. It's not simply a cut-and-paste job.

Now, as your Ladyship will immediately appreciate, this is a matter of some significance in relation to the proper law issue that arises in the context of the Rusal claim. Your Ladyship will have in mind Mr Berezovsky's case in this regard.

Mr Berezovsky contends that the parties to the Rusal arrangements which are the subject of his claim all agreed that their merger arrangements when subsequently drawn up should also be governed by English law. It has been suggested, and certainly was in the context of the strike-out application, that that evidence was fanciful and that Russian businessmen dealing with Russian assets would simply not contemplate either being concerned about such things, still less agreeing that those arrangements should be governed by English law.

The relevance of this document, my Lady, is that it entirely belies that argument because here one has clear contemporaneous evidence in relation to Rusal which demonstrates the exact opposite. It shows that by March 2000 Russian businessmen did indeed concern themselves with such things and indeed that these businessmen, despite the fact that the assets were in Russia, that they were Russian and they were making an agreement in the Russian language, felt sufficiently strongly about not wanting Russian law to apply to the arrangements that they were agreeing to put in place and sufficiently strongly that English law should apply that they regarded it as appropriate to stipulate expressly in this preliminary agreement that this was the way it was to be: that is that the main agreement, when entered into, would contain a provision that ensured that the arrangements between them should be governed by English law.

Given this, my Lady, if anyone at the Dorchester

Hotel meeting -- which is obviously a critical meeting in the context of this dispute -- just a few days later, on 13 March 2000, had tried to summarise for Mr Berezovsky, for his benefit, what had been agreed in relation to the preliminary agreement, they would, I would suggest, given what they had taken the trouble expressly to agree in (inaudible), have said words to the effect -- indeed have been bound to use words to the effect -- that, "We have agreed that our merger relations will be governed by English law". That, as your Ladyship may recall, is precisely what Mr Berezovsky has consistently said he was told at the Dorchester meeting.

Just to be clear, my Lady, since this may be a material point here, Mr Berezovsky's case about the proper law having been expressly raised and agreed and that this was to be English law was not some recent invention of Mr Berezovsky produced after he had seen these documents. On the contrary, this is a case that Mr Berezovsky advanced well before Mr Abramovich eventually disclosed the preliminary agreement, with its bespoke choice of English law to govern the future merger contracts.

Just so your Ladyship has the chronology, the order of events here, as your Ladyship knows, Mr Abramovich pursued a strike-out application on the basis that Mr Berezovsky's case that the Rusal arrangements were governed by anything other than Russian law was hopeless. In response, Mr Berezovsky set out his case as to why the parties had expressly agreed that English law would govern their legal relations and only then did Mr Abramovich, in his reply evidence, disclose the preliminary agreement.

As I have suggested already, Mr Berezovsky's case about the agreement in respect of English proper law has from time to time been described by those acting for Mr Abramovich in terms suggesting that given the assets, given the parties, this is simply an incredible suggestion. But as this document shows, far from being incredible, this is precisely what these Russian businessmen dealing with these Russian business assets chose to do.

That's the first point I was going to make about this before moving on from the document. The second point is this.

Your Ladyship may wish to note that despite the countless witness statements that he has served and indeed continues to serve, Mr Abramovich himself has never been able to explain -- indeed has never begun to explain -- why, if he had no partners, he had signed an agreement that plainly proceeded on the basis that he did indeed have more than one partner; not in his original witness statement nor in his most recent witness statement, his sixth witness statement, served after receipt of our written opening, in which we had effectively challenged him to explain the reference to "partners" in this contract.

The only response to this point that it appears Mr Abramovich is able to make is to try and write off this contract and these words to some sort of drafting aberration on the part of Mr Bulygin, Mr Deripaska's associate who we are told held the pen in respect of the drafting of this agreement. Indeed, my Lady, Mr Bulygin has served a witness statement and he may or may not in fact turn up to give evidence before your Ladyship.

I say he may or may not actually turn up to give evidence before your Ladyship: there is a doubt about this because subsequent to our serving of our written opening we have been told that Mr Bulygin has a health issue which may prevent this. If he does turn up, one will then have the opportunity to ask Mr Bulygin questions about his evidence.

What I would say at this stage, my Lady, is just this: that it is very clear that Mr Bulygin's evidence does not even come close to providing, so far as

Mr Abramovich is concerned, a satisfactory answer to the question why, if, as he now claims, he indeed had no partners, he would have signed an agreement which appears to suggest precisely the opposite and in which he expressly agreed to warranties about the existence of such partners.

Again, one of the problems for Mr Abramovich is that the matter doesn't stop with this contract either. We have the first contract which suggests that Mr Patarkatsishvili is a party; we have this preliminary agreement which then talks about partners; and so it goes on.

Can I ask your Ladyship next to go to the document at H(A)18, page 124 H(A)18/124. It's I hope at tab 7 of the opening bundle that I've given your Ladyship. Your Ladyship should have a document headed "Share Purchase and Sale Agreement". As your Ladyship sees, this is an agreement made by Runicom Limited, that's an Abramovich company, and GSA (Cyprus) Limited, and that is a Deripaska company.

Can I ask your Ladyship first if you could turn to page -- well, on page 124 your Ladyship will notice the definition of "Companies". It means:

"... those companies more particularly described in Schedule 1 Part I."

Your Ladyship will find schedule 1 at page 138 H(A)18/138 and your Ladyship sees there listed the four companies that I mentioned earlier: Runicom Fort, et cetera.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: As I've mentioned, those were the vehicle companies through whom the shares in the aluminium assets were owned. They're "the Companies". There are a number of provisions dealing with them; I don't think I need to be concerned about that now.

Can I ask your Ladyship next to look at the definition of "Other Selling Shareholders", which your Ladyship will see at page 125 H(A)18/125:

"'Other Selling Shareholders' means those other persons who together with the Vendor are the legal and beneficial owners and holders of 100 per cent of the shares ... of the Companies at the Completion Date."

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: As to who these other selling shareholders are, my Lady, a question that arises is this: if, as Mr Abramovich contends, he and he alone had an interest in the acquisition of the aluminium assets that are the subject of this contract, then, one asks rhetorically, who are these other selling shareholders? Because in our submission the fact that this agreement is one made not just by Runicom Limited, Mr Abramovich's company, but also for and behalf of other selling shareholders is, we submit, yet a further major difficulty with Mr Abramovich's contention that he and he alone owned the aluminium assets and that he and he alone was to benefit from the injection of those assets into the company that became known as Rusal.

If one asks "Who were the other selling shareholders?" on Mr Berezovsky's case the answer to this is easy and it is the same answer as to the question "Who were the other partners of Mr Abramovich that were expressly referred to in the preliminary agreement?" The partners and the other selling shareholders were of course Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili. It was they who had the ownership interests in the four offshore companies and they who acquired the original aluminium assets one month earlier, acting as partners with Mr Abramovich.

But who on Mr Abramovich's case were these other selling shareholders? My Lady, we have quite literally no idea. He has again said nothing and offered no explanation at all, and this despite the point being very carefully flagged up and dealt with in our written opening. It appears, therefore, that your Ladyship is going to have to wait again until Mr Abramovich comes to give evidence in four weeks' time to find who, on his case, these other selling shareholders were.

Still on this agreement, can I ask your Ladyship next to go to clause 8.2 on page 134. Your Ladyship will recall that clause 14 in the preliminary agreement contained the agreement that the parties to the actual merger arrangements should be governed by English law and, as one would expect in light of that, one finds at clause 8.2 just such a provision.

Your Ladyship will know from what I have submitted a short while ago why we submit this is relevant and important in relation to the Rusal claim.

Now, there are a number of other agreements and materials relating to Rusal that give rise to similar points. Given the limited time I have in this oral opening, I only propose to dip into a few further selection of Rusal documents.

Can I next ask your Ladyship please to go to the document that we have in the bundle at H(A)18, page 221.001T H(A)18/221.001T; in this opening bundle at tab 8. I think at tab 8 your Ladyship may find something in Russian.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. After the blue page.

MR RABINOWITZ: After the blue page, indeed, your Ladyship has a translation.

As your Ladyship hopefully sees, this is a document headed "List of documents". I should explain immediately that it is not entirely clear who precisely produced either this document or the other documents associated with this document that I'm going to show your Ladyship. I can, however, tell your Ladyship that they've come from the family defendants' disclosure. Your Ladyship sees that if you go back to the Russian document: the bottom left-hand corner is where you get the indication of who this version has come from.

We are at the moment trying to locate the original file out of which these documents were produced and that may shed some light on who it was that prepared the document.

MR SUMPTION: We understood it was common ground that the list was produced by Mr Jenni, whose name indeed appears at the end of it.

MR RABINOWITZ: In fact I think it suggests exactly the opposite because it says:

"The documents listed in this index are received by me..."

And it's prepared for him to be signing to acknowledge that he has received it. So, with respect, that isn't common ground at all.

What we submit is fairly clear, in relation to this and the other documents I'm going to show your Ladyship, is that they were produced by a Russian speaker who was assisting Mr Patarkatsishvili at this time, possibly Mr Fomichev, possibly Mr Kay, and possibly someone from Mr Anisimov's camp, for example Mr Streshinsky.

We submit that what is also fairly clear is that these documents were produced for Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili sometime in March or April 2000; that is to say very shortly after the aluminium asset transactions to which I have taken your Ladyship, those contracts your Ladyship has seen.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: If I can just ask your Ladyship to go to the second page of the list of documents. Again, I've taken your Ladyship to this already in light of my learned friend's intervention. Your Ladyship sees:

"The documents listed in this index are received by me on 21 April 2000."

And one sees Hans-Peter Jenni's name there. This gives an indication of when this document was produced, although your Ladyship will note it is not in fact signed by Mr Jenni nor apparently received by him.

If your Ladyship then goes back to the first page, your Ladyship sees a reference at point 1 to an explanatory note, and that your Ladyship will find in this bundle behind tab 9. For those trying to follow electronically, H(A)18, page 221.003T H(A)18/221.003T is where this will be found.

Just looking at the opening words:

"In connection with the Clients' likely trip to Europe, it is proposed that work begin on the Programme to put their assets in order."

As your Ladyship will see in due course, "the Clients" are plainly Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili. We know from other evidence that Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili were indeed contemplating a trip to Geneva with Mr Jenni to see a Mr Samuelson --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: -- Christopher Samuelson, in the spring of 2000, with a view to moving their assets away from Russia and into new trust structures set up offshore.

So again this assists in time, this document, date-wise, to around March or April 2000. It also assists us in identifying the reason why these documents were produced: they were produced in connection with that proposal.

Can I then take your Ladyship back briefly to the list of documents behind tab 8 H(A)18/221.001T. Your Ladyship sees that in addition to the explanatory note at point 2, there is a reference to:

"Structure chart of share sale-purchase deals and... intermediary transactions."

Your Ladyship may also wish to note point 4:

"Brief biography of [Mr] Patarkatsishvili (in English)."

I'll take you to those documents in due course.

Then what one has listed out from numbers 5 to 16 are agreements that Mr Patarkatsishvili had made under which commission was to be paid in respect of the February 2000 aluminium acquisitions. Your Ladyship will have seen those commission agreements referred to in the written openings. Your Ladyship can see that whoever prepared this bundle had produced not just the original agreements but also English translation copies of those agreements as well as a notary certificate in respect of each such agreement.

Those commission agreements are, as your Ladyship may have picked up from the written openings, agreements on which the defendants had and I think still do place some reliance, it being suggested I think that those commission agreements represented the entirety of what it was agreed Mr Patarkatsishvili was to get out of the February 2000 aluminium acquisition; although, as your Ladyship shall see, that is an argument which is very difficult to square with, among other things, this agreement itself.

Can I just next ask your Ladyship to go to the document referred to at point 2 of the list: that's the structure chart. Your Ladyship will find that behind tab 3. It's at H(A)17, page 37.002 H(A)17/37.002. As your Ladyship will see, this document may assist you in understanding the structure of the aluminium sales with which you're going to be very much concerned.

You see that at the top of the schedule one has a list of the offshore vehicle companies which are the sellers of the aluminium assets. The Coalco companies are Mr Anisimov's companies and we have the Trans-World company sellers, Mr Reuben, Bosov, and Mr Chernoi's companies on the right. So two for Mr Anisimov and six for what we could call the Trans-World sellers.

Then, as your Ladyship sees, this is a representation of the fact that they are selling the aluminium interests -- those are described outside the boxes, between the various arrows pointing downwards -- to the four offshore companies, who again your Ladyship will recognise as having been the parties to the Rusal arrangements. Your Ladyship may wish to note that these four offshore companies are placed within a circle that appears to be titled "Sibneft".

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: Does your Ladyship see that?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: As you will recall, I suspect, from our written opening, there is a consistent reference by third parties to the aluminium interests having been acquired by the Sibneft shareholders.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: Now, the arrows show each of the aluminium acquisition contracts between Coalco and Trans-World Group on the one hand and the Sibneft four offshore companies on the other, and you may wish to note that the size of the share transfers and the purchase price, which your Ladyship sees is also shown there, just taking the by the first arrow, your Ladyship sees that KrAZ and KrGES interests and then there's a figure there given for how much is to be paid for that.

That tallies exactly with the aluminium acquisition contracts of 10 February 2000. I haven't taken your Ladyship to those detailed contracts; there are, I think, eight of them. I should say they all also include an English choice of law provision. But the figures, both in terms of the interests which are being sold and the amounts being paid for those interests, are precisely accurately set out. I say that because it's pretty clear that whoever prepared this document had a very detailed and full knowledge of the aluminium asset transactions.

Now, your Ladyship sees below the boxes representing the Trans-World and Coalco sellers, and indeed the Sibneft purchasers, a slightly lighter oval shape containing the words "Intermediary", representing, as I will show your Ladyship, that there was to be commission paid on the sales. Does your Ladyship see that?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: Then one sees in what amounts and by which companies this commission was to be paid.

If you go to the bottom of the chart, where you have another intermediary circle and four boxes: K1, K2, K3 and K4. As your Ladyship will see in due course, K1 and K2 were to be Mr Patarkatsishvili's companies; K3 and K4 were to be Mr Berezovsky's companies.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: Now, with this in mind, can I ask your Ladyship then to go back to the explanatory note at tab 9 H(A)18/221.003T. Can I invite your Ladyship, if you would, to read the whole note to yourself.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. (Pause)

Whose note is this?

MR RABINOWITZ: That is one of the mysteries. It was plainly, as I've suggested, made by a Russian speaker because this is a translation. So it was made in the Russian language. It was made, we think, either by Mr Fomichev or possibly by Mr Kay, who again was someone who worked for Mr Patarkatsishvili; possibly by Mr Streshinsky, who worked for Mr Anisimov.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, if it helps, my understanding from my clients is that the most likely author of this document is Mr Kay, the reason for that being that although he has written it in Russian, his Russian is not actually all that good -- he is not a native Russian speaker, I am told -- and this looks like a document prepared by somebody who was not a native Russian speaker but did know Russian.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I see. Thank you.

MR RABINOWITZ: That is a mystery we hope to get to the bottom of in due course but I'm grateful to my learned friend for that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: And he worked for OP(?), did he?

MR RABINOWITZ: Yes, he did.

Can I make a few observations about the note. First, as your Ladyship sees from the introductory sentence, what the note is directed towards is putting the assets of the clients -- and it is plainly

Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili -- in order and there is to be a three-stage programme for that. Given that, one would in due course in this document expect to find a reference to what those assets are, and we'll come to that shortly.

Secondly, and as regards the first or initial stage of the programme -- that's under the first heading, "Stage 1" -- one sees that this involves opening accounts and transferring certain funds across. Your Ladyship sees:

"In order to complete the intermediary transaction and thus the first stage of the Programme, the following action should be taken..."

And that includes the opening of accounts and the transfer of funds.

The funds that are to come in are, as one sees if your Ladyship glances at point 4, just above the heading, the funds that are to come in are the commission payments for the intermediary services provided in relation to the sales of the aluminium assets.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: If one goes to around a third of the way down the page, towards the top, one has the description of the intermediaries and we see that this is described as two companies belonging to Mr Berezovsky -- that's "BAB" -- and two companies belonging to Mr Patarkatsishvili, Badri Shalvovich -- I have that wrong I'm sure -- Patarkatsishvili. Your Ladyship will recall that I mentioned companies K1, K2, K3 and K4 were two for each of them.

This of course is relevant because, as your Ladyship may have picked up, the suggestion is made in some quarters that the aluminium transaction really had nothing whatever to do with Mr Berezovsky at all. Indeed, it's been suggested that whilst Mr Patarkatsishvili might have had some involvement, whatever he was doing, he wasn't doing it as a partner for Mr Berezovsky. As your Ladyship sees, this document is an indication that this is unlikely to have been the position.

Just still under "Stage 1", dealing with the opening of accounts and the transfer of funds, one sees, again about a third of the way down, next to the side heading "Total intermediary fees", that this is said to be approximately $100 million. Does your Ladyship have that?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, I don't. Where do I --

MR RABINOWITZ: On page 003T.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I'm there.

MR RABINOWITZ: "Total intermediary fees", approximately $100 million. It may be halfway down.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I have it.

MR RABINOWITZ: Again, your Ladyship may recall that there is a debate about why it is that Mr Patarkatsishvili was paid, at the time of the sale of the second Rusal tranche in July 2004, some $585 million. There's no dispute that there was a payment of $585 million to Mr Patarkatsishvili at around that time.

Your Ladyship may also recall that Mr Abramovich in his evidence has sought to suggest that this has nothing whatever to do with Mr Patarkatsishvili or Mr Berezovsky having an interest in Rusal. His suggestion is that that was to be a reward in effect for Mr Patarkatsishvili doing the intermediary work that he did in putting the original aluminium deal together.

But with respect to Mr Abramovich, this explanation makes little sense, we would submit, given the fact that, as your Ladyship sees here, the amount that Mr Patarkatsishvili was to get for the work, in terms of acting as an intermediary, had actually been agreed and it was to be around $100 million, a wholly different and much smaller amount. That amount was fixed by contracts, indeed contracts which have been -- intermediary fee, is it, and that this $100 million was paid to whom?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So your case is that this was the only

MR RABINOWITZ: It was never paid. My case, my Lady, is this: if there was an agreement made between Mr Abramovich -- on his case, what he says is: the only reason I paid $585 million to Patarkatsishvili in 2004 was because he acted as an intermediary, that is to say he was involved in putting the original February 2000 deal together for the acquisition of those aluminium trusts, and that's why I paid him $585 million.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So you say that's inconsistent with this $100 million provision here.

MR RABINOWITZ: Precisely.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: My question is: were intermediary fees of $100 million paid; and if so, to whom were they paid?

MR RABINOWITZ: No.

I should say that although he wasn't given $100 million, he was given a plane, his own plane, and there's discussion of that in the witness statements, as your Ladyship will recall. I don't know whether that was worth precisely $100 million but that may be a partial explanation for that statement.

What we say is this, my Lady. If the $100 million is what had been agreed in writing to be Mr Patarkatsishvili's fee, as it were, for the commission payments, then it's difficult to square that with Mr Abramovich's case that that is why he paid Mr Patarkatsishvili $585 million in 2004. If that is right, it follows also that there has to be a different explanation for why that amount of money was paid to Mr Patarkatsishvili in 2004. It has nothing whatever to do with the explanation that Mr Abramovich has come up with.

The third point to make about this document is this. Your Ladyship will have seen that "Stage 2" is referred to at the bottom of the first page of this document as the "main" stage and that was to involve structuring the assets. Just looking down at point A:

"Allocating assets to partners in proportion to their stakes."

If I can just focus on this for a moment. Your Ladyship sees the reference there to these gentlemen being partners, that's the same Mr Abramovich (sic) and Mr Berezovsky being partners, and that is obviously relevant in the context of this.

If your Ladyship then looks just below the identification of points A and B, on the top of the following page:

"It is initially envisaged that assets owned by the partners in the main business interests will be distributed. Such business interests include..."

Your Ladyship sees point 2 and point 3: "The aluminium sector"; point 3, "Sibneft".

Sorry, I think I misspoke. The partners here are Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili. I might have said in this context Mr Abramovich, and I apologise for that.

Just looking at this, as your Ladyship sees, they are "assets identified as owned by the partners", assets in the aluminium sector and Sibneft. So again, my Lady, I would submit that it's fairly clear that the understanding of whoever it was that created this document in March or April 2000 -- and that is a person who clearly had a detailed knowledge of the aluminium transactions, as we've seen from those diagrams at tab 2 of the bundle -- that person's clear understanding was that Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili as partners had an ownership interest in those assets.

Patently I would submit that this was in addition to their entitlement to the $100 million of commission in relation to the aluminium transactions, which, as your Ladyship will recall, is dealt with back in stage 1. So this note deals separately with the $100 million which is coming in and then separately with the aluminium assets, which include the aluminium -- sorry, which deal separately with the aluminium assets.

Now, your Ladyship will observe that this was a document created long before any dispute arose between Mr Berezovsky and Mr Abramovich about the ownership of those assets. Just pausing there, your Ladyship may recall that Mr Sumption in his opening document in fact appears to accept that from around 1999 all of Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili's business associates understood or at least assumed that Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili had an interest in Sibneft and indeed in Rusal, I think.

That I would submit is a rather important concession for Mr Sumption to have made. For your Ladyship's note, that is at paragraph 234, page 96 B(C)/96 of my learned friend's opening. He accepts that people around Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili understood that they had initial interests in these companies.

As your Ladyship may also recall, Mr Sumption in his written opening, while he makes that concession, then seeks to explain it away -- that is, the fact that those in Mr Berezovsky's circle understood that he had such an interest -- on what I would suggest is the really rather ingenious basis of what Mr Sumption in his written opening labels "the classic psychology of the political exile".

That is at paragraph 235.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I remember that.

MR RABINOWITZ: But there is an obvious difficulty with this for Mr Sumption, and it is this. Your Ladyship will of course note that these documents, the documents we've been looking at, were in fact produced in March or April 2000 or thereabouts. That creates a chronological problem for what one might call Mr Sumption's attempt to explain all this away by the psychology of the political exile and that is because at the time these documents were produced, Mr Berezovsky --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Sorry, just jogging back, how do we know they were produced in the March or April? That's from separate evidence?

MR RABINOWITZ: I've given your Ladyship two ways to identify that as a fact.

(1) If your Ladyship goes to the list of documents, I think that was at --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I see.

MR RABINOWITZ: That was to be signed saying he'd received it in April.

(2) It's pretty clear that these were produced in advance of a trip that Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili were going to make to Europe, which we know they were going to make in the spring of 2000.

If your Ladyship looks at the explanatory note, "In connection with the Clients' likely trip to Europe".

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: So we know that was to be in the spring of 2000 and we'll see -- this is not the only place where one can make this point -- that that indeed took place.

So the chronological problem for what one might call Mr Sumption's attempt to explain all this away by the psychology of the political exile is this: the documents were all produced at a time when Mr Berezovsky was not in fact in political exile at all. In fact, at the time Mr Berezovsky was basking in the glory of having been involved in President Putin's election victory and he was still living in Moscow. Political exile was in fact some way off.

So whilst I would not doubt for a moment that Mr Sumption may have a great knowledge of psychology, and even psychology of the political exile, it is clear that this simply does not explain these statements in documents like this one.

My Lady, I would suggest that the explanation as to why these statements were made that Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili had these ownership interests is in fact a far simpler one and one for which no great knowledge of psychology is needed: they made those statements about having an ownership interest because that is what they honestly understood the position to be. Whilst on this point, your Ladyship will recall that the fourth document on the list of documents was a short CV in English for Mr Patarkatsishvili and that is a document that your Ladyship will find at tab 28, I hope, of this bundle. It's at H(A)102, page 89.001 H(A)102/89.001.

If your Ladyship glances down about a fifth of the way towards the end:

"Mr ... Patarkatsishvili is a shareholder of Sibneft..."

It says nothing about the aluminium assets and that may be down to the fact that this was obviously produced so soon in time after that. But the reference to Badri being a shareholder of Sibneft, if that is right -- this document produced by more political exiles -- that drives a coach and horses through the story that Mr Abramovich is coming to this court to tell your Ladyship. As your Ladyship knows, Mr Abramovich's case is that he and he alone of these three men had an interest in Sibneft and that the other two never had any interest whatever in Sibneft.

Now, it might just be helpful to follow the story here through a little bit further. Can I ask your Ladyship next to go to -- I'm going to give the bundle reference first again -- H(A)19, page 10 H(A)19/10.

It is tab 10 of the bundle we're working from. Does your Ladyship have there a document, Valmet, "Interoffice Memorandum"?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: Your Ladyship may recall that the documents we were looking at were, as we understand it, prepared for a meeting with Mr Samuelson at Valmet. This was an organisation that Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili approached in the spring of 2000 about sorting out a way to hold their Russian interests outside of Russia.

What we have here is a note made by Mr Samuelson, who is the person with whom they were dealing, dated 9 May 2000, recording what was said about those assets by Mr Berezovsky, Mr Patarkatsishvili and those representing them, including Mr Fomichev, to Mr Samuelson. Again, your Ladyship may wish to note this again is a document produced before Mr Berezovsky went into political exile.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, I think my learned friend may be mistaken here about the dates. I made the same mistake in my skeleton argument. The date is in fact 5 September, it's the American dating system. That can be established by looking at the bottom paragraph on page 11, which refers to Mr Jenni as having written reference letters. Those reference letters will be found at H(A)21/137 H(A)21/137. They're dated 2 September.

MR RABINOWITZ: I'm grateful to my learned friend for that. I'm not sure it matters to the point I'm making. As your Ladyship knows, Mr Berezovsky only left Russia in October. So be that as it may, May or September, still not the ramblings of a political exile.

Can I invite your Ladyship please to glance at the whole of this note.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I've read it before, I'm not sure why. Perhaps it was in one of your skeletons.

MR RABINOWITZ: I'm not sure it is. You can glance at the whole of the note if your Ladyship wishes. For my purposes I was only going to be concerned with the first page and a little bit.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I've read that.

MR RABINOWITZ: Again, I think there are two main observations that I would make about this document in the context in which we are looking at it at this stage.

First, as your Ladyship sees, Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili have presented themselves to Mr Samuelson as partners. One sees that in the first paragraph, third line. It is very clear that that is how they regarded themselves. Does your Ladyship have that?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: Secondly, as one sees from the end of the first paragraph and more particularly from the third paragraph and the sentence beginning:

"Thus BB and AP were able to buy control of Sibneft... and subsequently have acquired 70% of Russia's aluminium smelters and have created a new holding company called Russian Aluminium to own all their aluminium holdings."

This suggests, I would submit, that, again, Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili certainly understood and certainly represented to the advisers dealing with them that they had an ownership interest in Rusal and Sibneft.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: Now, it is interesting, if I can just take your Ladyship to further documents to show your Ladyship the interest which they were telling Mr Samuelson at this time they held in these companies because that again is consistent with the case they make before this court.

Can I ask your Ladyship next to go to tab 11. It's H(A)21, page 212 H(A)21/212. In tab 11 your Ladyship has first an email to a Mr Kenneth Maillard. If your Ladyship looks at the bottom, he's saying:

"I attach the two charts with the changes that you all raised."

That's in September, September 11.

If your Ladyship then goes to 212, what one has here is the structure that Mr Samuelson is putting in place for Mr Berezovsky at 212 and for Mr Patarkatsishvili at page 213.

Just so your Ladyship is clear about this -- this is something which I think will recur from time to time -- the "H" structure, that is a reference to the Hotspur Trust structure, and that is the structure put in place for Mr Berezovsky. Then the "O" structure on page 213 is a reference to the Octopus Trust structure, and that is what was being put in place for Mr Patarkatsishvili.

Your Ladyship sees that the structure looks incredibly complicated and indeed is. It was intended to be complicated given that it was in order to protect assets. Some information as to why this was so, of course, is clear from the note that your Ladyship saw of 9 September.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: But just ignoring the complexity for the moment, what I would submit is of some assistance, my Lady, is that these structures, produced certainly long before any dispute between Mr Berezovsky and Mr Abramovich arose, do enable us to identify precisely what share of both Sibneft and Rusal Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili appear to have understood themselves to own.

Just looking at page 213 -- this is the Patarkatsishvili structure -- your Ladyship sees a bar on the top headed "Sibneft" and a bar on the bottom headed "Russian Aluminium", Rusal.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: If one just looks at the bar on the bottom and adds up --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Sorry, I have Sibneft -- yes, I see. We're on 213 now, are we?

MR RABINOWITZ: 213, yes. This is the Patarkatsishvili structure. Just picking it up, looking at the bar on the bottom which is the Rusal bar, your Ladyship sees percentage figures immediately above the Rusal bar.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: I can tell your Ladyship that that adds up to 12.5 per cent. If your Ladyship then goes back to the Berezovsky and looks at the bar at the bottom, the figures there also add up to 12.5. Together --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: It doesn't say "Rusal" in the bottom --

MR RABINOWITZ: No, it doesn't, but I can show your Ladyship other documents and maybe in due course we will have to. It is plain that that was intended to be Rusal. The only reason I have taken your Ladyship to these is one could date them or we can date them, they're sometime in September, whereas the other documents, although they for Mr Berezovsky also say "Rusal", don't have a date.

I can just perhaps give your Ladyship a reference to that without turning it up.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: It's bundle H(A)102, pages 70 and 71
H(A)102/70.

Now, the significance of the 12.5 and 12.5, obviously that adds up to 25 per cent and that is exactly in line with what Mr Berezovsky has consistently said was the interest in Rusal that was held for both himself and Mr Patarkatsishvili. So their story about this has been consistent long before this dispute arose. This is what they're telling their advisers.

Now, the same is true in relation to Sibneft. Again, just looking at those diagrams again, the Patarkatsishvili diagram, page 213: again, without making your Ladyship do the maths, I can tell your Ladyship that the percentage figures leading to the Sibneft holding add up to 17 per cent. If your Ladyship then goes to the Berezovsky structure, the Hotspur structure at page 212, that adds up to 33 per cent. Together 50 per cent, split in a ratio of two to one.

Again, that is exactly in line with Mr Berezovsky's evidence. For your Ladyship's note, he explains this at paragraph 175(b) in his fourth witness statement. We don't need to go to it.

Again, my Lady, if this is correct, then that would again suggest that the story that Mr Abramovich is coming to this court to tell simply cannot be true. This exactly reflects the story that Mr Berezovsky has come to court to tell your Ladyship, both in relation to Sibneft and in relation to Rusal, but it is 100 per cent inconsistent with Mr Abramovich's case, although I accept that the most that one can say about this, given that it's a Berezovsky document, is that it reflects Mr Berezovsky's understanding of the position. But in my respectful submission, that is significant. He isn't a political exile, this isn't the ramblings of a political exile, no dispute has arisen, but he understands that he owns these interests.

Can I next -- and again this is primarily of relevance to Rusal -- just show your Ladyship some of the documents generated at the time of we call the sale of the second Rusal tranche in June and July 2004, which again, I would submit, are very damaging to the case Mr Abramovich seeks to advance about Rusal.

Just to put the second Rusal sale into context, your Ladyship will recall that after Mr Abramovich disposed of 25 per cent of the Rusal shares or 50 per cent of the shares held by his group for just under 1.6 billion in September 2003, this meant that he had produced a situation in which the remaining shares he held were a minority holding since Mr Deripaska now held 75 per cent of the shares. One might think that that in itself was a rather odd thing to have done, even to oneself. This led to the remaining equal quantity of shares having to be sold in June/July 2004 for something not much more than a quarter of that amount, some $450 million.

Of course, there is a great deal of dispute about what was going on in relation to that second sale. Mr Berezovsky's case, as your Ladyship knows, is that that second sale was a sale of a tranche that Mr Abramovich had agreed to hold on trust for Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Berezovsky jointly.

Mr Abramovich's case, once again, is very much more complicated. He of course disputes that he ever held the shares for Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili on trust and so he has to explain why he was making this payment, why the money was going to Patarkatsishvili, we say to Patarkatsishvili and Berezovsky, and indeed Patarkatsishvili says to Patarkatsishvili and Berezovsky.

What he suggests is that this isn't because Mr Patarkatsishvili was the beneficial owner of the tranche at all; rather the whole second tranche sale was just a very complicated way of enabling him to pay Mr Patarkatsishvili for what was really no more than an uncontracted reward for past work. I've mentioned that already; I'm not going to get into that again. He has to explain why the $100 million which had been agreed wasn't what he was going to pay.

Can I just show your Ladyship a small selection of the documents generated in this context which in our respectful submission shed a great deal of light on the truth. Can I first ask your Ladyship to go to the document that I hope your Ladyship will find at tab 17 of this bundle. It's at H(A)74, page 219 H(A)74/219.

Your Ladyship should have there a memorandum produced by a law firm, Bryan Cave --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I have it.

MR RABINOWITZ: It's Mr Hauser is the partner at Bryan Cave who produces this document; your Ladyship sees that.

Mr Hauser, an English solicitor. He is getting instructions from a Mr Mishakov. Your Ladyship may wish to know Mr Mishakov was the assistant to Mr Deripaska.

Mr Deripaska, you will recall, was one of the people at the Dorchester meeting when the decision to merge the aluminium interests to create Rusal was, we say, discussed and agreed in March 2000. Of course he was also the person with whom Mr Abramovich -- acting, we say, for Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili, that is his other partners -- was contracting at that time, in February I think it was.

Your Ladyship may wish to note that it's clear from the witness statements that Mr Mishakov and Mr Hauser were very closely involved in the production of the Rusal agreement documentation, that's to say the February and March documentation. Given that, your Ladyship may think Mr Hauser and Mr Mishakov would be able to have at least some insight as to the people with whom they were dealing.

Can I ask your Ladyship please to read this memorandum, at least down to point 6 on page 220.

(Pause)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I've read that.

MR RABINOWITZ: Can I just make the following observations about this note.

First, as your Ladyship sees -- this is paragraph 1 -- Mr Hauser of Bryan Cave explains that he's been advised that:

"... Madison..."

That's the Abramovich company.

"... has bearer shares... in the possession of its parent..."

And that the way the sale of the second tranche would work is that in the first instance:

"... [these] would be transferred to a company ('B') which [as he notes] is owned by the ultimate beneficiaries ('BB')."

Just pausing there, my Lady, it is clear that his instructions are that there are two ultimate beneficiaries, B and B.

If there's any doubt about that, then in my respectful submission that doubt is removed. If you look at paragraph 5 on the following page, your Ladyship sees a reference has been made there to getting a guarantee as to the ownership of shares from "each of BB". Second last line of paragraph 5. So BB is not one person, they're two people, otherwise he wouldn't referring to them as "each of BB".

Secondly, if your Ladyship is on page 20, one sees in the body of paragraph 6 that what Mr Hauser has in mind, following his instructions from Mr Deripaska's team, is that:

"... it would... be necessary to ensure that BB were the only persons beneficially entitled to the Shares..."

So that Mr Deripaska could feel confident that he had a release from any person who might have a beneficial interest in the shares.

Now, it will be obvious to your Ladyship that our case is that BB were Mr Berezovsky and Badri, Mr Patarkatsishvili.

Your Ladyship will also have noted the part in italics that follows paragraph 6 referring to "Deeds of Release and Indemnity" and the statement there that, the last three lines:

"In addition, we would expect [Mr Abramovich's] Deed of Release to include an assurance that BB were the only persons who have ever been beneficially entitled to the Shares."

That of course we submit is wholly consistent with Mr Berezovsky's case about this. What we would submit emerges very clearly from this document is that it was at least the understanding of Mr Deripaska's team -- these were people who were the people who contracted with Mr Abramovich in February and March 2000 -- it was at least the understanding of those people that Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili, Boris and Badri, BB, were the persons who had a beneficial interest in the shares that were being sold.

That, of course, is entirely easy to reconcile with the documents I've previously taken your Ladyship to which talk of Mr Abramovich having partners, which talk about there being other selling shareholders. It's also entirely consistent with what we have seen was Mr Berezovsky's understanding and Mr Patarkatsishvili's understanding of the position: that they had an interest in Rusal. Of course, if this is right, this would again suggest that the case that Mr Abramovich is putting before the court that no one other than himself had any interest whatever in the Rusal shares is simply untrue.

But it doesn't stop with this document. Can I ask your Ladyship next to go to the document that you should have at tab 19 of this bundle. It's at H(A)74, page 223 H(A)74/223. At tab 19 we have a chart that Mr Hauser explains was produced by Mr Mishakov -- that's Mr Deripaska's associate -- and it was produced at around the same time that Mr Hauser produced the memorandum that we've just looked at. Again, it maps out Mr Mishakov's understanding of the transaction that was proposed in relation to the second tranche of shares.

Again, I don't know whether your Ladyship has had an opportunity to glance at the chart and more particularly at the notes below, but your Ladyship will see that fundamental to the understanding of Mr Mishakov, in effect Mr Deripaska's point man on this, is that B and B -- and obviously there are two of them, I would submit quite obviously Mr Berezovsky and Badri, Boris and Badri -- were the beneficiaries of 25 per cent of the Rusal shares that were to be sold. This is clear, for example, from point 4 in the notes:

"[Abramovich] provides guarantee with regard to the representation and warranty that the beneficiaries (B&B) are the ultimate beneficiaries of 25% of RH's shares."

Also see point 6:

"Beneficiaries' company jointly with beneficiaries B&B execute the Joint Deed of release and indemnity by which they warrant that they are the beneficiaries of 25% of R."

That's Rusal.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Did that happen?

MR RABINOWITZ: Well, we're going to see what happened.

What actually happens is that Mr Berezovsky gets painted out of the picture completely. I'm going to take your Ladyship through the chronology.

There are a lot of other documents which people produce on the basis that Berezovsky and Patarkatsishvili are the beneficiaries and then at some point someone says, "We can't do this, we have to go a different route", and the reasons for that will be clear to your Ladyship when I take you through the documents.

He gets whitewashed out of the picture, does Mr Berezovsky, for reasons which I will submit in due course are obvious. He gets whitewashed out of the picture largely, I will be submitting, because Mr Abramovich or his associates in effect say to people, "We can't show this transaction in this way because of representations we've previously made to banks about the position". So he gets whitewashed out. This, in our respectful submission, represents the true position.

Your Ladyship will find as you go through this case that there are any number of documents produced by Mr Abramovich -- we've already seen a few of them -- where he has to disavow what the document says as not being the true position. He is a man who is perfectly happy to put his name, or at least the name of his associated companies, to documents which misrepresent a position. That in our respectful submission is exactly what has happened here, for reasons which you will see.

Just so your Ladyship should know this, Mr Hauser's evidence -- he has served a witness summary and one hopes he will be coming to give evidence -- is that he understood during the negotiations that Badri had a beneficial holder in Rusal, paragraph 10 of his summary, and that references to the other beneficial owner described elsewhere in the draft contractual document as "B2" -- I'm not going to take your Ladyship to that because I didn't think I was going to have time -- were references to Mr Berezovsky. That's his summary, paragraph 12. Although he says that he personally made no enquiries into the relationship with Mr Berezovsky or the strength of what he says is Berezovsky's claim, because he talks about the fact that there was an indication in the newspaper that Mr Berezovsky was claiming (inaudible) as well.

Now, your Ladyship, in our respectful submission, sees that these documents certainly suggest that the understanding of Mr Deripaska's team, the person with whom the deal had been made in March 2000 and to whom Mr Abramovich had made warranties about his partners, was that they were indeed partners or other persons with a beneficial interest in the Rusal shares and indeed that those persons were Berezovsky and Patarkatsishvili. This is totally inconsistent with Mr Abramovich's whole case.

Your Ladyship should know that it's not just those in Mr Deripaska's camp who understood that there were beneficial interests in these shares and that these were held on behalf of Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili. As your Ladyship will have gathered from our written opening, those instructed by Mr Patarkatsishvili in relation to this transaction, including with (inaudible), who were instructed by Mr Anisimov's assistant, Mr Streshinsky, with the assistance of investment managers Salford(?), also appear from the documentation to have clearly understood and have appreciated first that Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili were the ultimate beneficial owners of 25 per cent of Rusal and secondly that Mr Abramovich was holding that 25 per cent on trust for them. So they appear to have been labouring under the same supposed misapprehension as Mr Hauser and Mr Mishakov on Mr Deripaska's team.

For your Ladyship's note, this is an occasion on which I can give you a reference to our skeleton: we deal with that at paragraph 847 and following of our written submissions at page 424 and following B(A)1/02/424.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: That may be a convenient moment, my Lady.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well.

MR RABINOWITZ: I'm happy to go on.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No. I'll sit again at 2 o'clock.

(12.58 pm)

(The short adjournment)

(2.00 pm)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Members of the press, I've been told that the arrangement for you will be this: that every morning if when you show up at security you present your press passes, there will be reserved ticketed seats for up to ten members of the press. If you report to the commercial listing counter on the ground floor as you come through security, you will be given an allocated seat. There will also obviously be more seats in the public gallery. If I'm informed that ten reserved seats for members of the press is not sufficient going forward, then I will reconsider the position with the Courts Service staff.

I'm also told that arrangements have been made in consultation rooms 40 and 42 for an audio feed as well as the LiveNote feed. So any overspill, go to consultation rooms 40 and 42, where there will be an audio feed of the proceedings. Hopefully that should remove the need for anybody to stand at the back of the court. Thank you.

Yes, Mr Rabinowitz.

MR RABINOWITZ: My Lady, I'm grateful. Before the short adjournment I had shown your Ladyship the memo and diagram at tabs 17 and 19 of the opening bundle and I made the point that it wasn't just Mr Deripaska's advisers who had the understanding that we see is reflected in those documents.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Sorry, just before we start off again, Mr Rabinowitz, Ms Davies, there is an outstanding application which you mentioned to me on Thursday, I think, in relation to the Clydesdale Bank.

MS DAVIES: Yes, my Lady.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I'm proposing to make the order but I would like a further copy of it to sign.

MS DAVIES: Of course, my Lady. We'll get that available for 4.30.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you very much.

Sorry, Mr Rabinowitz.

MR RABINOWITZ: I had referred also to the understanding of is the Leboeuf lawyers who were involved. Can I now please ask your Ladyship to go to the document we have at tab 18 of the opening bundle: it's H(A)74, page 222 H(A)74/222.

Your Ladyship should have a document containing an email.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: If your Ladyship looks at the email towards the second half of the page, your Ladyship sees it's from Mr Mishakov. Your Ladyship sees that it's dated 9 June 2004 and it's sent to two people. The first is Mr Streshinsky, who is one of Mr Anisimov's people. Then your Ladyship sees that it is also sent to the person "nataliakh", that is Ms Natalia Khudyk, who is one of the very senior people engaged by Mr Abramovich.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: If your Ladyship looks to the bottom part of that document, your Ladyship will see that attached to that email were two documents, being the scheme document produced by Mr Mishakov and the Bryan Cave memo. Does your Ladyship see that?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: As your Ladyship has seen, both of those documents suggested that the 25 per cent holding in Rusal was beneficially owned by someone other than Mr Abramovich's companies and indeed that B and B or BB were the persons who had that beneficial interest.

It is not just Ms Khudyk on Mr Abramovich's side of the fence, as it were, among his senior people, to whom these documents were sent at the time. Can I ask your Ladyship next to go to tab 20. It's H(A)75/93, 93T for the translation H(A)75/93T.

At tab 20 one has again an email sent -- I don't know whether your Ladyship is looking at the translation but this is sent from a Ms Panchenko again to Ms Khudyk, and again if you look at the attachments you see there it's the Bryan Cave memo and also the diagram, the scheme. So not only Ms Khudyk from Mr Abramovich's team but also Ms Panchenko from Mr Abramovich's team were sent these documents reflecting the understanding of at least others that Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili were beneficial interest holders.

I can tell your Ladyship that it was not just these two people in Mr Abramovich's camp that were sent these documents; there were others and we will deal with that in due course in cross-examination. I'm not going to go through all of them now.

Of course, if what was said in these documents was just nonsense -- "I don't know what you're talking about. Why do you have B&B and BB as the beneficial interest holders?" -- one would have expected some reaction. One would have expected a document to come back and say, "No, no, no, you've got it all wrong", or an internal document saying, "I don't know what these people are talking about. Where did they get this information?" One gets nothing of the sort, my Lady.

Nothing of the sort.

Whilst it is right, as I mentioned before the short adjournment, that in the end the documents which were produced whitewash Mr Berezovsky out of the picture entirely, there is certainly nothing ever that we see which takes issue at all with what is being said in those documents.

Now, one gets a further indication of the understanding of the parties involved in the transaction, in particular those from Mr Deripaska's team, if your Ladyship then goes to the document that you should have at tab 21A: H76, page 106 H(A)76/106.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: Does your Ladyship have there a memo, again from Mr Hauser?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: So again Mr Hauser of Bryan Cave is sending a memo to Mr Mishakov, Mr Deripaska's assistant, and your Ladyship sees it's dated 18 June 2004. Can I invite your Ladyship just again to read through the whole of this memo, please. (Pause)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: Can I make again a number of observations about this document.

First, as one sees from the opening line, Mr Hauser has consulted on the telephone with Mr Mishakov and appears to have been advised by Mr Mishakov -- who, as I've said earlier, was involved in the drawing-up of the Rusal documents in March 2000 -- what the position is.

Secondly, as one sees from the second paragraph, Mr Mishakov and Mr Hauser understand that Mr Abramovich's company, Madison:

"... is... holding... 25% [of the Rusal Holding Limited shares] on behalf of B Company or that company's ultimate [beneficial] owners..."

And I would ask your Ladyship again to note the plural there, ultimate owners. They're described as B but there's more than one of them. That of course is consistent with the earlier memorandum and diagram drawn up by Mr Mishakov which your Ladyship has seen, which identifies the ultimate beneficiaries as B&B.

Third, your Ladyship sees that Mr Hauser, analysing the consequences of what he understands to be the arrangements under English law, we say quite correctly, perhaps not sufficiently emphatically, concludes that Madison, and perhaps Mr Abramovich himself, is a trustee for the ultimate owners with respect to the shares and/or is under fiduciary obligations to them. Your Ladyship sees that.

Fourth, as your Ladyship sees, Mr Hauser has been told that relations between Mr Abramovich and the ultimate owners have broken down and that Mr Abramovich no longer wishes to deal directly with the ultimate owners. That, of course, is certainly something that your Ladyship knows applies to his relationship with Mr Berezovsky at this point in time and perhaps also to Mr Patarkatsishvili, given what Mr Abramovich did with the first tranche of the Rusal shares. No one on Mr Abramovich's side has ever suggested who else might be the person with whom Mr Abramovich now no longer has good relations. So in my submission the identity of these people with whom Mr Abramovich has fallen out is obvious.

Fifth, again as your Ladyship sees, in order to overcome Mr Abramovich's reluctance to deal directly with the ultimate owners, Mr Hauser suggests an alternative way in which the transaction could be structured, with Mr Abramovich resigning as trustee and Mr Deripaska taking over the trusteeship and then buying out the shares --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: This is all Mr Deripaska's team, is it?

MR RABINOWITZ: This is all Mr Deripaska's team, correct. The important point about that, as your Ladyship will appreciate, these were the people who were the parties to the contract in which someone said, "Abramovich and partners are entering into this contract". They were there when all these contracts were made and negotiated.

Sixth and finally, one sees that Mr Hauser, in the final two paragraphs, notes that Mr Abramovich risks boxing himself into a corner with respect to the ultimate beneficial owners. On the one hand he's refusing to deal with them and on the other hand he's exposing himself to the risk of a breach of fiduciary duty. Mr Hauser's patience, as one sees, is running out and he's telling Mr Abramovich that he needs to come up with a solution and fast.

With that in mind, can I ask your Ladyship please next to go to the document that you find at tab 21: H76, page 57 H(A)76/57. Now, just so your Ladyship knows what this document is, it would appear to be a letter drawn up -- I'm not sure it is ever sent -- by Akin Gump, the lawyers who have been engaged by Mr Anisimov to assist with the transaction with a view to it being sent by Mr Streshinsky to Mr Abramovich's people.

Just starting, can I ask your Ladyship first to look at the first two lines here:

"As discussed over the phone, in order to meet the representations that you previously made to the banks, please find below an alternative structure."

Just pausing there, one can see, my Lady, that is what is happening here: there is a conversation over the phone and someone says, "We can't go with the structure you're thinking about because of representations which we've made to the banks. Please come up with an alternative proposal".

If you glance then further down the letter, one can see that an alternative structure is proposed, the purpose of which it would appear is to avoid any reference to Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili as having had any beneficial interest in shares because, so this says, of the representations previously made to the banks.

Perhaps I can ask your Ladyship just to look at the first numbered paragraph there:

"The parties acknowledge that according to the agreements dated 10 February 2000 and 15 March 2000 and oral and other arrangements, [Mr Patarkatsishvili]..."

Well, "BP and B" is what it says.

"... participated in the sale of shares" --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: You say that's Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili?

MR RABINOWITZ: Indeed, Mr Berezovsky and -- and in fact if your Ladyship just looks above it, you'll see:

"BP (an individual) and B (a company with B as the sole shareholder)..."

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: So:

"The parties acknowledge that according to the agreements dated 10 February 2000 and 15 March 2000 and oral and other arrangements, BP and B participated in the sale of shares of KrAZ, BAZ, Krasnoyarsk Hydroelectric Power Station and Achinsk Alumina Refinery and also in the establishment and capitalisation of R Holding and at the time of the establishment of R Holding, M undertook to pay to BP and B the amounts equal to those received as income on 25% of shares in R Holding, including dividends payable on such 25% of shares and amounts/assets received from any sale of such 25% of shares. (Therefore, it was solely a right in personam rather than a trust or a right in rem -- a lawyer's comments)."

This has come, as your Ladyship sees, from Mr Abramovich's disclosure. What is interesting about this alternative structure which is being proposed is that even now what they're suggesting, even after this pep talk has taken place, what they're suggesting was the arrangement is almost identical to what

Mr Berezovsky says the position was.

In other words, the arrangement that's described, rather than simply him having a legal ownership, one sees that he has everything but a legal ownership because what in our respectful submission Mr Abramovich wants to be able to deny is that anyone other than he was the owner of the Rusal shares. But what this appears he's willing to acknowledge is that the interests that Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Berezovsky had was one that entitled them to all the benefits that they would have as if they were the beneficial owners of this 25 per cent: that is to say 25 per cent of the dividends and 25 per cent of whatever is received on the sale of those 25 per cent shares.

If your Ladyship looks at what is said here as well --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: This draft from Akin Gump is going to?

MR RABINOWITZ: It's one that we understand was prepared for Mr Streshinsky so that he could send it to Mr Abramovich's people. Mr Streshinsky is Mr Anisimov's assistant. They were assisting Mr Patarkatsishvili.

So we have this telephone call. I can tell your Ladyship that no one deals in their witness statements with this telephone call; a very surprising omission. We have this telephone call and what we have is suddenly everyone is having to change directions. Forget about what Mr Hauser has been saying about transfers to the B company owned by B and BP; we have to find a new route which in a sense disputes or doesn't recognise that they are the beneficial owners but gives them rights as if they were. That is in effect what this is saying.

What is, I would submit, also interesting about this is that even after the pep talk, no one is disputing that both Mr Berezovsky -- that's the B -- and Mr Patarkatsishvili -- that is the BP -- both participated in the sale and purchase of the aluminium assets and indeed in the establishment of Rusal. Instead what is now sought is to change the story somewhat to say that whilst they weren't given an ownership interest in the shares, they were to be given an entitlement that would in effect correspond to them having a beneficial ownership but do not recognise the ownership interest. As I submit, that again is still not a million miles -- despite the pep talk about misleading statements to the bank -- from what Mr Berezovsky says the position was.

So I would respectfully submit that again one has a document that is slap bang inconsistent with the case that Mr Abramovich seeks to present in relation to Rusal.

In the end, as I've already indicated, the position continues to evolve so that what eventually emerges are a suite of contractual documents, the documents that are referred to extensively in the written opening, that do indeed manage to whitewash Mr Berezovsky entirely out of the picture; although even those documents, your Ladyship should know, contain a representation and warranty by Mr Abramovich, in a contract which he makes, that Mr Patarkatsishvili was at all times the beneficial owner of these shares since March 2000.

So even in this changed, parallel-universe world which they start creating, even then you have a document which has Mr Patarkatsishvili expressly warranting that he was the beneficial owner of these shares from I think it's 15 March is the date, which of course is the date of the Rusal sale and purchase agreement that I took you to earlier.

Now, if that is right, if again we are to take what is said there at face value, again that is 100 per cent inconsistent with the story that Mr Abramovich wishes to tell your Ladyship: that he and he alone held an interest in these shares.

Just before leaving this area, can I ask your Ladyship next to go to the document that we have at tab 23: that's at H(A)84, page 64. This is the document that I was mentioning. This is one of the documents that is finally produced.

For present purposes can I ask your Ladyship first just to glance at who the parties are. Your Ladyship sees that Mr Patarkatsishvili is identified as the beneficial owner. Your Ladyship sees Cliren Investment, that is a Patarkatsishvili company; Rusal Holding is obviously an Abramovich company; and Eagle Capital Group is a Deripaska company.

Can I ask your Ladyship to go to clause 3.1 of this contract at page 66:

"The Beneficial Owner..."

And your Ladyship will recall the beneficial owner is Mr Patarkatsishvili.

"The Beneficial Owner represents and warrants to the Purchaser and the Company that as of Completion:

"3.1.1 during the Period..."

And your Ladyship just may want to glance back to page 65 to see what "the Period" is:

"'Period' means the period commencing on March 15, 2000 and ending on Completion."

So we're here in July 2004. 15 March was the date that the parties make the Rusal contracts.

So just going back to 3.1, Mr Patarkatsishvili represents and warrants that:

"... during the Period..."

That is to say the period from 15 March 2000:

"... [Mr Patarkatsishvili] was the sole and ultimate beneficial owner of the Business Interests..."

Then it goes on to say it wasn't held for the benefit of any other person or any other business interests. It's a rather obscure definition, as many of the definitions in the contracts these parties made were, perhaps deliberately, it certainly covers the Rusal shares.

I just need to make two points about that. The first is the point I've already mentioned: that if this is true, if it is the case that Mr Patarkatsishvili was the beneficial owner since March 15, then, with respect to Mr Abramovich, it shows his case to be utterly untrue because his case is that he was the only person with an interest at the time.

The second point to make is this: as your Ladyship will see, what the parties to this contract have done is to require Mr Patarkatsishvili to say that he was the sole beneficial owner during this period, and that again is an attempt to cut Mr Berezovsky out of the picture.

Now, we have, as you'll see when we come to the Badri proofs, as they've been called, a lot of evidence from Mr Badri effectively saying they made him say this.

Again, we know from a great deal of evidence in this case that Mr Patarkatsishvili did not regard himself as the only beneficial owner. I've already taken your Ladyship to a number of contract documents which say he had this interest with Mr Berezovsky.

So even when they get to the last document, the whitewash of Mr Berezovsky is complete but they can't take Mr Patarkatsishvili out. As I say, this is flat bang inconsistent with Mr Abramovich's case in a document to which he or his company is a signing party.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: And this was actually signed in this format?

MR RABINOWITZ: This was signed in this form, indeed. Your Ladyship sees it being initialled all the way through. Then if you go to page 70 --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: What does the "Beneficial Owner DR", in the bottom left-hand corner, mean?

MR RABINOWITZ: Deed of release; that's the name of this document. I think there were seven documents, I may be wrong --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I see, that's just the name of the deed. I see, yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: I have no doubt that my learned friend will go to this document in due course, and indeed to other documents, and say -- you'll remember he has a release argument which says: well, Mr Berezovsky, if he had a claim, has released it. We would respectfully submit that's a hopeless argument and I'm not going to get into it now. But that's one of the documents that was agreed. I think there was seven in all for agreement at this time.

Now, can I next just leave off the documents which are directly related to Rusal. Those are all matters we can ask Mr Abramovich about in due course. Can I take your Ladyship to another document that may assist in relation to a number of issues in this case and that is what we have called the Curtis notes, produced by the late Mr Stephen Curtis, a solicitor and senior partner in Curtis & Co who acted for Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili at various stages and who made these notes in 2003, prior to his sudden death in a helicopter crash in March 2004.

Your Ladyship will find those in a number of places. I have them in this bundle at tabs 15 and 16. I'll just give the references for those who don't have this bundle. The original notes are at H(A)59/110.00 H(A)59/110.00 and at H(A)59/110.005 H(A)59/110.005 there is a transcript of the notes produced by Mr Curtis's partner in his law firm, Mr James Jacobson.

Just so your Ladyship knows what we're dealing with, at tab 15 we have the originals and at tab 16 we have Mr Jacobson's transcript. I'll in due course take your Ladyship through the transcript, which is obviously there to read. But can I just say something looking at the original at tab 15 before going to the transcript.

Your Ladyship will recall that we've explained in our written opening that it is Mr Berezovsky's case that these are notes of a meeting that took place at Mr Patarkatsishvili's house in Georgia either in early June 2003 or some 12 weeks later, between 21 and 26 August 2003. It was a meeting attended by Mr Patarkatsishvili, Mr Tenenbaum -- your Ladyship will know that Mr Tenenbaum is a very close associate of Mr Abramovich -- Mr Fomichev, and a fourth individual identified in the note only as Igor.

Again, as your Ladyship will have seen from the written openings, there is something of an authenticity challenge to these written notes because although Mr Tenenbaum does not dispute that he did go to a meeting in Georgia attended by Mr Patarkatsishvili, by Mr Fomichev and also by someone who he acknowledges may have been Mr Curtis sometime in 2003, he apparently wishes to dispute that he discussed any of these matters recorded in the note. Although I think what cannot be disputed -- and I don't think is seriously disputed -- is first that this is a note made by Mr Curtis, it is in his own handwriting; and secondly, and necessarily, the notes must have been made before Mr Curtis's death in March 2004.

Just pausing there, again, it will obvious from that chronology that that is a long time before a dispute in relation to Rusal emerges.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: If there are going to be critical documents, please may you get them transcribed.

MR RABINOWITZ: We have them transcribed and I'm going to show your Ladyship the transcription in a moment. It's at tab 16. The only reason to start with this document is so that your Ladyship can see the -- just looking at this document first. I will go to the transcript because that's plainly easier to read. Top right-hand corner, your Ladyship sees:

,Meeting -- Badri, Eugene..."

That's Mr Tenenbaum.

Then there is a reference to Igor and then there's a reference to Ruslan, who is Mr Fomichev, together with Mr Curtis, who made the note. Then in the middle of the page your Ladyship sees what was a yellow sticker.

I think this has all been inspected in the original by my learned friends. Your Ladyship may wish to know that the yellow sticker which was found on top of these notes again obviously assists in trying to work out when these notes were produced and by whom. They were produced --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, the lady is coming along to give evidence.

MR RABINOWITZ: She is coming along. It's a note which was made by Ms Jackie Flynn, who was Mr Curtis's secretary in 2000. As your Ladyship remarks, Ms Flynn will be coming along to give evidence to the court and she will confirm that the writing on the sticker is hers. She will also confirm that the writing on the note itself is that of Mr Curtis. I don't, as I say, understand the latter point to be disputed. She will be able to confirm the approximate time before which the notes will have been made because, as she explains, she left Curtis & Co after Mr Curtis's death in early 2004.

Now, as I've indicated, Mr Tenenbaum, as I understand it, doesn't dispute the fact that he was indeed in Tbilisi sometime in 2003 with Mr Fomichev and Badri, Mr Patarkatsishvili, and indeed he acknowledges that Mr Curtis might well have been there as well. So his case appears to be -- and Mr Abramovich's case on this appears to be -- that although Mr Tenenbaum did meet with these people at around this time, Mr Curtis simply imagined the translation and then wrote it down and then presumably as part of this total sham Mr Curtis also on his return presumably gave these notes to his secretary, told her that they were vitally important and told her that they needed to be filed, all as part of a sham.

In other words, Mr Tenenbaum's and indeed Mr Abramovich's case must be that Mr Curtis, an English solicitor, in 2003 or 2004 deliberately fabricated notes of a meeting and that he said nothing of the sort. In my respectful submission that is, with respect, a somewhat far-fetched position to be taking. Unfortunately, of course, while Mr Tenenbaum can make that sort of allegation about Mr Curtis, Mr Curtis, having died in 2004, cannot defend himself.

In all events, perhaps I can now just invite your Ladyship to look at the transcript version at tab 16.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: Can I invite your Ladyship to read through the whole of this and then I'll make, if I may, some observations on it. (Pause)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I've read that.

MR RABINOWITZ: May I just make a few observations about this.

First, as your Ladyship sees from the extract from side one of card one -- that's the first page of this -- there is a discussion about the initial acquisition of aluminium assets by the Sibneft shareholders. That's the first two paragraphs. Your Ladyship sees not only a reference to the shareholders of Sibneft buying most of these plants, and one is dealing there with the aluminium plants, but one also sees Mr Patarkatsishvili as recorded as having noted that the shareholders of Sibneft were Boris, Badri and Roman; that is to say Mr Berezovsky, Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Abramovich.

That, of course, confirms two aspects of Mr Berezovsky's case and, if right, is utterly destructive of Mr Abramovich's case in that it shows first that all three were Sibneft shareholders and second that all three participated in the aluminium acquisitions.

Secondly, and again just staying with card one, side one, so still on the first part of this page, your Ladyship sees in the last three sentences before side two:

"Agreed with R..."

That's Roman, Mr Abramovich.

"... [and] Partner into Russian Aluminium --
Shareholders 50/50.

"We agreed 25 B/B..."

That's Boris and Badri, Mr Berezovsky and

Mr Patarkatsishvili].

"... 25 Roman."

That is Mr Abramovich.

"We are passive shareholders so R..."

That's Mr Abramovich.

"... operating partner and every year we get dividends from [aluminium] activities."

Again, as your Ladyship will appreciate, that precisely accords with Mr Berezovsky's case as to the arrangements that were made in relation to Rusal. If this is an accurate reflection of the position, it is 100 per cent inconsistent with Mr Abramovich's position. Indeed, if this is correct, Mr Abramovich is plainly coming to the court to give your Ladyship evidence which simply cannot be true.

Now, third, and just looking at card one, side 2, so halfway down the first page here, there is then a discussion about Mr Abramovich acquiring the 25 per cent Rusal shares held by Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Berezovsky. This then goes on for most of the note, as your Ladyship has seen. There is a discussion as to how one is going to bring this about.

If your Ladyship can just go over the page and if I can ask your Ladyship to glance at card two, side 3, your Ladyship sees that we have Mr Tenenbaum -- that is

T -- apparently acknowledging an awareness of the structure used for the sale of the Sibneft holding:

"Eugene was asking if liked structure for [Sibneft]/[Badri] yes. Problem complicated and costly."

Your Ladyship knows that despite this, Mr Abramovich claims that he was completely unaware of the Devonian sale agreement and the structure that was used. So again, if this is accurate, that evidence again would appear not to be true.

We then have a discussion about the way in which the Rusal shares were then held: that is to say all through BVI companies with bearer shares. Your Ladyship sees this:

"... problem is existing shares are..."

This is Mr Tenenbaum speaking:

"... problem is existing shares are bearer company with bearer shares."

Then just picking it up on side 4, Tenenbaum again:

"Problem -- shareholders of [Rusal Aluminium] -- all of shareholders in holding [company] we are partners of third party -- BVI's held 50/50 not RA."

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: What does that mean on your --

MR RABINOWITZ: I'm going to tell your Ladyship what it means. It relates to this. The arrangements that had been made between Mr Deripaska and Mr Abramovich as to how the 50/50 holding would be split with regard to the Rusal shares was unusual, it was counterintuitive, in that what they did was they set up -- and this evolves over time but certainly the position is as at this stage there were six BVI companies holding the shares in Rusal. What they didn't do was to say that three would be Abramovich companies and three would be Deripaska companies. The way they set it up was they each held 50 per cent of the six BVI companies. So, in a sense, they locked their positions together at that level.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: So what Mr Tenenbaum is saying, first accurately saying about the BVI companies all being bearer shareholdings, and secondly:

"... shareholders of [Rusal Aluminium] -- all of shareholders in holding [company] we are partners of third party -- BVI's held 50/50 not RA."

Not Mr Abramovich. It precisely reflects what I've just said to your Ladyship.

Now, in our respectful submission what is interesting and important about that is this: this information about the structure by which the Rusal shares were held is information that would have been known to Mr Tenenbaum. Indeed, Mr Tenenbaum in his evidence accepts that it is information he would have had. That, for your Ladyship's note, is E3, tab 11, page 110 E3/11/110, paragraphs 1103 and 1104. That sort of information, however, is not the sort of information that one would expect Mr Curtis, who apparently made this note up, to have. In our respectful submission, that again is an important indication of the authenticity of this note.

The second point I want to make relating to card two, side 4, is this. Your Ladyship sees at the end of side 4 Mr Tenenbaum is recorded as saying:

"... we have already made certain disclosures in market [and] we will have to consider what we have said -- Not to public.

"But to banks/insurance [companies]."

Now, as your Ladyship sees, this is put forward by Mr Tenenbaum in response to what Mr Curtis was saying should be the way in which the transactions should be accomplished. If your Ladyship goes back -- it's really the bottom of side 3 and also side 4, particularly the long paragraph where you see the S, where he's saying:

"... if shareholding already at BVI level it is easy to transfer ownership once we have established ownership route to RA -- no need to show changed in Russia just in BVI ... as going to have to change because of law..."

I'll come back to that.

"... good reason to show real. No need to show sale -- just say this was the true position -- reflecting actual position."

So what Mr Curtis appears to be saying is: transfer the shares into the names of Mr Berezovsky or Mr Patarkatsishvili or into their ownership because that would reflect the true position or the actual position. Mr Tenenbaum's response to that, in language that in my respectful submission echos the draft letter from Akin Gump we've just seen, is that, "We need to be careful about doing that because of representations we have may have made to the banks". Your Ladyship will recall that Akin Gump draft.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: We don't have Mr Tenenbaum in this note saying, "That's not the actual position. That's not the real position". What we have is him saying, "Well, we need to be careful about the actual real position being reflected because of representations made to the banks".

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Did Mr Curtis speak Russian?

MR RABINOWITZ: No, he didn't, but Mr Fomichev, who was at the meeting, did, he spoke English as well, and Mr Patarkatsishvili I think spoke English and Russian. Mr Tenenbaum plainly spoke English and Russian. I think Mr Patarkatsishvili's Russian was not fantastic.

MR SUMPTION: His Russian was excellent but his English was not fantastic.

MR RABINOWITZ: Sorry, it's the other way round.

Can I then also just make this point about this note. If your Ladyship looks at the last sentence recorded as coming from Mr Curtis on card two, side 3:

"S -- changing [bearer] shares now in BVI -- so do have to be registered anyway -- can transfer shares in BVI."

That's a response to Mr Tenenbaum making a comment about bearer shares.

As your Ladyship just sees, going again down to side 4, again there's a reference to BVI: the position of BVI is going to "change because of law". Your Ladyship sees that?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: What again we would respectfully submit is interesting about this is that we know that at the time in the BVI there was new legislation being brought in to regulate the ability of companies in the BVI, and in particular international business companies, to issue bearer shares. What we appear to have Mr Curtis doing here in this note is referring to this legislation which is about to come in and which was about to restrict your ability to deal with bearer shares in the way that I'm told then had been the case, and that is, for your Ladyship's note, the IBC (Amendment) Act 2003.

Now, the interesting point, in our respectful submission, about that is this. Mr Tenenbaum wants to say to your Ladyship that this is a sham; this note was simply (inaudible). If it was a sham, then in our respectful submission it was an incredibly sophisticated sham to have Mr Curtis here, in the context of a discussion about bearer shares and BVI company, dropping into the conversation the new change in BVI laws relating to bearer shares. So if it really was a fictitious note made up by Mr Curtis, then I have to say it was an incredibly detailed and sophisticated one, given the references made to this BVI legislation then being introduced.

So I would just repeat this about this note, my Lady: unless the Curtis notes are indeed bogus, they provide the clearest possible evidence that Mr Abramovich's whole case before this court, both in relation to Sibneft and in relation to Rusal, is simply dishonest and untrue. That is why the authenticity of these notes is such an important issue.

Can I then move on to deal with the Le Bourget transcript. Your Ladyship is, I suspect, very familiar with the background to Le Bourget, not least because it has been so extensively referred to in the written openings. That in my respectful submission is hardly surprising because it is, we would submit, another of the key documents in this case.

It is a key document because it captures the unguarded exchanges at least on the part of Mr Abramovich and Mr Berezovsky, neither of whom were aware that Mr Patarkatsishvili was secretly recording the conversation, covering a number of the key aspects of this case, including the nature of the parties' relationships as regards Sibneft and the nature of the relationship as regards Rusal.

It also, in our respectful submission, assists your Ladyship enormously with regard to the nature of the relationship between these men. Were they friends and partners or was their relationship, as Mr Abramovich contends, more criminal in nature, in the sense that he had been paying Mr Berezovsky for corrupt political practices and criminal protection? Again, in our respectful submission, the answer to that question also emerges very clearly from the Le Bourget transcript. So it is an important document.

As your Ladyship is aware, we've dealt in detail in writing -- and this is in our written opening at paragraph 60, page 42 in section B B(A)1/01/42 -- first with the history of the recording and its introduction as evidence in these proceedings; secondly with what we submit was Mr Abramovich's obvious discomfort when the recording was introduced as evidence in these proceedings; and third, with the fact that Mr Berezovsky has of course obtained evidence to establish that the Le Bourget transcript is indeed genuine.

Again, as your Ladyship is aware, we have set out the key extracts from the Le Bourget transcript in our written opening at the points where what is said there is material. Given that, I don't propose to spend too much time now dealing with it. In our submission, however, given the very central role that this is likely to play, it might just be worth taking a short bit of time to introduce your Ladyship to the document as it appears in the files. Can I ask your Ladyship -- it's in fact in tab 29 of this file. It's at E6/tab 01 of the trial bundles E6/01/1. Just.

So that I can explain the position to your Ladyship about this, there is a separate transcript of the Le Bourget conversation in the bundles -- for your Ladyship's note, that is at H(A)24, page 1T H(A)24/1T -- but the parties have tended, in my respectful submission sensibly, to use this version of the document for the purposes of their submission and I suspect will continue to do so because, as your Ladyship sees, it is a composite document in nature.

Just to show your Ladyship the way this works -- it's fairly obvious but I just show your Ladyship -- if your Ladyship goes to page 3, your Ladyship sees columns, left-hand column "Speaker", and just paging forward we have "P", "B", and if you go a few pages on to page 6 you see "A". "P" is Mr Patarkatsishvili, "B" is Mr Berezovsky, and "A" is obviously Mr Abramovich.

It's recorded in the airport and it starts -- you only hear Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Berezovsky at the outset because they're waiting to find Mr Abramovich. You see tannoy announcements coming across. So we have the speaker identified, then we have the Russian text and English translation. I think although there are some outstanding issues in relation to the translation, the parties are pretty close in terms of getting towards an agreement where that matters.

Then, as your Ladyship sees, the last two columns, one has Mr Berezovsky's commentary and then Mr Abramovich's commentary. Your Ladyship I expect will find that very helpful as one goes along.

Now, again, we are likely to be spending some time on this, certainly with Mr Abramovich when he comes to give his evidence, and I don't propose now to use up much time with it. We have set out the key parts of the transcript in our written document. Can I just remind your Ladyship of some of the main references to this. I'm not going to take your Ladyship to it; I will just, if I can, identify it.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I have it in the bundle.

MR RABINOWITZ: Boxes 456 to 470, beginning at page 159 and going through to page 165, that deals with Sibneft. We have set out the relevant passages at paragraph 228 to 230 of our written opening, pages 122 to 124 in section D B(A)1/01/122.

Boxes 495 to 510, beginning at page 170 and going through to page 175, that deals with both Sibneft and Rusal. Again, we've set out most of that at paragraphs 488 and following of our written opening, page 249, section G B(A)1/01/249.

Boxes 518 to 555 begins at page 177 and goes through to page 187. That deals with both Sibneft and Rusal and is also very helpful, we submit, in deciding whether these individuals were partners or persons in a Krysha relationship.

Finally, boxes 488 to 592, beginning at page 194 and going on to page 195, again dealing with all of those issues.

Now, as I say, I'm not going to take your Ladyship through that now; it's been set out in our written document and theirs as well. Can I just say this about Le Bourget, and that is to do with the authenticity challenge because although at the outset it appeared there was going to be a very substantial authenticity challenge to this, that seems to have largely disappeared. We are left with really what is rather a minor challenge to this document.

Can I perhaps take this by asking your Ladyship to go to annex C of our written opening, where we explain the position in this regard. Page 668 of that document B(A)3/668.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I have it.

MR RABINOWITZ: If I could just show your Ladyship paragraph 3, which sets out what is left of the --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I've read all this.

MR RABINOWITZ: Okay. If your Ladyship has seen that, then I don't need to take your Ladyship to anything.

So that is the Le Bourget transcript. Now, what I was proposing to do next, my Lady, is just to say something about evidence that has been given in other proceedings that may be material to the matters which your Ladyship has to decide; in particular where evidence has been given by parties who, for whatever reason, have declined to come before this court to give evidence.

I would respectfully suggest that there are perhaps two reasons that it may be worth just spending a short time on this evidence. The first reason is that given that the parties have chosen not to call any evidence, and I have in mind in particular the family defendants, given that they've actually decided not to call any witnesses --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: This is the Gibraltar proceedings.

MR RABINOWITZ: This is the Gibraltar proceedings. This may be the only occasion on which your Ladyship gets to see this evidence.

The second reason, which is related to that, is this: in my submission the evidence highlights what I would submit is the somewhat strange game being played in these proceedings by the family defendants. Your Ladyship will recall we spent some time in our written opening, especially at annex B, that's page 660 B(A)3/660, describing the convulsions in the family defendants' position and how, despite having previously admitted that Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Berezovsky were (a) partners and (b) partners who had an ownership interest together in both Sibneft and Rusal, they have for the purposes of this litigation now adopted a wholly different position altogether more hostile to Mr Berezovsky.

What I would like to do is just to show your Ladyship some of the evidence -- it won't take very long -- that has previously been given about these issues by Ms Gudavadze, the wife of Mr Patarkatsishvili, in proceedings in Gibraltar. Your Ladyship knows which proceedings I have in mind. Does your Ladyship feel you know enough about what those proceedings were about or shall I take a minute just to...?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I read, and I read it yesterday evening in fact again, annex B. If there's anything in addition to that you would like to tell me, please do.

MR RABINOWITZ: Annex B is about the change in case rather than the evidence so perhaps I can just say something about the Gibraltar proceeding and show your Ladyship just a little bit of evidence.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. Where do I find it in the first volume of your main skeleton?

MR RABINOWITZ: Perhaps I can just show your Ladyship the evidence. You will find it in this bundle, tab 31, so right at the back. The bundle reference is S1, tab 13, page 201 S1/1.13/201.

Again, just so your Ladyship has this, the Gibraltar proceedings were proceedings commenced in April 2004 in the Chancery Division of the Supreme Court of Gibraltar by Miselva Etablissement, a Liechtenstein trust company, and Nexus Treuhand AG, a Swiss trust company. Nexus and Miselva were respectively trustees of two trusts, the first named the Valmore Trust, the second the Summit Trust. The trustees sought directions from the Gibraltar court as to how to distribute assets in their trusts.

The defendants to that claim were Ms Gudavadze, the widow of Mr Patarkatsishvili, Mr Kay and two daughters of Mr Patarkatsishvili to his marriage with Ms Gudavadze: that's a Ms Iya Patarkatsishvili and Ms Liana Zhmotova. The main issue in that litigation concerned who was the real settlor of this trust, was it Mr Patarkatsishvili or Mr Kay; and for whose benefit had these trusts been established, for the benefit of Mr Patarkatsishvili's family or for the benefit of Mr Kay.

In the course of those proceedings, evidence was given by a number of people about the assets which were understood to have been owned by Mr Patarkatsishvili and also about Mr Berezovsky's relationship to those assets, including Ms Gudavadze.

What one finds at S1, tab 13, page 201, at tab 31 of the bundle I've handed up, is evidence given by Ms Gudavadze. On the top left-hand corner your Ladyship has page 109, I hope.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: It's almost impossible to read, I'm afraid, and I apologise for that.

I understand Ms Gudavadze is in court at the moment so is plainly not unable to come and give evidence.

What we have -- I don't know whether your Ladyship has this up on the screen?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I have.

MR RABINOWITZ: Question:

"You see, another thing is this: I don't know whether you know about, he is discussing his business with you" --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: What line?

MR RABINOWITZ: Sorry, line 1. The question is this:

"... he is discussing his business with you, you know that he sold most of his Russian assets over time after he left Russia in, was it 2001?"

Ms Gudavadze:

"Yes, he sold part of his assets.

"Question: He sold Sibneft, he sold ORT, he sold his interest in Rusal?

"Answer: Yes."

So she agrees.

So your Ladyship sees there's an exchange between counsel and Ms Gudavadze and she's asked about Sibneft, ORT and Rusal, and we see that she appears to confirm that Mr Patarkatsishvili both had and disposed of an interest in Rusal and indeed in Sibneft. That of course is entirely consistent with Mr Berezovsky's case and of course wholly contrary to Mr Abramovich's case and indeed no longer squares with the family defendants' own pleading.

Perhaps I can just ask your Ladyship next to go to tab 13.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Who is cross-examining or examining here?

MR ADKIN: My Lady, I can assist: it's Mr Kay's counsel, Mr Steinfeld was cross-examining at this point.

MR RABINOWITZ: Can I ask your Ladyship next to go to tab 30. Top left-hand corner --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: What was the issue that the trustees were raising: who was the settlor?

MR RABINOWITZ: They wanted to know who was the settlor of the trust. Mr Kay was obviously saying he was the settlor of the trust and that he should therefore have been entitled to the benefit of his trust. The Patarkatsishvili family were saying Mr Patarkatsishvili was the settlor of this trust and they were entitled to the assets. So the question of the assets and who owned them was very much part of the issues in dispute.

Now, at tab 30, there's S1, tab 12, page 200 of the trial bundle S1/1.12/200. Your Ladyship has page 30 of the transcript. Again, I think this is Ms Gudavadze giving evidence:

"What sort of details..."

Perhaps one should pick it up at the bottom of page 29.

"Question: I am not going to go back, I assure you, to the memorandum of understanding. Did [Mr Patarkatsishvili] discuss with you his business dealings with Boris Berezovsky?"

"Answer: His business dealings with Berezovsky, to certain extent yes. Yes.

"Question: What sort of details did he give you about those?"

"Answer: I had general knowledge of Sibneft or RusAl, Kommersant was more close to me because I was taking part in, in fact, when Badri purchased Kommersant, about ORT.

"Question: Did he, for example, ever mention that he had an oral arrangement or partnership with Boris Berezovsky? Did he mention that to you?"

"Answer: Yes, until 2006, yes, they were partners."

Your Ladyship knows there's a dispute in the Chancery Division about whether or not that partnership ended in 2006 but what one has here is, again, Ms Gudavadze making perfectly clear that to her knowledge they were indeed partners, Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili.

Now, it wasn't just Ms Gudavadze who in her evidence appeared to say that she knew and understood not only that Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili were partners but also that they had ownership interests in both Sibneft and Rusal; in fact, that was their whole case at this trial.

Can I ask your Ladyship next, please, to go to tab 32 of this bundle. It's S1, tab 14, page 202 S1/1.14/202. You should have page 114 of the transcript of 12 June 2009. Page 114 is at the top right-hand corner.

This is Lord Goldsmith, who was acting for Ms Gudavadze and her family, and he was cross-examining Mr Kay at this stage. I can tell your Ladyship that just prior to obviously appearing in this way, Lord Goldsmith had actually met with Mr Patarkatsishvili on the day that Mr Patarkatsishvili died.

Here we have Lord Goldsmith saying this, if I can pick it up at about line 6:

"Question: Let's just be clear what this deal was. We know from other evidence, don't we, that as a result of pressure being put on Berezovsky and Badri, they had to sell certain businesses including Sibneft to Roman Abramovich?"

Now, there is a debate, as your Ladyship knows, about what Badri's evidence would have been had he lived. But we have here Lord Goldsmith putting this case:

"... as a result of pressure being put on Berezovsky and Badri, they had to sell certain businesses including Sibneft to Roman Abramovich?"

"Answer: That is correct.

"Question: And they had direct communications with Abramovich about this; isn't that right?"

"Answer: Direct and... through us as well.

"Question: It was decided that the deal was going to be done through a third party so that the money would not actually go... from Abramovich to Berezovsky and Badri?"

"Answer: It couldn't go directly.

"Question: Because the Russian Government would have taken exception to that; is that right?"

"Answer: Yes."

And then Mr Kay talks about it going through the sheikh.

They are talking, as your Ladyship sees there, about Sibneft. It's absolutely part of the family defendants' case -- sorry, Mr Gudavadze's case and her daughters -- that Mr Patarkatsishvili did indeed have an interest in Sibneft and he did indeed sell that interest with Mr Berezovsky to Mr Abramovich.

Again, one has to compare that with the position that they are now taking in this litigation. They put a positive case before the Gibraltar court that Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Berezovsky were partners with an interest in both Sibneft and Rusal and perhaps, given that positive case, it's not surprising that Ms Gudavadze or indeed any of the other family defendants have decided not to come and give evidence to your Ladyship about these matters.

My Lady, this, we would submit, does bring into focus the appropriate scope and role of the family defendants in this trial. They have, as your Ladyship knows, served no witness statements at all, although it is clear from what I've shown your Ladyship the only thing those witness statements could have said if they had been served. But what they have done, wherever possible, my Lady, is to take a position in this litigation that is -- wherever they can do this and indeed in circumstances where they can't properly do it -- adverse to Mr Berezovsky and his interests.

I stress that they do it even when they cannot legitimately take that sort of position because, as your Ladyship knows -- your Ladyship will have seen this in our written opening -- they have entirely trampled over what your Ladyship ordered in relation to the scope of their wrong with regard to the overlap issues when one comes to deal with the Russian history evidence and the Russian law.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I haven't let that evidence in yet, have I?

MR RABINOWITZ: You Ladyship hasn't let that evidence in. We're going to suggest that it should be excluded because there is something very odd about the way the family defendants are behaving here.

I'm going to show your Ladyship what we say about the Russian law position because we've never even had an attempt to answer why they've taken this position. Perhaps I can just pick this up. We had the same problem with the history evidence: they simply run roughshod over what your Ladyship made clear was the proper extent of their role, to put in whatever they can to hurt Mr Berezovsky's interests. Their Russian law position is just an egregious disregard of what your Ladyship has said.

Can I just show your Ladyship -- pick it up from our written opening. Your Ladyship will find this in paragraph 950 on page 470 of our written opening, so it's section O, volume 2 B(A)2/470. Just picking this up at paragraph 950. I'll just pick it up from after the "Nonetheless":

"... the Family Defendants have served an expert report..."

I'm not going to deal with the Russian history position but I have to say it is not much better. It is marginally better because they do manage to trespass on a relevant issue there, but here they don't even manage that.

"... the Family Defendants have served an expert report on Russian law from Professor Peter B Maggs. This report addresses two questions as a matter of Russian law: whether the Dorchester Agreement was a binding contract under Russian law, and whether Russian law recognised the concept of trusts and trust property at the time of the Dorchester meeting: Maggs..."

"Professor Maggs' report does not go to any Overlap Issue and it is respectfully submitted that it is wholly inadmissible and should be excluded:

"(1) Neither Mr Berezovsky nor Mr Abramovich maintain that the Dorchester Agreement was a binding contract under Russian law, or that any trust property arose under Russian law in respect of that meeting or RusAl.

"(2) Professor Maggs concludes that he is in full agreement with the opinions of Mr Rozenberg and Dr Rachkov on the questions which he has been asked to consider...

"(3) Hogan Lovells have not been able to identify any pleaded issue to which Professor Maggs' evidence relates. Nonetheless they insisted on Professor Maggs attending the Joint Meeting of Experts on Russian law, even though he was in full agreement with his fellow experts on the issues he had been asked to consider...

"(4) Professor Maggs proceeds in his report to comment, however, on other issues of Russian law which have been debated between Mr Rozenberg and Mr Rachkov in the context of the Sibneft claim -- a claim that does not give rise to any Overlap Issues or concern the Family Defendants in any way."

Then we said:

"(5) It is an abuse of process for the Family" --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I've read that.

MR RABINOWITZ: Your Ladyship should also know that we kept writing to them saying, "Well, you tell us, what is the pleaded issue which this relates to?" No response which engaged with that at all. They just, in a sense, filibustered their way into that position.

The irrelevance of the Russian law to the family defendants' position is perhaps highlighted by the fact that it is not mentioned once at all in the 50 pages of their opening submissions. It's not there, and that's not surprising, because it just doesn't arise on the overlap issue.

As I've indicated, it will be our submission -- we've warned the family defendants about this -- that your Ladyship should exclude this evidence entirely. There is no permission for it; it is utterly irrelevant; it will be a huge waste of time if we have to cross-examine Professor Maggs about it at length just because of the way he tries to give support to Mr Abramovich's own experts on matters which have nothing to do with the overlap issue.

The only matter of relevance that arises from this, I would suggest, is why the family defendants have chosen to act in the way they have, notwithstanding that it must have been obvious to them that they had no basis whatever for wanting to adduce this evidence in circumstances where it so obviously went beyond the overlap issue. The family defendants are, as I've suggested, playing a rather odd game here and, as we've indicated in our written opening, Mr Berezovsky has a general concern about what precisely lies behind this.

Finally in terms of documentation, can I next say something about the evidence your Ladyship has from Mr Patarkatsishvili. It will be clear to your Ladyship from the written openings that this evidence has something of the curate's egg about it, with both parties claiming that it provides them with assistance.

As your Ladyship may perhaps have observed, there is rather a lot of material collected from the various solicitors at various times from Mr Patarkatsishvili before he died in February 2008. Although it is fair to say, I would submit, that the process was far from completed, even on the evidence that Mr Patarkatsishvili had by the time of his death given to his solicitors, there is at least some material that would assist the court.

Your Ladyship will be aware that these are very substantial -- I plainly don't have the time to take your Ladyship through all of this, I suspect we're going to see a fair amount of it in the course of the evidence, but if I can just take your Ladyship to one or two extracts that might assist.

Can I ask your Ladyship --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Shall I have a ten-minute break for the shorthand writers?

MR RABINOWITZ: Yes.

(3.10 pm)

(A short break)

(3.24 pm)

MR RABINOWITZ: My Lady, I was about to show you some of the evidence taken from Mr Patarkatsishvili before his death in February 2008. Can I invite your Ladyship first to go to tab 25 in this bundle: H(A)96, page 151 H(A)96/151.

At tab 25 your Ladyship should have a draft and unsigned witness statement that had been produced by Cadwalader, who were then the solicitors on the record for Mr Berezovsky. As Ms Duncan, the Cadwalader partner, and Mr McKim, her assistant, explain, in evidence they will give to your Ladyship in due course, this is a document they had put together following first their review of the earlier notes that had been taken by Mr Berezovsky's previous solicitors of Mr Patarkatsishvili's evidence; and secondly, evidence that they had collected following meetings over two days with Mr Patarkatsishvili, with Mr Berezovsky also present, in Tel Aviv on 29 and 30 November 2007.

I take your Ladyship to this first because although, as will be clear to your Ladyship, it is still a work in progress -- one sees that because there are from time to time notes from the solicitors asking further questions; they are still trying to get all the relevant information from him -- it does represent, I would suggest, a very much better understanding of Mr Patarkatsishvili's position on the key issues than any earlier notes, which, although certainly useful, are necessarily much rougher in terms of gathering Mr Patarkatsishvili's view of things that would be the later notes.

At this stage I don't want to take up too much time on this. As I say, they are likely to be referred to at length during the evidence of the witnesses. Can I perhaps take your Ladyship to one or two passages -- in fact that's a lie, I'm going to be taking you to more than one or two passages -- but can I begin by taking your Ladyship to paragraph 12 on page 154.

Just if I can show your Ladyship what is said here:

"In a series of discussions between myself, Boris and Roman, we agreed that any interests we acquired in Sibneft would be beneficially held as to 50% by Roman, and as to the remaining 50% by Boris and myself."

I'm happy for your Ladyship to read the whole of that --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Shall I read all that for myself?

MR RABINOWITZ: Indeed. (Pause)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I've read that.

MR RABINOWITZ: As your Ladyship sees, at the beginning he says:

"... we agreed that any interests we acquired... would be beneficially held as to 50% by Roman, and as to the remaining 50% by Boris and myself."

He says he remembers the principle of 50/50 sharing very clearly, in the last line. Again, if that is right, that is again completely contrary to Mr Abramovich's case.

Paragraph 19 on page 156:

"We first became involved in the aluminium industry in 1999 at the time aluminium assets became available in the market. I was of the view that this sector represented a good opportunity and I shared my opinions with Boris and Roman. They agreed with me and we decided to purchase aluminium assets with funds generated through our core shareholdings in Sibneft."

Then paragraph 25 on page 158:

"The final agreement for the creation of RusAl was reached at a meeting at the Dorchester Hotel in Park Lane... in March 2000. It was agreed that we would merge our aluminium assets, KrAZ, BrAZ", et cetera --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I've read all that.

MR RABINOWITZ: "The shares in RusAl were to be held between [Mr Deripaska]... and ourselves in the ratio of 50:50; the shares were held 25% Boris and myself, 25% Roman and 50% Deripaska."

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I've read a few of these.

MR RABINOWITZ: Perhaps I can point your Ladyship to it and if you've read it, I won't read it again.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: It may be that I haven't actually read the paragraph that you've taken me to, but certainly in the course of my pre-reading I've read a few of these documents.

MR RABINOWITZ: All right. Can I ask your Ladyship next to go to paragraph 51; that's at page 163.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. Let me just read that.

MR RABINOWITZ: In fact, can I invite your Ladyship to read from paragraph 51 down to paragraph 60 on page 165.

(Pause)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I've read that.

MR RABINOWITZ: Then paragraph 65 on the following page:

"I reiterate that had Roman not exerted the pressure I discuss above I would never have contemplated selling my stake in Sibneft. It was a growing company in which I had invested significant sums, and that was becoming increasingly profitable, and its dividends represented my principal source of income once the business was up and running. There was simply no good commercial reason for us to sell when we did -- it was solely down to Roman's pressure."

Then, if your Ladyship has read that, I can invite you to go to paragraph 68 in relation to the sale of Rusal; that's at page 167.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just give me the date again of this proof.

MR RABINOWITZ: It was taken in 2007, I think November 29 and 30. It has a date at the bottom, 14 December 2007. It followed meetings with Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Berezovsky --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: That's the computer-generated date of the document?

MR RABINOWITZ: Indeed. There were meetings -- they took notes at meetings which took place in Tel Aviv on 29 and 30 November 2007.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, thank you. Where do you want me to read to now?

MR RABINOWITZ: Paragraph 68, I think that may be what your Ladyship just has read. If your Ladyship has read that, then paragraphs 78 and 79.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: These are the documents you were taking me to this morning, is that right?

MR RABINOWITZ: Indeed. Your Ladyship sees in particular paragraph 79 where he says --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I've read that.

MR RABINOWITZ: -- can't see the documents. So, as I say, this is not signed, indeed it's not finally approved by Mr Patarkatsishvili but it's the last stab at trying to get evidence from him and, in our respectful submission, on the key elements it certainly helps Mr Berezovsky's case.

I entirely accept, as I think is clear from my learned friend's skeleton, that there are other aspects of the documents, the notes taken from Mr Patarkatsishvili to various solicitors that my learned friends can rely on and indeed they do, but I would make two points about the earlier notes on which they rely.

First, that in my respectful submission one is much more likely to have got closer to the true position as those asking the questions became more familiar with what the issues were really about than is the position with the earlier conversations where there was much more room for misunderstanding.

Secondly, that even in the earlier notes of conversations that my learned friends would prefer to rely upon, even then two things are very clear and both, if true, suggest that Mr Abramovich's entire case before this court is false.

Those two things are, first, that Mr Abramovich was not the owner of Sibneft on his own and that in fact Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili were his partners and, secondly, that Mr Abramovich is again simply not telling the truth when he suggests, again, that he and he alone was the acquirer of the aluminium interests in 2000 or indeed the person beneficially entitled to the 50 per cent interest in Sibneft.

Can I therefore take your Ladyship to the first occasion on which notes were taken from Mr Patarkatsishvili as to what his understanding of the position was in relation to these matters. In the bundle that I've handed to your Ladyship, you'll find these or at least some of them at tab 24. It's at H(A)89, page 220 H(A)89/220, for those of you looking at the screen.

Just to say what these notes are, this is a transcript of notes which were made following the first meeting with Mr Patarkatsishvili which took place in Tbilisi, Georgia, I think the meeting was on 29 June 2005. It was attended by, among others, Mr Andrew Stephenson, a partner from Carter Ruck, and Mr James Lankshear, a partner from Streathers. My Lady, the notes that begin at page 220 are a typed-up version of those made by one of the attendees at that meeting, I think it was Mr Stephenson.

Whilst there is a fair amount of material, perhaps for present purposes I can invite your Ladyship to go to page 224, where we get an indication of Mr Patarkatsishvili's evidence to these solicitors of the position in relation to Sibneft. It's above the page:

"Purchase of Sibneft.

"Badri cannot give exact answer -- maximum amount of RA - several million US BP less than 10 m[illion] ...

"All rest our resources -- bank credits -- BB negotiated everywhere, worldwide -- pledged everything -- BP clear understanding serious money.

"Offers to sell after elections to sell for billions -- results of election."

Then this is the key aspect of this for present purposes:

"Sibneft shareholders.

"50/50.

"Roman 50 -- BP/BB 50%.

"Roman who brought idea -- in while RA idea to make business -- from beginning want to split 3 ways -- RA know how to run business. No human resource to manage company. Wanted RA to feel as partner."

That's a clear indication as to what Mr Patarkatsishvili's understanding again was of who were the shareholders in Sibneft.

Then, if I can invite your Ladyship next to -- well, just look again, still on page 224, to what he says about Rusal:

"Rusal.

"BP, Vasiliy -- co-owners of aluminium company. Lev Boiko -- Rossiskaya -- Lev -- owned 75%..."

He's identifying the various interests.

"BP helped to solve problem -- Chernoi and Anisimov -- saw BP help very important -- could do more if a partner -- invited to buy other aluminium resources ... new [negotiations] in BP's presence; his office achieved success in this."

Just scrolling down, your Ladyship sees:

"Alfa Group was enemy for Lev Chernoi -- ask BB what to do, BB [that's Mr Berezovsky] talk to [Mr Abramovich] -- went to Roman office -- let's go -- take these actions -- we start [negotiations]."

And then this:

"Buyer, not middlemen."

So, again, it's perfectly clear, I would submit, what his position is about this and it becomes clearer still if your Ladyship goes to page 229.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: This is under the heading "Rusal":

"Shares held by [Mr Abramovich];

"50% jointly with [Mr Abramovich] --

"Found Roman negotiating sale of his 25%.

"RA -- holding [negotiations without] informing us.

"After [Abramovich] sold 25% -- invite him to talk of future -- Badri told RA didn't want to stay alone against Deripaska -- wanted to sell -- [Abramovich] represented common interests -- didn't want to have to deal with Deripaska directly."

Your Ladyship sees what is said there, plainly again Mr Patarkatsishvili confirming that the 25 per cent that was unsold was shares in which he had an interest.

Then in terms of the Sibneft sale and the reasons why there was a payment of 1.3 billion, your Ladyship may wish to glance at page 228. Can I invite your Ladyship just to read what is said about the position at page 228. (Pause)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I've read that.

MR RABINOWITZ: In my respectful submission, my Lady, the key thing that emerges from what one has at page 228 is this. As your Ladyship knows, Mr Abramovich -- it goes to why the 1.3 billion was paid which in a sense is, as I indicated at the outset, one of the key issues in this case. Mr Berezovsky's case has always been that that was paid in respect of his Sibneft interests and it was at an undervalue and that he was pressured by Mr Abramovich to sell, with threats having been made. Mr Abramovich's position, of course, is that the $1.3 billion was not paid in respect of any interest at all. It was, in a sense, a gratuity. He was paying these people even though, on his case, they couldn't give him anything. There was nothing more that they were doing for him, they were not selling him anything, he previously paid them for something, he says, services, and he was just paying this for little more than gratuity purposes.

Again what one has here is Mr Patarkatsishvili making it clear that certainly his understanding was that he was selling an interest in Sibneft. Again, in our respectful submission, if this is right, that undermines in a very serious way Mr Abramovich's case.

Now, that is all I was proposing to show your Ladyship from this. As I say, there are plainly bits in these unfinished documents where evidence is still being gathered that both sides can and do rely upon, but what I would submit -- last paragraph there, how do you analyse:

"Initiative of Badri -- where complaining -- better option to sell [and] to stop pressure"?

MR RABINOWITZ: That is Badri coming to Mr Berezovsky.

Mr Berezovsky never wanted to sell, Mr Patarkatsishvili was much more willing to sell than Mr Berezovsky. So what appears to be happening here is Mr Patarkatsishvili is saying that, as between the two of them, he was the one who was saying "We should sell". That again reflects Mr Berezovsky's ambivalence.

What I would submit is clear from these documents and this evidence is that, if these notes do prove to be reliable evidence about the position in relation to Sibneft and Rusal, then the case that Mr Abramovich has put before this court on the key issue of were these men people who had an interest in these companies, will be shown not to be a true case. It will be a false case.

Subject to that and subject to your Ladyship having anything that you would like me to deal with, that was all I was proposing to say in opening. I've finished slightly ahead of schedule.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, that's excellent. I'm very grateful to all your team for the very full written submissions, all of which I have read. Thank you very much indeed, Mr Rabinowitz.

Mr Sumption, are you going next and do you want to start today?

MR SUMPTION: I'm in your Ladyship's hands. I would actually rather start tomorrow. I think your Ladyship appointed 10.15 as the starting point but if you want me to start now I will.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, unless Mr Rabinowitz is pressing --

MR RABINOWITZ: I'm perfectly happy for Mr Sumption to start tomorrow.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well. How is the timeframe?

MR SUMPTION: I shall finish well within tomorrow just as my learned friend has done. I will probably take about the same time as he did. So we will start on the amendment application --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I'm going to let the others --

MR SUMPTION: There's then short statements by the others, forgive me. We probably will get to the amendment applications first thing on Wednesday.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Mr Malek, is that how you see things?

MR MALEK: My Lady, I appear for the Anisimov defendants, I will be 10 to 15 minutes so I agree with Mr Sumption's assessment.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. So it looks as though we might complete your submissions tomorrow as well.

MR MALEK: Yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: And, Mr Mumford, that goes for you, does it?

MR MUMFORD: My Lady, I'll be very short indeed.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: And Mr Adkin as well?

MR ADKIN: My Lady, yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Okay. Well then, do you prefer to sit at 10.15?

MR SUMPTION: I was simply remembering, perhaps wrongly, what your Ladyship directed. I will sit -- there's something to be said for it.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I think I said 10.15 because of the quarter of an hour breaks for the shorthand writers, but if it's inconvenient -- Mr Rabinowitz, are you happy to sit at 10.15?

MR RABINOWITZ: I'm in your Ladyship's hands. I don't mind either.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Why don't we sit at 10.15 and that means we may be able to rise a bit earlier than 1 o'clock which makes it easier for getting in and out of the building.

Ms Davies.

MS DAVIES: My Lady, I have the order. It still has paragraph 4 in it which we're not pursuing just at the moment so if I can ask my Lady to cross that out.

(Handed)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I've read the application, I'm minded to make the order.

MS DAVIES: Paragraph 4 is the one that Douglas (inaudible) have indicated they want to make some oral submissions on so we're not pursuing that just at this moment.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, right.

MS DAVIES: My Lady, the other thing I said I would hand up last week, which I hadn't yet given to my learned friend, is a draft timetable so I'll just hand that up now as well. (Handed)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you. Subject to changing the date, I will sign that.

Would you let my clerk have a copy of the signed order?

MS DAVIES: Of course, my Lady.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. This is a proposed timetable.

MS DAVIES: It's a proposed timetable which sets out the order of the proposed witnesses and counsel's best estimates at the moment of the likely time for each witness. Obviously everyone is aware that it's very difficult to be precise about these things and flexibility has to be taken into account. My learned friend Mr Rabinowitz is shaking his head, I did show it to Mr Gillis.

MR RABINOWITZ: I haven't seen it and I'm certainly not going to say it won't work. The only thing I would say is that, if it's changed in a way which means -- we need to check with the witnesses who thought they would be in week seven who are now told they're going to be in week three or four, that they can do the time that it is now suggested they will have to do.

MS DAVIES: Of course. I don't believe there has been very much change to my learned friend's witnesses but, of course, if there are problems they will no doubt notify us as soon as possible.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Thank you very much.

MR GILLIS: My Lady, might I just enquire, on our application under CPR 31.22 which was in relation to the French documents and the --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I thought I'd signed that.

MR GILLIS: That's what I wanted to ask. I wasn't sure whether that --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I thought I signed that on Thursday, but if I didn't, I'll get my clerk to provide you with a copy.

MR GILLIS: I'm obliged.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Very well. 10.15 tomorrow.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, Mr Sumption.

Opening submissions by MR SUMPTION

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, Mr Rabinowitz began yesterday by inviting your Ladyship to find the facts in this case with an eye to the inherent probabilities. Obviously that is right in principle and it's a point that I will be making myself at a number of points in this trial. We do, however, have to remember that what is inherently probable in a secure and relatively ordered society like ours, governed by the rule of law, is not necessarily inherently probable in the really quite extraordinary conditions that prevailed in Russia in the 1990s.

Your Ladyship knows the outline: it is apparent from the historical experts, from a number of witnesses and indeed from Mr Berezovsky's own evidence. After the final collapse of communism in 1992, Russia became Europe's "Wild East". A country which had never in its entire history been either liberal or democratic in its governmental institutions now experienced in less than a decade a transition to capitalism which had taken other European countries are more than a century to achieve.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just a second. There's a gentleman who is standing there: can you either stand at the back or find yourself a chair, please.

MR SUMPTION: The result of this was an immense social upheaval, the partial collapse of old structures of authority the enfeeblement and the impoverishment of the state and the disappearance of the rule of law.

Of course there were laws; Dr Rachkov and my experts will be dealing with them in due course. There were codes which spoke of rights and duties, contracts and torts, but there was no rule of law. We know from Mr Berezovsky's own evidence that criminal violence had become simply business by other means. We know that policing was corrupt, selective and manipulable and that the courts were unreliable at best -- this is his own evidence -- and at worst open to manipulation by major political or economical interest groups.

It is a fact, also apparent from Mr Berezovsky's evidence, that nobody could acquire or build up a substantial business in Russia in the 1990s without access to political power. If you did not have political power yourself, then you needed access to a godfather who did. Mr Berezovsky himself says in his witness statement that he turned to politics in 1994 after finding that the showrooms of his motor dealership were being attacked by gangs employed by business rivals and that he himself was the target of an attempted assassination which killed his chauffeur.

Now, in a society without law, people devise alternative structures to govern their relations based not on law but on power. That is what happened in the society with which your Ladyship is concerned in these proceedings. It isn't easy for an English lawyer on either side of the court to assess the behaviour of people who have to live in such a world. In our own national experience we have to go back to the 15th century to find anything remotely comparable.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I hope I'm not going to be having any expert evidence about life in the 15th century.

MR SUMPTION: Not from me, but your Ladyship has read Shakespeare I have no doubt.

Of course no system based on power can exist without its own rather special code of personal obligations. It depends on a system of reciprocal favours going well beyond legal obligation and indeed supplanting legal obligation; an automatic and unspoken assumption that favours will be returned in proportion to their value, which became a rule of self-preservation in a world where there could be no effective resort to law.

Mr Berezovsky in fact expresses it rather well in his witness statement when, in describing why the agreement that he claims to have made with Mr Abramovich was never recorded in writing, he said that:

"... a high emphasis on personal trust and on the mutual expectations of good faith between the parties (not least because the court system in Russia was an unreliable way of settling disputes, even if agreements were in writing)."

That is a paraphrase of what he says in his fourth witness statement at paragraph 107(b) D2/17/220.

Now, Mr Berezovsky was a highly controversial figure in Russian politics in the 1990s, in a decade when there was no shortage of controversial figures. Boris Berezovsky was a power broker; he turned from business to politics in the middle of the decade precisely because of the difficulties of running a business without access to power. What he discovered was that the exercise of political power could itself be a source of considerable wealth.

His own case in this action is a very good illustration of this. Mr Berezovsky received between 1995 and 2002 at least $2 billion from businesses controlled by Roman Abramovich. There may be differences between the parties about the precise amount but it is quite clear from the evidence of both sides that it was of that order.

For the purposes of my present point, it does not matter whether these payments represented the value of Mr Berezovsky's services as a political godfather, as we contend, or the value of an interest in Mr Abramovich's businesses, as he contends. The point is that Mr Berezovsky did not contribute a single cent to the cost of either acquiring or building up those businesses, either on the oil side or later on the aluminium side, not a cent, nor does he claim to have done.

Not only did Mr Berezovsky contribute nothing to the cost of acquiring and building up these businesses but he contributed nothing to the managerial skills which built the business up, except to serve as a director of Sibneft for a brief period of three months in 1996. Mr Berezovsky accepts that the deal with Mr Abramovich was that Mr Abramovich and his team were going to manage Sibneft.

He claims in his witness statement to have offered advice and enjoyed some influence over major decisions affecting Sibneft. However, a fairer account of his role in the management would be the one that he gave to the Gibraltar court in the course of the North Shore litigation against his former factotum, Mr Fomichev.

In that litigation he refused to answer questions in cross-examination about the business of Sibneft or its associated trading companies because he knew absolutely nothing about their business, that being, he said, left entirely to Mr Abramovich. "I know nothing about oil", he said, and nor did he. Your Ladyship will find the relevant part of the transcript at bundle H(A), volume 98, page 98 H(A)98/98. I don't ask you to -- sorry, that's in the Commercial Court action, forgive me, not in Gibraltar. I don't ask your Ladyship to turn up that extract now.

Mr Berezovsky's case must be --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: The Commercial Court action against Fomichev?

MR SUMPTION: Yes, that's right. I was getting muddled with the Valmore litigation, forgive me.

Mr Berezovsky's case has got to be, if only implicitly, that he and Mr Patarkatsishvili were entitled between them to a half-share of the capital value and profits of Sibneft, and later Rusal, without making any financial contribution to their acquisition or any managerial contribution to their subsequent fortunes.

Now, if Mr Berezovsky's contribution was not money and not management then what was it? The answer in our submission is that his contribution was important, indeed it was indispensable, but it was entirely political; or I should perhaps say almost entirely political because in addition to his political services we accept that Mr Berezovsky did provide Mr Abramovich with valuable introductions to financial institutions who were involved at an early stage of the process. But that was marginal by comparison with his political contribution.

Mr Berezovsky persuaded the Russian government to create Sibneft out of two major state-owned oil businesses in Siberia, the Omsk refinery and an oil producer called Noyabrskneftegas, which I'm going to call Neftegas for reasons that your Ladyship may well understand. Otherwise those two businesses would have been consolidated into the Russian state oil company Rosneft, for which they have been earmarked.

Mr Berezovsky persuaded the Russian government to sell the right to manage Sibneft on the State's behalf under an auction procedure which was easy to rig and was in fact rigged, mainly by Mr Berezovsky himself. I will explain how that happened in a moment. That's what enabled Mr Abramovich to take control of Sibneft at a time when the state remained a 51 per cent majority shareholder in it.

Now, this is how it was done according to Mr Berezovsky's own witness statement. In 1995 Mr Berezovsky had two main sources of political power. The first was that he had established a close relationship with influential people in the immediate circle of President Yeltsin, in particular the president's daughter, Tatyana Dyachenko and Mr Valentin Yumashev, who was the president's future son-in-law and future chief of staff. The second source of his power was his control over the only Russian television network with a truly national reach: 98 per cent of the national territory.

In the previous year, 1994, using his contacts within the presidential circle, Mr Berezovsky persuaded President Yeltsin to partially privatise the state-owned broadcasting network, Ostankino. The assets of Ostankino were therefore vested by the state in a private company, ORT, 49 per cent of which was sold off to a consortium of oligarchs formed by Mr Berezovsky himself. Mr Berezovsky was allowed by his fellow oligarchs to take management control over ORT under a power of attorney and in fact he bought the other private investors out over the following years.

The problem about ORT was that it was bust.

Mr Berezovsky had always known that it was bust; his interest in it was as a source of political influence. ORT needed, according to the evidence of one of Mr Berezovsky's assistants in this period, Ms Nosova, about $200 million a year to keep it going. The financial position of the company seems to have improved somewhat from 1997 onwards, when Mr Patarkatsishvili, who in practice ran ORT, succeeded in bringing some sort of order to its affairs, but it was never a financially flourishing enterprise.

The acquisition of control over Sibneft was, as Mr Berezovsky acknowledges, a project brought to him by Mr Abramovich during a Caribbean cruise at the very end of 1994. Mr Berezovsky's interest in it, as he accepts, was motivated by his need to find a source of funds to contribute to the huge funding gap in ORT. Mr Berezovsky therefore made two related deals: one with Boris Yeltsin and the other with Mr Abramovich.

The deal with Boris Yeltsin in 1995, as described in Mr Berezovsky's witness statement, was very simple. President Yeltsin agreed to create Sibneft and vest the two Siberian businesses in it. The new company would then be included in the loans for shares scheme under which the State auctioned the right to manage its 51 per cent controlling interest in the company while selling off the other 49 per cent. The avowed purpose of this exercise was to enable Boris Berezovsky and his associate, Mr Abramovich, to take control over Sibneft and use it to provide a source of funds to finance the operations of ORT and enable it to support President Yeltsin in the elections that were due to occur in June 1996.

Mr Berezovsky in his witness statement says that the main reason why he was able to prevail on President Yeltsin to do this was that he was trading access to State assets on favoured terms in return for electoral support by his powerful media empire. The parallel deal between Mr Berezovsky and Mr Abramovich was equally simple: in return for getting what was needed out of President Yeltsin, Mr Berezovsky was going to be provided by Mr Abramovich with the cash stream which he could use to contribute to the funding of ORT.

My learned friend said that if such a deal was made, it was a corrupt deal. It was made, according to Mr Berezovsky's own evidence. I accept of course that my client was privy to it. But the reality was that that was how business was done in Russia at the time. Mr Berezovsky says repeatedly in his witness statement that without his political influence over President Yeltsin, Mr Abramovich would have got nowhere in the world of Russian business and would certainly not have acquired control of Sibneft. We accept that that was so.

Although Mr Abramovich acquired Sibneft with his own funds, as I shall explain, and built it up by his own management, he has always acknowledged that he would not have had the opportunity to do that without Boris Berezovsky's political patronage. He has always recognised also from the outset that he would have to pay Mr Berezovsky for that advantage and also that in a more general sense, in the world of reciprocal favours on which all of this was based, he owed Mr Berezovsky a great deal.

Now, these payments are referred to in Russian as "Krysha", "roof". An alternative English expression which was recorded by Mr Berezovsky's solicitors when they interviewed Mr Patarkatsishvili in 2005 was "refuge", "protection".

Now, it will be readily apparent to your Ladyship why a deal of this nature was not reduced to writing or even privately recorded in writing by either side. An agreement to sell media support to the president of Russia in return for privileged access to state-owned assets, accompanied by another deal to sell to Roman Abramovich for money or monies' worth that advantage, is simply not the kind of agreement which the parties can ever envisage would be legally binding.

Can it ever have been seriously thought that these kind of matters would, in the last resort, be adjudicated upon by the Russian courts, those being the only courts that any of them can have anticipated in 1995 would be available to them for the purpose? Of course not.

Mr Berezovsky in his reply complains about the use of the term "Krysha" because he says that it is redolent of protection rackets operated by criminal gangs. That is not the sense in which I am using it.

The evidence of my client is that there was an element of physical as well as political protection involved in Mr Abramovich's relationship with Mr Berezovsky. It was important, as Mr Berezovsky of all people knew, having been the victim of a campaign of vandalism and attempted murder at the hands of his business rivals. But physical protection was not provided by Mr Berezovsky but by his associate Mr Patarkatsishvili. I am not going to invite your Ladyship to make any finding about it; I have no desire to be more abrasive than I need to be and in fact nothing in this dispute turns on the physical aspect of the protection accorded.

The one exception to that, and it's a very minor one, concerns Rusal. A significant part of the business rationale for Mr Abramovich acquiring the aluminium assets in 1999 and 2000 was that their profitability had been depressed by criminal extortion over the previous years and could be restored if the criminal activities affecting the aluminium industry could be brought to an end. Mr Patarkatsishvili played an important part in bringing them to an end by methods which are not in evidence, thank goodness.

I am not going to, in the course of this opening, offer your Ladyship a complete narrative of events. We have sought to do that in our written opening.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I've read the entirety of your written opening. As I said to Mr Rabinowitz, I'm very grateful to all members of the legal team for the very comprehensive written arguments on all sides.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, in addition to that, I would invite your Ladyship, at the earliest stage in the course of the trial which is feasible and after reading Mr Berezovsky's witness statement, to read Mr Abramovich's because I suspect that --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I have read it.

MR SUMPTION: I see.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I have read the one you asked me to read.

MR SUMPTION: This point is then redundant.

My Lady, the first critical question which your Ladyship will need to answer is: what was the nature of the deal which Mr Abramovich made with Mr Berezovsky in 1995?

It's common ground, as my learned friend told your Ladyship, that there was a deal. It's common ground that it included an agreement, first of all, that Mr Berezovsky would exercise political influence -- I think "lobbying" is his word for it -- to enable Mr Abramovich to obtain control of Sibneft. And it's common ground that once he got control, Mr Abramovich would be responsible for managing Sibneft. That is where the common ground ends.

The real issue is about the nature of the benefit that Mr Berezovsky was going to get out of this. Mr Berezovsky says that the deal was that he and Mr Patarkatsishvili between them were going to get half of Sibneft or at least of the proportion of Sibneft which was acquired by Mr Abramovich. What he says is that the cash stream that he got from Mr Abramovich represented a half-share of Sibneft profits corresponding to the half-share of Sibneft itself which he claims to have owned. That's Mr Berezovsky's case on Sibneft in a nutshell.

Mr Abramovich says that this stream of cash represented Mr Berezovsky's fees for his political protection. There was, on Mr Abramovich's case, an informal understanding between them in early 1995 that Mr Berezovsky would require about $30 million a year to contribute to the funding of ORT. But Mr Berezovsky did not sell his influence for a fixed price; he demanded what he thought that he could get. As Sibneft prospered and Mr Abramovich was in a position to pay more, Mr Berezovsky demanded more.

The amounts paid, therefore, to or to the order of Mr Berezovsky were accordingly the subject of a continuous process of ad hoc negotiation in which Mr Berezovsky's bargaining power derived from the continuing importance of his political patronage as well as on Mr Abramovich's recognition that he owed him a debt of honour.

There were periodic agreements, therefore, about the amounts that would be paid in each year, but in fact these amounts were often exceeded. Moreover, as time went on, the proportion of the money that Mr Berezovsky received that went into ORT diminished and the proportion that went into building up Mr Berezovsky as a great figure in Russian politics increased.

By the late 1990s Mr Berezovsky's evidence is that substantially all his personal expenditure was being met from Mr Abramovich's companies and this was personal expenditure on a most exuberant scale: palaces in France, private yachts and aircraft, jewels for his girlfriend, valuable paintings at Sothebys and so on. The amounts which Mr Berezovsky received were never related to Sibneft's profits; indeed, Mr Berezovsky never even troubled to enquire what Sibneft's profits were. He didn't ring up Mr Abramovich and say, "How much have I got in the piggy bank now?" It was a continuous process of negotiation based primarily on Mr Berezovsky's needs and demands at the moment.

Now, there are, in our submission, three compelling reasons why this deal cannot have involved an interest in Sibneft or in its profits. The first reason is that Mr Berezovsky's case about this is not consistent with the way in which, between 1995 and 1997, the shares in Sibneft were actually acquired. It is very important to appreciate the sequence of auctions which occurred between December 1995 and May 1997 because this has, to some extent, been misstated in Mr Berezovsky's pleadings and evidence.

There were three stages. The first stage was the loans for shares auction in December 1995. Now, at this stage Sibneft had been created as a joint stock company by a presidential decree which required the State to retain 51 per cent of the company's shares. The loans for shares auction was a sale of the right to lend money to the State on the security of that 51 per cent. The bidder who offered the largest loan would get first a pledge of the 51 per cent holding by way of security and secondly the right to manage that holding for three years. The latter would of course give the winner of the auction effective management control over the company but not ownership.

Now, it was expected, although by no means certain, that the state would default on the loan. In that event the lender would be responsible for conducting a sale by auction of the 51 per cent to the highest bidder. The critical point about the loans for shares auction is that the successful bidder in the loans for shares auction would not acquire any Sibneft shares at all either immediately or in the event of a default. If there was a default, clearly the manager of Sibneft could not both conduct the auction and bid in it.

That was stage one, therefore, of this three-stage process: the loans for shares auction in which what was being sold was the right to manage Sibneft but not shares in it.

Stage two was the sale, again by auction, of the remaining 49 per cent, the minority holding which the State sold off to private investors. That was achieved in the course of three successive auctions. 15 per cent was auctioned in December 1995, at about the same time as the loans for shares auction; another 19 per cent was auctioned in September 1996; and the final 15 per cent was auctioned a month later, in October 1996.

Stage three was after the State defaulted at I think the end of 1996, that event triggered the right of sale of the 51 per cent. The auction of those shares occurred in May 1997.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: That's the investment auction?

MR SUMPTION: The investment auction, as it's sometimes called, the 51 per cent auction.

My Lady, the loans for shares auction of December 1995 was won by NFK. Ownership of NFK is dealt with in our written opening at paragraphs 52 and 74 to 75.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR SUMPTION: In short summary, it was a company owned 50 per cent by Mr Abramovich, through an intermediate holding company called Vektor-A, and 50 per cent by Consolidated Bank. Consolidated Bank was the in-house bank of the Logovaz Group, over which Mr Berezovsky had effective management control but a relatively modest shareholding. Mr Berezovsky owned, through a chain of intermediate companies, 13.7 per cent of Consolidated Bank, so effectively he had an indirect interest of 6.85 per cent in NFK.

There is an issue on the evidence about exactly what Mr Berezovsky contributed to the funding of NFK and its success in the loans for shares auction. It probably doesn't matter because we accept that Mr Berezovsky's role in the preparation of that auction was significant. It was his contacts which put us in touch with SBS Bank, which put up most of the money. Moreover, it was Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili who played the leading part in rigging the auction.

What happened was that a bidder called Inkombank was disqualified on technical grounds. Ms Nosova, who was working for Mr Berezovsky, says, I think, that this was the work of her team. There was then a second potential bidder called Sameko, which was persuaded at the last minute by Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Abramovich to withdraw in return for money. There was then a third competing bidder, Bank Menatep, the only bidder who, in the event, participated in the auction. Mr Berezovsky made a collusive agreement with Bank Menatep that they would bid fractionally less than NFK; he tells us that in his witness statement.

So the outcome of the bid was a foregone conclusion and that outcome was that NFK won the loans for shares auction with a bid of $100.3 million, which was fractionally above the minimum bid stipulated in the auction rules and less than half of what NFK would have been prepared to pay. Mr Berezovsky had another bid for much more in his pocket which he would have had to use if it hadn't been possible to buy off Sameko.

Now, none of the $100.3 million which NFK and its associated party in this bid, SBS Bank, was contributed by Mr Berezovsky or Mr Patarkatsishvili; none of it. The position is this: $3 million was borrowed by NFK on commercial terms from the Russian Industrial Bank. The other $97.3 million was lent to the State by SBS Bank, which was simply interposed as the lender, being a more creditworthy entity.

SBS Bank did not take any risk on that loan. SBS Bank took cash counterdeposits in the sum of $80 million from the Omsk refinery and Neftegas themselves, ie the businesses being acquired, and $17.3 million from Mr Abramovich's own trading company, Runicom.

So the position was that as between Mr Abramovich, Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili, the only one who put up any money at all was Mr Abramovich. His company, Runicom, provided $17.3 million of the cash security which was given to SBS Bank.

Mr Berezovsky claims to have put up a personal guarantee in favour of SBS. That appears to be incorrect, although Mr Berezovsky did give a personal assurance that they would be repaid. It doesn't in fact matter because nobody, I think, suggests that a personal guarantee was actually called upon.

NFK's success in the loan for shares auction enabled Mr Abramovich to assume management control of Sibneft. It was, however, completely irrelevant to the question of title to the company's shares, which were not being sold in that auction. It's a very important feature of these arrangements that the only auctions in which Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili actively participated was the auction of the right to manage the State's holding of 51 per cent. The only auction in which they actually participated, in other words, was the one auction which did not involve any acquisition of shares.

The auctions that mattered for the purpose of the acquisition of Sibneft shares were, of course, the auctions at what I have called stages two and three. They did involve the acquisition by the successful bidders of shares in Sibneft. The striking thing about those auctions is that whereas Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili were extremely active in relation to the loans for shares auction, they took no interest whatever in the auctions at stages two and three. This is, I think, common ground, but at any rate it is plainly the case.

Mr Berezovsky's witness statement says he had nothing to do with the bids made in those auctions; he was merely aware that they were happening. The decision to bid in the stage two and stage three auctions was Mr Abramovich's decision alone. It is not suggested that Mr Abramovich had ever promised that he would bid or in any way committed himself to bidding, either under the 1995 agreement so-called -- it's not suggested he was under any obligation to bid.

Moreover, 100 per cent of the funding for the bids that he chose to make, was provided by Mr Abramovich. Mr Berezovsky did not put up and doesn't claim to have put up a single cent towards the purchase of those shares; nor did Mr Patarkatsishvili. Moreover, subject to one twist which I shall come to, the companies which acquired Sibneft at stages two and three were all of them companies owned and controlled by Mr Abramovich.

The twist which I mentioned a moment ago concerns a company called PK-Trast, which isn't mentioned anywhere in Mr Berezovsky's evidence but the facts about it appear in paragraphs 76 and 77 of our written opening B(C)/37. In very short summary, PK-Trast had an indirect interest in the company which acquired Sibneft shares in the cash auction of October 1996, the third of the three cash auctions at stage two. It also had a very small indirect interest in the company which acquired Sibneft shares in May 1997.

PK-Trast was a company controlled by Mr Abramovich but Mr Abramovich arranged for Mr Berezovsky to be made a 50 per cent shareholder at the time of the October 1996 cash auction in order to associate him with the bid and show effectively that he had the powerful man on his side. After the auction was over, Mr Berezovsky's shareholding was transferred back to Mr Abramovich's companies.

There was at one stage a claim in these proceedings arises out of that transfer back, but it was withdrawn and is no longer a matter of complaint. We are not aware that there's any live issue about PK-Trast now but your Ladyship can find the facts with references to the relevant documents in our opening.

The result of the auctions at stage two and stage three was that about 88 per cent of Sibneft ended up in the hands of Mr Abramovich's companies. The other 12 per cent were acquired by the general public. The shares were traded on the Moscow and New York stock exchanges but the only actual trading on those exchanges was, of course, in the 12 per cent that Mr Abramovich did not own.

The absence of any funding contribution by Mr Berezovsky or Mr Patarkatsishvili to the acquisition of Sibneft shares is, in our submission, a matter of great significance. The case pleaded by Mr Berezovsky at paragraph 34 of the particulars of claim is that it was agreed in 1995 that any shares which any of Mr Abramovich, Mr Berezovsky or Mr Patarkatsishvili might acquire in Sibneft would be held for their benefit in the proportions 50/25/25. That's all. It isn't suggested that there was any agreement that any of them would actually bid. It is not suggested that there was an agreement that they would bid at any particular price. The only thing that is said is that if they did choose to bid and won, the shares thus acquired would be held in those proportions.

Crucially, it is not alleged, either in the pleadings or in Mr Berezovsky's evidence, that there was any agreement entitling whichever party acquired the shares to a contribution towards the cost of acquiring them from the other two; nor, as I've told your Ladyship, was a contribution actually made.

So Mr Berezovsky's case appears to be that although Mr Abramovich was under absolutely no obligation to bid for Sibneft shares at all, he, Mr Berezovsky, was entitled to the benefit of a quarter of those shares for nothing. That is, in our submission, a most bizarre proposition.

As described by Mr Berezovsky, this agreement would have operated in the same way if Mr Berezovsky had decided to bid in stage two and stage three auctions instead of Mr Abramovich: he would then, it seems, have had to pay the price but Mr Abramovich would have been entitled to the benefit of 50 per cent of the shares for nothing. That's the logic of his position.

The absence more generally of any interest on the part of Mr Berezovsky or Mr Patarkatsishvili in the stage two and stage three auctions is, in our submission, just as significant as the absence of a financial contribution.

NFK, the successful bidder in the loans for shares auction, was a jointly controlled bidding vehicle controlled 50/50 by Mr Abramovich and Mr Berezovsky, although Mr Berezovsky's actual ownership stake was much smaller, as I've explained. Mr Berezovsky, as we've seen, took a big part in the preparation for the loans for shares auction. When it came, however, to stages two and three, no attempt was made to set up a jointly owned or controlled bidding vehicle; it was simply left to Mr Abramovich to buy the shares for his own companies, with his own money, with no interest being taken in the process by the other two.

Now, the reason for the difference is reasonably clear and it's pointed out by Mr Abramovich in his evidence. Mr Berezovsky was never interested in acquiring industrial assets like shares in Sibneft, which, apart from anything else, would have required him to lay out money in buying them and investing. What interested Mr Berezovsky was getting management control from Mr Abramovich. He therefore took an active part in the auction of the right to manage Sibneft but none at all in the right to own it.

There is a very good reason why Mr Berezovsky should only have been interested in control and not in owning shares. The main reason for Mr Berezovsky's interest in Sibneft, according to his own evidence, is that the cash stream from Mr Abramovich would contribute to funding ORT. Now, that was urgent. It was urgent both because ORT was effectively bust when Mr Berezovsky took over the management of it but also because it was vital to keep ORT funded during the lead-up to the presidential elections of June 1996 so that it could support Boris Yeltsin's campaign for re-election, as he had promised the president in 1995.

Owning shares in Sibneft was of no interest at all to Mr Berezovsky because it would not have helped him to fund ORT. Sibneft, as your Ladyship knows, was an amalgamation of two inefficient and loss-making State-owned businesses; they were inevitably going to take some time to turn round and make profitable. First of all, the two separate businesses had to be integrated into a vertically integrated company. Secondly, the entire culture had to be changed to transform a business which had previously been run by administrative direction -- effectively by officials -- into one responding to market signals.

Mr Berezovsky couldn't wait for that. We know that in the event Sibneft only became profitable in 1997 and then only marginally. It had to retain all its profits for reinvestment until 2001, when the first relatively modest dividend was declared by the company in respect of the year 2000 but actually in 2001. Mr Berezovsky couldn't wait for all that to happen. The cash stream from Mr Abramovich simply couldn't be dependent on Sibneft's prosperity because what Mr Berezovsky needed was cash for his Krysha right now, in order to pay to ORT; otherwise the deal was no good to him.

Mr Abramovich's position, as your Ladyship will appreciate, was quite different. What Mr Abramovich wanted was management control. He wanted that because he wanted to amalgamate the two businesses and build up the company, with the result that any shares that he might buy in it at stages two and three would greatly increase in value. For as long as the State retained its 51 per cent holding, Mr Abramovich could only achieve management control and build up the business by acquiring the right to manage it in the loans for shares auction.

That brings me to the second main reason why Mr Berezovsky cannot have been entitled to the benefit of a quarter of Mr Abramovich's acquisitions and that is that the cash payments that flowed into Mr Berezovsky's coffers between 1995 and 2000 bear no relation whatever to Sibneft's profits or lack of them. These payments were not made from Sibneft's assets at all until 2000; they were made from cash in the hands of Mr Abramovich's oil trading companies in Russia and Switzerland. These companies were personal assets of Mr Abramovich which he had had and run well before 1995; they were the foundation of his pre-Sibneft wealth.

In 2000, for the first time, most of the payments to Mr Berezovsky or to his order did come from within the Sibneft group because the trading operations previously carried out by the trading companies had by then been incorporated into Sibneft itself. Mr Berezovsky's evidence is that these payments represented his share of Sibneft profits or possibly -- it isn't always clear -- his and Mr Patarkatsishvili's combined share of Sibneft profits.

That's a critical part of his case because Mr Berezovsky denies that these payments were made by Mr Abramovich in return for his Krysha; he says that they were payments to which he was entitled by virtue of his interest in a quarter of the shares held by Mr Abramovich's companies, they weren't payments for political favours that he had procured for Mr Abramovich's benefit. The deal made in 1995, as Mr Berezovsky describes it in his witness statement and pleadings, was that the three men would share out the profits attributable to their shares. That, he says, was what the payments he received from Mr Abramovich's companies represented.

With great respect, that is an impossible contention. It is impossible for a number of reasons which have not been addressed, either in my learned friend's written opening or yesterday in his oral opening.

We do not have the banking or accounting records which would have enabled us to reconstruct precisely the exact scale of the payments to Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili, although we have some of them. The separate trading operations effectively ceased to carry on business at the end of the 1990s. Sibneft was then sold to Gazprom in 2005. So that there is a dearth of accounting documents originating within those companies in the hands of Mr Abramovich and, correspondingly, Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili have lost much of the documentation that they must once have had as a result of their flight from Russia and possibly in Mr Berezovsky's case as a result of his estrangement from Mr Fomichev, who actually conducted that side of his affairs.

What we do have is estimates from the individuals who handled these payments and who will be giving evidence to your Ladyship and also a contemporaneous spreadsheet recording in detail the position in 2000. This is a Excel spreadsheet which in due course I will be inviting your Ladyship to look at as a Excel spreadsheet -- it is not easy to look at it in hard copy and it's incapable of being loaded on to Magnum -- but we will sort that logistical problem out in due course.

The first point to be made is that the payments to Mr Berezovsky began in March 1995 with a delivery of $5 million in folding money to Mr Berezovsky at the Logovaz Club, and evidence will be given by the person who delivered it. About $20 million to $30 million was paid out to Mr Berezovsky or to his order in the course of 1995, mostly not in cash, in dollar bills, but in bank transfers. That was, of course, before any management control had been acquired or any shares had been acquired by anyone. It follows that these payments cannot have represented Sibneft profits; they couldn't be anything other than Krysha.

Mr Berezovsky's response to this is to deny that anything was paid to him in 1995. He says that the payments began in 1996. Now, the evidence will show that it did begin in 1995, even if there is room for doubt about the precise amount of the payments. Many millions were paid to him.

The second point to be made about these payments concerns the payments made in 1996. These cannot have represented a share of Sibneft profits either because there weren't any Sibneft profits in 1996. Sibneft made losses in 1996, as everybody knew it would, because Mr Abramovich had only just taken over its management at the beginning of 1996.

The third point to be made is that in 1997 and 1998 Sibneft made very modest profits; then in 1999 and 2000 it made rather larger profits. It is, however, impossible, even in the years when there were any profits there, to relate them to the payments made to Mr Berezovsky and/or Mr Patarkatsishvili. In 1997 and 1998, the payments made to or to the order of Mr Berezovsky substantially exceeded the entire profits of Sibneft, let alone the half of them that Mr Berezovsky says that he and Mr Patarkatsishvili were jointly entitled to.

In 1999 and 2000 the profits of Sibneft for the first time exceeded the payments made to Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili but those payments bore no relation to the profits. This is particularly evident in 2000, when the surviving spreadsheet gives us precise figures.

2000 was a bumper year for Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili: they received payments from Mr Abramovich's companies amounting in the course of that year to no less than $490 million, of which $461 million went to Mr Berezovsky and $29 million to Mr Patarkatsishvili. Apart from a sum of $30 million, Mr Berezovsky claims that all his receipts in 2000 represented a share of Sibneft profits. However, on any view, the sums that he received vastly exceeded what he claims to have been his contractual share.

The fourth point that one should make about these cash streams is that no dividends were declared by Sibneft until September 2001, when Sibneft declared a dividend of just $50 million in respect of the year 2000. All profits up to 2000 and most profits in 2000 were retained for reinvestment. Mr Berezovsky has therefore got to contend that the amounts that he received represented a share of the undistributed profits of Sibneft. Now, that would effectively have been a theft of Sibneft's funds and a fraud on the holders of the 12 per cent of the company's shares that were held by members of the public and traded on public stock exchanges inside and outside Russia.

There is a suggestion in my learned friend's opening that Sibneft profits should be taken to include the profits of Mr Abramovich's trading companies so far as they were derived from trading with Sibneft. What appears, as we understand it, to be said is that the profits of Mr Abramovich's personally owned trading companies --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: This is the transfer pricing thing?

MR SUMPTION: Exactly -- were artificially fixed by transfer pricing, which had the effect of transferring profit from Sibneft to Mr Abramovich's own companies.

The short answer to this, but not the only one, is that it has nothing to do with the agreement that Mr Berezovsky says was made in 1995, which was that he would receive the profits attributable to his shares in Sibneft. He does not claim and does not give evidence that the agreement was that he should share the profits which Mr Abramovich made on his own oil trading business, nor would such agreement have been consistent with what Mr Berezovsky does claim.

As a matter of fact there is no basis at all for the allegation about transfer pricing anyway and none is put forward by Mr Berezovsky in any of the evidence that he proposes to call either from himself or from others. The best source of information -- I won't turn it up at this stage -- about the trading relations between Sibneft and Mr Abramovich's trading companies in the late 1990s is the offering circular for the Sibneft Eurobond issue of 1997.

For the transcript and your Ladyship's note, the reference is bundle H(A)07/19/19. At pages 79 to 80 of that document in the bundle numbering, your Ladyship will in due course find a document or part of a document which explains how this worked.

Now, this was a document prepared to western standards, as the bonds were traded on western exchanges, and due diligence was done by the New York firm Cleary Gottlieb. What is said in that document, which is correct, is that the crude oil sold to Runicom companies, Mr Abramovich's own companies, before March 1997 was sold at world market prices less a commission of about 2 per cent. From March 1997 onwards, crude oil was sold to the trading companies at full world market prices. Products, as opposed to crude oil, were sold to the trading companies at all times at current world prices. That continued until 2000, when the trading operations were, as I told your Ladyship in a different context a few minutes ago, taken in-house and vested in a subsidiary of Sibneft itself called Siboil.

There is no evidence in support of the transfer pricing allegation and the evidence indeed is against it. The witnesses who will give evidence, in particular Mr Shvidler, will explain how the system works insofar as it is not clear.

Mr Berezovsky says that the deal was that he was to be entitled to half the profits attributable to the shares in Sibneft which he claims to own or be entitled to. It is quite plain that if there really was an agreement in those terms, Mr Berezovsky would have received absolutely nothing because until 2001 there were no dividends. So the profits attributable to his shares were zero until after he claims to have parted with this interest, yet he acknowledges that he actually received enormous sums of money. His receipt of those sums can therefore only be explained as payments for Mr Berezovsky's political services.

The third main reason why Mr Berezovsky's claim to be entitled to an interest in Sibneft's shares is a reason that can be much more briefly pointed out. Mr Berezovsky has consistently denied or allowed others to deny, at least until the early years of this century, that he had any interest. He has made a succession of public statements that he had no interest in Sibneft or in the ownership of Sibneft and that position, as far as his public statements are concerned, did not change until after he'd left Russia.

I'm not going to weary your Ladyship with all of these statements but two might perhaps particularly be mentioned. First, he omitted any interest in Sibneft shares from the declaration of assets which he was legally required to make in his capacity as a state official under the relevant Russian anti-corruption legislation. Secondly, Mr Berezovsky approved a statement to investors about his position which was included in the Eurobond offering circular of 1997.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: That's the one you just referred me to?

MR SUMPTION: Yes, I referred it to you for a different point --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR SUMPTION: -- but the other reason why that document is important is that it contains a paragraph which explains Mr Berezovsky's relationship with the company: basically that he has no shares in Sibneft and no interest in any shares in Sibneft but was involved in its creation.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: What's the page of that? I have the circular on the screen.

H(A)07/34. What it says is:

"An influential Russian figure, Boris Berezovsky, who is currently the Deputy Secretary of the Security Council of the Russian Federation, served on Sibneft's Board of Directors until October 1996 and was chairman of NFK when it won the right to manage 51% of Sibneft's shares in the loan-for shares programme. Mr Berezovsky does not own or control, or have any other interest in, any shares in Sibneft, directly or indirectly. He does, however, maintain a close relationship with certain members of the senior management and the Board of Directors of the Company."

In our submission that statement is true.

Mr Berezovsky, who acknowledges that it was referred to him -- and Ms Nosova confirms that she was consulted about it -- approved that statement. It's got to be his own case that he was perfectly happy to tell a lie to investors in public securities of Sibneft. In fact, this was an occasion when Mr Berezovsky realised that he had to tell the truth.

Mr Berezovsky proposes to call a number of witnesses to say that he privately claimed to have an interest in Sibneft at an early stage. In particular his old friend Mr Goldfarb is apparently going to say that this was something that was said to him as early as 1996. We will hear their evidence when they give it.

I will say at once that it's perfectly possible that Mr Berezovsky did occasionally brag to friends about his interests in this Russian large oil company in a way that he wouldn't have dared to do in public for fear of being authoritatively contradicted. But so far as we can discover -- and one hesitates to say that anything is not to be found somewhere in these 200 bundles -- there is no public claim by Mr Berezovsky to have owned any interest in Sibneft until about 2003.

Now, as my learned friend Mr Rabinowitz told your Ladyship, we accept that Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili can be shown to have told their own associates and advisers that they had a 50 per cent interest in Sibneft from late 1999 onwards. It is quite important to understand how this change came about.

In late 1999 Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili began to look into the question of establishing an offshore structure of trusts and closed registry companies to hold their assets outside Russia. This is because they were concerned at the possibility that those assets might at some stage be attacked by adversaries within Russia, evidently the State.

Now, after a certain amount of planning among their own staff, Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili approached an asset manager called Valmet, which later changed its name to MTM. Valmet in turn introduced them to a solicitor called Stephen Curtis of Curtis & Co. Valmet and Curtis & Co in fact shared a building off Park Lane. Valmet and Curtis & Co were both specialists in the creation of complex and opaque offshore structures for holding assets on behalf of super-rich individuals.

Both firms began to work for Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili at the beginning of 2000, when they were engaged in organising the receipt outside Russia of the proceeds of the sale of ORT. They were assisted in this endeavour mainly by Mr Fomichev, who was Mr Berezovsky's financial manager, and Mr Kay, who was a cousin of Mr Patarkatsishvili and performed similar functions for him, although at a rather lower level of competence and honesty. I will say why I say that in a moment.

One of the main difficulties which they encountered in the course of planning the offshoring of their assets arose out of EU and American money-laundering regulations which prevented western banks or other financial institutions from accepting significant sums of money without being satisfied, generally by documentary evidence, about their origin.

The significance of this problem cannot be overstated. It infected almost everything that Berezovsky and Patarkatsishvili did in the management of their financial affairs from 1999 onwards. These people, Mr Berezovsky and Mr -- would your Ladyship like me to --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, I was going to go on until your next break, as it were.

MR SUMPTION: Yes, I will find a suitable place to stop.

These people, Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili, were living a life of tremendous opulence, spending in Mr Berezovsky's case hundreds of millions a year and in Mr Patarkatsishvili's case tens of millions, although his house in Georgia is said to have been a wonder to behold. They both lived on income streams derived mainly from companies in which they had no documented interest at all.

Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili would have found it difficult to get their money accepted by western financial institutions if they had explained that they were living on frequent and large payments made to them by a Russian industrialist for no reason of which there was the slightest documentary evidence. It was precisely the fact that these payments did originate in Krysha, paid by Mr Abramovich's companies, which gave rise to the money-laundering problem. If the payments had all been above board, they could have been documented and the money-laundering problem would have gone away.

I can't speak for the rest of Mr Curtis's practice but the function which Mr Curtis performed for these particular clients was to devise schemes to launder their money. He did that with appropriate and gentlemanly reluctance after exhausting all other possibilities. He uttered the occasional Pecksniffian platitudes about the importance of compliance, especially when discussing these matters with counsel, but on the face of his own files that is what Mr Curtis was for.

I will go into the details of how this was done or some of them, at least by way of summary, perhaps after the short adjournment if that would be a convenient moment.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well. I'll take ten minutes.

(11.34 am)

(A short break)

(11.48 am)

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, can I just correct three minor points which I got wrong on going through the transcript when your Ladyship was behind the scenes.

First of all, the dividends. The $50 million dividend which I mentioned was in fact paid in November 2000 and not in the following year. In the following year, 2001, 16 August 2001, there was a much larger dividend payment, $612 million, but by that time Mr Berezovsky does not claim to have been a part-owner of Sibneft anymore.

So the timing and amounts of those dividends need to be corrected from what I told your Ladyship a few minutes ago.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. Can you just tell me the date of the second one?

MR SUMPTION: The second one was on 16 August 2001 and was for $612 million. I can give your Ladyship a reference if you would like one but it's H(A)37/146 and H(A)37/153.

Secondly, the free float of Sibneft shares held by the public was in fact smaller initially than the 12 per cent that I mentioned. The position, like everything else in this case, is a little more complicated. In fact, Mr Abramovich's companies at the end of stage three held 97.2 per cent of Sibneft but the holding was diluted over the following years as a result of the issue of American depository receipts and suchlike things and it gradually rose to 12 per cent by 2000.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, thank you.

MR SUMPTION: The third correction I should make, which is an unintentional slip-up of mine, concerns the time when Valmet and Curtis & Co began to work for Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili. Valmet, so far as one can see from their documents, began to work on their affairs in early 2000 and Curtis & Co began to work on his affairs in January 2001. I by mistake said 2000. The first thing they were concerned with was the dealings with the ORT proceeds.

When your Ladyship rose I was dealing with the question of money-laundering regulations. In practice the only reliable way of explaining the receipt of large sums of money was by presenting the receipt as the proceeds of the sale of an asset which the recipient owned. That is what they set about trying to do over much of the following years.

One can see this process at work in the very first document in which Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili unequivocally claimed to have an interest in Sibneft, namely the Valmet memo of September 2000 at tab 10 of my learned friend's bundle, if your Ladyship still has that H(A)19/10. This document records the information which was given to Mr Samuelson of Valmet in the course of a meeting in the south of France with Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili. It is, however, clear from the document itself that they had also spoken to Ms Nosova and Mr Fomichev and it is therefore possible that some of this information came from them, but it seems generally to be from the principals.

One can see, in a passage that my learned friend pointed out to your Ladyship at the top of the second page of the memo, that they claimed to have an interest in Sibneft which they said:

"We will start by moving the Sibneft holdings into the funds..."

That's the funds -- perhaps one should start on the first page to get the context.

Your Ladyship will see on the first page that there is some reference to the way in which Mr Berezovsky operated in Russia:

"[He] recognised that media was key to political power and acquired ORT and TV6..."

And something is said about them and his other media assets:

"Most large Russian businesses needed political clout to be favoured in the State sell off of significant assets."

That is indeed so.

The document then goes on to describe the Hotspur and Octopus Trust structures and the assets that are to be put into them. What they then say is that they will be:

"... moving the Sibneft holdings in to the funds..."

That's into the offshore structures.

"... in about ten days. These holdings are owned through Cypriot companies mainly today. The relation between [Hotspur] and [Octopus] in regard to Sibneft are 33:17. The amount of Sibneft that will be held by 'H' and 'O' combined will be 44% of 100%."

Now, that of course was utter nonsense, as both Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili must have known. They did not own any shares in Sibneft and certainly there were no shares in Sibneft owned by Cypriot companies of theirs. What they actually had was a stream of cash payments emanating from the owner of Sibneft, which they have claimed in the present action represented a contractual right to be paid a share of Sibneft profits. What they are doing here is presenting a stream of cash income as if it were the ownership of the asset. They could hardly say to Valmet, without immediately encountering money-laundering problems, anything else.

This point emerges most clearly from the next paragraph, which contains a reference to Aeroflot. Now, it's necessary to say something about Aeroflot and Mr Berezovsky's relationship with it. What is being said in this memorandum is that:

"[Berezovsky] and [Patarkatsishvili] also own a large stake in Aeroflot and Transaero..."

Just looking at Aeroflot, Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili never owned any shares in Aeroflot. Mr Glushkov, who will be giving evidence on his behalf to your Ladyship, says this:

"Boris was not involved in Aeroflot either as a director, shareholder, employee or otherwise."

And that is the truth. Their only financial interest in Aeroflot in fact arose from the fact that Mr Berezovsky had an interest in a Swiss company called Andava, which was essentially a joint venture between himself and Mr Glushkov.

When Mr Glushkov became director general of Aeroflot in 1996 he transferred the management of all its foreign currency treasury operations, which of course in the case of an airline are were considerable, to Andava, his own joint venture company with Mr Berezovsky in Switzerland. Thereafter these operations, the treasury operations in Switzerland, generated substantial interest and penalty payments, much of which ended up in the pockets of Mr Berezovsky and Mr Glushkov.

These were the transactions that led to the charges that were laid against Mr Berezovsky by the Russian public prosecutor in the autumn of 2000, which is what obliged him to flee from Russia in October of that year. They are the transactions which led to Mr Glushkov's arrest and subsequent conviction in Russia for theft. They are also the transactions which Mr Jenni assisted Mr Glushkov to carry out, according to the courts of Switzerland, who have convicted him as an accessory to Mr Glushkov's frauds.

Your Ladyship will find the references to all of this at annex VI of our opening B(D)/109.

I fully acknowledge that there are legitimate issues about the fairness of Russian criminal proceedings in cases involving high-profile political figures. I doubt whether the same can sensibly be said of the criminal courts of Switzerland.

The relevance of this point for present purposes is that in explaining the source of their wealth to Mr Samuelson of Valmet, Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili were quite clearly, in the case of Aeroflot, dressing up an unclassifiable stream of cash payments as an interest in the company itself when it was nothing of the kind and we say that they were doing exactly the same thing in the case of Sibneft.

Now, exactly the same point can be made about the explanatory note that my learned friend took your Ladyship to at flag 9 H(A)18/221.003T. If your Ladyship looks at the English translation of that document, this is a document which we can probably agree in due course is likely to have been prepared by Mr Joseph Kay. Mr Kay is identified as the author partly by his less than perfect Russian and partly by the fact that, as we understand it from the family defendants, who first disclosed this document, it was found in Mr Kay's offices in London.

This document is a programme for dressing up Mr Patarkatsishvili's cash receipts as capital assets. It was prepared at about the time when Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili were trying to shift their assets offshore. That is why your Ladyship will see, under the heading "Main. Structuring assets", which deals with the proposal to allocate assets to partners in proportion to their stakes, that among the assets which are going to be dealt with in that way is, as we see -- number 5 over the page -- Aeroflot.

Now, there can't really be any doubt that this memorandum is a programme for satisfying money-laundering enquiries which was explaining how a structure could be set up that would comply with what Mr Kay rather charmingly calls "the legal rules of the game", halfway down the second page of the memorandum, but was clearly not intended to reflect the true position; otherwise Aeroflot could hardly have been comprised in it.

Now, in the course of 2001, a string of bogus documents was concocted by Mr Kay and Mr Fomichev, in some cases with the assistance of Mr Curtis, in order to satisfy the money-laundering enquiries of western banks. This was done by presenting what were actually income streams as if they were the proceeds of capital assets or in some cases the undocumented proceeds of capital assets as documented proceeds.

This is the smoke and mirrors world in which your Ladyship has to work when trying to interpret documents of this kind. The first question that one has to ask about all of them is whether they are to be taken at face value, who was preparing them and why. The two most egregious examples, which are both documented in some detail, are the Spectrum transaction and the Devonia transaction.

The Spectrum transaction is described in our written opening at paragraphs 157 to 165 B(C)/67. In short summary, Spectrum was a vehicle owned by the Crown Prince of Abu Dhabi, Sheikh Sultan. Spectrum was used essentially to explain the receipt of the proceeds of the ORT sale, which is a genuine sale.

Now, the principal document which was prepared by Mr Curtis for Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili purported to be a contract drafted in January 2001, executed some time later, by which Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili sold a call option over their shares in ORT to Spectrum for $150 million. This document was manifestly a sham because the shares at the time it was drafted had already been transferred to Mr Abramovich's company, Akmos, at the end of December. That was several weeks before the so-called call option was executed; it can never actually have been intended to operate as a call option at all.

Why was this document created? It was created because the formal agreements between Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Berezovsky on the one hand and Mr Abramovich's company Akmos on the other to sell the stake in ORT only dealt with $10 million of the agreed consideration. The other $140 million was paid to them outside that agreement.

Now, that meant that they only had a contractual document that accounted for a small proportion of the sum that they were receiving into the account which they had opened for the purpose at Clydesdale Bank. It was therefore necessary to invent a transaction which accounted for the whole $150 million.

So Mr Curtis drafted a document in which Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Berezovsky purported to sell to Spectrum an option. It is extremely probable that Mr Curtis was aware that the shares had been registered with Akmos already because we have a document that was supplied to him by Mr Ivlev, his correspondent lawyer in Moscow, in which that was explained.

There is a second version of the Spectrum call option which we identify at paragraph 157(2) of our opening --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR SUMPTION: -- in which Mr Kay is rather mystifyingly described as the owner of some of the ORT shares.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I think it's 160(2).

MR SUMPTION: I'm sorry, I stand corrected.

Now, in the Valmore judgment, the judge, having heard the evidence, found that that version of the Spectrum document was forged by Mr Kay in 2002 in order to explain to Bank Hapoalim how he came to be paying 75 million into a company of his own that originated in the sums paid to Clydesdale Bank for the account of Mr Patarkatsishvili. He simply adapted Mr Curtis's draft so as to suggest that he also had an interest which he was selling and then presented that to explain the receipt of the 75 million.

There is a third version, the exact purpose of which we have not been able to discern, but which appears, for reasons which are set out in detail in our witness statement, also to have been a forgery. There is no reason to suppose that that third version and its forgery was anything with which Mr Curtis was concerned.

He was concerned with the version that we referred to in the first subparagraph.

Now, the Devonia transaction I will deal with later in a little more detail because it's critical to my learned friend's claim for loss. In summary, the Devonia transaction was another money-laundering scheme designed to explain how Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili had come to sell their so-called interest in Sibneft without being able to produce a single contractual document or other documentary record of having done so.

The problem was they didn't have an agreement with Mr Abramovich to sell it or any other documentation of the sale to Mr Abramovich. So what did they do? They invented an agreement to sell their shares to Devonia, which was another vehicle company owned by Sheikh Sultan, and they used this document to mislead the European compliance officer of Clydesdale Bank.

This also appears to have been a scheme dreamed up by Mr Curtis, although I should mention that it is possible that Mr Curtis was simply acting on information supplied to him by Mr Fomichev. There are reasons for doubting that, but it is undoubtedly a possibility.

Now, my learned friend took your Ladyship yesterday to a number of documents which refer to the interests of Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili in Rusal. These documents were generally prepared by other parties to the various transactions in 2000 and 2004. None of them were seen at the time by Mr Abramovich, although one passed into the hands of Ms Khudyk and Ms Panchenko, whose functions -- essentially bookkeeping -- did not require them to study their contents. They will be dealing with that.

Now, the basic problem about most of these documents is that whenever any arrangement was made under which Mr Berezovsky or Mr Patarkatsishvili were to receive money, they always had to try to organise things so that documents would be generated which portrayed the money as the price of a proprietary interest in some asset. They can therefore not be taken as face value as evidence in these proceedings.

I will say a bit more about Rusal in due course. I am still basically dealing with Sibneft and explaining the problem which arises in the interpretation of documents from the fact that from late 1999 onwards Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Berezovsky were continually obsessed with the important problem of how to get their money in the west.

In a sense, the strongest point to be made in Mr Berezovsky's favour on the question of whether he has an interest in Sibneft -- and my learned friend naturally has made it -- is that Mr Abramovich promised him a total of $1.3 billion in early 2001 and paid that amount in 2001 and 2002. What is said by my learned friend is that since Mr Berezovsky was no longer a powerful figure when these payments were agreed but an impotent exile, they can only be explained on the footing that Mr Abramovich was buying Mr Berezovsky's and Mr Patarkatsishvili's share of the company. There was no sense in paying Krysha at that stage.

Of course, one irony of this is that it is of course Mr Berezovsky's own case that the money which Mr Abramovich agreed to pay him for his share -- he agrees it was $1.3 billion -- actually bore no relation, he says, to the value of his share in Sibneft. He says it was a gross undervalue which he was induced to accept by intimidation. But the difficulty about much of this argument is this: if Mr Abramovich had obligations to Mr Berezovsky to account to him for Mr Berezovsky's shares and had wanted a way out of those obligations, his logical course was simply to refuse to recognise the existence of this wholly undocumented interest.

It appears to be common ground between the Russian law experts that in a Russian court the absence of documentation would have been fatal. It's arguable that that's a procedural or evidential provision which therefore might be irrelevant in England but it's still relevant on the facts because in 2001 the parties can't possibly have supposed that a claim to an interest in a Russian company would come before any other court than a Russian court.

If -- which is the premise of Mr Berezovsky's argument -- Mr Abramovich was bent on getting out of his obligations, he didn't need to take a plane to Cap d'Antibes, he didn't need to threaten Mr Patarkatsishvili at Munich and elsewhere; he simply had to say, "Interest, what interest?" So much of this simply doesn't hang together.

Now, Mr Abramovich has given in his witness statement a detailed account of why he decided, in fact against the advice of his closest advisers, that he would make this very large payment to Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili. His main reason was quite simply that he owed his business career to Boris Berezovsky and in fact had absolutely no desire to escape what he regarded as a strong moral obligation. He wanted to draw a line under the past and to put an end to the financial importunity of Mr Berezovsky on a basis that would satisfy him.

That explanation should, in our submission, carry a good deal of weight, coming as it does from a man who had a complete let-out, if he wanted to take it, owing to the undocumented nature of the alleged interest. He could actually have paid Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili nothing, simply defying them to try and establish their case in a Russian court. If he could have easily got away with paying them nothing because they had no interest which they could prove, then why should one assume that he was trying to evade his obligations at a cost of $1.3 billion?

Mr Abramovich's account of his reasons is wholly consistent with the code of honour that, on the evidence, was a substitute for legal obligation in the remarkable conditions of late 20th century Russia. But there was also another reason, which is also explained by Mr Abramovich in his evidence: he could not take it for granted that Mr Berezovsky was a spent force in Russian politics quite as readily as we can a decade later.

When Mr Abramovich agreed with Mr Patarkatsishvili in 2000 to make a final pay-out in the sum of $1.3 billion, Mr Berezovsky had only been in exile for three or four months. In the 1990s he had proved to be a remarkably resilient politician, recovering from apparently impossible situations and recovering influence which at different times he appeared to have lost. Indeed, Mr Berezovsky had once been very close to Mr Putin and had helped to fund his election campaign in the year 2000. There was a lot to be said at the start of the Putin era in laying the ghosts of the 1990s to rest in case, in the perennially unstable cycle of Russian politics, they came back to haunt him.

Now, there is finally the historical evidence which we debated before your Ladyship in June, which has predictably turned out to take matters not much further forward.

The main point that my learned friend makes by reference to the historical evidence is that the pattern of privatisations in Russia at the time was that the parties who acquired the right to manage state assets under the loans for shares auctions invariably, it is said, acquired the shares through an associated company when the State duly defaulted and the pledged securities had to be sold. The paradigm of this is said to be the acquisition of Yukos by Mr Khodorkovsky and the acquisition of Norilsk Nickel and Sidanko by Mr Potanin. Why, my learned friend asks forensically, should one suppose that Mr Berezovsky should be an exception to such a well-established pattern and not have acquired an interest in Sibneft?

Some of the factual premise of this argument, the supposed pattern, is in fact wrong, as Mr Shvidler points out in some of his reply evidence; but the simplest answer to this is that the circumstances were completely different. Mr Khodorkovsky and Mr Potanin were primarily industrialists who wanted to manage and expand major industrial concerns, just as Mr Abramovich did, in the oil industry in the case of Mr Khodorkovsky and in the metals industry in the case of Mr Potanin. These people created huge and highly successful businesses out of nonperforming or previously nonperforming State assets.

Mr Berezovsky had absolutely zero interest in doing that. Mr Berezovsky was primarily a politician and power broker who made his money out of political influence. The management of industrial assets was something that he left, as he accepts, to Mr Abramovich. There is therefore nothing particularly surprising in the fact that Mr Abramovich owned the shares.

It's right to add that, as far as we are aware, Mr Khodorkovsky and Mr Potanin actually bought their shares in the enterprises that they built up. It may be that they acquired them cheaply but they were not in the position of Berezovsky, who claims to have acquired shares without paying anything for them at all.

We've been discussing the question of whether Mr Berezovsky had an interest in Sibneft but one needs to remind oneself, of course, that he doesn't claim to have one now. The existence of that interest is relevant because Mr Berezovsky claims that he was induced to part with it by intimidation for too little.

So I turn to the allegation of intimidation. Now, the curtain-raiser for the intimidation issue is a distinct allegation of intimidation relating to Mr Berezovsky's sale of his stake in ORT in December 2000. Mr Berezovsky doesn't make any claim against us in relation to ORT but this allegation of intimidation relating to ORT is nevertheless extremely important in his case.

He alleges that Mr Abramovich acted as a messenger for Mr Putin and his head of administration, Mr Voloshin, in conveying to Mr Berezovsky, at the meeting in Cap d'Antibes in December 2000, a threat that unless he sold his stake in ORT to Mr Abramovich two unpleasant consequences would follow: (1) the stake would be expropriated; and (2) Mr Berezovsky's friend Mr Glushkov, who had been arrested on 7 December 2000, would be kept in prison for a long time.

This part of Mr Berezovsky's case is critical to what he later says about being bullied into selling Sibneft. In both Russian and English law there is a critical distinction to be made between a warning and a threat. A warning that unless you act in a particular way, a third party will take adverse action against you is not a threat and is not actionable. A threat must involve some indication of adverse action by the person uttering it.

Mr Berezovsky's case is that Mr Abramovich says that unless he sold out of Sibneft, the State would expropriate his interests in that and keep Mr Glushkov in prison; exactly the same sorts of threat. On the face of it, that's a warning. Mr Berezovsky seeks to turn that warning into a threat by saying that because of Mr Abramovich's behaviour at Cap d'Antibes, he interpreted the later warnings about the risk of expropriation by the state and prolonged imprisonment of Mr Glushkov as implicit threats that Mr Abramovich would bring about these results himself.

Now, as related to ORT, there is an air of unreality about the suggestion that the State, via Mr Abramovich, intimidated Mr Berezovsky into surrendering his control over ORT. Of course, the State or the government of Mr Putin had fallen out with Mr Berezovsky precisely over his use of ORT's media influence to serve his political ends, as the Russian government saw things.

Now, the problem is that the Russian State was and always had been a 51 per cent owner of the shares of ORT; it didn't therefore need to bully Mr Berezovsky in order to assume control of ORT. Mr Berezovsky says about this that the rights of the minority were entrenched under the company's charter but that is not in fact correct.

We've summarised the position at paragraph 301 of our opening B(C)/139. In short, the position was that the election of directors for ORT required a quorum at the general meeting of shareholders of ORT and the quorum was two-thirds of those registering to attend. Therefore, under that provision, the minority holding the 49 per cent could have blocked any valid general meeting simply by registering to attend and then failing to turn up.

It will not surprise your Ladyship to learn that the minority shareholders did not in fact have the right to obstruct the occurrence of a valid annual general meeting of a public company indefinitely. The charter provided that if a valid meeting did not occur, a further meeting had to be called at which the quorum would be reduced to 30 per cent. At that meeting, of course, a simple majority would approve decisions on the composition of the board of directors.

In addition to the provisions relating to the board of directors, the charter of ORT also provided that the broadcasting service was to be run by the director general, who had to be chosen from a list of persons approved by the president of the Russian Federation.

The State therefore, if it wanted to assume control of ORT, which it may well have done, did not need to force Mr Berezovsky to surrender his shares in order to achieve that. It had the means of making his shares impotent and depriving him of management control. The idea that the Russian State might have sent Mr Abramovich out to bully Mr Berezovsky into selling his shares is therefore rather far-fetched.

On the facts, however, this is rather more significant than that because it is perhaps the clearest example of a number of examples in this case of Mr Berezovsky having simply made up his story.

The alleged intimidation could only have occurred after the arrest of Mr Glushkov on 7 December because it related to Mr Glushkov's continued imprisonment, among other things. There is overwhelming evidence that the sale of the ORT stake had in fact been agreed in principle between Mr Abramovich and Mr Patarkatsishvili in the course of October and November. That agreement included agreement on the price which was ultimately paid, $150 million.

Moreover, Mr Berezovsky actually publicly announced his intention to sell out of ORT in a telephone interview with a Moscow radio station on the very morning of Mr Glushkov's arrest; before, therefore, any meeting between him and Mr Abramovich could possibly have occurred.

The other problem about this story has been greatly exercising Mr Berezovsky and his advisers over the last few weeks and that is that there is no date between the arrest of Mr Glushkov and the execution of the sale agreements at the end of December when Mr Abramovich could have visited Mr Berezovsky at Cap d'Antibes because for most of that time both of them were elsewhere.

Mr Berezovsky told his solicitors in one of the interviews with Mr Patarkatsishvili in 2007 that this visit to Cap d'Antibes occurred on 17 December 2000. In his main witness statement for trial, which is broadly consistent with that, he said that the visit had occurred two weeks after the arrest of Mr Glushkov and a day or two before Christmas.

Mr Berezovsky was then presented with the clearest documentary evidence that he himself was in the United States, or flying there and back, between 16 and 27 December. He was also presented with evidence that Mr Abramovich was fighting an extremely public election campaign for the governorship of the Russian province of Chukotka between 10 and 24 December.

My learned friend says rather dismissively that Mr Abramovich has been trying to put forward an alibi. The main problem is that Mr Berezovsky himself turned out to have an alibi for his own alleged meeting: he was actually in the United States.

Mr Abramovich's alibi is mainly important to meet the case which has recently emerged from Mr Berezovsky. His solicitors have now conceded in correspondence that the alleged meeting cannot have occurred after 16 December 2000. They have served a further statement from Mr Berezovsky in which he says that he now thinks that this meeting occurred on the very day that Mr Glushkov was arrested or within a few days afterwards. This position is maintained, with much obduracy and artifice, in my learned friend's submissions in writing.

The facts are perfectly simple. Mr Abramovich met Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili at Le Bourget Airport on 6 December and flew straight back to Moscow after that meeting. His passport stamps record that he entered Russia that evening and did not leave again until 2 January. That material has been confirmed by the Russian border guard service from its own records in a letter supplied in response to a request for information on the point.

The records of the chartered aircraft which Mr Abramovich invariably used for flights in and out of Russia reveal no flights between 7 and 10 December, which on this theory would have to have been made, bringing him to France. Mr Abramovich was in Moscow throughout the period between 6 December and his departure for Chukotka on the 10th, and has accounted for his movements day by day by listing his appointments, most of them appointments with public officials, during that period.

Now, there has been an attempt to suggest that Mr Abramovich might, having flown into Le Bourget and had a meeting at the airport itself, have decided after all to stay overnight in Paris and then accompanied Mr Patarkatsishvili down to Cap d'Antibes the next day, when Mr Patarkatsishvili did travel there, which coincidentally happened on the very day that Mr Glushkov was arrested. That theory is, with respect, clutching at straws. So is the further hypothesis that Mr Abramovich might have flown into Moscow on 6 December and then straight out again to Paris on the following morning, the moment that Mr Glushkov had been arrested, had lunch with Mr Patarkatsishvili in Paris on the 7th and then accompanied him down, after lunch, to Cap d'Antibes in the afternoon. These are fantasies that have been dreamed up for no other reason than that something fantastic like that would have had to have happened for the rest of Mr Berezovsky's story to be true.

The truth is that the Cap d'Antibes meeting is a deliberate fiction. It could not have got into Mr Berezovsky's evidence by an honest error. It's described in his evidence with a mass of circumstantial detail. It is said by him to be the turning point in Mr Berezovsky's relationship with Mr Abramovich, after which he says he never wanted to speak to Mr Abramovich again. I'll come back to that question a bit later.

This story of a menacing visit by Mr Abramovich to Cap d'Antibes in December 2000 is a fiction. It has been invented by Mr Berezovsky to give himself some kind of case to the effect that he was bound to interpret what Mr Abramovich is said to have said to Mr Patarkatsishvili as a threat of action by Mr Abramovich himself.

Now, turning to the major allegation of intimidation relating to Sibneft, the main problem that Mr Berezovsky faces about this lies in dressing up the prospect of aggressive action by the State so as to make it into a threat of aggressive action by Mr Abramovich, which it has to be in order to be tortious. Whatever law governs the tort of intimidation, it has to be a threat of adverse action by Mr Abramovich.

Now, two threats are alleged to have been uttered by Mr Abramovich, both of which concerned, on the face of it, prospective action by the Russian State: the first was the threat that the state would expropriate Mr Berezovsky's and Mr Patarkatsishvili's alleged interest in Sibneft if they didn't sell out first; and the second was the threat that the State would keep Mr Glushkov in prison for longer. These alleged threats have somehow got to be transformed into warnings of action by Mr Abramovich.

Obviously the first difficulty about this is that Mr Abramovich was not in control of the acts of the Russian State. It is suggested, I think, by Mr Berezovsky that Mr Abramovich had become a man of great influence in the inner circle of President Putin, that he was a friend of the public prosecutor and that he was, generally speaking, an adept string-puller behind the scenes, but Mr Berezovsky has no evidence to support these suggestions. His argument that the ORT sale could reasonably have given him that impression would, I would suggest, be far-fetched even if the Cap d'Antibes meeting had occurred in the manner Mr Berezovsky says it did.

Mr Berezovsky, of all people in the world, has good reason to know that President Putin is his own man. We all understand that Mr Berezovsky has strong feelings about President Putin's government but it cannot be suggested that Mr Putin is a patsy or that he allows himself to be manipulated by rich men in the way that, with regret, one must say that President Yeltsin had done.

Now, the facts are that the final pay-out of $1.3 billion -- or, as Mr Berezovsky would have it, the sale of his and Mr Patarkatsishvili's interests -- was negotiated between Mr Abramovich and Mr Patarkatsishvili in the first few weeks of 2001 and the agreement was reached in principle quite quickly, it seems by the end of January.

There was then, however, a delay in implementing that agreement because, as we can now see from the documents, Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili wanted to receive the money outside Russia -- understandably enough -- in a form which would not give rise to either exchange control problems in Russia or money-laundering problems in the receiving bank in the west. That involved a considerable amount of discussion between Mr Berezovsky and his advisers with lawyers, bank managers and so on in attendance.

The final arrangements were not agreed until May, when three meetings occurred between Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Abramovich at Munich Airport, Paris and Cologne. The Paris and Cologne meetings were also attended by the chief financial administrators of the principals: Mr Fomichev on Mr Patarkatsishvili's side and Ms Panchenko on Mr Abramovich's.

At the final meeting in Cologne on 29 May 2001, it was finally agreed that the first $500 million of the $1.3 billion would be paid in cash within a month and that the balance would be paid in stages over the year; not the calendar year, the next year. Now, the payments were made in accordance with that timetable into the account of Devonian, which was designated for that purpose by Mr Fomichev.

Mr Berezovsky's case is that it was in the course of the various meetings with Mr Patarkatsishvili that Mr Abramovich made his two threats. The expropriation threat is said to have been made as a continuous theme really during these meetings. The allegation in relation to the Glushkov threat is more limited: what is said in the pleadings is that it was made at a meeting in Munich.

There are perhaps three main problems about this allegation of intimidation as well as a host of minor evidential difficulties which I won't trouble your Ladyship with at the moment.

The first problem is that all of the alleged threats are said to have been made by Mr Abramovich to Mr Patarkatsishvili on occasions when Mr Berezovsky agrees he was not present. The only witness who will be giving evidence of the relevant occasions is Mr Abramovich and, in relation to the meetings in Paris and Cologne, Ms Panchenko. Sorry, I'm told I've got her presence in Paris wrong: it's only Cologne, forgive me. Mr Abramovich denies uttering any threat and certainly Ms Panchenko did not witness one.

Mr Berezovsky, as I've said, wasn't present on any of these occasions and he relies, as far as one can see, entirely on the account which he says that Mr Patarkatsishvili subsequently gave to him. Unfortunately for Mr Berezovsky, his lawyers' waiver of privilege over their interviews with Mr Patarkatsishvili has resulted in the disclosure of the notes made of the interview with him and the draft proofs of evidence. At a later stage I will say a word about these in general because they contribute something to an understanding of many aspects of the case.

These notes do show, as I accept, that by 2005, when the first interviews with Mr Patarkatsishvili took place, he was indeed asserting that he and Mr Berezovsky had had an interest in Sibneft which they had sold to Mr Abramovich. I have sought to explain why they were doing that. But the notes are completely inconsistent with any suggestion that there was some threat by Mr Abramovich either to bring about the expropriation of their stake or to prolong the imprisonment of Mr Glushkov.

The nearest that one gets in the interviews with Mr Patarkatsishvili to an allegation of a threat of expropriation is a suggestion by Mr Patarkatsishvili to the solicitors that Mr Abramovich was always complaining that the continued association of Mr Berezovsky with Sibneft in the public mind was damaging the interests of Sibneft.

On the subject of Mr Glushkov's position, Mr Patarkatsishvili said that he believed that if he and Mr Berezovsky sold out of Sibneft, Mr Glushkov would be released, but he makes it clear that that was not because of anything that Mr Abramovich said; it was because Mr Patarkatsishvili claimed to have received a personal assurance to that effect from Mr Voloshin, the head of President Putin's administration.

Mr Patarkatsishvili was asked by the solicitors whether Mr Glushkov had been mentioned at the Munich meeting in May, which is when Mr Berezovsky claims the threat to keep Mr Glushkov in jail was uttered. Mr Patarkatsishvili's reply was that Mr Glushkov wasn't directly mentioned on that occasion; there was only a rather oblique reference to him, without mentioning his name, which is not said to have been accompanied by anything remotely resembling a threat.

Mr Patarkatsishvili makes it perfectly clear why he was in favour of selling out of Sibneft. The reason was that he and Mr Berezovsky were concerned that Sibneft as a company might be destroyed by the Russian government, just as we now know Yukos later was, and that Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili, having become exiles, were desperately in need of funds to maintain their standard of living.

The next problem about the Sibneft threats is the extraordinary variation in Mr Berezovsky's account of the facts. In his early statements to the press, to the Metropolitan Police, to whom he made statements in relation to the investigation of the murder of Mr Litvinenko, and to my clients indeed in his letter before action and in a number of other places, Mr Berezovsky described the threat as being that the State would take adverse action not to expropriate Mr Berezovsky's interest in Sibneft but to destroy Sibneft as a company.

That of course is exactly what Mr Patarkatsishvili describes in his witness statement as being Mr Abramovich's concern. That statement couldn't possibly have been a threat by Mr Abramovich himself. It can't seriously be suggested that Mr Abramovich was threatening to induce the State to destroy his own company just to spite Boris Berezovsky, like Samson pulling down the temple over his own head.

Mr Berezovsky's earlier account of the Glushkov threat was that Mr Abramovich had said, apparently at a meeting with Mr Patarkatsishvili in Munich in May 2001, that if they sold out of Sibneft, Mr Glushkov would be released. Now, that too bore some relation to what Mr Patarkatsishvili had said in the interviews but it manifestly wasn't a threat by Mr Abramovich against Mr Glushkov; as the Court of Appeal pointed out in the hearing of the summary judgment application, it was an inducement rather than a threat.

The pleadings assumed their current form, which alleges an implicit threat by Mr Abramovich to use his influence in Russia to get their interest expropriated and Mr Glushkov kept in jail, only in the course of Mr Berezovsky's resistance to my client's application for summary judgment, after the Court of Appeal had pointed out that Mr Berezovsky's existing case did not appear to satisfy the elements of the tort. This reeks of invention by a man whose main concern is to navigate around the more awkward facts and the more awkward propositions of law by changing his story every time some unforeseen difficulty is raised about the previous version.

The third point that has to be made about this threat is that even in its current form the story doesn't hang together. How does the State set about expropriating what is now said to be a personal claim against Mr Abramovich under a Russian law joint activity or sui generis agreement, which is how we're told this 1995 agreement should be classified? What does it do to seize an interest of that sort? Presumably all it could do is legislate to vest the alleged contractual rights of Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili in the State and then enforce them against Mr Abramovich. Is it going to be said that Mr Abramovich himself promoted that sort of expropriation? And how would it actually work, given that the rights would be worthless anyway in a Russian court since they were undocumented?

Then again, if Mr Abramovich was trying to bully Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili into releasing him from his obligations in respect of Sibneft shares, surely it is incomprehensible that he agreed, according to their evidence, to pay them a huge sum of money without seeking a release from them, because a release is, effectively, what Mr Abramovich was said to have asked for. He was bullying them, according to this story, into releasing him from his personal obligations to them in relation to the custody of these shares. Without a release how would Mr Abramovich ever know whether he had succeeded in his bullying?

Mr Abramovich's evidence is that he never asked for a release, as he surely would have done if he'd behaved in the way alleged, and it's not alleged by Mr Berezovsky that he got one. That could only be because Mr Abramovich did not understand Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili to be releasing any obligation of his. If they weren't releasing anything, then where was the need to bully them?

There are, of course, a number of legal difficulties about these arguments even on the rather artificial footing, which we reject in its entirety, that the factual allegations are correct. The most notable of them is that this claim cannot succeed unless either the tort is governed by English law, some law other than Russian law; or else, if governed by Russian law, the limitation period of three years can be extended by reference to some doctrine of Russian law.

We've set out in our written opening the grounds on which we say that Russian law was the proper law of the tort. I'm not going to argue that now. On the face of it, the critical fact is that the alleged threat was to do things in Russia which are unlawful, it is said, or illegitimate in Russia, with a view to causing damage in Russia to an asset -- the shares in Sibneft -- or a person -- Mr Glushkov -- located in Russia. So Russian law would appear fairly clearly to apply.

Turning to the Russian law extensions issue, on which Mr Berezovsky has to succeed if Russian law governed the tort, the exception relied on is primarily Article 205 of the Russian Civil Code, which is said to extend the limitation period if it can be shown that the limitation itself presented Mr Berezovsky from suing earlier than he did. There is an alternative argument which depends on exactly the same facts but reliance on limitation is, in the circumstances of this case, an abuse of rights.

Both of those points depend for their facts upon the proposition that Mr Berezovsky could not bring this action earlier than he did because he didn't dare to sue while Mr Glushkov was still in Russia and liable to be kept in prison or, once released, reimprisoned.

Mr Glushkov didn't in fact leave Russia until July 2006.

It is pretty clear that this factor had no impact on Mr Berezovsky's conduct at all. Throughout the period when Mr Glushkov was in Russia, Mr Berezovsky was threatening and hectoring the Russian government in speeches and press interviews in a manner which is quite inconsistent with his supposed sensitivity to the position of Mr Glushkov.

If the problem about starting this action is that it would be thought liable to upset the Russian government to a degree that would adversely impact on Mr Glushkov, well, it is hard to imagine anything that Mr Berezovsky could have done to upset the Russian government more persistently than he actually did. Not only that, but he publicly announced his intention to bring this action four years before he actually did so; something which he surely wouldn't have done if he really thought that litigation against Mr Abramovich was liable to put Mr Glushkov in danger.

Before I leave the intimidation claim and turn to the Rusal claim, I ought to say a brief word about the Devonia agreement, which I mentioned in another context a few minutes ago. Leaving aside a couple of unarguable estoppel points about which my learned friend is commendably reticent in his written opening, the Devonia agreement is the sole basis on which Mr Berezovsky claims to have suffered loss.

The Devonia Agreement purported to be an agreement by which Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili sold an equitable interest in their Sibneft shares to a vehicle company, Devonia, belonging to Sheikh Sultan. The argument is that the equitable rights of Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili were sold to Devonia with a view to their being sold on by Devonia to Mr Abramovich and that it was the sale of his assets to Devonia that constituted his loss.

One problem about this argument -- though not one I'm going to develop at the moment -- is that Mr Berezovsky didn't have an equitable interest in Sibneft to sell to Devonia, as he now accepts, yet that was what the Devonia contract purported to transfer. But that is a trivial problem by comparison with the more fundamental issue about the Devonia agreement, which is that the whole agreement was a sham.

Now, this is one area of the case which is relatively well documented. It is tolerably clear that it wasn't a genuine sale but an artificial transaction designed to satisfy the money-laundering enquiries of Clydesdale Bank, into which Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili had arranged for the money to be paid. There is no doubt that some of the documents relating to the Devonia transaction did pass under Mr Berezovsky's eyes and that some discussions about it occurred, although it may well be that he did not see all of those documents; Mr Fomichev, however, unquestionably did.

The main evidence on this point is going to be given by the only surviving partner of Curtis & Co, who I think he was a salaried partner at the time, Mr Jacobson. I should make it clear that it is not my case that Mr Jacobson was himself personally involved in any of the more surprising activities of Mr Curtis. He was involved in the transaction but he was involved very much in a subordinate capacity. He was asked to draft documents to this, that and the other effect; he did so, and so on. The essential decisions were made, so far as we can see, by Mr Stephen Curtis in conjunction with Mr Fomichev.

Now, the basic problem which the Devonia transaction was designed to address was that in order to satisfy the Clydesdale Bank's due diligence, they had to show the Clydesdale Bank documentary evidence that the funds originated in the sale of an identifiable asset which they owned. So what they told the Clydesdale Bank was that the money was the proceeds of sale of an equitable interest in Sibneft, the legal title to which was owned by Mr Abramovich. In order to do that, they of course needed a documented sale.

Now, in the ordinary course they could have been expected to produce a written agreement with Mr Abramovich. Of course they couldn't do that. Mr Abramovich was clearly not going to sign a document recording a sale to him of an interest in Sibneft shares; that wasn't the nature of the deal that Mr Patarkatsishvili had made with him. Indeed, they never even asked him to sign a document of that kind. Documents like that were drafted by Mr Curtis but Mr Abramovich was never even asked to sign them; they perfectly well knew what the response would be.

So they had to pretend that they had sold their interest not to Mr Abramovich but to Devonia and that Devonia had then sold it on to Mr Abramovich. That would enable them to produce the sale contract with Devonia as evidence of the origin of the funds. The money would then be passed through Devonia's bank account and from there to Clydesdale Bank.

Now, the sheikh was induced to play his part in this charade by the promise of an exceptionally large commission, well over $200 million, which he would deduct as the money passed through Devonia's accounts.

The author of the scheme appears to have been mainly Mr Curtis, who successively acted for both Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili and for the sheikh. Mr Curtis also received, with the express consent of Mr Berezovsky, who signed a consent form, a personal commission of $18.3 million out of the funds for taking part in this transaction in addition to the professional fees of his firm, which amounted to £461,000.

Now, the bank, of course, expressed understandable surprise that the sheikh was proposing to buy from Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili for $1.3 billion an undocumented interest in a Russian company which Mr Berezovsky's solicitor, Mr Curtis, himself described as a rather nebulous right.

It was also explained to Clydesdale Bank that it was not going to be possible to get any document recording Mr Abramovich's acknowledgement that he held an equitable interest for Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili. That, of course, was a bit of a problem, at least for the, I have to say, relatively credulous European compliance officer of Clydesdale Bank. The parent company in Australia hit the roof when it reached them. But various yarns were spun in order to reassure the bank.

Essentially Mr Curtis told them this. What he said was that the nebulous character of the interest being sold to the sheikh did not need to worry them because Mr Abramovich would be buying the interest from the sheikh under a mirror transaction. Moreover, Mr Curtis said that Mr Abramovich would be depositing the full amount of the payments with Devonian in a secured account in advance of Devonian committing itself to Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili.

So what was being explained to the bank was that Devonian would be fully protected against the nebulous character of the transaction because they would have an absolute right beforehand of resort to Mr Abramovich, who would have secured it with 100 per cent deposit in Devonian's accounts.

Meanwhile, it was said, since the bank clearly were not willing to accept that the money should be paid straight out of the security account opened by Mr Abramovich into Clydesdale Bank, effectively just going round in a circle, that wouldn't do, so Mr Curtis told the bank that Mr Abramovich would deposit the money by way of security in an account of Devonian but the sheikh would use his own funds, other than that, in order to make the payments to Clydesdale Bank.

All of that was a complete fiction. Mr Abramovich had no dealings with Devonian or the sheikh. He was unaware of their involvement until 2002, when Mr Patarkatsishvili approached him and asked him to indemnify them against the considerable costs that they had incurred in getting the money to a western bank account and Mr Abramovich agreed to pay more.

Mr Abramovich was unaware of the details of the Devonian transaction until after disclosure was made in these proceedings. In fact there was no contact between Mr Abramovich and Devonian or the sheikh, there was no on-sale, there was no advance deposit; the money simply went round in a semicircle from Mr Abramovich to Devonian to the Clydesdale Bank in exactly the way that Mr Curtis assured them would not be happening.

None of those who come out of the Devonian transaction come out of it with any credit, yet that is the whole basis -- apart from the alternative estoppel cases -- on which loss is claimed as a result of this intimidation.

Mr Rabinowitz spent most of his time yesterday dealing with the Rusal claim, although more than five-sixths of his loss is said to have arisen from the allegation of intimidation. We have, after 727 pages of written submissions and four hours of opening, very little knowledge about how he proposes to show that the large payments that his client received really represented profit share or that Mr Abramovich intimidated him either at Cap d'Antibes or with his later meetings with Mr Patarkatsishvili; nor, of course, do we know how he proposes to show that the Devonia agreement on which his loss depends was a real transaction.

I don't say this by way of criticism but my learned friend is giving your Ladyship his hundred best tunes and he cannot reasonably be expected to dwell upon the clanking din which his clients are making below.

There remains my learned friend's emotional statement at the outset of his submissions yesterday that as a result of the way that Mr Berezovsky was treated on Sibneft, two close friends became declared enemies. How, he asks forensically, is that to be explained other than by reference to this kind of cataclysmic happening?

Your Ladyship can, I think, take it for granted that Mr Abramovich is no friend of Mr Berezovsky's now. But the attempts to relate the change of sentiment to what happened in December 2000 is a little extravagant. It exaggerates both the closeness of these two men before that date and the distance afterwards. Mr Abramovich's evidence is that, with the benefit of hindsight, he would hesitate to call Mr Berezovsky a close friend in the 1990s, although he did feel a strong emotional bond to him.

The evidence shows that there wasn't in fact a sudden break after December 2000. From early 2000 Mr Abramovich had already been seeing less and less of Mr Berezovsky in any event. There was a perfectly amicable meeting in Megeve between them, which Mr Berezovsky denies, in January 2001, less than a month after the alleged intimidation relating to ORT, which was actually witnessed by Mr Sponring.

Mr Berezovsky's public statements about Mr Abramovich are quite amicable until about 2002. The first time that Mr Abramovich realised that Mr Berezovsky was not happy was in December 2002, when he read an article in which Mr Berezovsky said that he didn't know him. He discussed this, according to his evidence, with Mr Patarkatsishvili, who told him he should ignore it.

It is right to add, as that little incident perhaps shows, that throughout 2002 to 2008, right up to today, Mr Abramovich was on perfectly good terms with Mr Patarkatsishvili, although Mr Patarkatsishvili was, if Mr Berezovsky's story is right, just as much the victim of this alleged behaviour as he, Mr Berezovsky, was.

Now, of course, by December 2000 Mr Berezovsky was in exile. As the years went on, he became increasingly bitter; he made more and more serious allegations against Mr Putin and the Russian government. None of this was a good reason for Mr Abramovich to be seen to be friends with him. The evidence in fact is that the break was the result of the festering feeling in Mr Berezovsky's breast that he had somehow been done out of things which developed in the course of the first decade of the present century, relatively slowly at that.

My Lady, the next thing I want to turn to is Rusal and I don't suppose you want two minutes of that before lunch.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: That would be a very convenient moment, so that you can all get out before the rush.
Very well. I'll sit again at 2.05.

(1.57 pm)

(The short adjournment)

(2.05 pm)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, Mr Sumption.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, the first point to be made about the Rusal claim is that it cannot be looked at, so to speak, in a self-contained compartment in isolation from the Sibneft claim. That's not only because major issues of credit affecting the evidence of both sides will arise from the evidence about Sibneft which may well colour your Ladyship's view about their evidence on Rusal but it's also because the question whether Mr Berezovsky or Mr Patarkatsishvili had an interest in Rusal is closely bound up with the question whether they had an interest in Sibneft.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR SUMPTION: There are two reasons why that is so. The first is that Mr Berezovsky says that under the 1995 agreement it was agreed that if any of the parties embarked on any future business venture other than Sibneft, the others would share it in the same proportions.

Now, that contention is disputed, along with most of the other terms of the alleged 1995 agreement, but this is the agreement on the basis of which Mr Berezovsky claims that the parties in 1999 decided jointly to participate in the original acquisition of the aluminium assets which in the following year they then merged with those of Mr Deripaska. So it is rather a critical part of their case that this all happened pursuant to what they say was agreed in 1995.

The second reason why they are interconnected is that, as in the case of Sibneft, Mr Berezovsky did not contribute a single cent to the cost of acquisition of the relevant assets. I don't think that it is his case this time that he was entitled to participate for nothing; that would be absurd. What he says is that his share of the price of the aluminium assets was to be satisfied from his share of Sibneft profits.

Now, that contention only works if the 1995 agreement entitled him to have a share of Sibneft profits and if there were some Sibneft profits to apply in satisfaction of his contribution to the price. Now, I've already explained why there were actually no Sibneft profits to which Mr Berezovsky could have been entitled and why the sums which he received can't have been Sibneft profits.

It is worth pointing out --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, because even in the plenty years his share exceeded, you say, the percentage of the profits attributable?

MR SUMPTION: Yes, exactly. They bear no relation -- in the plenty years they exceeded it and they were paid before the company had been acquired and indeed before it had made any profits and they were unrelated to dividends as well.

It's perhaps in that context worth pointing out that Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili got $490 million between them out of Mr Abramovich's companies in the year 2000; that is to say the year in which it is alleged that the aluminium assets were to be paid for out of Mr Berezovsky's profits or share of profits. Now, that means that it must be contended that Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili were entitled to treat as satisfaction of their contribution to the price of the aluminium assets a sum in excess of the $490 million which they were actually paid. This perhaps suggests that their case requires one to suppose that this great pot of Sibneft profits was almost infinitely elastic.

Now, the first and fundamental question that your Ladyship will have to address under this head is which law governs the alleged English law trust said to have existed between Mr Abramovich, Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili. It is common ground, as my learned friend told your Ladyship yesterday, that the Rusal claim can only succeed if it is governed by some law other than Russian law because in Russian law there cannot be a trust and a claim would be time-barred anyway.

Now, therefore the selection of the proper law -- this is a rare case in which the selection of the proper law, which is itself of course a question of English private international law, is absolutely critical to the outcome of this claim irrespective of the facts. It is not suggested in the context of the time bar that applies to the Rusal claim that there is any Russian law basis on which that time bar can be ignored or extended.

Our submission on the proper law is set out at considerable length --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I've got it, page --

MR SUMPTION: -- in our opening from paragraph 465 onwards B(C)/220 and I'm only going to deal briefly with it at this stage, mainly for the purpose of identifying what appear to be the facts relevant to considering it.

There are two planks to my learned friend's case that English law applies: the first is that it applies by express agreement at the Dorchester Hotel meeting; the second is that it applies by implication from the fact that a number of other agreements executed in the course of the merger arrangements with Mr Deripaska were expressly governed by English law and that Mr Berezovsky had good reasons for, at any rate, not wanting it to be governed by Russian law.

The first of those points, express choice of law, is a pure question of fact which your Ladyship is going to have to decide. Both Mr Justice Coleman and the Court of Appeal, in giving judgment on the summary judgment hearing, made some somewhat critical comments about this contention and the circumstances in which it came to be advanced.

I do not suggest to your Ladyship that there is something inconceivable or absurd about choosing English law to govern an arrangement between Russians about Russian assets. I do suggest that it must be most unusual to have an express choice of English or any law for that matter to govern an oral agreement. I've certainly never heard of parties saying, "We're not going to write down our agreement but our oral exchanges are going to be governed by the law of X". If you want to have an express choice of law, you have a written agreement.

As Lord Justice Burnton pointed out in the Court of Appeal, commenting on the suggestion from Mr Berezovsky that at the Dorchester Hotel meeting it was agreed that the parties would conduct their affairs in a proper British law way, that being the phrase that I think Mr Berezovsky claims was used, the proper British law way to deal with these matters is to write it down.

That didn't happen.

Now, an express choice of English law was first alleged as a direct response to Mr Abramovich's application for summary judgment. That application relied upon the fact that Russian law doesn't recognise the concept of trusts. Dr Rachkov, Mr Berezovsky's expert on Russian law, agreed with that proposition, thus making it essential, if Mr Berezovsky's case was to remain on the rails, that he should find some basis for saying that Russian law didn't apply.

The problem for Mr Berezovsky is that if, as he now says, he has a clear recollection -- and he claims to have a clear recollection of this -- of agreeing English law at the Dorchester Hotel, then he doesn't have any explanation of his failure to rely on this at any earlier stage of the proceedings.

Allegations that somebody has changed his approach in the course of the pleadings are not always terribly persuasive in commercial litigation and they can sometimes become rather a tedious theme of a complicated case, but that depends upon the particular nature of the allegation and the circumstances in which it was made. This is an allegation about an express exchange which a party claims to have clearly remembered which has a significant impact on a major part of the case.

The whole question of proper law was much canvassed in the course of the litigation, naturally enough, given its importance for the outcome. We have summarised at paragraph 480 the essential stages of that story.

I know your Ladyship has read this and I'm not therefore going to go through it in detail.

Perhaps the most significant single episode in that history, as your Ladyship will see, what was pleaded originally was not that there was an express choice of English law; indeed, it wasn't really alleged that there was an implicit choice of English law either. What was said is that Mr Berezovsky's intention was that it should be some law other than Russian law and therefore the court should assume that it was English law or possibly BVI law or possibly French law.

Perhaps the most significant episode in the interlocutory history relating to this aspect of things is the submission which Ms Dohmann QC, then acting for Mr Berezovsky, made to His Honour Judge Mackie in April 2008, which your Ladyship will see covered in paragraph 480 of our written opening.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Subparagraph 4, is it?

MR SUMPTION: It's subparagraph 8 in fact.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I have it.

MR SUMPTION: Now, at that hearing she presented a revised draft pleading and she said that this draft was the result of a considerable amount of hard work by Mr Berezovsky's team which was directed to showing that the proper law was not Russian but either English law or BVI law. That led, as your Ladyship will see on the following page -- subparagraph 9 -- to a request for further information and an answer from Cadwaladers which we quote.

That answer is an explanation not of why the parties had a common intention that the proper law should be English law; it's simply an explanation of why the parties, in Mr Berezovsky's submission, had a common intention that the proper law should be something other than Russian law. It is therefore not relying on any express agreement.

In his reply Mr Berezovsky relied on an inference as to the parties' intentions which is spelt out in the passage from the pleading which is quoted in our subparagraph 11, if your Ladyship would be kind enough just to read through that part. (Pause)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I've read that.

MR SUMPTION: That pleading was verified by a statement of truth signed by Mr Berezovsky.

If Mr Berezovsky distinctly recalled his phrase that there was an express choice of English law at the Dorchester Hotel meeting, then the answer had always been simple and indeed conclusive. Mr Berezovsky's team had never needed to rely on an implicit choice of some law -- possibly one of a number -- other than Russian law. Ms Dohmann and her team had never needed to groan and travail over the question what the proper law was, in the manner suggested to His Honour Judge Mackie. There was a perfectly simple answer: that Mr Berezovsky's sudden recollection within a few months of the service of that pleading of something which he had distinctly recalled all along but failed to mention to any of his solicitors is simply beyond belief.

This issue therefore, in our submission, depends on whether there was an implied choice of English law, in the sense that that was the implied intention of the parties, or an imputed choice of English law by virtue of English law being the law which is most closely connected with the transaction. As Ms Dohmann correctly perceived, it is not easy to come up with English law by a process of implication or imputation.

The case that there was an implied choice of English law is essentially founded on the express choice of English law in other agreements. These agreements which your Ladyship was shown yesterday by my learned friend have nothing to do with the relevant private international law question. They are all concerned with the acquisition by Mr Abramovich of the aluminium assets and the merger of those assets with those of Mr Deripaska. They were not concerned with the distinct arrangements that Mr Abramovich, Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili are alleged to have made among themselves as to how their interests would be shared out and how they would be held.

Now, English law did not in fact govern the critical agreements into which Mr Abramovich entered. The agreement of 10 February which dealt with the KrAZ and BrAZ aluminium sellers, which is at tab 2 of the bundle that your Ladyship was taken to yesterday -- for the record, this is H(A)17/33 -- was not governed by English law. Likewise the preliminary agreement between Mr Deripaska and Mr Abramovich at tab 1, the reference to which is H(A)16/47T in the English translation, is not governed by English law either, although it did envisage, as one can see at the end, that the definitive agreement which was in due course expected to supersede it would be governed by English law.

Now, Mr Berezovsky was not a party to --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Is that not a pointer?

MR SUMPTION: It may be a pointer, but perhaps not when you are dealing with a large number of interlocking agreements, some of which are governed by English law and some of which are not. But I can quite see that it could be a pointer.

Now, Mr Berezovsky was not himself party to any of the agreements containing an English choice of law provision unless he was a party by virtue of being a "partner" or "another party represented", to quote the various phrases that appear in some of these documents. Mr Berezovsky appears to have been, so to speak, an undisclosed principal behind Mr Abramovich to the preliminary agreement but he does not claim even to have been aware of that agreement at the relevant time; he does not claim that he was aware of these documents. His evidence is that he wasn't involved in deciding on or implementing the various structures which were used to acquire and then merge these assets and it does not seem that he saw them. He is simply hitching a lift on the documents a decade later.

It follows from that that these documents cannot be treated as part of the factual matrix against which to interpret the distinct trust which is alleged to have been created by agreement at the Dorchester Hotel. They do help my learned friends to say, as I accept, that it isn't inconceivable that there could have been an express choice of English law, but they do not get one any closer to finding that there was an implicit choice of English law.

In deciding whether there was an implicit choice of English law, in our submission the obvious weight would need to go to the fact that this was an agreement made in Russian about Russian assets between Russians, all of whom were at the time resident in Russia. The normal inference, certainly as a matter of English private international law, is that a trust is governed by the law of the settlor's residence or the trustee's residence, that being where you would have to pursue him in order to enforce the trust, and that was Russia.

Now, that is an oversimplified summary of what is necessarily rather a complicated position because these issues are determined by the Hague Convention but they're not wholly determined by the Hague Convention. In other words, as you work through the successive questions that the Hague Convention requires one to answer, you can reach a stage where you get no answer under the Hague Convention and you have then to resort to the common law. That is likely to be the position here.

What is, however, absolutely clear is that as a matter of English law, the fact that the implied choice of law would lead one to a law which does not recognise trusts is not a ground for escaping the operation of that law. That principle is absolutely fundamental because as a matter of English PIL it is well established that the parties may implicitly choose a law to govern their transaction under which it is not valid.

If Russian law applies, that is the end of the Rusal claim, as my learned friend accepts. This is therefore an issue of very considerable importance. If English or some similar law applies -- and there's no suggestion of any difference between English, French or BVI law -- then it will be necessary for your Ladyship to decide (1) whether the agreement alleged to have been made at the Dorchester Hotel was in fact made; and (2) if it was made, whether it included the term alleged by Mr Berezovsky that none of Mr Abramovich, Mr Berezovsky or Mr Patarkatsishvili would sell their shares in Rusal without the agreement of the others.

The evidence of Mr Abramovich, Mr Shvidler and Mr Deripaska is that no agreement was made at the Dorchester Hotel. There was a discussion in general terms of a merger agreement that had in fact already been made some time earlier and made without any involvement on the part of Mr Berezovsky. Mr Berezovsky himself turned up an hour late to this meeting.

There was no agreement about the mutual relations between Abramovich, Berezovsky or Patarkatsishvili at all. The alleged agreement that none of them would sell the shares without the other is denied by all three witnesses present at the meeting, whom I shall be calling. It is also, interestingly enough, inconsistent with the notes that were taken of Mr Patarkatsishvili's evidence. Those notes do not record any agreement that an English law trust was to be created.

Mr Patarkatsishvili, judging by the notes, obviously thought that Mr Abramovich ought not to have sold without reference to him but he never suggested that there had been an agreement to that effect; his point was simply that it was contrary to what he described as Russian practice. If there had been an agreement not to do so, an express agreement not to sell without reference to the other parties, then surely Mr Patarkatsishvili would have said so.

Now, I can't usefully expand on those points in opening. Your Ladyship will have to assess the evidence on each side as it is given. What I can perhaps do at this stage is to comment relatively briefly on the submissions which my learned friend made about the reference to "partners" in the preliminary agreement and about the various documents produced after the alleged agreement by other parties, not by Mr Abramovich, in which it was suggested that Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili had an interest.

The reference to "partners" in the preliminary agreement is a matter which is dealt with by Mr Bulygin in his witness statement. We do not know whether we will be able to call Mr Bulygin, he has been very ill. We will call him if we can, but otherwise his witness statement will have to stand uncross-examined as his evidence. But what he says is that there was no discussion of the possibility that Mr Berezovsky or Mr Patarkatsishvili were Mr Abramovich's partners; for his part, he assumed that Mr Shvidler was Mr Abramovich's partner.

The clause in question was inserted, as he explains, mainly in order to deal with the possibility -- this is clause 4.1, which refers to "partners" -- that the Trans-World Group might be standing behind Mr Abramovich. Mr Deripaska had fallen out with the Trans-World Group, essentially the Cherney brothers, and he didn't want to see them coming back in under Mr Abramovich's cloak.

This is a reminder of one of the critical factors about the background against which one needs to look at these documents: all of them had to be viewed in the context in which these individuals were operating.

The agreements were entered into against the background of the so-called aluminium wars in which -- and I think this is common ground -- the profitability of the aluminium industry had been reduced to next to nothing by racketeering and violence in the aluminium-producing areas. Nobody trusted anybody else. The practice of dealing through opaque structures of nominee holdings and so on meant that nobody could be sure that they could know who they were actually dealing with.

As Mr Bulygin points out, nobody actually knew if Mr Abramovich was really going to pay for the assets or, if he did, was going to pay for them with his own money. Mr Deripaska did not know if Mr Abramovich was really buying the assets or whether Messrs Cherney and the Trans-World Group were really involved behind him.

Mr Shvidler, who signed the preliminary agreement, will give evidence of the circumstances which lay behind these particular agreements, why they were worded in this way, and so will other Russian witnesses who were involved in the negotiations.

The various memoranda which came into being after the agreement are another matter. Those are documents which came into being after 2000, for the most part, within the Patarkatsishvili camp or the Deripaska camp or the Berezovsky camp. Those documents, in our submission, hardly justify the time which my learned friend devoted to them.

The most significant documents are those included in the list at tab 8 of the bundle my learned friend handed up, which is H(A)18/221.001T, where they are listed as items 5 to 8. These documents are contracts between Mr Patarkatsishvili and the acquiring companies under which Mr Patarkatsishvili contracted to receive a commission for negotiating the deal; something which is hardly consistent with his being a principal.

Mr Patarkatsishvili must have regarded these instruments, the so-called protocols, as reflecting the true character of his involvement in these transactions. The reason for that is that Mr Patarkatsishvili brought these four protocols before a Moscow notary on 16 March 2000 and had them formally notarised in order to preserve them as evidence. 16 March was just three days after the Dorchester Hotel meeting at which Mr Berezovsky says that they agreed a totally different deal under which Mr Patarkatsishvili was a principal and not an intermediary.

Now, certainly Mr Abramovich, as well as Mr Patarkatsishvili, regarded the protocols as reflecting the real nature of Mr Patarkatsishvili's involvement; but, as my learned friend told your Ladyship yesterday in answer to your Ladyship's questions, the four protocols were never acted on and the money was never paid. The reason for that is explained in Mr Abramovich's witness statement, where he says that he and Mr Patarkatsishvili agreed that they would wait and see how matters developed.

It is obvious as a matter of inference that Mr Patarkatsishvili hoped that if the aluminium deal went well, he would earn an even larger commission. As it turned out, he was absolutely right about that. At any rate, he couldn't do earn less because Mr Abramovich had at least agreed to pay him that.

The other documents to which your Ladyship was taken are all documents devoted to the familiar problem of trying to dress up an income stream as a capital asset so that the money can be received into western banks without undue suspicion about its origins. That certainly seems to be true of the explanatory note at tab 9 H(A)18/221.003T to which I took your Ladyship this morning, the document prepared by Mr Kay, although in the absence of any oral evidence about its origins, that must be a matter of inference. Particular doubts attach to any document which can be shown to have emanated from Mr Kay, as this one did.

MR RABINOWITZ: Sorry to rise. My learned friend keeps asserting that this is Mr Kay's document as if this were common ground or an established fact. I just want both my learned friend and your Ladyship to be clear that that isn't in fact the case.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I think you said "the most likely contender", or maybe Mr Sumption said that.

MR RABINOWITZ: It started with Mr Sumption saying "the most likely contender", telling us that his client thought this was in bad Russian and that therefore it meant this was Mr Kay. I have to say that that is not agreed.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right, okay. You don't dispute it was found in Mr Kay's office?

MR RABINOWITZ: I don't dispute it was found in Mr Kay's office, that's right.

MR SUMPTION: The inference -- I can quite see that the word "probably" should probably have appeared in my last sentence, but "probably" is good enough for your Ladyship.

If this document was prepared by Mr Kay, particular doubts attach to it. As I told your Ladyship this morning in another context, in the Valmore action Mr Kay was found to have forged one of the Spectrum documents. Indeed, it is said by Mr Berezovsky in the Chancery proceedings that Mr Kay also forged a deed of appointment and letter of wishes appointing himself as executor of Mr Patarkatsishvili's assets. Mr Kay is a defendant in the Chancery proceedings but I understand that he has not been seen for quite a long time.

The same concern with money-laundering problems explains the rather peculiar form in which the sale of the second tranche of the Rusal shares to Mr Deripaska went through in July 2004. In 2004 the problems arising from money-laundering regulations must have been absolutely intolerable for Mr Patarkatsishvili.

The Clydesdale Bank, whose European compliance officer had been effectively deceived into agreeing to accept the Devonia monies in May 2000, refused to accept any more of it in August as a result of a decision by their Australian head office. They also required Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili to close the accounts as soon as possible. Unfortunately, it took them more than three years to find another bank willing to accept balances that had already built up in the Clydesdale Bank accounts before the Clydesdale Bank required the accounts to be closed. So the money was effectively frozen because they couldn't transfer it anywhere; in large numbers of cash withdrawal machines perhaps.

Now, this experience almost certainly explains the odd way in which Mr Patarkatsishvili agreed to receive his commission on the Rusal transaction.

Mr Patarkatsishvili had made a very significant contribution to the success of the aluminium deal. He had personal contacts with most of the people involved, which Mr Abramovich did not have. He negotiated many of the agreements. Critically, after the acquisition and merger of the assets Mr Patarkatsishvili played a very significant role in putting an end to the gang warfare and racketeering which had come close to destroying the industry, thereby enabling it to resume its profitability, to the considerable benefit of its owners.

Mr Abramovich's evidence is that he ultimately agreed to pay Mr Patarkatsishvili a commission of $585 million, that agreement having been made in August 2003. The problem to which that gave rise was the familiar problem of how that was going to be got into a western bank account, Mr Patarkatsishvili being now an exile living in Europe. So Mr Abramovich later agreed with Mr Patarkatsishvili that he would transfer the second tranche of the Rusal shares to him in lieu of commission so that he could then sell them to Mr Deripaska in his own name. The proceeds of that sale could then, in all honesty, be presented to western banks as the price of a capital asset.

Now, it's clear from the Bryan Cave memoranda to which your Ladyship was taken yesterday, and indeed from a fair amount of other evidence, that Mr Deripaska was concerned that Mr Berezovsky might have an interest in assets that were being acquired by Mr Deripaska from Mr Patarkatsishvili. It was the case that he was acquiring them from Mr Patarkatsishvili but Mr Deripaska was understandably concerned about that because Mr Berezovsky had been claiming in the press that he had an interest in those assets. It therefore occurred to Mr Deripaska and his legal advisers that if he contracted with Mr Patarkatsishvili alone, Mr Berezovsky might have a claim against him at some subsequent stage.

This problem was ultimately dealt with by Mr Patarkatsishvili warranting that he was the sole beneficial owner of the shares that he was selling in Rusal and by Mr Abramovich entering into a deed with Mr Deripaska acknowledging that he, Mr Abramovich, had dealt with no one else and that Mr Deripaska could therefore take it that the beneficial interests were those declared by Mr Patarkatsishvili and no others.

Mr Patarkatsishvili was genuinely selling to Mr Deripaska but he had only temporarily acquired the assets for the purpose of enabling him to receive money from an asset rather than an income stream. Now, Mr Patarkatsishvili had no interest in Rusal other than the interest in the second tranche which was created for him at the time when that tranche was sold.

Mr Berezovsky, in our submission, never had an interest in Rusal unless possibly he had one by virtue of the alleged partnership agreement between himself and Mr Patarkatsishvili.

We do not know the answer to that question. My learned friend is not entitled to rely on that as a route to a proprietary interest because of your Ladyship's ruling that he may not base a claim on that. We simply do not have the documentary resources -- they are mostly disclosures in the Chancery action which we haven't seen -- which would enable us to deal properly with it.

But if Mr Berezovsky had an interest, it can only have been by that route. If he had an interest then, however that interest arose, it seems clear on Mr Berezovsky's own evidence that he claims to have authorised Mr Patarkatsishvili to negotiate with Mr Deripaska and Mr Abramovich for the sale of that interest to Mr Deripaska on behalf of both of them; that is what he says.

Moreover, the way in which the various parties are defined would include Mr Berezovsky, simply looking at the definitions.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR SUMPTION: Now, the transaction which was negotiated in consequence, including a release executed by Mr Patarkatsishvili on behalf of those within the definition, including therefore Mr Berezovsky, in favour of Mr Abramovich from a wide range of liabilities including those of the kind which he is now asserting. So if Mr Berezovsky lost out on this basis, that is something which he resolved by the deal with which the last tranche was sold back to Mr Deripaska in July 2004.

Now, I have, notwithstanding my misgivings about separating them wholly, dealt separately with the two sides of this case, Sibneft and Rusal, because it seems in the interests of coherence to be the right way of doing it. As it has developed, Mr Berezovsky's claim to have had an interest in both Sibneft and Rusal has turned out to be heavily dependent on just two pieces of evidence, namely the Le Bourget transcript and the Curtis note. I will say a brief word about each of those documents as well as about Mr Patarkatsishvili's interview notes.

Now, I'm not going to take up your Ladyship's time on the Le Bourget transcript for very long because it would take a very great deal of time and both Mr Berezovsky and Mr Abramovich will be dealing with it in their evidence in due course. The problem about the transcript is that it is, in most places, obscure and the discussion can only be understood against the background against which the parties were speaking. They were discussing a large number of recent transactions which had given rise to accounting one way or the other between them and unless you understand what those transactions were, it is quite difficult to follow what is being said on the transcript.

Now, there's a detailed line-by-line commentary on the transcript by both Mr Berezovsky and Mr Abramovich which your Ladyship can study in parallel columns in the annex at E6 E6/01/1. The problem that Mr Berezovsky has in dealing with the discussions at Le Bourget is that, as he freely admits, he himself was not in fact familiar with the detailed earlier transactions which were being discussed at Le Bourget because they were concerned with various technical methods of getting money out of Russia and satisfying money-laundering enquiries.

His commentary is therefore largely speculation about a discussion which he must have had as much difficulty in following as we do; indeed rather more. This was the kind of technical financial operation which he was in the habit of leaving partly to Mr Patarkatsishvili and partly to his financial manager, Mr Fomichev, neither of whom, of course, will be able to assist your Ladyship with their evidence. Well, Mr Fomichev would be able to but he's not going to be called.

We have identified the main relevant passages for the purpose of these points in our opening at paragraph 269 and summarised the evidence each way about them.

Turning to the Curtis note, that is discussed in our written opening at paragraphs 504 and 505 B(C)/245. We do not say that Mr Curtis fabricated this note. We do not say that. What we say is that it is not reliable evidence of what was said.

We are unlikely to want to cross-examine Ms Flynn, although we have held off actually saying that because there remain --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: She's the lady who put the sticker on it?

MR SUMPTION: The lady who put the sticker on it.

The only reason that we have not formally confirmed that we don't need to cross-examine Ms Flynn is that we understand there is a further group of Curtis & Co documents which has been identified and which are being examined, I think, by Addleshaws -- oh, by the Curtis estate's solicitors, DLA, and we believe we may get more documents. In case we do, we are reluctant, so to speak, to let go of a witness who may be able to throw light on them.

But we certainly don't deny, on the facts as we presently know them, that Mr Curtis came back at some stage from Georgia and gave this document to Ms Flynn with instructions that she was to keep them because they were vitally important.

The background to the Curtis note appears to be -- and there are many questions about the Curtis note which are difficult to answer dogmatically -- that Mr Curtis, at some earlier stage in 2003, had drafted -- in fact the draft is dated April -- presumably on the instructions of Mr Patarkatsishvili, an agreement between Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Abramovich; an agreement under which Mr Abramovich would have transferred 25 per cent of Rusal to him.

Now, that agreement does not seem to have been discussed with Mr Abramovich; it is simply a document that emerged from the Curtis files. It was, as we understand it, a project. Now, this document may have been prepared because Mr Patarkatsishvili wanted to document an interest which he claims to have already but which was only equitable and which he needed to make into a legal interest or at any rate an interest which was available for proof in documentary form; or it may have been a prototype for what was in fact later agreed between Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Abramovich in October, when Mr Abramovich agreed to transfer shares to Mr Patarkatsishvili in lieu of commission. We don't know.

One way or the other, however, it appears to have been a document which was prepared in order to give Mr Patarkatsishvili a documented right to something, presumably for money-laundering purposes. It looks as if at the meeting in Georgia Mr Curtis deliberately set out to find some evidence that Mr Patarkatsishvili was already interested in the Rusal shares. He seems to have concluded that in fact Mr Abramovich was not likely to enter into his draft agreement of April and was therefore looking for some other evidence of an interest.

The note appears to have been an attempt by Mr Curtis to create evidence out of a conversation which in fact he cannot possibly have understood because the conversation was in Russian, as Mr Tenenbaum says and as one would indeed expect, a language which Mr Curtis did not understand.

Now, Mr Tenenbaum will tell your Ladyship that nobody was taking a note as far as he can recall. Both for that reason and because Mr Curtis knew no Russian, somebody must have told Mr Curtis what he was to write down after the meeting was over, presumably in the absence of Mr Tenenbaum. We don't know who that person was: it might have been Mr Patarkatsishvili; it might have been Mr Fomichev, who was among those present; I suppose it might have been the mysterious Igor, who was the other person said to have been there.

Mr Tenenbaum was the only person who appears to have been present at this interview who will be giving evidence at this trial. Mr Fomichev will not be called. Mr Tenenbaum's evidence is that the exchanges recorded in the note did not occur in his presence.

Your Ladyship was told yesterday there were certain details that only Mr Tenenbaum could have known. That is not, as we understand it, correct. The details to which he was referring are details which, for various reasons, would have been known to Mr Fomichev as well because they would have been known in the course of arranging payments, which was one of Mr Fomichev's responsibilities.

Now, there is finally the material garnered from Mr Patarkatsishvili before his death by Mr Berezovsky's solicitors. I have acknowledged in my written opening, and my learned friend Mr Rabinowitz acknowledged on his feet yesterday, that there is something for both sides in this material. In particular I acknowledge that the interview notes with Mr Patarkatsishvili are consistent with his having asserted an interest in both Sibneft and Rusal and I have explained why it was very much in his interest to say that in 2005 and indeed had been for a number of years before that.

The material is, however, inconsistent with every other aspect of Mr Berezovsky's case, although a bit less so in the case of the material arising from the interviews in 2007 than the interviews in 2005. Your Ladyship may therefore have to form a view about the relative reliability of these two stages in the process of interviewing Mr Patarkatsishvili.

Mr Rabinowitz submits that the 2007 material is more reliable but, if one thinks about it for a moment, that really can't be right. The 14 December 2007 draft of the witness statement for Mr Patarkatsishvili which your Ladyship was taken to yesterday, in particular is a document to be treated with really very considerable reserves. It was never seen by Mr Patarkatsishvili or commented upon by him, and that is quite clear from the witness statements of Mr McKim and Ms Duncan. It is equally clear that the prior draft of the statement wasn't shown to Mr Patarkatsishvili either.

Contrary to my learned friend's submission yesterday, it was not in fact prepared by lawyers who had a more detailed or considered understanding of the case than had been true of their predecessors in 2005. In fact the lawyers that prepared this draft proof, Mr McKim and Ms Duncan, were very new to the case: they had only been instructed for the first time in October 2007.

The proof contains controversial paragraphs that appear to have been lifted bodily either from Mr Berezovsky's evidence or from the particulars of claim, which had been drafted in September 2007. They were simply slotted into the previous Patarkatsishvili drafts and therefore stand, I suppose, as something that the solicitors hoped Mr Patarkatsishvili might say.

Now, the two meetings in November 2007 in Tel Aviv that preceded that draft witness statement were both attended by Mr Berezovsky as well as Mr Patarkatsishvili, with Mr Berezovsky apparently dominating the discussion and doing the translation. Mr Patarkatsishvili's English improved over the years of experience of life at Virginia Water but it can never be said, I believe, at any stage that his English was proficient.

The lawyer that created these draft witness statements accepts that he did in fact include information gleaned at the meeting which had been provided from both Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili without distinguishing between the two. Mr McKim makes that point at paragraph 34 of his witness statement.

For all of those reasons, far more likely to be reliable is the earlier proof of evidence that two experienced lawyers had put together after the June 2005 meeting. It is significantly more proximate in time to most of the relevant events. Mr Berezovsky was not there, so there's no difficulty about distinguishing his views from what Mr Patarkatsishvili was saying and no question of his having influenced Mr Patarkatsishvili. Moreover, this was before the particulars of claim was issued, so that there was no question of the solicitors trying to find material to support a particular case. It is therefore as close to a neutral account of Mr Patarkatsishvili's recollection as one is likely to get.

Now, looking at the 2005 material as a whole -- and in fact, in spite of what I've been saying, the 2007 material is not that different -- the 2005 material first of all indicates that there was a meeting, not at Cap d'Antibes, regarding the sale of ORT and that Mr Abramovich acted in relation to ORT as what Mr Patarkatsishvili described as "a trusted intermediary".

Now, it was recognised as self-evident by Mr Patarkatsishvili that Mr Abramovich himself had no power to obtain Glushkov's release, which had been promised to Mr Patarkatsishvili directly by Mr Voloshin. So Mr Patarkatsishvili's recollection is destructive of the ORT intimidation allegation.

Secondly, the 2005 notes and drafts show that the $1.3 billion transaction in relation to Sibneft was in fact initiated by Mr Patarkatsishvili, who sought out money in order to fund his and Mr Berezovsky's exile. He was also, as the notes show, concerned about the undocumented nature of his interest and the lack of management control over Sibneft: factors which undoubtedly were liable to depress any value it might have had.

This is entirely inconsistent with the suggestion of intimidation in relation to Sibneft. All that Mr Patarkatsishvili says about this is that Mr Abramovich made it a regular theme of his discussions with Mr Patarkatsishvili that the Russian government was likely to damage the interests of Sibneft as a company if Mr Berezovsky remained associated with it.

Thirdly, these notes indicate that the interest in Rusal was, as Mr Patarkatsishvili put it, "to be held in the same way as our Sibneft shares", ie, one would suppose, under Russian law.

The reason why it was wrong for Mr Abramovich, in Mr Patarkatsishvili's view, to sell the shares first was not because it was a breach of an English law trust or because there had been an express agreement not to do so; because, as he put it, in Russia, if you go into a project together, you can't dispose of your shares in breach of oral agreements and normal principles of business. What was understood by Mr Patarkatsishvili was governed, as he thought it, by Russian practice, not by express agreement.

Perhaps the most telling fact is that if Mr Berezovsky has got a case on either the Sibneft or the Rusal side of this dispute, then Mr Patarkatsishvili had the same case, neither better nor worse. Yet Mr Patarkatsishvili has never asserted any claim against Mr Abramovich; indeed, on the Sibneft side he is recorded in the notes as saying that he was perfectly happy with the outcome.

There is some evidence that Mr Berezovsky put pressure on Mr Patarkatsishvili to join in this action but that he would not do so. Now, in our submission, Mr Patarkatsishvili's reticence about running an action or participating in an action which his recollection of events did nothing to support is a very telling indication of its merits.

My Lady, unless there's any other matter that your Ladyship would like me to deal with, that is all that I need to say in opening.

Can I turn to the next items on your Ladyship's agenda.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I think I'm going to hear from Mr --

MR SUMPTION: No, all I want to do is just -- I will deal with that later, yes, if your Ladyship --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I was going to hear from the others.

MR SUMPTION: Yes, absolutely. Okay. I'll deal with that later.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: What I'll do is I'll take the break now for ten minutes. Thank you very much indeed, Mr Sumption.

(3.02 pm)

(A short break)

(3.12 pm)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, Mr Malek.

Opening submissions by MR MALEK

MR MALEK: Your Ladyship has read the skeleton so what I was proposing to do was cover two topics: first of all, why the Anisimov defendants are here; and then to explain how we see our participation at the trial, and that is tied in with any questions relating to trial management.

Why are we here? Five short points.

First of all, I wish to cover the question of how we fit into the various actions brought by Mr Berezovsky. As your Ladyship knows, we appear for the Anisimov defendants: that's Mr Vasiliy Anisimov personally and companies related to him. They're described in paragraph 15 of our skeleton B(G)/01/6: it's Coalco International and Coalco Metals. As your Ladyship knows, the action with which we are concerned is the Metalloinvest action and that's one of three actions commenced by Mr Berezovsky.

As your Ladyship knows, there are going to be conjoined Chancery Division trials that are due to take place in October. There are two phases to those trials and phase 2 is concerned with tracing issues and is dependent on Mr Berezovsky succeeding in phase 2. My learned friend Mr Adkin is going to say something about those actions, so I can move on to my next point, but simply stressing that we are defendant parties only to the Metalloinvest action and we're only concerned with Rusal-related issues.

The second point goes to the question of the scope of the trial. One of the key issues is of course whether Mr Berezovsky had any interest in Rusal or more accurately whether he acquired what he describes as ownership interest in Rusal and that is the issue with which we're concerned. This trial will determine a number of issues relating to Rusal and the various routes by which Mr Berezovsky makes a claim.

As the court pointed out in its July 2010 judgment at paragraph 28, a trial of the Rusal issues once and once only is sensible, achievable, desirable and fair, it being common ground that the joint venture claim based on the alleged bilateral joint venture between Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili will be left over and determined in the Chancery Division.

I just simply make one request at this stage, which is I wonder whether we could refer to Mr Patarkatsishvili as "Badri", as I think your Ladyship did in the joint judgment.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. Well, I don't mind as long as nobody characterises that as disrespect to him, but I'm sure they won't.

MR MALEK: Lord Justice Longmore referred to him as AP, but it doesn't matter. On that basis we will proceed.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well.

MR MALEK: So the Rusal issues will be determined here subject to that point about the joint venture between Mr Berezovsky and Badri. We say that there is no scope for Mr Berezovsky to raise additional Rusal issues in the Chancery Division, that being the point that there should be determined only once only and that is here.

The third point relates to the overlap issues. We've covered that in our skeleton submissions, it's paragraph 28 B(G)/01/15, and it's taken from the conjoined order of 16 August. As we point out at paragraph 29, there are two further issues which arise in the Abramovich action only but which are relevant to Mr Berezovsky's claim in the Metalloinvest action.

Just one other reference to the joint judgment at paragraph 35, where it is said this, and I quote:

"It is, for example, possible that evidence given in such statements might point to the desirability of additional issues or factual matters being resolved as overlap issues in the Abramovich action in a manner binding on the defendants in the Chancery actions."

All we would say at this point is that the overlap issues are now closed, subject to any variation in the overlap issues arising out of the amendment application, which is the matter that next arises.

The fourth point we make in terms of why we're here is that our participation is directed to a number of issues that can be broken down into a number of phases. Just looking at them very briefly, at a very high level, phase 1 covers the period in late 1999 to 2000. You will hear that from 1997 to 2000 aluminium was Mr Anisimov's main business and the issue is whether Mr Berezovsky acquired an interest in the aluminium assets that eventually found their way into Rusal. As your Ladyship knows, the companies related to Mr Anisimov sold their KrAZ assets and it's not necessary to go into those details.

We will give evidence as to how, from our perception, Mr Abramovich and his companies became involved in aluminium. Mr Anisimov will explain that he did not have any meetings with Mr Berezovsky and he will also explain to your Ladyship that it was never suggested to him that Mr Berezovsky was involved in the purchase or acquired any interest in the KrAZ assets. There are two other witnesses that we will be calling who will be giving evidence to a similar effect: that's Mr Busuk, who at the material time was the CEO of Coalco International and Mr Streshinsky, who at that time was the treasurer of Coalco.

So if that's the first phase, the second phase is the Dorchester meeting in 2000. You will hear from Mr Anisimov that following the sale of his interest in KrAZ assets, he withdrew from the aluminium business. He will tell your Ladyship that he did not know about the Dorchester meeting. I believe no one has suggested he was in fact involved in this meeting. He will also say that he had not even heard about the meeting prior to the commencement of these proceedings.

Now, the Anisimov defendants deny that Mr Berezovsky acquired any interest in Rusal at the Dorchester meeting and clearly this meeting is of critical importance to all the parties before your Ladyship because the foundation of Mr Berezovsky's claim against the Anisimov defendants is the alleged agreement at the Dorchester meeting. If I can just make two points about this meeting by way of overview.

First of all, it confirms the appropriateness of dealing with this by way of a trial in the Commercial Court. At one stage we were faced with having to deal with this meeting in the Chancery Division, where we could give no evidence ourselves about it, but the advantage that your Ladyship has is that all the principal players who were at that meeting who are alive will be giving evidence to your Ladyship.

The second point about the meeting, which is covered in Mr Anisimov's evidence, is that Mr Berezovsky in his evidence suggests that at the time of the sale of the KrAZ assets and the formation of Rusal in early 2000 Mr Anisimov advised Badri, and possibly Mr Berezovsky as well, that all the arrangements between himself -- that is Badri -- Mr Berezovsky and Mr Anisimov should be made in a very precise British law way. Mr Anisimov denies saying this. This dispute is clearly relevant to the question of the governing law and the question of whether there was an English law trust that was created at this meeting.

Now, the third phase is the sale of the first tranche of the Rusal proceeds in 2003. Mr Anisimov was not involved in that. However, it is important to him because, as we understand the position, Mr Berezovsky's primary case in the Abramovich action is that his alleged interest in Rusal was sold in the first Rusal sale and yet in the Metalloinvest action, however, Mr Berezovsky seeks to trace the proceeds of the second Rusal sale.

Now, we contend that the two claims must be advanced in the alternative and therefore if Mr Berezovsky succeeds on his primary case against Mr Abramovich, he will then have no claim against the Anisimov defendants at all.

The final phase is the second tranche --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I would just like to be clear where you're positioned. Are you supporting Mr Berezovsky's primary case against Mr Abramovich? I would just like to be clear where you're coming from.

MR MALEK: We say that Mr Berezovsky never did acquire any interest in Rusal. That's our case and has always been our case.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So you're not, as it were, standing in the same corner as Mr Berezovsky in relation to that.

MR MALEK: No. We're just putting the point that there's an alternative case and that it has an impact on us when it comes to the question of what the sale of the first tranche of the Rusal proceeds involved.

Now, as far as the last phase that I'm going to deal with, the second tranche in 2004, the Metalloinvest action concerns that second tranche. Mr Berezovsky claims that the second tranche encompassed his and Badri's shares in Rusal and he seeks to trace some of those share proceeds into the hands of the Anisimov defendants. Those claims are not the subject of this action and are to be determined in the conjoined Chancery actions.

We've set out an analysis of the Metalloinvest action in section C of our skeleton simply so that the court is aware of what will be determined there. There are a number of rival cases about what this second tranche is all about; I'm not going to go into the case of Mr Berezovsky or Mr Abramovich because they've already done that.

Our case, by way of a short summary, is this. Mr Anisimov was involved in 2004, during the second Rusal sale, at the request of Badri, who Mr Anisimov was friends with. During the sale Mr Deripaska asked Mr Anisimov whether Mr Berezovsky had any connection to the transaction. Mr Anisimov confirmed the position with Badri, who assured him that Mr Berezovsky was not anywhere near the deal. Badri similarly confirmed to Mr Streshinsky both verbally and in writing that he was the sole beneficial owner of the 25 per cent that was being sold and the final transaction documents clearly recorded that position and that was the basis on which the deal was done.

Now, it's not the case that Mr Berezovsky was somehow whitewashed out of the picture, as my learned friend Mr Rabinowitz characterised the position yesterday. There was an issue in the early part of the discussions relating to the transaction as to whether there was a second beneficiary and whether that beneficiary was Mr Berezovsky, but it was confirmed that he was not and that's reflected in the documentation. This is not a whitewash; the evidence of those involved in the negotiations and the transaction documents confirm that Mr Berezovsky was not a beneficiary.

Although the second tranche materials are extensive and they're covered in detail in the H(A) bundles, the focus of your Ladyship's investigation, we submit, at this trial is on whether those materials shed light on whether Mr Berezovsky had an interest in the Rusal proceeds. Other issues about the proceeds simply do not arise.

The last point on why we are here relates to Sibneft. The Anisimov defendants have no direct interest in the Sibneft issues but what makes our participation in this trial difficult to plan is that there is no clear line between the Sibneft and the Rusal issues and, as my learned friend Mr Sumption said this afternoon, there is no self-contained compartment and it's fuzzy.

There are a number of witnesses who cover both issues. There are crossovers: for example, one of the issues is how Mr Berezovsky acquired his alleged interest in the aluminium assets; one version of his case is that's from the profits in Sibneft. The context of Sibneft is relevant to Rusal: for example, the alleged three-way joint venture and the allegations involving Sibneft form part of the context of the Dorchester agreement --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: You're saying you need to be here all the time?

MR MALEK: Not all the time. I was going to come to our participation later. But the last point is one of credibility.

That really leads on to the second topic I wish to address your Ladyship on, which is: how do we see our participation?

The court has already made an order that we participate fully on the overlap issues and that's part 5 of the order of 16 August.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I think it's liberty to -- I mean, you don't have to participate.

MR MALEK: No, agreed. That we may participate is more accurate, yes. This issue it was touched upon in the judgment, where it said that proper trial management of that action will prevent the defendants from straying beyond the bounds of what is necessary in order to allow that participation. What I was going to do now is just to identify three points how we meet that objective.

The first is that we are only concerned with overlap issues; we have nothing to say on non-overlap issues. If it arises at all, it's a matter for the court to decide how far cross-examination is appropriate on non-overlap issues. Clearly, findings of the court on non-overlap issues are not binding in the subsequent trial in the Chancery Division. But, as I say, we have no intention of going into the non-overlap issues.

The second point is that there is a common cause between Mr Abramovich and the Anisimov defendants in the sense that we have the same starting point, namely that Mr Berezovsky did not acquire an interest in the Rusal proceeds. As our opening submissions show, this means that we ought to be able to adopt many of the submissions made by Mr Abramovich, who is clearly the lead defendant; and going forward it also means that our cross-examination will not repeat areas already cross-examined in cross-examination by Mr Sumption's team.

We have adduced three factual witnesses. We've adduced no expert evidence. The factual evidence is, as I indicated earlier, Mr Anisimov, Mr Streshinsky and Mr Busuk and that's in file F1.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR MALEK: The last point which is touched upon by your Ladyship, which is: how do we see our presence going through the trial?

It's possible that the presence of our full legal team is not required for all the trial and what we were going to do was simply see how matters develop. Clearly there are some areas where we have nothing to say: for example, what happened in December 2000 and whether there were meetings in Cap d'Antibes, we've got nothing to say on that. If at any time during the trial there's a vacant seat here it's no disrespect to your Ladyship and I'm not going to say anything in advance if I'm not going to be here.

Just three other points to make by way of housekeeping relevant to my clients but I would submit to all the parties in this case, which is a point that I touched upon with your Ladyship at an earlier hearing: it concerns a duty on our part to put all points to witnesses.

In my respectful submission in a case of this complexity, with this many documents, it would be impossible to put all the points that are in dispute. What I would suggest is that the appropriate way forward is that there is no duty as such to put points other than in relation to allegations of dishonesty, where it's only fair that the allegation of dishonesty should be put so that that witness answers it.

Subject to that, I would suggest that we proceed on the basis that there is no duty to put and it's a matter of discretion for the individual advocates as to what matters they cover in cross-examination, particularly having regard to the weight of the material in this case.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. But if at the end of the day I were to consider something to be important and you hadn't put it, then obviously you have to bear the consequences.

MR MALEK: Exactly. We're happy with that approach.

The only other point I make is concerning seating. Your Ladyship dealt with this. We're very happy where we are at the moment. My learned friend Mr Rabinowitz says he has no objection if we stay here throughout the trial.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: You sort it out with each other. If Mr Rabinowitz's team is happy that you stay there, that's fine by me.

MR RABINOWITZ: So far so good, my Lady.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. If there gets to be any difficulty, no doubt you'll raise it with me.

MR MALEK: That's all I was going to say, your Ladyship.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you very much indeed. Thank you to your team for your written submissions as well.

Mr Adkin, you're going next, are you?

Opening submissions by MR ADKIN

MR ADKIN: My Lady, yes, that's the batting order that we were proposing, with your Ladyship's leave, to adopt throughout the rest of trial.

My Lady, the first thing to say is that I don't propose to repeat what Mr Sumption or Mr Malek have said, either now or at any point during the remainder of this trial. Your Ladyship is not going to be assisted by hearing submissions in duplicate or triplicate.

What I do need to do is briefly explain the family defendants' position, where they fit in, and also briefly to deal with the attack that was made upon them both in the written and oral submissions produced on behalf of Mr Berezovsky.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: You're also going to have to deal with your application to adduce your expert evidence --

MR ADKIN: My Lady, yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: -- but I don't propose to deal with that at the present time.

MR ADKIN: I was going to mention that briefly at the end because in a sense that is now water under the bridge because the case, as we understand it, is now being amended to introduce a resulting and constructive trust claim and that may well have --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: That's opposed.

MR ADKIN: As we understand it, it isn't anymore. I surmise that's what Mr Sumption was going to come on to at the end of his opening.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Okay. I don't want to deal with any application to adduce expert evidence until further down the track.

MR ADKIN: My Lady, I am grateful.

What I therefore propose to deal with is four things: firstly, where the family defendants fit into the picture; secondly, where the overlap issues fit into the picture; thirdly, to summarise the family defendants' position on those issues and deal with the criticisms made of that position on Mr Berezovsky's behalf; and finally to summarise how we propose, with your Ladyship's leave, to participate in the trial, to deal with some of the practical points that Mr Malek has raised.

As your Ladyship is aware, the family defendants comprise Badri's widow, daughters and mother, Badri having died in February 2008. That death was, as your Ladyship will have seen, sudden and unexpected. There was no time for the extensive and complex commercial affairs to be put in order before it happened and it's fair to say that Badri's family have, since his death, had to live with the consequences of that.

One or more of the family defendants is a defendant in all three of the actions presently progressing in the Chancery Division and they comprise the principal beneficiaries of Badri's estate. Although that estate is formally represented in England by court-appointed interim administrators, who are the first named defendants in each of those three Chancery actions, it has been sensible and convenient for the principal beneficiaries of the estate to make the running in defending Mr Berezovsky's claims against it and with the approval of the interim administrators and the other beneficiaries, that is what the family defendants have done.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So the administrators are Hine and Gibson, are they?

MR ADKIN: My Lady, yes. The family defendants are here because the determination of the overlap issues identified by your Ladyship and Mr Justice Mann and which arise both in the Chancery actions and the Commercial action have very significant consequences for Badri's estate and therefore for the family as beneficiaries of that estate.

But at the end of the day this is by no means, as your Ladyship will appreciate, the main battle between the family defendants and Mr Berezovsky, which will take place in due course next year. This is an opening skirmish, albeit a very significant one, and the criticisms that have been made of the family in not putting forward their evidence et cetera at this stage need to be seen in that context.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR ADKIN: My Lady, the overlap issues. Although the divide is not a perfect one, Mr Berezovsky's claim against Mr Abramovich has conveniently been broken down into the two parts of Sibneft and Rusal. As your Ladyship is aware, the overlap issues are all matters which relate to the Rusal part of Mr Berezovsky's claim against Mr Abramovich. To the extent therefore that there is a reasonably clear dividing line between the areas in which the family defendants' interest in this trial is and is not engaged, that is where the line is to be drawn.

The reason why the family defendants are here at all is because of the overlap issues and their relevance to the Chancery actions. It's right that I briefly explain how they are relevant. They are relevant to two. The first is the Metalloinvest action, by which Mr Berezovsky claims a 5 per cent share in Metalloinvest, a valuable Russian ore and mining company which is owned, at least in part, the share of which is owned by entities controlled by Mr Anisimov.

Mr Berezovsky asserts that claim to that stake on three alternative bases. Firstly, he relies on what your Ladyship will have heard referred to before as the bilateral joint venture; that is to say the joint venture agreement said to have been made between Mr Berezovsky and Badri in 1995. Second, he says that he, Badri, and Mr Anisimov made a contract at some stage in 2004 under which that stake was acquired. And third, most relevantly for present purposes, Mr Berezovsky says that the stake was purchased using the proceeds of sale of the Rusal shares sold in July 2004, in which he says he had an interest for reasons with which your Ladyship is familiar, pursuant to the meeting at the Dorchester Hotel. He therefore claims an ability to trace from the Dorchester agreement through the Rusal proceeds and into the Metalloinvest stake.

The overlap issues are therefore of importance in the Metalloinvest action in at least two ways: firstly because the alleged Dorchester Hotel agreement forms the foundation of Mr Berezovsky's claim to have acquired an interest in the proceeds of sale of the Rusal shares and it is those proceeds which were used to fund, it is said, the Metalloinvest stake; and secondly because the findings on the overlap issues will form the factual backdrop against which another of the foundations of Mr Berezovsky's claims, namely his alleged agreement in 2004, will fall to be judged. It will obviously be considerably more difficult for Mr Berezovsky to make out such an agreement if, on the determination of the overlap issues, the court finds that he's unable to make out any interest in Rusal and its proceeds which lay at its heart.

That then is the Metalloinvest action. The other action to which the overlap issues are relevant is the main Chancery action, in which the family defendants are also participating. By that action Mr Berezovsky asserts --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: You have set this out in your skeleton --

MR ADKIN: My Lady, yes. I will be --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: -- which I've read.

MR ADKIN: Your Ladyship will therefore know that at the heart of that action is the bilateral joint venture but Mr Berezovsky does rely on what he says are a number of self-standing agreements, including the one made, he says, at the Dorchester Hotel in March 2000. On the basis of that he says he acquired an interest not only in the Metalloinvest stake but also in a number of other very valuable and significant assets.

The determination of the overlap issues is therefore important in both of those actions and it's important to the family defendants for at least two reasons in both of those actions: firstly because he claims an interest in assets which are prima facie held for them; and secondly because in both of them he seeks to blame Badri for having failed properly to secure and record his interest in those assets, which he says was purchased with the proceeds of the second Rusal sale.

That claim might be thought to be a somewhat striking one in light of the position adopted by Mr Berezovsky in this trial as to his approach to the documenting of his interests in assets, but given that Mr Berezovsky estimates the value of the Metalloinvest stake alone to be over $1.4 billion, it is a very significant claim indeed against the estate.

Your Ladyship has seen what the various parties have to say about each of the overlap issues and that is set out in full both in my skeleton and also in Mr Malek's skeleton and I don't propose to repeat that. Your Ladyship will also be aware, having read the skeleton arguments produced in relation to the amendments, that those overlap issues may need to be revisited in light of what is sought to be introduced by way of a resulting constructive trust claim and it's hoped that that can be done overnight and an agreed position presented to your Ladyship in due course.

Your Ladyship is also aware that the family defendants are not giving evidence in relation to the overlap issues themselves and although the point has nowhere been trailed in his evidence, Mr Berezovsky has made submissions both in writing and orally to the effect that the family defendants are to be criticised for not adducing evidence. Indeed it's said that the family defendants' approach to all of this is some sort of strange game that in some way has been procured by bribery by Mr Abramovich.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: He says you've changed your tune.

MR ADKIN: He says we've changed our tune. He says that our case has been through a number of convulsions.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: And that the court can draw the inference that you've been bought off.

MR ADKIN: That is the submission that was made. It is a serious submission and it is a submission with which I need to deal. It is, however, a submission that I need to put in its proper context.

It's far from clear what, if anything, at this trial will turn on the credibility of the family defendants. To put it at its highest, the attacks made on the family defendants -- none of which we accept -- are peripheral in my submission to the matters with which your Ladyship is going to have to deal at this trial. But nonetheless I do deal with them because the inference is sought to be drawn that somehow the family defendants are not giving evidence for an improper reason and if they were to give evidence, it would be helpful to Mr Berezovsky. In my submission that's really the only relevant argument that's made.

We say that that is not a proper inference that the court can draw. Before dealing with the bases upon which that submission has been advanced on Mr Berezovsky's behalf, three important points need, we say, to be made.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I think this point as to whether or not I should draw such an inference is something that I can only really deal with after I've heard the evidence. I think otherwise I'm just dealing with it in a vacuum.

MR ADKIN: My Lady, yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: At the present time.

MR ADKIN: I'm happy not to address your Ladyship on it at all if your Ladyship is --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I may want to hear you on it but I'm not sure that opening is the correct time.

MR ADKIN: No. I raise it simply because it was raised by my learned friend both in the annex to his skeleton and also at some length in his opening.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR ADKIN: I certainly don't want it to be said that it's a point that we either accept or ignore.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, I am expecting to hear you on it in due course but I would have thought at the end of the evidence was a more appropriate time.

MR ADKIN: My Lady, that is a course with which I'm entirely content to comply.

My Lady, that just leaves the practicalities of our participation in all of this.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR ADKIN: Three things. First, the running order.

It is of course a matter for your Ladyship but the order we have adopted now is the order that we propose to adopt in relation both to submissions and to cross-examination, save for the experts, because I have expert witnesses -- subject of course to the arguments that have been trailed -- and Mr Malek doesn't. So we were proposing that I would go first in relation to the experts but in relation to everything else he would.

A second point of practicality on cross-examination, two things on that. Mr Malek has already made the point about putting matters to witnesses. There's a further two points as well.

The first is that of course there are three of us going to be cross-examining and I hadn't proposed, unless your Ladyship thought that I should, to simply put points to witnesses that have already been put by those cross-examining them. One wouldn't want it said against one that one was deprived of making submissions on those points because one hadn't put them but I wasn't proposing simply to repeat cross-examination that had already been done.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, that would be unnecessary, but you may need to make it clear whether or not you're adopting a particular line of cross-examination.

MR ADKIN: My Lady, yes.

The second point of practicality on cross-examination is that there's a great deal of material in the evidence and the witness statements with which we disagree but which is not relevant to the overlap issues and on which I didn't propose to cross-examine at all.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: That's a matter for your discretion.

MR ADKIN: My Lady, I'm grateful.

The third point is experts, but your Ladyship has indicated that that's best dealt with at another time, certainly after the --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: If we're going to have a battle about whether or not your expert evidence should be permitted to be adduced, then that's something I'd like to deal with in the context of the debate about where the expert evidence is going anyway and I think the stage has not yet been reached for that.

MR ADKIN: My Lady, I'm grateful for that. It's certainly something that's going to be better addressed after we know what the scope of the issues themselves are.

The final point that I've been asked to make relates to the various suggestions that have been made in relation to Badri and his role in the acquisition of the aluminium assets. There have been suggestions in the documents -- though nobody appears to be saying this is their case -- that Badri adopted some sort of violent or gangster-like approach. What my clients have asked me to make absolutely clear is that that's not something that they accept for a moment. Since it's not a matter that your Ladyship is being asked to determine, we can leave it there.

My Lady, unless I can assist you further.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you very much indeed and thank you and your team for your helpful written submissions.

Yes, Mr Mumford.

Opening submissions by MR MUMFORD

MR MUMFORD: My Lady, I'm grateful. As your Ladyship appreciates, I appear for the Salford defendants, who are the principal defendants to the third of the three Chancery actions.

Your Ladyship will have seen from my opening skeleton argument that the Salford defendants are neutral on the overlap issues which fall for determination in this trial and likewise on those other issues which we are to be bound by, those which are identified at paragraph 5 of the order made at the CMC last summer. Given that we are neutral, we propose to call no evidence on those issues and we certainly reject any criticism that others may seek to draw against us on the basis of our failure to do so.

In light of our neutrality we propose to take a very, very limited part in this trial, it will come as no surprise. We would like, my Lady, to be present to hear some of the witness evidence, in particular that which is to be called by Mr Berezovsky. It is extremely unlikely that we will be cross-examining any of those witnesses and it's even more unlikely that we will choose to be here at all for the witnesses who are to be called by the defendant or indeed for the expert evidence.

I suspect, my Lady, we will then seek to reappear at closing but only with a view to assisting the court with anything that may have arisen out of the evidence which impacts upon my clients and the action that's coming on for trial against them next year.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Mumford, you come and go as you please.

MR MUMFORD: My Lady, I'm very grateful for that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you very much indeed.

Discussion re housekeeping

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So far as the seating arrangements are concerned, Mr Sumption, are you going to be able to cope with the family defendants' representation where they're sitting at the moment or are they to be banished to the back row? Or do you want to wait and see how it goes?

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, I was hoping to be able to invade some of the space to our right, and I thought that that had been understood, once we start on actual evidence. There are members of my team I would welcome coming up front.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. I think that was my original indication. Right.

Mr Adkin, I think that means your team going back until you're actually doing some cross-examination. Thank you.

Mr Rabinowitz, what's on the agenda?

MR RABINOWITZ: My Lady, there are a few housekeeping matters, if I may call them that. Can I just identify what I think they are. There are probably more than I know about but if I can just identify them and then my learned friends will add to that.

I suppose the first point is: when do we resume with the evidence, when do we start with the evidence? That may depend --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: You tell me what's left on the agenda.

MR RABINOWITZ: Indeed.

Your Ladyship has asked for a list of issues: that is being worked upon and I think the hope is that it will be sorted out by tomorrow. So too with the chronology, which, as I understand it, is in the process of being agreed or attempted to be agreed.

There is the amendment application, which Mr Gillis will deal with. It appears that the differences between the parties on that have narrowed.

There is also --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Narrowed in the sense that some of it -- perhaps I can hear from Mr Gillis on that.

MR RABINOWITZ: Can I just finish? I'll just identify what they are. I think it may be even better than that so far as your Ladyship is concerned.

I want to say something about cross-examination, the problem of friendly cross-examination. I've spoken to Mr Malek about it because whilst I have no difficulty at all with whoever is represented cross-examining my witnesses, there is always a problem of friendly cross-examination of other witnesses. I don't suppose my learned friends will indulge in it but I do want to put down a marker --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: It never carries much weight.

MR RABINOWITZ: It doesn't, but it would be better if a marker was put down so that people know not to try and indulge in it. But I say that; I'm not sure I need to say any more about it.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: It slightly depends on the particular witness, doesn't it?

MR RABINOWITZ: It does, and that's why one can't say in advance, "You can't cross-examine this person". But I think people need to be aware that it's not going to go down well.

Indeed, as Mr Gillis reminds me, the Chancery defendants really need to cross-examine, if they are going to cross-examine, before we re-examine. I don't think -- Mr Malek certainly agrees with that; I haven't had an opportunity to speak to the other --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: You sort it out between you as to how it's to go and if there's any dispute.

MR RABINOWITZ: All right. We will do that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: You're saying that they should cross-examine Mr Sumption's witnesses before you do, are you?

MR RABINOWITZ: Indeed.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: If you don't agree, I will rule on that.

MR RABINOWITZ: All right, thank you.

There is also, as I understand it, a brewing issue about translators. Can I just identify what it is. It was hoped that this wouldn't be an issue but it appears that it might be.

Mr Berezovsky, as your Ladyship knows, English is not his first language but he has agreed that he will be giving evidence in English. In order to facilitate that, he has asked that he should have one of the translators sitting with him. Mr Berezovsky has a great deal of experience of translators and as a result of this experience the translator he feels comfortable with -- and it is in relation to words that he's having difficulty with; he's not going to sit there and have everything translated for him but there will be occasional difficulties where he simply doesn't understand the English expression -- is a Mr Victor Prokofiev.

Now, Mr Prokofiev is one of the translators that we have identified --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Sorry, one of the translators?

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Prokofiev is also being used, as

I understand it, for the purposes of the simultaneous translation, which is being produced for, as I understand it, primarily Mr Abramovich's benefit. One understands that and if Mr Abramovich wants a translation of someone else's evidence while it is being given, that is all fine.

The difficulty about this situation is this: we are told by Skaddens that they have a problem with simultaneous translation whilst Mr Berezovsky is giving evidence unless they can use Mr Prokofiev for this.

Now --

MR SUMPTION: That's not our position at all.

MR RABINOWITZ: That's what I've been led to believe.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Can you try and sort this out?

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, can I try to summarise this quite shortly. I'm afraid we haven't been able to sort it out. Basically the position is Mr Berezovsky wants to have sitting beside him not just any old translator but a particular translator and only one. The problem about that is that when we have, for example -- as we will next week -- only two simultaneous translators, it means --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: How many do have we got at the moment?

MR SUMPTION: We've got three at the moment; we will sometimes be having four. But really skilled Russian simultaneous translators are not very thick on the ground.

The problem is that if, for example, we have only two -- and it's also a problem if there are three -- what will happen is that one of them is permanently engaged sitting next to Berezovsky: that means we've only got one of them sitting in the box and basically you can only do about three-quarters of an hour or an hour at the most of this job before you need a rest of at least similar length; much more than just a ten-minute break.

This is normally dealt with, if you've got two people in the box, they take one hour on, one hour off, and there's continuous simultaneous translation. But Mr Berezovsky says: no, I wanted to have Mr Prokofiev and no one else sitting beside me the whole time, even if that means there's only one translator left to sit in the box and that translator has to take an hour off every hour. That, in our submission, is an absolutely ridiculous proposition.

We are perfectly happy that one of the translators, even if there are only two, should be sitting next to Mr Berezovsky. We say that the efficient way of dealing with this is that -- and we've discussed this with the translators, who are apparently agreeable to it -- a translator, not necessarily Mr Prokofiev, should sit beside Mr Berezovsky at any one time.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: During his or her hour off?

MR SUMPTION: Exactly. They are apparently perfectly agreeable to the idea that when the translator in the box needs a rest they will swap round and the one who has just been translating for an hour will then sit and assist Mr Berezovsky as necessary because it's actually very unlikely that all that much assistance will be required. They can swap round, for instance, during the stenographer breaks.

That means that there's somebody available to translate in the box at all times and somebody available to sit by Mr Berezovsky at all times. The only need that will not be satisfied is Mr Berezovsky's insistence that it should be the same person all the time, which is completely impractical. That is the issue, as I understand it, that has arisen.

Mr Abramovich is obviously at the receiving end of a $7 billion claim and he is entitled to have a translation of what is going on, about which he is going to have to answer and deal with in due course in his own evidence.

Mr Berezovsky, by comparison, is pretty proficient in English. Your Ladyship might find it useful to know that in the North Shore litigation in the Chancery Division, Mr Berezovsky was cross-examined by Mr Swainston for an entire day. In the course of that day, those on behalf of my solicitors who were attending tell me that he needed assistance with particular words two or three times in the course of the entire day but was basically perfectly capable of fielding the questions as recorded on the transcript.

Now, in our submission a witness cannot simply demand the services of translators who are there for the assistance of the court translation rather than for their personal assistance or on any terms, however unreasonable, and Mr Berezovsky should put up with having to have a translator occasionally who is not Mr Prokofiev, bearing in mind that all four of the translators who are at the service of the court are absolutely outstandingly skillful, as one can see from the way in which, without interruption of the proceedings or any pause or difficulty, they have continuously served the court very well in the short time that we've been hearing this matter.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Do you want to --

MR RABINOWITZ: I am grateful to Mr Sumption. That was exactly the issue I was going to identify but perhaps in different language to Mr Sumption, but he decided he wanted to present it. Can I just put it slightly differently.

Mr Sumption says it's impracticable for Mr Berezovsky, who is not an English speaker -- he can speak English and unlike Mr Abramovich, who has a problem, he is going to do his best. He wants a translator. He is comfortable, as a result of his experience, with Mr Prokofiev.

If it really was impracticable, then one could understand a basis of what Mr Sumption is saying. Mr Sumption talks about three or four translators being involved in simultaneous translation --

MR SUMPTION: There's only two next week.

MR RABINOWITZ: Well, then Mr Sumption can get a third.

MR SUMPTION: No, he can't.

MR RABINOWITZ: Well, they can make efforts to do that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Can you not, please, row between each other. Can you please address your submissions to the court.

MR RABINOWITZ: It's difficult to believe that -- let me take a step back.

Mr Abramovich wants simultaneous translations because he wants to listen to what Mr Berezovsky is saying and that's fair enough. Mr Sumption says it's a $7 billion claim, Mr Abramovich should be able to hear what's being said, and one understands that. Equally, Mr Berezovsky will be the witness on this particular occasion.

Insofar as one has to balance Mr Berezovsky's interests in ensuring that he understands the questions that are being put and that he gives as clear an answer as possible with Mr Abramovich's position, who wants to hear what is being said, in my respectful submission the balance undoubtedly comes down in favour of Mr Berezovsky in a sense being indulged with what he needs in order to give evidence as accurately as he would wish.

Now, we are told that they can only get two translators; in my respectful submission that is extremely unlikely to be the case. There must be other translators who can assist us. Insofar as they haven't made efforts to find another, then in my respectful submission they should. But insofar as one has to try and balance the interests, in my respectful submission the balance of the interests, as I've just said, undoubtedly favours Mr Berezovsky being very comfortable with the translator that he has with him.

Can I just make another point about the evidence. Mr Berezovsky can speak English; he doesn't always find it easy. He also finds it a lot easier to follow written English than the intonations of spoken English. One of the other things -- I haven't yet had a chance to raise this with my learned friend but since we're talking about the giving of evidence and how it might be given -- what Mr Berezovsky has asked is whether he could have the LiveNote in front of him, just so he can read the question as well. It's just that he will find it easier to see what is being asked.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I think that's something you need to discuss with counsel on the other side. I personally don't have any problem with that. I've had experience actually in a criminal trial where it was extremely helpful for the witness also to have the LiveNote transcript because otherwise we're all operating under the advantage or having the benefit of having the questions there in front of us.

Sometimes there's a question as to whether that enables the witness, as it were, to check up on what he's been asked previously or check up on his answers; sometimes there's an objection to that. But speaking for myself, I wouldn't have a problem with it.

Mr Sumption, what's your --

MR SUMPTION: I have no problem at all about that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Mr Malek?

MR MALEK: No problem.

MR ADKIN: No problem.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So the answer is: so far as LiveNote is concerned, no problem.

Is there anything else you want to say about the translator issue?

MR RABINOWITZ: No, I don't think there is anything else I can say.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So far as the translator is concerned, it's obviously important that Mr Berezovsky should have the assistance of a highly competent and professional translator if he needs it. However, I think it's unsatisfactory for any witness or any party in a case, as it were, to be in a position to choose a translator with whom he or she may be comfortable. Accordingly I do not accede to Mr Rabinowitz's application that Mr Berezovsky should be able to choose the translator of his choice.

What else is on the agenda?

MR GILLIS: My Lady, could I just explain about amendments and business for tomorrow.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, sure.

MR GILLIS: The main matter before your Ladyship tomorrow was going to be Mr Berezovsky's application to amend C64, subsections 2 and 3, which was the application to introduce claims under --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I've read it.

MR GILLIS: I'm glad to say that that issue has now been resolved and Mr Abramovich has consented to the amendments to C64(2) and (3) being made.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Hang on, let me just -- I'm looking at your skeleton. C63 is agreed?

MR GILLIS: C64(2) and (3).

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: C64(2) and (3)?

MR GILLIS: Yes. So those were the pleas of resulting trust and constructive trust.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Which you say are kind of remedial consequences?

MR GILLIS: Indeed so. The objection that was being made was those claims were time-barred or they did not arise out of the same or substantially the same effects. We said: not so, it falls within section 21.1(b) of the Limitation Act. Your Ladyship is going to be deprived of the delights of all of those arguments --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: That's a pity.

MR GILLIS: I'm sure that's exactly what your Ladyship thinks -- because it's been accepted that we can have permission to make those amendments and also a very minor consequential amendment to C59B. I don't think I need trouble your Ladyship with that at the moment because we'll be putting in a draft order.

For his part, Mr Berezovsky has consented to Mr Abramovich's amendment to D63, which was the amendment to plead that the express trust claim was invalid because the trust would not be validly constituted.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR GILLIS: So, my Lady, on that basis, all the amendment issues between the parties in the Abramovich action have been resolved.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Even C64(1)?

MR GILLIS: My Lady, yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. So all three subparagraphs of that have gone?

MR GILLIS: Yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right.

MR GILLIS: Your Ladyship will see from the order when it's produced that those amendments are being consented to on terms that if there are subsequent tracing issues which arise, they will be dealt with at a subsequent hearing.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. That's the order I've already made.

MR GILLIS: That's the order that has already been made in respect of various defence points that were being raised by Mr Abramovich in relation to their tax arguments and the requirement for permits to pay money out of the country. The same solution is being adopted if tracing claims arise in relation to --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Any of these new claims?

MR GILLIS: -- any of these new claims.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I see. Well, you'll let me have an order for me to sign on.

MR GILLIS: Indeed so.

My Lady, potentially these amendments have an impact on the position of the Chancery defendants but none of them are opposing in principle the amendments that are being made.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: They just want the overlap issues redefined?

MR GILLIS: Exactly. They just want to make sure that the overlap issues are sufficiently clearly defined so that all parties understand the position. So that is in the process of being worked out and we don't anticipate any difficulties in relation to that. So hopefully that can be put before your Ladyship as an agreed position tomorrow morning.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: That's agreed, Ms Davies, is it?

MS DAVIES: My Lady, yes, subject only to this: there was certain further clarification about my learned friend's new case that we sought that he has also indicated to me orally that he's happy to provide. We haven't yet seen the consent order but assuming that we manage to resolve those differences between us then, yes, that's all agreed.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Ms Tolaney?

MS TOLANEY: My Lady, that's also agreed on the part of the Anisimov defendants. The only concern we had was that the claim was articulated in our action in exactly the same way, so that there was an overlap, and that is in hand.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, thank you.

Mr Adkin?

MR ADKIN: We have the same position as Ms Tolaney.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: And Mr Mumford?

MR MUMFORD: Subject to the clarification of the overlap issues, we're quite content.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, okay. I'll leave you, Mr Gillis, to sort out with the others the reformulation of the overlap issues.

MR GILLIS: My Lady, yes. So on that basis I would not suggest that you re-read the skeleton arguments this evening.

My Lady, the other matter that will be before the court tomorrow is Mr Berezovsky's application under CPR 33.4 --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: For leave to cross-examine.

MR GILLIS: -- for leave to cross-examine the two border guards. In respect of that, your Ladyship has Mr Berezovsky's skeleton argument and Mr Abramovich's skeleton argument and I think that will be the only substantive issue which is live before the court tomorrow.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So we can start evidence tomorrow?

MR GILLIS: I think that is then an issue which Mr Sumption wishes to raise but I think probably the CPR 33.4 issue is unlikely to take more than an hour. It may be that there are some overlap issues still to clarify, but hopefully not.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Can I just raise with you, Mr Rabinowitz, first of all the timetable. I didn't know but I realise it's Yom Kippur on Friday; is that right? Is that why we're not sitting in the afternoon?

MR RABINOWITZ: We're not sitting in the afternoon.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Do you want to start early on Friday morning?

MR RABINOWITZ: Not especially --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Let me just tell you before -- you're going to, I'm afraid, have to reschedule the 25th and the 26th. I'm sorry about that. I have to sit in the Court of Appeal criminal division and I have to sit those two days. I'm happy to sit earlier or late to try and make up the hours, to make up the lost days on the 25th and the 26th, on other days.

MR RABINOWITZ: Again, my Lady, I'm in your hands. It may be worth hearing from Mr Sumption about his views on the timetable.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, as to sitting early or late, we would welcome it if your Ladyship would do that, although if we find that we get into difficulties we will obviously have to raise that with your Ladyship.

Can I just deal with the question of when Mr Berezovsky starts his evidence. I have mentioned this to my learned friend, who is neutral and doesn't object. One of the problems, with which your Ladyship has not been troubled, about the preparation of this case is that, for reasons which I'm certainly not criticising anyone for, bundles became available very late, things took a very long time to load up on Magnum, before which they couldn't be given bundle references. There are also documents which we are awaiting from Clydesdale Bank -- we assume we will get those quickly -- in addition to a process of catching up which I had certainly, for my part, hoped to be able to achieve well before the trial started but haven't been able to do so.

Now, if your Ladyship wants me to start cross-examining Mr Berezovsky tomorrow, I am in the position to do so. I would actually, I have to say, very much prefer it if your Ladyship could start the cross-examination of Mr Berezovsky at the beginning of the proceedings on Thursday, as in fact originally envisaged in the page, so that I can take on board material which has arrived too recently for me to have studied it properly.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, Mr Rabinowitz?

MR RABINOWITZ: My Lady, as my learned friend indicated, I am neutral. I do sympathise with his position, there are things that --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: We all know in a long trial if you haven't got the references it's very difficult.

Right. Well, I will then hear the application tomorrow in relation to the cross-examination of the Russian border officials or whoever they are, and that is all I will do unless there are any other housekeeping issues. Then Mr Berezovsky will start his evidence on Thursday, the 6th.

It's up to the parties whether you wish me to sit at the 9.00 or 9.30 on Friday to give us a longer day.

MR RABINOWITZ: It may be that Mr Sumption at that stage can indicate whether he needs --

MR SUMPTION: I would welcome it, but if my learned friend is not --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I feel that if I'm taking out the 25th and the 26th to sit in the Court of Appeal, I will certainly start at 9.00 or 9.15.

MR SUMPTION: We are very grateful to your Ladyship for doing that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. I will sit at 9.00, 9.15, which?

MR SUMPTION: 9 o'clock.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. 9 o'clock on the 7th.

Mr Rabinowitz, what then: and go to 1 o'clock?

MR RABINOWITZ: My Lady, I would be grateful for that, yes, if we could rise at 1.00.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right, very well.

We might as well start at 10.30 tomorrow. There's no reason not to start at 10.30 tomorrow.

Discussion re housekeeping

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, Mr Gillis.

MR GILLIS: Good morning. My Lady, can I just deal with two matters briefly before I make my application.

The first relates to the redaction regime, which we should probably talk about briefly before the witnesses start to give their evidence. As my Lady will recall, there is an order preventing public reference to certain named entities because those entities are regarded as being commercially sensitive. It's an issue which the Salford defendants have been particularly concerned about and what they have produced is a card which we are proposing should be put in front of the witnesses.

Might I just pass that up. (Handed)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, certainly. Touching confidence that everybody will remember to apply the protocol.

MR GILLIS: My Lady, yes. We weren't going to insult your Ladyship by providing you with one unless you wish one but basically a traffic light system: the red entities down the left-hand side bad, the green entities good.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I better have one.

MR GILLIS: So, my Lady, that will be put in front of all the witnesses.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. And they'll be told in advance?

MR GILLIS: They will.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: And the redaction regime will continue through to the documents?

MR GILLIS: Yes. The redaction, some of it, as I recall, has been done automatically by using Adobe to search and replace and it may well be that that process has not been 100 per cent accurate, particularly where there have been poor photocopied documents. So it may be that some redacted terms still appear in the documentation before the court. That will just have to be dealt with as and when if it occurs.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Okay.

MR GILLIS: That's the first issue.

The second issue is the definition of the overlap issues arising from the agreed amendments in the Abramovich action. My Lady, that's why the Chancery defendants are here today. At present we haven't finally resolved upon appropriate amended wording to the definition of the overlap issues but none of the counsel involved think it's sensible to try and debate that before your Ladyship because we've not actually had time to --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Think about it.

MR GILLIS: -- discuss it between ourselves yet. What we would propose, if it is acceptable, is that we will try and resolve that between ourselves and if that's not possible then we'll bring it back to your Ladyship.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: If that's agreed, fine.

MR GILLIS: On that basis, I think the Chancery defendants are wishing to leave.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. Well, thank you for coming along, see you tomorrow. We'll start tomorrow at 10.15, if that suits everybody.

MS DAVIES: Yes, my Lady. I just asked my learned friend Mr Mumford to produce a Russian version of this too, because obviously some of the witnesses giving evidence don't read English, and he's agreed to do that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Fine. Okay, 10.15 tomorrow then.

Application by MR GILLIS

MR GILLIS: My Lady, if I can then move to my application.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. This is the application to cross-examine the border guards.

MR GILLIS: Yes. My Lady, it's an application under CPR 33.4 in relation to Mr Fomichev and Mr Mochalov.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Hang on. Let me just get out the right -- I'm just trying to find the correct skeleton argument.

MR GILLIS: The application bundle is bundle T(C).

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just let me get it. I've got just two skeleton arguments.

MR GILLIS: That's correct. My Lady, we have a hard copy of the application bundle if you want that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Which one is it?

MR GILLIS: It's T(C).

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, hopefully I can just do it on the... If it's not been handed up this morning, I'll just do it on this. Is it a new bundle, is it on Magnum?

MR GILLIS: It is on Magnum, yes.

My Lady, it relates to the evidence that those two individuals have provided regarding Mr Abramovich's border crossings in December 2000 which Mr Abramovich seeks to rely upon by way of hearsay evidence. The application is at T(C) at tab 2 T(C)/02/1 and the letter and the attachments which contain the hearsay evidence, we've set those out at paragraph 12 of our skeleton. They're also at T(C), tab 5, at page 14 T(C)/05/14.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. Just a second, I just want to -- this is being a bit slow. Yes, I have it now. Okay.

Now, what is the position under the rule? Can I just look at the rule first of all.

MR GILLIS: My Lady, the rule is at page 984. So:

"Where a party proposes to rely on hearsay evidence..."

And that's the case here because Mr Abramovich is relying on this documentary evidence in his statements.

"... and the person does not propose to call the person who made the original statement to give oral evidence, the court may, on the application of any other party, permit that party to call the maker of the statement to be cross-examined."

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR GILLIS: So that is our application: an application that we be permitted to call the maker of the statement to be cross-examined.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I see that it says at page 985:

"Part 33 is silent as to what should happen if the court gives permission for cross-examination and the person does not then attend as required."

MR GILLIS: Yes. My Lady, the --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: What is the consequence?

MR GILLIS: The consequence that is referred to there -- and they refer to Lord Justice Thomas in the Polanski case -- is that the court can exclude the evidence in the event that the party who is seeking to rely upon the hearsay statement does not produce the maker to be cross-examined. So that's the consequence that is identified in Polanski.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I don't have to do that.

MR GILLIS: You don't.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I can just decide what weight I attach to the evidence in the event that the deponents don't turn up.

MR GILLIS: Absolutely, and that's the consequence of the decision -- or it was Mr Justice Mann's view in Dyson v Qualtex, which isn't actually referred to in the notes here, but he respectfully, because he was commenting upon Lord Justice Thomas's Court of Appeal decision, doubted that that was the necessary consequence, that the court exclude it. The court is entitled to take into account the fact that the person seeking to rely upon the hearsay statement didn't call the maker to be cross-examined; that is a further factor that the court can take into account in assessing the weight of the evidence.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR GILLIS: So the consequence, if your Ladyship acceded to our application and Mr Fomichev and Mr Mochalov did not make themselves available for cross-examination, we would not say that the necessary consequences of that is that the documentary hearsay evidence would have to be excluded. Your Ladyship may decide that's the appropriate course but on the other hand your Ladyship could equally say: it's again simply a factor I take into account in assessing the weight that is to be attached to this evidence.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: And what I'm doing is permitting you to call the maker of the statement to be cross-examined, aren't I?

MR GILLIS: The rule is quite bizarrely expressed.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I'm not requiring the other party -- sorry, I'm not requiring a party, which is the first party, to call him; I'm permitting you to call him for the purpose of cross-examination.

MR GILLIS: How the last part of the note indicates it operates is that if the party who is seeking to rely upon the hearsay statement does not make the maker of the statement available, then the court can draw the appropriate consequence.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I'm not sure that's what it says. Maybe there's authority. It's weirdly worded, isn't it?

MR GILLIS: Well, it is.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Because if I make the order you want me to make, I'm not requiring Ms Davies to make the person available; I'm saying you can call him.

MR GILLIS: My Lady, I agree that --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So you have to make the arrangements to get the border guards here.

MR GILLIS: My Lady, no, because that's what Polanski v Conde Nast is indicating, that that's how the rule operates. So it ends by indicating:

"If the court considers in all the circumstances that the person outside the jurisdiction should attend and be cross-examined at court in person but the party intending to call them refuses to arrange for them to come to the English court, then the ordinary consequences of a refusal to obey an order of the English court should follow."

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Where is that?

MR GILLIS: That's the penultimate sentence on page 985. So following on from Polanski:

"If the court considers in all the circumstances that the person outside the jurisdiction should attend and be cross-examined at court in person but the party intending to call them refuses to arrange for them to come to the English court, then the ordinary consequences of a refusal to obey an order of the English court should follow."

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Is that what the Court of Appeal said in Polanski or what the writer of the White Book has said?

MR GILLIS: I think that accurately reflects what Polanski says.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Have I got Polanski here?

MR GILLIS: My Lady, no, we have not brought it to court.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Perhaps you could let me have a copy.

MR GILLIS: Yes.

But, my Lady, it must work in that way because if you grant Mr Berezovsky permission to cross-examine with the suggestion that we are then under the obligation to require Pronichev to attend, and we don't, that couldn't then be a basis for shutting out Pronichev's evidence.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, but this is why the wording of the order seems to me to be key. What I'm doing is permitting you to call him. I'm not imposing an obligation on anyone else to call him; I'm permitting you to call him. That's why it seems to me that it doesn't necessarily follow. Obviously I'll see what the Court of Appeal say. But it doesn't necessarily follow that I'm permitting you to call him. That is tantamount to an order of the court requiring the other party to produce him.

MR GILLIS: My Lady, I think that's how both Polanski and Mr Justice Mann in Dyson v Qualtex have interpreted the order as working, as I would respectfully suggest one sees in the notes. In other words, it's simply saying the court is indicating that it's appropriate that the person who is seeking to rely upon the hearsay statement should make the maker of that hearsay statement available for cross-examination and by making this order the court is signalling that the hearsay evidence is of sufficient importance to warrant that. If in consequence the person who is seeking to rely upon that evidence doesn't make the maker of the hearsay evidence available for cross-examination, then the court can make the appropriate order in terms of either excluding or it's another factor which goes to weight.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. Well, perhaps you would let me have the two cases. I would quite like them -- if somebody can go out and ring a clerk and get them, I would be quite grateful.

MR GILLIS: My Lady, yes.

My Lady, subject to that, it may be appropriate if I make the application and then we can come back to that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, sure.

MR GILLIS: My Lady, I was proposing to take the matter quite shortly because your Ladyship has read the skeleton arguments and has heard the opening. Your Ladyship knows that the -- I don't know whether your Ladyship has refamiliarised yourself with paragraph 12 of our skeleton, which sets out what the hearsay evidence is.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, just take me -- we're talking -- can we just remind ourselves that we've got -- it's General Pronichev, is it?

MR GILLIS: Yes. Mr Pronichev --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: He's the head of the FSB Border Guard Service.

MR GILLIS: Yes, I think he is the deputy head of the FSB.
So Mr Pronichev's title is the first deputy director of the Border Guard Service.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: First deputy director of the Border Guard Service, yes.

MR GILLIS: And Mr Mochalov is the head of the border control division.

MS DAVIES: My Lady, I hesitate to interrupt. Mr Pronichev is actually the first deputy director head of the Border Guard Service.

MR GILLIS: I'm obliged.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: First deputy director head of the Border Guard Service, yes.

MR GILLIS: Then Mr Mochalov is the head of the border control division of the Border Guard Service.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR GILLIS: So, my Lady, it may be appropriate just to look at the relevant letters, which we have at bundle T(C), tab 5, at page 12 T(C)/05/12.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I think you had better give me the hard copy. (Handed) My mouse isn't working. I'll have the hard copy in the meantime.

Yes.

MR GILLIS: Tab 5 at page 12.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR GILLIS: This is the letter from Mr Pronichev.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just a second. (Pause) Yes.

MR GILLIS: It's a letter dated 23 April 2011 at page 12.

Mr Pronichev starts by explaining the regulations that are in place and the power of general inspection and to stamp documents and then the critical part is at the bottom of that letter:

"Based on the available records and documents, the information sheet requested by you was prepared..."

And then is enclosed.

Then over the page we have the information sheet which was prepared by Mr Mochalov and that purports to show Mr Abramovich's entries and exits into and out of Russia. The entries which may be regarded as being of particular interest are the 6 December exit from Russia, 6 December return into Russia, and then on the face of it this is put forward as evidence of indicating that between 6 December and 2 January Mr Abramovich did not leave Russia.

My Lady, that's the hearsay evidence that Mr Abramovich seeks to rely upon and one can see the reliance in his third witness statement and his fifth witness statement.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR GILLIS: I don't propose to ask you to turn that up but for the record it's at paragraph 262 of the third and paragraph 7.1 of the fifth.

My Lady, in terms of relevance of this evidence, your Ladyship has read the skeleton and heard the openings and so I don't think there's much that I need to say about the relevance of Mr Abramovich's movements in this period because your Ladyship knows that Mr Abramovich denies having attended a meeting at Cap d'Antibes in December 2000 with Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili, which Mr Berezovsky now dates as most likely to have taken place in the few days immediately after Mr Glushkov's arrest on 7 December.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Glushkov was arrested on 7 December?

MR GILLIS: Yes, and the information about that arrest seems to have come out at about 11 o'clock Russian time. Your Ladyship knows the --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Berezovsky's case is that he may have attended on the Cap d'Antibes meeting or a meeting at Cap d'Antibes on the 6th or any time thereafter?

MR GILLIS: On the 7th or any time thereafter, because Le Bourget was on the 6th.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, exactly.

MR GILLIS: The meeting certainly took place after Mr Glushkov was arrested; that was on the 7th. So in a sense Mr Glushkov's arrest starts the clock ticking.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I thought there was some suggestion that he may have gone down from Le Bourget to Cap d'Antibes on the 6th.

MR GILLIS: There was. There was the suggestion that he may not have returned to Russia after Le Bourget on the 6th.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: And that he was the unidentified person with Mr Patarkatsishvili --

MR GILLIS: Absolutely. It certainly seems as if Mr Patarkatsishvili's plane flew down from Le Bourget to Marseilles on the 7th and there were three passengers on board, so query whether Mr Abramovich was one of those passengers; because, as your Ladyship will remember,
Mr Patarkatsishvili's plane then flies back from Marseilles to Moscow on the 7th.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: On the 7th?

MR GILLIS: On the 7th. So that is a possibility, or the days immediately thereafter.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Berezovsky's case is that it's after the actual arrest on the 7th, so that even if Mr Abramovich did fly down on the 6th and therefore the Russian return stamp is incorrect, the meeting wouldn't have taken place at Cap d'Antibes until the 7th?

MR GILLIS: That's right. It certainly couldn't have taken place before 11 o'clock Russian time on the 7th.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So is part of the suggestion in the evidence that Mr Abramovich stayed with Mr Berezovsky at his villa or at an adjacent villa on the night of the 6th? Is that one of the possibilities?

MR GILLIS: No, I don't think there's a suggestion that Mr Abramovich flew down on the 6th because I think Badri's plane flies down from Le Bourget to Marseilles on the 7th.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Oh, right. Yes, I see.

MR GILLIS: So it would either be that Mr Abramovich stayed in Paris on the evening of the 6th and did not fly back to Russia and then flew down with Mr Patarkatsishvili on the 7th; or alternatively, having returned to Moscow on the 6th, then flew back on the 7th. But my Lady, it's that window of the 7th and immediately thereafter that Mr Berezovsky suggests is the period where it is most likely the meeting took place.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So the entries that you may wish to challenge are the 6 December entry into the Russian Federation because that doesn't tally with the possibility of a flight down from Paris to Marseilles on the 7th?

MR GILLIS: My Lady, what we are seeking to do is to explore what is the documentary basis for this information sheet in the records.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: You say if there wasn't a flight down on the 7th from Paris to Marseilles, you say there should be a record of a further exit from the Russian Federation in the period 6 December to 2 January?

MR GILLIS: Indeed so.

My Lady, it may be useful just to annotate this. Where this record says there is an exit from the Russian Federation on 6 December -- so that's when Mr Abramovich flies out to Le Bourget -- interestingly there is no exit stamp in Mr Abramovich's passport, and that's common ground.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR GILLIS: The entry back into Russia on 6 December, as your Ladyship may recall, there was a dispute as to whether the stamp in Mr Abramovich's passport was in fact saying 5 December or whether it was indeed dated 6 December; but it does now look, from the forensic evidence, as if it was 6 December.

My Lady, what this evidence is being relied upon for is not just to establish entry and exit on 6 December but also implicitly to establish that there were no further movements across the border after 6 December.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR GILLIS: Our fundamental position is that we think it's appropriate that an order for cross-examination should be made so that we can explore what is the documentary basis for this record. Therefore, how reliable is the evidence for the purposes of Mr Abramovich inviting the court to conclude that this establishes that he cannot have left and returned to Russia after 6 December? Because as your Ladyship will see -- and I'll expand upon this in a moment -- going back to the previous page, all it says is:

"Based on the available records and documents..."

We're not told anything about that. Without that sort of information, the court is simply not going to be in a position to assess what sort of weight can be put on this evidence.

So, my Lady, your Ladyship has clearly in mind the critical relevance to the Cap d'Antibes meeting of this evidence. So I can move on from that.

Your Ladyship also knows that Mr Abramovich has put before the court extensive evidence in relation to his movements during this relevant period. So that we have

Mr Abramovich's own evidence in his third and fourth statements; we have extensive hearsay evidence from individuals who say they can attest to Mr Abramovich's presence in Chukotka for much of the month. Then, my Lady, in the week before the start of the trial there have been a whole series of supplemental witness statements regarding this issue, most of which are now included in volume E8.

So, my Lady, there is much other evidence which Mr Abramovich seeks to put before the court but this hearsay evidence is potentially an important part of that case. What we say is that the evidence, as one can see from Mr Pronichev, is simply based on wholly unidentified documents which are described as being "available records and documents" and it's for that purpose and it's on that basis that we have the information sheet drawn up, from which the court is asked to infer that Mr Abramovich could not have left and returned to Russia after 6 December.

In our submission, as I've said, absent an order for cross-examination, it's going to be very difficult for the court to know what weight, if any, it can attach to this evidence because there are quite clearly, we would say, a whole series of questions that need to be asked and answered. That's the only way in which this evidence can be tested.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: It would be done by video-link, would it?

MR GILLIS: I'm not sure whether it would be done by video-link or whether the people would attend in person -- from Moscow I think it's just a three-and-a-half-hour flight -- but obviously that is something that could be decided at a later stage.

My Lady, if I could just give you a few examples. As we can see at page 12, Mr Pronichev at the bottom of that page, tab 5 at page 12, Mr Pronichev says that the answers given in the attached information sheet are "based on the available records and documents"; but, my Lady, he does not say what those documents and records are.

In our submission it's clearly relevant to know what the records are. How were they prepared and maintained? For example, how was the information collated from the no doubt many airports from which foreign flights could have been made? For example, were the passports scanned and was information then collated automatically in some central registry? Or, for instance, was the system dependent upon the filing of paper reports? All of those sorts of questions are inevitably going to be relevant for the purposes of the court forming a view as to how reliable and complete the records are.

Then, my Lady, one sees that Mr Pronichev is referring at page 12 to "the available records" without giving any indication of what the available records are. My Lady, that qualifier of "available records" is obviously potentially very important.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just a second. Just looking at the letter:

"... the border authorities have the power to affix appropriate stamps..."

MR GILLIS: Yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: It doesn't suggest they've got to.

MR GILLIS: No.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: You, on your side, could no doubt check what the relevant laws are and no doubt you would tell me if there was a requirement. It may be good practice to stamp the documents but it doesn't look, just from this letter, that -- well, I don't know. I haven't seen the guidelines, which are different from the law. One can quite see that although the guidelines may say it's good practice to stamp, that on occasions they don't get stamped, or that may be the case.

MR GILLIS: No, absolutely. I don't think we need to look at it but it's the evidence of Mr Tenenbaum that exit stamps are mandatory, but in actual fact we can see from

Mr Abramovich's passport on 6 December that, mandatory or not, you can certainly leave Russia without getting an exit stamp in your passport because that's exactly what happened with Mr Abramovich and his wife whom he said accompanied him.

My Lady, this is all a bit confusing because what Mr Pronichev is talking about here is the power to stamp documents. It may be that what he's referring to is the power to stamp a passport. But he then goes on to say:

"Based on the available records and documents, the information sheet... [has been] prepared..."

But that information sheet clearly can't have been prepared on the basis of simply passport stamped because we know that the information sheet is saying that Mr Abramovich left on 6 December but equally we know that Mr Abramovich's passport doesn't have a stamp for that date. So that would all seem to indicate that there is some separate record that is being maintained but we're not told --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, one would imagine there was, if entry in and out of Russia is similar to anywhere else.

MR GILLIS: Exactly so. But then one needs to know how those records are maintained and it takes me back to the point that I just made: are passports being scanned and bar codes read and then information being uploaded automatically or was it a paper system? And if it was a paper system, how did it operate?

So, my Lady, that's the point that we make in respect of that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Why do you need them both? Why can't you just have one of them? Why can't you just have Mochalov? I don't know, are there any difficulties put forward? If the other gentleman is a general, if he was in charge of the army or something somewhere, or a division, it would be unfortunate, wouldn't it, to be dragging him away from his duties? Mr Mochalov seems to have done the actual preparation.

MR GILLIS: My Lady, we would suggest that it's appropriate that both should be called to give evidence just in order to make sure that we have somebody who is able to speak to how the system operates. On the face of it Mr Mochalov has just been looking at certain records but we think it's appropriate that Mr Pronichev, who is the person who is saying, "Based on the available records and documents", should also come to give evidence to explain what those "available records" are.

My Lady, as I said, that qualifier of "available records" is potentially significant. Let me give an extreme example just to illustrate the point. Let's assume that in fact there were no available records after 6 December because the system fell over or ten years later the files have been lost. Now, if that were the case -- and, as I say, it's an extreme example -- the court could draw no inference from the fact that there is no record of Mr Abramovich's movements between 6 December and 2 January.

So, my Lady, in our submission there is obviously a need for further examination of this evidence in order to establish what weight can actually be attached to it.

My Lady, with that, could I just move quickly to deal with the objections that have been made --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR GILLIS: -- by my learned friend.

I think there are really three objections that are made to the application to cross-examine. The first I think we see at paragraph 28 of the skeleton argument of my learned friend T(C)/11/88. It is said that:

"If no challenge to the authenticity of the [two Russian entry] stamps..."

So this is looking at 6 December. I think this is paragraph 28.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR GILLIS: "If no challenge to the authenticity of the two [Russian] stamps is forthcoming, there will be even more reason to refuse this application, as all that the documents from Mr Pronichev and Mr Mochalov will do will be to confirm information that is in fact already apparent from other sources."

Well, my Lady, the suggestion that the documents are merely confirming information apparent from other sources is not correct because it's common ground that there's no Russian exit stamp in Mr Abramovich's passport for 6 December, yet that's what the information sheet purports to record.

As my Lady appreciates, what is critical about the border guard information is that it's relied upon to confirm that there was no exit and re-entry from Russia by Mr Abramovich between 6 December and 2 January. For the reasons that I've already indicated, in our submission that assertion and the weight that is to be attached to this evidence to that effect simply cannot be determined unless there is examination in relation to the information which is said to lie behind the information sheet.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Ms Davies's skeleton at paragraph 30 makes the point that all that the two prospective deponents are doing is communicating the content of the official State records. But you, as I understand it, want to cross-examine them about the mechanics of maintaining records and how they elicited the information that is provided in the information sheet.

MR GILLIS: Absolutely so.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So you're not actually asking them, "Well, did Mr Abramovich leave Russia during that period?" because they won't know because all they will have done is to have looked at particular records. But you really want to understand the procedures; is that right?

MR GILLIS: Absolutely. Of course they're going to have no personal knowledge; they weren't on the desk on the day. But what they will do is these are the people who are, if I can put it this way, charged with administering the system so they can explain what the system is, they can explain how the records are created, they can explain how the records are maintained, they can explain whether these are records that are maintained in relation to everybody or just in relation to particular individuals.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I suppose they can answer the question whether it is possible that if a person leaves in a private plane there is no formal record.

MR GILLIS: Absolutely. They are the people who can explain how it is that there is no exit stamp in Mr Abramovich's passport for 6 December. They can explain how it is that, in respect of all of the airports from which foreign flights could have been made, they can be sure that there was no undocumented flight or that they can be sure that if there was a flight and documents were created, those documents would necessarily still be on the records ten years later. That's the type of evidence that they can give.

Just to be provided with this evidence that says, "We've inspected our records but we're not going to tell you what they are, and this is what they say", is of no assistance to the court, particularly when the court can see it's inconsistent with what is already before the court in relation to Mr Abramovich's passport.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Is there any evidence about the difficulties -- I have some sympathy with the points that Ms Davies is making in paragraphs 30 and 31 in the sense that these are people maintaining records or in charge of the maintenance of records. It may be -- I know not -- that there is some reluctance on the part of the border agency or the Border Guard Service to make its officials available for cross-examination by a foreign court. One can see there might be all kinds of policy reasons why the Russian State might not wish to make its border guards subject to cross-examination by a foreign State. So I have to take that into account.

MR GILLIS: My Lady, let me deal with that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, just take it the other way around: the UK might take the view that it is not appropriate to make its civil servants available for cross-examination by a foreign court in relation to civil litigation. It might take that view for all kinds of policy reasons. It might therefore be the case that, for reasons that had nothing to do with Mr Abramovich, the Border Guard Service or the Russian Federation says, "No, we're not going to have our people being subject to cross-examination. We're quite happy to provide a bit of paper but we're not going to wheel them in to have them cross-examined, courteously or aggressively, by leading counsel".

MR GILLIS: It would be courteous, I'm sure. That may be, but let me say --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: But you say that would go to the weight that I would --

MR GILLIS: Absolutely. If that's the outcome of the order being made, let them say that.

But, my Lady, if I can take it in stages. The first point -- and it's an obvious point but it's a point that I should make -- is that this court, if it were to accede to my application, is not making an order against these foreign officials that they should attend for cross-examination. What the court is --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I'm permitting you to call them.

MR GILLIS: You're permitting me to call them; we can look at the ramifications of that.

What Mr Abramovich has done is he has put in this hearsay statement from high-ranking officials because he wants that information to be franked with their authority.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I can see all that.

MR GILLIS: Now, in that situation, if Mr Abramovich has been able to avail himself of access to these individuals to put this hearsay evidence before the court, the order that we ask the court to make is simply effectively saying to Mr Abramovich: this court thinks it's appropriate that if you want to rely upon this hearsay evidence, you should produce these people to be tendered for cross-examination. In our submission that doesn't engage any principle of comity or any similar principle because you're not making an order against the officials; you are basically giving an indication to Mr Abramovich that he should take steps to seek to ensure that these people can attend to be cross-examined.

Now, if he can't do that because the border authorities come back and say, "This is not something we're willing to permit", well, so be it, and then that's a fact the court can take into account. But we do submit that this argument of comity, as it were, or showing proper respect to a friendly nation, is really not engaged by the type of order this court is being asked to make. So we do say that it's entirely proportionate and fair that the court should make this order.

My Lady, there is actually no evidence before the court that if this order was made it would be impossible for Mr Abramovich to secure their attendance.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I've got the point.

MR GILLIS: My Lady, there are two points that I would like to, in that context, just draw to your attention.

Mr Abramovich is obviously a person of some influence within Russia and we would say as a result there's every reason to suppose that Mr Abramovich, if he asks, will be able to secure Mr Pronichev's and Mr Mochalov's attendance. My Lady, can I give you an example of that because just a few days ago we were served with a third witness statement from Mr Voloshin. Can I just ask my Lady to look at that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I don't think I have it.

MR GILLIS: No, and I'm afraid it has not actually been uploaded into Magnum yet. (Handed)

My Lady, as your Ladyship may recall, in December 2000 Mr Voloshin was the head of Russia's presidential executive office. I don't know whether he --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: That's passed me by, I'm afraid.

MR GILLIS: My Lady, he --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Oh, Mr Voloshin. Sorry, I thought we were talking about Mr Mochalov.

MR GILLIS: No, Mr Voloshin. So he was the head of Russia's presidential executive office.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Sorry, I thought you were talking about Mochalov.

MR GILLIS: So he was running President Putin's office and one has seen in other evidence that he gives evidence as to what meetings took place with Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Putin.

My Lady, could I just ask you to read paragraphs 1 to 5 and then look at the attached telephone log, which is the document which is at the back of that clip and is very heavily redacted.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So there's a telephone call, yes.

MR GILLIS: It would appear to be the case that Mr Abramovich, in support of his case, is even able to access Kremlin logs of telephone calls.

MS DAVIES: My Lady, paragraph 3 of this statement,

Mr Voloshin explains that he recently asked his former secretary --

MR GILLIS: No, I entirely -- I'm sorry, maybe that didn't put it quite fairly. But through asking Mr Voloshin -- I'm sorry, I was taking it too shortly. I certainly wasn't intending to imply that Mr Abramovich had access to Kremlin logs or telephone calls; but through the influence of Mr Voloshin he is able to access or get access to logs of telephone calls within the Kremlin.

In those circumstances we would suggest there's no reason to suppose that if Mr Abramovich asked, Mr Pronichev and Mr Mochalov would not make themselves available for cross-examination.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I don't know whether I agree with that. There may be all kinds of policy reasons why the State or any State doesn't want their border guards being cross-examined. I don't see that I can assume that just because Mr Voloshin is prepared to come and give evidence, that means that Mr Abramovich can secure the attendance of people. I just don't think I can draw that inference.

MR GILLIS: And I don't ask you to and I don't suggest that it is necessary that you should conclude that the witnesses will be made available before you make the order.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Or that Mr Abramovich can necessarily secure their attendance. I haven't got any evidence on --

MR GILLIS: If he can't, he can explain that.

But the other point that we were going to make, and I can sort of make it quite shortly, is that in relation to other State officials where we have applied to cross-examine them in relation to Mr Abramovich's border movements in respect of Chukotka, not just in relation to border movements but in relation to his whereabouts in Chukotka, Mr Abramovich has acceded to our application to cross-examine various State officials.

Just to take it quickly -- and your Ladyship has the order at L(2011), tab 12, at page 239 L(2011)/12/239 -- the order includes a Mr Markin, and he was the chief federal inspector of the office of the penitentiary representative of the president of Russia in the far eastern federal district; Mr Kurilov, who was the head of border protection directorate of Chukotka; Ms Umanskaya, who was the chairman of the electoral commission in Chukotka; and Mr Kolpakov, who was the lieutenant colonel of the militia in Chukotka.

My Lady, I don't suggest any of those individuals are of the same high level as Mr Pronichev and Mr Mochalov, but we already have a situation where it's been accepted that it is appropriate to have cross-examination in relation to civil servants, if I can put it that way.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Can I be clear: is this cross-examination going to be limited to what I call the exit and entry issues --

MR GILLIS: Yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: -- and the record issues?

MR GILLIS: Yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: There's no suggestion that there's going to be any wider cross-examination of, for example, what you say about Mr Abramovich's connection with the Kremlin or anything of a wider... I think I need to appreciate what is actually the extent of all this.

MR GILLIS: CPR 33.4 is very clear about that: the cross-examination can only be in relation to the hearsay evidence.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. So it wouldn't go wider?

MR GILLIS: No, it wouldn't.

So, my Lady, in our submission, in considering whether it's appropriate to make the order, it's not necessary for your Ladyship to conclude that if the order is made, the makers of the hearsay statements will appear. In our submission that's not a necessary part of the court's reasoning.

The court should ask itself: is the hearsay evidence of relevance to an issue in the action? Then secondly: is that evidence of sufficient importance that cross-examination is required for the purposes of the court determining what weight can be attached to it? If the court answers yes to both of those questions, unless there are issues of comity or some suchlike principle, then the court should make the order.

In our submission there are no such issues of comity because the order is not directed against a foreign State official; it's in effect a direction to Mr Abramovich in relation to evidence which he has sought fit to put before the court in the context of this private litigation.

Now, if the relevant State officials are not willing to go further and not willing to make themselves available for cross-examination, well, so be it. As I've indicated, we do not suggest that the consequence of that is that the evidence is necessarily shut out; but it is, in our submission, a matter which would further go to the weight the court would attach to the evidence.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, it may be.

MR GILLIS: Or may be.

My Lady, if I can just look at Polanski, if I can pick it up at --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I haven't got it yet.

MR GILLIS: I'm sorry, I thought Ms Shah was passing it up.

(Handed)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR GILLIS: Picking up from Lord Justice Thomas at paragraph 62:

"The second reason advanced is that the claimant's evidence by use of VCF would be a better way of the claimant's evidence being before the court than through his witness statement served by way of hearsay notice. However, that presupposes that the statement would be before the court. The effect of the changes introduced under CPR 32 and 33 has not so far been widely appreciated, particularly as regards the way in which the changes relates to the position of witnesses who are outside the jurisdiction. Under CPR 33.4, when one party has served notice that hearsay evidence is to be given through a statement and the party does not intend" --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Let me read it to myself.

MR GILLIS: I'm obliged. (Pause)

My Lady, it's really down to letter C.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. (Pause)

Quite a hard order, wasn't it?

MR GILLIS: My Lady, yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So the libel case didn't go ahead; is that right? Did Polanski ever come to this --

MS DAVIES: It was overturned in the Lords, my Lady. The result of the Court of Appeal decision was overturned.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I thought it was, because there's a human rights issue.

MS DAVIES: Absolutely, my Lady, yes.

MR GILLIS: I should have checked, but I don't think in terms of how the rule operates that was doubted.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I think I need to see what the Lords said, don't I? Well, if you give me the reference, I'll look at it.

MR GILLIS: We will. The sentence we rely upon is:

"If the court considers in all the circumstances that the person outside the jurisdiction should attend and be cross-examined in court in person but the party intending to call him refuses to arrange for him to come to London..."

And that in this case must be Mr Abramovich.

"... then the ordinary consequences of a refusal to obey an order of the court should follow."

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: It just must depend on the circumstances, mustn't it?

MR GILLIS: I'm not suggesting that the consequence follows but what it is contemplating is that the consequence of the court's order is that the person who is seeking to rely upon a hearsay statement should make steps to make the maker of the hearsay statement available for cross-examination. He may not be able to do so, in which case the person won't attend for cross-examination; the court will look at the reasons and take that as a factor into account.

But, my Lady, it's not imposing, on the facts of this case, an obligation on Mr Berezovsky to require Mr Pronichev to attend, such that if Mr Pronichev doesn't attend or we fail to take steps to get him to attend, the evidence is shut out.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, but if you go with Lord Justice Thomas that's exactly what would happen because Mr Polanski was not going to be allowed to produce his witness statement, was he?

MR GILLIS: My Lady, that's right. We do not, as I've said, indicate that that is --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: You're cherry-picking Lord Justice Thomas a bit.

MR GILLIS: We --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Because --

MR GILLIS: Yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: -- this case, Polanski's case, the effects of it were very, very serious indeed so far as his claim was concerned.

MR GILLIS: Absolutely, and obviously Mr Polanski wasn't going to come here. So that's why, in our submission, it was obviously wrong for Lord Justice Thomas to be suggesting that the automatic consequence is that the evidence should be excluded because, as your Ladyship indicates, that has fair trial implications.

But, my Lady, in circumstances where we're not suggesting that that would be the consequence of noncompliance with the order, that difficulty doesn't arise.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right.

MR GILLIS: My Lady, we will get the House of Lords decision.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I can look at it. If you just give me the reference, I can look at it myself. Yes. Thank you, Mr Gillis.

Submissions by MS DAVIES

MS DAVIES: My Lady, can I start with the issue of the effect of CPR 33.4.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Can I just say where I'm coming from.

I'm not going to exclude it if these people aren't produced for cross-examination, I wouldn't exclude the evidence, but obviously it's going to go to weight. I can quite see that there might be difficulties put forward by the Federation for not wanting to have their servants cross-examined. Obviously I will listen to your submissions but it seems to me that it is an important issue in the case.

You yourself have said, or Mr Sumption has said, accepted that the ORT issue is an important issue. Whether this meeting took place or not is going to be an issue. You've produced this evidence. In a normal case where there's an issue about a date or when somebody has travelled, one would expect the people who are saying, "Yes, he did leave the country", "No, he didn't", would be produced for cross-examination.

At the moment, you're going to have to work quite hard to persuade me that I shouldn't make an order. I am not persuaded that the consequences should be that I should exclude it; it just depends as to the reasons why these people can't be cross-examined as to the records.

MS DAVIES: My Lady --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I quite see your point that they can't be cross-examined about anything else and they can't be cross-examined about their personal knowledge because they don't have any personal knowledge. But at the moment I am persuaded by Mr Gillis' submissions that in order to test this evidence, they do need to know something about whether the records are complete; how the records are maintained; given that the exit stamp of 6 December isn't in the passport, whether there is a possibility, given the maintenance or the glitches in the maintenance of records, whether despite the record that's been produced, Mr Abramovich might have left Russia in the period between 6 December and whenever in January.

That's where I'm coming from. So I give you that indication.

MS DAVIES: My Lady, may I take it in stages.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, sure.

MS DAVIES: Because there are a number of things, I'm afraid, in what my learned friend Mr Gillis said with which we disagree.

It's important that first of all we know what the order is that's being made and whose obligation it is to call the witness, which Mr Justice Mann in fact, in the other judgment my learned friend just handed round, makes clear. I'll come on to that.

Secondly, it's important -- of course we accept that the issue of the meeting in Cap d'Antibes in December is an important issue; there's no dispute from us about that. It's also important to remember in that context that the dispute has now actually become quite a narrow one because, contrary to Mr Berezovsky's former position that the meeting was in the last days just before Christmas, late December, in the most recent witness statement from him he's moved that to most likely to be around 7 December; and in fact in correspondence since then it's now been conceded that the only relevant period is 7 to 16 December. So we're looking at nine days.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: The 7th?

MS DAVIES: 7 to 16 December.

I'll come on to explain how this bit of evidence fits into our evidence in relation to that but one of the points we wish to make to my Lady is this is only one part of the material that we seek to rely on and there's actually a whole body of other material that we say, including witness --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: You are relying on this, Ms Davies.

MS DAVIES: We are, but only as part of the story, and it's important.

CPR 33.4 is a discretionary remedy, there's no entitlement to an order requiring cross-examination where a party is seeking to rely on hearsay evidence, and we submit that there are a number of factors relevant to the exercise of the court's discretion: one is the significance of the evidence, and my learned friend seems to accept that because he said this morning that the question was whether the evidence was of significant importance to warrant the order; the second is the nature of the evidence; the third is the value of cross-examination; and the fourth is the likelihood of the order having any utility, and that was a matter that troubled Mr Justice Mann in the Dyson v Qualtex case.

Before I come to that, can I just address this question of who calls the witness if an order is made under this provision because it affects some of the points that my learned friend made in relation to what are the difficulties here and who has adduced evidence on that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I thought, looking at who calls it, he calls for the purposes of cross-examination.

MS DAVIES: Yes, indeed. My learned friend Mr Gillis is the one, if he obtains this order, who has to call Mr Pronichev and Mr Mochalov.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: But he can cross-examine them. He's not limited to --

MS DAVIES: Exactly. That is what Mr Justice Mann said in terms in the Dyson v Qualtex case, my Lady, which my learned friend I think handed up.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Hang on. Do I have Dyson v -- did that get handed up?

MS DAVIES: It got handed up with Polanski. Is there another copy?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Not to me it didn't.

MS DAVIES: I do apologise, my Lady. It was handed to me.
(Handed)

If I can just explain who the parties are, we see Mr Carr was appearing on behalf of the claimant and Mr Arnold was appearing on behalf of the defendant. At paragraph 7, Mr Arnold was seeking an order that a witness called Mr Anderson attend to be cross-examined by video-link under CPR 33.4.

Mr Justice Mann at paragraph 9, towards the bottom of the page, in the sentence starting, "It is not an application for an order", makes the point that:

"It is not an application for an order that the other party do attend for cross-examination: it is an order giving Mr Arnold liberty to call the maker of the statement... himself so that the witness can be cross-examined on the contents of the statement. In other words, it gives Mr Arnold the liberty or permission or opportunity. It leaves open the question of how that is to be brought about."

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Let me just read 9 and 10 to myself.

MS DAVIES: Through to 11, my Lady.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, sure. (Pause)

He's got the same concerns about what Lord Justice Thomas said, with respect, in Polanski that I have expressed.

MS DAVIES: Yes, my Lady.

In paragraph 11 he is dealing with the point that because the witness in question is beyond the jurisdiction and therefore there's no summons that can make him attend, there's a futility in the order, and that there's no possibility of making an order against the claimant, Mr Anderson being the claimant's witness in this case.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, but let's put it this way: I give them liberty to cross-examine because I think it's right or appropriate that there should be cross-examination of this evidence if you're seeking to rely on it; arrangements are made for the attendance; and then it's a matter for me, in the light of the fact that I have made the order, what weight I then attach to it, isn't it?

MS DAVIES: Of course, my Lady, I accept that. But my learned friend was suggested that Mr Abramovich has particular influence in Russia, can secure the attendance of these witnesses --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: There's no evidence to support that.

MS DAVIES: We don't accept that for a moment. In fact we don't have direct access to these people; that's a point I want to make. But the first point is it's not us, if this order was made, who would have to secure the attendance of these individuals; it's Mr Berezovsky.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: That depends if you go with Mr Justice Mann or Lord Justice Thomas.

MS DAVIES: My Lady, Lord Justice Thomas is saying, with respect, the same thing. If one looks at paragraph 62 at (a):

"Under CPR Rule 33.4, when one party has served a notice then the court may permit another party to call the maker of the statement for the purpose of cross-examining him."

So Lord Justice Thomas is reading the rule in exactly the same way that Mr Justice Mann subsequently does.

It might also be of relevance to note, if one turns back to page 392 of the report --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, but look further down. Look further down.

MS DAVIES: That's the consequences if an order is made.

I'm on a different point, which is: who is the party who has to make the arrangements?

My Lady, the rule that Lord Justice Thomas is looking at was also actually in slightly different terms. If one turns back, at page 392 we have CPR Rule 33.4, which the relevant part, three lines down, is:

"... on the application of any other party" --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Sorry, I'm not with you. Where are you?

MS DAVIES: Paragraph 20, CPR 33.4, three lines down:

"... on the application of any other party permit the party to call the maker..."

The rule has now been tightened up in fact because the rule, if we go back to page 984 of the White Book --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Hang on, just let me read this.

(Pause)

Yes.

MS DAVIES: If we go back to page 984 of the White Book, whereas the rule previously, at the time of the Court of Appeal in Polanski, said "permit the party", that has now been changed to "permit that party to call the maker of the statement", "that party" clearly being the party making the application, which is how at paragraph 62(a) on page 403 Lord Justice Thomas read it and how Mr Justice Mann is clearly reading it in the Dyson judgment.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MS DAVIES: Now, that's just by way of context. What

I really wanted to address was the factors that go to the discretion of the court, starting with the significance of the evidence in question.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, okay.

MS DAVIES: I've already accepted, as is obviously the case, that the question of whether there was a meeting in Cap d'Antibes in December 2000 is clearly an important issue in the litigation.

Now, in terms of the evidential arena, in support of Mr Abramovich's case that he was in Russia there are a number of items of evidence we rely upon. The first is that we're proposing to adduce corroborative evidence in terms of witnesses who saw Mr Abramovich in Russia, both in Moscow in the period 7 to 10 December and then in Chukotka, where he flew overnight on 10 December.

My learned friend made a point about the order that's been made in relation to Chukotka witnesses but those are people who are in a different category to these high-ranking civil servants in relation to whom the application is now, because those are people who are giving evidence that they actually saw Mr Abramovich in Chukotka at the relevant time. In circumstances where witness testimony of his presence in Russia is obviously potentially of great weight, we didn't oppose the application, but you can't read from that a view that we accept that any evidence relating to this must also be tested.

In terms of the key period which really -- although my learned friend is, for understandable reasons, trying to keep his window open as broadly as possible, ie 7 to 16 December, Mr Berezovsky's most recent account is either on or immediately after 7 December most likely and we are calling Mr Voloshin, who says in his most recent statement he saw Mr Abramovich in Moscow on 7 December; Mr Kapkov, who says he saw Mr Abramovich in Moscow on 9 December and also believes he was in Moscow on 8 December; and Mr Mamut, who saw him in Moscow on 9 December --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: At the party?

MS DAVIES: At the party. All those witnesses will be giving evidence.

We also rely on the absence of flight records. There are no flight records indicating any flight from Moscow or indeed from Chukotka insofar as the period after 11 December remains important. And we've made the point -- my Lady has seen it in our opening and in annex 2 to our opening -- that for all other meetings that are said to have taken place between the parties in the period October to May, there are flight records.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So you don't really need this sentence; is that what you're saying?

MS DAVIES: Well, the next point I come to is the passports because we also, of course, rely on the passports, the stamps.

Here, this is where my learned friend is trying to sow some seed of doubt or, as we would put it, clutch at straws because he is saying: well, look at the list in Mr Mochalov's information sheet and there's a passport stamp missing on 6 December. I'll deal with that in a moment, if I may. It appears now to be common ground that there is actually a passport stamp for every other entry in Mr Mochalov's -- although my learned friend's opening suggested there wasn't an entry stamp on the 6th, we've had that forensically tested.

Mr Handy, whose report I'm not sure my Lady has seen but it's in the L bundles, produces a very much enlarged picture. It may be worth just --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I've certainly seen reference to it.

Do you want me to have a look?

MS DAVIES: Yes, shall we have a quick look at it? It's in L(2011)/19/92.

I do have a hard copy if the technology --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I have 19/2011. Is it file 19?

MS DAVIES: Yes, it's file 19. The correspondence bundles are done by year and then file number.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just a second. It's my own stupidity, I've just taken something out.

MS DAVIES: I do have a hard copy.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Is a hard copy handed up?

MS DAVIES: It's a bundle of all the correspondence. I'll hand it to my learned friends so they can see. But I've opened it on the relevant page. (Handed)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you very much.

MS DAVIES: So this is an appendix to Mr Handy's report in which he produces the best copy we have of the 6 December entry stamp. His conclusion we can see at paragraph 10 of his report, going back a couple of pages to page 88 L(2011)/19/88:

"The date was interpreted as reading [6 December], from the ink present no other numerals were considered feasible. There was no evidence to suggest that the un-inked sections of characters were due to deliberate 'erasure'."

Now, my learned friend's own forensic expert had access to the passport on Monday. We have not received any formal indication of what the results of that investigation were. Mr Handy managed to produce his report within one day of seeing the passport. But from what my learned friend said this morning it looks as if their own forensic expert has not reached any different conclusion because he said this morning it does now look as if this was an entry stamp for 6 December.

We set out in paragraph 22 of our skeleton --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I can give this back. (Handed)

MS DAVIES: -- the information relating to the other stamps in Mr Abramovich's passport corresponding to the other dates on Mr Mochalov's list. Now, I accept we haven't been able to find an exit stamp on 6 December, although we do have both a French entry stamp on 6 December and flight records showing a flight on 6 December, which is the other material to which I was referring to in my skeleton. But in any event that's wholly irrelevant because there's no suggestion that the meeting took place prior to 7 December; it had to take place after Mr Glushkov's arrest.

I should say this about the 6 December exit stamp. There are lots of stamps in Mr Abramovich's passport, as one might expect. We haven't been able to identify one which is 6 December but not all of them are legible. So when my learned friend says it's common ground that there's no stamp, it's common ground we haven't been able to identify a stamp. That's the point.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: But it's certainly possible, just talking from one's experience, that even where normally one gets one's passport stamped, sometimes if more than one passport is being presented, they just don't stamp it. That's life.

MS DAVIES: My Lady, of course judicial experience is something that can be taken account of.

We have in our skeleton -- annex 2 to our skeleton, which lists the other meetings which either Mr Abramovich says took place or are said to be common ground -- not only identified all the flight records that show that those meetings did take place but also the stamps. For almost every other meeting, as you would expect, there's either an entry or a --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, normally --

MS DAVIES: An entry, exactly.

So that's sort of the backdrop. Then where are we? The actual evidence to which this application relates. My learned friend took you to the two letters to which his application relates but he didn't in fact also take you to the letter which prompted those responses, which, in order to understand the genesis of the documents, we respectfully submit is important. That's at T(C)/05/14.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MS DAVIES: That's a letter, my Lady can see, dated 18 April. It will be in the T(C) bundle, tab 5, page 14.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MS DAVIES: This is a letter from Mr Malkin to Army
General Pronichev.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: He's the MP or something?

MS DAVIES: He's the MP. He's a member of the Federation
Council of the Federal Assembly of the Russian Federation and he's making a request pursuant to Articles 14 and 17 of the federal law.

The reason I draw my Lady's attention to that is we don't have direct access to Mr Pronichev, he's a member of the FSB, and the request was made through Mr Malkin invoking effectively something equivalent to an Official Information Act request for information.

My Lady has also seen -- that was an innocuous request; we've seen what the response is. There is reference to guidelines, nothing surprising.

It seems the thing that has really prompted this application is the last sentence:

"Based on the available records and documents..."

Now, my Lady, those records and documents are, of course, not documents that are within our control; they're official records of the Border Guard Service.
We have, however, written -- again through Mr Malkin because that's our only way of doing it -- to Mr Pronichev asking for details of the records and

I should perhaps show my Lady that letter.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Is that in this bundle?

MS DAVIES: No, my Lady, it's in the L bundles again.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Give me the reference.

MS DAVIES: L(2011)/21/273. I do have a hard copy if --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: It's all right. I would really rather get quicker on this. Okay, I've got it.

MS DAVIES: Page 279 is the letter we sent to Mr Malkin asking him to pass a letter to Mr Pronichev as a matter of urgency. The letter that we asked to pass to Mr Pronichev --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Hang on, let me just read it.

Yes, and the reply is at?

MS DAVIES: No, the letter to Mr Pronichev -- we haven't yet had a reply -- is at page 273.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MS DAVIES: We refer to the guidelines -- it's the third paragraph -- and also to the reference to "available records and documents". Then the request is to:

"... provide us, if you are able to do so, copies of the above documents, together with any other documents which you based your letter or Mr Mochalov based the information sheet enclosed with your letter... as a matter of urgency."

We've had confirmation from Mr Malkin that he's received this -- Mr Malkin's office, I should say, actually -- but we haven't had a response from Mr Pronichev yet.

So my learned friend put the application on the basis that what he's seeking to explore is what is the documentary basis for the information in the records; that's what we've asked Mr Pronichev to provide.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I think it goes a bit further than that, doesn't it? It also goes to what are the systems. Even assuming that the records in your office don't record any further exits from the Russian Federation, is it possible that there could have been an exit which isn't recorded on some of these documents and records? I think that's the question, or questions along those lines.

MS DAVIES: Your Ladyship will be assisted in relation to that by the other material that's been put before the court in terms of passport stamps which show that, on Mr Mochalov's list, all bar the 6 December exit have a stamp, but there are other passport records in relation to that, the entry into Le Bourget, and my Lady will be able to assess that.

The real question is: is it appropriate --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I would quite like to see whether we are going to get any of the available records and documents because it seems to me the story might be much clearer from that.

MS DAVIES: It may well be, my Lady. If my Lady were to say we should adjourn this application until we know what the answer is to the letter --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I think I would like to see the available records and documents, if they're forthcoming, to actually identify what further questions either of these two gentlemen will be asked in cross-examination once those records and documents were forthcoming.

MS DAVIES: Obviously we don't know.

I really must deal with this suggestion that we have some sort of influence in relation to Russian State records which allows us to ensure that these sorts of requests are answered. That was put on the basis of Mr Voloshin's evidence. Mr Voloshin, as he explains in his first witness statement, is no longer a State employee. He left his position in 2003. He is now a chairman of private companies. He also explains he's a friend of Mr Abramovich, they have been friends for many years, and what he is explaining he did, in his witness statement, is phone up his former secretary and ask her to do him a favour.

That's really no basis for suggesting that we have this ability to secure access to anything else. We've done what we can, my Lady. If Mr Pronichev responds and is willing to provide the records, then we can test, but we can't do any more in that sense. He's the head of the border guard, a member of the FSB.

But if my Lady is saying to me that she'd like to defer the --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I think I would like to see -- what I've really got to get a grip on is what is the utility of testing the question with the witnesses: well, given this is how you maintain the records and this is what you do when people leave the country, is there any possibility that, your records notwithstanding, somebody could have left the country without there being any record of it; and if so, in what circumstances would that take place?

MS DAVIES: I accept that they must have some other records because they didn't have Mr Abramovich's passport when they produced, so I accept that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, precisely. Well, you've asked for them.

MS DAVIES: And we've asked for them. If we defer -- this evidence -- as my learned friend Mr Rabinowitz described it, alibi evidence -- is not going to be relevant until sometime in November, so we have a bit of time to try and sort this out.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. I think what I would like -- have you got any indication as to when you're getting these available records and documents?

MS DAVIES: I have no indication of when Mr Pronichev might respond to the letter, which is the relevant -- because we don't know whether he's going to be willing to provide anything further in response to this request.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: When did this letter go?

MS DAVIES: It went last week.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Pronichev is not the MP?

MS DAVIES: No, Pronichev is the general and he's the head of the Border Guard Service, so he's a very senior civil servant. All we can do, my Lady -- again, because we don't have direct access to him -- is chase Mr Malkin to see if he has heard anything, which of course we can do.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: What is the date of this letter?

MS DAVIES: 30 September.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: We'd be looking at November. I'm going to -- if I were to adjourn this, I would then have to make up my mind in the event that there were no documents forthcoming by a certain date because if I were to make an order for cross-examination then arrangements would have to be made.

MS DAVIES: On the current timetable, the earliest that Mr Abramovich would be giving evidence is 1 or 2 November. The other -- to use my learned friend's phrase -- alibi witnesses will be coming, I think, two weeks later. We're not due to finish my client's evidence until the end of November essentially.

Now, of course my position is that it's actually for Mr Berezovsky's team to make the arrangements to get these people here if the order is made --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, he's going to have difficulty, isn't he? They're not going to come at his request.

MS DAVIES: There's no reason to think they're going to come at our request either.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I appreciate that.

MS DAVIES: My Lady, all I was going to say is that we wouldn't take some sort of formal point that these people should have been called before Mr Abramovich, nothing like that, obviously. I just wanted to make that clear. So if my Lady at some later stage wanted to make an order then we have plenty of time in the timetable to accommodate -- although we do say it is, with respect, unrealistic to suspect that high-ranking civil servants either would be willing or be permitted to derogate from their official duties --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I can see that; it's just I have no evidence about that. I have common sense and what you say in your skeleton argument.

MS DAVIES: That's why, my Lady, the question of who has to make the arrangements is perhaps of some relevance because our understanding of the rules is it's Mr Berezovsky who has to call these people if he obtains this order and he's put no evidence before the court to suggest it's possible.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Okay. Well, conclude your submissions, Ms Davies, please.

MS DAVIES: My Lady, I think that essentially I've covered the ground that I wish to cover, unless I can assist on...

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you. Yes, Mr Gillis.

Reply submissions by MR GILLIS

MR GILLIS: My Lady, just briefly. If I can start with the question of timing.

My Lady, the first point is that as one can see from T(C), tab 5 -- and one can pick this up from page 14 T(C)/05/14 -- the request was made on 18 April for the information and within five days, 23 April, they got their response. So very prompt indeed. So that would suggest that these things can be dealt with quickly.

The second point is that we have been pressing this issue with my learned friends for quite a while now. If I could just very quickly run through the position in relation to it.

The border guard evidence, if I can call it that, was first produced to us on 8 September. Your Ladyship knows that it was purportedly exhibited to Mr Abramovich's third witness statement in April; in actual fact it wasn't. That mistake was corrected so that we were first given this information on 8 September. So we wrote on 12 September requesting that they should produce the available documentation. That, my Lady, is the letter that you have at L(2011), tab 16, at page 142 L(2011)/16/142. So at paragraph 12(b) we asked them to produce the available records and documents:

"If they have not been made available, please request the provision of the documents referred to (and disclose them when provided)."

So that's what we asked on 12 September. We got no response to that, so that on 22 September we issued our application. We then got a reply to that letter of 12 September on 27 September.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: What's the reference?

L(2011)/19/179. At the top of that page, referring to 12(b), they simply say:

"The 'available records and documents' referred to in the letter of Mr Pronichev are internal documents of the Russian Border Authorities. They are for official use only and have not been provided to Mr Abramovich."

So, in other words, they didn't reply to our request that they should ask for them.

It was then only on 30 September, three or four days before the trial was due to begin --

L(2011)/21/271.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR GILLIS: 30 September. I think this is what you have been shown, the letter attached, asking it to be sent to Mr Malkin and Mr Pronichev.

So, my Lady, in our submission this issue should have been being dealt with from April 2011 onwards but it wasn't because the letter wasn't produced to us. It was produced to us on 8 September, we've pushed for it from 12 September and it's only on 30 September that my learned friends have actually made any effort to actually progress this issue.

So, my Lady, in our submission this is something which needs to be dealt with as a matter of urgency. It's not correct that this issue only arises once Mr Abramovich's witnesses come to give evidence because it's no doubt going to be put to Mr Berezovsky that the evidence establishes that Mr Abramovich cannot have left Russia between 6 December and 2 January, relying in part on this.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, Mr Berezovsky can't be cross-examined about these records; he can only say what he can say. He's not going to have any comments.

MR GILLIS: Well, I imagine -- it is not for me to second-guess how Mr Sumption is going to put his cross-examination but I would suggest it would be surprising if it's not put to Mr Berezovsky that this evidence shows that what he is saying cannot have taken place. So, my Lady, in our submission it is a matter that needs to be dealt with with some urgency.

The second point my learned friend made was to suggest or to say that this evidence from the border guards is merely part of the evidence they seek to rely upon. Well, of course that's right and they rely upon it.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, I put the point: well then you don't need to rely on it.

MR GILLIS: Exactly. Either you don't rely upon it or, equally so, bear in mind we wish to test the other evidence that they rely upon; and equally so, if they are going to continue their reliance upon this evidence, we want to be able to test it.

The third point we would make is in relation to the question of who, in a sense, the obligation falls upon to make steps to have the maker of the hearsay statement available to give evidence. My Lady, CPR 33.4 is drafted in fairly oblique language, I'm afraid to say, but my Lady if one steps back, in our submission it's quite clear how it's intended to work and it's shown by Lord Justice Thomas how it is intended to work: where the court has indicated that the hearsay evidence should be available for cross-examination, there is an obligation on the person who seeks to rely upon that hearsay evidence to make the maker available for cross-examination.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So you're submitting there is an obligation?

MR GILLIS: Yes, indeed so. We would say that is clear from what Lord Justice Thomas says.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: And can be enforced like any other order of the court; is that your submission as well?

MR GILLIS: Not enforced in the sense that because you are in breach of an order the evidence can be excluded. As I've said, we're not relying on that. We're simply saying in circumstances where the court has indicated the maker of the hearsay statement should be available for cross-examination, if that person is not made available, that's a factor the court can take into account.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Okay, it may be a fact, but if it can be enforced, like any other order of the court, then theoretically that leads to the consequence that the order can be served on Mr Abramovich and he can be in contempt if he doesn't make arrangements.

Are you saying that's the position? Because I don't understand what is meant by "can be enforced like any other order of the court", what Lord Justice Thomas says. That seems to imply to me that there is actually an obligation to make the witness available and I have problems with that.

MR GILLIS: My Lady, it may be said that that is implicit in the consequence that the court has indicated that cross-examination is appropriate. But, my Lady --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: If that's right, it's not just that I'm saying, "Yes, you should have liberty to cross-examine these people", but, "Yes, I think it's appropriate that the defendant should be subject to an obligation that can be enforced to produce them", which is a different question altogether because it brings in other considerations.

MR GILLIS: My Lady, I see that, but that is certainly the way in which Lord Justice Thomas is interpreting it and I would suggest also Mr Justice Mann.

So again coming back to the passage that we have in Polanski at page 403 at letter C, I do submit that --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Sorry, why is Mr Justice Mann doing that? Look at paragraph 11:

"I cannot make, so far as I can see, any order directed at the claimant, therefore there is no order in respect of which they can be in breach."

MR GILLIS: My Lady, I was going to take you to paragraph 10 but can I just start with what Lord Justice Thomas has said at 403 at letter C:

"If the court considers, in all the circumstances, that the person outside the jurisdiction..."

So that's clearly Mr Polanski.

"... who is wishing to rely upon the hearsay evidence should attend and be cross-examined at court in person but the party intending to call him refuses to arrange for him to come to London, then the ordinary consequences of a refusal to obey an order of the court should follow."

That can only be interpreted in one way. If the person who refuses to arrange for him to come to London: that must be Mr Polanski, it can't be Conde Nast. If Conde Nast fails to take steps to get Mr Polanski to come to England to give evidence, that in consequence of Conde Nast's failure, Mr Polanski's evidence is inadmissible; that would be nonsense.

Equally so when one sees how it's interpreted in paragraph 10 in Dyson. At the end of that paragraph, picking it up halfway through, and this is referring to the note in the White Book:

"I think that the note is probably explicable by the fact that in the Polanski case, as it was outlined to me by Mr Arnold, who has some familiarity with it, Mr Polanski was himself the claimant..."

Well, here Mr Abramovich is the defendant.

"... and may well in some way have been said to be in breach of an order, although it is not at all clear what order he can be said to have been in breach of."

So Mr Justice Mann was again interpreting the Polanski decision as being a situation which was imposing upon Mr Polanski -- substitute Mr Abramovich -- an obligation to make the hearsay witness available to give evidence.

MS DAVIES: My Lady, I hesitate to interrupt but if my Lady reads the first half of paragraph 10 --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I've read it, yes.

MR GILLIS: My Lady, the other point we would make is: how else can the rule work? Because otherwise one ends up in a situation where, the court having given permission to cross-examine a witness who is outside of the jurisdiction because the court is persuaded that that would be of assistance to the court, there is going to be no sanction that could attach because if the obligation is upon Mr Berezovsky to arrange for the attendance of Mr Mochalov, which he can't do, there is then going to be nothing that lies behind the order that the court has made.

In our submission, in the context of civil litigation, where the defendant has sought to put before the court hearsay evidence which the court considers should be subject to cross-examination, it's obviously intended that the court should have some means of seeking to ensure compliance with that indication.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I think it makes your task more difficult if you're pursuing this submission because if you're right, I then have to take account in making my order for the cross-examination, or deciding whether I should make an order for the cross-examination of these witnesses, whether or not it is appropriate in the circumstances that I should subject Mr Abramovich to such an order.

MR GILLIS: My Lady, in our submission not. We can cross that bridge, if I can respectfully say so, when we come to it because Mr Abramovich can explain to the court what steps he took in order to seek to have these people attend for cross-examination and explain why they refuse to do so. If the court concludes that appropriate steps were taken and it was beyond Mr Abramovich's control to secure their attendance, then the court will not attach any significance to the fact that Mr Abramovich did not do what, in those circumstances, he was not capable of doing.

My Lady, in our submission it's not necessary to determine whether it is actually going to be in Mr Abramovich's power to secure their attendance in circumstances where, at the present time, no evidence of that issue has been put before the court. It's appropriate to deal with that question on the basis of the evidence, not on speculation.

My Lady, my learned friend made references to the relevance of the absence of the 6 December exit stamp and sought to suggest that that really didn't matter terribly much because there were Le Bourget entry stamps. Your Ladyship will appreciate that's not the point. The question is: how reliable is the system that was being used to collate entry and exit information?

It's the point your Ladyship has already made that in a sense they are seeking to rely upon the negative, namely the absence of any record of entry and exit, in order to establish that Mr Abramovich was there during the relevant period. That takes you directly into the question as to the reliability or otherwise of the systems and record maintenance that lies behind the production of the information sheet.

My Lady, unless I can assist any further, it's on that basis that we would ask that the order sought be made.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

What I'm going to do is I'm going to adjourn this application, Mr Gillis, because I think it's important that I should decide what to do once I have seen, if they are going to be forthcoming, the records and documents that have been requested through the member of the Federation Council of the Federal Assembly of the Russian Federation to -- has the request been made to one of the proposed witnesses, to Mr Mochalov or to Mr Pronichev?

MS DAVIES: The request has been sent to Mr Malkin with the request that he send it to Mr Pronichev urgently. That's what we've done.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. The request for the records and documents?

MS DAVIES: Yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: It seems to me that I ought to decide this issue, particularly in circumstances where the claimant is suggesting that it imposes an obligation akin to an order requiring Mr Abramovich to produce these witnesses for cross-examination, it seems to me that in order to decide what I should do in the exercise of my discretion as to whether to make such an order, and irrespective of what is the correct construction of the relevant rule as to whether it does actually impose any such obligation on the party wishing to rely on the hearsay statement, it's necessary for me to know whether documents are going to be forthcoming as a result of the request that has been made to Mr Malkin to obtain access to the relevant records and documents, the available records and documents.

The question is, it seems to me, what timeframe I should put on that. I'm minded to say two weeks from today, Mr Gillis. The date for that will be -- what are we today? It's the 5th today. So the 19th, two weeks today. I'll adjourn it until then, or a convenient time thereafter, and we can deal with it I think quite speedily.

If there's been no response, then I'll have to deal with it in the light of there being no response. If there is a response, I can then hear further submissions if necessary as to whether there is still a requirement for cross-examination. I'm sure you will be pressing your request for cross-examination even in the light of the further documents but I want to make my decision on the basis of such further documents, if any, as are produced.

MR GILLIS: I'm obliged.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: It may not be convenient on that particular date.

MR GILLIS: My Lady, I believe the 20th and 21st are nonsitting days so it might be sensible to try and find some time on the 19th. But we can discuss that nearer the time depending on what the results of the request show and how long we think any further argument might take.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. That puts, as it were, some sort of end date by which the documents have got to be produced because it's obviously important that as much time as possible is given to the witnesses to make arrangements if indeed I'm going to make an order.

Right. Very well. Could somebody let me have the reference to the House of Lords in Polanski? I can find it for myself.

MS DAVIES: It's always been a puzzle to me that it's not referred to in this note in the White Book but it hasn't been for many years.

MR GILLIS: It's not helpful.

MS DAVIES: But we will, of course, let my Lady have a reference.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just email my clerk, otherwise either
I or my clerk have to do the work. You might as well do it.

MS DAVIES: We'll definitely do that, my Lady.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well. So I'll adjourn the application formally for 14 days or such convenient date thereafter.

Discussion re translation of witness statements

MR GILLIS: My Lady, I'm afraid one other issue has arisen and that is in relation to Russian translations of our witness statements.

As your Ladyship will have seen, Mr Berezovsky's witness statements were all in English. What has happened, understandably, is that Skaddens, for the purposes of putting Mr Berezovsky's witness statements to their witnesses, have created translations of those documents and we have requested Skaddens to produce those translations to us for two purposes: firstly, because in our submission it is going to be necessary for Mr Berezovsky to see what Mr Abramovich's witnesses are being told in Russian that Mr Berezovsky has said because Mr Abramovich's witnesses, as one can see, they have all given their evidence in Russian and do not seem to either speak or understand written English.

So a translation has been produced and in our submission it's important that Mr Berezovsky should be allowed to see what has been communicated to Mr Abramovich's witnesses in terms of what it is suggested that Mr Abramovich has said. So that's the first reason why we say it's important that the translations should be produced.

The second reason is that from a case management point of view, in order to put Mr Berezovsky's evidence to Mr Abramovich's witnesses who only speak Russian, we and the court are going to require a Russian-language version of those statements.

So, my Lady, we have asked Skaddens to produce those translations to us and that request has been refused.

Now, my Lady --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, the second reason, irrespective of the first reason, there has got to be, hasn't there, a Russian translation of any statement in English so that you or whoever is cross-examining the witness, you or Mr Rabinowitz or whoever, can say to the witness, through the translator, "Look at paragraph 77 of this statement; what do you say about such-and-such?" So there's got to be, from a case management point of view, a translation --

MR GILLIS: Absolutely.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: -- if you're wanting to cross-examine on any particular English statement.

The court can direct translations if they're not already there on the table. There may be a privilege reason why extracts that the defendant has made available to his witnesses should not be made available to you; but if they've got a whole lot of translations, it might be quicker if they just provided them.

MR GILLIS: My Lady, two points.

Firstly, I think it's Sumitomo v Credit Lyonnais which indicates that translations of documents are not privileged.

Secondly, what we have --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, but there's a difference, isn't there, because the selection of the particular paragraphs to put to their witnesses might be a privileged issue. I don't see we need to get there because there have got to be translations of any relevant statement.

So what's the position, Ms Davies?

MS DAVIES: My Lady, I have to say this has rather been sprung on us. There was no application and my learned friend mentioned it just before --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, but we're here and we have another half an hour.

MS DAVIES: Yes, but I don't agree with the Sumitomo point and I don't have Sumitomo here so I can't deal with that point.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right, okay. But there have got to be translations.

MS DAVIES: Of course. My learned friend can make translations: he has got translators, he can get official translations produced.

As I explained to my learned friend just now, we don't have certified translations; what we do have are exactly what my Lady postulated, which are privileged extractions that were put to Mr Abramovich during the course of the proofing process. I explained that to my learned friend just before we came in. We will review them to see if we can make them available but I don't know the answer to that now.

The simplest thing is presumably just to get official translations done of the witness statements, which my learned friend is more than capable of doing if that's what he wants.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, the court can direct both parties to do it --

MS DAVIES: Of course, my Lady.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: -- and costs shared subsequently at the discretion of the court.

MS DAVIES: My Lady, the only reason I'm suggesting my learned friend do it is it's his witness statements that he wants translated. But that's fine. I'm sure those arrangements can be made. What I am not -- those are the facts.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: But have you had witness statements translated on en bloc?

MS DAVIES: My instructions, just obtained this morning -- because this was raised just literally as we came in -- is that we've had parts of the statements translated for the purposes of putting to Mr Abramovich in the proofing sessions.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Or putting to other witnesses?

MS DAVIES: Or putting to other witnesses.

My Lady will recall that the witness evidence was exchanged on 31 May and then there was a six-week period in which to produce reply statements. Experience tells certainly us on this side of the court that getting lengthy documents translated into Russian is a very lengthy process and we didn't therefore get them all translated -- those are my instructions -- we had bits and that's why there's a privilege problem.

But we're happy to review what we've got to see if we can speed the process up by making those available, but at the moment --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Otherwise, when it comes to court, when Mr Rabinowitz or Mr Gillis puts paragraph 65 of a particular statement to a witness, there's going to be a gap whilst the translator translates it.

MS DAVIES: Of course, my Lady. I understand that.

I completely understand that when the Russian-speaking witnesses are being cross-examined, they're going to have to have translations of any document that's put to them to speed things up. I can see that. Although actually that's not happened in the rest of the bundles but there we are; that's a different problem we're going to have to deal with on a document-by-document basis.

But that's a separate question as to whether what my learned friend is seeking now is an order that we make available such translations as we have. If that's what he's seeking, I can't deal with that order because there's a whole privilege issue that we would need to address.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Okay.

Mr Gillis, I can see from a case management point of view that we've got to have translations and we've got to have them quickly. I'm going to leave it for the moment with the parties because if there is any possibility of Ms Davies's clients or instructing solicitors producing any translations that had been made of witness statements, that would be good. That would be a good thing. But I can see that there is a real privilege issue and I would have to look at Sumitomo and the other case you mentioned as to whether the selection of the paragraphs that were chosen to put to their witnesses was covered by privilege.

MR GILLIS: My Lady, yes. Clearly from the case management point of view that is critical. What I would say is that it certainly looks, from the witness statements that have been served by Mr Abramovich, that translations have been prepared and they are effectively referred to because, for instance, in Mr Gorodilov's second statement at paragraph 2, which is at bundle E4 at tab 5 E4/05/54 -- it appears that Mr Gorodilov is just a Russian speaker -- he says:

"I have reviewed the witness statements recently served in support of Mr... Berezovsky's case."

So that on the face of it would look to take you into 31.14.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I can quite see we've got to have them but it does seem to me that it's -- at least in the first instance -- incumbent upon you, if you wish to cross-examine a Russian speaker off an English statement, you'll have to come up with a translation. It's something that both parties should have addressed earlier in the process because the translation issue has been on the table for some time now.

MR GILLIS: My Lady, I see that. But in our submission it is unsatisfactory that we're not going to be produced -- it seemed -- with the translations that had been prepared and seem to have been referred to in the witness statements so we can be quite clear as to how Mr Abramovich's witnesses are understanding the evidence that Mr Berezovsky is giving.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I can see that. But I think that it does require a bit of consideration because it's only in a situation where there is a lost in translation issue that this point is going to arise at all, isn't it?

MR GILLIS: I can see that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Basically, if the worst comes to the worst, I will direct both parties to produce translations of everything and that seems to me to be an unnecessary expense. I think both of you should have addressed this earlier and I would expect Ms Davies to cooperate, as far as she can within the constraints of privilege, to produce the translations if you can, please.

MS DAVIES: I hope I was making it clear that we would do that. All I can say is there has been an awful lot to deal with in the last two weeks. My Lady has managed to escape the joys of the correspondence bundles because they would almost fill this room, mostly in the last two weeks. So we're all working frantically behind the scenes to try and get everything ready. So we will, of course, take this further.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: It's going to be a lot of time-wasting if paragraphs of witness statements have got to be translated while the witness is in the witness box.

MS DAVIES: As I said, we'll review them, if we can, give them what we've got and then get them certified because that may well be quicker. We'll do that. But we just need to look and see what we have and take it further.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I really don't want to waste time having a privilege issue as to whether translations or particular translations of particular witness statements are covered by privilege because there's something in your selection process. Okay.

Very well. Tomorrow we said 10.15. Thank you very much.

1 Thursday, 6 October 2011
 2 (10.15 am)
 3 (Proceedings delayed)
 4 (10.20 am)
 5 MR RABINOWITZ: May it please your Ladyship, before we start
 6 with Mr Berezovsky, there are two things we need to deal
 7 with. The first is just to ask your Ladyship if you
 8 could sign the order which you should find in front of 9 you. It's the CPR 31.22(2) order. I understand we 10 don't yet have a signed copy of that.
 11 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, there's no objection to that.
 12 Yes.
 13 MR RABINOWITZ: I'm grateful. The next matter before 14 Mr Berezovsky is called is that I think some members of 15 the press wish to make an application.
 16 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, very well. Who's got the 17 speaking part on this? Yes.
 18 MEMBER OF THE PRESS: My Lady, if I may address you. I'm 19 from the Financial Times and the gentlemen behind me are 20 from the national and international press as well. We 21 did get here in good time this morning but unfortunately 22 the desks downstairs that issues numbers was closed
 23 until 10 o'clock and the more fundamental problem is 24 that there are only ten seats available and that is 25 woefully inadequate for a litigation that is of obvious

1 interest.
 2 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, I did say right at the start
 3 that if ten was not enough I would reconsider the 4 position.
 5 MEMBER OF THE PRESS: Thank you.
 6 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: The ten reserved seats have been 7 allocated to members of the press, have they?
 8 MEMBER OF THE PRESS: Perhaps. I know certainly there are 9 members of the press in some of the ten seats. If I may 10 respectfully suggest, there are people in court who 11 don't absolutely need to be in the courtroom to see the 12 witness giving evidence and for whom it's perhaps not as 13 essential as for the journalists to see facial 14 expression, et cetera, who perhaps could be asked to 15 move to the adjoining room before us.
 16 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I'm told that the consultation rooms
 17 where there is an audio feed and also a transcript feed,
 18 the LiveNote or Opus feed, are pretty well empty. So 19 anybody who wants to read what's going on or listen to 20 what's going on should go to the consultation rooms
 21 which are, I think, on this floor.
 22 COURT OFFICIAL: They are.
 23 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Out of the court and turn right.
 24 COURT OFFICIAL: It's rooms 40 and 42.
 25 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I don't know whether -- obviously

1 I quite understand the interest of the press. I don't 2 want to delay the start of proceedings today. I will 3 consult with HMCS court staff at lunchtime, because 4 obviously the court will be cleared at lunchtime, and 5 I'll see what we can do about allocating more seats for 6 the press. But the reality is there is no courtroom in 7 the land that is big enough to accommodate all of you
 8 and whilst I can reserve public seats for the press, 9 I obviously can't, given the teams of lawyers here, as 10 it were, cross-examine each of them as to whether their 11 presence here is actually necessary --
 12 MEMBER OF THE PRESS: No, I quite understand.
 13 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: -- and then do a balancing act so as 14 to work out whether the interests of the press override
 15 the interests of the lawyers. I can't get into that 16 game.
 17 I don't know whether there's a health and safety
 18 issue about so many of you standing there. What's the 19 position?
 20 COURT OFFICIAL: I would need to find out about numbers.
 21 I think there will be because we need access and that's 22 the only door.
 23 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Sorry, I don't hear you.
 24 COURT OFFICIAL: That is the only access, so I need to find
 25 out how many numbers we can actually have in here

1 standing.
 2 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Okay. Let's keep them here for the 3 time being. I don't want it to be, as it were,
 4 oppressive for any of the witnesses giving evidence and 5 so therefore I am going to ask you to make sure that 6 you're the other side of that. Again, the most 7 important thing is that this is a fair trial and that 8 the witnesses or the parties aren't, as it were,
 9 oppressed by too many people in court.
 10 I will see what I can do at lunchtime about making
 11 more seats available and I will give you an update then.
 12 MEMBER OF THE PRESS: My Lady, we're very grateful, thank
 13 you.
 14 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I think that is the best I can do.
 15 But I obviously have your interests, as it were, at 16 heart.
 17 MEMBER OF THE PRESS 2: Could I make a suggestion regarding 18 the ticketing. It normally works in court where it's 19 one ticket per organisation and it's ticketed in 20 advance. I think today it's been a little haphazard on 21 that score.
 22 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: It was all right on Tuesday, wasn't 23 it? It seemed to work very well on Tuesday.
 24 MEMBER OF THE PRESS 2: Fewer people, my Lady.
 25 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yesterday hardly anyone was here at

1 all, but on Tuesday it seemed to work well.
 2 MEMBER OF THE PRESS: It did but, as my colleague has said,
 3 there were fewer people. Today, because Mr Berezovsky
 4 is giving evidence, there is obviously a lot more
 5 interest.
 6 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Okay. Your suggestion -- I think
 7 you're Mr Daily Mail, are you?
 8 MEMBER OF THE PRESS 2: Telegraph.
 9 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Sorry. Mr Telegraph. Your experience
 10 is that it's, as it were, formally allocated to each
 11 organisation in advance?
 12 MEMBER OF THE PRESS 2: That's normally the position.
 13 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: What would be useful would be if you
 14 could, anybody who is interested, just provide you 15 perhaps with a list or register your interest per 16 organisation with one of the court staff, or with you if 17 that's all right.
 18 COURT OFFICIAL: Of course, my Lady.
 19 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Okay. So perhaps you could produce, 20 as it were, a template with two columns: name of 21 representative, name of organisation. We can get that 22 done and then we'll have some idea of the numbers who 23 want to have tickets. It may have to operate on 24 a first-come first-served basis, I'm just not sure.
 25 All stay there for the moment and we'll try to keep

5

1 as many of you here as possible. If we can't because of 2 health and safety, then the people at the back will just 3 have to go out to the consultation rooms.
 4 Okay. I'll give you an update at 2 o'clock.
 5 MR RABINOWITZ: I'm grateful for that, my Lady.
 6 Can we then call, Mr Berezovsky, please.
 7 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, certainly.
 8 MR RABINOWITZ: He does have a translator.
 9 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, very well.
 10 MR INTERPRETER (affirmed)
 11 MR BORIS BEREZOVSKY (sworn).
 12 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Berezovsky, if you would prefer to 13 sit down, which I'm sure you would, please do so. If 14 you want to stand up at any time because you're more 15 comfortable standing up, please feel free to do that as 16 well.
 17 THE WITNESS: Thank you very much, it's exactly my very 18 first wish: can I change my position?
 19 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.
 20 THE WITNESS: Thank you.
 21 Examination-in-chief by MR RABINOWITZ
 22 Q. Good morning, Mr Berezovsky.
 23 A. Good morning.
 24 Q. Mr Berezovsky, before we begin, can you just confirm 25 that you don't have any mobile phone or indeed any other

6

1 electronic communication device with you in the witness
 2 box?
 3 A. I don't have anything except pence. But I need paper,
 4 if it's possible, just white paper, please.
 5 Q. Can I ask you please to be given bundle D2 and if you
 6 could have that opened at tab 17. If you're at tab 17, 7 can I ask you to go to page 102 of that statement. It's 8 page 294 of the bundle, right at the back {D2/17/294}.
 9 Can you confirm that's your signature?
 10 A. Yes, it's my signature.
 11 Q. Can you then please confirm that this is your fourth 12 witness statement in these proceedings and that it's 13 dated 31 May 2011?
 14 A. Yes, that's correct.
 15 Q. Thank you.
 16 Now, I understand that there is a paragraph in this 17 witness statement that you would like to correct. Can 18 I therefore ask you to go to paragraph 114 at page 221
 19 of the bundle. You see paragraph 114, it says:
 20 "Mr Abramovich and I arranged in February 1995 for 21 Mr Gorodilov to write to President Yeltsin setting out
 22 his proposal for the privatisation of this business."
 23 Do you see that paragraph?
 24 A. Yes.
 25 Q. You should see in front of you, although it's covered by 7

1 paper, a one-page document which looks like this
 2 (indicates), Mr Berezovsky, on your desk.
 3 A. Yes.
 4 Q. You'll see the first paragraph there identifies
 5 a slightly amended paragraph 114.
 6 A. I don't understand, where is -- yes, sorry. Yes.
 7 Q. Effectively you're deleting the word "privatisation" and 8 you're substituting for it the word "creation"?
 9 A. Yes, it's correct. Yes, creation was the next step.
 10 Q. So can you confirm that that's the amendment that you
 11 want to make to paragraph 114?
 12 A. It's correct.
 13 Q. All right.
 14 Now, just still on this document, can I please ask
 15 you to go to paragraph 340 of this witness statement;
 16 that's at page 269.
 17 A. Yes.
 18 Q. You'll see at paragraph 340 you're referring to the 19 transcript of your Le Bourget meeting with 20 Mr Abramovich.
 21 A. Yes.
 22 Q. You say there that you have produced a detailed 23 commentary on this which you have exhibited. Do you see 24 that?
 25 A. Yes.

8

1 Q. Can I therefore please just ask that you be given
 2 bundle D3. I just want to show you the exhibit. If you
 3 go to tab 18 of D3 {D3/18/1}, that's the beginning of 4 the bundle, can you just confirm --
 5 THE WITNESS: Sorry, is it possible to remove that?
 6 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Certainly. Usher, please, could you
 7 remove the...
 8 THE WITNESS: That's fine. Okay.
 9 MR RABINOWITZ: All right. So at bundle D3, tab 18, can you
 10 just confirm that this is --
 11 A. Just a second. 18?
 12 Q. Yes. Can you confirm that what you have in front of you 13 is the commentary that you have produced on the 14 transcript of the Le Bourget meeting which you referred 15 to in your witness statement?
 16 A. Yes, I think it's -- I can't go through each page but 17 it's -- it looks like that.
 18 Q. Thank you.
 19 Now, subject to the correction we identified 20 a moment ago, can I now ask you to confirm that the 21 contents of this, your fourth witness statement, 22 together with the commentary I've just taken you to, are 23 true to the best of your knowledge and belief?
 24 A. Yes, it's correct. It's true of my knowledge and 25 belief.

1 Q. You may want to start closing some of those bundles.
 2 I'm sure they'll be reopened but otherwise your desk is 3 going to overflow.
 4 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Is there enough room there for you,
 5 Mr Berezovsky?
 6 THE WITNESS: I think so. I think it's fine.
 7 MR RABINOWITZ: What I would like to do next, Mr Berezovsky,
 8 is to ask that you be given bundle D4 and if that could 9 be opened at tab 6, and if you go to page 47 of the 10 bundle; page 19 of that statement {D4/06/47}.
 11 Can you confirm that the signature there is your 12 signature?
 13 A. I confirm that.
 14 Q. And can you confirm then that this is your fifth witness
 15 statement in these proceedings, dated 8 July 2011?
 16 A. Yes, it is.
 17 Q. Thank you.
 18 Now, again, I understand that there's a paragraph in 19 this witness statement also that you would like to 20 correct so can I ask you, please, to go to page 40 of 21 the bundle, paragraph 37(c) of this statement
 22 {D4/06/40}. You will see, again if you take that 23 one-page document headed "List of Corrections to 24 Mr Berezovsky's Witness Statement" and you look at 25 point 2, you can see that's identifying a change to 1 paragraph 37(c).

 2 A. It's correct.
 3 Q. Thank you. So you're confirming that's a correction you
 4 would like to make?
 5 A. Yes.
 6 Q. Subject to that correction that we've just looked at,
 7 can you confirm that your contents of this, your fifth
 8 witness statement, are also true to the best of your 9 knowledge and belief?
 10 A. I think so, yes, it's true.
 11 Q. Can you confirm that they're true to the best of your 12 knowledge and belief?
 13 A. Yes. Yes. Ah, I didn't get the question. Yes, it's 14 correct.
 15 Q. Can I ask you next in the same bundle -- that's D4 -- to 16 go to tab 9, where you should see a document -- it's the 17 bundle you've got in front of you. If you go to tab 9, 18 you should see a document headed "Sixth Witness 19 Statement of Boris Abramovich Berezovsky" {D4/09/69}.
 20 Do you see that?
 21 A. Yes.
 22 Q. If you then turn to page 77 of the bundle, that's page 9
 23 of the statement, can you confirm that that's your 24 signature?
 25 A. It's my signature.

1 Q. Can you therefore confirm that this is your sixth
 2 witness statement in these proceedings, dated
 3 14 September 2011?
 4 A. Yes, it is.
 5 Q. Again, as I understand it, there's a very minor 6 correction you want to make to paragraph 17 of the 7 statement, which you can find at page 73 of the bundle
 8 {D4/09/73}. Again, if you refer to the one-page
 9 document headed "List of Corrections", over the page you
 10 will see point 3. (Pause)
 11 A. Yes, it's correct.
 12 Q. Can you confirm that that's a correction you want to 13 make to your statement?
 14 A. This correction is correct.
 15 Q. Thank you.
 16 Now, subject to that correction, can you therefore 17 please confirm that the contents of this statement are 18 also true to the best of your knowledge and belief?
 19 A. It's also true.
 20 MR RABINOWITZ: Thank you very much, Mr Berezovsky. Can you 21 wait there, please. Mr Sumption will have some 22 questions.
 23 THE WITNESS: Just some?
 24 Cross-examination by MR SUMPTION
 25 Q. Good morning, Mr Berezovsky.

1 A. Good morning.
 2 Q. In 1995, what was your opinion about political 3 corruption?
 4 A. Just a second. Can I be allowed to return back to 1995?
 5 (Pause)
 6 As far as me is concerned, my opinion is that 7 definitely it was corruption in Russia, much less than 8 now, but it was.
 9 Q. You have in these proceedings indignantly denied the 10 suggestion that you were corrupt; presumably therefore 11 you disapprove of it, corruption that is?
 12 A. I really confirm that I am not corrupt and I didn't 13 bribe anybody. But as far as my knowledge is concerned, 14 the corruption was -- I don't know how to estimate the 15 level. If you take for the maximum level of today ten,
 16 for example, that means that at that time the corruption
 17 was between three and four.
 18 Q. But, Mr Berezovsky, I understand that there was 19 corruption in Russia in the 1990s; I'm interested to 20 know your opinion. Were you for it or against it?
 21 A. Definitely against the corruption.
 22 Q. Right.
 23 Now, suppose a businessman approaches an elected 24 official and says, "I'm going to support your 25 re-election campaign so please will you exercise your

1 official powers in a way that favours my business
 2 interests and those of my associates", and the elected
 3 official says, "Yes". In your view, is that corrupt?
 4 A. Just a second. Give me reference: where is that?
 5 Q. Can you read my question on the screen?
 6 A. No, no, I'm reading. But you said it's breaks(?), yes?
 7 Just a second. (Pause)
 8 Yes, it's corrupt.
 9 Q. Right.
 10 Now, Professor Fortescue is your expert on 11 contemporary Russia. Have you read his report?
 12 A. No.
 13 Q. Right. Well, let me tell you that Professor Fortescue 14 says that in the early and mid-1990s you were one of the 15 most politically influential oligarchs in Russia. Would 16 you agree with that?
 17 A. I agree with that.
 18 Q. In 1995 you held no official position, did you? That 19 came later.
 20 A. In 1995 I have not any official position, it's correct.
 21 Q. Nor had you been elected to any office of the State?
 22 A. I have not been elected in any office.
 23 Q. Right.
 24 Professor Fortescue gives three reasons for 25 regarding you as one of the most politically influential

1 oligarchs: I'm going to list them and then ask you
 2 whether you agree. First, your relationship with the 3 so-called family advisers of President Yeltsin;
 4 secondly, your close relations with other oligarchs; and 5 thirdly, your control of media interests.
 6 Would you agree that those three factors were the 7 main reasons for your political influence?
 8 A. I think the main reason is not here mentioned at all:
 9 it's my intellectual capacity. And I think that 10 so-called family -- I don't know what he means.
 11 Q. You don't know what that means?
 12 A. Yes.
 13 Q. Okay.
 14 A. No, not "that means"; what this gentleman means when he 15 gave his evidence or his understanding.
 16 Q. I will come to that in a minute.
 17 What about your media interests: would you agree
 18 that that was an important source of political 19 influence?
 20 A. No doubt. Maybe the most important in that time in 21 Russia.
 22 Q. Yes.
 23 Now, would it be fair to say that in Russia in the 24 mid-1990s, a businessman like Mr Abramovich had no
 25 chance of building a major business unless he had either

1 political influence or was helped by somebody else who
 2 had political influence?
 3 A. I don't think so. I think that it depends on how smart
 4 he is, not how leveraged he gets, because to get 5 leverage you need to be smart. He was not so, and it's 6 the reason that he didn't get that time.
 7 Q. Is the leverage important so that he can get political 8 influence or is it important so that he can do without
 9 it?
 10 A. I understand that we are discussing now only about mass
 11 media, as you mentioned. And as far as media is 12 concerned, I already give my answer: definitely, it is 13 absolutely important leverage for political reasons.
 14 Q. I'm not talking about mass media; I'm talking about 15 political influence, influence with the government.
 16 A. Before, as I understand, you put me a question about how 17 my -- how important media in political life at that time
 18 in Russia and I give you answer. What is your question
 19 now?
 20 Q. The question I'm asking you now is a different one. Was 21 it possible for a businessman to build up a large 22 business in Russia in the mid-1990s without political 23 influence or the help of somebody else who had political 24 influence?
 25 A. Maybe you know that I start my business with Logovaz

1 just from zero, yes? And without any political
 2 influence I build it the most, the biggest car dealer
 3 company in that -- even I start when Soviet Union did 4 not collapse -- even in Soviet Union. It means that at 5 that time I didn't have any political leverages and any 6 political support and nevertheless it's happened.
 7 Q. You didn't think, did you, that Mr Abramovich would be 8 able to carry out his project for combining the two 9 Siberian oil businesses without political influence, did
 10 you?
 11 A. I think better to put this question to Abramovich. You
 12 will have a chance to hear, to understand.
 13 Q. I'm asking you about your opinion and only you can tell
 14 me that, Mr Berezovsky.
 15 A. He looks like not a person of first level, of 16 first-level businessman at that time. It means that 17 only the most decisive and the most prepared for new 18 reform were able to realise the really big-scale
 19 business, and unfortunately in Russia at that time there 20 were very few of them.
 21 Q. Could somebody please give you bundle H(A)68. I'm going 22 to refer to {H(A)68/136}. Do you have page 136 of that 23 bundle?
 24 A. Sorry?
 25 Q. You should be looking --

1 A. Just a second, I'm sorry. Yes, I have already, I'm 2 sorry. Thank you.
 3 Q. This is --
 4 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Does the witness have it on the screen
 5 as well?
 6 THE WITNESS: Yes, yes. Yes, fine. Thank you very much.
 7 I forgot that there are two --
 8 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: It's up to you whether you wish to 9 look at it in hard copy or on the screen.
 10 THE WITNESS: No, thank you very much.
 11 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: But it will be on the screen as well.
 12 MR SUMPTION: If I may say this: one of the advantages for 13 the witness of looking at the actual document is that if 14 he thinks that he ought to look at some other page, he 15 can do it without being dependent on me.
 16 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.
 17 MR SUMPTION: Mr Berezovsky, this is an article from 18 The Economist, I think printed in their "Industry 19 Briefing e-newsletter". It appeared in 2003. I want to 20 refer you to the second page in the bundle. About 21 two-thirds of the way down the page --
 22 A. So sorry. It starts from 4?
 23 Q. If you look at page 137 of the bundle, which is the 24 second page of the article {H(A)68/137}.
 25 A. Yes, I've got it.

1 Q. There's a paragraph that begins:
 2 "For foreigners who do business in Russia..."
 3 A. Yes, yes. It's exactly what I told, yes.
 4 Q. "... Mr Khodorkovsky's arrest is unnerving but it may 5 not necessarily change their views; most already know 6 that their best protection is still not the law but 7 their krysha, or 'roof' -- a well-connected power
 8 broker. Mr Putin, the best-connected power broker of 9 them all, said last week that he would not enter into 10 any bargains to limit the Yukos investigation..."
 11 And so on. I'm not asking you about Yukos or 12 Mr Khodorkovsky; I'm asking you whether you agree with 13 the statement that the best protection for businessmen
 14 in Russia is not the law but krysha, a well-connected 15 power broker. Do you agree with that statement?
 16 A. Just a second. First of all, let me just think what 17 time it's in break; what means journalist which wrote
 18 this article?
 19 Q. This is an article that appeared in 2003 --
 20 A. Yes.
 21 Q. -- but it's referring to the conditions in the 1990s, 22 when Yukos was built up. I'm simply asking for your 23 view about whether as a general statement that 24 observation is true or not in your opinion.
 25 A. Connected to that time? Connected to time of '90s?

1 Q. Yes.
 2 A. I disagree with that.
 3 Q. You disagree with that. Very well.
 4 A. Because -- I am sorry -- I disagree with that, it
 5 means -- it doesn't mean that there were not exceptions
 6 or that -- but in general, again, I give you absolutely
 7 correct my understanding of the level of corruption.
 8 Today, if to take for ten; and that time, between three 9 and four.
 10 Q. I understand. This is in general true but there are 11 exceptions?
 12 A. Exceptions, it means that three -- between three/four,
 13 from ten --
 14 Q. Okay.
 15 A. -- of today.
 16 Q. Have you got your witness statement in front of you,
 17 Mr Berezovsky? For my next few questions you may find 18 it useful to have it.
 19 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: The fourth witness statement?
 20 MR SUMPTION: Your fourth witness statement in bundle D2,
 21 tab 17 {D2/17/193}.
 22 A. I appreciate you that you give me an opportunity to look 23 my witness statement because it's much more simple than 24 training memory.
 25 Q. Now --

1 A. Just a second. Yes.
 2 Q. As I understand it, you became close to President
 3 Yeltsin and his immediate circle in the course of 1994.
 4 Is that right?
 5 A. Yes, it was the end of 1993/the beginning of 1994. It's 6 correct.
 7 Q. Now, you say in paragraph 42 of your witness statement
 8 that you were invited to join the Presidential Tennis
 9 Club.
 10 A. 40...?
 11 Q. 42. You probably remember this without looking at your 12 statement, Mr Berezovsky. Do you remember that?
 13 A. Yes, I remember that. But you propose me to use my 14 witness statement: it's the reason why I try to be the 15 most correct in understanding what you're asking.
 16 Q. Now, is it also true that the Presidential Tennis Club
 17 was "an exclusive enclave for President Yeltsin's 18 closest associates", which I think is what you say in 19 paragraph 42?
 20 A. I accept everything except of word "enclave". It means 21 that it was somewhere where nobody could go, nobody 22 could be invited and so. It was not enclave; it was 23 a presidential club. The main purpose was tennis
 24 because, as you know well, that our President Yeltsin,
 25 his preference in sport was tennis and I was the first

1 businessman who was invited to this club. Before me,
 2 only politicians present in this club.
 3 Q. Right. Well, "enclave" is your word but never mind
 4 that.
 5 Can we take it, therefore, if this was a club for 6 President Yeltsin's closest associates, that you were 7 one of Yeltsin's closest associates in 1994?
 8 A. Sorry, could you -- just a second. I just read your 9 question. (Pause)
 10 But sorry, nevertheless, could you help me to 11 find --
 12 Q. If you look at paragraph --
 13 A. Just a second.
 14 Q. The sixth line down into the paragraph, what you say is 15 that this club was "for President Yeltsin's closest 16 associates". I suggested to you that, since you had 17 joined it, you must have been one of President Yeltsin's
 18 closest associates.
 19 A. Just a second. You said that I used the word "enclave", 20 not me -- not you. I haven't seen here this word here.
 21 Q. Sixth line down, first word in the line.
 22 A. Sorry?
 23 Q. Sixth line into paragraph 42, first word of the version,
 24 or the only version, is "enclave".
 25 A. Yes, I accept that. You're correct.

1 Q. Now, I don't want to get bogged down in words but you
 2 say that this was a club "for President Yeltsin's
 3 closest associates", so can we take it that you were one
 4 of those closest associates?
 5 A. It's absolutely correct, it's close associates, but it
 6 was club open according of invitation of president. It
 7 means the people has -- had invitation(?) there. I want
 8 just to stress that.
 9 Q. Did that give you access to President Yeltsin himself?
 10 A. Yes, definitely.
 11 Q. Now, in the following paragraph you say that you
 12 developed a good relationship with President Yeltsin's
 13 daughter, Tatyana Dyachenko. Is that true?
 14 A. It is true.
 15 Q. And also, I think, with her close associate and later
 16 husband, Mr Valentin Yumashev?
 17 A. It's true but in opposite order: first I had good 18 relations with Mr Yumashev and only after that with 19 Mrs Dyachenko.
 20 Q. Okay. Those were the two people, were they not, who had 21 the closest relationship with Boris Yeltsin and the 22 greatest influence over him? Would you agree?
 23 A. They have -- not Tatyana first of all. Definitely he 24 had very strong influence to President Yeltsin as far as 25 Yumashev is concerned, he also had influence to

1 President Yeltsin. But they were not just those two;
 2 there were more people who influence strong to 3 President Yeltsin.
 4 Q. Well, I understand that others had influence over him.
 5 But your view at the time, surely, was that Mr Yumashev
 6 and Ms Dyachenko were the people with the greatest 7 influence over President Yeltsin, wasn't it?
 8 A. Yes, it came later, because I just want to remind you
 9 the story how I was introduced to Mr Yumashev and it
 10 maybe give more understanding what happened.
 11 I was introduced to Mr Yumashev at 1993 by Mr Aven.
 12 I don't know, you know, Mr Aven, he's the chairman of 13 Alfa Bank. I don't know how he knew him before me; the 14 point is that he invited me several times to meet
 15 Mr Yumashev and I didn't have time to meet you -- to 16 meet him, knowing well who he is. But Mr Aven said that 17 the point why he want to meet me, I mean Mr Yumashev, to 18 organise -- to organise -- how to say? -- to organise 19 fund to print book of President Yeltsin. And 20 understanding that it's really important for president, 21 I decided to meet Yumashev. And it's very important to 22 understand the way how I was introduced to Mr Yumashev.
 23 Q. Mr Berezovsky, I don't want to interrupt you but I'm not 24 asking you about your relations with Mr Yumashev at the 25 moment. You've already said something about that.

1 I simply want to know your assessment of the influence
 2 of these two people in 1995.
 3 What I'm suggesting to you is that Ms Dyachenko and 4 Mr Yumashev were the people who had the greatest
 5 influence over President Yeltsin in 1995. Do you
 6 disagree with that?
 7 A. No, I agree with that.
 8 Q. You agree?
 9 A. Yes.
 10 Q. Thank you.
 11 Now, can we take it therefore that in addition to 12 your having direct access to President Yeltsin yourself,
 13 you enjoyed indirect influence over him through 14 Ms Dyachenko and Mr Yumashev?
 15 A. I don't understand now what does mean "direct" and 16 "indirect". I really -- I really met Yeltsin in tennis
 17 club occasionally. I don't understand how -- what does 18 mean "influence to president" just because I met him, is 19 the first point.
 20 The second point: I didn't use -- I didn't use my 21 connection with Yumashev and Dyachenko at the first 22 stage our relations, try to convince president to do
 23 something. Later on definitely, when I decide to move 24 myself to politics, definitely I used Mr Yumashev and 25 Mrs Dyachenko as a power who could help me to explain my

1 target.
 2 Q. To the president?
 3 A. Correct.
 4 Q. And we're talking there about 1995; you've moved into 5 politics by then, haven't you?
 6 A. I moved to politics a little bit earlier. I moved to 7 politics in '94. I think the cross-point was -- the 8 cross-line was when it was in '94 attempt to kill me and 9 I spent ten days in Switzerland doing nothing, only 10 thinking what is happening, and it was the time when 11 I decide that if I personally, personally me, will not 12 participate in politics, it could be very complicated to 13 build any business at all in Russia.
 14 Q. Mr Berezovsky, I'm talking about 1995 and I think the 15 answer that you gave, namely that you regarded 16 Mr Yumashev and Ms Dyachenko as a good route to get your 17 views before the president, was true in 1995, wasn't it?
 18 A. No, again I was absolutely correct: I started in '94 and 19 it's the reason why I want to stress that. As far as -- 20 Q. Mr Berezovsky, I'm not interested when it started. I'm 21 just asking you: in 1995 these two people, Mr Yumashev
 22 and Ms Dyachenko, were found by you to be a useful means 23 of influencing President Yeltsin, were they not?
 24 A. Dyachenko, almost not at all. Yumashev, yes.
 25 Q. Now, ORT, we know, was a company created in 1994 to take

1 over the assets of Ostankino, the Russian State
 2 broadcasting organisation. I want to ask you some 3 questions about that.
 4 At paragraphs 45 and 46 of your witness statement
 5 you tell us that the Ostankino was partially privatised,
 6 I think by a transfer of its assets to ORT, and that you
 7 and a number of other Russian businessmen acquired the 8 whole of the 49 per cent of its shares that were sold
 9 off by the state. That's correct, isn't it?
 10 A. It's correct.
 11 Q. Now, was it you who put together the consortium of 12 Russian businessmen that bought the 49 per cent stake in 13 ORT?
 14 A. It's me.
 15 Q. The partial privatisation of the broadcasting business
 16 was the result of a successful lobbying campaign by you,
 17 was it not?
 18 A. Definitely.
 19 Q. Definitely?
 20 A. Da.
 21 Q. Now, in your witness statement at paragraph 45
 22 {D2/17/206} you tell us that you met President Yeltsin
 23 personally in order to discuss this matter?
 24 A. Just a second. 45?
 25 Q. Paragraph 45:

1 "I was able to persuade Mr Yumashev and General
 2 Korzhakov, and -- through them -- President Yeltsin with 3 whom I met personally to discuss this matter, that the 4 state ought to convert Ostankino into a joint stock
 5 company, retaining 51% of the shares..."
 6 That's correct, isn't it?
 7 A. Just a second, could you... (Pause)
 8 It's correct.
 9 Q. Now, that was an example, wasn't it, of your being able,
 10 through your knowledge of Mr Yumashev and in this
 11 instance General Korzhakov as well, to get to President
 12 Yeltsin personally and persuade him that it was a good 13 idea partially to privatise Ostankino? That's an 14 example of the use of those individuals to influence the 15 president, isn't it?
 16 A. Is it correct? It is correct.
 17 Q. Now, was it always understood between you and the 18 president that it would be you and your associates
 19 owning the 49 per cent who were actually going to manage
 20 and run ORT? Was that the understanding that you
 21 reached with the president and his circle?
 22 A. Generally, yes, the president understood that, because 23 I present him the reason and it is important. Without 24 the context of the reason it is useless to discuss what 25 happened, yes.

1 The context was very simple. First of all, I want
 2 that you understand clear: it was not a business because 3 ORT central channel had just losses and the debt around
 4 more than $200 million. As I told you, and you did not
 5 like to -- that I return back to '94, the privatisation
 6 of this 49 per cent happened not in '95, it's happened
 7 in '94. It's the reason why I all the time I, I'm sorry
 8 to say, push you to return a little bit back that time
 9 to create a picture not just a piece of the picture
 10 which could be wrong.

11 The purpose was very simple. As I told you, 12 I really start to think after this event that I was 13 almost killed that we should help president to fight
 14 against of Communists and I was disappointed that many 15 people were very disappointed by reform with Yeltsin 16 start because many people become poor, as happened in 17 the revolution, as you know well. And it's the reason 18 why I understood that it's not a business, it seems 19 a lot of money to spend, but it helps us to fight
 20 against of Communists on election '96.

21 Q. You thought that ORT was good business as well as 22 a source of political influence, didn't you?

23 A. No. That time not. Again, I want to stress that up to 24 2000, as a business itself, it was not good at all.
 25 Only at 2000 ORT start to be profitable. But that time,

1 my best -- again, it's very important that you
 2 understand.

3 I never can make millions, or ten millions, I can
 4 make just billions, and I explain you why: because all
 5 the time I thought about how to capitalise the country,
 6 not the company, yes? Impossible to capitalise
 7 oilfields or Sibneft without clear understanding that 8 political situation is stable. And my point was that 9 maybe I was one of the first who recognised that if you 10 have political stability, the value of the company will 11 increase enormously. And that is the reason why 12 I convinced president, through my connections to him, to 13 take a decision to privatise ORT. It's correct.

14 Q. Mr Berezovsky, for you, in 1994 ORT was not only a first 15 step into the mass media, it was also good business; do
 16 you agree with that statement?

17 A. I don't remember that I own any mass media in '94.

18 Q. Mr Berezovsky, please focus on my question. Is it true
 19 to say that for you, in 1994 ORT was not only a first 20 step into mass media, it was also good business?

21 A. No, definitely ORT was bad business.

22 Q. I see. Well, I'm reading from your witness statement;
 23 you realise that, don't you?

24 A. Yes.

25 Q. Look at paragraph 47:

1 "For me, ORT was not only a first step into mass
 2 media, it was also good business."
 3 Are you saying that statement is wrong?

4 A. This statement is correct.

5 Q. Okay, thank you.

6 Now, would it be fair to say then that, according to 7 your own evidence, you used your influence over
 8 President Yeltsin and his closest advisers to make 9 arrangements that would enable you and your associates
 10 to do some good business?

11 A. Again not. As I told you, and when I said it was a good 12 business, I wrote this witness statement today or 13 several months -- in May and it means that definitely 14 I believe that it is good business, yes, and it become 15 good business. But again, I want to stress, to stress
 16 that it was not business at all.

17 Q. In 1995 you were then responsible -- this is a year
 18 later than the discussions with the president about 19 ORT -- for another successful lobbying exercise
 20 concerning the creation and partial privatisation of 21 Sibneft, weren't you?

22 A. It is correct.

23 Q. Now, I would just like to make sure that I understand
 24 clearly your evidence about this. After taking over --

25 A. Sorry, the paragraph? Paragraph?

1 Q. I'll give you a paragraph number in a moment. As
 2 I understand it -- well, paragraph 48 may help you --

3 A. Thank you.

4 Q. -- after taking over effective control over ORT, as 5 I understand it, you found that you needed $200 million
 6 a year in funding to meet its costs. Is that correct?

7 A. It's correct.

8 Q. And you were therefore looking for another funding
 9 stream in addition to Logovaz, your principal existing 10 business, in order to fund ORT; is that correct?

11 A. It is correct.

12 Q. You thought that a good place to find that extra funding
 13 stream would be a large oil company, didn't you?

14 A. No. The first step, I funding ORT my own, and I spent 15 a lot of money which I made in Logovaz and in other 16 businesses connected to Logovaz. And the point is that 17 it takes not one year to build a company like ORT. It 18 means that -- and market at the time did not develop 19 well, and you know well that the main source for mass 20 media is advertising and it depends on the level of the 21 market.

22 It means that I recognise that in time -- what does 23 mean "in time"? Because, as I told you before, I took 24 ORT only that time for political reason, understanding 25 that in future it will become profitable company all

1 over the world; but that time it was not so. And, as 2 I told you at the beginning, that I took the ORT under 3 control only because of the reason -- of the reason of 4 election campaign '96 and it was exactly the time what 5 we need for preparation. And to build a company in 6 time, we need additional resources for funding and I was 7 looking for that.
 8 When I met Mr Abramovich in '94, at the end of 9 '94/beginning of '95, at that time already I was looking 10 for buying oil business and I travel even to the -- to 11 Siberia. I just want to stress that I don't want to 12 produce impression that I was not interested in business
 13 at all; I was interested in business and a lot and I --
 14 but the target that time to make money, the basic target 15 for me was to create political stability using my 16 opportunity in mass media.
 17 Q. You were interested in acquiring a big oil company
 18 because of your acquisition of ORT and because a big oil
 19 company might provide you with the means of funding ORT;
 20 do you agree?
 21 A. Yes, it's true. But on the other hand I use this 22 opportunity as a reason to go to the next step of 23 business. And it means that the idea to privatise oil
 24 company was not just my idea, many people that time -- 25 not many, but there are people who were looking to

1 privatise oil company, and I was happy to join them and
 2 at the same time to find the funding for ORT.
 3 Q. When you met Mr Abramovich at the end of 1994 and he, as 4 you describe in your witness statement, proposed to you
 5 a plan for creating a vertically integrated oil company
 6 in Siberia, the main reason why you were interested in 7 that proposal, I suggest, was so that it would provide 8 a source of funding for ORT.
 9 A. The main reason, it's correct.
 10 Q. Now --
 11 A. But not only this reason.
 12 Q. In order to achieve Mr Abramovich's project, you had to 13 persuade President Yeltsin and his government to abandon 14 their current plans to integrate the two Siberian
 15 businesses, the Omsk refinery and Noyabrskneftegas -- 16 which I'm probably pronouncing badly -- you had to 17 persuade the government, didn't you, to abandon their 18 current plans to integrate those two businesses into the 19 State oil holding company Rosneft?
 20 A. First of all, it's turned out that my impression, former 21 impression, that it was plan of Abramovich was 22 completely -- now is completely wrong. As I know from 23 the French disclosure, I mean documents in France, it's 24 very important to understand that it's till now that 25 Abramovich was just middleman, he was not --

1 Q. Mr Berezovsky --
 2 A. Just a second.
 3 Q. -- you're answering a completely different question. We 4 will come to the question of who had what interest.
 5 A. No, no, no, no. No, you mentioned -- I'm sorry -- you
 6 mentioned --
 7 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just a second.
 8 THE WITNESS: Sorry.
 9 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Berezovsky, could you just look at 10 the question that Mr Sumption asked you. Read it to 11 yourself, if you can stop the computer --
 12 THE WITNESS: Just a second.
 13 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: -- and scroll up. Just try and focus
 14 your answer on the question that's been asked.
 15 THE WITNESS: Yes, my Lady, I focus on that and it's written 16 there, at least written.
 17 May I put down a little bit the screen?
 18 MR SUMPTION: I can try it another way.
 19 A. Just a second, I'm sorry.
 20 Q. Let me ask the question again. Forget the last
 21 question.
 22 Look at paragraph 84 of your witness statement,
 23 please {D2/17/214}.
 24 A. 84?
 25 Q. Yes. In that paragraph you say:

1 "At this time..."
 2 Talking about 1995.
 3 "... these assets..."
 4 That's the refinery and oil producing company in 5 Siberia.
 6 "... had been earmarked by the government for 7 consolidation within the state-owned Rosneft."
 8 A. Yes.
 9 Q. "It was clear that, if this plan were to have any hope 10 of getting off the ground, I would need to persuade the 11 government and the President to remove the entities from 12 Rosneft and place them into the government's 13 privatisation plans."
 14 A. Yes.
 15 Q. Now, that's true, isn't it?
 16 A. It's true.
 17 Q. Right. Now, when the loans for shares scheme came 18 along, you also had to persuade the government, didn't 19 you, to include it into that scheme?
 20 A. It's true.
 21 Q. And you discussed these matters, did you not, with 22 President Yeltsin personally, among other people?
 23 A. Not at all. I discussed with President Yeltsin
 24 personally just the point to obtain opportunity to fund
 25 ORT without any mentioning to president about how to do

1 that.
 2 Q. I see.
 3 A. Good.
 4 Q. Well, we'll come back to that. Let's just establish one
 5 or two other matters first.
 6 When the idea of setting up a company, including the 7 two Siberian businesses, and detaching them from Rosneft
 8 was first proposed to the prime minister, who was then
 9 Mr Chernomyrdin --
 10 A. Correct.
 11 Q. -- he rejected the idea out of hand, didn't he?
 12 A. Yes, as a first step, he rejected the idea, it's true.
 13 Q. So you had to go over the prime minister's head to the 14 president himself, didn't you?
 15 A. I had several discussions with prime minister and 16 definitely the reason to -- we are not able to -- 17 Chernomyrdin never took a decision, as I remember,
 18 without his personal clear understanding that it could 19 be effective. It means that I had several discussions 20 with president -- with Chernomyrdin because of -- 21 because we have very good relations and he -- and except 22 of that, I had discussion with president. I was -- not 23 with president. I had discussion with General
 24 Khorzhakov, who was the head of protection of president, 25 was also influential person, and Yeltsin accept idea to

1 privatise -- to build and privatise the new company.
 2 Q. Right. So the position was Chernomyrdin said no, so you
 3 went over his head to the president's advisers and the 4 decision was then yes?
 5 A. Again, it's not so. I already explain you that 6 definitely I try to bring president on my side but,
 7 again, without Chernomyrdin understanding that it's 8 effective, was not possible to convince prime minister
 9 to do this step. And as done later, it's exactly the 10 result: that Sibneft become very effective company as 11 far as Rosneft is concerned.
 12 Q. Right. Now, you met President Yeltsin and Mr Yumashev
 13 together in the spring of 1995 to discuss these matters,
 14 didn't you?
 15 A. Not this matter. As I told you already, I discussed 16 with president how -- that ORT need fund and we 17 discussed that I should find the way -- I should find 18 the way how to get the fund for ORT. I just want to 19 stress again: I did not discuss with president 20 creation -- me personally to president -- creation of 21 Sibneft.
 22 Q. What you did agree with President Yeltsin, surely, was 23 that you would set about creating a business venture
 24 that would provide funding for ORT?
 25 A. Yes, exactly. I discussed that I should find the way

1 how to create business to funding ORT, it's correct.
 2 Q. Yes. You discussed with the president, didn't you, the 3 fact that ORT was loss-making and that funds would have 4 to be found to keep its influence high?
 5 A. It's absolutely correct.
 6 Q. Yes. Those funds were going to be found by creating 7 a new business venture; I think you agree to that?
 8 A. Not at all. I said that we will -- I'll find -- I will 9 try to find opportunity to -- for business and in my 10 mind I kept that -- I did not have the time to -- enough
 11 to invest to ORT to keep it and definitely I was looking 12 for new opportunity, having in my mind the oil business.
 13 Q. The result of this was that you and President Yeltsin
 14 agreed that that would be the right course?
 15 A. The right course? President accept my proposal to find
 16 the business opportunity, the new business opportunity
 17 for funding ORT, it's correct.
 18 Q. Now, as I understand it, having discussed matters in 19 general terms with the president, you then discussed the 20 details of your project with his closest advisers,
 21 including General Khorzhakov. Is that right?
 22 A. Yes, it's correct.
 23 Q. Now, you understood, didn't you, that General Khorzhakov
 24 would in turn discuss the details with President
 25 Yeltsin; that's why you were talking to General

1 Khorzhakov, is it not?
 2 A. You see, I really haven't present at his discussion with 3 president and I don't know the terms that they use;
 4 I know just the result.
 5 Q. Well, what you asked General Khorzhakov to do was to get 6 President Yeltsin's approval for the integration of the 7 two Siberian businesses into a single company which 8 could then be removed from Rosneft and partially 9 privatised; you asked him to get President Yeltsin's
 10 approval for that, didn't you?
 11 A. Definitely not. I explained Khorzhakov the idea of the 12 company but I did not convince him the way how he 13 present this idea to president. It means --
 14 Q. No, I'm not suggesting that. I'm not suggesting you 15 tried to tell him how to get his consent. What you
 16 asked General Khorzhakov to do was to obtain President
 17 Yeltsin's approval for the integration of the two 18 Siberian businesses into a new company separate from 19 Rosneft; you asked him to get the president's approval
 20 to that, did you not?
 21 A. It is correct.
 22 Q. Thank you. And you say that you knew what the result of 23 that was. The result of that was that President Yeltsin
 24 did approve; is that right?
 25 A. President Yeltsin did approve that.

1 Q. Yes.
 2 Now, at the same time as your contact with General
 3 Khorzhakov on this matter you also made use, didn't you,
 4 of your relationship with Ms Dyachenko and Mr Yumashev
 5 in order to encourage the president to agree?
 6 A. Definitely I did not discuss that -- just a second.
 7 I don't remember, I don't remember that I discussed that 8 with Ms Dyachenko, and I discussed that with Mr Yumashev
 9 definitely.
 10 Q. Well, you seem to have remembered when you wrote your 11 witness statement. What you say at paragraph 119 is:
 12 "As noted above" --
 13 A. Just a second.
 14 Q. Paragraph 119 {D2/17/222}.
 15 A. Yes.
 16 Q. "As noted above, I had at this time a close relationship
 17 with Ms Dyachenko and Mr Yumashev, who were then the 18 people with the greatest influence over President
 19 Yeltsin. Both shared my objective of establishing 20 a democratic state in Russia. I have no doubt that this 21 relationship was instrumental in gaining President
 22 Yeltsin's approval for the Sibneft venture."
 23 That's correct, isn't it?
 24 A. Yes, correct.
 25 Q. "I spoke to Ms Dyachenko and explained why I thought

1 a further vertically-integrated oil company should be
 2 created."
 3 A. Yes, exactly.
 4 Q. So, contrary to your answer a moment ago, you did
 5 discuss this with her, didn't you?
 6 A. Yes, it's the reason I said I don't remember that 7 I discussed. I accept that.
 8 Q. I see.
 9 I would like you to turn, if you would, to 10 paragraph 111 of your witness statement {D2/17/220}.
 11 A. Yes.
 12 Q. What you tell us here is that:
 13 "The main way [you were] able to persuade President
 14 Yeltsin and the Government to approve the creation of 15 Sibneft was by emphasising the importance of ORT for the 16 re-election of President Yeltsin in the forthcoming
 17 presidential elections, and the need to secure a new 18 business venture which could provide the funding to 19 support ORT."
 20 That's correct, isn't it?
 21 A. It is correct.
 22 Q. So your argument was: in order to fund ORT and support
 23 the president's re-election campaign, I need to have 24 these two Siberian businesses separated from Rosneft and 25 partially privatised so that I can use them as a source

1 of funds for financing ORT's operations. That was the 2 argument, wasn't it?
 3 A. It was the argument.
 4 Q. And it was the argument that succeeded, wasn't it?
 5 A. It was succeeded.
 6 Q. Now, the deal therefore, in summary, that you made with 7 Boris Yeltsin was this, wasn't it: "You, Mr President,
 8 get the support of my television network and I get put 9 in a position where I can extract large sums of money
 10 from these two Siberian businesses"? That's the deal, 11 isn't it?
 12 A. It's correct.
 13 Q. And that would also serve to increase yet further your 14 political influence, wouldn't it?
 15 A. I don't think so. That time I care not about my 16 political influence, as you said; I care just how to win
 17 election in '96.
 18 Q. And it would serve to make you richer in the longer
 19 term, wouldn't it?
 20 A. As I told you before, I didn't think just in terms of 21 only to support -- to create a proper TV company but it
 22 was the target number one. On the other hand, 23 definitely I thought that it's incredible business as 24 well.
 25 Q. Now --

1 A. And I don't think that president, when he, I'm sure,
 2 discussed that with prime minister, before he took
 3 a final decision, I have a lot of doubt the president
 4 thought that it's just a business to fund ORT.
 5 Definitely president understood well that it's big-scale
 6 business.
 7 Q. At the outset of my cross-examination this morning
 8 I asked you to imagine a businessman approaching an 9 elected official who says, "I'm going to support your 10 election campaign so please exercise your official 11 powers in a way that favours my business interests and 12 those of my associates". That's exactly what you did in 13 relation to Sibneft in 1995, is it not?
 14 A. As I told you, my target was to find the way how to make 15 ORT effective and it was the way which you mentioned now
 16 and I confirm that.
 17 Q. Would it be fair to describe that as a corrupt bargain?
 18 A. Definitely not.
 19 Q. Now, you tell us that you also met other senior
 20 ministers and officials -- I'm looking at paragraph 120
 21 of your witness statement {D2/17/222} -- and those 22 officials included Mr Kokh.
 23 A. Yes, correct.
 24 Q. He was the deputy head of the State Property Committee, 25 wasn't he?

1 A. Absolutely correct.
 2 Q. And you discussed the creation of Sibneft with him?
 3 A. I didn't discuss creation of Sibneft with him;
 4 I discussed with him privatisation of Sibneft.
 5 Q. Yes, fair enough. What you discussed was the way in 6 which the shares of Sibneft, once it had been created,
 7 would be handled?
 8 A. Not at all. I discussed with him how to -- how -- I try 9 to explain him -- not explain him -- I tried to -- to 10 explain him, yes -- to explain him that he need to 11 deliver president decree to privatise Sibneft.
 12 Q. Yes.
 13 A. I'm sorry. Sibneft already was created without any 14 co-participation, I would like to mention, and the 15 president, I don't remember well when president issued
 16 decree to privatise Sibneft and Kokh all the time
 17 postponed privatisation itself. I know the reason why
 18 it happened, so -- and if you are interested I can 19 present it to you.
 20 But the target was not to discuss the condition of 21 privatisation and something; the target was just to push 22 him to fulfil the decree of president. As you know, 23 Sibneft was the last one to privatise. It was 24 28 December, a decree of 28 December '95. And as you 25 will remember, decree of president of privatisation was 45

1 limited in time till 1 January '96. It was only reason
 2 of my meeting with Mr Kokh.
 3 Q. Mr Kokh was the official responsible, was he not, for 4 preparing the decree governing the auction in 5 December 1995 of the right to manage the State's 6 51 per cent holding in Sibneft in return for a loan?
 7 There was a decree that provided for that, wasn't there?
 8 A. Again, it's absolutely correct. But again, I don't -- 9 definitely I can -- we have this decree; I don't
 10 remember details of this decree. But again, my meeting
 11 with Kokh had just one target. Unfortunately you push 12 me to explain why it's happened, so -- and I explain
 13 you: because my understanding was at that time Kokh was 14 very supportive for Onexim Group and later it's find 15 confirmation when Mr Chubais, when he was unemployment, 16 I'm sorry, he move to this -- he planned to move to this 17 group and I knew about strong connection of Mr Kokh with 18 that group and his interest to support this group and 19 that is the reason why I tried to push him to issue
 20 decree in time.
 21 Q. Mr Berezovsky, in the autumn of 1995 did you discuss 22 with groups of civil servants the process --
 23 A. Sorry, sorry?
 24 Q. Did you discuss with groups of civil servants in the 25 autumn of 1995 the terms on which the auction, the loans

46

1 for shares auction of December 1995, would be conducted?
 2 A. I never discussed that.
 3 Q. Would you look at paragraph 126 of your witness
 4 statement {D2/17/223}, Mr Berezovsky.
 5 A. Yes.
 6 Q. What you say here is that:
 7 "During this period -- the early autumn of 1995 --
 8 meetings also took place between representatives of the 9 civil servant groups and delegations of the various 10 parties interested in the forthcoming auction to discuss 11 the terms of the auction... I led the high-level
 12 discussions on behalf of my group."
 13 Contrary to what you just said, you did have those 14 discussions with civil servants, didn't you?
 15 A. Yes. Good. In context it's correct. I explain you 16 what I mean. I mean that I discuss with -- I discuss 17 about their parts which will be include in -- just 18 a second.
 19 Yes, I discuss -- sorry, it's my fault completely.
 20 I discuss with people from their government who were 21 responsible for privatisation, for forming of Sibneft,
 22 which part of Rosneft will be included in Sibneft.
 23 Q. You also discussed with them the terms of the auction
 24 under the loans for shares scheme, didn't you?
 25 A. I don't remember that I discuss anything concerning

47

1 privatisation of Sibneft --
 2 Q. The terms of the auction.
 3 A. The terms of the auction. The auction I --
 4 Q. Did you discuss that?
 5 A. I don't remember that.
 6 Q. Well, you did remember when you drafted paragraph 126 of 7 your witness statement.
 8 A. Yes.
 9 Q. You said that the purpose of these discussions was:
 10 "... to discuss the terms of the auction [and] the 11 documentation which would have to be entered into..."
 12 A. Just a second. Just a second. (Pause)
 13 Yes, correct.
 14 Q. Right. Now, was one of those officials Mr Kokh?
 15 A. I did not meet Mr Kokh in -- to discuss the terms of 16 privatisation. As I told you before, I met Mr Kokh, as 17 far as Sibneft privatisation is concerned, just one time
 18 in December, in the end of December, just to discuss 19 with him when they issued their decree before the end of 20 the year.
 21 Q. The decree which provided for the auction and included
 22 Sibneft in the auction and the loans for shares scheme
 23 was made on 27 November, wasn't it? You can take that,
 24 I think, from me.
 25 A. Yes. Yes, correct.

48

1 Q. You actually participated with Mr Kokh in the drafting
 2 of that decree before 27 November?
 3 A. Completely wrong.
 4 Q. Would you look at paragraph 132 of your statement
 5 {D2/17/224}.
 6 A. 132?
 7 Q. Yes.
 8 A. Yes.
 9 Q. "I discussed the drafting of this November Decree with 10 Mr Kokh, then Deputy Head of the State Property
 11 Committee. I met him at his office late one night.
 12 Mr Kokh was a workaholic and I recall working on the 13 draft decree with him late into the night."
 14 A. It's exactly the point what I told you: that I -- decree
 15 which I tried to push him -- exactly, you're correct,
 16 absolutely. This meeting happened and it's the meeting
 17 which I described to you. I tried to push him to put 18 privatisation of Sibneft in time and it means that -- 19 and drafting at this case means they put the date of 20 28 December, not later.
 21 Q. Mr Berezovsky, I suggested to you a moment ago that you
 22 had participated in the drafting of this decree. You 23 said that was completely wrong. Then when it was 24 pointed out that that's what you have written in your 25 witness statement, you say it's right.

1 Now, what I suggest to you, Mr Berezovsky, is that
 2 you are giving the evidence which you think will suit
 3 your case without reference to what you can actually
 4 remember at all.
 5 A. I disagree with that and I explain you that the drafting 6 means absolutely correct what I said before: that I just 7 tried to push Mr Kokh to put in time the issue of 8 president decree.
 9 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Sumption, I'm going to take a break
 10 for the shorthand writer.
 11 MR SUMPTION: Yes, I was going to suggest that this would be 12 a good time to do that.
 13 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Would that be a good time?
 14 MR SUMPTION: Yes, absolutely.
 15 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well. Ten minutes.
 16 Mr Berezovsky, I'm sure you have been told by your 17 counsel --
 18 THE WITNESS: Yes, I have.
 19 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: -- but during the course of you giving 20 your evidence -- that's both cross-examination and 21 re-examination -- you mustn't talk to anybody, and 22 I mean anybody: press, family, whatever, about your 23 evidence or indeed about the case. Do you understand
 24 that?
 25 THE WITNESS: I understand that.

1 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you.
 2 THE WITNESS: Thank you.
 3 (11.37 am)
 4 (A short break)
 5 (11.52 am)
 6 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Sumption, Mr Rabinowitz, I have to 7 rise at 4.00 today. For that reason, I'm going to sit
 8 again at 1.45; I'm going to have only a 45-minute lunch
 9 break.
 10 Yes, Mr Sumption.
 11 MADAM INTERPRETER (affirmed)
 12 MR SUMPTION: Mr Berezovsky, I'd like to ask you questions
 13 about a specific aspect of the loans for shares auction
 14 which happened in December 1995. I'm going to go back 15 and deal with this more fully at a later stage but 16 there's just one question I'd like to clear up with this 17 one.
 18 Before the auction there were a number of potential
 19 bidders, weren't there?
 20 A. Sorry, I don't see on the screen.
 21 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Can somebody assist him, please.
 22 A. Oh, yes, yes. No, no, fine.
 23 Yes, you're absolutely correct.
 24 MR SUMPTION: The potential bidders, apart from NFK, which 25 was the vehicle company that won, were Menatep,

1 Inkombank and Sameko, weren't they? Those were the 2 possible bidders?
 3 A. Just a second. It is correct.
 4 Q. Menatep was a bank associated with Mr Khodorkovsky and 5 Yukos, wasn't it?
 6 A. It is correct.
 7 Q. Did you agree with Mr Khodorkovsky in advance that his 8 bid would be made at a slightly lower level than NFK's?
 9 A. It is correct.
 10 Q. Now, Inkombank: did your staff point out that there was 11 a technical factor that made them ineligible so that 12 they were disqualified?
 13 A. They were disqualified because their documents which 14 they prepared were not proper prepared.
 15 Q. Yes. Was it your staff who pointed that out?
 16 A. Yes, it's correct.
 17 Q. Then Sameko; was Sameko persuaded to withdraw its bid at 18 the last moment in return for your group paying off part
 19 of its debts?
 20 A. It's correct.
 21 Q. And the people who persuaded them to withdraw included
 22 Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Abramovich, didn't they?
 23 A. Abramovich did not participate in that.
 24 Q. I see.
 25 A. And it's lie in his witness statement. But

1 Patarkatsishvili correctly, he travelled there and he
 2 persuade him.
 3 Q. So would it be fair to say that the auction was stitched
 4 up in advance?
 5 A. Not at all. Because, as you know, I had in my pocket
 6 two proposals which we agreed between Mr Abramovich,
 7 between Badri and between me for 100.3 million and 8 217 million and definitely my decision depends what kind 9 of decision will be taken by Sameko. And when they took 10 the decision to exchange their participation to covering 11 of their debt which they had in front of the bank, they 12 took a decision that our proposal for the debt is better
 13 than proposal of Inkombank because they did not suppose 14 to own really Sibneft; they were just company which 15 should play their games with parallel with Inkombank
 16 itself.
 17 Q. Well, Mr Berezovsky, the net result of this process was 18 that Inkombank was disqualified and Sameko withdrew, so 19 there were only two actual bidders; that's right, isn't
 20 it?
 21 A. It's correct.
 22 Q. And you had agreed with the other bidder, Menatep, that 23 they were going to bid just below you, as you've 24 confirmed?
 25 A. It's correct.

53

1 Q. So it was stitched up, wasn't it? It was impossible for 2 any other outcome to occur other than NFK winning?
 3 A. At the last stage it's absolutely correct.
 4 Q. Right.
 5 Now, in 1997, Mr Berezovsky, you sued the publishers
 6 of Forbes magazine in the English High Court for libel,
 7 didn't you?
 8 A. It's correct.
 9 Q. They had published an article about you which you said
 10 accused you of a number of things including corruption;
 11 is that right?
 12 A. It's correct.
 13 Q. Now, in their defence, Forbes pleaded justification, 14 didn't they? That's to say they said that what they had 15 said about you was true.
 16 A. You mean in defence of Forbes, yes? In defence --
 17 Q. Yes. Forbes --
 18 A. No, no, I'm sorry. I'm sorry. My English not so...
 19 Yes, it's true that they wrote that I corrupted or 20 I corrupt others, I don't remember well, and it's true
 21 that they wrote in the article, it's correct.
 22 Q. Yes.
 23 Now, I'm going to ask you to look at what was 24 alleged in the Forbes action and what you said about it.
 25 Could you please be given bundle H(A)28. The reference

54

1 for the Magnum system is {H(A)28/135}.
 2 THE WITNESS: But I'm sorry, could I put -- my Lady, could
 3 I put a question to Mr Sumption?
 4 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, I'm afraid you're there to answer
 5 the questions. So look at the document and if you still 6 have a question --
 7 THE WITNESS: Yes, sorry.
 8 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: -- or you don't understand the 9 question, then I'll consider the position. But look at 10 the document first and listen to the question.
 11 THE WITNESS: Right.
 12 MR SUMPTION: If you've got page 135 open -- 13 A. Just a second. Okay. What is that document?
 14 Q. This is Forbes magazine's defence to your libel action.
 15 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Some other document has come up.
 16 MR SUMPTION: H(A)28/135. No, it's the right document.
 17 A. Page? Sorry, page?
 18 Q. Page 135 just shows you what the document is.
 19 A. Yes, yes, yes. Good.
 20 Q. Okay?
 21 A. Yes.
 22 Q. Now, would you please turn to page 137 {H(A)28/137}.
 23 A. Yes.
 24 Q. And you will see that at paragraph 5 they say:
 25 "... if and insofar as the words complained of bore

55

1 all or any of the following meanings, they are true in 2 substance and in fact..."
 3 A. Just a second. Paragraph number 5, yes?
 4 Q. Yes. Let me translate that into English for you,
 5 Mr Berezovsky.
 6 A. Yes.
 7 Q. What the pleader is saying here is that he is listing
 8 the facts that they are going to say are true, right?
 9 A is:
 10 "That Berezovsky is a corrupt and unscrupulous
 11 businessman who, through corrupt and unscrupulous
 12 dealings in business and politics (as set out below), 13 has amassed a large personal fortune and become one of 14 the most powerful men in Russia."
 15 A. Yes.
 16 Q. I'm not asking you whether you agree with that because 17 I know what the answer is. But that was what they set 18 out to prove, wasn't it, Forbes magazine?
 19 A. They tried to prove that.
 20 Q. Yes.
 21 A. In their defence, correct?
 22 Q. Yes.
 23 A. Mm-hm.
 24 Q. Now, various facts were pleaded in support of that 25 allegation and I would like you to turn to page 147 of

56

1 the bundle numbering just to see what they were
 2 {H(A)28/147}.

3 A. Yes.

4 Q. There's a heading there, "Berezovsky's corrupt
 5 cultivation of a close relationship with President
 6 Yeltsin". Do you see?

7 A. Just a second.

8 Q. Do you see the heading?

9 A. On page 147?

10 Q. Page 147, there's a heading halfway down the page in 11 italics.

12 A. Yes, yes. Sorry, sorry. I find it.

13 Q. Now, that's the heading which describes the following
 14 paragraphs.

15 A. Yes.

16 Q. Now, I would like you to turn to paragraph 5.34 over the 17 page.

18 A. Yes.

19 Q. What they say is that:

20 "In order to increase his influence with Yeltsin,
 21 Berezovsky gave valuable gifts to Yeltsin's daughter,
 22 Tatyana Dyachenko..."

23 And they set out the valuable gifts. And at 5.35:

24 "Berezovsky knew that Dyachenko was a very useful 25 channel through which to convey information and ideas to

1 Yeltsin. Through Dyachenko, Berezovsky sought to exert
 2 influence on Yeltsin and to further his own ends."

3 Before I ask you a question about this,
 4 Mr Berezovsky, I just want to take you through these 5 things simply so that you have the whole picture before
 6 I ask you.

7 A. Okay.

8 Q. All right? That's what they said about your 9 relationship with Ms Dyachenko.

10 If you would then turn at the bottom of the page, 11 the same page, to 5.38, you will see "Berezovsky and 12 ORT".

13 A. Yes.

14 Q. "Berezovsky was aware of the power of the mass media, so 15 far as politics and business were concerned. His 16 interest in taking control over mass media companies was 17 in order to use them to pursue political purposes he 18 favoured and to defend and further his own business and 19 private interests."

20 Then in the next paragraph they say:

21 "Through his close relationship with Yeltsin,
 22 Berezovsky was able to gain control over ORT. He did so
 23 corruptly."

24 And they refer to the presidential decree for the 25 privatisation of it. And then in (ii) they say:

1 "Berezovsky had lobbied Yeltsin and Korzhakov to
 2 privatise the channel, promising that it would be a key
 3 channel in the forthcoming presidential elections...
 4 Berezovsky suggested that, by placing 49% of the shares
 5 with politically loyal investors while keeping the 6 majority stake of 51% with the government, the channel
 7 would be financially self sufficient, yet could be 8 controlled by the president."

9 Then, if you would look at 5.42, which is on 10 page 153 of the bundle {H(A)28/153}.

11 A. 5...?

12 Q. 153 of the bundle. You find yourself looking at a page 13 with a heading at the top of it, "Berezovsky and oil:
 14 Sibneft".

15 A. Sorry, just a second.

16 Q. Of course. Right? "Berezovsky and... Sibneft", it
 17 says, and it refers to the incorporation of Sibneft
 18 which we've been discussing. Then at 5.42:

19 "Berezovsky and a colleague, Roman Abramovich, had 20 lobbied for the creation and privatisation of Sibneft.
 21 They both (rightly) saw that this would be appear 22 opportunity for them to obtain very valuable assets and 23 increase their personal fortunes. Berezovsky corruptly
 24 used his close connection and influence with Yeltsin...
 25 and his wealth, knowing that the Russian government was

1 in dire financial need, to bring about what he 2 wanted..."

3 I wonder if I could ask you to look at the next
 4 paragraph, 5.43, which refers to the loans for shares
 5 auction, and at (ii) under that, the document says:

6 "The auctions, which were not conducted in an open 7 or fair way, were not designed so as to maximise the 8 prices which would be paid for the assets to be sold.
 9 For example, the exclusion of foreign bidders from 10 certain auctions tended to reduce the prices offered by 11 bidders and the threshold price for bidders was set 12 artificially low. Assets were sold off at a fraction of 13 their true value."

14 Then over the page you will see there's an 15 allegation at 5.44:

16 "51% of the shares in Sibneft were the subject of 17 a 'loans for shares' auction... That auction was 18 fixed/corrupt."

19 They then explain in the next four subparagraphs why
 20 it was fixed and corrupt. They say:

21 "The starting price... was $100 [million]...
 22 "Foreign companies were not permitted to bid...
 23 "Berezovsky's successful bid, through his Oil
 24 Finance Company ('NFK') was at $100.3 million, only 25 $0.3 million above the minimum price.

1 "... The Defendants will rely upon Berezovsky's
 2 close connections with Yeltsin and his support for
 3 Yeltsin..."
 4 If you just keep that document open so that you can
 5 remind yourself of what was said against you when I ask
 6 you about them.
 7 A. I remember all this litigations.
 8 Q. Yes, I understand.
 9 If I could ask you to leave that bundle open but to 10 be given bundle H(A)36. Don't put that away because you
 11 might need it. H(A)36 --
 12 A. Am I correct to understand that it's defence of Forbes
 13 magazine? Correct?
 14 Q. Yes, that's right.
 15 A. Good, thank you.
 16 Q. Yes, that's the defence that -- that's what they say
 17 they're going to prove against you.
 18 A. They're not able to prove that. They should -- I should 19 go to fight against of him in the court that they 20 should -- can prove.
 21 Q. I understand.
 22 A. Good.
 23 Q. I would like you to look at what you said in response to 24 that, which is at {H(A)36/143}. I'm showing you 143 so 25 that you can see what the document is. It's your reply

61

1 to what Forbes have just alleged, right?
 2 A. Just a second.
 3 Q. If you look at page 180, you'll see the last page
 4 {H(A)36/180}.
 5 A. I'm sorry, it's big document.
 6 Q. Go straight to the end, if you would. You'll see your 7 signature.
 8 A. I just -- I want to remind the context. It's impossible
 9 to discuss without context. (Pause)
 10 How many pages is the document?
 11 Q. If you go to page 180 of the bundle, you will see the 12 last page.
 13 A. I see.
 14 Q. That has a statement of truth on it which was signed by 15 you, wasn't it?
 16 A. Yes.
 17 Q. In June 2001?
 18 A. Yes.
 19 Q. Right. Now, the response to the allegation of 20 corruption starts at page 153 of the volume, of the 21 bundle number {H(A)36/153}.
 22 A. Yes.
 23 Q. Do you see that?
 24 A. Yes.
 25 Q. There's a heading, "Mr Berezovsky's relationship with

62

1 President Yeltsin". Do you see?
 2 A. Yes, I see.
 3 Q. Now, would you look at paragraph 4.44 on page 154.
 4 A. Yes.
 5 Q. What you say here is:
 6 "The allegations in paragraphs 5.34, 5.35 and 5.37
 7 are denied."
 8 If you just want to remind yourself what those were,
 9 you will see that they are the allegations about your 10 relationship with Ms Dyachenko and the Yeltsin family.
 11 A. Just a second. Okay. 5.34?
 12 Q. Yes. I've showed you those. Have a look.
 13 A. Maybe to make time shorter, you tell what is the 14 question and then maybe I turn back to have a look.
 15 Q. Before I can ask you the question, I need to refer you
 16 to the passage that I'm going to ask you about. If you
 17 look at paragraph 5.35 of what Forbes say, the previous 18 document I showed you, what Forbes say is that:
 19 "[You] knew that Dyachenko was a... useful channel
 20 through which to convey information and ideas to 21 Yeltsin. Through Dyachenko, Berezovsky sought to exert
 22 influence on Yeltsin and to further his own ends."
 23 Now, that's one of the paragraphs that you deny in 24 4.44 of your own document; do you see that?
 25 A. When it was? It was 19 --

63

1 Q. I haven't asked the question yet.
 2 A. Just a second. Just a second. I signed this 3 document -- remind, please. It's '97, yes?
 4 Q. You signed this document in June 2001.
 5 A. Yes.
 6 Q. Right?
 7 A. It's correct.
 8 Q. Now, one of the things you've denied, therefore, is
 9 that:
 10 "[You] knew that Dyachenko was a very useful channel
 11 through which to convey information and ideas to 12 Yeltsin. Through Dyachenko, Berezovsky sought to exert
 13 influence on Yeltsin and to further his own ends."
 14 Now, the fact is you did know at the time that 15 Ms Dyachenko was a useful channel through which to feed
 16 information and ideas to Boris Yeltsin, didn't you?
 17 A. I knew that she a useful channel.
 18 Q. Yes. And you did seek to influence Boris Yeltsin 19 through her; we've established that this morning?
 20 A. It is correct.
 21 Q. Why did you deny it and then sign a statement of truth
 22 in support of your denial?
 23 A. It's a good question.
 24 Q. Thank you.
 25 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, could you answer it, please.

64

1 A. It just mean that this document was prepared with
 2 assistance of my lawyers and maybe I didn't read
 3 attentively the numbers which they mentioned in the 4 statement, because it's a fact that I have good
 5 relations with Dyachenko in past with her and connect
 6 through her to Yeltsin.
 7 MR SUMPTION: Let's look at another passage in your reply
 8 then: paragraph 4.46, just over the page from the last
 9 one.
 10 A. 4.46?
 11 Q. Yes, on page 155. Right? What you say here is:
 12 "The true account of Mr Berezovsky's involvement in 13 ORT is as follows: Following the privatisation of 14 Channel 4... by Vladimir Gusinsky, Mr Berezovsky had 15 discussions with Vladimir Yumashev and subsequently with 16 Alexander Khorzhakov, the then Head of the SBP, 17 concerning the possibility of privatising Channel 1. He 18 did so not for the purpose of making money out of 19 Channel 1, but on account of its political importance as 20 pleaded above and against the background of the 21 forthcoming Parliamentary and Presidential elections: at 22 this time the continuation of the reform process, and 23 Russia's very economic stability, were in jeopardy. He 24 at no time lobbied President Yeltsin personally."
 25 A. Okay.

1 Q. Now, you did lobby --
 2 A. President Yeltsin?
 3 Q. You did lobby President Yeltsin personally, didn't you?
 4 You've described it in your witness statement in this 5 action.
 6 A. As I told you, I lobby him personally to privatise ORT;
 7 it's correct.
 8 Q. Yes. So why did you deny it in this document?
 9 A. Just a second. (Pause)
 10 I don't have answer.
 11 Q. You don't have an answer. If you remembered lobbying
 12 Boris Yeltsin personally when you wrote your witness
 13 statement for this action, you must have remembered 14 doing so when you signed your statement of truth in 15 2001.
 16 A. Again I --
 17 Q. Do you have an answer to that?
 18 A. I again just can to repeat that I remember perfectly my 19 meetings with president and it was not so many of them
 20 and I never discussed with him the way how to do that;
 21 I just told him that we need privatise ORT and how to do
 22 that. It was open question. I just state that we need 23 a business opportunity for that.
 24 Q. When you signed the statement of truth in June 2001
 25 about the document which we've been looking at in your

1 Forbes litigation, you knew that that statement was 2 untrue, didn't you?
 3 A. Definitely not. I didn't know. I just could accept
 4 that -- because it's absolutely simple exercise what you
 5 have done now, yes? It just mean that I just was not
 6 careful when I signed that. It doesn't mean that I am
 7 not responsible for that, it's wrong, but it means that 8 I was not careful. Because, again, it's absolutely 9 simple exercise what you were doing now and it's the 10 reason why I can't say anything.
 11 Q. Mr Berezovsky, it suited you in the Forbes action,
 12 didn't it, to say that you'd never lobbied Boris Yeltsin
 13 in relation to ORT because Forbes was accusing you of 14 corruptly influencing him? Do you agree?
 15 A. Sorry, what is the question?
 16 Q. It suited your case in the Forbes action to deny that 17 you'd lobbied Boris Yeltsin --
 18 A. Yes.
 19 Q. -- because they were accusing you of lobbying him?
 20 A. They do that.
 21 Q. Yes. And so it suited your case to say that that was 22 wrong?
 23 A. My case was that there were -- I divide this case for 24 several points: the most important for me and less
 25 important for me. The most important points were Forbes

1 tried to insist that I am a member of gangster and 2 so-so, that I was responsible for killing Listyev and
 3 for some other problems. And this is the basic point --
 4 points and the other points which you mentioned now are.
 5 Q. The reason why you said this in this document was that
 6 you thought that it would help you to win the Forbes
 7 action and you therefore didn't care that it happened to 8 be untrue?
 9 A. No, I really sued Forbes just because I was sure that 10 there are a lot of false information here and, as you
 11 know, Forbes finally took the position that it was false
 12 and it means that everything what they put in defence,
 13 in defence, could say that it's not -- also have a lot
 14 of doubts what they put in defence. It means that not 15 everything what they told in -- what they wrote in the 16 article was correct and they accept that.
 17 Q. It is also untrue, isn't it, looking at the same
 18 paragraph --
 19 A. Same -- what do you mean "same"?
 20 Q. If you look at 4.46 again, one of the other things you 21 say was that you did not influence Boris Yeltsin to 22 privatise ORT for the purpose of making money but only 23 because of its political importance. That's also 24 untrue, isn't it? You have told us in your witness
 25 statement --

1 A. Just a second. Just a second.
 2 Q. Let me finish.
 3 A. Sorry.
 4 Q. You have told us in your witness statement that ORT, as 5 you saw it, was good business in the longer term.
 6 A. Just a second. (Pause)
 7 I don't think that it's wrong. I explain why:
 8 because, as I told you before, as I told you before, ORT
 9 at that time was not a business at all and it's 10 privatisation of ORT just to spend money, not to earn 11 money.
 12 Just a second. What is the question? (Pause)
 13 You are -- yes, it's absolutely correct. It's ORT,
 14 yes. As far as ORT is concerned, that privatisation --
 15 that my position was that ORT is not good business.
 16 It's correct.
 17 Q. Would you look at page 156 of this reply of yours.
 18 {H(A)36/156} in your reply in the Forbes action. Right?
 19 A. Just a second.
 20 Q. It's the next page.
 21 A. 156, sorry. Yes.
 22 Q. Okay?
 23 A. Yes.
 24 Q. Do you see a heading two-thirds of the way down the 25 page, "Sibneft"?

1 A. Yes.
 2 Q. Right. Then over the page at 4.55 there's a paragraph
 3 I would like to ask your comments on. Okay?
 4 A. Paragraph?
 5 Q. 4.55 over the page.
 6 A. Sorry, again? 4.54?
 7 Q. No, 4.55.
 8 A. I don't have this on page 156.
 9 Q. Yes, you will have it -- 157, if you turn the page, you
 10 will get to it.
 11 A. Ah, 157, yes, sir.
 12 Q. Do you see at the top of the page --
 13 A. Yes, 157, it's fine.
 14 Q. Now, what that says is:
 15 "It is admitted and averred that, as alleged...
 16 Mr Berezovsky and Roman Abramovich lobbied for the 17 privatisation of Sibneft and that they saw this as an 18 investment opportunity that might (or might not) prove 19 profitable. It is admitted and averred also that the 20 state wished to maximise revenues out of state property
 21 for the federal budget, but that the future prospects
 22 for Sibneft were highly uncertain (owing to many factors 23 including decreased domestic demand) and that it was 24 impossible to persuade Western investors to invest...
 25 Otherwise this paragraph is denied."

1 Then you say this:
 2 "Furthermore, Mr Berezovsky never discussed Sibneft
 3 (or any other business matter) with Yeltsin and the 4 decision to privatise Sibneft although rubber-stamped by
 5 Yeltsin would have been taken by the state privatisation
 6 committee."
 7 Now, it's not true, is it, to say that you never 8 discussed Sibneft or any other business matter with 9 Yeltsin? You did discuss it, didn't you?
 10 A. Not -- not at all. I never discussed any other in some 11 concrete form. I discussed just to make business and 12 I don't discuss any specific opportunity for that. It's 13 absolutely correct what is saying here.
 14 Q. I do not doubt that the discussion was in general terms
 15 but it was about business, wasn't it?
 16 A. But I told from the very beginning and it means that 17 it's -- it means that it's not what I discussed with 18 Yeltsin.
 19 Q. You discussed with Yeltsin a proposal to identify 20 a business which could fund ORT? That's what you say in 21 your witness statement here.
 22 A. "Business matter" it's written here.
 23 Q. It is not therefore true to say that you "never 24 discussed Sibneft (or any other business matter) with 25 Yeltsin", is it?

1 A. I already answered to this question. I don't have other
 2 answer. I told you that I talked to Yeltsin that to 3 fund -- that we need to find how to fund ORT and I don't 4 discuss about business matter.
 5 Q. Now, you not only discussed it in general terms with 6 President Yeltsin but, as we've found out this morning
 7 and we've seen in your witness statement, you also 8 discussed details with General Khorzhakov, Ms Dyachenko
 9 and Mr Yumashev so that they could put them before
 10 President Yeltsin, didn't you?
 11 A. I discussed it, but -- I discussed it with them.
 12 Q. Yes. And it's not true that President Yeltsin
 13 rubber-stamped the decision of the State Privatisation
 14 Committee, is it? What he did was to make the decision 15 as a result of your direct pressure with him and your 16 indirect pressure through his advisers?
 17 A. I just want to tell you, I don't know how -- what is the 18 way to take this decision and I don't understand what 19 does mean "pressure". I move -- or my way is not to 20 make pressure; my way is to persuade and to explain why
 21 it is important to do. It means that it's completely 22 wrong what you put in your question or your statement.
 23 Q. What you say in your witness statement in this action at 24 paragraph 124 {D2/17/223} is that:
 25 "[You] have no doubt that President Yeltsin" --

1 A. Just a second, okay?
 2 Q. 124 of your witness statement.
 3 A. 100...?
 4 Q. 124. Paragraph 124, not page. Do you see
 5 paragraph 124?
 6 A. Yes.
 7 Q. What you say here is:
 8 "I have no doubt that President Yeltsin would not 9 have made this decree..."
 10 And that's the presidential decree forming
 11 Sibneft --
 12 A. Yes.
 13 Q. "... if it had not been for my initiative and efforts."
 14 A. It's correct.
 15 Q. In other words, he made the decision and it was your 16 influence who got him to make it, wasn't it?
 17 A. Again, definitely. It's my way to reach the target to 18 persuade someone to understand what he is doing and 19 I was successful to explain that.
 20 Q. Therefore, when you said in the Forbes action that "the 21 decision to privatise Sibneft although rubber-stamped by
 22 Yeltsin would have been taken by the state privatisation
 23 committee", you knew perfectly well that that was wrong,
 24 didn't you?
 25 A. Again, I don't know the level of his -- how much he was

1 informed in that. But again, I already explain what he
 2 knew about that. Again, as I told you before, that 3 I was not present at his meeting with Yumashev or 4 Khorzhakov and others.
 5 Q. At paragraph 129 of your witness statement in this 6 action {D2/17/224} --
 7 A. Just a second.
 8 Q. -- what you say is that the state committee approved
 9 a decision already agreed with Boris Yeltsin and Prime 10 Minister Chernomyrdin.
 11 A. Yes, correct.
 12 Q. So it wasn't true, was it, that the decision was first 13 taken by the State Privatisation Committee and then 14 rubber-stamped by Yeltsin; it was taken by Yeltsin and 15 then acted on by the state committee, and you knew that,
 16 didn't you?
 17 A. I knew just that to privatise it should be Yeltsin 18 decision and prime minister decision and only after that 19 State Privatisation Committee can propose that for 20 privatisation.
 21 Q. Would you look at paragraph 4.57 of your reply in the 22 Forbes action.
 23 A. 4?
 24 Q. 4.57.
 25 A. Just a second.

1 Q. It's on page 157. It's the next paragraph but one after 2 the one you last read.
 3 A. Just a second. What paragraph -- what page number?
 4 Q. Page number {H(A)36/157}, which is the page you should 5 have open because the last bit I asked you to look at 6 was... Okay?
 7 A. Yes.
 8 Q. You see paragraph 4.57 on that page. Can you see that 9 paragraph?
 10 A. Yes.
 11 Q. Right. What it says is:
 12 "It is denied that the 'loans for shares' auction in 13 respect of Sibneft was corrupt or 'fixed' or that it was 14 not conducted in an open or fair way."
 15 Then you describe how it happened:
 16 "In accordance with the loans for shares programme,
 17 in December 1995... (NFK) -- in which Mr Berezovsky
 18 had... a substantial interest -- won the auction and 19 extended a loan to the state in the sum of 20 $100.3 million in return for the right to manage the 21 state's 51% shareholding and the right to sell the 22 shares at auction if the state was unable in the time
 23 stipulated to repay the loan. There was only one 24 competitor to NFK, Inkombank, which did not present
 25 a bid that fulfilled the conditions which the state had

1 stipulated. The state had declared the starting price
 2 to be $100 million. The decision to bid $100.3 million
 3 was taken by NFK's Board."
 4 First of all, as you confirmed earlier this morning,
 5 it's not right, is it, that Inkombank was the only other
 6 bidder? Inkombank was disqualified but there were two 7 other potential bidders: Sameko, which withdrew, and 8 Menatep, which made a bid.
 9 A. What is the point? I didn't catch.
 10 Q. Right. Well, if you look at back at what you said in 11 4.57, what you said in 4.57 was that -- 12 A. Just -- in 4...?
 13 Q. 4.57 of your reply.
 14 A. Yes.
 15 Q. What you say is that:
 16 "There was only one competitor to NFK, Inkombank..."
 17 That is not true, is it, because there was also 18 Sameko and Menatep?
 19 A. It's the reason -- it's exactly what I had in my mind.
 20 Just a second. (Pause)
 21 Excuse me, could you repeat again, where is "just 22 one competitor"?
 23 Q. I'm looking at --
 24 A. Fine, fine, fine, I've got it. It's correct because it
 25 was real competitor, yes? And as you asked me before

1 about Menatep and I told you that Menatep agreed to 2 participate in that and put a bid.
 3 Q. Inkombank was not a real competitor because it was 4 disqualified.
 5 A. No, no. We discuss in terms of reality, you are 6 correct. Inkombank was a real competitor.
 7 Q. Sameko --
 8 A. A real competitor.
 9 Q. Sameko was a real company and Menatep was a real company
 10 too, wasn't it?
 11 A. Sameko was also a real competitor. Menatep was not 12 a real competitor.
 13 Q. Right.
 14 A. Yes.
 15 Q. But this is all relevant because Forbes have accused you
 16 of fixing the auction and you did fix it, didn't you?
 17 Because, looking at the bidders who were not 18 disqualified, you made a collusive agreement with one of 19 them and bought off the other. We discussed that this 20 morning.
 21 A. It's not fixed definitely because I just find the way
 22 how to present better interest for -- because Sameko in 23 reality was fixed by Inkombank, and you know that well, 24 and my position was just to persuade them that 25 participation is not so important for them like to cover

77

1 the debt.
 2 It means that I don't -- in my terminology, it's not
 3 fixing, it's just to present, because they were fixed
 4 themselves, and in my understanding it was just proved
 5 that all companies manage in the same way: Inkombank had 6 the second company and we had the second company. This 7 was the rules which exist at the time. It is not
 8 possible to say that it was fixed because it was a real
 9 competition.
 10 Q. Forbes had accused you of fixing the auction, by which 11 they meant that you arranged things so that the company
 12 with which you were associated, NFK, was bound to win.
 13 A. Again --
 14 Q. That was true, wasn't it?
 15 A. Not at all. Moreover, (inaudible) Forbes. It's my case 16 against Forbes. Forbes present the position of 17 (inaudible). This position never was proved. How you
 18 can say that this is the case? This is not the case.
 19 Q. You made a statement of truth in relation to 20 paragraph 4.57, among the other paragraphs --
 21 A. Yes.
 22 Q. -- and it was untrue?
 23 A. No, it's true. It's my understanding what means "fixed"
 24 and what does not.
 25 Q. What do you think fixing an auction means,

78

1 Mr Berezovsky?
 2 A. It means that you don't have any -- fixing means that 3 you don't have -- I'll give you a definition now, just 4 a second -- that you don't have competition.
 5 Q. Right. Well, you didn't have competition, did you?
 6 A. No, I have competition.
 7 Q. The reason you didn't have competition was that by the 8 time the auction actually occurred there was only one 9 bidder left, Menatep, and you had agreed with them that 10 they were going to bid less than you?
 11 A. If you define competition only as a moment, you are 12 correct; but if you describe competition as a process,
 13 you are not correct.
 14 Q. If you are fairly asking yourself whether you fixed this 15 auction, the only honest answer would have been "yes"?
 16 A. Not. Honest answer is "no".
 17 Q. You see, what I'm suggesting to you, Mr Berezovsky, is 18 that you are prepared to say, in a document put before
 19 the English court, whatever you think suits your case, 20 whether it's true or false. Do you understand what I'm 21 putting to you?
 22 A. I already gave you answer, when you mentioned the points
 23 which I include in my -- exclude from my witness 24 statement and you were absolutely correct that it was 25 contradiction with my witness statement, what -- with my

79

1 witness statement, I accept that. But this one which
 2 you mentioned now, I don't accept that.
 3 Q. It's what you're doing in this action too, isn't it?
 4 You tell the truth when it suits your case but not when 5 it doesn't?
 6 A. It's not correct.
 7 Q. In the Forbes action, there was an application to strike
 8 out your claim on the grounds that you had no sufficient
 9 reputation in England to protect, do you remember that?
 10 A. Yes.
 11 Q. And you put in written evidence on that application,
 12 didn't you?
 13 A. Yes.
 14 Q. Do you remember that one of the people who swore an 15 affidavit -- put in written evidence, in other words --
 16 on your behalf was Mr Shvidler?
 17 A. Yes, I remember that.
 18 Q. Did you ask Mr Shvidler to give evidence?
 19 A. Yes, I asked him to give.
 20 Q. Was his affidavit drafted by your lawyers?
 21 A. Yes, Mr Andy Stephenson from -- the name of company --
 22 Q. Carter Ruck?
 23 A. Yes, Carter Ruck.
 24 Q. Right.
 25 A. And his assistant, I think they participate in taking

80

1 this evidence.
 2 Q. And did you read Mr Shvidler's affidavit?
 3 A. Yes, I read.
 4 Q. And were you happy with it?
 5 A. I was very angry with it.
 6 Q. You were very angry with it?
 7 A. Yes.
 8 Q. Why was that?
 9 A. Because Mr -- it's turned out that Mr Shvidler and 10 Mr Abramovich, they mislead me when they issue
 11 Eurobonds.
 12 Q. When they issue...?
 13 A. Eurobonds.
 14 Q. Right.
 15 A. Because, as you remember, there is a -- let's take 16 evidence of Mr Shvidler, to discuss better, yes? Could 17 you show me the reference?
 18 Q. Well, you'll find it in bundle {H(A)11/132}.
 19 A. Could we have in the same way the Eurobond prospect,
 20 please?
 21 Q. Yes. Now, before you look through this affidavit,
 22 I would just like to discover: what do you remember made
 23 you cross about this affidavit? Just tell us.
 24 A. Because we discuss how to present my position legally
 25 because, you know, the conflict was that Roman

1 Abramovich and Shvidler as well, all the time they 2 insist to distance me from Sibneft, yes? And 3 position -- and on the other hand, Forbes insist that 4 I had close tie to Sibneft and it was a point of 5 dispute, yes?
 6 Mr Shvidler and Mr Abramovich, they -- when I asked
 7 to give Mr Shvidler evidence, I want to describe in 8 terms which coincide with reality, and he made it saying 9 that I -- I don't remember exactly the wording of his 10 witness statement, but you -- that I don't have -- that 11 I don't have, like, shares under my control and so it -- 12 in other words, it was written that -- in the way that 13 was on the one hand it was true, on the other hand it
 14 was not create a strong link me to Sibneft.
 15 And Mr Shvidler accept this position but on the 16 other hand he present me Eurobonds certificate where it
 17 was written that I never had -- in very strong terms, 18 that I never had any connection, which definitely could 19 be helpful for me for Forbes case but was not true at 20 all.
 21 And it's the reason -- because the first time I have 22 seen this paper, it was just when Mr Shvidler gave 23 evidence to Forbes magazine and I know that the day
 24 before yesterday, when you present your skeleton, that 25 I confirm the Eurobond prospectus and it was not -- it

1 was not true. I never confirm -- I confirm just in 2 verbal way because that time when it happened, it was --
 3 just a second -- it was '97, yes, it was '97, and I have 4 been in position -- it was summer. I don't remember
 5 well. I had official position as secretary of 6 Security -- deputy secretary of Security Council and 7 I gave up control over my shares or my interests -- 8 I don't remember well how to formulate that -- according 9 of Russian law, to Mr -- completely to Mr Abramovich at 10 that time, yes, and it is the reason why I did not want 11 to participate, at least directly, to any activity in 12 business.
 13 And I was informed that Sibneft is preparing to 14 issue Eurobonds but -- and Shvidler told me -- I don't 15 remember who, Shvidler or Abramovich, they told about 16 that. But I never have seen this document and I was 17 absolutely surprised when Shvidler showed me this 18 document.
 19 Q. When you say "this document", are you referring to the 20 Eurobond prospectus?
 21 A. Correct, correct. Correct.
 22 Q. Okay. Well, I'll come to that in due course, although 23 I will be suggesting to you that you certainly did see 24 it. Never mind.
 25 Let me ask you to read one paragraph of the

1 affidavit you've got in front of you. Paragraph 1 --
 2 A. Just a second. Shvidler affidavit, yes?
 3 Q. Shvidler's affidavit --
 4 A. Yes.
 5 Q. -- but in your action.
 6 A. Yes.
 7 Q. He introduces himself as the vice president of Sibneft
 8 and over the page, at the top, he says:
 9 "Boris Berezovsky was involved in establishing 10 Sibneft when it first came into partly private ownership
 11 in 1996; the company is now entirely privately owned.
 12 Mr Berezovsky served on Sibneft's Board of Directors
 13 until October 1996; whilst he no longer has any role in 14 the management of the company nor any shareholding, he 15 tends still to be publicly identified with the company."
 16 A. Sorry?
 17 Q. Just read the paragraph to yourself.
 18 A. Yes.
 19 Q. Right?
 20 A. Yes.
 21 Q. Now, this was evidence that you put in in your action
 22 against Forbes.
 23 A. Yes.
 24 Q. Did you consider that paragraph 1 of that affidavit was 25 true?

1 A. Yes, it's true.
 2 Q. Right. So --
 3 A. Just one second. One second. I'm sorry, just a second.
 4 (Pause)
 5 Look, I don't remember exactly the date of my being 6 as a director until -- the director of the board.
 7 I have been, but I don't remember the date -- yes, until 8 '96, when I become the deputy secretary of Security
 9 Council, it's correct. Yes, it's correct. It's 10 correct. I agree what's written here.
 11 Q. Right. So it is true, isn't it --
 12 A. Yes.
 13 Q. -- that in 1998, when this affidavit was produced, you
 14 no longer had any role in the management of the company
 15 nor any shareholding? That was the truth, wasn't it?
 16 A. Yes, I didn't have any power in managing of the company
 17 and I didn't have any shareholding.
 18 Q. Right. Now, you point out in your witness statement 19 that this affidavit was mainly concerned with the 20 question whether you had a reputation to protect in 21 England. You make that point and you're right; that was 22 what this is about.
 23 A. So sorry, again?
 24 Q. This evidence was --
 25 A. Yes, yes.

1 Q. -- designed to show that you had a reputation in 2 England?
 3 A. Correct. Correct.
 4 Q. Right.
 5 Now, it's right, isn't it, that a small proportion 6 of the shares in Sibneft were traded on the Moscow and 7 New York stock exchanges and held by the general public?
 8 A. I don't remember that.
 9 Q. Now, what Forbes were saying -- was this not the case --
 10 was that you had corruptly acquired at least 80 per cent
 11 of the shares in Sibneft?
 12 A. 80?
 13 Q. That was their allegation, which you rejected. Yes?
 14 A. At least 80?
 15 Q. Yes, they said at least 80.
 16 A. Okay.
 17 Q. If you look at paragraph 3, you will see that 18 Mr Shvidler quotes it:
 19 "It is stated in the article, wrongly, that 20 Mr Berezovsky 'has acquired at least 80% of Sibneft, one 21 of Russia's largest oil companies'; anyone therefore who 22 checks will automatically be able to access the article
 23 on the Internet."
 24 Do you see he's quoting what Forbes had said?
 25 A. Yes.

1 Q. Okay?
 2 A. Yes.
 3 Q. Now, would you agree that the importance of 4 Mr Shvidler's evidence was this -- just listen carefully
 5 and then read it on the screen: Mr Shvidler was saying
 6 that the statement in Forbes that 80 per cent of Sibneft
 7 was owned by a man who Forbes had described as a corrupt
 8 gangster and murderer had frightened UK investors, who 9 didn't want to be associated with a company connected
 10 with somebody described in those terms?
 11 Before you answer, please read the question on the 12 screen so that you will understand it.
 13 A. Just a second. (Pause)
 14 My understanding was absolutely clear: that because 15 of my political involvement, not because of gangster and 16 so -- I just want again to repeat you: what later was 17 absolutely -- what Forbes said, that it's false, yes?
 18 And not because of that reason. The reason was just 19 one: that my strong political involvement and it could 20 damage the company my political position, that's it, my 21 political activity.
 22 Q. Whether you were or were not a shareholder in Sibneft
 23 was critically important to this point that Mr Shvidler
 24 was making, wasn't it?
 25 A. Shvidler and Abramovich insist to distance me as much as

1 possible of direct involvement in shareholding or 2 management of Sibneft.
 3 Q. You say in this action, Mr Berezovsky, that right up to 4 2001 you and Mr Patarkatsishvili between you had 5 a 50 per cent interest in Sibneft; that's your case in 6 this action, isn't it?
 7 A. It's correct.
 8 Q. Now, if that is right, then this affidavit was 9 thoroughly misleading, wasn't it?
 10 A. It's a question to Shvidler, not to me.
 11 Q. No, I'm asking you. If your case in this action is 12 right, this was a thoroughly misleading -- 13 A. No, not at all. It's written that I have "any 14 shareholding", it's absolutely correct written here.
 15 Q. So you thought it was perfectly fair, did you, when the 16 issue was whether you were associated with Sibneft, to 17 say you had no shareholding even though you thought that 18 you actually had an interest in half of Mr Abramovich's
 19 shares?
 20 A. Absolutely correct.
 21 Q. And do you still think that that is a fair way --
 22 A. It's fair way.
 23 Q. -- to deal with the truth? You think it's the whole
 24 truth --
 25 A. It's fair way.

1 Q. -- and nothing but the truth?
 2 A. I gave you my answer.
 3 Q. Do you recall that in July 1997, Mr Berezovsky, you
 4 completed the return to the presidential administration
 5 of your income and assets?
 6 A. Just a second, yes.
 7 Q. You remember that?
 8 A. Again, my presentation -- oh, it's good point. Yes,
 9 I remember that.
 10 Q. Now, as I understand it --
 11 A. Could you show this paper, please?
 12 Q. I will in a minute but perhaps you can just clarify my 13 mind on one subject first. Is it right that in 1997
 14 there was a decree, presidential decree, requiring the 15 disclosure of interests by public officials?
 16 A. You are wrong.
 17 Q. I'm wrong, am I?
 18 A. Yes, you are wrong because decree did not give that it's 19 your obligation. You may do it voluntarily, as 20 I remember.
 21 Q. I see, it didn't require you to do it. Now, at the 22 time, I think, in July 1997, you were deputy secretary
 23 of the Security Council?
 24 A. Correct.
 25 Q. Was that why you filled in this form?

1 A. Again, I just want to stress, again, voluntarily.
 2 Q. Okay. Would you look at {H(A)06/124}, please. Now,
 3 this is the English translation and I'm trying to find
 4 the Russian version but I'm not sure whether there is 5 one. I don't believe it's in the bundle. Clearly there
 6 must have been a Russian original but what you'll see is 7 there's a document which in English is headed 8 "Certificate", do you see that?
 9 A. Yes.
 10 Q. Right. The certificate was executed and completed by 11 you and your address is given?
 12 A. Not by me, by my lawyers.
 13 Q. Okay, but did you approve it?
 14 A. To say you true, I don't remember. I'll explain you 15 why, just a second. Because now when I -- and 16 definitely I was shown this document by my lawyers and 17 when I watch this document, first of all, it's not in 18 Russian, it's not document which we're able clearly -- 19 Q. Well, you signed it.
 20 A. Just a second, just a second. Again, do you see my 21 signature?
 22 Q. We'll find the original.
 23 A. No, no, again, do you see my signature?
 24 Q. Mr Berezovsky, look at page 124, it says "Signed 25 B Berezovsky".

1 A. Yes, I see that but you don't have my signature here.
 2 Q. No, we'll find the Russian original.
 3 A. Okay, good. Good. It's exactly what I was trying to 4 do.
 5 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Can you just answer the questions,
 6 please, Mr Berezovsky.
 7 THE WITNESS: I'm sorry, my Lady.
 8 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: It's not a conversation,
 9 cross-examination, it's a formal process.
 10 A. I'm sorry.
 11 First of all, if you look at the page number and 12 where is written "Certificate" --
 13 MR SUMPTION: Yes?
 14 A. -- and if you look at my birth date, if you -- I know 15 that you have great memory, and it doesn't coincide with 16 my birthday.
 17 Q. Yes. 24 January is your birthday?
 18 A. 23rd.
 19 Q. Right. So they got your birthday wrong?
 20 A. It means that it's completely wrong what is written 21 here. It means that if even I have seen that and even 22 if it's correct translation, it means that I didn't pay
 23 too much attention because -- but it was prepared 24 definitely not by me but my lawyers. It means that on 25 the one hand it's not proper paper to discuss because

1 I show you direct mistake, direct mistake. It means
 2 that I can't guarantee that the rest is correctly
 3 because it was the basis, the basis -- it's not me, it's 4 even not me.
 5 Q. Would you look at page 127, please {H(A)06/127}. We'll 6 get the original of this.
 7 "I, the undersigned --"
 8 A. Just a second, 127, yes.
 9 Q. "I, the undersigned, confirm the trustworthiness and 10 completeness of the evidence supplied by myself in the 11 Certificate hereby.
 12 "21 July 1997.
 13 "Signed by
 14 "Berezovsky BA."
 15 A. Again, I think it's impossible to discuss like that 16 because, as I just demonstrated, absolutely clear, this 17 is not a proper paper and we also try to find out the 18 Russian original, we were not successful with that. But 19 this paper is not possible to discuss properly. But, on 20 the other hand, I don't want to put you in any wrong
 21 thoughts about that and I just want to tell you that,
 22 according of the decree, you should show only direct
 23 owner of shares. What it means? It means, for example, 24 when I watch this paper, I did not find -- just 25 a second, okay, just a second. I didn't find, for

1 example, here ORT, yes? And you also I think should pay
 2 attention to that. It's a reason why I was not direct
 3 owner, the actual holder of ORT.
 4 Again, my position at witness box is absolutely 5 clear, we are not able to talk about this paper because 6 I'm not sure that it's proper paper.
 7 Q. Mr Berezovsky, look at the heading "Securities" on 8 page 125 {H(A)06/125}.
 9 A. 125.
 10 Q. Yes, "2.2, Securities", it's about a third of the way
 11 down the page.
 12 A. Just a second.
 13 Q. The document was disclosed by your solicitors, 14 Mr Berezovsky. We had understood the translation -- we 15 had understood the English version to be uncontentious.
 16 The Russian is not in the bundle, perhaps I can invite 17 Messrs Addleshaws to produce the Russian original from 18 which this was derived as soon as may be.
 19 A. Yes.
 20 Q. Now, would you look at the heading "Securities" on 21 page 125, Mr Berezovsky.
 22 A. Yes.
 23 Q. Underneath that heading, it says "Shares and other type 24 of interest in commercial businesses". Did you have 25 shares or any other type of interest in Sibneft?

1 A. Again, I have share -- I have interest in Sibneft.
 2 Q. Right. So you did have an interest in Sibneft, you say.
 3 Where do we find that referred to in the table
 4 underneath?
 5 A. Mr Sumption, I refuse to discuss this paper until we'll 6 have original of this paper.
 7 My Lady, this is my question. If you insist to 8 continue, I will continue.
 9 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, I'm going to rise now anyway,
 10 I'll sit again at 1.45. It would be helpful if the 11 original could be available but if it's not we'll have 12 to return to it at a later date.
 13 Very well. I'll sit again at 1.45.
 14 (1.00 pm)
 15 (The short adjournment)
 16 (1.45 am)
 17 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right, members of the press. Who 18 am I addressing? All of you. Of the 50 seats available
 19 for the press and the public in court, as from tomorrow
 20 25 of those 50 seats will be allocated to the press and 21 the press alone.
 22 I have considered with the Courts Service staff
 23 whether it's feasible, as it were, to preallocate seats.
 24 I've come to the conclusion that it's not feasible to do
 25 that and that the fairest thing so as to ensure that

1 there are maximum seats available at all times to 2 members of the public as well is to allocate seats to 3 the press on a first-come first-served basis, so you
 4 will have your numbered seat for the whole day.
 5 The method by which it will be done is as follows.
 6 Seats will be allocated to members of the press upon 7 production of their press card, as I said, on 8 a first-come first-served basis. There will be 25
 9 seats. They will be available for collection normally 10 from 9 o'clock every morning from outside court, where 11 a member of the court staff will give them out to you on 12 production of your press card. Tomorrow morning,
 13 because we're starting at 9 o'clock tomorrow, the press
 14 tickets will be available as from 8.30 outside court.
 15 Now, looking at the numbers of members of the press
 16 available, 25 seats should be ample, given that there
 17 are 25 other seats available for members of the public
 18 as well.
 19 Again, I'm trying to be flexible. If there's a need 20 to reconsider, I will do that. But can you liaise, as 21 it were, quite closely either with Ms Rollison(?), who 22 is the lady standing there, or with Mr Pollen if you
 23 have a problem.
 24 MEMBER OF THE PRESS: My Lady, we're very grateful. Thank
 25 you.

1 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: The other thing is there will be
 2 a note on the door which directs people who can't get
 3 into the court to the consultation rooms, where there
 4 are LiveNote feeds and where there are audio feeds as 5 well.
 6 Now, I hope that will cater for you, obviously not 7 today. I'm sorry to see that you're still standing and 8 I'm not allowed to say that it's a shame that no
 9 gentleman has offered you their seat but there we go.
 10 MEMBER OF THE PRESS: I wouldn't expect them to do so.
 11 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Okay. Thank you very much.
 12 Yes, Mr Sumption.
 13 MR SUMPTION: My Lady, can I tell your Ladyship what we've 14 ascertained -- which isn't everything -- about this 15 document.
 16 First of all, there is no Russian version for this 17 reason: the document appears to have been faxed, as your 18 Ladyship will see from the fax notations at the top of 19 the page, to the fax number of Messrs Carter Ruck.
 20 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.
 21 MR SUMPTION: It came from an XTRA Businesses Limited from 22 a fax machine in Savile Row, which we believe to be the 23 fax machine of the office in Savile Row used by 24 Mr Fomichev. So that it seems that what happened was 25 that this was faxed to Carter Ruck by Mr Berezovsky's

1 administration, so to speak, because Mr Fomichev at this 2 stage was his general financial manager, and that it was 3 disclosed in the Forbes litigation, and it has been 4 redisclosed by Mr Berezovsky's solicitors in this 5 litigation but in what I imagine is the only form in 6 which they have it, namely the form in which it was 7 faxed to Carter Ruck in 2001.

8 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Mr Rabinowitz, that's the 9 position, is it?

10 MR RABINOWITZ: Certainly as regards which document we have 11 in our possession, that is exactly the position, 12 my Lady.

13 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: And you don't have the --

14 MR RABINOWITZ: We do not have and, as far as I'm aware, 15 have never had the Russian versions.

16 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right, thank you very much.

17 THE WITNESS: My Lady, could I just comment a little?

18 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just a second.
 19 Mr Sumption, proceed on that basis therefore.

20 MR SUMPTION: Yes, of course.

21 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: If there are any further questions you
 22 wish to ask Mr Berezovsky, no doubt you will do so.

23 MR SUMPTION: Yes.

24 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Berezovsky?

25 THE WITNESS: Yes, I just -- you referred to Savile Row.

1 I just don't remember about office of Ruslan Fomichev
 2 but to make -- maybe for you it's more clear, we had 3 office in Savile Row and maybe it's even passed through 4 our office, not Mr Fomichev, just to let you know.
 5 I don't remember that Mr Fomichev had office on the same
 6 street.

7 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you very much.

8 THE WITNESS: Thank you.

9 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Sumption.

10 MR SUMPTION: At any rate, I imagine you would agree, 11 Mr Berezovsky, that if this document is being faxed to 12 Carter Ruck, who were your solicitors in the Forbes
 13 litigation, at the time when the Forbes litigation was 14 in process, it's likely to have been sent to them for 15 the purposes of your litigation, isn't it?

16 A. No doubts.

17 Q. Now, I'm sorry that we don't have the original with your 18 signatures on, but it's perfectly clear from what we do
 19 have that the original was signed by you in two places:
 20 one on page 124 of the bundle and one on page 127. The 21 original was originally signed by you in two places.

22 A. I can't comment that because I told you I don't 23 understand -- I don't understand -- maybe you're 24 correct, I don't... But again, what is my principal 25 problem? The problem is not to explain you what is

1 written here. The problem is that my birthday is 2 written in wrong way and even I signed it. It means
 3 that not me signed that or I did not see this document
 4 at all.

5 What very often happened, it's true, here, and my 6 position is very clear, when we discussed that, I'll try 7 you to present my vision even understanding that it's 8 not possible to believe what is written. It's my 9 position, yes.

10 Q. If this document -- this document would not have been 11 sent to your solicitors, Carter Ruck, if it was a bogus
 12 document, would it?

13 A. I don't know.

14 Q. Let's just look at what is written on the second page of 15 it, on page 125 of the bundle.

16 A. Yes.

17 Q. Now, the question that I would ask you is this: did you 18 have in 1997 shares or any other type of interest in 19 Sibneft? I think you say you did?

20 A. I had other interest in Sibneft.

21 Q. Yes --

22 A. And in ORT as well.

23 Q. You have not included that in your declaration.

24 A. I just want again to stress: this declaration definitely 25 prepared not by me. This declaration prepared by my

1 lawyer, if it's -- to take in consideration that it's 2 varied, yes? And I definitely am responsible, if
 3 I signed that, I'm responsible, not my lawyer
 4 responsible for that, but I just want to tell you to -- 5 we need to -- because, as I understand, my lawyers were 6 professional and -- professional enough, let's say, in 7 Moscow at that time.

8 What means "share" and "other type of interest",
 9 yes? As I understand, the definition is important, and 10 without understanding what means this definition in 11 Russian, in Russia at that time, yes, we're not able to 12 move forward. At least my comment, I comment to say: is 13 it direct interest or indirect but nevertheless I'm 14 finally beneficial written somewhere? We need to 15 understand what it means.

16 Again, I want to stress: I comment that without 17 understanding what we're discussing.

18 Q. You said at an earlier stage in your cross-examination 19 this morning that compliance with these returns was 20 voluntarily?

21 A. This was voluntarily, yes.

22 Q. I see.

23 A. As I already called my lawyers again. I didn't remember 24 that time.

25 Q. Could you please be shown -- you can put away the bundle

1 that you have open in front of you. I imagine you would 2 like to make some space on the desk and perhaps --
 3 A. But keep open this page, yes?
 4 Q. No, I'm not going to ask you any more about it.
 5 A. Okay.
 6 Q. What I would like you to look at now is {H(A)20/147}.
 7 A. What is the bundle?
 8 Q. Somebody will just give you the bundle in a moment.
 9 A. I see. And this, I need to keep the other one, this 10 H28?
 11 Q. H(C)8 you can put back --
 12 A. No, the old one, H(A)28, do I need to keep this still?
 13 Q. No, you can put that away too.
 14 A. Thank you.
 15 Q. Right. Do you have in front of you H(A)20/147?
 16 A. Yes.
 17 Q. This is the decree in question and --
 18 A. Just a second, I'm sorry.
 19 My Lady, I'd like to have all the Russian papers in 20 Russian and I explain the reason why it's so: because we 21 turn out the translation of some documents which were 22 served were not correct translated. And it is reason
 23 why I need to have Russian and then to understand, 24 because now we discuss in details and it's necessary for 25 me, and I explain you the reason if you want to have

1 more detail.
 2 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: We'll see how we go. What will be
 3 necessary then is for members of your legal team to 4 provide the references to the Russian documents because 5 it may be the case that this team doesn't have them
 6 available.
 7 MR SUMPTION: My Lady, in the bundle as it is, this is 8 another document that was sent in the same fax, as one 9 can see from the top. It's the very same fax that we 10 looked at last time. However, being a decree, it is 11 clearly available in Russian from some Russian law 12 source.
 13 A. Absolutely.
 14 Q. What I will do is I will ask Mr Berezovsky the one 15 question that I have about this document and we will 16 then make sure that he has available to him the Russian 17 text so that he can correct the position if he thinks 18 it's wrong.
 19 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, perhaps both teams could try and 20 make sure they have as soon as possible the Russian 21 references because it may be they're not all to hand.
 22 MR SUMPTION: No, I quite understand that. But both sides, 23 of course, have expert Russian lawyers and we have 24 already put that in train on our side.
 25 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well.

1 MR SUMPTION: Mr Berezovsky, the short point I want to put 2 to you is the end of paragraph 1. Paragraph 1 requires 3 individuals employed as civil servants and officials in 4 the Russian Federation to do certain things and if you
 5 look in the final words of that paragraph:
 6 "Shall submit their tax" --
 7 A. Just a second. The first paragraph, yes?
 8 Q. The first paragraph --
 9 A. Yes.
 10 Q. -- is what civil servants and government officials are 11 required to do, and it says at the end:
 12 "... shall submit their tax returns and reports on 13 the property in their ownership... on an annual basis."
 14 A. Just a second. (Pause)
 15 Mr Sumption, I don't want to argue about judicial 16 problems, I just want to tell that I was told by my 17 lawyers about that and it's reference -- they take 18 responsibility for this, my understanding, and I don't 19 want to argue with you.
 20 Q. No, understood. You're not a lawyer and I'm not going 21 to press you.
 22 A. Abramovich's lawyer, he will...
 23 Q. But I imagine that your lawyer did not tell you that if 24 you decided to complete it, it was okay to do so in 25 a misleading fashion? You weren't given that advice,

1 were you?
 2 A. Definitely not.
 3 Q. Well, now I'd like you to look at another document if 4 you wouldn't mind: {H(A)07/19}. Somebody will have to 5 hand it to you. Put away the file you have in front of 6 you.
 7 A. I should keep that?
 8 Q. No, I would put it away if I were you.
 9 Now, this is a document that you referred to this
 10 morning when I was asking you about Mr Shvidler's
 11 affidavit. It's the 1997 floating rate Eurobond
 12 prospectus.
 13 A. Can you give me time to look through, okay?
 14 Q. Well, Mr Berezovsky, I haven't asked you a question yet;
 15 I have just told you what the document is.
 16 A. I just want to refresh.
 17 Q. Okay.
 18 A. Thank you. (Pause)
 19 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Berezovsky, you'll be given an 20 opportunity to read the passage which Mr Sumption is 21 taking you to.
 22 THE WITNESS: Yes, yes.
 23 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: We can't, I'm afraid, give you the 24 time to read every single document.
 25 MR SUMPTION: Mr Berezovsky, just wait until I --

1 THE WITNESS: I'm sorry, my Lady, I've already got it.
 2 Thank you.
 3 MR SUMPTION: You've obviously anticipated the bit that I am
 4 going to go to and you're quite right to do that,
 5 Mr Berezovsky, but there's a few questions I want to ask
 6 you before we get there.
 7 You were consulted about this document in advance,
 8 were you not?
 9 A. Not at all.
 10 Q. Really? Would you like to keep that document open and 11 perhaps somebody could give you bundle D1. The 12 reference is {D1/09/112}. Do you have that? This is 13 Ms Nosova's statement.
 14 A. Yes, yes.
 15 Q. Now, Ms Nosova is a close and trusted assistant of 16 yours, is she not?
 17 A. It is correct.
 18 Q. In your office building at Down Street, there is 19 a litigation office, isn't there, an office used by 20 people who are helping you with this litigation?
 21 A. In which street?
 22 Q. At Down Street you have an office?
 23 A. Yes, yes, I have office on Down Street, 7 Down Street.
 24 Q. That's right. Now, in Down Street, there is an office
 25 in which people are working on this litigation; isn't

1 that right?
 2 A. Yes, it's correct.
 3 Q. And those people are Ms Nosova, Mr Dubov and 4 Mr Glushkov, are they not?
 5 A. Not precisely what you said. Ms Nosova has a room at 6 this office and her job is not to help me in litigation;
 7 she has the other job. As far as Mr Dubov, he also has 8 another job. Moreover, not Dubov, not Mrs Nosova, paid
 9 by me. And as far as Glushkov is concerned, he doesn't 10 have space in this office at all.
 11 Q. I see. We'll discuss that with them.
 12 Could you please turn to page 149 in the bundle,
 13 which is about three-quarters of the way through this 14 witness statement {D1/09/149}.
 15 A. 149?
 16 Q. Yes. Paragraph 197 at the bottom of the page:
 17 "I was not particularly concerned [she says] about 18 the inclusion of this statement in the Offering Circular 19 and..."
 20 Perhaps I should start in the paragraph before.
 21 "In [preparing the] Offering Circular, I was aware
 22 of the fact that Mr Abramovich had agreed with Boris
 23 that there should be a statement in the document
 24 confirming the agreed public position which they were 25 adopting: ie that Boris did not have an interest in the

1 company. This reflected the aims of the 1996 Agreement,
 2 to distance Boris from the company. I believe it was 3 probably also thought that including a statement like
 4 this would reduce the concerns of investors about
 5 political risk from Boris's involvement."
 6 Now, then the previous paragraph you will see --
 7 A. Previous, 196?
 8 Q. What I've just read from is 196.
 9 A. Previous? Oh, you read just now.
 10 Q. Now look back at 195, please.
 11 A. Yes, sorry.
 12 Q. Ms Nosova says:
 13 "I was not involved in the preparation of this
 14 Offering Circular, but Boris told me that Mr Abramovich 15 consulted with Boris and Badri about it before it was 16 published."
 17 A. Yes.
 18 Q. Is that right or wrong?
 19 A. You should put this question to Mrs Nosova and she will 20 explain you better.
 21 Q. No, I'm putting it to you, Mr Berezovsky.
 22 A. What is right or what is wrong?
 23 Q. What I'm asking you is: is it true that Mr Abramovich
 24 consulted you about this circular?
 25 A. Definitely not.

1 Q. So Ms Nosova has got this wrong?
 2 A. You put this question to Mrs Nosova.
 3 Q. I'm putting it to you, Mr Berezovsky, I'd like an 4 answer.
 5 A. I gave full answer to this question. I can't answer
 6 instead of Mrs Nosova.
 7 Q. Mr Berezovsky, you saw this --
 8 A. You have to put me direct question: did I consult or 9 talk at all with Mr Abramovich? I don't remember talk
 10 at all maybe, but definitely I did not consult him.
 11 Q. No, he consulted you --
 12 A. Not him, not with Mr Shvidler.
 13 Q. He consulted you about this circular, didn't he?
 14 A. It's impossible.
 15 Q. Why is it impossible?
 16 A. Because I never was involved in so details.
 17 Q. Because you --
 18 A. I never was involved in so details of managing of the 19 company Sibneft. Moreover, I just want to remind you 20 again what I said before: that at that time I was in 21 position of deputy secretary of Security Council and 22 I try maximum distance from any involvement in business
 23 at all.
 24 But I can't exclude that Mr Abramovich did call me
 25 and say me that, "We want to raise money on the market

1 through Eurobonds and it's -- what do you think about
 2 that?" And definitely I can't say that I against to do
 3 something. But maybe he gave me even more details but 4 I never consulted.
 5 Q. Mr Berezovsky, you are aware, I imagine, that when 6 securities are sold in western securities markets,
 7 extremely high standards of accuracy are required?
 8 A. Yes.
 9 Q. You know that, don't you?
 10 A. I hope that it's so.
 11 Q. Yes. And are you also aware that it is normal to 12 instruct accountants and lawyers to do due diligence so 13 as to ensure that such documents are as accurate as 14 possible?
 15 A. Definitely.
 16 Q. Now, Cleary Gottlieb, a New York firm of lawyers, were 17 involved in the preparation of this document along with 18 Salomon & Co, were they not?
 19 A. I don't know.
 20 Q. There is, as you know, a statement about your connection
 21 with Sibneft in this document, isn't there?
 22 A. I know that I told you -- I'm sorry. I know that and 23 I told you that the first time I have seen that when 24 Mr Shvidler prepared the witness statement for Forbes
 25 magazine and I told you at the beginning that I was

109

1 shocked when I have seen this document.
 2 Q. And you approved the bit about you because you
 3 understood it to be true.
 4 A. If you --
 5 Q. Do you disagree?
 6 A. I disagree completely. I explain you why: because --
 7 let's -- could you give me back with my witness
 8 statement -- sorry, Mr Shvidler's statement addressed to 9 Forbes magazine?
 10 Q. Well, Mr Berezovsky, I think that without access to 11 Mr Shvidler's statement you can answer my question.
 12 A. Mm-hm.
 13 Q. I was putting it to you that you approved the paragraph 14 about you in the circular at the time that it was 15 prepared.
 16 A. Definitely not.
 17 Q. Right. Now, I'm going to show you what was said about 18 you. It's at page 34 of the bundle.
 19 A. 34?
 20 Q. Yes. Same document, just a bit further on.
 21 A. Just a second.
 22 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I'm sorry, Mr Sumption, please may we 23 have the --
 24 MR SUMPTION: {H(A)07/34}.
 25 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you.

110

1 THE WITNESS: Yes.
 2 MR SUMPTION: Have you got that open?
 3 A. Mm-hm.
 4 Q. Now, you will see under the table what is said is this:
 5 "FNK" --
 6 A. Just a second. 44, yes?
 7 Q. Correct -- no, not 44, 34.
 8 A. 34, sorry.
 9 Q. Page 34.
 10 A. 34. Just a second. Yes.
 11 Q. Under the table you will see a paragraph beginning
 12 "FNK".
 13 A. Yes.
 14 Q. Right.
 15 "FNK, SINS, Refine Oil and Runicom... [it says] are 16 all privately held companies and have close connections
 17 with the current management of Sibneft. As such, more 18 than 97% of the Company is currently controlled by the 19 Company's managers and a small group of private Russian 20 investors. An influential Russian figure, Boris 21 Berezovsky, who is currently the Deputy Secretary of the 22 Security Council of the Russian Federation, served on 23 Sibneft's Board of Directors until October 1996 and was 24 chairman of NFK when it won the right to manage 51% of 25 Sibneft's shares in the loan-for shares programme.

111

1 Mr Berezovsky does not own or control, or have any other
 2 interest in, any shares in Sibneft, directly or 3 indirectly. He does, however, maintain a close
 4 relationship with certain members of the senior
 5 management and the Board of Directors of the company."
 6 Now, that was the statement made about you --
 7 A. Yes.
 8 Q. -- and your case in this action is that that statement
 9 is wrong; is that right?
 10 A. It's absolutely lie what is written here.
 11 Q. Now, could you please take your own witness statement,
 12 Mr Berezovsky.
 13 A. Sorry?
 14 Q. Would you please take up your -- keep that document
 15 open, if you wouldn't mind.
 16 A. Yes, open. I keep everything open.
 17 Q. And take your own witness statement --
 18 A. Yes.
 19 Q. -- your fourth witness statement --
 20 A. Yes.
 21 Q. -- and turn to paragraph 196.
 22 A. Yes. 196.
 23 Q. Yes.
 24 A. Yes.
 25 Q. Forgive me, I've given you the wrong reference. You

112

1 will have to give me a moment while I chase up the false
2 reference, Mr Berezovsky. I'm sorry about that.
3 A. No problem. I spend much more time than you finding 4 something.
5 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Berezovsky, is it easier for you to 6 read in hard copy or on the screen? I'm just asking as 7 a matter of general interest.
8 THE WITNESS: I am reading now both. I have hard copy
9 and -- it's not a problem.
10 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: It's helpful to have it on the screen
11 as well?
12 THE WITNESS: Better, yes, if it's not a problem.
13 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, certainly.
14 THE WITNESS: Thank you. Thank you.
15 MR SUMPTION: I'm sorry, Mr Berezovsky.
16 THE WITNESS: Again, I'm just relaxing, it's nice.
17 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Do you want to come back to the point,
18 Mr Sumption?
19 MR SUMPTION: No, my Lady, I need to find it now. (Pause)
20 I think I may have got a reference to Ms Nosova's 21 statement instead but let's have a look. Yes, it's in 22 Ms Nosova's statement --
23 A. Just a second.
24 Q. I wonder if you'll take bundle D1, which you may have 25 put back.

1 A. Yes.
2 Q. Ms Nosova was the witness who said you were consulted
3 about this, or at least you told her that you were 4 consulted.
5 A. Just a second. Could you give me a reference?
6 Q. Have you got paragraph 195 on page 149 {D1/09/149}?
7 A. Yes, I have 19...
8 Q. I've already taken you to paragraph 195.
9 A. 195, correct.
10 Q. Yes, where Ms Nosova says you told her that you'd been 11 consulted about this before it was published. Okay?
12 A. Okay.
13 Q. What she says at 197 was:
14 "I was not particularly concerned about the 15 inclusion of this statement... I believed that, as 16 a result of the 1996 Agreement, the statement was 17 technically correct since Sibneft was held by
18 Mr Abramovich."
19 Now, was that your attitude, Mr Berezovsky, that it
20 was technically correct?
21 A. Again, it's statement of Mrs Nosova but I think that 22 "technically" -- "technically" -- it means we need to 23 ask Mrs Nosova what means "technically".
24 Q. Mr Berezovsky, I'm asking you whether it was your 25 attitude that it was technically correct.

1 A. No, no. I can't answer to that without understanding
2 what Ms Nosova mean when she said "technically correct".
3 Q. I think you can. Was it your understanding that the 4 statement about you in the 1997 circular was technically 5 correct? Did you think that?
6 A. No, again, I'm sorry, I'm sorry, I don't try not to 7 answer; I don't understand what means "technically 8 correct". It's printed in proper way, the wording: what 9 does mean "technically correct"?
10 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Berezovsky, forget Ms Nosova's
11 statement. Did you think what was said in the circular 12 was correct about --
13 A. In circular, you mean this one (indicates)?
14 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.
15 A. No, it's not correct.
16 MR SUMPTION: Could you please -- again leave the circular 17 open, would you, and --
18 A. Just I should take circular again, yes?
19 Q. Just leave it open. I'm going to ask you about another
20 document.
21 A. Okay. And Mrs Nosova, can I take away or -- 22 Q. You can put Ms Nosova away.
23 A. Thank you.
24 Q. Sorry, you can put her witness statement away.
25 A. I can't imagine that you have the other sense of that,

1 what is that.
2 Q. Right. I wonder if you could take up bundle
3 {H(A)95/244}. Just to show you what it is, if you look
4 at page 239, you will see the beginning of the document.
5 A. 239?
6 Q. 239. That tells you --
7 A. Just a second. What is that? What is this document?
8 Q. I'll tell you if you will listen.
9 A. Yes, sorry.
10 Q. At page 239 you can see that this is Michelle Duncan's 11 notes of the Tel Aviv meetings with Badri in 12 November 2007. All right?
13 A. It's written here like that, yes.
14 Q. Yes. Michelle Duncan was a solicitor from Cadwaladers, 15 your solicitors at the time, wasn't she?
16 A. Yes.
17 Q. You were present at this meeting between Cadwaladers and 18 Badri, as we can see.
19 A. Yes.
20 Q. Right?
21 A. Correct.
22 Q. And various statements are in fact attributed to you in 23 it.
24 A. Sorry --
25 Q. The one I'm interested in is page 244. All right?

1 A. But, sorry, the sentence before you said?
 2 Q. Please turn to page 244.
 3 A. Yes.
 4 Q. About six lines down, you will see a heading which says
 5 "Eurobond Prospectus".
 6 A. Just a second. From the top, six lines down?
 7 Q. About. Do you see the heading "Eurobond Prospectus"?
 8 A. Yes, yes. I have seen this paper, yes.
 9 Q. Right. Now, in the left-hand margin you will see the 10 initials BB, which is you.
 11 A. Yes, yes.
 12 Q. And what you are recorded as saying to the solicitors 13 is:
 14 "RA asked me to do this."
 15 A. Yes.
 16 Q. "He said we [shouldn't] public[ly mention] that [you]
 17 are there.
 18 "If you are ment[i]oned could] reduce value of 19 [company]."
 20 A. Yes.
 21 Q. That's what you said to Ms Duncan -- 22 A. No, no, just a second. It's what Michelle Duncan put in 23 this paper; it's not what I said to her.
 24 Q. The reason she put it in the paper, Mr Berezovsky, is 25 that you said it.

1 A. I, unfortunately, have examples, and we may discuss it
 2 later or now, when -- and not one example -- that when 3 you -- when the solicitors are making notes, it does not 4 mean that they correctly note what you said at the 5 meeting.
 6 Q. Mr Berezovsky, it's quite obvious, isn't it, that you
 7 told this to Michelle Duncan? It's exactly the same as 8 what Ms Nosova says in her witness statement happened.
 9 A. Again, again, I want to repeat again and again: what 10 I present to you is my understanding and my recollection
 11 of my connection to Mr Abramovich and to Mr Shvidler,
 12 and again I would like to stress that I never have seen
 13 this document before witness statement of Mr Shvidler
 14 which he gave in France.
 15 Q. Two people have independently said that you were 16 consulted about this document by Roman Abramovich:
 17 Ms Nosova has said so and you confirmed that to 18 Ms Michelle Duncan in 2007.
 19 A. Once more: I did not consult anybody concerning 20 Eurobonds certificate.
 21 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Can I be clear, Mr Berezovsky: the 22 question that was put to you was that you were consulted 23 about this document by Mr Abramovich. It's not that -- 24 A. Oh yes. Sorry, sorry, sorry, my Lady. It's my... I was 25 not consulted by Mr Abramovich, yes? I was informed by

1 Mr Abramovich that this is the certificate to get credit
 2 on the market for Sibneft company. That's it. And he
 3 said that, "We worry about that Sibneft strong connect
 4 to you". I said, "Roman", I don't remember, "Roman",
 5 I said, I don't remember, "Roman" -- I said that 6 I completely share their position to obtain the credit
 7 and, you know, "My position, it's clear that I am --
 8 I hold -- you hold my shares, but put in the way which 9 you like to put but without damaging me".
 10 Because, my Lady, if you allow me to compare what 11 Mr Shvidler wrote in his witness statement and the paper
 12 which he supplied to his witness statement, it will be 13 completely different what's written in the certificate.
 14 And this is the point.
 15 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I see.
 16 A. Moreover, my Lady, I'm sorry that I maybe take your time
 17 more, but it's very important that if we refer to this 18 certificate, yes, and read this sentence which 19 Mr Sumption insists, we see there that it's written that 20 I was chairman of NFK, yes?
 21 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.
 22 A. On the other hand, in his personal witness statement
 23 which Mr Shvidler signed for the purpose of this trial, 24 it's written completely different: it's written that 25 I never have been really a chairman of the NFK. And

1 it's exactly the question how it's possible to present
 2 certificate for obtaining money on the market falsifying
 3 the reality. This is the question.
 4 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you.
 5 MR SUMPTION: Mr Shvidler in his witness statement was in 6 fact talking about Sibneft and not NFK but I don't want
 7 to get diverted into details that have no bearing on the 8 point I'm putting to you, Mr Berezovsky.
 9 The point I'm putting to you is this: you, at the 10 time, were asked about the circular because it contained
 11 a paragraph about you, and you were consulted about it 12 and agreed it. Now, you've denied that and I suggest to 13 you that you are deliberately lying about that because 14 you can see how damaging the statement is to the case
 15 that you are making in this action.
 16 A. Look, Mr Sumption, it's completely opposite. I explain
 17 you again. You don't want maybe to understand what 18 I try to present to you.
 19 For me it was the best if this certificate in this 20 way was presented to Forbes magazine. It stressed that 21 I don't have any connection to Sibneft at all and it's 22 very -- it could be very useful for me. But I insist 23 when I have seen this certificate that Mr Shvidler put 24 in his witness statement the reality and not dream, yes?
 25 And if you see the difference between what is written

1 here and the Shvidler statement to Forbes magazine, you
 2 will recognise immediately that he is lying.
 3 Q. What Mr Shvidler said in his witness statement in the 4 Forbes litigation was that you had no shareholding.
 5 That is --
 6 A. It's correct.
 7 Q. And that is the point that is being made here but in 8 more emphatic terms. What is being said here is that 9 you had no shareholding or any other interest.
 10 A. Yes, it's fine. I accept that.
 11 Q. Now, Mr Abramovich did not ask you to agree to that on 12 the basis that he shouldn't mention your connection; he 13 asked you to agree it full stop, didn't he, and you did?
 14 A. Again, Mr Abramovich/Mr Shvidler never present me this 15 document; they just inform me about their certificate
 16 and they just inform me that, "Boris, we should distance
 17 from you in this certificate".
 18 On the other hand, as I told you already, that 19 I have seen this certificate the first time in France
 20 and it would be very useful for me to present exactly
 21 that wording for Forbes magazine, to show that I don't 22 have anything with this company, but I insist to present
 23 the truth, not what was written there. And I already 24 proved you that it's lie here because I have been the 25 chairman of Sibneft -- of NFK and Shvidler never 121

1 mentioned that I have been chairman of Sibneft in his
 2 witness statement.
 3 Moreover, Mr Sumption -- I'm sorry, my Lady --
 4 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, that's fine, Mr Berezovsky.
 5 A. Because it's very important. It's very important, one
 6 point more.
 7 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I've got the point.
 8 A. When I start to investigate this document in details, 9 it's written -- but I took your time, I'm sorry, when 10 I start to take page by page. Could you find there
 11 reference to member of the board, to member of the board
 12 of NFK or Sibneft? I don't remember. Could you find 13 this page?
 14 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, your counsel in re-examination, if 15 he thinks it's appropriate --
 16 MR SUMPTION: Mr Berezovsky -- 17 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just a second, Mr Sumption -- will 18 take you back to it. So let Mr Sumption continue,
 19 please.
 20 THE WITNESS: Okay, sorry.
 21 MR SUMPTION: Right. I imagine you've had enough of that 22 document, Mr Berezovsky. Let me show you another one:
 23 {H(A)12/185}.
 24 THE WITNESS: My Lady? My Lady?
 25 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

122

1 THE WITNESS: Could I mention just I think it's important
 2 for general understanding, it's only the reason why
 3 I try to put your attention to this document because 4 this document is completely falsified. It is important
 5 to understand. Because when Abramovich mentioned as 6 a member of the board, it's written there that he 7 graduated from Moscow Road Institute. If you find his 8 biography which he presented in front of you in his 9 witness statement, nothing mentioned about Institute of 10 Roads. And this --
 11 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Berezovsky, can I just say we've 12 got a lot to get through of.
 13 THE WITNESS: I see, sorry.
 14 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: These are the points that no doubt 15 your counsel will be raising with Mr Abramovich in 16 cross-examination --
 17 THE WITNESS: Okay, okay. Yes.
 18 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: -- if he thinks it's appropriate to do
 19 so. I don't want to cut you off if you've got something 20 but points like that..
 21 THE WITNESS: Sorry, sorry. I just want -- 22 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: You say it's a false document because 23 there is Mr Abramovich, you say, saying something about 24 himself that isn't correct?
 25 A. Absolutely correct.

123

1 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I see. Thank you.
 2 MR SUMPTION: Now, Mr Berezovsky, perhaps you would take
 3 {H(A)12/185}.
 4 A. Sorry?
 5 Q. {H(A)12/185} is what I think you've just been given.
 6 A. Yes, sorry.
 7 Q. Now, this is the English version and in my bundle, and 8 I hope in yours, there's a yellow bundle behind with 9 Russian text in it.
 10 A. Yes.
 11 Q. Okay?
 12 A. Thank you very much.
 13 Q. Now, this is an extract from Kommersant newspaper, which 14 is a newspaper that you owned by 1999, wasn't it? Yes?
 15 A. It depends on -- yes, I think so, yes.
 16 Q. Well, you think you owned it?
 17 A. Just a second. What time -- I don't remember when we 18 buy Kommersant, when we bought. Just a second.
 19 Q. Well, I thought it was in early 1999. But never mind 20 whether you owned it or not; we can check that. Just 21 look at the text.
 22 A. Yes.
 23 Q. Reading from the English, about halfway through the 24 first paragraph, this is an extract from an interview
 25 with the newspaper that you gave. Do you see that?

124

1 A. Just a second. Yes.
 2 Q. The interviewer asks you:
 3 "There are rumours that the main shareholders of 4 'Sibneft'... were established with your direct 5 participation and that you owned significant stakes in 6 these companies. Now 'Sibneft' claims that you are not 7 its shareholder neither as an individual, nor as 8 a founder of any co-owning companies. Who received the 9 shares in 'Sibneft' previously owned by you?"
 10 Then your answer is as follows:
 11 "I was participating in setting-up of 'Sibneft' as 12 a lobbyist, not being a shareholder of that company.
 13 I lobbied the idea, the concept of establishment of such 14 a company, that I believe is right. In my view
 15 'Sibneft' is at present one of the best oil companies...
 16 I am not a member of the board of directors... I was 17 never involved in managing this company."
 18 Now, one of the things you say in that interview --
 19 A. Yes.
 20 Q. -- is that you were not a shareholder of that company.
 21 A. It's correct.
 22 Q. Sibneft.
 23 A. It's correct.
 24 Q. And you weren't, were you?
 25 A. No, again, my shareholder -- Roman Abramovich was 125

1 holding my shares. It means that I was not shareholder.
 2 Q. The interviewer is interested in establishing your
 3 connection with the company. You did not say that you
 4 had an interest in any shares, did you, which is what 5 you're saying in this litigation?
 6 A. If it's written -- if I didn't mention that time that,
 7 it means that I didn't mention that time that. And what 8 does...
 9 Q. Could we look at {H(A)13/111}, please. You haven't got 10 it yet but somebody will give it to you in a minute.
 11 You can put away H(A)12.
 12 A. Thank you. And the file with Michelle Duncan, I need to 13 keep that still?
 14 Q. No, you can put that away.
 15 A. Thank you.
 16 Q. All you need to have with you now is bundle H(A)13 and 17 the bundle with your witness statement in it. Just to 18 show you the beginning of this document, the beginning
 19 of it is page 106 {H(A)13/106}. Look at page 106. You
 20 need to turn back a few pages, Mr Berezovsky.
 21 A. Just to make it clear, I want -- because it's two 22 specification, yes? One specification, it's in the 23 right --
 24 Q. {H(A)13/106}.
 25 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So the bottom right-hand corner.

126

1 THE WITNESS: Yes. 106, yes?
 2 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.
 3 THE WITNESS: Just a second.
 4 MR SUMPTION: I'm just showing you this so you can see what 5 the document is.
 6 A. Yes.
 7 Q. Now, this document comes from a book called "The Art of 8 the Impossible".
 9 A. Yes.
 10 Q. Now, that is a collection of articles and interviews and 11 speeches by you, isn't it?
 12 A. It's correct. Again, I ask you very much: if it's 13 something in Russian, I ask you to present me in 14 Russian, please.
 15 Q. Did you write this book in English or in Russian?
 16 A. No, definitely -- I even did not write this book.
 17 Q. Well --
 18 A. As you correctly mentioned before, it's just collection
 19 of some of my interviews and so different occasions.
 20 And this -- I'm sorry, put me the question. Could you
 21 allow me to answer?
 22 Q. It's a three-volume collection of interviews published
 23 in English, isn't it, though no doubt the interviews
 24 were originally given in Russian?
 25 A. You don't give me to answer unfortunately, my Lady. I'm 127

1 not in rush, I'm sorry to say, yes, I don't have any
 2 commitment. And I just want to mention that this book
 3 was issued as a collection of my interviews in Russian
 4 and in English but I think 95 per cent in Russian, maybe 5 5 per cent in English, and that was translated into 6 English.
 7 And as far as translation is concerned, I already 8 mentioned: if we discuss something in Russian, what is 9 possible to obtain in Russian, I ask you very much to 10 help me to present the truth here and I need to have it
 11 in Russian.
 12 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just a second, Mr Berezovsky.
 13 MR SUMPTION: Would you see --
 14 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, just a second, Mr Sumption,
 15 please.
 16 Was this book published in English?
 17 A. This book was published in English as well.
 18 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Okay. Well, in the first instance I'm 19 going to permit Mr Sumption to take you to the English
 20 paragraph, then if you want to look at the Russian 21 edition, either what's on the screen can be translated 22 to you or alternatively you can have your attention
 23 directed to the Russian. Okay?
 24 THE WITNESS: Absolutely, my Lady. Absolutely.
 25 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right.

128

1 Now, Mr Sumption, please can you ask the question by 2 reference to the English paragraph in the first
 3 instance.
 4 MR SUMPTION: Can I first of all establish from the witness
 5 whether {H(A)13/106R}, which is the yellow section
 6 immediately afterwards, is in fact the Russian version?
 7 A. Just a second. We discuss the same thing.
 8 Q. Mr Berezovsky, there is a Russian document immediately
 9 after this --
 10 A. Ah, I see.
 11 Q. -- which may be a translation --
 12 A. Great. Thank you very much.
 13 Q. -- into Russian of this document, or of the original 14 Russian rather.
 15 A. Yes, okay. Fine.
 16 Q. Can you just confirm whether it is or not? My Russian 17 isn't good enough for that. Do you see --
 18 A. We'll check it now together.
 19 Q. Right. Do you see 106R?
 20 A. Sorry?
 21 Q. Look at page 106R, the first of the yellow pages. Look 22 at the heading on the top and tell me whether this is 23 a Russian version of the article that begins at 24 page 106.
 25 A. The title is the same.

129

1 Q. Okay. Well, then can we assume that it is? That may
 2 solve your problem.
 3 A. Yes.
 4 Q. Right.
 5 Now, I want to ask you about something which in the 6 English version is on page 111. If you look at 7 page 110, you'll see a heading:
 8 "Politics is the best investment."
 9 Page 110, right?
 10 A. Yes.
 11 Q. Now, would you please find that heading for me in the 12 Russian.
 13 A. I'm sorry. Mr Sumption, I ask you very much: I try to 14 present my statement in English, you understand my 15 English is not sufficient enough to be in hurry at the 16 same time and you agree to put correct question, yes,
 17 and I need to give you correct answers. Don't push me,
 18 please, okay? Thank you very much.
 19 Q. Mr Berezovsky, it sometimes helps if one is allowed to 20 finish explaining where to find the relevant part.
 21 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Can we have the page number in 22 English, please, first.
 23 MR SUMPTION: Could you please find -- page 110 is where 24 you'll find the English heading.
 25 A. Yes.

130

1 Q. You'll see a heading, "Politics is the best investment".
 2 A. Yes, I will find that in Russian.
 3 Q. Can you please find that in the Russian text. (Pause)
 4 A. There is not subtitles, I'm sorry.
 5 Q. I wonder if the interpreter could help.
 6 A. No, no, just a second.
 7 MR RABINOWITZ: My Lady, he might try 110R.
 8 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: 110R.
 9 A. The same page, yes. Just a second. "Politics is the 10 best investment".
 11 Q. Right?
 12 A. Yes, I've got it. Sorry.
 13 Q. In the English, about eight lines down from that 14 heading, there's a question from Mr or Ms Gevorkyan
 15 which begins in the English:
 16 "Among visible benefits that Berezovsky received..."
 17 Can you find that, please.
 18 A. Yes, yes.
 19 Q. All right?
 20 A. Yes.
 21 Q. Now, that says:
 22 "Among visible benefits that Berezovsky received
 23 from the new government is the return of the Iran oil
 24 quota to Sibneft. Or was that a gift to Abramovich?
 25 "I am not a Sibneft [share]holder, and I have said

131

1 that many times, although I was lobbying the creation of 2 this company, and I have strategic interests within this
 3 company and in relation to it."
 4 Again, you explained that your role was in the 5 creation of the company and not in relation to the 6 holding of its shares, didn't you?
 7 A. I don't see -- just a second.
 8 It's absolutely correct precisely wording here and 9 I don't have any, let's say, anything what worry me that 10 I said something wrong here. But I ask you nevertheless 11 to understand the context of everything what we're 12 discussing. It's my principal political position, 13 moreover.
 14 Q. Now, you can put away bundle H(A)13 and I wonder if you
 15 could be given bundle {H(A)36/187}.
 16 A. This one I put away at all?
 17 Q. Yes, please.
 18 A. Thank you.
 19 Q. Now, this is from the Moscow Times of 28 June 2001.
 20 That is a newspaper that is published in English, isn't
 21 it?
 22 A. Just a second. 2000 -- which month?
 23 Q. 28 June 2001.
 24 A. I just want to recollect where I had been that time and 25 what is that for me, to comment correctly.

132

1 Q. Well, the question I asked you is: can you confirm the
2 Moscow Times is an English-language newspaper?
3 A. Moscow Times is English -- yes, because it's now New 4 Times in Russian, but Moscow Times is English newspaper.
5 Q. Yes.
6 Now, this came out on 28 June 2001 and if you look
7 at the beginning of the article:
8 "Boris Berezovsky announced Wednesday that he owns
9 half of Sibneft, backing away from earlier contradictory
10 statements that he either owns 7 per cent of the No. 6
11 oil company or no stake at all."
12 Now, do you remember announcing shortly before
13 28 June 2001 that you owned half of Sibneft?
14 A. Again, I'm really -- it's important for me to understand 15 when it was done this statement -- this interview, I'm 16 sorry.
17 Q. Well, it was published on 28 June 2001.
18 A. It means that the time when I already left Russia and 19 based already in England, correct, yes.
20 And, okay, look, if you -- okay, I try to be short:
21 put the question and I'll answer.
22 Q. Did you announce shortly before 28 June 2001, the 23 Wednesday before this was published, that you owned half
24 of Sibneft?
25 A. I think that it's absolutely correct what is written

1 here.
2 Q. And was it right, as the newspaper observes, that that 3 was contradictory with your earlier statements on the 4 subject?
5 A. I think it's absolutely correct, that it's 6 contradictory.
7 Q. Yes. You will see a bit further down, three-quarters of 8 the way down the column --
9 A. Yes.
10 Q. -- that:
11 "Sibneft strongly denied Berezovsky's declaration.
12 "'Boris Berezovsky does not directly or indirectly
13 own any stake in Sibneft,' a company spokesman said."
14 Now, you will agree, I imagine, that you have said
15 a variety of different things about your interest in 16 Sibneft; sometimes that you had one, sometimes that you
17 had a small one, sometimes that you had none at all?
18 A. You're absolutely correct, and any time I can absolutely 19 clear explain why it's happened so.
20 Q. Right.
21 A. Yes, I can explain.
22 Q. Very well. Go ahead.
23 A. Yes, exactly this or because it's mainly controversial 24 -- contradicted statement, and as far as this is 25 concerned, I can -- it's the reason why I asked you what

1 time it was written.
2 It was written -- interview was done when I already 3 had been in immigration in London, I was looking for 4 political asylum here, and Roman Abramovich -- and this
5 is the case -- threat me and I had to sell the company
6 undervalued and at that time they only start to pay us
7 what was agreed, Badri and Roman, 1.3. And I made this 8 statement just because Badri asked me not to present the 9 position that we are already out of the company because 10 if we present the position that we're out of the 11 company, Roman may stop to pay and will have clear,
12 let's say, reference that we accept this position.
13 And it means -- and it's important for, I think, our 14 future days to understand -- that after Roman betrayed
15 me and after they put in jail my friend Nikolai, 16 I accept all of them like enemies. It means that, for 17 me, it already was not lie; it's disinformation, yes?
18 And you, as a specialist in war, understand excellent
19 what is the difference between lie and disinformation, 20 when you understand that in front of you there are 21 people who want to kill you, who want to squeeze you,
22 and you are trying to protect you, disinform them.
23 This is my position. I don't know how, my Lady, you 24 estimate this position, but it's absolutely clear what 25 I understand that time.

1 Q. How would it help to prevent people from killing you or 2 attacking you to say that you owned half of Sibneft?
3 That's what you said in June.
4 A. It's funny, okay, but nevertheless I did not -- now
5 I mentioned only that it's protect -- according to,
6 again, of Badri understanding -- it's protect us to be 7 paid after we already agreed to sell our shares to 8 Roman Abramovich.
9 Because, as you know, the payment was done not in 10 the second and if it's June 2001, it means that it's 11 exactly the time or almost the time when we signed --
12 agreement was -- when we signed agreement with sheikh
13 because it was request of Abramovich to do so, it 14 doesn't matter when it's done, I am sure late on, and we 15 didn't get -- didn't get money, at least all money; we 16 got it just at the beginning of 2003.
17 Q. Mr Berezovsky, almost every statement you've made in 18 that last answer is untrue. Let me go through them.
19 First of all, you had signed the Devonia agreement
20 on 5 June, about three weeks before this, hadn't you?
21 A. It's correct. It's exactly.
22 Q. Yes. Now, the Devonia agreement was in fact -- we're 23 going to have to deal with it, I'm afraid, at some 24 length in a later stage of your cross-examination -- an 25 agreement under which you said that you were selling

1 your interest to Devonian, the sheikh's company, wasn't
 2 it?
 3 A. I don't remember well, but I think we discuss about -- 4 I don't remember -- we discuss about interest in this
 5 paper or our shares which Roman was holding. But if you
 6 show me agreement, I may comment that. But the point
 7 is -- principal point is that we sold our interest.
 8 Q. The Devonian agreement, Mr Berezovsky, was simply 9 a document produced in order to persuade Clydesdale Bank
 10 to accept your money, wasn't it?
 11 A. I don't know anything about that. I just know that 12 Roman want not -- did not want to pay us directly and it
 13 was not the first time that he already paid dividends,
 14 as I remember, from Sibneft or from Rusal -- I don't 15 remember well -- using the same way. He paid for ORT
 16 using the same way.
 17 And as I know, as I know, in spite -- I very 18 attentively listened to your skeleton and it really 19 produced for me impression that if I really saw, let's 20 say, money-laundering professional and so, why, after 21 investigation in Switzerland for years, after 22 investigation in Holland for years, after investigation
 23 which I present all my papers in London for 24 Pricewaterhouse, I don't have any problem with that 25 money, if it's so?

1 Q. Mr Berezovsky, the reason why you made this statement --
 2 we'll come to this in greater detail in due course -- at 3 this stage is that you were saying that you owned half
 4 of Sibneft publicly because that is what you had said to 5 Clydesdale Bank?
 6 A. Believe me, at that time I even -- I don't think that 7 I knew at that time -- maybe I knew about that but 8 I don't have any reason for Clydes Bank because, as 9 I know, later on Clydes Bank ask me to move my money to 10 another bank but -- and we ask -- and you ask, I think,
 11 to disclose Clydes Bank the reason, and maybe you
 12 already got this paper, and I don't have any problem
 13 with that.
 14 Q. Mr Curtis, who was your solicitor, sent a copy of this 15 article to Clydesdale Bank as part of his dossier to 16 show that you had an interest in Sibneft.
 17 A. Unfortunately we are not able to ask the reason why 18 Mr Curtis said that, but okay. And what? And why it's 19 so criminal?
 20 Q. It seems very odd, Mr Berezovsky, that you always denied
 21 owning any share in Sibneft before 2001. The first time
 22 that you claim to have owned half of Sibneft in public 23 is this document when, on your own case, you had just 24 parted with it.
 25 A. Just a second. Let's try to become precise. "Half of

1 Sibneft", it doesn't mean half shares. If it's written
 2 half shares, I also accept to discuss that. But could 3 you point me where it's written "half shares"?
 4 Q. What the paper says is you own half of Sibneft.
 5 A. Ah, it's better.
 6 Q. Now, what I'm putting to you is this, Mr Berezovsky.
 7 You consistently denied owning Sibneft or any part of 8 Sibneft before 2001. The first occasion when you
 9 publicly say that you own half of Sibneft comes after,
 10 on your case in this action, you had parted with it.
 11 A. Mr Sumption, I -- we really are preparing to talk long 12 time, days. I just want -- my Lady, I just want to take 13 three minutes --
 14 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, could you just answer the 15 question, please, Mr Berezovsky. You're not here, I'm 16 afraid, to give speeches.
 17 THE WITNESS: Yes, yes.
 18 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just answer the question, and 19 obviously you must have as much time as you want to 20 answer the question, but please do that.
 21 THE WITNESS: Okay. Could you put again the question?
 22 MR SUMPTION: What I'm suggesting to you, Mr Berezovsky -- 23 and the reason I'm suggesting it to you is that this is 24 the submission I will be making to her Ladyship in due 25 course and I'm giving you an opportunity to say what you

1 want to say about it -- is that you consistently denied
 2 publicly having any shareholding in Sibneft before 2001.
 3 The first time that you publicly claimed to have 4 a shareholding in Sibneft was after the date when, in 5 this action, you claim to have parted with it?
 6 A. Okay. The reason why I publicly didn't present that 7 because of my agreement '97 with Roman Abramovich, where 8 we agreed that I distance from the company because of my 9 political exposure.
 10 After I left Russia, I didn't have -- and after 11 Abramovich threat me, I didn't have any obligation in 12 front of Abramovich to keep the position the same. And 13 it's reason why I -- because I just took time that 14 I didn't remember, did I own it before tell that, but 15 you help me really. My position changed publicly just 16 because of one reason: Abramovich was not more my 17 friend, we become enemy unfortunately, and I didn't have 18 any obligations in front of him.
 19 MR SUMPTION: My Lady, I'm going to move to a slightly 20 different topic. If your Ladyship was thinking of 21 taking a break?
 22 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well. I'll take ten minutes,
 23 Mr Berezovsky.
 24 THE WITNESS: Thank you, my Lady.
 25 (2.55 pm)

1 (A short break)
 2 (3.05 pm)
 3 MR SUMPTION: Mr Berezovsky, I want to go back to the 4 beginning of the story and ask you some questions about 5 the agreement that you say that you made with 6 Mr Abramovich in 1995.
 7 A. Do we need that (indicates) more?
 8 Q. You will need your witness statement but you will not 9 need, for the moment, anything else. If you want to get 10 rid of the purple volume, please do.
 11 Now, when do you say that you agreed with 12 Mr Abramovich and Mr Patarkatsishvili that you would 13 share whatever interest was acquired in Sibneft? When 14 was that in 1995?
 15 A. It was before presidential decree '95 about creation of 16 Sibneft.
 17 Q. That was on 24 August. Can you be a bit more precise?
 18 How long before?
 19 A. I think we discussed that before, I think -- maybe 20 a couple of weeks before that we already find this -- 21 because, as you know, we discussed long time generally,
 22 creation and then how to participate, maybe two weeks
 23 before decree.
 24 Q. Now, you had actually begun to lobby the Russian
 25 government in support of Mr Abramovich's project much

1 earlier in the year, hadn't you, around February?
 2 A. It was not Abramovich project, as I tried to mention to 3 you. It was project of Viktor Gorodilov, general
 4 manager of Sibneft, who wrote directly precisely.
 5 Q. I'm not asking you about that aspect. I'm interested in 6 the date.
 7 A. Yes, but you're putting your question the second time,
 8 the same story, and I want to be precise with that.
 9 We start to discuss the project at the end of '94
 10 and all the time up to decree of president, the creation
 11 of Sibneft. It's correct.
 12 Q. Now, as I understand it, in February 1995 you were 13 involved, you say, in the writing of a letter from 14 Mr Gorodilov, Mr Viktor Gorodilov --
 15 A. Correct.
 16 Q. -- who was the general manager of the Noyabrskneftegas
 17 business in Siberia, wasn't he?
 18 A. Correct.
 19 Q. Now, as I understand it, in February you were involved
 20 in a letter that he wrote to President Yeltsin with 21 a proposal for the privatisation of the company of which 22 he was the general manager.
 23 A. It is correct.
 24 Q. Right. You were involved with that because it was an 25 early stage of your own lobbying process with the

1 Russian government, wasn't it?
 2 A. It's correct. And thank you very much that you don't
 3 use "krysha" word; it's lobbying, that's correct.
 4 Q. And by spring 1995, as you tell us in your witness
 5 statement, you were already discussing the project, or 6 discussing matters related to it, with Mr Yeltsin and 7 Mr Yumashev; we discussed that this morning.
 8 A. I told precisely that I didn't discuss the project of 9 Sibneft with Mr Yeltsin.
 10 Q. The point I'm making is this, Mr Berezovsky: you had 11 already started work on this project -- never mind whose 12 it was -- within six weeks or so of returning from 13 Mr Aven's cruise in the Caribbean, hadn't you?
 14 A. I don't remember, six weeks or -- I think I start 15 immediately, even on the boat we start to discuss that.
 16 Q. Okay. So you immediately started to set about trying to 17 persuade the Russian government to support this project?
 18 A. First of all I tried to obtain more information about 19 what is there and, as I mentioned in my witness
 20 statement, I met Viktor Gorodilov long time before -- 21 not long time before -- I met him the first time in '91, 22 as I remember, and definitely I knew him and I want to 23 understand from the firsthand what it means.
 24 Q. I'm just interested in the dates at the moment,
 25 Mr Berezovsky.

1 Before you embarked on the process of trying to
 2 persuade the Russian government to support the project,
 3 you must have had some sort of understanding with 4 Mr Abramovich about the terms on which you were doing
 5 it?
 6 A. At the beginning, at the beginning, as I told you, the 7 first point was to discuss what is there, yes, to create
 8 the company and only when it become more or less clear 9 that it's possible, definitely we start step by step to 10 discuss interest in the company which we plan to 11 privatise. And moreover that time already, as 12 I remember, was a decree of president which allowed to 13 privatise oil company.
 14 Q. All I'm suggesting to you, Mr Berezovsky, is that even 15 if it wasn't the complete understanding, you must have 16 had some kind of understanding with Mr Abramovich right 17 at the outset, before you started trying to persuade the 18 Russian government to support this project?
 19 A. I don't recollect that because it was absolutely clear
 20 that to start -- I don't remember exactly when we start 21 to discuss this point but definitely not from the 22 beginning, it's absolutely clear. Moreover, I made in 23 my statement absolutely clear that Mr Aven and 24 Mr Fridman came to me asking me to stop my relations
 25 with Abramovich when they recognised that it could be

1 successful. Because from the beginning, possible to 2 discuss, I believe that it's possible, definitely, but
 3 it's not to believe that we have to share, "You have 50, 4 we have 50", it was not at that time.
 5 Q. Could you look at paragraph 95 of your witness
 6 statement, please.
 7 A. Yes. 95?
 8 Q. Yes.
 9 A. 95, yes?
 10 Q. Yes.
 11 A. Just I want to be sure that it's my witness statement
 12 because...
 13 Q. Flag 17 is your witness statement.
 14 A. Sorry?
 15 Q. Flag 17 is your witness statement.
 16 A. And page?
 17 Q. Page 216 of the bundle, {D2/17/216}.
 18 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Paragraph 95.
 19 THE WITNESS: 216, yes, sorry.
 20 MR SUMPTION: All right? Now, what you say here is:
 21 "From early in 1995 when I started working to bring 22 about the creation of Sibneft, it was accepted between 23 Badri, Mr Abramovich and me that the three of us would 24 work together as partners to acquire the company and 25 would then be partners in the company once we acquired

1 it."
 2 Now, what I want to ask you is this. You say that
 3 "was accepted"; was it actually discussed and agreed
 4 from early in 1995?
 5 A. Agreed of what: that we will be partners?
 6 Q. What you say here.
 7 A. Yes.
 8 Q. You say this "was accepted" --
 9 A. Yes, yes, I understand.
 10 Q. Let me ask the question, Mr Berezovsky.
 11 A. Sorry.
 12 Q. You say this "was accepted" from early 1995. Was it
 13 agreed from early 1995?
 14 A. Again, I'm sorry, maybe I don't understand. What was 15 agreed? Could you tell me?
 16 Q. Just read paragraph 95 to yourself.
 17 A. Okay, thank you very much. (Pause)
 18 Yes, it's correct.
 19 Q. Now, when you say that these things were "accepted" from 20 early in 1995, are you saying that they were actually
 21 agreed?
 22 A. Yes, it was agreed.
 23 Q. From early in 1995, you say that?
 24 A. That we start to work to create, it's written to create,
 25 and then if it will be created, the partner --

1 Q. Mr Berezovsky, listen carefully to my question, please.
 2 Are you saying that it was actually agreed between 3 you, Mr Abramovich and Mr Patarkatsishvili from early 4 1995 -- and it's the date I'm interested in -- that the 5 three of you would work together as partners and would 6 be partners in the company once acquired? Are you
 7 saying that that was actually agreed between you from 8 early 1995?
 9 A. Yes, it was agreed. If we will be successful to create 10 the company, we'll be partners, and everything was 11 connected to create the company who also will be 12 partners, with obligations, what it means.
 13 Q. When you say "From early in 1995", that must mean right
 14 at the beginning in January when you embarked upon this 15 course; is that right?
 16 A. I'm sorry, again? May I read the question? (Pause)
 17 I don't remember it's exactly January, could be 18 January but, again, it was agreed that we will work as 19 partners to create the company and if it will be 20 successful, we'll own the company as partners. It's 21 correct.
 22 Q. Do you know when Mr Abramovich first met
 23 Mr Patarkatsishvili?
 24 A. Very, very, very soon after I returned back from the 25 trip because Badri was my -- okay, I don't want to

1 explain. I answered the question. Sorry. Sorry, my 2 Lady, that I got a bit..
 3 Q. Mr Abramovich says it was in March; do you agree with 4 that or disagree with it or are you neutral?
 5 A. It's complicated. I don't think so because, as I told
 6 you, Badri was my closest partner and my only one
 7 closest partner at that time and I paid a lot of 8 attention to this project which Abramovich described me
 9 and it's not natural that it took long -- so long time
 10 that I wait to present him to Badri. But I can't 11 exclude that. I think it's not likely.
 12 Q. Who was present when you agreed that the three of you
 13 would work together as partners to acquire the company
 14 and would then be partners in the company once you 15 acquired it?
 16 A. I think that only three of us --
 17 Q. Nobody else?
 18 A. I don't recollect. I recollect there's Badri, Roman and 19 me.
 20 Q. I'm not asking you for the exact words that were used,
 21 but can you help us with the gist of them, the substance
 22 of the words that were used?
 23 A. Which we -- at that case, used in Russia all the time
 24 that Badri -- first of all, okay, again, I don't 25 remember the details; it's a long, long time ago. But

1 my mainly understanding is that when I return back, and 2 Badri at that time managed -- we just start to create
 3 ORT because, as you remember, the decree was issued of 4 ORT '94 -- and, my Lady, I am sorry that I will try to 5 pay attention to that because I have so-called parallel
 6 life; this is the problem for me. The problem with 7 Sibneft was the beginning and the end of his life, yes?
 8 And for me it was the other story, in parallel.
 9 I just give you one example to pay attention to that 10 because I can't do it in different way. Sibneft
 11 unfortunately was in -- not in the number one priority
 12 for me, and I give you just simple example. On 13 12 May '97, when everybody enjoy -- and me as well --
 14 that we won auction for 51 per cent of Sibneft, that 15 day, exactly that day, I have been with Yeltsin to sign
 16 the peaceful agreement with Chechnya.
 17 It means I want to stress it was not my life, this 18 Sibneft. It was priority, it was important, but it was 19 not even the second priority; the second was ORT. And 20 I just want to present that it's my truthful position,
 21 not the other one. I just want...
 22 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well. I've got the picture.
 23 THE WITNESS: I'm sorry.
 24 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, no, I've got the picture. I think 25 the question you were being asked was -- well,

1 Mr Sumption, perhaps you can ask the question again.
 2 A. The second was -- I'm sorry, that's my... Okay. I'm
 3 sorry, Mr Sumption, could you...
 4 MR SUMPTION: What I asked you was whether you could tell us
 5 not the exact words -- that would be unrealistic -- but 6 what was the gist or substance --
 7 A. The substance was --
 8 Q. -- of what was actually said when you agreed?
 9 A. Yes. The substance was I informed that I was excited by 10 young, clever man and the idea which he present to build
 11 the oil company, as far as we had already idea to do
 12 that but we didn't have power, we don't -- Badri managed 13 ORT and I just start to be involved in politics. And 14 I was happy that Mr Abramovich initiated, he initiated 15 this project in front of me, it's absolutely true, and 16 I was happy that he will organise all what can help us 17 together to build the project. And the words was very 18 simple: "Roman and Badri, I want that we move to this 19 project together as a partner to create. Roman will 20 take the bottom line, he will stay with the managers and 21 I was" -- it's important.
 22 What most surprised me on the board, as far as 23 Abramovich is concerned, that I knew Gorodilov, Viktor, 24 before and he had very -- he has; he's still alive, and 25 I'm happy with that -- he has very strong character.

1 And when I tried to discuss with him in '91, the first
 2 time met him, it was very complicated for me to convince
 3 him to move to privatisation and so on. And when I met
 4 Abramovich, I was really surprised. Being young, this 5 man tell me that he has very good relations with 6 Gorodilov, who I know, and that the relations, he 7 thinks, allow him to help to convince him to go to 8 privatisation.
 9 This was my surprise, and it's exactly what 10 I described to Badri when we met and I think -- and 11 Badri was -- at the beginning he didn't understand well 12 what is that, but very soon he start to realise and we 13 start to meet step by step to think what to do. And it 14 is the reason why Mr Abramovich helped me to meet with 15 Mr Gorodilov and then Mr Alexeyevich(?), in other words
 16 all parties which met together finally.
 17 And that's the reason why I said that Mr Abramovich 18 was a middleman. It turned out only later on, when 19 Viktor Gorodilov discovered his statement in front of 20 Prosecutor Office, he said that, "It was my idea to 21 create Sibneft, not Mr Abramovich". He said this 22 directly, "It was my idea to create". At that time
 23 I didn't recognise it, only after, during disclosure, 24 I recognised that Abramovich was the middleman between 25 me and the second party. But very -- but I don't want

1 to reduce role of Mr Abramovich, but he was not how he
 2 presented him to myself at that time.
 3 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I see, thank you.
 4 THE WITNESS: Thank you.
 5 MR SUMPTION: Are you saying that it was your idea to 6 amalgamate the two Siberian businesses and not 7 Mr Abramovich's?
 8 A. My idea what?
 9 Q. What do you say was your idea in that last answer?
 10 A. Again, I never said that my idea was to create Sibneft.
 11 To create Sibneft, from the very beginning, came to me
 12 from Mr Abramovich but presented him that it's his idea, 13 but it's turned out that it's not his idea; it's the 14 idea of Viktor Gorodilov. And he made it -- he even 15 said that Abramovich did not participate in creation of 16 Sibneft; it's the vision of Mr Gorodilov. My vision is 17 different. Abramovich participate, but as a middleman.
 18 Q. Mr Abramovich brought this plan to you on your cruise in 19 the Caribbean in Mr Aven's yacht, didn't he?
 20 A. Just a second. Correct.
 21 Q. Now, your case is that you were entitled to have 22 25 per cent of the company as made, the exact proportion
 23 being agreed, you think, sometime in July and August?
 24 That's your case, isn't it?
 25 A. Just -- okay, thank you very much. Just I ask you

1 because -- don't push me, please.
 2 Yes.
 3 Q. What --
 4 A. A little bit still, because me and Badri -- I just want
 5 to -- for your understanding. Me and Badri, we were 6 partners already and with us was Abramovich, that 7 Abramovich will own 50 per cent and me and Badri will 8 own 50 per cent, but Abramovich knew well that me and 9 Badri were equal partners, he knows that well, from the 10 beginning when I introduced him to Badri.
 11 Q. There was never any such agreement, was there,
 12 Mr Berezovsky?
 13 A. Sorry?
 14 Q. There was never any such agreement that you were going
 15 to share out the company when it was created?
 16 A. I disagree with that. Of '95 it's exactly agreement and 17 it was -- it was agreed about several positions. It was 18 agreed that if we will be successful in privatisation,
 19 we'll share it 50/50 between Abramovich on the one hand
 20 and Badri and me on the other hand; that we -- I put my 21 power to lobby it on the political level, Abramovich 22 will put his power to integrate everything on the 23 ground, and if something will generate by the new 24 company -- or not something; whatever we will generate 25 by new company, we will share the same proportions.

153

1 Q. When you agreed, as you claim to have done, that you
 2 would have 25 per cent of the new company when created,
 3 what exactly did you think you were going to get
 4 25 per cent of?
 5 A. Just a second. (Pause)
 6 I think that, first of all, I own 25 per cent of the 7 company, I own 25 per cent of the company; and the 8 second, that all benefit which will generated by company
 9 itself or how -- doesn't how -- doesn't mean how, in 10 different ways, through the other companies but 11 connected to the resources which Sibneft has, it also 12 will be shared in proportion 50/50 with Abramovich and 13 Badri and me, and between Badri and me in the same
 14 proportion: 50/50, 25/25.
 15 Q. You said there were two aspects, I think, in that last 16 answer, the first of which was that you were going to 17 own 25 per cent.
 18 A. Yes.
 19 Q. Now, was it agreed, therefore, that either you
 20 personally or some company controlled by you was going
 21 to be the registered shareholder?
 22 A. Yes, just -- no, not at that way. Not at that way. We 23 create -- first of all, we create together the company, 24 NFK, because the first step of privatisation was 25 auction, shares against of loan(?), and we create NFK in 154

1 proportion 50/50: 50 per cent the company which
 2 presented Mr Abramovich and 50 per cent the company
 3 which presented our group.
 4 Moreover, I just want to tell you that -- I just 5 remind that my understanding was that Abramovich also 6 has some team and some people -- at that time I already
 7 knew Mr Shvidler -- that he also share with somebody
 8 from his team. It doesn't...
 9 What is also important, what I also recollect, that 10 at the first stage, when we discussed to share this 11 50/50, the initial proposal was that we share it
 12 one-third, one-third and one-third between Abramovich, 13 Badri and me; but Roman -- and it was clear position of 14 Badri like that -- but Roman disagreed with that. He 15 said, "You work on the top level, I work on this level".
 16 My position was very simple. I already had this 17 experience with Badri, 50/50, and we return back to the 18 story: you will recognise that I gave him a lot of my 19 assets at that time just to have a generous partner,
 20 which I can believe. The same happened with Abramovich, 21 absolutely. And when Abramovich insist, I said, "Badri, 22 no, no, no, let's share. It's enough for us. You will 23 have 25, I will 25, and Abramovich too will have 24 50 per cent"; how they share, I don't care. And I think 25 that it was absolutely generous.

155

1 Q. In your witness statement you say that it was Badri who 2 proposed that the future company should be owned in 3 equal shares, two-thirds for --
 4 A. It's Badri.
 5 Q. It's Badri? I see.
 6 A. Just in my witness statement I think it's written Badri
 7 proposed and Roman disagreed, and I support Roman point
 8 of view.
 9 Q. Right. Well, which is right: what you say in your 10 witness statement or what you've said just in your last 11 oral answer?
 12 A. Last answer, I think it's correct.
 13 Q. I see.
 14 Now, I'm interested in your statement that at some 15 stage -- and you say in your witness statement it was 16 July or August -- there was an agreement about the 17 proportions. I'm going to press you, if you don't 18 mind -- actually I'm going to press you even if you 19 do -- to tell me exactly what you were going to get 20 25 per cent of. Was that agreed?
 21 A. Okay. It's agreed that this is my shares in the company
 22 and Badri has the same, the same shares, and Roman has 23 50 per cent shares himself.
 24 Q. So now, when you say it was agreed that you were going
 25 to have those proportions of shares in the company, do

156

1 I understand that what was agreed was that you were
 2 going to be shareholders, registered shareholders,
 3 either of the company itself or of some intermediate 4 holding company of yours?
 5 A. Look, it was not agreed that I will be a registered
 6 shareholder of the company. At that time -- again,
 7 my Lady, I just want to move a little bit back --
 8 I spent a lot of time in election campaign of Yeltsin,
 9 which happened in June, in June 1996, yes, coming here.
 10 And we prepare, as I told you, my main attention was 11 paid to ORT, which we just start to establish in 12 parallel with Sibneft, and Badri mainly was involved 13 there.
 14 And Abramovich was looking that we are very -- we 15 have very high political profile but it's coming later,
 16 when we move everything under control of Abramovich
 17 himself. But we just agreed that it will be proportions
 18 and like that. And it was absolute regular way that 19 time in Russia, because I remember well your speech when 20 you said it's "Wild East". It's true, almost, yes; but 21 it's not so wild not to understand that there exist 22 laws.
 23 And definitely when we agreed in verbal way, it's no
 24 doubt that it was obligation of Abramovich and the 25 obligation of Badri and the obligation of mine, and

1 I present you our obligations in front of you.
 2 Q. Can you just focus on what was actually agreed when you
 3 say the proportions were agreed in July or August. Was 4 it or was it not agreed, according to your version, that 5 each of you would become shareholders in the new
 6 company --
 7 A. Sorry?
 8 Q. Was it or was it not agreed that each of you would 9 become shareholders in the new company, either directly 10 or through intermediate holding companies of yours? Was 11 that agreed or was it not?
 12 A. My understanding is that it's absolute clear agreed that 13 we are shareholder, all of us, of the company, and with 14 the right proportion proportionally to our shares.
 15 Q. Understood.
 16 Now, the next question --
 17 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I'm not sure I understand.
 18 MR SUMPTION: I understand the witness to be saying that 19 what was agreed is that they were going to be 20 shareholders in the new company.
 21 A. Absolutely correct. We will be shareholders; we. Roman 22 will share -- will have 50 per cent shares and me,
 23 I will have 25 per cent shares, Badri --
 24 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So are you saying that the agreement
 25 that you reached at this stage -- and we're talking

1 sometime in the period, I think --
 2 MR SUMPTION: July/August.
 3 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: -- August, you agreed that you would
 4 actually become a registered shareholder?
 5 A. No, not at all. That we --
 6 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So you weren't going to be 7 a registered shareholder in any company?
 8 A. I have been a registered shareholder in a small piece of 9 Sibneft.
 10 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, no, no, but what was the agreement
 11 you say you concluded with Mr Abramovich?
 12 A. We concluded that we are shareholder and we didn't 13 discuss how it will be registered because that time -- 14 it was registered later on in proper way in the name of 15 Abramovich, when we agreed that he will hold in our 16 favour. But at that time we cannot hold shares because 17 we were just prepared for auction to manage the company.
 18 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So was there any discussion about 19 whether you were going to be a registered shareholder or 20 not at that stage?
 21 A. At that stage we didn't discuss about to be registered
 22 shareholders.
 23 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So you might have been a registered
 24 shareholder or you might not; either way?
 25 A. Yes, absolutely correct.

1 MR SUMPTION: Mr Berezovsky, it's quite a common practice,
 2 isn't it -- we've seen lots of examples of it -- of 3 people who want to become shareholders in a company not
 4 doing it directly but getting the shares into the name
 5 of a company that they control? That's a common
 6 practice, isn't it?
 7 A. What does mean "common"? Yes, it's so, and it's the 8 reason why we create a company which own 50 per cent of 9 management -- 50 per cent of the bid for management
 10 control, it's companies -- its name is NFK.
 11 Q. Now, was your agreement that when you say you were going 12 to become shareholders, did that mean that you were 13 going to become either direct shareholders, if you 14 wanted to be, or indirect through various holding 15 companies; one or other of those?
 16 A. At that time it was common to have a direct or indirect
 17 owner in the company which we created.
 18 Q. And under this agreement that you say you made in July 19 or August 1995, that would be a choice up to each 20 partner, was it?
 21 A. It was choice up to each -- up to each party. And again
 22 we concentrate at that time, as I mentioned absolutely
 23 clear, on the auction of 51 per cent, and at that time 24 we did not start to -- with their auction to buy the 25 shares.

1 And it's absolutely clear that at this first
 2 stage -- but it's impossible to talk only the first
 3 stage, the second, the third, like separate stages. At 4 the first stage the point was to get under control
 5 51 per cent of the company. It was clear understanding 6 and it's not -- whether it's hypocritical, yes, but it's 7 clear understanding, the State was not in power to 8 return back their credit. It means that if we win, 9 we'll be successful to obtain management control of 10 51 per cent; later on we'll obtain the ownership of the 11 company.
 12 Q. Well, did you in 1995, then, agree anything at all about 13 what would happen much later, when there were shares for 14 sale in the actual company? Perhaps you just left that 15 over.
 16 A. We discussed that Roman will manage the company and we 17 agreed with that and it's up to Roman how will he 18 organise that. Again, it's not excuse; I just want to 19 stress, it's not excuse. It's just -- it was very 20 unusual that from the beginning I trust Roman so much
 21 that I gave him 50 per cent of the company --
 22 Q. Mr Berezovsky, please read the question on the screen --
 23 A. Sorry.
 24 Q. -- and then carefully answer that question. (Pause)
 25 Do you understand the question?

161

1 A. Yes, yes, just a second. Just a second.
 2 How shares will be splitted between the companies?
 3 Q. No. Let me explain what I'm asking you.
 4 A. Yes.
 5 Q. In 1995 --
 6 A. Yes.
 7 Q. -- did you agree there and then what would happen about 8 the shares that might subsequently be sold or did you
 9 leave that over to be decided later?
 10 A. You mean who will be -- which company will own these 11 shares?
 12 Q. No.
 13 A. I mean -- just a second. I just want to understand the 14 question. We agreed that management control will be 15 50/50; correct?
 16 Q. Yes.
 17 A. This we agree. As far as we agreed to the future that 18 we will own the shares 50/50. Let's forget about me and 19 Badri; we are the same party. And is it correct your 20 question is: did we agree how will be structurised --
 21 structurised, I would like to mention that -- this 50 -- 22 the 49 per cent latest shares and then 55 -- 51 which 23 will be sold; yes?
 24 Q. Right. Did you make an agreement about what would 25 happen to the 49 per cent that was going to be 162

1 privatised and then the 51 per cent that would be sold
 2 if there was a default?
 3 A. This is exactly what I told.
 4 Q. I see.
 5 A. We agreed that we share that 50/50 but we did not agree
 6 which exact company will own the shares if they will be 7 sold. We agreed with Roman -- as again I want to stress
 8 you -- that Roman take under control everything. He 9 insist that he manage the company. It means that he was 10 responsible how it should be organised; not me, not 11 Badri, Roman. We delegate to him how to do that.
 12 Q. Mr Abramovich was going to manage the company but that 13 didn't mean, did it, that he was going to --
 14 A. Correct.
 15 Q. Let me finish -- that didn't mean, did it, that 16 Mr Abramovich was going to decide how the shares in the 17 company should be held? He was just going to manage the 18 company's business.
 19 A. No, no, no. Completely different. My and Badri
 20 understanding was clear: that Abramovich will manage the 21 company and will decide how it will be structurised when 22 we will become shareholders. It's up to him completely.
 23 Q. Where do you say that in your witness statement?
 24 A. Just a second. (Pause)
 25 I don't remember. I remember that we agreed about

163

1 conditions of our cooperations and gave Abramovich full
 2 power -- fine -- and gave Abramovich full power to 3 manage himself. "Manage" means, I'm sorry to say, for 4 me, not just day-by-day company operation but, as you
 5 know, it's just the beginning of to create the -- the 6 company was not created as a private company. It means 7 that Abramovich should think how to structure the 8 company which owned the shares of the -- future shares
 9 of Sibneft. It was not in our responsibility because 10 I trust him 100 per cent.
 11 I just want to refer you to my witness statement
 12 where finally we agreed with Abramovich --
 13 Q. Well, let me refer you to your witness statement.
 14 A. -- where we already read. I said Abramovich told me,
 15 "Boris, you may trust -- my interest is your interest,
 16 my interests are your interests and your interests are 17 my interests". This exactly, at that case exactly
 18 wording, because I really trust Abramovich.
 19 Q. At paragraph 97(d) of your witness statement 20 {D2/17/217}, you describe Mr Abramovich's functions in 21 this way. You say:
 22 "Mr Abramovich would be responsible for 23 co-ordinating his contacts in the oil sector and with 24 the senior management of the companies involved in the 25 project... and, if the project succeeded, would recruit

164

1 the managing staff and would manage the new company."
 2 Now, that was all that you agreed with Mr Abramovich
 3 about what his role would be, wasn't it?
 4 A. Again, I just want to stress again that my clear
 5 understanding, which maybe you help me just to clarify
 6 that but nothing more, my clear understanding was that 7 we gave up to Abramovich management control on the 8 stage -- it's good -- on the stage when company was not 9 created as a private company. And Abramovich point was 10 to create that as a private -- to create -- to start to 11 operate as a company and finally to create this company 12 as a private company according of agreement of our 13 interests in the company, nothing more, because the 14 agreement was done.
 15 Q. Now, Mr Berezovsky, there was no agreement in 1995, was 16 there, that Mr Abramovich was going to hold your and 17 Mr Patarkatsishvili's shares for you? Not in 1995?
 18 A. Just a second. It was not agreement, you're absolutely
 19 correct. But agreement was that he organise everything 20 and I did not care, which turned out that later on, when 21 we start to buy 49 per cent step by step, it turned out
 22 that mainly Abramovich company own that shares.
 23 Because, as you understand, 51 per cent still was in 24 management control. And only later on I decide,
 25 according to Abramovich again request, because of my

165

1 dangerous political exposure, to give up to him to hold
 2 that.
 3 Q. Now, you have given evidence that when these proportions
 4 were agreed, 50/25/25, it was shortly before the 5 presidential decree creating Sibneft.
 6 A. Yes, correct.
 7 Q. But I think your evidence is that you knew what was 8 going to be in the decree when you made this agreement,
 9 even though it hadn't been published?
 10 A. Yes, I knew that finally we will buy the company.
 11 Q. Well now, was there any agreement in 1995 that when the 12 49 per cent came to be privatised, one of the three of 13 you would bid for it?
 14 A. Want to know -- Abramovich should organise everything
 15 after that.
 16 Q. Mr Berezovsky, you knew when you made this agreement, or 17 when you claim to have made it, you knew that 18 49 per cent of the company was going to be privatised --
 19 A. Yes.
 20 Q. -- didn't you?
 21 A. Yes, I knew.
 22 Q. Right. Now, that meant that it would be sold by 23 auction?
 24 A. Yes.
 25 Q. You knew that too?

166

1 A. Yes.
 2 Q. Now, did you make an agreement in 1995 that somebody was 3 going to make a bid for this?
 4 A. My clear understanding, and it's my agreement, when you
 5 refer now that it's not written that just management day
 6 by day but not... for me it's absolutely clear that 7 Roman was responsible for everything. It's exactly -- 8 I'm sorry, I'm sorry, I'm sorry -- it's exactly the 9 point. Because I manage just political events and so;
 10 Badri was completely involved in ORT, which we also just 11 start to build; and what Abramovich -- okay, he took 12 responsibility for everything, including our interest in 13 the company, but how it's organised it's up to him.
 14 Q. Mr Berezovsky, I am not asking you what you thought the 15 position would be; I'm asking you what was actually
 16 agreed.
 17 A. Actually agreed that he is responsible for everything.
 18 Q. Was there an actual agreement in 1995 that somebody
 19 would bid on behalf of the company? I think your answer
 20 is "no".
 21 A. He has -- okay, good. Definitely Abramovich will 22 organise everything and if he decide that Badri should 23 participate or me, and if we have time, I will 24 participate to organise that. For example, it was 25 organised -- I'm sorry -- when it was auctioned for 167

1 51 per cent, the last one, and Roman, as I understand,
 2 ask Badri to become chairman of the bidding committee,
 3 again it's already controlled by Roman and it's up to 4 his decision how to do that. It's not only our 5 decision.
 6 Q. Did you actually agree with Mr Abramovich in 1995 that 7 that would happen or is that just your understanding of 8 what it implied?
 9 A. No, it's -- definitely it's agreed with Abramovich, you
 10 see, that he is responsible for everything. It's agreed
 11 with Abramovich that he is responsible for everything.
 12 Q. Well, Mr Berezovsky, I must put to you that you have 13 made that up. It's not what you say at paragraph 97 of 14 your witness statement {D2/17/217}.
 15 A. Yes, I see that. It's in front of me, you allow me to 16 recollect my memory. But again I tell you that it was 17 agreed that Abramovich responsible for everything.
 18 Q. And was "everything" the word used or did you go through 19 the things that he was going to be responsible for?
 20 A. Sorry? I responsible for this -- 21 Q. Was there any --
 22 A. I responsible for this witness statement.
 23 Q. Did anyone actually mention the question who was going 24 to bid for the 49 per cent? Did anyone mention that in 25 terms?

168

1 A. Sorry, again, just a second. (Pause)
 2 No, no. Definitely we know the rules that it will 3 be first the auction for management control and then
 4 through the auction to bid for 49 per cent --
 5 Q. Yes.
 6 A. -- but we don't care how it will be organised because it
 7 should be organised by Abramovich. It was my and his 8 understanding and what happened later on is just that:
 9 that he organised that.
 10 Q. Mr Berezovsky, let me just try once more.
 11 When you had this agreement with Mr Patarkatsishvili 12 and Mr Abramovich in 1995, did anybody even mention what 13 was going to happen about the 49 per cent and who was 14 going to bid for it?
 15 A. Definitely. Definitely again I tell you that it was 16 mentioned that Mr Abramovich is responsible for 17 everything as far as Sibneft is concerned. This was 18 mentioned. What is written here -- I understand your 19 point. I clear understand your point. You say, "Boris, 20 this is not mentioned, that Abramovich was responsible 21 to organise this 49 per cent to obtain". It was agreed
 22 that Abramovich was responsible for everything.
 23 Q. Now, so as I understand your evidence, it was up to 24 Mr Abramovich to decide whether you bid or not for the 25 49 per cent?

169

1 A. This is not, because it's absolutely clear that he's 2 responsible for everything what's connected to obtain
 3 the -- to win the shares of Sibneft in our favour.
 4 Q. Was he entitled, as you understood it, to say, "Well,
 5 I don't think I will bid for these shares"?
 6 A. No.
 7 Q. He wasn't?
 8 A. He was -- he didn't have any chance to say that.
 9 Q. He had to bid?
 10 A. Absolutely.
 11 Q. Right. Did he have to bid any particular amount?
 12 A. Any particular shares?
 13 Q. Supposing he decided, "Well, these shares look too
 14 expensive, I'm not going to put in a high bid" --
 15 A. No, no, no, no, no. We didn't discuss with him at all
 16 that.
 17 Q. So he had to bid but there was no agreement about how 18 much he had to bid?
 19 A. Absolutely correct, it was under his responsibility.
 20 If --
 21 Q. So he could have decided --
 22 A. Just a second. If -- but again it was understanding,
 23 because the money for bidding 51 per cent obtained 24 mainly by my support and it was clear understand that if 25 Abramovich will not have enough money, we're already

170

1 partners, he will come to us and say, "Boris, Badri, we
 2 need money more, we don't have chance to win with money
 3 which we have". It was absolutely clear because we 4 become partners.
 5 Q. When you say that everything was left to Mr Abramovich,
 6 does that include the decision as to how much to bid?
 7 A. Absolutely -- you're absolutely correct.
 8 Q. So Mr Abramovich, on your version, could have said, 9 "Well, I'm not going to bid more than a tiny price for 10 these, I know I won't get them if I do, but I'm only 11 going to bid a little bit"?
 12 A. Again, if --
 13 Q. He could have said that, could he?
 14 A. -- if Abramovich is not able to put the proper price, he 15 will come to me, he know where to take -- where to get 16 money, it's me, yes, if he doesn't have enough. And 17 I know how to get credit and I know the people who 18 believe me and trust me. It was clear understanding 19 that, if Abramovich has difficulties, he will come to me
 20 or to Badri.
 21 Q. Suppose Mr Abramovich said to himself when the 22 49 per cent was being auctioned, "The shares just aren't 23 worth this, a proper price is very low so I'm only going 24 to put in a tiny bid", was he entitled to do that?
 25 A. Again Abramovich took all responsibility to obtain

171

1 100 per cent. Do you think that I gave this power to 2 Abramovich if I have doubt that he's person who capable
 3 to do that without losing opportunity? It's only the 4 reason why I gave him 50 per cent.
 5 Q. Did you actually agree in 1995 with Mr Abramovich that,
 6 if he put in a bid in the 49 per cent auctions, you and 7 Badri would pay him a proportion of the price? Did you
 8 agree that?
 9 A. We never discussed how he will manage the company. We 10 just agreed that all expenses, all expenses and all 11 profit will be shared in proportion which we are 12 discussing.
 13 Q. Where do you say in your witness statement that there
 14 was an agreement that all expenses would be shared?
 15 A. Because the company belonged to us. It means that if 16 company have losses it's our losses; if company has 17 profit, it's our profit.
 18 Q. I understand, Mr Berezovsky, that Mr Abramovich was 19 going to manage the company but, if Mr Abramovich 20 decided that he was going to bid and got some shares as 21 a result in the auctions of the 49 per cent, are you 22 saying that there was an actual agreement between these 23 three people that you would pay Mr Abramovich
 24 a proportion of what he had spent?
 25 A. No, it's -- look, it's already company which generate

172

1 money, we knew that well. And if Abramovich show that
 2 there was dividends in 2000, doesn't mean the company
 3 didn't generate money from the very beginning, because 4 you know exactly what happened and you know exactly
 5 Khordokovsky is in jail now for the same, absolutely 6 nothing new, because money Abramovich generated brought 7 in Runicom and you know that.
 8 Q. Mr Berezovsky, listen to my question, please. Listen to 9 my question. I'm not asking you about 2000, I'm asking
 10 about 1995.
 11 A. And I give you answer.
 12 Q. No, let me ask it again. In 1995, I want to know what 13 was actually agreed which will depend on what was said
 14 at those meetings.
 15 A. Yes.
 16 Q. Was something said in 1995 between the three of you
 17 which showed that, if Mr Abramovich bought shares in the 18 49 per cent auctions, you and Badri would pay him
 19 a proportion of the price?
 20 A. Nothing --
 21 Q. Was anything said to that effect?
 22 A. Not at all. Not at all.
 23 Q. So there was no agreement to that effect?
 24 A. Sorry, sorry? What is the question? What is the 25 remark? Tell me, please.

173

1 Q. The question was, was anything said at these meetings,
 2 when you say you reached agreement, to the effect that
 3 if Mr Abramovich bought shares in the 49 per cent
 4 auction --
 5 A. Not Abramovich bought, just a second, not Abramovich
 6 bought --
 7 Q. Let me finish my question. Was anything said in 1995, 8 when you had these meetings, to the effect that if 9 Mr Abramovich bought shares in the 49 per cent auctions,
 10 you and Badri would pay him a proportion of the price?
 11 A. Not Abramovich pay, not Abramovich bought. It means
 12 that Abramovich bought from our name, do you understand?
 13 This is the point, because we're already partners.
 14 Q. I'm only interested, when I ask this particular
 15 question --
 16 A. I am sorry, I am sorry that I am so emotional.
 17 Q. -- I am only interested in the question whether there 18 was an agreement about financial contributions to the 19 cost of bidding in the 49 per cent auctions? That's all 20 I'm asking about.
 21 A. Yes, and I give you clear answer, clear answer.
 22 Q. Was there, Mr Berezovsky, an exchange of words agreeing 23 something about that?
 24 A. Agreed, the words is that we are partners and Abramovich 25 manage everything. It means that he is responsible to 174

1 find the finance, not for himself but for us.
 2 Q. Now, suppose that you decided to bid in the 49 per cent
 3 auction, were you going to get a contribution from the 4 others to what you paid? Was that agreed?
 5 A. I didn't take the role of -- to manage that. Abramovich
 6 was happy to take that, and when we agreed that he take,
 7 it means that it's his responsibilities for everything
 8 concerning the company. And I don't know what I will do
 9 in his position.
 10 Q. Can you actually remember, Mr Berezovsky, anything about 11 this agreement? You've already added a great deal to 12 what you say at paragraph 97; can you remember what was 13 said?
 14 A. Paragraph number?
 15 Q. 97, it's where you summarise the '95 agreement.
 16 A. But it's written here. It's -- unfortunately it's in 17 front of me.
 18 Q. You've added a great deal to it so far in your evidence,
 19 can you actually remember anything about this supposed
 20 agreement?
 21 A. Yes, definitely, I told you. I told you how -- that the 22 agreement was that my position -- me, I was -- on the 23 stage of creation of the company, I should lobbying on 24 the top level of the company, I should obtain the -- 25 Badri and me should obtain the funding of the company.

175

1 Badri should organise the connections on the next level
 2 of businessmen, on the equal level, and Roman was 3 responsible to organise the ground for the company. It
 4 means that he was responsible to convince and to 5 accept -- and to explain and to persuade Mr Gorodilov
 6 and Mr -- Mr Gorodilov and Mr Alexeyevich(?), later
 7 Potapov, to find the way, to persuade them to 8 participate and manage the company, and manage the 9 company.
 10 Q. Mr Berezovsky, the truth is you never reached any 11 agreement about what could happen in the auctions of the 12 49 per cent; you never agreed that there would be a bid;
 13 you never agreed who would pay if there was a bid; and 14 you never agreed who would own the shares if there was 15 a bid, did you?
 16 A. Everything completely wrong.
 17 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Is that a convenient moment,
 18 Mr Sumption?
 19 MR SUMPTION: Yes.
 20 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well. Tomorrow morning,
 21 9 o'clock, please.
 22 THE WITNESS: Thank you.
 23 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: An early start. Can I remind you
 24 again, don't talk about your evidence or the case.
 25 THE WITNESS: Sorry, I didn't ...

176

1 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Let me remind you again, you are not
 2 to talk about your evidence.
 3 THE WITNESS: Yes, yes, I know that. Thank you, my Lady.
 4 MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well. 9 o'clock tomorrow
 5 morning.

(9.00 am)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Are all the members of the press happily seated this morning? Fine, thank you.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Berezovsky, you are still on your oath, you appreciate that.

THE WITNESS: Yes, thank you.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, Mr Sumption.

THE WITNESS: Just, I'm sorry, paper.

MR SUMPTION: Sorry, what is the witness being given?

MR RABINOWITZ: A blank exercise book.

MR SUMPTION: Mr Berezovsky, yesterday afternoon, just before the end of the court day, you may remember I was asking you questions about what had been agreed in relation to the cash auctions of the 49 per cent. Do you remember that I asked you questions about that?

A. Yes, I remember well.

Q. Yes. And your answer, in very broad summary, was that that was all left to Mr Abramovich.

A. You're correct.

Q. Now, I want to ask you the same questions in relation to the auction of the 51 per cent after the State's default. You know which auctions I'm talking about?

A. Yes.

Q. Yes.

A. The date of this auction I remember well.

Q. I imagine that your answer in relation to the auction of the 51 per cent that actually occurred in 1997 will be the same: that was left to Mr Abramovich too, was it?

A. It is correct.

Q. So your evidence in relation to the 49 per cent applies equally to the auctions of the shares of the 51 per cent?

A. You're correct.

Q. And likewise I challenged you yesterday and suggested that there had been no agreement in relation to the 49 per cent and I make the same point to you about the 51 per cent.

A. It's absolutely wrong. It was include in agreement between me and Abramovich and Badri that Abramovich, up to the moment of we reach agreement, manage all events which happened with Sibneft and around Sibneft and if he need our help or something, he anytime is able to call us.

Q. Do you say that that was actually said in substance or do you simply say that that was your understanding of the position?

A. It was agreement.

Q. I see. Well, I have challenged your version on that.

I suggest to you that the only understanding in 1995 was that you would act as Mr Abramovich's political patron in return for regular payments and that you would cooperate in the forthcoming loans for shares auction.

A. It's absolutely wrong. As I told you yesterday, I was responsible also for funding everything what we need to privatise Sibneft, and it was several stages included, and I never changed this agreement with Abramovich and, as I understand, Abramovich never changed this agreement with me.

Q. Now, I want to turn briefly to the affairs of ORT. You took over control of ORT I think at the beginning of 1995, didn't you?

A. No, it's wrong. I took over control at the end of '94.

Q. I see. But ORT began operations, didn't it, in April 1995? That's when it started broadcasting in its own name?

A. 1 April 1995.

Q. Yes. Now, when you took over the management of ORT, you discovered, did you not, that its funding needs were greater than you had previously realised?

A. I am sorry?

You are absolutely correct that at the beginning

I understood that we need to have funding for ORT because the money which ORT got from advertising was not enough to do that.

Q. Yes. Now, part of the funding of ORT came from Logovaz, didn't it?

A. It is correct.

Q. But Logovaz was not in a position to provide nearly enough funds to keep ORT going, was it?

A. It is correct and it is the reason why some banks which were part of the deal of privatisation of ORT -- I mean Menatep, I mean Stolichny and others -- they also helped to fund ORT, understanding importance of ORT.

Q. Yes. Now, in the first few months of 1995 you were, as I understand it, scrambling about looking for money to fill the gap in ORT's funding?

A. At the beginning it was not so clear how big is that and at the beginning I had the other most important problem which helped me to organise the finding -- the funding of ORT because -- and it's important from the point what you are discussing to understand that ORT, when we took it, it was State organisation, organised in Soviet manner, without any thinking about market economy.

And we tremendously reduced expenses of ORT in the first several months. We reduced number of employers (sic). We reduce -- we restructure the income to ORT, what is the most important, because ORT covering 98 per cent of the Russian territory -- covering 98 per cent of Russian audience, and it's -- it was -- on the other hand, just took back compared with NTV, which already operate at that time, and --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Sorry, I'm not following you. Can you just clarify: when you're talking about 98 per cent, did you increase the coverage or reduce it?

A. No, no. 98 per cent, it's the coverage of ORT of the territory of Russia.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

A. And the population -- and the competitor, NTV, they cover just 53 per cent but their profit from advertising which was bigger than profit of ORT. It means that it was disproportion between profit -- a disproportion not in favour of the most popular channel.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I see.

A. I made enormous step which was out of understanding of many: I just stop advertising for three months, to destroy completely the market which exist before and to create new market with a reality, reality where ORT is dominating and will get the share coinciding with their proportion -- with the real proportion.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I see. Thank you.

A. Thank you, my Lady. And it gives completely new sources for investment for funding ORT and help us a lot. But in spite of help of banks, because I was not alone who share 49 per cent and it's written and it's clear that it was the other banks, the so-called (inaudible) or say me the most influential businessman that time and we share our funding between us.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

A. But as far as the other businessmen does not believe so much like me believe in importance of ORT and importance to keep that as a leverage for political elections which were coming, they were not happy to pay so much like I paid.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I see.

A. It is the reason why I most strongly start to think how to find funding. This was the big -- the decisive point, me to go to president and to convince him to allow me to find the other source for that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I see.

A. Thank you.

MR SUMPTION: That being Sibneft?

A. Yes, correct.

Q. I think what you've been saying is that Logovaz couldn't supply enough money; your fellow investors in ORT, the other owners of the 49 per cent, weren't very keen on putting up money?

A. Not so. They put money, there were not enough and Menatep personally put, and Smolensky put, and other banks they give money. But nevertheless it was very risky for them because they did not believe so much like me that to win elections and it was the reason they didn't put enough money, it's true.

Q. Yes. But you were disappointed, were you not, in the funds that were put up by your fellow investors?

A. I absolutely agree with you. Again, they didn't believe like me believe that it's important and finally we win competition against of Communist and it is the most important leverage here, what's (inaudible) what's correct, and it means that they were not prepared to take the same risk like me. This is the point.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR SUMPTION: Now, you say you resorted to banks. As I understand it, your main attempt to get bank finance for ORT concerned a Korean bank or a Korean banking group called Lotto. Is that right?

A. Sorry? No, as far as -- it's not Korean bank. It was Lotto Group in South Korea.

Q. Okay. It wasn't a bank?

A. They have a lot of different structure, including that. And as far as them, as I remember, we discussed with them completely different project; we discussed with them to build in the Moscow the trade centre. I can't exclude that I discussed with them their participation or the funding of ORT but it's doubtful because they didn't have business connected to mass media.

What I remember well, that I discussed with Rupert Murdoch to his participation in mass media business, including ORT, but I think it's happened later, not that time.

Q. And he said "no" as well, didn't he?

A. Sorry?

Q. He said "no" as well?

A. Not at all. It's completely wrong. As you know, Rupert Murdoch is, for me, great businessman and he was very accurate to decide his steps to Russia. And finally we establish with him just a radio company together, Murdoch and my group, Badri, and Badri was one of the key persons to negotiate and so, and later on Murdoch went to Georgia, again between Badri and me --

Q. I'm not asking you about what happened later.

A. I'm sorry.

Q. Can you just confirm this. As I understand it, after drawing on Logovaz, after drawing on your fellow investors and after drawing on whatever you could borrow, there was still a substantial shortfall on the funding requirements of ORT, was there not?

A. It was not sub -- sorry, my English -- substantial but definitely as long as we try to -- as long as we plan to completely change the company, putting in the modern way, as better I understand that we need funding, and funding which produced by consortium of bankers because they become so -- it's turned out that they were very greedy to invest in that. I tried to find the other source, it's true.

Q. Now, Mr Berezovsky, you tell us in your witness statement that your main reason for taking up Mr Abramovich's project or the project to integrate the two oil companies in Siberia had been that you saw the project as a source of funds for ORT, and I think you confirmed that yesterday.

A. Again I would like to stress: it's not Abramovich project, as we understand, but there --

Q. All right. Forget whose project it was. The Sibneft project.

A. Good, thank you very much. It's correct. And it's absolutely correct that the main reason for me to go to this business and it's initiate in my mind, yes, that I was looking for the funding of ORT. But when the size of business I recognise it's so big -- could be so big, because at that time Sibneft was not profitable, I just want to stress, when we took it -- I nevertheless understood that it's not only funding of ORT; it's only opening a great opportunity, like everybody who participate in auction, shares against of collateral, understood well that it's enormously profitable business.

Q. Now --

A. Could be.

Q. -- you needed --

A. Sorry?

Q. You have told us that you looked to the Sibneft project to produce funding for ORT. You needed it to do that quickly, didn't you?

A. As you know, definitely, because the opportunity to privatise was framed by decree of president. On the other hand, we were looking for the other opportunity and, as you know well -- maybe it's not written here but you read, I am sure, at least a piece of Russian history at that time -- finally we are in hurry because of elections, and elections should start at -- according of Russian law, in June it was the first round.

Q. June '96?

A. June '96, correct. June '96. And the second round happened at 3 July 1996. As you know, maybe that government organise a special funding for mass media at that time.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Berezovsky, I don't want to interrupt you and I'm very keen you have all the time to give the evidence you want but it would help me if you could focus on the question a bit more and answer the question.

THE WITNESS: Thank you.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: The question you were asked was:

"You needed to do that quickly, didn't you?"

You needed the Sibneft project to provide funding for ORT quickly?

A. The answer is yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: The question you were asked.

A. The answer is yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, thank you. If you can just remember that --

A. I just want to stress it was important but not critical, because everybody thought finally we will find foundation for ORT, but it was the best opportunity no doubt.

MR SUMPTION: Now, it wasn't going to help you to find funds for ORT quickly to own shares in Sibneft, was it?

A. It's correct to privatise Sibneft.

Q. For you to own the shares in Sibneft or to have an interest in Sibneft, that wasn't going to help you to find funds for ORT quickly, was it?

A. Again, I understand perfectly your question and for me it was important to put Sibneft under control in the most -- in the way which give me not only short-term funding but long-term funding, and only way was to privatise Sibneft and be shareholder of Sibneft directly or indirectly.

Q. What is the answer to my question, Mr Berezovsky, which is that owning shares in Sibneft or an interest in shares in Sibneft wasn't going to help you to find money to fund ORT quickly, was it?

A. I should... better to understand your question.

(To interpreter) Could you help me?

I think it's opposite. If I would own shares of Sibneft and control all business which is as a result of being shareholder of Sibneft, definitely it's helped me a lot to find money quickly.

Q. You told us a moment ago that Sibneft was unprofitable. So how was it going to help you to own shares or an interest in shares in Sibneft --

A. It's --

Q. -- in order to fund ORT if the company was unprofitable?

A. It's very simple: because the time when State owned Sibneft, Sibneft was not effective. It's happened with all oil company and particularly maybe the best example is Yukos, which increase during the year the potential -- the income to the company not in 100 per cent, not in 200 per cent, in 300 per cent, because the old way of operating was collapse. And it is the reason why finally President Yeltsin, looking forward, took a very principle decision to privatise the most sweet pieces of Soviet economy.

And in very short time -- and everybody understood how to do that and mechanism which Abramovich used that time is absolutely the same mechanism like Khodorkovsky used that time and in very short time all oil companies become super-profitable. And unfortunately Khodorkovsky is in jail for this way, which is surviving his benefit; this is only different. But all company become very quick absolutely profitable.

- Q. Mr Berezovsky, at the time when Mr Abramovich took over the management of Sibneft it was making losses, wasn't it? At the beginning it was making losses?
- A. As far as trade is concerned, I am sure that they made profit. As far as their operational operation they had losses but, as I know, all oil company, the day they put under control, they start to generate money, not as a dividends but as a profit, through failing company.
- Q. Now, Mr Berezovsky, Sibneft was an amalgamation of two previously independent State-owned enterprises, wasn't it?
- A. Just a second.

Q. And they were typical inefficient Soviet-style enterprises, weren't they?

A. Just a second. (Pause)

Two independent State-ownership enterprise, you mean Noyabrskneftegas and Omsk refinery company?

Q. Yes.

A. It's not only that; there was also one institute for research, for search the --

Q. There were some minor subsidiaries as well.

A. Yes.

Q. But they were independent entities which had been old-style Soviet inefficient businesses, weren't they?

A. Yes. Yes, absolutely.

Q. There was first of all a huge job to be done, wasn't there, to integrate these two separate businesses into a single organisation?

A. Not at all. I explain you why: because already that time -- why Gorodilov create idea to create a vertical-integrated company include exactly those two separate entities, separate -- sorry, separate parts, yes, because already it exists that oil from Noyabrskneftegas supply Omsk refinery company and already there is existing company, I forgot how -- what is his name, Omsk -- I don't remember exactly the name, which sold the production of oil refinery company. It's already everything exist, but it exists as a separate entity -- as separate companies, yes?

And the idea of Gorodilov was absolutely simple; moreover, definitely it was not idea just Gorodilov because all western company were organised like that. And that's all: you put that together, it's immediately become profitable. That's it.

Q. In addition to integrating these two separate businesses into one organisation, it was necessary, was it not, to transform into modern business organisations businesses which had never been exposed to market disciplines in their entire history; that's right, isn't it?

A. You are absolutely correct and moreover I think that -- and I understand maybe that better than anyone because, as I remember, in your skeleton you said that all these people who took under control oil company were industrials, you mean technology. No one more industrials than me because only me had really experienced in Avtovaz, as I told before. Company Logovaz based on the Avtovaz, the largest car manufacturing company in Russia.

And it was very -- I'm sorry to say that it was very funny when they said that Abramovich had experience, Khodorkovsky had experience, but I didn't have experience, only Berezovsky did not experience. It's the reason why he said, "Oh, Abramovich is so clever guy, he will manage the company". It's completely opposite I'm sorry to say.

- Q. Mr Berezovsky, nevertheless you left the entire management of this company, everything, to Mr Abramovich, as you told us yesterday?
- A. You are absolutely correct and I explain to you perfectly reason why I done that and you understand it well: because my priority was election of president and to move forward in democracy, not just develop Sibneft company, what was dream of Abramovich for all his life.
- Q. Now, Mr Berezovsky, the process of turning Sibneft into a profitable company could not even start until the beginning of 1996, which was when Mr Abramovich took over its management?
- A. Not at all. I explain you why. It was created like one integrated company and sell the production of Omsk refinery, connected to production of oil itself. You immediately become -- you immediately make this profitable because profit made not by company who produce the oil; the profit made when you sell that. And as always they start to use their so-called -- I don't know how -- what is the name, I forgot, but the scheme when they sold oil produced inside of the country to other company with low price which located in the country, with low price, and then you sold after that abroad with a high profit. It's immediately become profitable. It took very short time for everybody; not just for Sibneft, for all oil company.

Q. I would suggest to you, Mr Berezovsky, that you cannot possibly have thought that Mr Abramovich taking over the control of Sibneft at the beginning of 1996 was going to generate profits to fund ORT in time for the publicity campaign before the elections of June.

A. It's exactly the point what you mentioned in your skeleton --

Q. From Sibneft itself?

A. -- because you really calculate me that as not industrial. Believe me, it's not -- you shouldn't be Seneca philosopher to understand how it works and everybody why it was so -- why -- first of all, it was not so many people who recognise that it's new opportunity but those who recognise, they compete a lot to get opportunity to buy or to privatise oil company. It means that it is completely wrong to think that it took, let's say, years to generate the profit; it took very short time to generate the profit.

Q. The first profit, which was very small, made by Sibneft itself was in 1997, wasn't it? It made losses in 1996?

A. Again, again, it's not so. I don't know exact timing but I know that Sibneft, like all other oil company which were created at this time, start to generate profit immediately.

Q. Well, I can tell you, Mr Berezovsky, that it did not. Its accounts demonstrate that it made no profits until the 1997 year. Its debts -- were you aware of this, Mr Berezovsky: the debts of the component businesses of Sibneft were just under a billion dollars?

A. Again --

Q. Were you aware of that?

A. I did not aware of that.

Q. Right. Were you aware that Sibneft had no oil trading function for the purposes of marketing its crude oil and products at all?

A. I was aware that we decide to create vertical-integrated technology. It means that oil is producted, oil is going to refinery company and oil is selling, and I knew and Abramovich informed that he has trading company. As you know, Abramovich present himself as a trader. It means that he already have structure to sell oil. It's the reason why Sibneft -- not Sibneft itself, but all integrated company, start to generate a profit almost immediately.

Q. In 1995, Mr Berezovsky, you had absolutely no idea, did you, whether Mr Abramovich was the right man to transform these State-owned businesses into successful modern businesses or not? You had no idea one way or the other about that, did you?

A. Sorry, may I concentrate on the question. Thank you.

(Pause)

If it wouldn't be so. If it would be like that, definitely I would not decide to take Abramovich as my partner. You see, I just want to tell you, and it's important to understand my answer, it was --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Sorry, I haven't got your answer.

Just look at the question.

A. Yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Did you have any idea whether Mr Abramovich was the right man to transform the State-owned businesses?

A. Yes. Yes, I had -- I understood that he has --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: You thought he was the right man?

A. He is man who could do that, who can do that, and I explain you why: because any revolution create completely new relations between people because old people are not able already to operate in new reality, new people come, and it's up to you, it's exclusively up to you to have understanding who is who.

For example, when I was in science, it took years to understand who is real science, who is just play role of the science. But when new reality appeared I didn't know Abramovich, I didn't know Badri well, I didn't know many people. I didn't know Khodorkovsky at all. It took time to understand who is who: who is capable, who is not capable. And it depends only on your intuition to understand: is it correct person or not?

And as I told you from the beginning, when I met Abramovich on the first time on the boat, I was really excited how young man is so clever that he create very complicated condition, very complicated -- able to create relations with very complicated people, that he already trader. I didn't know the size of his business, is it big or is it not.

But everybody were new on the market; you didn't understand who is who. It is only from experience you could recognise what is that. And Abramovich produce impression that he's capable person and later on he really -- he proved that he made the Sibneft very effective company. It's the fact. No one can say that Sibneft was worse than the other company.

MR SUMPTION: Mr Berezovsky, in 1995 you had known

Mr Patarkatsishvili for at least six years, hadn't you?

A. Yes, I knew him from '86/'87, correct.

Q. Yes. More than six years then. You had never heard of Mr Abramovich until you met him at the end of 1994, had

you?

A. I didn't meet him -- I met him the first time, as I told you, on the travelling with Mr Aven and Mr Fridman, who introduced me Mr Abramovich, and it was the end of '94.

Q. I'm asking you whether you had ever heard of him before that and I think the answer is no.

A. Before what?

Q. Before you met him at the end of '94?

A. Never heard before.

Q. Right.

Now, you tell us in your witness statement that you regarded him as a small-scale oil trader who had achieved nothing in business. Was that your view?

A. I don't remember exact words concerning his trade business but I remember well my words that I was impressed of Mr Abramovich.

Q. You tell us in your witness statement at paragraph 81 D2/17/213:

"At that time, he was not someone who had achieved anything in politics or in business, being a small scale oil trader..."

A. It is a fact.

Q. Right. That was your view of him?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, Mr Patarkatsishvili told your solicitors in 2005 that when you introduced Mr Abramovich to Mr Patarkatsishvili you said, "This is a nice boy who wants to discuss commercial projects". Is that what you said?

A. I don't remember well, but I don't have any doubt that the purpose of our meeting with Mr Patarkatsishvili at that time to explain -- to introduce him first of all Abramovich and to explain his idea with the new project.

Q. You did regard Mr Abramovich in 1995, didn't you, as "a nice boy who wanted to discuss commercial projects"?

A. Not only. I said that because of my very short experience with Abramovich and what he convinced to have good relations with very complicated people in oil business, it means that he have capacity.

Q. You told us yesterday that in your view he wasn't even smart. Is that right?

A. It's not so. When I said that -- "smart" has a lot of dimensions. I think that Abramovich really is not smart strategically but as far -- he is genius at least in one point. If he want to convince someone personally, he may serve him so well and you trust him so much that you really believe that he's sincere. He's really -- he's genius. And he really convinced me to think, and long time, that he's like my son. And unfortunately it's a little bit eastern terminology, like brother, son; he definitely was not my son but except my trust to him was so high. And he's genius at that, no doubt.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, your case is that you wanted to invest money in a business to be run by somebody that you had only just heard of, who you regarded as without experience in big business and who you hardly knew. Is that your case?

A. Definitely it's my case.

Q. Now, I suggest that your only interest in Mr Abramovich in 1995 was that he was a man who needed your political influence and he was prepared to pay for it. That's true, isn't it?

A. It's completely wrong. It's completely wrong. Definitely he need my political influence, no doubt, but not to exchange -- just to pay me some peanuts without understanding which kind of project we are discussing. And it's -- I know that Abramovich change several times his witness statement, trying to present finally that I was just krysha, and it's really very interesting because we should define what means "krysha" before to discuss the reality. But it's absolutely clear that -- what I said before.

Q. You told Mr Abramovich, didn't you, at the beginning of 1995, that you would expect to receive $30 million a year if you helped him out?

A. I'm sorry, I'm sorry, I don't remember that, that we discussed exact number. It could be that I discuss that we have -- definitely we discussed that we have a big problem as ORT and that's it. But I can't exclude that we need exact money to cover our problem in ORT and it's true that deficit for the year that time I think was around $30 million. But I can't recollect that I discussed exactly this number but I can't exclude that it's so.

Q. The deficit wasn't $30 million; it was $200 million a year.

A. No, deficit -- sorry, deficit which accumulated to this time, what accumulated to this time was $200 million, even a little bit more. But there -- what we should cover immediately and every year, deficit become less and less.

Q. Well, Ms Nosova tells us that it was $200 million per year.

A. Again, at the moment when we took ORT -- and this is the point, and this is the point -- when we took ORT, deficit was around $200 million.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: What, the accumulated deficit or the loss for that year?

A. It's -- this deficit, as I understand, was accumulated just before we took ORT, for which period or time or not, I don't know. But deficit was definitely much more than $30 million yearly.

MR SUMPTION: Your own witness statement at paragraph 48

D2/17/207 says:

"The sums involved in the year 1995-6 were in the region of $200 million."

So just for that year you needed $200 million; it wasn't the accumulated deficit?

A. No, again, again, I want just to be precise as I can be precise. The deficit which we got at that time was even more a little bit than $200 million and that time I didn't understand well: it's just deficit, yearly deficit or accumulated. But accumulated, what I understood well, that it was accumulated just the last year, yes? Because it's the reason why finally, and what is explanation to the government, why government is not more able to subsidise ORT.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I'm still not following. Are you telling me that in '95/'96 the accumulated deficit over a number of years was $200 million --

A. Not only the number of years --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, just a second, let me finish.

A. Sorry.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Or are you saying that in the year '95 to '96, the loss for that year, never mind the previous losses, was $200 million?

A. The last is more correct than I told before.

MR SUMPTION: Right.

Now, I put to you a moment ago --

A. And only why I had doubt about that, because I didn't -- I forgot the time when it was calculated. It was almost a year deficit, you are correct.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right, thank you.

MR SUMPTION: Now, I put to you a moment ago that you had said to Mr Abramovich that you would expect $30 million a year. Do you remember asking Mr Abramovich -- this is early in 1995 -- what his income was and whether he could afford to pay you that sort of money?

A. What is -- yes, as I remember, we never discussed with Abramovich exact number what should be covered to ORT from Sibneft. We didn't discuss that every year I need from Abramovich exact this amount of money because I understood well that, on the one hand, that Sibneft just start to generate money, not Sibneft but through the Sibneft was just start to generate money; on the other hand, for me it's absolutely clear that day by -- that year by year, if we'll continue to reconstruct ORT, the expenses will be less and less, what happened in reality.

Q. Do you remember a meeting with Mr Abramovich in March 1995 at the Logovaz Club at which you first asked him for a payment?

A. March 1995?

Q. Yes.

A. For a payment before Sibneft was created?

Q. Yes.

A. No, I don't remember that.

Q. He asked you for $8 million, didn't he?

A. I don't remember.

Q. Sorry, forgive me. You asked him for $8 million?

A. I asked him to pay $8 million?

Q. Yes.

A. It's impossible.

Q. And that $8 million came from Mr Abramovich's Swiss trading company, Runicom SA, didn't it?

A. I don't know anything about this payment.

Q. The person --

A. And it's absolutely impossible idea that I ask Abramovich to pay me money before Sibneft was created.

Q. The person who handled payments to you from Mr Abramovich's Russian trading companies will say that she handled sums paid to you or to your order in 1995 of between $20 million and $30 million. Do you deny that?

A. Completely.

Q. Do you remember that in March 1995 Ms Goncharova delivered $5 million in dollar bills to you at the Logovaz Club?

- A. Again, look, Mr Sumption, I don't want to play game, I'm sorry, and I want to say you: I never asked Abramovich to pay anything before Sibneft was created. It's absolutely ridiculous. Because I told you that we had a lot of problem, it's true, but we have consortium -- not consortium, at that time I don't know the word, yes? -- but we have banks, the biggest Russian banks were involved in creation of the biggest TV company.

And small Abramovich, poor guy which does not have money, even didn't create still Sibneft, and to ask, "Mr Abramovich, could you please pay me $5 million?", "I don't have it". How I can ask that? It's only in his dream could be, but he prepare his witness statement.

- Q. You asked him because you had checked at the beginning of 1995 whether he could afford to pay you something like $30 million and he told you that he could.
- A. I know that Abramovich insist that he was big-scale businessman with 40 million yearly in profit; it's absolutely rubbish. Impossible for his company at that time to generate this profit. It's impossible. If so, if so, why all of us, he, me, we're looking for the money how to buy Sibneft?

If Abramovich generate 40 million, it was not a problem at all to go to Stolichny Bank or to go to Menatep and to travel all over the world, what I was doing, and Abramovich prepare the prospectus for me travel all over the world to find the funding money, if Abramovich generate 40 million, finish the story: Abramovich put this money, why I spend my money -- my time for nothing?

- Q. What did you know, Mr Berezovsky, about what Mr --
- A. $5 million I ask Abramovich -- sorry.
- Q. Let me finish my question.
- A. Sorry.
- Q. What did you know in 1995 about what Mr Abramovich's trading companies could afford to pay you?
- A. I don't know anything.
- Q. You knew nothing?
- A. I don't know anything that Abramovich must to pay me before Sibneft was created.
- Q. No, that's not my question. My question was this: what did you know in 1995 about the ability of Mr Abramovich's trading companies to pay you money?
- A. Abramovich never mentioned even that his company able to pay anything.
- Q. That is not my question. I am interested in what you knew --

- A. Okay, I didn't know anything.
- Q. Listen, Mr Berezovsky, to the question --
- A. Okay.
- Q. -- and you may find it easier to answer it.
- A. Sorry.
- Q. My question is about what you knew about the financial situation of Mr Abramovich's trading companies because you have just said they couldn't have afforded to pay you significant sums of money. What I would like you to tell us is: what did you know about the financial situation of those companies?
- A. I knew that -- I knew nothing, okay.
- Q. You knew nothing?
- A. I knew nothing. I just could imagine that it was very small company.
- Q. You could imagine that?
- A. Yes. Yes, correct.
- Q. But without any knowledge?
- A. Not -- knowledge was just because definitely I talked to Abramovich and he never said, "Boris, I have amazing company". If he would have that, definitely he inform me.
- Q. Now, we do not have complete records, any more than you do, of these payments, but we do have partial records and I would like you to look at one of those documents for a moment.

A. Please.

Q. Could you be given bundle H(A)02/124.

Right. This is a --

A. Just a second. Okay.

Q. This is a bank transfer docket which shows a payment by Runicom SA -- which you'll see its name at the top -- to Logovaz on 21 September 1995 for $4 million. Do you see that?

A. And what is the reason for this payment?

Q. That was what I was going to ask you.

A. You already got an answer.

Q. What is it?

A. What was that? You got an answer: it means that I don't know what is that.

Q. It says "Payment under settlement agreement". Tell us about that settlement agreement.

A. Ah, settlement agreement. I don't have any idea but I --

Q. You don't have any idea.

A. Just a second. If it's important for you, my Lady, I can speculate about that.

Q. I'm not asking you to speculate.

A. For example -- just a second. For example, Avtovaz -- Logovaz was a big -- was maybe at that time the largest car dealer in Russia and many company, including oil company, bought a lot of cars from our company. And I can imagine -- I don't know that, but if you ask me to think a little bit about that, I can imagine -- that it's not exception that maybe Roman oil company bought cars for the employers (sic) and then it was payment.

But again, it's just speculation, nothing more, because it's not my point at all to look through these documents.

Mr Sumption, I understand that you don't like that, but nevertheless please really concentrate a little bit. I have parallel life and this is completely second story, out of my -- out of my understanding, out of my thinking. I give up --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just a second. You'll do yourself more justice if you keep the answer short.

A. Sorry.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: You're saying, "I didn't look at these documents, I had a business to run" --

A. Okay. Okay, my Lady, I try to do it in this way.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Okay. Just answer this question for me. Your speculation is this related to some payment for motor cars?

A. For example. Could be, yes. One of the thousand opportunity; others, I don't know.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Okay. Yes, Mr Sumption.

MR SUMPTION: Are you suggesting that Mr Abramovich's Swiss trading company may have bought $4 million worth of motor cars from the Logovaz dealerships?

A. He could pay this through Swiss company but the car -- I don't believe that Avtovaz car, which are not so good, Abramovich bought for Switzerland. I think that he bought it for those people who supply him oil or something else in Soviet -- in Russia. Definitely he did not plan to put these not-so-good-quality car to Swiss. And it's absolutely clear that if Swiss pay for that, it doesn't mean that this car export to Switzerland.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, you told us a moment ago that at the time you didn't concern yourself with such trivial matters as payment information. Is that right?

A. That payment information?

Q. Did you concern yourself in 1995 with the details of payments that were made to companies associated with you?

A. You're absolutely correct.

Q. So you got other people to do that?

A. Absolutely correct.

Q. Right. So if people who were concerned with these payments and actually administered them on the Runicom side say that you received $20 million to $30 million in 1995, you have no knowledge which enables you to contradict them, do you?

A. Sooner yes than no, because I think that I would be informed about that.

Q. Why do you think that?

A. Why I could be informed about that? Because I'm sure that Badri, who was responsible for that, would be very surprised that Abramovich has a great capacity now already to generate money.

Q. Would you have a look, please, at H(A)03/1.

A. H(A)...?

Q. Somebody will bring that to you. You'll need to wait until someone brings you the document. H(A)03/1.

This is another docket, also Runicom SA --

A. Yes.

Q. -- recording a payment to a company called Atrium under intercompany arrangements with Logovaz.

A. Hmm.

Q. That was also a bill, wasn't it --

A. It looks like.

Q. -- which you asked that Runicom should pay?

A. Me ask? Is it written somewhere that I asked to pay that?

Q. I'm asking you whether that is the explanation of the payment of $1 million.

A. I don't know. I never ask.

Q. Because you had actually no knowledge at all of the flow of funds into your account?

A. It's correct.

Q. Now --

A. Not "not at all", but mainly it was -- if it's not something important. Definitely sometimes I was informed that we have this -- for example, for example, I worry a lot about the charity which I created in Russia and later on create charity -- later on create foundation in United States. As far as Russia is concerned, it was trying to support Russian culture, which exist until now, even though I am abroad, they still did not destroy that, even Putin.

And definitely I care -- when they need money, I asked Badri, I never asked Roman -- or not never; mainly, let's say, I asked Badri to pay money to cover some expenses. Sometimes I asked Roman to cover expenses. But, as I understand, that time, at the beginning of our relations, really only Badri was feedback between -- as far as payment is concerned -- between me and Roman if we need.

Q. Now, the truth is, Mr Berezovsky, that you received substantial sums of money from Mr Abramovich's companies in 1995, before Sibneft was even created, and before control over it was acquired. That is the truth, isn't it?

A. I give you my explanation, I think, my Lady. I told that I can't exclude any way of payment of Mr Abramovich, including his payment to us for some service from us or some sold -- or something like car we can sold to him. But I completely refuse that I knew anything about that we ask Abramovich to pay money before creation of Sibneft.

Q. Is it your evidence, Mr Berezovsky, that it was Mr Abramovich who insisted that the agreement you claim to have made in 1995 should not be written down?

A. I never insist that.

Q. Sorry?

A. I don't remember that I insist that this dogovor shouldn't be written down, as I understand. It was a verbal agreement but here I would like to stress and yesterday we in details tried to understand what was the sense of this agreement.

Q. Well, Mr Berezovsky, let me ask you it this way: was there any discussion between you and Mr Abramovich about whether your agreement in 1995 should be written down?

A. I don't remember that we discussed that because that was absolutely regular way that time to have verbal agreement between parties. What I remember well: that later on, in '96, Abramovich insist that we would not have anything in written. This I remember well.

Q. Would you look at your witness statement, please.

I wonder if you could look at page 217 of the bundle in your witness statement -- sorry, you don't have it this morning.

A. No, I just -- it's over here.

Q. Have you got your witness statement?

A. They will bring.

Q. Okay. Right. Now, just to get the context, would you turn to page 217 of the bundle, please D2/17/217.

A. 217, yes.

Q. Now, this is a part of your witness statement where you're talking about the 1995 agreement, isn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. If you turn to paragraph 106 D2/17/219, you give evidence about the matter which you said a moment ago you couldn't remember being discussed at all.

A. Yes.

Q. What you say is:

"... Mr Abramovich insisted that our agreement should not be written down."

Now, is that something that you remember, as you suggest in your witness statement, or is it something that you can't remember, as you said a minute ago?

A. Just a second. (Pause)

Yes, I really did remember because I all the time mix the situation before -- just a second. It's 1995 agreement; correct?

Q. Yes.

A. Before and after my political -- my political exposure, because in 1995 I had political exposure, not so harmful like it's happened in '96 and it means that in my memory I can't remember well and it's the reason why I said absolutely precisely that Abramovich insist not to have any agreement strongly in '96, when I went to presidential election campaign.

Q. So is your evidence now that he didn't insist in 1995, he insisted in 1996?

A. No, it's written in my witness statement that he insist from the beginning, yes, and my impression is not so strong because that time I haven't seen real arguments for that and it's the reason that my memory recollect that, okay, he insist without very specific reason for that. In '96 it was absolutely clear that it's specific reason of that and it means that my memory recollect like that.

And I just want to stress again that this document is very complicated to comment when it's the extraction of some -- my recollection, yes? Because recollection is a long time ago: it's '96/'95. My clear understanding was that finally Abramovich insist that it wouldn't be written agreement and to distance as far as possible from me.

But what is written here is absolutely correct.

I agree with you that it's not completely different what I said just now; but again, it's my recollection.

Q. At the beginning of that long answer you suggested that your memory was not as clear as your witness statement. Do you regard your witness statement as the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, Mr Berezovsky?

A. Yes, yes, and I just want again to confirm that it's absolutely truth, only truth and -- but on the other hand you should clear understand that --

Q. Would you look --

A. Just a second. You didn't give me to answer.

On the other hand you should clear understand that it's my memory, yes? And I exactly have in my memory very clear the final result what was happened in '93 -- '95/'96, when I start to strong to be involved in politics and took a great risk to go to election campaign, being on the first line.

It's the reason why, yes, I agree that you are correct; but again, it's -- you're correct, let's say, formally, no doubt, but as a reality you are not correct.

Q. Well, as I understand your answer -- and I'm just putting it back to you so that you can make sure that I've not misunderstood it -- you're now saying that it was in '96 that Mr Abramovich insisted that it shouldn't be written down. Is that right?

A. In '96 he propose to distance me as far as possible. This was just the beginning of my distance how Abramovich was looking for.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, just listen to my question.

A. Yes.

Q. I'm not asking you about distancing; I'm asking you about discussions, if there were any, about whether this agreement should be written down.

Is it your evidence that it was in 1996 that Mr Abramovich insisted that your agreement should not be written down?

A. I confirm what written is my witness statement.

Q. What is the answer to my question? Is it '95 or '96?

A. In '95 Abramovich start to present this idea and in '96 --

Q. Which idea?

A. That I shouldn't be visible too much and I shouldn't write -- shouldn't sign -- it should not be in written form. I didn't pay attention at that time too much.

I pay attention too much that when we distance in '96.

Q. You see, paragraph 106 of your witness statement is quite clearly directed to 1995, isn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. Because you talk about what might happen in the event --

A. Yes.

Q. -- that President Yeltsin lost his re-election bid and the Communists returned to power.

What you say is that Mr Abramovich was suggesting it shouldn't be written down in case the Communists got to power. Is that your evidence?

A. No, it's absolutely correct. But again, my recollection -- again, I present here my recollection. I present here my recollection.

Q. I see.

A. My recollection of more than ten years' events. And my clear recollection of to distance from Abramovich definitely connect to the election campaign, which start from the -- I would like to say -- from 1 January 1996. It was -- but previous, before then, it also was not simple situation and my memory is not sufficient enough.

I just confirm -- again, confirm what written here in my witness statement: that really I recollect Abramovich start to prepare to distance me not -- in the second, yes, before elections. But time ago and I don't see that I gave you wrong answer.

I just want to stress that I didn't recollect when you put me that it was happened even before. But again, when I prepare this witness statement, I try to recollect the events which happened 15 years ago.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, the policy of the Communists in 1995 and 1996 was to renationalise all the key industries that had been privatised or partially privatised, wasn't it?

A. It's correct, but understand that Communists are so powerful came later.

Q. Yes. But that was their policy?

A. Yes, definitely.

Q. Right. Now, if the Communists were returning to power, they were going to stop further sales of State assets and reverse the ones that had already happened whether you were publicly associated with the company or not, weren't they?

A. Definitely -- finally, yes, but who will be the first -- look, it's interesting question, I'm sorry, it's interesting question, because there were many businessmen who think that they will make a deal with Communists. I'll give you example, not to be just...

When finally we agreed in Davos, it was very beginning '96 with all principal the most powerful businessmen to be together against of Communist. It's turned out that time that they already start to pay money not only in Yeltsin support but also to support Communists. And it was important for me that I even could not imagine that time, it's a reason that my worry, my personal worry in '95 was not so much like happened later, and it is reason why I finally took a decision to distance from my business, like Abramovich proposed.

And my recollection, when I give you answer -- wrong answer to your question, was not recollection that already that time I was so -- feel myself so much involved in fighting, yes, and -- but again, I confirm everything what written in my statement, witness statement.

Q. It would have made no sense for Mr Abramovich to insist that the agreement should not be written down in case the Communists came to power because the Communists were going to renationalise privatised or partially privatised state assets whether they were associated with you or your agreement was written down or not; that's the truth of the matter, isn't it?

A. May I try to better understand your question, to try to give short answer.

(To interpreter) Could you help me, please? (Pause)

I -- no, as I told you before, as I told before, many businessmen think in different way, think in different way, and there were -- again, we should calculate two players: those who believe that Communists will take power, yes, and those who did not believe that Communists will take power. Those who at that time did not believe that Communists will take power were less than those who believed that Communists will take power, yes?

In front of those who believe more that Yeltsin will continue his power, the proportion of them were less than opposite. And even those who were very rich and believed that Yeltsin -- not believed that Yeltsin can win, even those pay money to Communists and pay money to Yeltsin election campaign.

And definitely Abramovich, like majority, worry that Communists could take power. Just again, I just recollect clearly that we finally agreed to make this distancing only in '96 but again --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I'm going to stop you, Mr Berezovsky.

THE WITNESS: Sorry.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I'm trying to help you, you understand.

THE WITNESS: Thank you.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Scroll back and look at the question because you're not actually answering the question. The question that Mr Sumption put to you -- if somebody could scroll the screen back for me, please.

MR SUMPTION: Shall I read it out again?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, he may like to look at it on the screen.

MR SUMPTION: Can you see it on the screen?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: [Draft] page 42, line 4. It's quite a long question.

THE WITNESS: Is it possible, Mr Sumption, just to make it a little bit shorter? Then I also try to give you a short answer.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, put it again, Mr Sumption, a bit more shortly if you can, please.

MR SUMPTION: Mr Berezovsky, it would have made no sense for Mr Abramovich to insist that the agreement shouldn't have been written down because if the Communists came to power, Sibneft was going to be renationalised anyway?

A. No, no, I understand. No, it was the reason, it was the reason, because even those -- it's exactly what I tried to explain -- even those who think that Communists will take power, among them were people who believe that Communists will stay -- will leave the company with them. It's the reason why I try to explain you, my Lady, that even Khodorkovsky, even other, they pay

Communist money during election campaign thinking that if they will take power, they nevertheless will not renationalise.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Let me ask you this: what was the point of not having the agreement between you and Mr Abramovich written down or not written down if the Communists, if they came into power, were going to renationalise anyway? What difference did it make whether the agreement was written down? Because --

A. No, no, if they will not -- if they even start to renational -- two points again.

Let's suppose Communists will take power and they will not start to -- there were people who think that Communists will not start to renationalise and it's means that for Abramovich's reason that I'm in political battle and he will be one of them who will not be -- who will not be renationalised.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So you're saying if you were seen to be associated with it, which might be the case if the agreement was written down, the Communists, if they came into power, would be more likely to nationalise?

A. Absolutely correct. My Lady, it's absolutely correct. It's exactly what I tried to explain.

MR SUMPTION: But, Mr Berezovsky, everybody knew that you were connected with the company, NFK, that had acquired the right to manage Sibneft. Everybody knew that, didn't they?

A. Yes. Mr Sumption, again, not everything is absolutely logical, we should understand, and my behaviour --

Q. I am beginning to understand that.

A. -- also was not very logical sometimes. I tried -- because the situation changed so much and if to explain every second of the changes, of quick changes of political situation, it's very complicated to understand.

The point is that Abramovich really worry that my political exposure, and I believe that he think like that, he wants to distance me. I accept that. I accept that because he managed the company, not me managed the company. He is the person who is responsible to survive with the company.

Q. You can put away any bundle that you've got other than your witness statement. I would like you to be given, please, J2/2.23/275. He should keep his witness statement. If that's D2, he should hang on to it.

A. Thank you.

Q. Now, this is your second witness statement that you've got open in front of you, isn't it?

A. It's written here.

Q. This is a witness statement that you made for the summary judgment proceedings in the Commercial Court and the Court of Appeal last year?

A. Mm-hm.

Q. Do you remember that?

A. Okay, I don't remember but we'll try together to reconstruct that.

Q. Right.

A. Again, it's in Commercial Court?

Q. Well, do you remember that Mr Abramovich asked for summary judgment against you in the Commercial Court? It was in fact in 2009.

A. It's strike-out or what is that?

Q. Yes, well, strike-out would be another word for it. Do you remember?

A. No, I don't remember, but I will --

Q. You don't remember there being any summary judgment proceedings?

A. Okay. Again, I don't remember but I will remember. You help me to remind.

Q. Okay.

A. It was -- again, it was second witness statement of -- during strike-out or later on?

Q. It was during the strike-out.

A. And it's the last one?

Q. Yes, because your -- well, there was a third witness statement but it's the second one I'm asking you about.

It was a statement that you made on 17 July 2009.

A. Just a second. 2009?

Q. 2009.

A. Just a second.

Q. 17 July.

A. Just a second. Mm-hm.

Q. Would you please turn to page 281 of the bundle, paragraph 31 J2/2.23/281.

A. Yes.

Q. Would you read paragraph 31 to yourself. It is your account of the 1995 agreement, or part of it.

A. Sorry? 31?

Q. Yes. Just read paragraph 31 to yourself, would you?

A. And then we'll continue, yes?

Q. Then I'll ask you a question.

A. Thank you. (a) and (b), yes?

Q. I would like you to read what comes before (a) as well?

A. No, but altogether?

Q. The whole of paragraph 31.

A. (a) and (b) full, yes. I'm sorry. (Pause)

Yes, okay, I read it.

Q. This is your explanation in 2009 of why the agreement was written down.

A. Yes.

Q. But it doesn't mention, does it, that Mr Abramovich had insisted that it shouldn't be?

A. I don't see here that.

Q. When you explained in 2009 why the agreement had not been written down, you didn't mention any demand by Mr Abramovich that it shouldn't be written down, did you?

A. Mr Sumption, I want just to stress again, the last witness statement I gave in May 2011, yes? This statement made in June 2009. I am a person who have memory mainly reflected to the emotional events in my life.

I really try to do my best to present my understanding -- not my understanding, my feelings, yes? -- and the main feelings is that I trust Abramovich, we agreed how we'll share our interests, and now you try to say that my trust to him is describing in different -- or a little bit -- or different, it's up to you -- different way, nothing changed.

I really was under strong political pressure, I really understood the dangers of what we are doing and I try to protect my interests, I try to protect interests of Abramovich because it's straight with two roads: if I will not sign, it's make my position weaker in my relations with Abramovich, if he is not person to whom I trust; on the other hand, if I will not have this document, it help me really, if something political happened in opposite case what I am doing, it help me to be more protected.

It means that I all the time was in controversial understanding -- under controversial conclusion and it's only the reason why my memory work like that. Some points are absolutely clear for me how it was, some points definitely it's not so clear. But what is the most important, I never change my understanding what is the basis of our relations.

Q. Did you have a clear recollection of what was agreed in 1995 or was it not so clear?

A. Concerning of what? Concerning of how we share the company? Concerning how we will create the company? Yesterday, you spent a lot of time and I tried to do my best to explain you that on the other hand we -- how we decide to create the company and what was the component of the functions of this decision and how was finally we plan to form our interest in the company.

Q. Look again, please, at the paragraph that you've just read.

A. Yes.

Q. You wrote:

"... I have a clear recollection of what was agreed."

That's part of your explanation of why you haven't written the agreement down.

- A. Yes, you're absolutely correct, I have a clear recollection. When we return with you together to the point of December, if we can keep in December 2000, you clearly recognise how my recollections and Roman's recollections at the same event change many, many times. The point -- but various principal owners(?) have been meeting or not in December in Cap d'Antibes.

But this is a different story, which is my relationship with Roman. It's completely a different story. And my recollection definitely in many points is absolutely correct. But sometimes I don't remember really -- at that time when I wrote the -- July 2009, my recollection was so; later on it's changed. Not to the opposite, I don't want to say to the opposite, and I never change my trust to Abramovich until he betrayed me, but you will see how Abramovich and me, it's together because it's not happened yesterday, Mr Sumption.

- Q. Mr Berezovsky, the first time that you ever alleged that Mr Abramovich had told you not to write down the agreement was in May of this year, when you made that allegation in your reply --

- A. Yes.

Q. -- a few days before serving your fourth witness statement.

A. Yes, yes.

Q. That's the first time you ever made that allegation, isn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. You agree?

A. Just a second. (Pause)

In this recollection of 2009, it's recollection that it will not be written and it's recollection I never changed, that we didn't have written agreement. But how it's happened, how it's happened, yes, that recollection 2009 was that we did not -- in 2000 that Abramovich -- in 2009 -- just a second.

... that he did not insist, in 2011 I had impression that he insist, and -- but again, we discuss the same point, I'm sorry to say: that it was oral agreement and we understood well that it's agreement; not just shake hands, that's it. And because that time it's for us absolutely usual the way to make a deal.

I just give you example. I'm sorry, if you allow me or you think this is not a point, I will not present this example.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, you've given an example already, haven't you, about other people entering into oral agreements?

A. Yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: In paragraph 32 you've given an example.

A. Thank you, my Lady.

MR SUMPTION: Equally there are many cases, are there not, where you have entered into written agreements for joint ventures? Anros, ORT, Logovaz: you went into written agreements for all of those, didn't you?

A. You're correct and I explained yesterday why I didn't have written agreement with Badri and with Roman. It's the same story: too many coming together to do, too complicated to make agreement, and what's the most important is absolutely trust to persons, to Badri and to Roman. No one in my life were like them, who I trust like myself. No one.

Q. The reason why you never mentioned Mr Abramovich insisting on it not being written down until May of this year is that you've made this story up in May of this year or shortly before; that's right, isn't it?

A. It's not correct at all. I didn't make story up. I tried to recollect more and more what is very complicated for me. And it does not mean that I recollect everything what I present in my witness statement; it could be another recollection -- and I'm sorry that I refer again to example.

The most complicated example from both sides is December 2000 and when we return back, my Lady, I'm sure you will recognise how it's complicated, looking even not 2009 -- '99 but even in 2000 to recollect what's happened.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, the reason that this agreement wasn't written down was that there was no way you were going to record in writing an agreement to sell your influence over President Yeltsin for money; that's right, isn't it?

A. Mr Sumption, I am sure -- I am sure -- that you will not have any doubts personally that it's not so. I am maybe sometimes looking very naive but I'm not naive so much, like you try to insist, that I just for Roman, who I knew shortly time, as you insist and it's true, organising billions business, just taking, "Roman, please, could you cover my expenses on ORT?" No one in Russia, no one in the business world never believe you, never, never, never.

Q. Did you really expect that if there was a dispute between you and Mr Abramovich over your performance of your functions under this agreement, it might actually be referred to a court in Russia? Is that what you expected to happen?

A. I tell you to refer again to you. You told that Russia at that time was Wild East; it's correct and not correct. Nevertheless we have the time when the form of law stopped the work and the new world didn't start to work properly. But it doesn't mean that we didn't believe that if something happened, we can go to the court.

And to prove the proportion between shake hand and court was completely different like in this country. This country, even you shake hand, it's like to be in court. In Russia it's not so like to be in court but we definitely understand that I can go to court. I can go to court and try to prove my agreement. It's absolutely obvious.

On the other hand, we prefer to exclude that. It is reason why I was looking: who is Mr Abramovich? Can I trust him? Here I make a deal with people who I don't know at all because I'm sure 100 per cent that I'm protected by the court. It's not simple, I had some stories here, I even lost some cases with crooks, but I was satisfied because crooks operate in frame of law, I can't do anything.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So you're saying you trusted Mr Abramovich?

A. Definitely. This is basis of our relations. But the question was different, my Lady, as I understand: but did you believe that Abramovich -- if Abramovich betrayed you, you can go to court just because you shake hand and made agreement? My answer: yes.

MR SUMPTION: Your deal, your understanding with Mr Abramovich -- we're going to have to differ about what the understanding was -- but your understanding was intended to be binding between you in honour; it was never intended to be binding in law, was it?

A. Definitely not.

MR SUMPTION: It wasn't the kind of agreement --

A. And what happened today, it's today in this court, completely opposite. Definitely I was not able now to go to Russia and it's one of the reasons why I left Russia, because I recognised that in Russia the laws are not sufficient enough to protect. I was granted political asylum and I left Russia just because, if I can prove -- I have the same court in Russia to prove that I'm innocent, I never leave Russia.

This is the problem. But the law will not -- now it's even worse because court under control of political powers. At that time court was not so much controlled by politicians, like now, and I believe definitely was start just to build the court system, the proper court system, but it's exist not like now.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, I don't know what your Ladyship --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Would that be a convenient moment?

MR SUMPTION: Yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, very well.

MR SUMPTION: Does your Ladyship intend to take two breaks in the course of the morning or one?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I was really going to be guided by the transcript writers. I was going to hope just to take two.

MR SUMPTION: To take two?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: To take two.

MR SUMPTION: Yes, I don't think anybody would be suggesting more than two, but more than one anyway.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR SUMPTION: Can we short that out with the shorthand writers during the present break.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, perhaps the parties could sort that out with the shorthand writers.

Very well, I'll take ten minutes now.

(10.35 am)

(A short break)

(10.45 am)

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, the shorthand writers have suggested that they would like a break at 11.50 and that that would be enough. I've consulted the translators, who are happy with that also.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Very well. Well, round about 11.50 then, depending on whether you've reached a suitable break.

MR SUMPTION: Mr Berezovsky, I want to turn to the various auctions.

In December 1995 NFK won the loans for shares contract at the auction in that month, didn't they?

A. Sorry, in which month?

Q. In December 1995 NFK succeeded in the loans for shares auction, the auction of the right to manage the State's 51 per cent shareholding?

A. In December 19 --

Q. Well, I can tell you it was December '95.

A. Yes, in December -- just, I'm sorry, Mr Sumption, I need to refer back. Just a second. In December '95, 28 December, it was signed by privatisation committee the auction -- yes, December '99 (sic), correct. Sorry, sorry.

Q. Thank you.

Now, you accept, do you not, that NFK were a company owned 50 per cent by Mr Abramovich's company Vektor-A and 50 per cent by Consolidated Bank?

A. Yes, except that it's presented interest of Abramovich -- I don't know how much percentage

Mr Abramovich own in Vektor, I don't know that; and I know that we were presented by Obedinyonniy Bank, which present my group.

Q. Consolidated Bank was -- and I'm using its English name --

A. Yes, it's Obedinyonniy Bank in Russian.

Q. That is the Russian translation.

Now, Consolidated Bank was a bank associated, as I understand it, with the Logovaz Group.

A. You're absolutely correct.

Q. You never owned Consolidated Bank, did you?

A. As I remember, I had shares in this bank, definitely not -- as I remember, not a lot, but --

Q. Not a lot?

A. -- but I fully control this bank.

Q. Yes. I understand, Mr Berezovsky, that you had management control over the bank, but you only had a relatively small shareholding in it; that's true, isn't it?

A. It's absolutely true and it's exactly again the way how that time everything was operated. That everybody understood that I create this bank, I have management control, it means that I put manager to whom I trust; but how it's split inside of the bank the shares, it doesn't so much value that time.

- Q. Yes. Well, through various intermediate holding companies you owned, at the most, 13.7 per cent of Consolidated Bank. Would you accept that?
- A. I don't remember. I can't exclude that.
- Q. Right. Now, that gave you, didn't it, an indirect interest of about 8.5 per cent in NFK, you personally?
- A. That gave me 50 per cent with Badri interest in FNK (sic), if we correctly --
- Q. Sorry, forgive me, I got the maths wrong. Can I put that question to you again.
- It gave you a 6.85 per cent indirect interest in NFK, just under 7 per cent?
- A. It means even you reading attentively don't know well how much per cent but it really doesn't matter. It's also like with Abramovich my relations. There were people who trust me, there were people to whom I trust. And formally you are absolutely correct, if the calculate numbers, but the reality was completely different: I fully control 50 per cent of FNK (sic) together with Badri.
- Q. Now, could you please be given bundle H(A)18/198.
- A. The rest I can remove?
- Q. You can certainly -- I'd keep your witness statement but you can get rid of everything else.
- A. Thank you. The last witness statement, yes?

Q. Yes, your witness statement for this trial.

A. Thank you.

Q. Bundle J2, I think it is, can go.

Have you got H(A)18/198? Do you have that open?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, if you look at the yellow pages --

A. Yes, in Russian.

Q. -- immediately afterwards, you'll find the Russian version, which you might prefer to look at.

A. Yes, thank you. Thank you.

Q. I'm going to refer to the English version. This is an interview republished in your book "The Art of the Impossible" with the Moscow paper Vedomosti in March 2000.

A. March -- just a second. May I just again for myself return back.

Q. 26 March 2000.

A. Just a second. 26 March, it means that I'm still in Russia, yes.

What I should have a look?

Q. Just look at the first page of the English, please, which is probably somewhere around the first half of the page of Russian.

A. Mm-hm.

Q. Now, in the English, you are asked, and it's the second question asked by the correspondent:

"And what is your percent[age] of Sibneft stock?"

Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. Your answer is:

"Sibneft shares are owned by some LogoVAZ structures, and the property structure of Sibneft is not yet final."

And the correspondent says --

A. Just a second. It's March 2000: again, it's connected to the time what -- it's not referring -- I don't want -- it's not referring to the former time, it's just -- we discuss about this time, the time of interview, yes?

Q. Yes.

A. Thank you.

Q. The correspondent then says:

"Approximately?"

And you say:

"I think, approximately 7%. But I should say that I have not been directly involved in Sibneft business since 1996, and this is the truth. This does not mean that I gave my shares away to somebody. I gave them to a trust, and they are very well managed."

Now, the shares that you claim to own at that stage are approximately 7 per cent.

A. Just a second, may I have a look in Russian. (Pause)

Yes.

Q. Now, you seem to be saying there that you own 7 per cent through structures connected with Logovaz.

THE WITNESS: Mr Sumption, if you don't mind, if you don't mind, before you put the question, I just want to pay attention, my Lady, to the next question and the answer to the next question.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, just read it to yourself and then Mr Sumption will ask the question.

A. Yes, I just put attention that (inaudible). It's correct because we discuss here about share and it's turn out -- I just want to stress you, Mr Sumption: absolutely occasionally, I don't know how it's happened, when Abramovich cleared a space, presenting that everything is under his personal shareholding, he forgot about PK -- I forgot this -- PK-Trast, which own a little bit, but naturally own. And you now refer, when you turn back finally what is the real percentage, it's really around 6 -- 7 per cent left under control of Logovaz structures, which one of them is Obedinyonniy Bank.

Yes, sorry.

MR SUMPTION: Exactly.

Now, when you refer to that 7 per cent, what you are referring to there is the proportion that you indirectly owned of NFK through Consolidated Bank, isn't it?

A. It's precise calculation -- not precise, more or less precise calculation -- of my direct -- indirect, let's say, owner in shares of -- of what we discussing now? -- Sibneft, sorry.

Q. Well, what you had 7 per cent of, through Logovaz, was NFK, the successful bidder in the loans for shares auction; isn't that right?

A. NFK, I don't know, or N -- just a second, Mr Sumption. I can miss PK-Trast, which was created and officially own some percentage, and PK-Trast appeared during not shares instead of loan but it's appeared when it was bid for buying 49 -- one of the portions which was buying as the 49 per cent, at the second stage. It means that --

Q. Mr Berezovsky, PK-Trast had nothing whatever to do with Logovaz, did it?

A. I don't know.

Q. It didn't.

A. I don't remember.

Q. I see.

A. Mr Sumption, believe me, I don't pay attention how it was structured by Mr Abramovich. I'm sorry.

Q. I will have to ask you about PK-Trast in a moment but that arose later.

What I'm asking you now is this: when in this interview you referred to yourself as having a 7 per cent share in Sibneft, what you were actually referring to was the indirectly held 7 per cent that you had in NFK which had won the loan for shares auction through -- that was a --

- A. I don't know that. My recollection was in 2006 it's exactly the reason, in 2000, it's exactly the reason why I ask you. I don't remember how -- when I learn the case, I prepare the papers, I recognise that we have somehow 7 per cent. At that time I don't know it was director of Logovaz or it was -- and it's mentioned in NFK we have this 7 per cent or we have this 7 per cent as our percentage in PK-Trast. Nothing more.

And this interview to journalist, which interesting, generally my interest Logovaz because, for me, Logovaz and Obedinyonniy Bank, Consolidated Bank, is almost the same and I'm absolutely clear in my next answer that -- but the next answer is absolutely correct as well that we have interest more than 7 per cent but it's owned not by me; through another structure, through Mr Abramovich I think mean. I don't see any -- okay. Okay, sorry.

- Q. Mr Berezovsky, the only interest connected with Sibneft which you held through a Logovaz structure was the interest in NFK that you held through Consolidated Bank, which was Logovaz's bank?

A. Mr Sumption, I gave my answer: I don't remember that. I don't remember how we own NFK. I know that our interest in it -- sorry, sorry, sorry, sorry -- our interest in NFK, as you mention correctly, was presented by Obedinyonniy Bank, yes. And it means that in NFK I own, I don't know -- if we calculate, how much is that?

Q. It has always been your view, has it not, that because of Consolidated Bank's 50 per cent interest in NFK, you had a 50 per cent interest in Sibneft? That's what you've always thought, isn't it?

A. Definitely not. Definitely not. Because I understood well that when we present Consolidated Bank, I knew well that their shares structure is different from my real control and I already mentioned you it's just -- the opposite: it just show how that time business was organised, and organised like in the way how I organised with Abramovich just shaking hand or we create some structure where people had formally some shares but in reality was different. They also hold shares in my favour; that's it.

Q. Now --

A. Nothing different even compared was Abramovich, in general I mean, in general, in general understanding how business that time was organised.

Q. In June of this year, 2011, did you --

A. 2011?

Q. Yes, this year -- did you give evidence by video-link from London to an investigating judge in the District Court of Marseilles?

A. You're absolutely correct.

Q. Now, that was disclosed to us earlier this week.

A. Yes.

Q. I want to ask you to look at the records of that evidence. They're in H(C) --

A. Could I close this?

Q. Yes, you can. Indeed, it can be taken away from you. Could the witness please be given H(C)8/162.

This is not a question; it's a statement which is intended to help you understand what this document is, okay?

A. Yes.

Q. This is a record of evidence that was given under the procedure for international cooperation between courts in different countries.

A. Yes.

Q. It was given in the course of a criminal investigation by the Marseilles judge into allegations of money-laundering, forgery and theft against you and a gentleman called Jean-Louis Bordes.

A. Yes.

Q. Okay? The investigation relates to the source of the funds with which you bought your property at Cap d'Antibes.

A. Yes.

Q. That's all familiar to you, isn't it?

A. I am well familiar with this investigation and with my cross-exam through video-link from London to Marseilles.

Q. Now, Monsieur Bordes, was he an estate agent who acted for you in relation to the purchase of your property at Cap d'Antibes?

A. It's correct.

Q. Now, if you look at 162 in the English version -- and there is a French version before it but you're probably more comfortable with the English than the French?

A. Before you start with that, I have one question: this is what's signed by my lawyers or it's just transcript which was done in France?

Q. I'm about to suggest to you what it is, Mr Berezovsky. If you look at --

A. No, no, no, no, no, I'm sorry --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, just a second, Mr Berezovsky.

Mr Sumption is going to identify with you what he thinks the document is, so you'll have an opportunity to make any point you want to make. But just let's look at the document first and let Mr Sumption ask the question.

THE WITNESS: Yes, sorry.

MR SUMPTION: Look at page 162. You'll see that it is the court greffier in France, his summary of your evidence, and at the very bottom you will see a note by you and you can find your signature on it and a note in English in your handwriting on page 151 H(C)8/151.

You might find it helpful to look at 151 because that's by you in English.

A. 151?

Q. Yes. It's the original French version but with an English note at the bottom of the first page.

A. Which page?

Q. 151.

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. Now, do you see the manuscript note at the bottom of the page? Yes?

A. My signature, I see that.

Q. It's your signature and I think you actually wrote out the text too, didn't you?

A. Just a second. No, no, just a second. Can you allow me to...

Q. Well, you must be able to recognise your handwriting,

Mr Berezovsky?

A. No, it's not my hand, definitely.

Q. It's not your handwriting?

A. No, it's not my hand.

Q. I see. But you presumably read it before signing this document?

A. Just a second, it's the reason I want to have a look, because my signature is here but it's not my hand, and I want to read that.

Q. Okay, just read the note. It's typed out at page 162.

A. I'm sorry. Give me please time to read that.

When it was written -- where is it written?

Q. Would you like me to read it out to you?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Sumption, read it into the record please.

MR SUMPTION: The note says:

"The French juges" --

A. Where is that? It's in the page --

Q. The bottom of page 151 --

A. 161?

Q. -- in handwriting and the bottom of page 162 in typescript.

A. Yes, yes, that's exactly my question. Yes, thank you.

Q. What it says is this:

"The French juges d'instruction have kindly agreed to place into the file as part of my proces-verbal the note recorded in English by my English lawyers; subject to that more full record, I sign this note."

THE WITNESS: Hmm. Can I put the question?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, let Mr Sumption put the question.

THE WITNESS: Sorry.

MR SUMPTION: What I suggest is this. It shouldn't be controversial. The court clerk had drawn up in French a summary of your evidence --

A. Hmm.

Q. -- and you signed that summary as being correct, but subject to the English record prepared by your lawyers being included in the file so that there was a fuller record in English as well? Is that right?

A. This exactly the point which I tried to explain what I was explained by my lawyers, yes? I was explained that a French transcript was very different compared with what we're discussing and this is the reason why my lawyers present the English transcript or English correction, I don't know that well, which I can use -- which is possible to use only as a reference to reality.

Moreover, I remember well when we finished the cross-exam it was done in very short time the transcript and my lawyer insist that it does -- we can accept that but only after we correct that.

Q. Yes.

A. This is the point.

Q. So the point was you were happier with your own lawyers' transcript of what was said than with the greffier's summary, so you wanted to make sure your lawyers' version was on the file?

A. It's correct.

Q. Now, your lawyers' version will be found at page 173 H(C)8/173.

A. And, as I understand, it was agreed with French. It's not just my...

Q. Yes. Yes, absolutely.

A. 173?

Q. Yes, 173 you'll find the first page of your lawyers' note of what you said to the French judge.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, I would like you to turn into that document a bit and go to page 181 H(C)8/181.

Now, you're being asked --

A. Just a second. What is the -- where is the question?

Q. Now, would you like to read to yourself --

A. Yes.

Q. Do you see a paragraph that begins about ten lines up from the bottom of the page with the words --

A. Ten lines --

Q. Let me finish, please -- with the words:

"So in your written answers you justified..."

Do you see that paragraph?

A. It's exactly what I want to ask, try to find.

Q. Now, I would like you to read from there --

A. Yes.

Q. -- until halfway down the following page, where there's a break in the page and the next paragraph begins:

"But the second reason..."

I don't want to stop you reading around that but that's the bit I want you to concentrate on.

A. Fine, I find the paragraph. I need just a little bit more time than you because my English is not so perfect like yours. (Pause)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just to page 182, is it, you want him to read?

MR SUMPTION: Yes, halfway through page 182.

A. Okay, now I understand. Okay.

Q. This is a transcript of evidence you gave in English, isn't it?

A. I gave my evidence in English.

Q. Yes. Now, this is an observation I make for the benefit of my Lady, though you may find it interesting just to pay attention.

A. Yes.

Q. The paragraph that begins, "So in your written answers you justified the funds used for the acquisition of these properties and you said they were the profits due to you through your involvement in Sibneft", I'm not taking a point on the way that's expressed because in fact it is not a correct summary of the answer you gave.

In case anyone should think it is, if your Ladyship, just for the transcript, were in due course -- not now -- to turn to the written answers referred to at page 134, answer 4 H(C)8/134 --

A. Sorry?

Q. I'm not asking you to do this --

A. Sorry.

Q. -- because I'm going to ask you about another aspect of this. You will find that what Mr Berezovsky actually said was that they were profits due to him through his interest in Sibneft. So that's not a point I'm taking.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, fine.

MR SUMPTION: Mr Berezovsky, I want to turn to the point I am taking. You will see that you're being asked here about the 1996 agreement.

A. Yes.

Q. Which is the agreement when you say it was agreed to conceal your interest in Sibneft; okay?

A. Just a second.

- Q. That's what you're being asked about?
- A. Just -- now I return back to the question, step by step.
- (Pause)
- Yes.
- Q. Right. Now, if you now look at the chunk of text on page 182 which begins, "First, RA asked me not to make any papers which demonstrate[d] my ownership in Sibneft", we've been through that. In the following paragraph you say this --
- A. In the following --yes, sorry.
- Q. "Nevertheless, it's wrong to say [that] I did not have any papers showing my involvement in Sibneft. We presented in the hearing in the London court the papers which demonstrate that from the very beginning we owned 51% of the company, 50-50 with [Roman Abramovich]. I represented my interest with BP by [the] so-called Consolidated Bank. It is clear evidence that I was formally [a] shareholder of Sibneft."
- A. Just a second.
- Q. That's what you said.
- A. Just a second. Yes.
- Q. Now, that is a reference, is it not, to the 50/50 share that Consolidated Bank had in NFK --
- A. Yes.
- Q. -- which managed 51 per cent of the shares of Sibneft?

- A. Yes, I absolutely agree with you that it's not correct what it's saying here because my understanding --
- I don't know, I may refer to this point, but it's exact translation and I hope my lawyers -- this is translation of my lawyers; correct? This is translation --
- Q. No, it's not a translation. This is either a transcript or an extremely full note of what you were saying in English.
- A. No, no, no, just a second. It's not so. It's again the point -- I'm sorry. It's exactly the point because I was informed by lawyers that translation of what was saying in Le Bourget is not what I said directly in Le Bourget because it was mistaken by French. And it's the reason why I ask you what is this paper: this is final paper which was agreed with French or it's just paper was translated what was written in French? This is the point.
- Q. No, Mr Berezovsky. What you are looking at is --
- A. I --
- MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: You've asked what you're looking at --
- THE WITNESS: I'm sorry, my Lady.
- MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: -- and Mr Sumption is about to tell you and he'll take you to the document.
- MR SUMPTION: What you are looking at, Mr Berezovsky, is a note made by your English lawyers of the evidence that you gave to the French judge.

A. Who signed this?

Q. Do you accept that?

A. Who signed it?

Q. This is the note that you refer to in the note that you wrote in manuscript --

A. No, who signed from English side, from my lawyer? Who signed that?

Q. Nobody signed it, Mr Berezovsky.

A. Ah, okay.

Q. It was prepared by your lawyers as a record of what you had said to the French judge and you signed a document saying that you --

A. No, no, no, no, no.

Q. -- were prepared to sign the French version subject to the lawyers' --

A. No, no, no, no, no, no, no. It's again, again please, this is the final document which signed by my lawyers after correction? This is the question. Because I was told clearly before this hearing that there is a problem with the French document, which was made like transcript of our conversation, yes, and they were mistaken a lot. I don't know, maybe it's not mistake.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Okay. Well, there must be a clear record. Mr Rabinowitz, can you help on this?

First of all, before you start, was this video interview conducted exclusively in English or in English and French?

MR RABINOWITZ: Apparently in English, French and Russian.

Can I just try and help both Mr Sumption and the witness with what this is. This is the final version of a note which was taken by Mr Berezovsky's English solicitors --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Addleshaws?

MR RABINOWITZ: Addleshaws -- and it is this note that was the subject of the reservation signed by Mr Berezovsky on the French document.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: And was this based on a transcript?

MR RABINOWITZ: No.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: There was no transcript of the --

MR RABINOWITZ: The closest one gets to a transcript, I think, is the document that Mr Sumption showed your Ladyship in French.

MR SUMPTION: Well, no, that's not --

MR RABINOWITZ: Sorry, there wasn't --

MR SUMPTION: The document in French is a summary which is much briefer. The document in French is the document that begins at page 151. That is the greffier's summary.

As the note signed by Mr Berezovsky records -- and

I don't think there's any significant difference between the parties on this -- there was unhappiness about the French summary, which was thought not to be sufficiently full or accurate. Therefore, Mr Berezovsky signed a statement to the effect that he was content to sign the French summary by the greffier but only on terms that his English lawyers' much fuller version should be attached to it and put into the file.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Rabinowitz, was that the correct procedure? I mean, it must be a matter of record, this.

MR RABINOWITZ: I'm sorry, my Lady, I was just checking --

MR SUMPTION: It's effectively recorded in the manuscript note on page 151.

MR RABINOWITZ: My Lady, that is my understanding as well.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well.

MR SUMPTION: Mr Berezovsky, what you are looking at at page 182 is part of the final version, as Mr Rabinowitz has told us --

A. It's exactly what I want to understand for myself.

Q. -- of the note that your English lawyers took of what you told the French judge, right?

A. Mm-hm.

Q. Now, I think you've accepted that when you refer to papers which demonstrate that you owned 51 per cent of Sibneft 50/50 with Mr Abramovich, what you are referring to there is the 50 per cent interest which Consolidated Bank held in NFK, which in turn had the right to manage the 51 per cent interest in Sibneft?

A. Mr Sumption, you're absolutely correct.

Q. Thank you.

A. I just want to say that it does not mean -- and I signed that, you are correct, I responsible for that. The truth is what I present you when I said and we clear understand that I really share 51 per cent, not an ownership like -- ownership of Sibneft, ownership of NFK at that time. It could be, it could be that it's -- because I didn't remember well and you're absolutely correct that it could be -- what is written here does not coincide what I told you, my participation in NFK.

Q. You see, Mr Berezovsky, you're making here to the French judge much the same point as you made in the interview that I showed you before.

The point that I'm putting to you is this: you have always regarded the 50 per cent interest that Consolidated Bank held in NFK as tantamount to an ownership interest in Sibneft, haven't you?

A. Definitely not. I explained you big difference between what means 7 per cent, what means 51 per cent of the management in NFK and how we agreed with Mr Abramovich.

I absolutely agree with you that what is written here is not correct, I mean the French document. The problem is that -- I don't want to refer to the problem. You are correct with that but I'm correct what I said before, my Lady.

- Q. Why did you say this to the French judge only four months ago?
- A. Again, I was not accurate because still in my head it absolutely hell with the what is NFK, what it means later on when it was privatised. Again, it's my fault, I don't want to say you that you are wrong. You are correct.
- Q. You accept now, as I understand it, that neither you nor Roman Abramovich obtained any ownership interest in Sibneft shares as a result of the loans for shares auction?
- A. Not -- you are completely wrong. We discussed now about NFK in French documents and here it's completely -- just a second, may I read again?
- Q. No, I'm not putting to you the French document now.
- A. No, no, no, I mean that definitely everything is like presented before. We own 50/50 interest of 1 per cent -- 50/50 interest of 1 per cent in NFK and later on, after auctions of -- for 49 per cent and later on for 51 per cent of NFK, which was transformed to the other company, we own the same, 50/50.

How it was organised? It's that story. But reality is so what I said and I said absolutely correctly, even in French documents, that I'm owner, owner, owner of 50 per cent of Sibneft through Roman Abramovich. Abramovich is holding my shares; this is the point.

- Q. Mr Berezovsky, do you accept that NFK never owned any shares in Sibneft?
- A. Yes, NFK just manage 51 shares of Sibneft.
- Q. Yes. Now, you took a considerable interest, did you not, in the loans for shares auction; you personally?
- A. What does mean my "personally"?
- Q. You were very busy in relation to the loans for shares auction of 28 December?
- A. Absolutely, absolutely. I personally present all our group on the auction in Moscow -- again, I forgot exact date of the auction but just a second, it was -- ah, no, it was 29 -- 28 December 2000 -- sorry, 2000 -- '95. Sorry, '95.
- Q. It was 28 December 1995.
- A. Yes.
- Q. And you were personally extremely interested in that auction and you worked hard about it?
- A. Absolutely correct. Excuse me, can I leave it in front of me?
- Q. Sorry?

A. This I can leave --

Q. You can put away the H(C) bundle now, yes.

A. Thank you.

Q. And so did Mr Patarkatsishvili: he also worked hard on it, didn't he?

A. Yes, definitely.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: The assistant will take it away.

THE WITNESS: Sorry?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: The solicitor will take it away.

THE WITNESS: Thank you very much.

MR SUMPTION: Now, the cost to NFK of the loans for shares auction was that they had bid $100.3 million as the amount that they agreed to lend to the Russian State; that's right, isn't it?

A. No, Russian State put 100.

Q. The Russian State said the minimum bid was 100?

A. Correct.

Q. And the successful bid by NFK was $100.3 million?

A. You're correct.

Q. So that was the amount that NFK and SBS, which was acting with it, had to lend to the Russian State?

A. It is correct.

Q. Now, of that sum of $100.3 million, $3 million -- is this right -- was the advance deposit paid by NFK before the auction?

A. I don't know anything about that.

Q. And that, I suggest, was borrowed by NFK from the Russian Industrial Bank. Do you know about that?

A. No, Mr Sumption, I don't know about -- or not don't know; I don't remember anything about $3 million because I care about $100 million. It's, I'm sorry, an excuse but I really didn't think about $3 million at all. And -- okay, sorry.

Q. If you can't answer the question, fine.

Now, the remaining money advanced to the State was $97.3 million, which was advanced by SBS Bank, the bank that was associated with NFK in this bid; do you agree with that?

A. I disagree. I explain you why: because I talked with Mr Smolensky not about $97.5 million and if you open the French file you will see the same of Mr Smolensky's statement to general prosecutor office when they cross-examined him because of French -- because of Russian prosecutor office want to present additional paper that I'm criminal in France, yes? And it's written -- it is a question of Mr Smolensky, who is the head and founder of the bank which Mr Sumption is discussing, and his evidence is absolutely clear: he said that, "I gave Berezovsky under his personal name $100 million".

And I'm sorry to say, Mr Sumption, I didn't know anything about $3 million or don't remember about $3 million, but I remember well about $100 million.

Q. Okay. $100 million or $100.3 million was the total amount of the loan?

A. $100 million was amount of the loan for this auction. For this auction, I mean '95 -- December '95. As I know well, I establish business relations with this bank. And, my Lady, it's absolutely important to understand why I went to this bank, exactly to this bank, not the other one.

Q. That's not what I'm asking you about, Mr Berezovsky.

A. Okay. It's not only. And then when Roman Abramovich, who we delegate to manage everything -- that we discussed yesterday -- and when he tried to obtain money again for bidding, all the time, all the time the SBS-Agro Bank was involved in that.

Q. Right. Now, do you remember that under the rules for this loans for shares auction, bidders had to put up a deposit, a cash deposit --

A. I don't remember that at all.

Q. Right. Let me tell you that they did and it was $3 million.

A. Okay, fine. I don't remember that.

Q. Fine. I'm just --

A. Because, as I told you, $3 million very different from $100 million.

Q. Quite. Do you remember that $97 million -- or, to be exact, $97.3 million -- was advanced by SBS Bank to the State under the loans for shares auction?

A. I don't remember that at all. As I told you, I discuss about $100 million. All -- Mr Sumption, just a second. It's important not to mislead anybody.

My function, as you remember, in the agreement '95 was not to care about $3 million; my care was to find the funding. It's my obligation when we create agreement, agreement '95. And now we start to discuss: did I realise this agreement? And you just confirming that I realised at least the first point to agree it about the loan for the shares, the money bidding for the shares.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, did you realise in December 1995 that most of the money that was being lent to the Russian State was actually being advanced by SBS Bank?

A. Definitely. It was my agreement with Mr Smolensky that he will help us to organise this money for the bidding, $100 million. I never discussed with him $97 million.

Q. Now, under the rules of this auction, bidders had to have a bank associated with them, didn't they?

A. What does it mean, "associated with them"?

Q. They had to bid in conjunction with a bank which would undertake to lend the money?

A. It's correct.

Q. Yes. Now, SBS Bank therefore lent this money and it took security for the money, didn't it?

A. Again, may I tell you what we have done. When I --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, just answer the question. Did SBS --

A. As I know, SBS took security from Menatep.

MR SUMPTION: It took a number of different forms of security. It took a guarantee from Menatep --

A. Okay.

Q. -- yes? That was part of an arrangement that you'd made with Menatep --

A. Correct.

Q. -- under which you guaranteed their bid and they guaranteed yours.

A. Correct.

Q. Right? Which I say "you", in fact it was SBS who guaranteed it, wasn't it?

A. It was done by me.

Q. Now, SBS took, therefore, a guarantee from Menatep but they also took, didn't they, cash deposits as security?

A. I didn't know anything. I just learned that when I start to investigate my case. And, as I know,

Mr Abramovich insist that he gave his personal money through Runicom to guarantee. I think it's completely wrong because Abramovich didn't have money at all this amount that time.

He just used -- and moreover it was -- important -- it was finally money of Sibneft because Abramovich -- and I am not specialist in this financial scheme and we have specialist, and Natalia Nosova is one of them, who knows well how it was organised. I don't want to say that it was trick but it was kind of trick because it was not money of Abramovich Runicom company because Abramovich at that time already start to trade oil, as I told you when Mr Sumption asked me how it was possible to generate money because Sibneft just started. Abramovich -- and Abramovich definitely will explain it better.

But I want to stress it was not money of Abramovich and Runicom money. The only reason guarantee was guarantee from Menatep and also was done by me because my relations with Khodorkovsky. And I told you, my Lady, yesterday that it was just shake hands. And if Menatep put not 100.3 but 100.4, they win the bid. It again was just verbal agreement, just agreement with people who knows each other well, nothing more. It's not money of Abramovich.

- Q. Mr Berezovsky, I thought we'd established this morning that you had no knowledge of how much Runicom could afford because you didn't know anything about its finances.
- A. You are correct. But on the other hand I was not without eyes and without ears and I knew that -- I know well what Smolensky told me: that he organised that just because I asked him to do.
- Q. Right.
- A. And he told me clearly that it's not money of Abramovich, it's money of the bank. Moreover, you know well that using that, later Smolensky asked Sibneft to put money and to put on bank account all operations or partly operations of Sibneft. It was the payment, in my also clear understanding of our discussion with Smolensky, that later on, because he made me this favour, he will be -- he will use money of Sibneft to operate with them, what happened.
- Q. Mr Berezovsky, I'm going to describe in stages how SBS was secured and I want you at each stage to say whether you agree, whether you disagree or whether you do not know one way or the other.
- A. I give you answer: I don't know.
- Q. Well, you don't know what the question is.
- A. Yes, don't spend the time: I don't know.

Q. You're saying in advance that you won't know the answer to any of the questions I have to ask you?

A. No, no, I don't know how it was organised.

Q. Right. Well, let me put this to you.

There were two cash deposits which SBS took: it took $80 million deposits cash deposits from the two Siberian companies themselves. Do you agree or not agree or do you not know?

A. I don't know that at all.

Q. Right. And it took a deposit of $17.3 million from Runicom: do you agree or disagree or not know?

A. I don't know that at all.

Q. Thank you.

Now, that is the evidence that Mr Abramovich and Mr Shvidler will give and you are not, on your answers, able to contradict that, are you?

A. If I don't know, I'm not able to contradict. I know the other story which was presented my financial adviser and financial -- financial adviser, Natalia Nosova, and her level is much higher than level of people who present you this information.

Q. Now, in your witness statement you say that you gave a guarantee to SBS Bank.

A. My personal guarantee.

Q. Well, what you gave them was that you gave a personal assurance by word of mouth to Mr Smolensky that they would be paid?

A. Yes, I shake him hand and he said, "Boris, you are person who I trust".

Q. You never gave --

A. The same happened with Menatep, I would like to mention to you.

Q. You never gave a written guarantee, did you?

A. A real guarantee? A real guarantee?

Q. No, no. You never gave a written guarantee to SBS Bank?

A. I never gave written guarantee.

Q. You never gave them a legally binding guarantee; you simply did it on trust?

A. Absolutely correct.

Q. Right. Now, that assurance, you never were called upon to pay up on that assurance, were you? Nobody ever asked you to pay up?

A. Nobody asked me to pay because it was agreed that Sibneft later would return money back.

Q. Right.

Now, do you claim to have contributed any money of your own to the cost of lending $100.3 million to the Russian State?

A. I don't have any personal direct investment. But what is important, my Lady, to understand: that as we agreed, and it was one of the reasons why Smolensky shake hand, that I finance ORT myself. It means that in spite of the -- part of our consortium of bank who took obligation to finance ORT in front of president, they never put money themselves. Sometimes they give me credit but I should return this credit back: it's happened with Smolensky, it's happened with Menatep. And it means that Smolensky trust me, that I have reputation as person who deliver his obligation on the one hand.

And on the other hand, how to calculate? Maybe invest even at the time already $20 million from which Smolensky should invest himself in ORT. But I didn't put any one penny personally to this exactly 100 but it's the other story.

Q. Right. Now, let's turn to the three cash auctions which happened in 1995 and 1996 for the 49 per cent.

Now, those were auctions in which actual shares in Sibneft were being sold, weren't they?

A. You are correct.

Q. The first of them happened in December 1995, at about the same time as the loan for shares auction?

A. The first auction happened December...?

Q. '95. The result was actually announced in January.

A. Just a second. The first auction happened before

51 per cent was given to -- as a collateral?

Q. Well, before the loans for -- the loans for shares auction was on 28 December.

A. '95?

Q. '95. Also in late '95 -- I don't think the exact date matters -- there was the first of three auctions of the 49 per cent that was being privatised.

A. First of all, I have different impression: that the State start to sell shares only after their collateral auction. Can you please check it?

Q. That's probably right. Let's assume it is.

A. No, no, no, it's important, because now you just try to present me that the first auction to sell was organised before auction of --

Q. No, Mr Berezovsky, I've not suggested that to you.

A. Just a second. Just a second.

Q. Mr Berezovsky --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Hang on. Don't let's have a debate about what question --

MR SUMPTION: I'm not asking him about the exact date. About the time --

A. No, no, just a second. Mr Sumption, can you allow me please to read what you said now. (Pause)

It's absolutely wrong. No one auction for 39 per cent (sic). It's written:

"Also in [the] late '95..."

It could be later than 28. It could be later than 28; I don't think so. It means that the first auction -- and you will find that's clear now -- happened not in '95 to sell. This is important.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Well, it must be a matter of record.

MR SUMPTION: It is a matter of record.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So can we just have the dates read into the record. There can't be any dispute about these. There must be a record.

MR SUMPTION: The evidence is given by Mr Gorodilov and the evidence is that the sale actually occurred in November 1995, therefore before the loans for shares auction. But the question I am proposing to ask Mr Berezovsky has nothing to do with the date.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Well, ask the question again.

MR SUMPTION: It doesn't matter when this happened.

There was a first auction of the 49 per cent, which related to 15 per cent of the Sibneft shares, didn't it?

A. Sorry, again?

Q. Do you agree that there were three auctions?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you agree that the first of the three auctions related to 15 per cent of Sibneft?

- A. I don't know. I don't know. I was not responsible for that. But what I know well: that all payment were done with support of SBS-Agro, who is the bank of Smolensky, including this sale and including participation in 51 per cent.
- Q. Do you agree that at the first auction, 12.22 per cent of Sibneft's shares --
- A. When this happened? Please tell me.
- Q. It was in November 1995 but I'm not asking you about the date.
- A. Yes.
- Q. At the first auction, whenever it happened, the result was that 12.22 per cent of Sibneft's shares were acquired by Mr Abramovich's company, Runicom?
- A. I agree with that.
- Q. Right. Neither you nor Mr Patarkatsishvili had anything to do with that purchase of 12.22 per cent, did you?
- A. I don't know that. As I understand, it's also done with support of SBS-Agro. Is it so or not?
- Q. I'm asking what you had to do with it.
- A. I agreed with SBS-Agro -- again, two points.

First of all, Abramovich is responsible for everything, including auction, including everything. I responsible for money if he need money. If he doesn't need money, he is doing himself. When he said, "Boris, we need money for share against of auction", I obtained this money; or the way how I obtained that, this is the point.

And I just tell you, Mr Sumption, that Abramovich present me the presentation for Sibneft all over the world, in English written, this is Sibneft to Berezovsky, and I travelled all over the world to obtain money. Did he ask me or not about this exactly?

I don't remember. I just want to tell you that it was his responsibility. When he ask me, I deliver that.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, did you or did you not have anything to do personally with the first auction of the 49 per cent?

A. I agreed with Mr Smolensky to help us. I don't --

Q. You had nothing to do with it?

A. I am sorry, I'll answer. I don't remember.

Q. You don't remember?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember whether Mr Patarkatsishvili had anything to do with the first auction out of the 49 per cent?

A. I remember that Mr Abramovich informed day by day to Mr Patarkatsishvili what was happening around auctions.

Q. So is it your evidence that you can't remember whether you were involved in the arrangements for participating in the first auction?

A. As I told you before, involvement of Patarkatsishvili means my involvement as well.

Q. So is it your evidence that you can't remember whether you were involved in the first of these auctions?

A. It's absolutely correct.

Q. Right. In your witness statement --

A. I mean directly. Did I talk about that to Abramovich or not? Again, I want just to stress again, if Abramovich need money, he ask me to do. I don't remember did he ask me or not.

Q. In your witness statement, paragraph 156 D2/17/229 -- it should be in front of you. In your witness statement --

A. Just a second. Yes.

Q. "I was not involved in the arrangements for participating in these auctions but knew they were taking place."

A. I just want to stress you, Mr Sumption, that at that time Sibneft already generated money. This time when Sibneft generated money, it means that money, Sibneft were involved in that. It's my company, it's my company, like a company of Abramovich, and I want to stress that. It means my money were involved in that.

Q. Are you suggesting that Sibneft produced money for the first of these auctions?

A. I think so. Definitely.

- Q. But that was in 1995, Mr Berezovsky.
- A. Yes, this was in 1995. As you told me -- asked me before, how it was possible to pay money even when company -- if company was just created and so-so? It means that company was created already in November '95.
- Q. But, Mr Berezovsky, you hadn't got control of Sibneft until after 28 December. How could they possibly --
- A. What does mean -- it's a question to Abramovich. It's exactly what I told you, because Abramovich at that time was already trader, trade, and he accept -- as I told before, Mr Sumption, that it was splitted several parties and it was the reason of vertical-integrated technology and Abramovich from the beginning, from the beginning of creation even I think -- before beginning of Sibneft, before creation of Sibneft, he already used this scheme to generate money from the oil of Sibneft and definitely he increased this opportunity after Sibneft -- after Sibneft was formally formed.
- Q. How could he have done that when he didn't have any control over Sibneft, Mr Berezovsky?
- A. No, it's wrong. Abramovich said in his -- all the time and all the time present his position that he control Mr Gorodilov decisions, he control Mr Litskevich decision, in his witness statement, and it's the only reason why he become my partner.

- Q. Well, I will leave Mr Abramovich to deal with that but he did not in fact say anything of the sort in his witness statement.
- A. Okay, okay, okay. We'll leave it to Mr Abramovich.
- Q. Let me refer you to your witness statement, Mr Berezovsky.
- A. Yes.
- Q. Is it true that you were not involved in the arrangements for participating in these auctions? And that refers to the three cash auctions of the 49 per cent.
- A. I was not involved in these three auctions but because of one reason, and it's not correct just to put the point here: because Abramovich functions would delivered that, not my functions, after agreement in '95.
- Q. You weren't even consulted, were you, about --
- A. If Abramovich need --
- Q. Let me finish the question. You weren't even consulted about the three auctions of the 49 per cent, were you?
- A. Mr Sumption, it's serious story. I gave up everything to Abramovich with one reason: don't spend my time for nothing. I was involved with much more important deal than Sibneft and I want to understand clear.

For me, the most important deal was to win election '96. For me, the most important was ORT, believe me.

If not ORT, Badri manage Sibneft, not Abramovich, because I trust him much more. Or Nikolai Glushkov, who already passed through Avtovaz as deputy general manager of Avtovaz, the biggest car manufacturing company in Russia.

Could you believe that I say, "Mr Abramovich, young boy, fantastic boy, manage please enormous business"? Only because I had the other priority, Mr Sumption.

Q. So is the answer to my question: no, you were not consulted about the three cash auctions of the 49 per cent?

A. I don't consult Mr Abramovich at all.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I'm going to take a break there, Mr Sumption.

MR SUMPTION: Yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Ten minutes.

(11.53 am)

(A short break)

(12.05 pm)

MR SUMPTION: May I, for the benefit of your Ladyship and the transcript, just record the dates of the first auction.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, thank you.

MR SUMPTION: The first auction opened for the receipt of bids on 1 November 1995 and closed on 1 December of that year. The best places to find that in due course are paragraph 23 of Mr Gorodilov's witness statement, bundle E2, flag 4 E2/04/9, and the report of the audit commission into the conduct of these auctions, the Russian State audit commission, the reference to which is H(A)09/33 at paragraph 2.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you.

MR SUMPTION: Now, I think we can -- at least I hope we can shorten matters, Mr Berezovsky.

Would you please look at paragraph 156 of your witness statement. I'm going to read out a single sentence in it and ask you whether it is true or false.

A. Mm-hm.

Q. The sentence reads:

"I do not recall being consulted on the bidding process or on the structures behind it."

Is that true?

A. It's true.

Q. Thank you.

Now, if you had agreed with Mr Abramovich that you were going to have a 50 per cent interest with Mr Patarkatsishvili in whatever shares Mr Abramovich might buy, you would have taken a considerable interest in the three cash auctions of the 49 per cent. But you didn't, did you?

- A. No, I had inconsiderable interest but this interest should be presented by Abramovich according of our agreement, Mr Sumption.
- Q. If you had been promised an interest in these shares, you would have wanted to make sure in advance that Mr Abramovich took part and that he bid a serious price, and you would have discussed that with him, wouldn't you?
- A. I did not discuss at all that with him.
- Q. No, and that was because you didn't have the least interest in what happened to the shares that were being sold in the 49 per cent auctions?
- A. Again, Mr Sumption, once, once and once more again, I have a principle agreement with Mr Abramovich after he took by his initiative responsibility to manage everything what concerning Sibneft creation and privatisation. If Abramovich had any question to do that, he should refer to me. And I give you exact example how it works, okay?

I didn't pay any interest to the first auction, to the second, to the third, as far as money is concerned. When it happened, it was out of my interest. But when Abramovich said, "We need $100 million" -- and even later, I would like to remind you, Mr Sumption, that you mentioned now -- I was responsible for that because our agreement was written clear: I responsible for funding but Abramovich responsible to manage.

It means what it means: that I don't initiate, "Roman, do you like money? Do you want money? Do you have enough money?" It's exactly I want to forget about this headache. But if Abramovich asking to me to help, this is my response and only this my response. In opposite case, I manage the company, not Abramovich manage the company. Why need Abramovich if I need to think what we need to do and how to do that?

Well, Abramovich said, "Boris, we need money", and I said, "Okay, fine". He gave me prospectus, which you have, Mr Sumption, which written Runicom to Boris Berezovsky in English what is Sibneft and Boris -- Boris Berezovsky, I'm sorry to say that I refer to me in this way; it's not correct I understand -- and I start to travel all over the world, including Soros, including Deutsche Bank, including German banks, including Japanese, including Japan, including -- you are correct, now I remind -- including Korea, South Korea, trying to find funds.

No one give me even one dollar and Mr Soros told, "Boris, you are crazy. Next day Communists will take power, they take everything from you. Take your family and leave Russia, you have already enough money". This is the situation. When Abramovich -- it's absolutely clear from our agreement it's not my initiation to ask what you need. His initiation should be, "What I need..." and I deliver that. This is the point.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. I've got the point, thank you.

THE WITNESS: Thank you, my Lady.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Sumption.

MR SUMPTION: Mr Berezovsky, that answer, when you referred to the $100 million, you were referring to the amount that had to be put up to lend to the Russian State in the loans for shares auction, weren't you?

A. Yes, it's correct.

Q. Right. Now, I am actually asking you about the separate auctions for the sale of the 49 per cent that was being privatised, right?

What I suggested to you is that if you had agreed with Mr Abramovich that you and Mr Patarkatsishvili were going to have a half interest in shares that he bought, you would have taken a serious interest in the three cash auctions for the 49 per cent, and you didn't.

A. Mr Sumption, I even gave explanation why I didn't pay, not serious, any interest to that: because Abramovich was responsible for that; and the second, it was not my number one priority. I had much more important priority at that time. For Abramovich, as I told you yesterday, Sibneft is only dream and project of his life, nothing more. For me, it's different.

- Q. Now, in relation to the three auctions of the 49 per cent, Mr Abramovich never did come to you and say, "I need money", did he?
- A. For three auctions, never.
- Q. Right.
- A. For 51 per cent to management company, definitely he can do that.
- Q. Well, I'm not talking about the loans for shares auction. In relation --
- A. I don't remember any time that he asked me money for these biddings.
- Q. And you never paid any money for the shares that were sold in the three cash auctions for the 49 per cent, did you?
- A. Why I should pay -- I'm sorry, Mr Sumption, give me please to finish -- if he doesn't ask me?

My understanding was that he generate money from Sibneft, which belonged to me, to Badri and to him somehow, or at least belong oil which they produced to sell on the market, and this generate money for this auction. I didn't know that exactly, yes? But I was not asked to give any money. Why I should initiate, "Roman, do you need some money?" He never asked me and

I was happy.

Q. I just want to ascertain the facts, Mr Berezovsky.

A. Sorry?

Q. I want to ascertain the facts. You didn't contribute any money, did you, for any of these auctions?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Do you agree?

A. I don't know, it's my answer, because Sibneft generate money. If Sibneft did not put this money to the auction, it means I did not. If Sibneft --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Are you saying that Sibneft gave capital or dividend money?

A. Sibneft trade oil -- again, what they do we know now well, and again I'm sorry to say Khodorkovsky in jail because of that. Abramovich is still here, and me as well. They sold with a low price oil which Sibneft produce inside of the country with a low price. Then they export --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Oh, they take the profit out of --

A. Absolutely correct.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Okay. So you're saying that some of that profit money was paid to acquire the shares?

A. Absolutely. My Lady, it's absolutely correct. It means that it's my money as well.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I see.

MR SUMPTION: Mr Berezovsky, you did not put up any further money out of your own pocket for any of these auctions, did you?

A. No.

Q. Right. So far as you know, neither did Mr Patarkatsishvili?

A. I never heard about that.

Q. Now, you have no knowledge, do you, of how the shares that were bought in the three cash auctions of the 49 per cent were paid for, do you, except that you didn't pay for them?

A. Again, I didn't know at all because Abramovich never ask me how he obtained the money. He never -- on the other hand, Abramovich never ask me to obtain the money except of what we discussed already, 51 per cent.

Q. Now, in each case -- is this right -- the shares on offer in the three auctions of the 49 per cent were acquired by Mr Abramovich's companies, weren't they?

A. Again, as you remember our agreement, our agreement -- I would like to stress again -- '95, everything what generate Sibneft and everything what generate connected to Sibneft, from the Sibneft activity, belong to us together. It means it's my money as well which Abramovich kept in Runicom.

Q. Do you agree that in each of these three auctions for the 49 per cent, the shares purchased were bought by Mr Abramovich's companies? Is that correct or is it not?

- A. Again, I don't know. I think you're absolutely correct. But money in this company belonged to me as well as Abramovich.

Mr Sumption, and I want again to stress one important point: even though this money, my Lady, was generated also because of SBS-Agro support, because they need the credit to do this operation, as I know from witness statement made by Mr Gorodilov, it means that even in this case, generating money which officially belonged to Roman Abramovich, they used support of SBS-Agro to make this operation. Again, they used my personal relations with Smolensky and his agreement to help me -- because he knew me, not Mr Abramovich -- to do that.

- Q. Now, in May 1997, after the state had defaulted on the loan, the 51 per cent was sold in a further auction, wasn't it?

- A. Yes, I remember the date, as I told you yesterday: it was 12 December -- 12 May '97. But I remember not auction; I remember the disagreement with Chechnya, as I told before.

- Q. Right. The same thing happened in that auction, did it not? The successful bidder was FNK -- not to be confused with NFK --

A. Yes.

Q. The successful bidder was FNK and that was a company controlled by Mr Abramovich, wasn't it?

A. As you remember, Mr Sumption, it was agreed between Abramovich and me and Badri that it transfer from NFK to FNK because of -- to distance our participation in Sibneft because of complication of the political situation. It means that you are correct, absolutely, that the company formally belonged to Abramovich and it was our goodwill, because of our agreement with Abramovich, to transfer what was NFK to FNK.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, there was no agreement to transfer anything from NFK to FNK, was there?

A. It's absolutely wrong.

Q. Would you like to point us to your witness statement --

A. Just a second. It was agreement '96 between me and Abramovich that we distance. It means that was not formal agreement that we transfer that to that, to the company, but was agreement that we distance that. It means that everything what was not structured properly at the beginning, when we just start to make Sibneft under control, now will be controlled only under Abramovich roof. This is roof, this is correct, what -- for this situation.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, your evidence about the 1996 agreement is that it was an agreement to conceal your interest in Sibneft.

A. Could you allow me to open this page or not?

Q. You can open any page you like. What do you want to look at?

A. About '96 agreement.

Q. You'll find it at paragraph 174 of your witness statement D2/17/234.

A. 174?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes. What do you refer to?

Q. Sorry, that's the agreement with Badri, forgive me.

A. Yes, it is agreement with Badri, it's correct.

Q. It's 165 onwards D2/17/232.

A. 165, yes.

Q. Okay?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, what do you say was transferred from NFK to FNK?

A. Yes. You know how, when you have agreement, you have the sense of agreement and technology of agreement, yes? To realise. The sense, target, and how to reach this target. Here we fix what we need to reach. And how? It's already by Abramovich. I trust him because of agreement of '95: it means that he is the host how to do that, not me.

- Q. What do you say was transferred from NFK to FNK?
- A. It's exactly because -- when I said to transfer, I even start to think what to transfer. I think the management control at the beginning transferred to the other company and that this company when they bid I think -- I don't remember -- would transfer management control.
- Q. What do you say was actually agreed about a transfer from NFK to FNK?
- A. That NFK -- that FNK will be 100 per cent Roman company, not already with share 50/50, and it will be transformation from company which owned 50/50 between me and Badri to Roman to protect us better.
- Q. NFK was only the manager of the State's 51 per cent holding, wasn't it?
- A. NFK, the first one, you mean?
- Q. Yes.
- A. Yes, NFK just manage. And it's supposed that the new company will not only manage, will also take formal share control over that.
- Q. Once the 51 per cent holding of the State had been sold to private investors, NFK had no further function at all, did it?
- A. I don't know. Ask, please, Abramovich which function this company has. I don't know. I give up everything to Abramovich.

Moreover, Mr Sumption it's very important that you initially refer me to the paragraph 174 saying that agreement with the Badri '96 because it's absolutely coincide, my Lady, with the same point.

At the same time, because of Abramovich -- and Abramovich insist, and I think he was correct, that I distance from the business. At the same time I tried to distance from the business not only from Abramovich, he was not exception; I tried to distance also from Badri in the same way. Not maybe the same way, but it's the same.

And Mr Sumption I think not occasionally miss my agreement with Abramovich to distance and my agreement with Badri to distance because it was the same story.

Q. Now, you do not claim, do you, to have had any interest in FNK?

A. FNK?

Q. The second company.

A. My interest was preserved by Mr Abramovich.

Q. You don't claim to have had any interest in it, do you?

A. Interest, definitely. Interest means that Abramovich hold my shares and pay me my interest as dividends or profit from our activity. It depends in general what sense means "interest". Sometimes interest means shareholding; sometimes interest means just result of the activity of the company.

Q. Would it be fair to say that you had no ties or links with FNK?

A. If they pay me money, if not links, it's so; but they pay me money, it means that they have link, that the stream of money which they pay me...

Q. Would you look please in bundle H(A)06 at 113 H(A)06/113, which is --

A. H?

Q. You haven't got it yet but somebody is about to give it to you. H(A)06/113.

Now, this is a -- I'm afraid we don't have a Russian original for this, so far as I'm aware, but this is a -- I don't think there is a Russian. This is a Reuters text service.

A. Reuters?

Q. Yes.

"Boris Berezovsky, the business magnate who holds a senior Kremlin security post, denied on Tuesday that he had any links to the mystery buyer of a majority stake in Russia's seventh biggest oil producer, Sibneft. 'I have no ties to FNK,' Berezovsky told Reuters when asked if [FNK], which acquired 51 per cent of Sibneft at an auction on Monday, was linked to [NFK], which organised the tender and is part of Berezovsky's diversified business empire."

Did you say that?

A. I can't exclude that I say that. I don't remember but I can't exclude. The reason again very --

Q. Was it true?

A. It's true according of our agreement with Mr Abramovich.

Q. Sorry?

A. It's true according to agreement with Mr Abramovich.

Q. So it was true, wasn't it, that you had no ties to FNK?

A. I don't have any official ties to FNK, it means that that's true.

Q. You had no connection at all with the company, did you?

A. I don't have any official connections to FNK, true.

Q. Did you pay any money out of your own pocket towards the cost of acquiring that 51 per cent in May 1997?

A. Definitely, because money which we paid for NFK finally, when we return back to Mr Smolensky, the money which we paid for NFK, definitely it's money which belong to me and Abramovich as it's money generated by our company, with the share Badri and me and Abramovich, Badri and me 50, and Abramovich 50. Definitely it's my money.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: This is because you say the money for the purchase of the 49 per cent came --

A. No, not all -- now we discuss, my Lady, about

51 per cent.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: 51.

A. Yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So are you saying the money for the 51 per cent as well came out of Sibneft profits?

A. Correct.

MR SUMPTION: You're not suggesting that the money to buy the 51 per cent came out of FNK, are you? It came out of Sibneft profits is your suggestion?

A. It came from profit which generate Sibneft and the company linked to here like Runicom.

Q. Right. Well, we will come to that in due course.

A. In due course?

Q. Later on we will come to that question.

A. Oh, I see.

Q. Now, what I suggest to you is that the reason why you were extremely interested in the cash for sales auction for the management rights but not at all interested in the sales of either the 49 per cent or the 51 per cent was that you were only interested in getting management control over Sibneft, not in owning it at all?

A. Mr Sumption, I present many, many times that if I -- I am sorry, my Lady, for this wording. If I am really -- if you look -- if I really look like completely crazy compared with other businessmen at that time, and it's not so, unfortunately for Mr Abramovich, yes? I was not crazy at that time.

And who lose opportunity which created yourself mainly? And even Abramovich did not refuse that I was the key person who help, who (inaudible) to create Sibneft and to privatise Sibneft. Who, Mr Sumption, could imagine that this man just voluntarily say, "Roman, you're nice guy, now you own everything. It's all your shares, just give me peanuts; if even not peanuts, at least to invest ORT"? Mr Sumption, I propose you, it doesn't work.

Q. The point is, Mr Berezovsky, that Mr Abramovich had paid for these shares, had he not, and you had not paid for them?

A. I paid, as I explain you. I paid my money. Again, it's my money which Sibneft generate, directly or indirectly. It's my money, my and Badri money.

Q. Sibneft didn't make a single penny of profits in 1996, did it?

A. Mr Sumption, I explain you again and I agree again -- explain to you again: they use all company, all oil company, the same way. Company itself was not profitable but they make money trading oil abroad and selling for the other price. Nothing changed that time.

Q. You have no knowledge, do you, of what the trading terms were between Sibneft and those to whom it sold export oil? You have no personal knowledge of that at all, do you?

A. About how they deal -- how the -- what is technology of this deal?

Q. No. As I understand it, the last answer that you gave was talking about transfer pricing. Right?

A. It's different terminology. Some use transfer pricing, some use different pricing, but I learned that only after. I didn't know these words before.

Q. You still have not got the faintest idea, have you, of what the terms of trading were between Sibneft and those to whom it sold oil?

A. Mr Sumption, I am sorry for this example. When I present my PhD, I try to explain it to my mum -- she doesn't have this education like me -- because the sense of the problem I understand well, anyone in the world. I heard by TV that you have the greatest mind in England, I accept that; but believe me this is not your level, a little bit less, to understand what means to get profit from abroad when you sell in the country.

Q. Do you actually know anything about the terms of trade between Sibneft and those to whom it sold oil?

A. I don't know anything about the terms. I know how it was done.

Q. How do you know how it was done?

A. Because it was common knowledge. Every oil company, they have done the same, and Khodorkovsky is in jail because of that.

Q. You don't know at all?

A. It's common knowledge for everybody who knew a little bit. How I knew about the car production in terms of a sale in Avtovaz when I was not -- when Nikolai Glushkov managed that? But I knew how they generate money abroad, I knew it well. They sold car for dented(?) price to Peru and some other country and sold for the real price and generate money for KGB and Communist party. It's known, it's common knowledge.

Q. You say that other companies engaged in transfer pricing and therefore you assume that Sibneft did, but you don't know at all, do you?

A. Mr Sumption, I knew that at all. Excellent. I knew -- I don't know any details but I knew the construction. It's very simple and you know that.

MR RABINOWITZ: Can I ask my learned friend, if he's going to put the question, to make clear whether it's his case that there wasn't transfer pricing of this sort.

MR SUMPTION: It is my case that there was no transfer pricing if --

THE WITNESS: It's the reason why I said --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, Mr Berezovsky, please --

THE WITNESS: Excuse me.

MR SUMPTION: It is my case that --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just a second, Mr Sumption.

THE WITNESS: I'm sorry, my Lady, I will not be more.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Please let him put the question, or in this case state his case. Mr Sumption, please make sure that you don't ask the question until Mr Berezovsky has finished his answer.

THE WITNESS: I am sorry, my Lady.

MR SUMPTION: I am simply seeking to answer my learned friend Mr Rabinowitz's question which was addressed to me.

It is my case that if by transfer pricing one means, as we understand, sales at an artificially low value for the purpose of transferring profit out of Sibneft into other entities controlled by Mr Abramovich, that proposition is denied. That I understand to be what my learned friend alleges but it is not correct.

MR RABINOWITZ: Just to make clear that it's not what I allege but we'll come back to it in due course.

MR SUMPTION: Now, Mr Berezovsky, I dare say you're not in a position to help us with precise knowledge on this. As I understand from the answers that you have been giving, you say that because other companies engaged in artificial pricing, you assume that Sibneft did as well?

A. Mr Sumption, first of all I want to mention that I said transferring price or any other name, I don't know, to be correct -- to correct. But I knew that the way how -- that all oil company operate in the same manner: to sell with low price inside and to get profit abroad by selling abroad. This is the general idea.

Q. But you have no knowledge of the internal business affairs of Sibneft because you left that to Mr Abramovich --

A. You are correct.

Q. Right.

Now, I want to ask you, please, about your evidence concerning the 1996 agreement. Now --

A. This one -- may I leave this paper?

Q. You can put away everything on your desk apart from your witness statement.

Now, I would like you to be given, please,

K2/04/16.

A. D2?

Q. No, no, no. You haven't got it yet, Mr Berezovsky.

A. Sorry.

Q. K2/04/16.

A. This page, yes?

Q. Okay?

A. What is that?

Q. Right.

Now, do you remember that when this action began, your case was that each of the three of you, Mr Abramovich, Mr Patarkatsishvili and yourself, held personally, through your own companies, their proportions of the shares which had been acquired in Sibneft? Do you remember that that was your case?

A. Yes.

Q. And that was wrong, wasn't it?

A. What is wrong?

Q. Well, if you've got K2, flag 4 open, let me show you specifically: paragraph 36, please, on page 26 K2/04/26. This document, let me tell you what it is --

A. Just a second, please. It's K2/04?

Q. K2, flag 4.

A. The page?

Q. It starts on page 16 and I want you to look at page 26 but let me tell you first what it is.

A. Yes.

Q. This is particulars of claim telling us what your case was --

A. Mm-hm.

Q. -- which was served by Cadwaladers, your then solicitors, in January 2008. You can see your signature signing a statement of truth on page 64.

A. Yes.

Q. Right?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, if you look at paragraph 36, you say:

"Initially, Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili legally owned or controlled companies which controlled and legally owned their proportions of the Sibneft shares."

Now, I think that your current evidence is that that was wrong, isn't it?

A. It's wrong from the beginning that initially -- no.

It's -- okay. Generally it's not correct, let's say so. But what is true that we own small shares directly as P&K-Trast -- which I didn't know, to say you true, I didn't know how it was organised -- and we control through NFK 50 per cent of NFK.

And what is not correct here, that we legally own the proportion. If to think in terms "legally own", for me it means that as far Mr Abramovich hold my shares at his hand, it was just because of agreement -- which we understand is absolutely legal agreement -- to keep my shares at his hand.

But if to read that directly, I agree with you that it's not accurate written here. Nothing more. Not accurate.

- Q. The respect in which it's not accurate is that the shares acquired in Sibneft in the cash auctions of the 49 per cent and in the default auction of the 51 per cent, those shares had, as I think you've accepted, always been held by companies owned and controlled by Mr Abramovich?
- A. As you know, not 49 per cent, as it turned out, because again it was exist some P&K-Trast who belong to me, owned by me and Badri. It means that it's not correct to say that all -- but again, it's happened occasionally. It's not because I really planned to do that; again, because only Abramovich decide how it should be structurised.
- Q. Mr Berezovsky, you keep referring to PK-Trast. PK-Trast was a company which had an indirect interest in some of the shares bought in September 1996. Are you aware of that?
- A. Could be. No, I -- could be. Because I told you I don't know even how it's happened because it's structurised by Abramovich and from there, as you told -- as you have told correctly, that even in '95, Abramovich said that we don't need to have written contract, yes? And how it's happened, I don't know; maybe just mistake of Abramovich people to do that. But I never insist to have anything in PK-Trast.

Q. Well, Mr Berezovsky, I don't want to waste time asking you questions about PK-Trast if the reality --

A. No, you put me question and I gave you answer.

Q. I don't want to waste time asking questions about PK-Trast if your position is that you don't really know about it. Is that your position: you don't really know about PK-Trast?

A. At that time I didn't know that, definitely.

Q. Now, your original case was that at some time between April and June 1996 --

A. Just -- April and June...?

Q. 1996 -- the three of you made a further agreement that the shares held by your companies and Mr Patarkatsishvili's companies --

A. Mm-hm.

Q. -- would be transferred over to Mr Abramovich's companies. That was your original case, wasn't it?

A. Shares -- but I don't remember the date. I'm -- we had shares except of -- we don't have shares. We have shares which were hold by Mr Abramovich, yes, and now we want to put all our shares under his personal control, including the shares of 51 per cent which later we'll get as a result of the bid for the -- for this 51 per cent, correct.

- Q. Well now, if you look at paragraphs 36 and 37 of this pleading --
- A. Yes.
- Q. -- what you are saying, and what you signed a statement to say was true, is that originally the shares in Sibneft were owned by companies which were controlled and legally owned by you and Mr Patarkatsishvili; and then in 1996 -- see paragraph 37 --
- A. Yes.
- Q. -- it was agreed that the shares would be transferred to companies controlled by Mr Abramovich.
- A. And shares... (Pause)
- Q. Read paragraph 36.
- A. Just -- yes, I start to read. It's 37, yes?
- Q. Read 36, please.
- A. Ah, okay. Sorry. From the beginning, yes?
- Q. Yes. (Pause)
- A. Okay, more or less. Okay. I'm listening to you, Mr Sumption.
- Q. So your original case was that originally you held these Sibneft shares through your own companies and then Mr Abramovich proposed that they should all be transferred to his companies and that was agreed. That was your original case?

A. Mr Sumption, definitely as far as wording is concerned, it's not accurate here. I signed that, I agree with that, no problem at all. I just present, my Lady, my understanding of reality what was happening in that time. Definitely later on I find out unfortunately some misunderstanding, in spite of I signed -- definitely I signed that. But it's not my witness statement, in which also I have sometimes, even now, problems.

But the sense is absolutely clear, no doubts with that, whatever wording you put in this sense. The sense of '95 we already discussed and the sense of '96 is also clear. We transfer under Roman control, under Roman -- we will use trust, even here we use trust, because at that time I didn't understand what mean "trust" -- but under Roman control all our shares. And the transformation which is described here means that what we -- before control as a management control, 51 per cent, between me and Roman, 50/50, now will be as a shareholding control by Roman. But his company, not our more.

Again, I think it's important for understanding that it's not lie, this is not trick, because I have done at the same time exactly that with Badri, with my former partner, and it's written absolutely perfect here in the paragraph 36. Just because, as you correctly said, it was April-June in '96. It means everybody was sure that Communists will take power, everybody, and we try to distance as much as possible.

And even thinking that it could be trick from Roman side, what Badri all the time thinking that Roman will trick and so, but I think it's useful for all of us. It's useful for Roman, it's useful for us, for us to protect more, because Roman really -- as we discussed before, when I proposed him, "Roman, let's share ORT as well 50/50, because we become 50/50 partners", and Roman refused that because he was maybe more wise than me understanding that it's political very dangerous at that time to be involved in that.

- Q. What is clearly not correct, Mr Berezovsky, is your statement that there was an agreement to transfer Sibneft shares from companies controlled by you to companies controlled by Mr Abramovich. That's not correct, is it, because they've always been controlled by Mr Abramovich?
- A. "Controlled", what does mean "controlled"? It's our shares, which don't nobody care how it was structured because Abramovich structure that. I trust him. And now he decide, because we now start to discuss already the 51 per cent of the shares, which is controlling, yes, and what was under management control before, and now should be controlled as an owner, and we agreed that Abramovich will control -- will be under his company, which company belong, 50 per cent -- 100 per cent to him will be under control because to distance -- the distance. I don't understand what is illogical here.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, in April to June 1996 the position was that the only Sibneft shares owned by anybody other than the State were the 12.22 per cent of shares that Mr Abramovich had bought in the first cash auction.

A. Abramovich bought it for us together.

Q. All right.

Now, you are saying here, in paragraphs 36 and 37(a), that in April to June 1996 Mr Abramovich proposed that the shares should be transferred from companies controlled by you to companies controlled by him and that was agreed.

Now, I'm going to ask you a very simple question. Was it agreed in 1996 that Sibneft shares should be transferred from companies controlled by you to companies controlled by Mr Abramovich? Was that agreed, yes or no?

A. It was agreed, absolutely correctly, but I didn't know how much shares and where I control directly. This is the point. And you're absolutely correct, it was agreed that our shares will be transferred to Abramovich control, but at that time I even didn't know how much at that time would have been under my personal control.

- Q. How could they be transferred to Mr Abramovich's companies when they had always been in the name of Mr Abramovich's companies?
- A. Look, Mr Sumption, first of all, it was in front -- it was in front of their shareholding -- their auction, 51 per cent. The second, as we know, I think it's occasionally some shares were under my control. It's PK-Trast and so. It means that everything what -- and I didn't know how Abramovich organised the structuring of this 49 per cent. I thought that maybe -- I thought that maybe he organised from the beginning in proper way, 50/50. I did not know that. It's the reason why I said: okay, fine, everything what belong, what is indirect my control will be in your direct control. That's it.
- Q. Mr Berezovsky, I think you've confirmed that you know nothing about PK-Trast.
- A. Okay.
- Q. In fact PK-Trast owned no shares in anything until September of this year. I'm talking about an earlier stage. All right?
- A. Okay. Mr Sumption, I can't add anything. I'm sorry to say that.

- Q. Now, the question I asked you was how could shares be transferred from your companies to Mr Abramovich's companies if Mr Abramovich's companies had always had them?
- A. Mr Sumption, I don't have answer to this question because I did not -- I was not aware which shares are under my control, under control of Abramovich. It's turned out that Abramovich was not made a proper partner from the beginning, because if we agreed what we agreed in '95, at least he should think what happened if I will die, yes, and how to do that. On the other hand I also should think what happened if Abramovich die, if I gave him so much power, but maybe that time we were not supposed to die so quick.
- Q. Now, we were told by your solicitors, Cadwaladers, that what you say in this paragraph about the transfer taking place represented the gist of the words used at this 1996 agreement. Clearly that was rubbish, wasn't it?
- A. I don't know about your talking with my solicitors, I think it's not correct to refer to that.
- Q. Well, they wrote to us giving us what's called further information which is details about these allegations.
- A. Could you show me that, that I can comment that.
- Q. Yes, of course. If you would like to take bundle A2, flag 8, page 19 A2/08/19. Page 19 of the bundle.

Perhaps the witness could be helped to find page 19.

A. Sorry, all the time I'm missing. Yes, sorry.

Q. You will see there's a heading in bold type, "Requests 8, 9, 10..." et cetera, in the middle of the page.

A. Just... Yes.

Q. And this is giving us further information about what you said in paragraph 37, among other places, okay?

A. Mr Sumption, just again, I return back. This is the letter which was addressed my company which was at my interest, yes?

Q. This is addressed by your solicitors to my client's solicitors.

A. And when it was?

Q. It was written to them in May 2008 and it was about the pleading we have just been looking at.

A. Just a second, May 2000 -- yes, thank you.

Q. What you say about paragraph 37 among others is that:

"All of the pleaded agreements were made --"

A. In paragraph?

Q. If you look halfway down, this is further information about paragraphs 33, 34 and 37.

A. Good, good. Now I've got it.

Q. I've just shown you paragraph 37. What they say is that:

"All of the pleaded agreements were made in the course of meetings at the Moscow offices of Logovaz... Russian was spoken, and the words pleaded are the gist of what was said. To the best of Mr Berezovsky's recollection, only he, Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Abramovich were present."

A. Mm-hm.

Q. Now, that must have been information that you provided to Cadwaladers?

A. Mr Sumption, it's Cadwalader understanding and, as you know, they are professional company, they made in my favour what they can make. I don't want to say that they are wrong but it was a lot of misunderstanding, nevertheless. I don't want to take a base for my explanation but nevertheless what I -- we start, as I understand, still from the paragraph number 36 about transformation of my shares or my interests for whatever to Roman Abramovich, again, and I told you, Mr Sumption, I can't add anything. I can't comment why Addleshaw -- why Cad...

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Cadwalader.

A. Cadwalader, I'm sorry. Cadwalader present that.

Definitely because they talk to me, definitely it was their understanding. I just want to stress that not only me, your client also change -- asked to put some changes, and I understand that because it's long time ago and we try to -- first of all, to remember the sense and then we go even more wordings that, it's complicated.

It's the reason why, my Lady, I just want to present the real sense what's happened. The wording is important, I understand, because we are in the court, not just shake hands and my Lady agree that I'm correct, yes? The problem is that it's really complicated and it's reason why all the time try to base on the sense of what was happening.

MR SUMPTION: Is there anything in the paragraph which begins "All of the pleaded agreements", that I've just referred you to, that you think is wrong?

A. I don't understand, I'm sorry to say. I'll try. Give me more time, please. What is the question? Just a second.

Q. Do you see the paragraph --

A. Yes, yes.

Q. -- beginning "All of the pleaded agreements"? That's what your solicitors said. Is there anything in that paragraph that you think is wrong?

A. I don't understand what is wrong. Explain me again, please.

Q. That's what I'm asking you. Is there anything wrong with this paragraph? (Pause)

- A. Mr Sumption, I don't want to look stupid. I don't understand what we're discussing now.
- Q. All I want you to tell us -- this is information that is being given by Cadwaladers about your case and all I'm asking you is, is there anything in it that's wrong? Is there anything that you would disagree with in this statement of your case?
- A. This statement you mean (indicates)?
- Q. No, no. Look at the paragraph which begins "All of the pleaded agreements". That says --
- MR RABINOWITZ: With respect to Mr Sumption, he does need to look at both --
- MR SUMPTION: I would like my learned friend to let me ask this question, it's a very simple question.
- That says --
- A. It's the reference to this (indicates), yes, it's the reference to that? This exactly what I want to understand.
- Q. It's a reference to paragraph 37 of the earlier pleading which says that there was an agreement that a transfer would take place.
- A. Now, I understand. I'm sorry.
- My Lady, I really didn't understand what is --
- MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Berezovsky, to be fair to yourself, I think you're being asked two questions. The first question is, is there anything that is specifically said in the paragraph we're looking at, "All of the pleaded agreements" --

A. Mean that (indicates)? The other one?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, in the letter, in the letter. But I think you're also being asked by Mr Sumption whether what was said in paragraph 37 was indeed the gist of what was said at the meeting?

A. Paragraph number 37?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, number 37.

A. Yes, yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So just look and see the statements in the letter first of all, in the paragraph starting, "All of the pleaded agreements were made in the course of meetings" --

A. Yes. Now I understand, my Lady.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: -- at that address. Is that correct?

A. Now I understand finally the question.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I think you're being asked to check two things: one, that what is said in this paragraph is right and, secondly, the statement that --

A. Yes, yes, now I understand.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: -- the words pleaded in paragraph 37 do correctly represent the gist, that's to say the thrust --

A. Absolutely clear.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: -- the summary of what was said?

MR RABINOWITZ: Can my Lady also make sure that the witness knows what is being referred to by "pleaded agreements". I think that's where he's getting a little bit confused. It's the pleading or the agreements and I think that's...

A. And, as I understand, we now discuss about paragraph 37, "pleaded agreement"? Is it correct or not?

MR SUMPTION: It's the 1996 agreement.

A. No, the agreement -- '96 agreement is absolutely clear --

Q. Mr Berezovsky, can I try to simplify this so far as I can. In this pleading, the one that you have in bundle K2, you say that it was agreed in 1996 that there would be a transfer of Sibneft shares from companies controlled by you to companies controlled by Mr Abramovich.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, the question I'm asking you is this, was that the gist of the words used in the 1996 agreement?

A. In 1990 (sic) agreement was used the words-- in 1995 agreement was used the words --

Q. No, '96 agreement.

A. Ah, '96, yes, that all -- just give me please to remind -- that all shares, all interests except of -- that all shares which we have and -- now, finally,

I start to understand the point, I'm sorry to say.

In '95 agreement was told that the -- we need to start to understand what was saying, just understanding what was the target. The target was to distance. It means that the shares which we have in 49, in 49 per cent, that time it will have that 49 per cent, and the opportunity -- I just trying to transfer it -- opportunity which we'll get when 51 per cent control will transfer -- not control only management control but will be shared, yes, will get shares for that, will transform to Roman Abramovich, this is correct.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Is that a convenient moment,
Mr Sumption, or do you want to continue this line and, if so, how long are you going to be?

MR SUMPTION: I think probably it's as inconvenient a moment as any other is going to be.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well.

MR SUMPTION: We'll have to continue this discussion to some extent on Monday morning.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, I have to tell your Ladyship that, for reasons that your Ladyship will understand, progress has not been rapid.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. I wasn't going to ask you about the timetable until some time in the middle of next week.

MR SUMPTION: Well, it looks as if we will need at least the whole of next week.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, we can deal with timetabling issues on Monday perhaps, if necessary.

Mr Rabinowitz and Mr Sumption, are you content to start at 10.15 on Monday or do you want to start earlier? I think there's a limit to the length of a court day for everybody, but if you wish to start earlier, obviously I'll consider that. It's a long day for a witness.

MR RABINOWITZ: As your Ladyship says, it is a long day for a witness who is not as young as he once was. It will be the third day. I'm in your Ladyship's hands, I understand my learned friend --

MR SUMPTION: I'm not pressing for a longer day than 10.15.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I think 10.15 is useful with the shorthand writers --

MR SUMPTION: Exactly. It is the case that it is a little less exhausting for a witness when he has a break in the middle of the morning, but I don't think it would be right for me to press for an earlier start if Mr Rabinowitz feels that's unfair on his witness.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: I think 10.15.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Okay. If you want to start at 10.00, I'm happy to start at 10.00.

MR RABINOWITZ: The witness has a lot of cross-examination, my learned friend says the whole week. To start earlier than that would become oppressive.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Berezovsky, please do not discuss your evidence over the weekend.

THE WITNESS: Definitely.

My Lady, I just have one question if you don't mind.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. Please.

THE WITNESS: I didn't recognise still now how long I will be in witness box. I like to be in witness box, but I just want to understand how much energy I should keep approximately.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. Part of the problem, and I'm not saying this in any way critically, but part of the problem is that you tend to give quite a long answer rather than focusing on the question. It will speed things up, so you won't be in the witness box so long, if, as it were, you can answer the questions --

THE WITNESS: My Lady, thank you very much for your reference to that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: It looks at the moment -- I don't know what the original estimate was because I don't have the --

MR SUMPTION: The original estimate was that Mr Berezovsky would be completed by the end of Thursday and, of course, your Ladyship is not sitting on Friday next.
I think it is now very likely that his cross-examination will extend, I hope not too long, into the following week starting Monday, the 17th.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So you've only got four days next week because I can't sit --

THE WITNESS: Thank you, my Lady.

MR SUMPTION: But there may well be further cross-examination the week after.

THE WITNESS: No, no, it's fine. It's fine.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well.

THE WITNESS: Thank you.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: 10.15 on Monday.

MR BORIS BEREZOVSKY (continued)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Members of the press, I'm told that there is now a video feed in the consultation rooms, as well as an audio feed and a LiveNote feed, so if there aren't adequate chairs for you in court, you can watch the evidence being given live on the video in the consultation rooms.

Good morning, Mr Berezovsky. You're still on your oath. You don't need to stand up, thank you.

Yes, Mr Sumption.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, can I just mention one thing for the record. I told your Ladyship on Friday that the dates of the first cash auction were -- the auction was open between 1 November and 1 December; if I can just correct that slightly. That was the original date decreed for the auction --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Sumption, will you just bear with me because I had a note of it and I would just like to find the note.

Yes, give me the revised date.

MR SUMPTION: That came from Mr Gorodilov's witness statement. In fact on 27 November the period of closure of the auction was adjourned to 4 January and in fact the --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: 4 January 1996?

MR SUMPTION: Yes. And the bid made by Mr Abramovich's companies was lodged towards the end of the extended period so that ultimately it was later than originally envisaged.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, thank you.

THE WITNESS: I'm sorry, could I put a question, my Lady?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

THE WITNESS: I just want also to understand better because I also tried to investigate, it was a strange a little bit that it was before: it means you confirmed that it had happened after --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Sorry, I can't hear you.

THE WITNESS: I'm sorry, my Lady. Does it mean we confirm now together that it happened after auction of December 1998? Sorry, December 19 --

MR SUMPTION: '98, yes.

THE WITNESS: December --

MR SUMPTION: '95.

THE WITNESS: -- '95, yes?

MR SUMPTION: Yes, that is correct.

THE WITNESS: Thank you very much.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, Mr Sumption.

Cross-examination by MR SUMPTION (continued)

MR SUMPTION: Mr Berezovsky, when we ended on Friday I was asking about what you have called the 1996 agreement. Do you remember that? That's what I was asking you about.

A. Yes. 1996 agreement with Mr Abramovich, yes?

Q. Yes.

A. Thank you.

Q. Now, I had pointed out to you that when this action began in 2007 you said that your Sibneft shares were originally registered in the names of your companies and your case was that in 1996 it was agreed to transfer them to Mr Abramovich's companies so as to be secretly held for you. That was your original case, was it not?

A. Can you show me, please, what is --

Q. No, I just want to ask you to remember.

A. Okay, okay.

Q. Do you remember that that was your original case?

I showed you the documents on Friday.

A. My original case is that from the very beginning, according of agreement with Mr Abramovich '95, he will hold my shares and -- 50/50 between me and Badri, my partner Badri, and we share the profit between us 50/50 and we -- all the interest which will come later we'll share 50/50, interest will come from Sibneft activity, and no one able to -- no one able to sell any interest without confirmation of other side. This is agreement of '95 and agreement of '96 --

Q. Mr Berezovsky, you're answering about 20 questions that I didn't ask you.

A. Sorry.

Q. I am interested in the question what your original case was about who held the shares.

Turn to bundle K2, which somebody will now hand to you. Bundle K2/04/26, paragraph 36.

A. Just a second. Please, just to make sure, so I am sure that -- this is not my witness statement, this is --

Q. No, it's not. This is your original pleading, which you signed as a true document on page 40.

A. Yes. What is the page number?

Q. Page 26.

A. Yes.

Q. Right. Do you see paragraph 36?

A. Yes.

Q. I'm going to read out the first sentence:

"Initially, Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili legally owned or controlled companies which controlled and legally owned their proportions of the Sibneft shares."

Was that your original case or was it not?

A. It's my pleading, I agree, I signed that, and this pleading was prepared by my lawyers and it's how they recognised it. I don't want to say, my Lady, that it's not my signature here; it's my signature here. But, again, it was how my lawyers understood that and they present it to me.

Q. And your case was that in 1996 it was agreed to transfer your shares out of companies owned and controlled by you and into companies owned and controlled by Mr Abramovich; that was your case, wasn't it?

A. It's not so. Again, my case was --

Q. First of all I'm asking you whether that was your case; not whether it was true.

A. No, it's not my case.

MR RABINOWITZ: I think he needs to specify "pleaded case".

A. Correct.

MR RABINOWITZ: Given he's speaking to someone whose natural language is not English, although ordinarily Mr Sumption is very clear to an English speaker, to a Russian speaker there may be occasional misunderstandings.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Berezovsky, the point Mr Sumption is making to you is that was the case that was being put in your pleaded statement of case.

A. This was the case what was put in my pleaded statement, correct.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR SUMPTION: Right. And it remained the case that was put in your pleaded statement, did it not, until the strike-out application was heard in the spring of 2009?

A. Can we have a look at this, at the pleading 1995? As I remember, at my first witness statement it was clarified completely correctly what my case is.

Q. You are right, and that was because -- it was in fact your second witness statement but your first substantial one -- your second witness statement where you corrected this was produced for the strike-out proceedings, wasn't it?

A. My first and the second witness statement were produced for the strike-out, correct.

Q. Now, can we look at the current version of what you are saying about the 1996 agreement. Okay?

A. Sorry, again, where have to look?

Q. I would like you to turn to your fourth witness statement at paragraph 165. It's in bundle D2/17/232.

A. Paragraph number?

Q. 165. Now, in paragraphs 165 and 166, if you've got that open --

A. Yes, I have it.

Q. -- you say that the 1996 agreement was made because Mr Abramovich was concerned that Sibneft would be damaged as a result of your controversial political role and Mr Patarkatsishvili's position as chairman of ORT. That's a summary, I think, of what you are saying at paragraph 165 and 166.

A. I don't want to read because I remember more or less, not -- yes.

Q. Yes. But that's a fair summary, isn't it?

A. But nevertheless it's definitely the reason why Abramovich continue to insist on the -- that on the one hand it will not be in written form but on the other hand we should be more and more protected because of my political exposure, particularly in front of election campaign of Yeltsin where played the key role '96. It's correct.

Q. So your evidence is that Mr Abramovich wanted to distance both you and Mr Patarkatsishvili from the company?

A. You are correct.

Q. Now, all this, as I understand your evidence, was because of the prospect of a Communist victory in the 1996 elections. Is that right?

A. You are correct.

Q. Now, did you seriously think that if the Communists won the 1996 elections, Sibneft would be able to do a deal with them to avoid the renationalisation of the 15 per cent that had already been sold of Sibneft? Did you seriously think that?

- A. My thought is not that I think seriously like that but I just give you example that many businessmen, including Khodorkovsky, including other, they play both game: they pay Communists before elections and they pay Yeltsin before elections. And I have no doubt that Abramovich think in the same way.

As far as me is concerned, I just want to max -- to minimise risk because maybe these people are correct and maybe Communist will continue to privatise. I did not believe, me personally, but I did not lose anything to take this position.

- Q. You had no idea whether Mr Abramovich thought in that way or not, did you?
- A. No, I just know that Abramovich didn't think anything because -- anything strongly because he just start to be involved in understanding of political situation. And on the other hand, as a regular person at that time -- I mean not being experienced in politics -- he think definitely that Communists will take power but on the other hand maybe they continue to -- they continue privatisation. It's not unique point of view.
- Q. Did you seriously think that a party which fought the election on a programme of renationalisation was going to continue with the sales of the 85 per cent of Sibneft that the State still owned?

- A. We know a lot of examples when party decree before elections one position and after elections change position completely, 100 per cent.
- Q. That was not at all likely, was it, whether you were a shareholder or not?
- A. It's absolutely correct. It's not high probability but why I should reduce probability to zero if I have chance to reduce the risk and nevertheless to have profit from the company, which could be, with very low probability, will not be privatised? Why not do so? I don't understand.
- Q. It was already well-known, wasn't it, that you were involved closely with Sibneft?
- A. Yes, it was common knowledge.
- Q. Yes. So having you as an undisclosed shareholder wasn't going to make much difference, was it?
- A. No, again, nobody knows, again, Mr Sumption, how Communist will play game after they will elect. I have vision that they will play dirty game; the other have vision that they continue maybe reforms because they already start to feel better. And if you know, Mr Sumption, well that in Davos, which happened exactly before elections '96, Zyuganov play fantastic role: he try to convince western investors that he is nice guy, he will continue reform, and I would like to stress you, Mr Sumption, that many on the west believe in that, as far as some in Russia believe in that.

It doesn't matter what was my belief, I just want to reduce risk, and if there is any opportunity that Communist will not continue -- will continue some kind of reforms, I want to, formally at least, to be distanced from that.

Q. As I understand it, you say that this concern to distance you and Mr Patarkatsishvili from Sibneft continued even after the Communists lost the elections?

A. Mr Sumption, it's not black and white, and even after Communists won election I was --

Q. No, lost the election.

A. After Communists lost the election. They so much insist that they will take power that I lost my line. After Communists lost elections, I knew well that it doesn't mean that they don't have a lot of supporters inside of society, even inside of the government, even -- and moreover inside of still efforts being of KGB officers.

No one can exclude that the pressure will be continued on me as, I'm sorry to say -- I don't want to up higher my role in elections but I was one of the key persons in elections and I didn't have doubts that as far I will distance from my assets, more probability that I will keep opportunity to be -- to have money generated the company which I created.

- Q. In September 1996, two months after the second round of the elections, you became a member of the board of directors of Sibneft. That seems a funny way of publicly distancing yourself from the company.
- A. Mr Sumption, as you know from my witness statements, it was decision which I have done not just because I think that it's good decision, because of two controversial position: on the one hand, Roman Abramovich; on the other hand of Badri. And if my personal choice, I would not do that, if my personal choice; but I have a partner, as you know, Badri Patarkatsishvili, and we have been partner 50/50, and Badri insist that I took this position.

Moreover, I would like to say you that the argument was very special. He said, "Boris, everybody knows that you are person who create Sibneft and you're close to Sibneft", yes? "And moreover, nobody has any doubts that you own at least big stake of Sibneft and there is a common situation when people who are in the board are not owners. It means that if you become a member of the board, it could be that you have link to Sibneft but maybe as not an ownership", yes?

This is position which had logic. Again, my position was more likely not to join, yes? But it was already dispute between Roman Abramovich and between Badri and finally I took position of Badri. And as you -- sorry.

Q. How was becoming a director of Sibneft going to divert attention from the fact that, as you say, you owned some shares in it?

A. It's exactly what I tried to explain before: because that was common that member of director -- member of the board were not shareholders.

Q. Members of the board were, in many companies, shareholders.

A. You're correct. Were and not. It is not absolutely clear that if you are a member of the board, you are shareholder. According of my experience, at least on the west and later in Russia, there were many occasions when member of the board are not shareholders.

Moreover, it stressed the independency of the executive power and power who -- I mean the management -- and power who create the law or the way how company should operate.

Q. Well, let's look at what you say was agreed in response to this so-called problem. You say that because of these concerns, Mr Abramovich proposed, in your words, that:

"... from now on he, or his companies, should own all of the Sibneft shares."

I'm looking at paragraph 166.

A. Sorry, one second. Just a second, may I read.

Yes.

Q. What you say --

A. Yes, it's absolutely correct because, as you know, on the stage of agreement '95, when we just create the company, yes, and start to own the company, it was done in not so structured way because for me I didn't know how much Badri and me we own shares -- it's turned out that we own just part of PK-Trast, yes? -- how much Abramovich own. And we decide in the future, particularly in the coming auction for 51 per cent to own, we decide that from this time we structure that everything will be under Abramovich ownership.

Q. How could Mr Abramovich have proposed that from now on he or his companies should own all of the Sibneft shares if his companies already owned all of the Sibneft shares that had been acquired?

A. First of all, it's not so, as you know well. But just simple example: the PK-Trast -- but it's occasional example, it's not my personal creation that I create -- the situation on PK-Trast own part already existing shares.

But we now are discussing about future privatisation 51 per cent. This is the most important stake and this stake allowed to control the company, really control the company through shareholding. And it was the principal decision that Abramovich at that time did not own 51 per cent. Abramovich and his company owned less than 49 per cent, as I told you before. It means that the solution to put under ownership of Abramovich and -- ownership of Abramovich everything was the principal solution, which is very different what we discussed before.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, if Mr Abramovich's companies already were the registered shareholders of the only 12 per cent that had so far been acquired, what was the point of his saying that from now on they should be owned by his companies? Because it already happened.

A. You see, I don't even at that time know how much Abramovich really owned because, as I told you, we agreed that Abramovich manage everything and last time we spent a lot of time, I tried to prove you that "manage" means manage not just day-by-day company but manage all the process of privatisation as well. If he need my help, I am open to help him, and when he ask me help, I am open to help him; but the point is he very rare asked me to help.

But the point is that we again are discussing to formalise our relations of ownership and I accept the position of Abramovich that it's a lot of risk and I will reduce risk if I will put under Abramovich ownership everything. Moreover, it just demonstrate exactly my position towards to Abramovich: that I trust him, trust him 200 per cent that time.

Q. Now, PK-Trast, which you mentioned, only acquired shares in September 1996; that's correct, isn't it?

A. I don't remember at all.

Q. Well, let me tell you --

A. At that time I don't remember.

Q. -- that that's when it was.

PK-Trast was a company which you were publicly named as a co-founder of, was it not?

A. You see, Mr Sumption, believe me --

Q. Was it or not?

A. What is not what?

Q. You were publicly named as a co-founder of PK-Trast?

A. Publicly known, but I didn't know that.

Q. The rest of the public was aware of this but you were sublimely ignorant of it; is that correct?

A. Absolutely correct, because I don't pay any attention at that time how Abramovich is structurising. I trust him. I have much more important, as I understand -- and even now -- problems to solve.

Q. Yes. Well, if your evidence is that you were trying to distance yourself or that Mr Abramovich was trying to distance you from Sibneft, it seems pretty odd to publicly name you as the co-founder of a company that then buys some shares in Sibneft.

A. Again, Mr Sumption, I want again to stress you that I really did not pay any attention how Abramovich structurise the company. It was his responsibility. If he think that it's better I will be visible, I will be visible. If Abramovich will tell me, "Boris, we should rewrite shares which I hold in your favour under your name", I will do that because it's -- again, Mr Sumption, we agreed with Abramovich; he managed everything. I trust him. It's his -- I don't want to break his responsibility. He took this response.

Q. Now, you also say that in 1995 it was agreed that the profits of Sibneft would be shared between you, Mr Abramovich and Mr Patarkatsishvili?

A. Not Sibneft. It will be shared profit of Sibneft everything which lead to Sibneft generation.

Q. We'll come to the question what it was a share of in a moment. But you say that in 1995 it was agreed that some profits -- we'll discuss later which profits -- would be shared between you, Mr Abramovich and

Mr Patarkatsishvili?

A. It's correct.

Q. Right. And you say that in 1996 it was agreed that the three of you would continue to share profits?

A. It's correct.

Q. So what do you say was the difference that the 1996 agreement made?

A. What is difference?

Q. What's the difference on profit-sharing?

A. The difference is very simple. The difference is first of all we accept that Abramovich will put under his personal -- under his name the company which own the shares of Sibneft.

By the way, I never have seen that, in spite of we ask Mr Abramovich to disclose how he want -- he never present us any papers at all. It means that his position today, like me, he never will be shown officially at least to us that he's owner. It's the first point.

The second point, we agreed what is the most important for me at that time: that by the first request Abramovich will rewrite our shares to our name.

Q. Well, can I repeat my question, Mr Berezovsky.

A. What was not agreed in '95 -- sorry -- what was not agreed in '95.

Q. My question concerned profit-sharing and what I asked you was this: since, according to you, it had been agreed to share profits in 1995, what difference did the 1996 agreement make to your arrangements about profit-sharing?

A. I don't see any difference between '95 and '96 agreement as far as sharing of the profit.

Q. Well, precisely. So in fact the 1996 agreement made no difference either to the holding of your shares or to the distribution of profits, according to your evidence?

A. Not -- just now I mentioned you the difference, and big difference, because when in '95 we structure ownership, it was done by just -- in rush, let's say, the first one.

The second point: we did not discuss that everything will be under Mr Abramovich control.

And the third point, as I mentioned to you now: that by the first our -- we didn't discuss that in '95 and we discussed that in '96 but the first our request, Abramovich will rewrite our shares under our personal name.

Q. You see, Mr Berezovsky, when you started this action you said that your companies owned the shares in Sibneft and so you invented the 1996 agreement to explain how they came later to be owned by Mr Abramovich's companies; that's right, isn't it?

- A. Mr Sumption, we just now -- you start from the pleading. I am responsible for my signature, I don't refuse that, but my position never changed as a fact. And how my lawyers present this position, how they change the position but not the facts which are present, yes, I never change the facts, and it's already the other story.

Again, my first witness statement is absolutely correct as far as my ownership or Abramovich hold that and all the rest. I never changed the facts.

- Q. One of the facts that you asserted in your original pleading was that it had been agreed in 1996 to transfer the shares from Mr Abramovich's companies to yours --

- A. From Abramovich to mine?

- Q. Yes.

- A. Yes.

- Q. -- and that was wrong, wasn't it?

- A. Why it's wrong? We agreed that if --

- Q. Sorry, from yours to Mr Abramovich's companies.

- A. That's exactly my question. I'm sorry.

- Q. Forgive me.

- A. Look, again, it's like written in the pleading. I don't want, again, to argue against of that; I just present my position and our agreement with Abramovich.

But it's important to stress -- and, my Lady, I want again to stress -- that the biggest stake that time, until the privatisation, until bid for 51 per cent, was under just management control of two companies: mine and Abramovich. That's it. And when we're looking to the future that time to structure correctly, we accept the basic point that Abramovich will own under his name the decisive share interest, 51 per cent. This is the point.

- Q. Under your current case, as set out in your witness statement, the 1996 agreement achieved absolutely nothing, did it?
- A. I don't understand even the question.
- Q. It made no difference to the arrangements that you describe in 1995?
- A. I just spent with you a lot of time now that I tried to explain you the difference. If you don't accept my words, it's not my point. I just, I think, absolutely logically and absolutely clear explain my position.
- Q. In her witness statement Ms Nosova refers to something which she calls "kinut". I'm probably mispronouncing it. Do you know what I'm talking about?
- A. You're almost correct to pronounce that.
- Q. Thank you.
- A. It's not good word.

- Q. Tell us what "kinut" is.
- A. It's what Abramovich has done. This mean kinut, yes?
It's exactly what he have done. If someone take obligations and the other one trust him and later on, based on this trust, the person lead the victim to the way when he plan to kinut, yes, and to trick him. It means that if someone take one obligation and then done himself, without any consulting with the party with whom he agreed, the decision which damage his partner.
- Q. What Ms Nosova says is that she was concerned that Mr Abramovich might simply deny that you and Mr Patarkatsishvili had any interest and she said that that, namely denying that a concealed party has any interest, is a well-known phenomenon in Russia which is called kinut.
- A. Mrs Nosova is absolutely correct. Unfortunately it's well-known example not in Russia '90s but even more known now. And definitely Mrs Nosova, being my -- a close part of my team, and Mrs Nosova worry all the time about me. And Mrs Nosova -- again, maybe it's important, maybe it's not important -- she's very pessimistic, I'm very optimistic, and Mrs Nosova all the time underestimate the good in people, I overestimate. It means that Mrs Nosova, unfortunately -- unfortunately -- almost all the time is correct. But it's my vision of the world and it's her vision of the world. And the world is unfortunately likely more the Mrs Nosova understanding, not me.

Q. What this means, Mr Berezovsky, is that if you allow someone else to hold your assets in their own name, you need to protect yourself with a written record, don't you?

A. It's not so. I already discussed with you example that it's not my exceptional understanding of Abramovich and Badri as well; I had also nothing -- almost nothing written with Badri. But as far as I gave you example, and you already confirmed that you remember this example, my relations with Khodorkovsky when organising the bid, just shaking hands, and Abramovich -- and for Khodorkovsky was nothing to win this bid, nothing, and he did not that -- he did not do that.

Q. The difference with Badri was that, except on one occasion in 2004, you owned companies jointly with Badri, didn't you?

A. Definitely not, even the time which you are discussing, '96. And if you have seen my witness statement, it's at the same time I distance from Badri as well because it's -- definitely I was exposed, I had very exposed position, and if you read my witness statement you will find simple that after the paragraph distance from Abramovich, it's paragraph distancing from Badri. It's absolutely the same story.

Q. At the time when you say you made the 1995 agreement, you had only known Mr Abramovich for a bit more than six months and were only involved with him in a single piece of business; that is right, isn't it?

A. You're absolutely correct.

Q. If you had agreed either in 1995 or in 1996 that he was going to hold a stake for you, you would have made absolutely sure that there was a written record of it, wouldn't you?

A. Mr Sumption, it's my personal problem. I knew Putin ten years and I made a crucial mistake in his understanding and it's my personal problem that I don't understand people well but I believe that I understand well. This is a problem, true. And I trust Abramovich, as I said, in a little bit eastern manner, like to son, a lot of years, and he betrayed me. Okay, it's reality. What to do? It's not his fault, it's my fault that I trust him. It's not his fault. He is like he is then and now. It's no problem with him; it's problem with me, with my trust.

Q. And this story about Mr Abramovich trying to distance you from Sibneft is completely untrue, isn't it? You tried to emphasise your connections with the company?

- A. It's 100 per cent true.
- Q. Let's just look at the way in which these agreements that you refer to in your evidence were performed.
- A. Where?
- Q. Before I do that, may I just take you up on one point which you mentioned a bit earlier in your evidence today and that is your suggestion that it was part of the 1995 agreement that the three of you would not sell out of Sibneft without the consent of the others. Do you remember giving evidence on that point?
- A. It's '95 agreement, it's correct.
- Q. Now, what was the point of agreeing in 1995 that none of you would sell out of Sibneft without the consent of the others before Sibneft had even been created and before you knew whether it was going to be privatised?
- A. It's clear that we -- as you know, we start to discuss about how we structurise our relations of ownership, we start just before, I think two weeks of '95, August decree of president, of creation Sibneft, when it's become already absolutely clear that we'll reach at least the first part -- we'll pass at least half of the way, the company will be created, and it was the time to structurise our relations.

Again, it didn't happen in one day; we discussed that long time. "Long" means months, half a year maybe.

But the finalisation of our understanding happened before it was decreed to create Sibneft and we understood that the next stage will be privatisation.

- Q. Are you seriously saying that it was agreed that you could never exit from Sibneft without Mr Abramovich's consent in any circumstances? Is that your case?
- A. Nobody can tell me that I broke my obligations in front of partners and I was sure that Abramovich will follow the same way.
- Q. Are you saying that it was agreed that you could never exit Sibneft, whatever the circumstances, without Mr Abramovich's consent?
- A. 100 per cent.
- Q. You've made that up, haven't you, Mr Berezovsky?
- A. What is "made up"? (Consults interpreter)
- Again it's your vision. My understanding is that moreover no one -- I want to stress -- no one might give you example of my behaviour like that as a partner.
- Q. Can you help us on why that suggestion has never been included in your pleadings?
- A. Mr Sumption, I want just to stress again -- and I know that we'll return many times back to pleadings, to notes of lawyers, and we have in front a big discussion about that -- I just want again to stress you: first of all I am not an idiot. It means that when we -- I gave so much power to Mr Abramovich, how you think it's possible not to discuss at least to fix that, because we didn't have written agreement, that we fix that, that definitely no one can leave the other without agreement of the others? And if you want to leave, at least you should propose -- the first right proposal should be to your partner. Moreover, it does not mean that partner should deliver obligation to buy because maybe at that time he's not able to buy.

You remember maybe well in Le Bourget, in Le Bourget transcript, that Abramovich said, understanding that we are already squeezed completely, that he -- if we didn't accept his way, that he is not prepared to put on our shares to invest and the way he propose to us to buy his shares. It was -- do you think at that time it was gentle or correct proposal, knowing well that we are not able to do that that time? I am not like Abramovich; I never do that.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, when you started this action in June 2007 you had been planning it for at least three years, hadn't you?

A. I did not plan it. I start to discuss that seriously in -- as you remember, my -- not even three years, I think, and now I understand, I plan it for '97, I start to plan it at 2001, not to plan but took a decision.

Maybe you remember in my witness statement that when Badri -- when finally we decide to start to negotiate with Mr Abramovich to sell Sibneft and Badri plan to travel to Abramovich, to meet him in Munich -- later on it's turned out that it was Koln(?) not Munich, but in the same time -- I said, "Badri, we don't have choice, but one day we will be in position to go to the court and to prove what happened". It means that I planned not from 2004/2005 but earlier; but not planned, I took decision.

But I start to act at 2005, it's correct, with Mr Andy Stephenson visited Badri in Georgia and talked to him about my decision to start to act.

- Q. Mr Berezovsky, having thought about this action, you say, for seven years and having planned it for two years, why did you not refer in any of your pleadings to this agreement not to be able to exit without the other's consent?
- A. Mr Sumption, as I told you -- and I want, my Lady, to say in front of you -- I'm responsible what I sign but I'm responsible only what my lawyers propose me after they talked to me. And there are a lot of correction, I would like to say, in future happened because I think it's not very simple even for my lawyers to understand all the story what happened, yes? And when they put me correct questions, you never find that I made something different what later on came out to my witness statement, yes? It means that -- or even, I think, the pleadings.

If I put direct question, my answer was -- were all the time absolutely coincide with the question, yes? But there were many questions which my lawyers did not put to me and it is reason why they interpret them in their way.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Are you saying you didn't bother to check your pleaded case?

A. No, I checked it, it's correct.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I'm not talking about the witness statement; I'm talking about the pleaded statement of case.

A. It's absolutely correct, I checked the pleaded statement as well because I put my signature.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

A. Not attentively, it's the other story. I'm responsible for that. But on the other hand I am responsible first of all for the facts which I present to my lawyers, and the facts were so; and when they put me question which they think it's important question, definitely I gave my answer and I never changed my answer to that.

MR SUMPTION: Mr Berezovsky, I want to turn to the subject of profit-sharing. Would you please take your witness statement and turn to paragraph 169 D2/17/233.

I think it's in front of you. Do you have paragraph 169 there?

A. Yes, I have it.

Q. What you say here is that -- you're talking about the 1996 agreement here and you say that:

"As part of our agreeing to what [Mr Abramovich] was suggesting, [he] told us that he would continue to pay us the share of profits we would otherwise have received in respect of our share of Sibneft and that he would, upon request, transfer to us shares in Sibneft equivalent to our 50% interest."

Now, I'm interested in the bit of that statement that concerns profit-sharing. Do I understand you to say that what Mr Abramovich was telling you was that you would receive profits in respect of your share of Sibneft?

A. That I receive all profit which generate Sibneft as a company; doesn't matter connected to shares or profit generated in the other place. As we talked last time, Sibneft at the beginning generate profit, as many oil company, in the trading company which belonged to Abramovich. It means that Abramovich had obligation to pay me any profit which Sibneft generate itself.

I didn't have even one share in Runicom, which was trading company and which obtained the main profit of Sibneft, but it does not mean that Abramovich don't have obligation to pay me my -- as we -- my proportion generated by his trading company.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, are you saying --

A. And -- I'm sorry, just a second. I'm sorry that I interrupted.

And moreover, it's written here clear and it's wording, because not a lot I remember in wording, and he said, "Boris, you should clear understand that your interest -- my interest is your interest, your interest is my interest". This is the point. This is the key words which characterise our relations.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, are you saying that it was agreed between you and Mr Abramovich that you would receive profits made by any company other than Sibneft?

A. Me, Mr Abramovich and Badri, three of us. Three of us agreed that any profit which initially generate by Sibneft, which base of the profit is Sibneft, will be shared 50/50. It's absolutely correct.

Q. Now, you have just suggested, in the answer that you last gave, that the profits generated by Sibneft ended up with Runicom. That's what I understood you to suggest.

A. "Ended up"? (Consults interpreter)

Sibneft itself that time did not generate the profit. Sibneft that time generate oil and refinery of oil and sell it to Runicom and then Runicom generate the profit because Sibneft -- it was exactly what happened in Soviet Union when Sibneft was vertical-integrated company: one company produce oil, the second company refinery oil, the third company sell oil. The company which produce oil didn't get anything because they just produce oil; that's it. It's expensive, it's not a profit. The company that refine it, they also don't produce the profit: they produce the product which is profitable. And then only on the last stage it was -- the company who sell all that, this company generate the profit.

It's happened at the beginning that all oil company tricked. What does mean "tricked"? They sell oil and product which produced refinery company with low price, then sell this -- produced price, then sell it to another Russian company and companies sold abroad and after that it generated profit. It's what Abramovich has done and all other oil company have done.

Q. How do you know that that was how it was done? What's your source of information?

A. I know that just because of Khodorkovsky in prison and I need to learn why they put him in prison and when I start to learn why they put him in prison, I learned that all oil companies were structured like that, without any exception. I learned that not that time, believe me.

Q. Would you please take bundle H(A)98, page 98.

H(A)98/98.

A. Can I take away my witness statement to put there, yes?

Q. Leave it on the desk, if you would.

A. Okay.

Q. But you can take everything else away apart from bundle H(A)98. This is part of your cross-examination by Mr Swainston in the North Shore litigation in the Chancery Division.

A. Mm-hm.

Q. At page 62, the top right-hand block of text -- not of the bundle. Do you see there this is four pages in one?

A. Right, sorry, yes.

Q. If you look at the top-right page, you are being asked about the transmission of money to Switzerland, where Runicom was incorporated and carried on business.

A. This --

Q. I'm just showing you the context.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Sumption, are we on page 62 or

page 63?

MR SUMPTION: Well, I'm starting at page 62 in the manuscript just to show the witness the context.

THE WITNESS: 62 start from there -- from the top?

MR SUMPTION: I'm sorry, I'm looking -- you're quite right,
Mr Berezovsky, the numbers are at the bottom. So if you start at 63 in the manuscript, you will see that there's --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Line?

MR SUMPTION: -- a question at line 21:

"Question: You're aware that much dealing of Russian oil is done out of Switzerland, are you?

"Answer: I don't.

"Question: Doesn't that go back to your earliest association with Sibneft? Wasn't its oil dealt with in Switzerland?

"Answer: I never managed Sibneft. Abramovich managed Sibneft, and Mr Shvidler. I never managed Sibneft, not Badri or me. From the very beginning we decided that Sibneft would be managed by Abramovich team and I don't know anything about oil trade.

"Question: Are you honestly telling the court that a businessman of your sophistication, whose interests have included huge oil interests, doesn't know --

"Answer: Absolutely.

"Question: -- that oil business is done out of Switzerland?"

Mr Berezovsky, you knew absolutely nothing about the relationship between Sibneft and Runicom SA, did you?

A. Mr Sumption, now what happened with Yukos knows even children in Russia because Khodorkovsky was accused that he stolen his net(?) from his company and it's exactly the way how it is. It means that definitely I don't know anything except of what children know in Russia about oil trade; but what children knows, I know well.

Q. What you're saying is that because you think Mr Khodorkovsky did that, it must have been done by Sibneft too; that's about the size of it, isn't it?

A. No, moreover, when Khodorkovsky was accusing that, it was a big public discussion in Russia about oil companies, and no one oil company refused that they use the same way like Khodorkovsky use and it become common knowledge in Russia.

And, you know, what I now present you, this trick, this trick, you don't need to have special knowledge what means oil trade and so; it's very simple. And again I just want to stress you, I got this knowledge just from Khodorkovsky case. Believe me, I never knew how Abramovich operate and how he generate; I didn't pay any attention. But as only I start to understand a little bit of Khodorkovsky case, I immediately recognise what happened, that this happened not with Yukos but with Sibneft and all other company which operate on the market.

Q. Sibneft was a public company, wasn't it? Its shares were traded on stock exchanges?

A. It's not possible to say that it's really public company, as I understand again. I don't know details, I just was -- I just know that the main stake belong to private people, I mean Abramovich and me and Badri, but the small part of shares, it's around 10 per cent, so is on the market somewhere. I also didn't pay attention how it's operating.

Q. Well, they were listed on the Moscow and New York stock exchanges, weren't they?

A. Could be.

Q. Now, you also were aware, presumably, that its accounts were audited by an international firm of auditors?

A. Mr Sumption, believe me, definitely, logically, I can find out that, but I never pay attention who audit the company and how it's happened. Again, Mr Sumption, I understand your point perfectly. But believe me, I didn't pay any attention at all.

I had much more important problem to solve, believe me. To say to people -- I don't want to present me as a hero, but unfortunately you push me again and again to stress: this is not the point, Sibneft, for me at all, as only I trust Abramovich and gave up to him to manage, to do everything. I forgot about this point at all.

I forgot.

Q. Now, you accept, as I understand it, that you received large sums of money from Mr Abramovich's companies from 1996 onwards.

A. Not from Abramovich company. This company belonged to us, me as well. It's not money of Abramovich; it's my money.

Q. The money that you were actually paid came from Mr Abramovich's companies, not from Sibneft?

A. Not from; through. This is correct.

Q. But you accept, as I understand it, that you received large sums of money? We'll talk about the precise source later.

A. Yes, I received substantial amount of money.

Q. And you also accept, I think, that large payments were made not just to you but at your direction to third parties?

A. Definitely ORT, for example.

Q. Sorry?

A. Definitely ORT, for example.

Q. Right.

A. ORT, because I subsidised ORT.

Q. Yes, quite.

Now, after the presidential elections of 1996, would you agree that your demands for money from Mr Abramovich became progressively larger?

A. It's complicated to say. I don't know because I -- Abramovich pay my profit, part of the profit which belonged to me, and this profit I spend on the one hand to my personal expenses -- I bought a chateau in France, I bought a yacht at that time in France as well, I bought the second house in France -- but I think the main expenses were not private expenses, my personal expenses; I think the main expenses I spent for different political reasons.

First of all, ORT took a lot of money and I tried to expand my position in mass media and I bought several newspapers; and on the other hand, in '92 I created the first charity in Russia to support culture, so-called Triumph, which exist still now and this year will celebrate 20 years in coming here -- 2012 will see 20 years of this charity, which is the most important private charity to support Russia, it's common knowledge, and even Putin did not -- even Putin still allow me to pay for this charity. I don't want to say that we spend a lot of money, we spent around 60 million all these years for this charity, but it's also money.

And it means that I didn't calculate how much I spent in '96, '97, '98; I had enough not to calculate precisely because Sibneft generate enough money for my private life and for my political activity.

MR RABINOWITZ: My Lady, before my learned friend continues, I've just been handed a note to say that, as we understand it, my learned friend's question related to Mr Berezovsky demanding money. That was translated for him, as we understand it, as his "needs" rather than his "demands", and that may account for the slight disconnect between what was asked and the answer.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. Mr Sumption, can you please, as it were, de-link the questions so we have first question: was it your demand, or were you demanding; and second, the extent of it.

THE WITNESS: I am sorry, my Lady. It's the reason why I ask translator to help me and I was --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. Do you accept that you demanded money?

MR SUMPTION: No, that Mr Abramovich demanded -- yes, sorry.

A. Ah. No, no, it was not -- look, I never -- again, mainly money -- for our money, Badri and my money, Badri was responsible. It means that I understood the difficulties which company at that time had because we just start to build the company.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: How did you go about asking
Mr Abramovich for money?

A. Sometimes directly asking him to --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: You asking him?

A. Yes, sometimes directly through Abramovich and sometimes indirectness of Mr Badri.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I see.

MR SUMPTION: Would it be fair to say that between 1996 and 2000 almost all of your personal expenses were funded by that method?

A. I think so. Not funded, it's not Mr Abramovich foundation; it's my money which I got as money which he agreed to pay me being -- having 25 per cent of shares.

Q. Now, you say that these payments represented your share of Sibneft's profits. How do you know that?

A. I don't know that at all. Mr Abramovich told me that he has obligations to hold my shares and to pay me according of profit which these shares generate finally.

Q. What steps --

A. I didn't have any idea how much company generate and so.
Again, mainly -- not mainly -- Badri was responsible to cooperate with Abramovich for checking how is everything going and time to time Badri put me that, "Boris, everything is going well".

The best example, Mr Sumption, the best example, which is absolutely visible for you, my Lady, and for everybody, is our meeting in Le Bourget. It's absolutely clear that Abramovich came there to report Badri and me what is happening. And at the same time it's absolutely clear that I just keep silence; just Badri and Roman are discussing what is happening. It doesn't mean that I don't pay attention at all but it's exactly the type of how our relations was agreed and was understood by us.

Q. Did you ever ask Mr Abramovich for information about the profits that Sibneft was generating?

A. I don't remember that. It could be. But what is absolutely -- I recollect absolutely clear that Badri time to time informed me about the profit which company generate.

And again I want to refer you to meeting in Le Bourget, which absolutely clear that Abramovich report Badri and me which kind of profit Sibneft generate now, which kind of money relations we have, how much he paid already, how much he has obligation to pay and what can -- what happen in future, because of new tax policy and so-so, and how much we are going to get in future.

And as I remember Le Bourget transcript, I have asked, "Roman" --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Don't let's go into that. I'm sure you'll be taken to that in due course --

A. Okay.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: -- because your counsel have commented on the Le Bourget transcript.

A. I see.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: My question for you is this: was there any formal or informal process whereby Badri or you, or staff on your behalf, would audit the profits that were being generated by Sibneft?

A. I don't know anything about formal process. I just know about regular meetings Badri with Roman and maybe with Shvidler as well, as I understand, when they present him report what happened in the company.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right, thank you.

A. And that is as money is concerned.

MR SUMPTION: What steps did you understand that

Mr Patarkatsishvili had taken to ascertain what were the profits of Sibneft?

A. I don't have any idea. I don't have any idea. I think as we agreed in our agreement as we agreed in '95, we trust Abramovich and we didn't have time to manage the company and to send audit and so. It's not -- already not trust at that time in our understanding.

As I told you, I was involved with politics, Badri involved in ORT manage, and it's the reason why we trust Abramovich what he present. Time to time, I don't think on the regular ways -- I mean, "regular", it means that once per month we have meeting three of us together and Abramovich and Shvidler report us what is happening; it did not happen, definitely.

But, as I understand, Badri was satisfied of reports of Abramovich and Shvidler, and me as well. If Badri was satisfied, I think it's fine.

Q. If you and Mr Patarkatsishvili really thought you were entitled to 50 per cent of Sibneft's profits, you would have been extremely interested in finding out in great detail how large those profits were, wouldn't you?

A. Definitely not. Mr Sumption, I want to stress again, Sibneft was periphery of my attention and not even the second priority. I told you yesterday or day before -- sorry, yesterday it was Sunday. I told the other one, not about this point, about articles were published in newspapers. I told you that my priority number one was politics and priority number two was ORT as a leverage for political reforms.

My major point was not to increase capitalisation of Sibneft; my main point was to increase capitalisation of the country, and it's allowed to capitalise Sibneft.

This is the point.

Q. In fact you had no interest at all in discovering what Sibneft's profits were, did you?

A. I was completely satisfied what Abramovich was doing. I was completely satisfied that I was able to cover all my political needs and all my private life and I was -- but it based only on one point: my trust to Mr Abramovich, my real trust to Mr Abramovich, and my understanding that Badri has big experience as businessman, much bigger than me, at least in this type of operation. I did not pay any attention at all of numbers which Sibneft gave mainly to Badri and sometimes to me to explain which kind of profit we have.

But, again, Mr Sumption, I don't want -- why you are not prepared to accept the point of Le Bourget meeting? It's absolutely clear our relations there. It's not what I need to prove by wording; it's approved by our conversation, which Abramovich finally accept it happened in Le Bourget. It's clear -- moreover, almost all answers which you put to me -- all questions which you put to me have answer if you read really Le Bourget conversation. It's answer to all almost your questions there.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, you know perfectly well I don't accept any of what you say about Le Bourget but we'll come to that in due course.

A. Mm-hm.

Q. Since this stream of money was covering virtually all your personal expenses in this period, it can't possibly have been at the periphery of your attention.

A. It was at periphery of my attention.

Q. The reason why you had no interest in discovering what Sibneft's profits were was that you knew perfectly well that the payments that you were receiving had nothing at all to do with Sibneft's profits, didn't you?

A. Mr Sumption, this is the case, I understand it well, that I should prove that I create Sibneft, that I own Sibneft, that I have 55 per cent of Sibneft. I understand well. But I wanted to stress, my Lady, again, nothing wrong in all my answers which Mr Sumption put to me and it's the reason why I understanding that Abramovich is a truthful partner at that time.

Again to refer to Le Bourget, Mr Sumption, I want to stress you again one very important point: Abramovich told during the conversation at Le Bourget, "But I explain journalist that Boris trust me". He said himself in Le Bourget -- at Le Bourget meeting that, "Boris trust me". Not only he was sure that I trust him; that he was sure that he said the third party that I trust him. The third party will believe that it's correct. This demonstrate our relations.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, I'm going on to a similar but slightly different subject. Would you like to take the break?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well. Ten minutes.

(11.20 am)

(A short break)

(11.35 am)

MR SUMPTION: Mr Berezovsky, Ms Goncharova, the accountant at Abramovich's Russian trading company Petroltrans, says in her witness statement that she handled payments that were made to you through Mr Abramovich's Russian trading companies and she has given in her witness statement estimates year by year of the accounts that you received.

Now, I'm going to tell you what those estimates are and I'm then going to ask you to look at what I say on the screen and tell my Lady whether you agree with them. Her estimates are: $80-85 million in 1996; $50 million a year in 1997, 1998 and 1999; and then $70-80 million in 2000; a total of about $300 million over those four years.

Now, do you agree with those estimates?

A. I can't agree, can't disagree. Personally I didn't calculate that and only person who calculated that was Badri, and you know that my agreement -- my agreement with Badri was different from agreement with Abramovich and difference was that Badri was completely responsible how to pay, where to pay and when to pay for our joint -- for our joint expenses. It means that I can't confirm, I can't refuse; I just don't know at all.

Q. Well, a large part of this expenditure was the result of your personally making demands of Mr Abramovich, wasn't it?

A. First of all, now I understand better what means "demands". It's not demands; it's obligation to Abramovich to pay me profit which generate our company. I never try to convince Abramovich to do something what could be damaging for the company and later on definitely I will give you example of that.

As far as my personal expenses is concerned, what I remember, the biggest expenses which I made, it's investing to the property on the south of France.

Q. I'm going to ask you about that in a few minutes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Sumption, can I be clear: are you putting those figures on the basis that those were paid to Mr Berezovsky or to Mr Berezovsky and Mr Badri?

MR SUMPTION: They are paid to Mr Berezovsky or at his direction, according to Ms Goncharova's witness statement. Generally, if I can just -- I don't think this is controversial -- they were generally paid to the nominated accounts of companies and therefore it was not possible to know exactly what happened to them once they got there.

A. It's exactly my point. It's exactly my point.

Q. Yes.

A. It's not possible to -- I at least don't understand how it was pleaded and who --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: As between you and Mr Patarkatsishvili?

A. Correct. Correct.

MR SUMPTION: That is our understanding also.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you.

MR SUMPTION: Now, could you please take bundle H(C)8, which will be handed to you in a moment.

A. Can I take H(A)98?

Q. Yes, you can put that away.

A. Thank you.

Q. Now, in the bundle you've just been handed, I would like you to turn to page 173 H(C)8/173, which is the note of your evidence to the French investigating magistrate on the money-laundering issue that we discussed on Friday.

A. This issue was confirmed by my lawyers. Yes, you are very correct, yes.

Q. That's right. That's the note of the evidence which you gave by video-link to the French investigating magistrate in Marseilles.

A. Yes.

Q. Would you please turn on in this document to page 182 H(C)8/182.

A. Yes. 82(sic), yes.

Q. Now, in the middle of this page you're answering questions arising from your suggestion that these payments that you used to buy your property in France were part of the profit share that you were entitled to in Sibneft. That's the subject matter that's being discussed. In the middle of the long answer in the middle of the page you say:

"Nevertheless, it's wrong to say I did not have any papers showing my involvement in Sibneft. We presented in the hearing in the London court the papers which demonstrate that from the very beginning we owned 51%..."

I referred you to that, you may remember, on Friday.

I then want you to turn on to page 184 -- sorry, would you, just before doing that, look at the top of page 182. You say:

"RA accepts that he paid me 2.4 [billion dollars]."

Do you see at the top of page 182?

A. 1...?

Q. Top of page 182.

A. Ah, again 182, yes.

Q. "RA accepts that he paid me 2.4 [billion dollars]."

A. Yes, yes, yes. Yes.

Q. Where does that come from?

A. I think that it was my impression of calculation because -- calculation of the -- what was presented already for this hearing -- "for this hearing" I mean the preparation for this hearing -- that all to all -- I didn't remember well the number -- that all to all it was paid $2.4 billion, I can't say it was Badri and me together or me personally, but that we were paid 2.4. It was reflected in my mind as a number which was calculated as preparation to this trial.

Q. Well now, would you turn on two pages to page 184, please H(C)8/184.

A. Yes.

Q. Right at the top of page 184 you'll see that the French magistrate is asking you:

"Can I just make sure that I asked correctly, you say that the funds used for the Chateau came from your interest in Sibneft, from your joint venture with [Badri] and the repayment of a loan from Jetchkov."

You say:

"No, the main source came from Runicom."

Right?

A. Yes.

Q. Then a bit lower down the page, when you're expanding on that, there's a paragraph beginning, "I want to stress again". Do you see that?

A. Paragraph which?

Q. The paragraph beginning, further down that page, "I want to stress again".

A. Just a second. Yes, yes, I'm sorry.

Q. You say:

"I want to stress again. I was responsible to negotiate with RA for the main payment of my profit in Sibneft. RA paid my money from Sibneft to purchase for [the chateau] and, as I understand it, he did it through Runicom as his straight company. I never was a shareholder of Runicom."

And so on. What negotiations are you referring to when you talk about negotiating with RA for the payment of your profit in Sibneft?

A. It means that when I decide to buy chateau, and knowing well that Mr Abramovich know what we are discussing because he spent a lot of time with me in chateau and I discuss with him that I decide -- no, this about chateau, sorry. I'm sorry. This about chateau because then there was other building. Yes.

I talk to him that I want to buy this property and I ask him, "Do we have money now to buy that enough?" Because, as you remember maybe, that when I bought later on -- it was in short period I bought several properties in England -- I asked Mr Deripaska, because we had a lot of expenses including my personal expenses to buy, I asked Mr Deripaska to give me debt for $13 million, but we'll return later on. It means that I inform Badri and Roman -- and, as I recollect now, I talk directly to Roman that I want to buy that.

- Q. Now, you didn't ask Mr Abramovich whether you had the money to buy the chateau, did you? You told him you were buying the chateau and you demanded that he should pay it?
- A. Mr Sumption, from the very beginning our relations with Abramovich I described correctly. I can't demand, I can't to press, I can't do anything. It was our joint business. I could not press him if I understand that it damage our business. I just could present him my vision and I gave you absolutely correct example.

When I decide to buy property in England and we didn't enough cash money, I asked Deripaska to help me. Later on we returned him this money because I care about the company but through eyes of Abramovich. If Abramovich told me, "Boris, we are not able now to pay", it means we are not able now to pay and I need to go somewhere if I want to buy and ask someone to buy. This is the point.

Q. Would you turn on to page 188, please, of this note H(C)8/188.

A. Yes.

Q. The third question up from the bottom of this page you will see that the French judge, there's a paragraph beginning, "Maitre Temime has given me a document..." Do you see that?

A. Just a second. 188?

Q. 188.

A. Yes, yes, yes.

Q. Do you see that question?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, was Maitre Temime the lawyer acting for you in the French criminal investigation?

A. Yes, yes, I remember.

Q. Right. Now, the investigating magistrate says:

"Maitre Temime has given me a document which said that apart from paying you for lobbying, he also paid for a number of... expenses and they were dealt with by Shvidler."

And you say:

"I want to explain the difference between what RA says and what I say. I insist I am shareholder, he explains that this is only for service. As far as my knowledge of Shvidler is concerned, I know he is a minority partner of RA. I never made any agreements with Shvidler..."

Then the judge returns:

"Once again according to documents from Maitre Temime. There were payments of 80 [million dollars] in 96, 50 [million] in 1997, and 50 [million] in 1998."

Okay?

A. Just a second. It's payment for what?

Q. Well, I'm just asking you to look at those figures.

A. Yes.

Q. Maitre Temime has handed to the French judge a document or some documents which show, apparently, that there were payments of $80 million in '96, $50 million in '97 and $50 million in '98?

A. Payments to whom? To me or --

Q. To you.

A. Is it... I don't understand.

Q. Well, look over the page.

A. It doesn't matter. Okay, okay.

Q. "As far as these documents are concerned, my understanding is absolutely clear that it is payment for my interest in Sibneft."

A. Yes.

Q. Okay?

A. Yes.

Q. So your lawyer is saying to the French judge that those payments were received by you.

A. Yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: Just so I can help my learned friend, the documents are in fact Mr Abramovich's --

MR SUMPTION: No, I don't want Mr Rabinowitz, please, to assist me. I'd like the assistance of the witness.

MR RABINOWITZ: The problem is he's putting it on a false basis.

MR SUMPTION: No, I am not.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Rabinowitz, which question are you saying is on a false basis? Just give me the page number and the line.

MR RABINOWITZ: It relates to what Maitre Temime is producing to show these payments.

MR SUMPTION: That's exactly what I wish to ask the witness.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, just a second, Mr Sumption.

Which question are you saying is on a false premise?

MR RABINOWITZ: My Lady, I don't have it on my screen. I'll just have to try and find it.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, I don't want to waste time.

Mr Sumption, put the question again.

MR SUMPTION: Mr Berezovsky, what were the documents which your lawyer gave the judge which showed that you had received payments of these amounts?

A. I don't know. I don't remember at least. At least I don't remember. At least.

Q. Well, you described them over the page as being payments for your interest in Sibneft, so you must have had some idea what documents he was talking about.

A. Again, maybe I had that time some idea; now I don't have any idea because, as I told you before, I didn't care of that.

Q. You didn't...?

A. I didn't care of that. I didn't care of that.

Q. Well, you must have cared about it when you were being asked questions by a French investigating magistrate in a rather serious criminal investigation?

A. Yes, correct, and I gave him the general picture which is absolutely correctly what -- absolutely correctly with -- for better understanding of French judge say:

"I want to explain the difference between what [Roman Abramovich] says and what I say. I insist I am shareholder, he explains that this is only for service. As far as my knowledge of Shvidler is concerned, I know he is a minority partner of RA."

As I, again, had in my mind.

"I never made any agreements with Shvidler at all."

I just raise that I am shareholder, not -- not through Roman Abramovich. If he put me the question direct shareholder or indirect shareholder, definitely I give correct answer. I don't have anything to hide. But he already -- we are already in England; I should not follow advice of Roman Abramovich to be not visible, yes?

What is not correct here?

- Q. Mr Berezovsky, I am interested in the amounts. Do you see? $80 million in '96, $50 million in '97 and $50 million in '98.
- A. I don't know what is that.
- Q. Right. At any rate, when you were asked about those figures by the French investigating magistrate --
- A. Yes.
- Q. -- you did not suggest that they were wrong, did you?
- A. I did not suggest because I didn't know that. How am I suggest that they are wrong if I don't know that? I just told you that there were substantial amount of money which Abramovich paid me. I never calculate that, this is the point. Badri calculate that, this is the point. I can't give answer.
- Q. You could have said to the French investigating magistrate, "I don't know what the correct figures are".

In fact what you said was that those figures were payments for your interest in Sibneft.

A. Definitely it's figures for my interest of Sibneft because I don't have another payment except of interest in Sibneft, but I don't know amount.

Q. Now, in addition to the $300 million which Ms Goncharova handed, which corresponds very closely to the figures which your lawyer gave the French judge, you received, did you not, further amounts handled by people other than Ms Goncharova; in particular, amounts derived from Runicom?

A. Just a second. (Pause)

I don't understand, what does mean the "other" --
Goncharova is not Runicom, I don't understand.

Q. No, she's not.

A. Ah, okay.

Q. What I'm suggesting to you is that in addition to the $300 million that you received over that four-year period through the Russian trading companies handled by Ms Goncharova, you also received further sums from other companies outside Russia including Runicom.

Do you accept that or not?

A. I can't exclude that because, again, everything was operated by Abramovich as far as Sibneft is concerned.

That's it. I just want to stress that Sibneft was not only one -- the main, definitely, not Sibneft and everything connected to Sibneft was the main source of my money, maybe 95 or maybe 99 per cent, I don't know that well, but it's mentioned here that it also was payment of ORT, yes, some small amount of money.

I also can't exclude that because, as I told you before, I propose Abramovich to share ORT so-called business, because it was not business at that time; become business finally, yes, as I predict. But it could be that some payment was done by ORT as our profit in ORT that time. And it's written here.

But again, Mr Sumption, definitely it's absolutely your choice to believe me or not believe me. Believe me, I didn't know exact numbers, $90 million, $80 million and so, and I even don't know how it was spent because Badri was responsible for that.

I know that just I bought chateau, it's true; I bought Clocher, it's true; I bought some property in England, it's also true.

- Q. Your lawyer would not have given figures to a French investigating judge on a serious investigation of money-laundering without being entirely satisfied that they were correct, as you saw it?
- A. Again, my lawyer -- I can't recollect that my lawyer any time present me these numbers. I can't recollect that.

- Q. Could you please take bundle H(A)08/140. You haven't got it yet but you're about to be given it.
- A. But importance is that, again, to French lawyer, as you correctly said, it was the criminal investigation.
- I confirm the same story: that it's my money, came from Sibneft finally, yes? This is important.
- Q. Right. Would you please look at H(A)08/140. This is a document which I think it follows from your earlier evidence you never studied at the time but there are points that I want to give you a chance to comment on.
- A. Just a second, yes. May I have a look.
- Q. Right?
- A. This is Siberian Oil Company consolidated financial statements; correct?
- Q. That's right, for 1996.
- A. In 19...?
- Q. '96.
- A. Yes, 1996. Yes.
- Q. Okay?
- A. Yes.
- Q. Now, would you please turn on to page 142 H(A)08/142.
- A. 142, yes.
- Q. This is the profit and loss account for 1995 and '96 showing that the net loss made by Sibneft was $206 million in 1995 and $2.346 million in 1996. Do you see that?

A. 2-point -- just a second. In 9 --

Q. Three items from the bottom of the table on page 142, "Net loss".

A. Yes, 206, I see that. And the second loss is which one?

Q. Well, '96 is the left-hand column.

A. Yes, yes, yes, yes, '96, and the losses are 2,000, yes?

Q. Well, these are thousands, so that's actually $2.346 million.

A. Yes, okay. Good.

Q. Right.

A. Good, definitely.

Q. Now, if you look on the previous page, you'll see that these accounts were audited by Arthur Andersen, and look at the second paragraph.

A. Yes.

Q. They were audited by Arthur Andersen:

"... in accordance with generally accepted auditing standards in the United States."

A. Okay.

Q. Do you see that?

A. Yes, okay.

Q. Now, it's right, isn't it, that Sibneft was one of the first major Russian companies to have its accounts audited in accordance with general accounting standards applicable in the west?

A. Yes.

Q. Would you please now look at page 163 H(A)/163 --

A. Yes.

Q. -- where you'll see that no dividends were declared --

A. Where is that, dividends?

Q. Bottom of 163.

A. Yes, I see that.

Q. No dividends were declared in that year?

A. Just a second. Yes.

Q. And finally I would like you to look at page 165

H(A)/165, where there's a heading just below halfway down the page, "Related Party Transactions".

A. Yes.

Q. "For the period from inception (September 30, 1995) to December 31, 1996, approximately 15% of sales were made to a shareholder who principally exports refined product. As of December 31, 1996, the Group had outstanding receivables from the shareholding totalling $45 million, representing amounts outstanding through normal trading practices."

Will you take it from me, please, that that shareholder was Runicom, which had bought shares in the first of the cash auctions.

A. Shares -- again, the question?

Q. I haven't asked the question yet. I'm just referring you to these items.

A. Yes, yes.

Q. Now, do you say that these statements of Sibneft's profits were in any way inaccurate?

A. I don't know at all.

Q. You don't know. So the answer is you don't say that they're inaccurate; you don't know one way or the other?

A. I don't know. I haven't seen anytime, any, ever, this statement that I can't discuss that. I can't explain why it's written in this way and not the other way.

I just explain you my understanding how they generate the profit and is that statement correct. I give you example. You said: is that because of this importance of audience? I demonstrate you that second day the document Eurobonds which Sibneft presented to Eurobond committee which completely falsified, yes? And how to -- how can I responsible what documents Sibneft presented to this audit(?) committee? How they put there that Abramovich has education when they don't have education? How they put that? It's completely wrong confirmation which Sibneft supply the institution of Euro. This is the point. And I'm not sure that this case is the same. How I can be responsible for that document?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Sorry --

A. Sorry.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: -- are you saying these accounts are inaccurate?

A. No, I say just that I don't know on which base it's produced, which kind of information Sibneft supplied.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So you don't know the basis upon which the accounts are corrected?

A. Correct. Correct. Absolutely correct. And I gave example when Sibneft supply wrong information. It's the reason why I have a lot of doubts that conclusion is correct. This is the point.

MR SUMPTION: It's the job of an auditor, isn't it, to check that information given by the management of a company is right? Do you agree?

A. It's their job and -- well, again, an example when the job they deliver not a proper way because they gave their fund -- they give -- they pay for Eurobonds but the information which was presented there was wrong.

Q. Now, you've referred to the Eurobonds circular, which is at H(A)07/19. Perhaps you could be given that.

A. Yes.

Q. Perhaps you would turn to page 79 of the bundle numbering H(A)07/79. Page 79.

A. Yes.

Q. Right. Now, this is headed "Crude Oil Marketing". Do you see?

A. Yes.

Q. What it says, and it's referring to the 1996 year, and I'm looking at the third paragraph below the heading --

A. Mm-hm.

Q. "In 1996, Sibneft exported 23.1% of its crude oil production, or 4.3 million tonnes. In 1996, all exports were to countries outside the [Russian Federation]. Starting in May 1996, the company used Runicom Ltd and its affiliate Runicom SA, a Swiss trader of crude oil and refined oil products, as its exclusive export agents, paying them a commission; since March 1997 these two entities have purchased outright all of Sibneft's exports. In 1996, sales commissions for the Runicom entities averages $0.35 per barrel, or approximately 2% of the total sales price. Since March 1997, no commission has been paid and the Runicom entities have paid market prices for their purchases."

So the point being made there is that up to March 1996, Runicom paid market prices for crude oil less a commission of about 2 per cent. Do you have any reason to regard that statement as inaccurate?

A. I don't know anything; I can't comment that.

Mr Sumption, again, you now push me to the profession which I don't have. I don't know. You ask me, "Can I believe to this paper?" I said you, "No". I explain you why: because I find, being not professional, some absolutely falsified facts which include in this document. And you know that if I find at least one very visible fact --

- Q. What fact do you say is false in this document?
- A. That Abramovich has education.
- Q. That Abramovich has education?
- A. Correct.
- Q. So because you think that Mr Abramovich is uneducated and this document says he's educated, you don't accept what the auditors say about the accounts they have audited; is that your evidence?
- A. At least it means at least that auditors are not careful enough even to recognise this point.
- Q. Now, when it turns to refined products which are dealt with on the following page, page 80 H(A)07/80, in broad summary what is said here is that market prices are paid for refined products sold through Runicom. Do you have any reason to dispute that?
- A. I don't have any reason to dispute that. It's not my knowledge; it's not my profession. But I can't just to close eyes and thinking that it's professional company who have done that. This company, absolutely correct, it's saying what is written here. If I wouldn't have examples of that, that they accept some false information as the basis for calculation, it's correct, it's less doubts.

Also doubts because we know that Pricewaterhouse, for example, took back release of audit of Menatep -- of Yukos -- I'm sorry, my Lady -- when Yukos was under pressure and Pricewaterhouse, the world-famous company, said, "Oh, sorry, we make mistake", yes? Because Putin decide that Khodorkovsky is criminal and even first-class audit company absolutely betrayed the profession.

- Q. In 1996, Mr Berezovsky, you received about $80 million from Mr Abramovich and his companies, according to the figures given by Ms Goncharova in her witness statement and by Maitre Temime to the Marseilles judge. That was a year in which there were no Sibneft profits, wasn't it?
- A. Again, I don't know. Sibneft itself definitely didn't have profit, it's absolutely correct; but how Abramovich generate the profit, it's not my point.
- Q. It's obvious, isn't it, that the money you received in 1996 cannot have represented Sibneft profits because in that year there weren't any?

- A. Mr Sumption, we go circle and circle again. I'm happy to spend time like that because it's the same question, the same answer, but the answer will be the same. Abramovich will generate money not through Sibneft profit. Sibneft at that time was not profitable company.
- Q. Now, in 1997 Sibneft made a profit of $68 million, according to its accounts, and it declared no dividend. Do you accept that that is what the accounts show?
- A. If it's written here, the accounts show exactly this number which you mentioned. If you give me opportunity to open that, I will see. But it's -- again, it's very for me nothing in terms of our discussion, in terms of the point which you try to raise, how I got $80 million if Abramovich -- if Sibneft was not profitable. I explain how: they generated by trade. It's my guess.
- Q. Now, let's look at what you received in 1997. According to Ms Goncharova, she handled on behalf of Petroltrans and the Russian trading companies about $50 million of payments to you or at your direction in that year and that corresponds to the figure that your lawyer gave to the French investigating magistrate. Do you follow me?
- A. I follow you.
- Q. In addition to that $50 million, about $20 million was paid between March and October 1997 by Mr Abramovich's

Swiss trading company, Runicom, to a company of yours called Comodo; do you accept that?

- A. I don't remember that. How I can accept what I don't understand and don't remember?

If there is a paper which Mr Abramovich -- Mrs Goncharova, Mr Abramovich's employer (sic) present, first of all I don't know the value of these papers, I never check the value of these papers, and I can't base my answer and just take as a truth what it was presented.

But, again, our understanding is that the amount of money which is mentioned here could be paid me; I can't tell that because, again, Badri was responsible.

I don't want to say that Badri is not alive and it's the reason it's fine all the time to refer to Badri; but on the other hand I really don't know, I really don't know what amount of money was paid.

And if Ms Goncharova present this payment, it should be checked. I can't accept it's just for the words of Mrs Goncharova, who present interests of Mr Abramovich.

- Q. The $20 million that I've been referring to was not handled by Ms Goncharova; it was handled by Runicom and it was paid to a company of yours called Comodo in order to fund the purchase and restoration and furnishing of your property in the south of France. Do you recall that?

A. I don't recall that. I can't exclude that, but I can't recall that because -- and moreover, I have a little bit doubts about that because we buy chateau in '96 or '97, I don't remember well, and we never change furniture there. The furniture like it is because it is furniture of 100 years ago and we try to keep like it was 100 years ago. It means that I don't remember anything -- I can just say that we are not able to spend for furniture this amount of money.

Q. Would you please have a look at -- you can put away the document you've got in front of you, apart from your witness statement. I would like you to be given instead bundle --

A. And this one, and the H(A)08 also?

Q. Yes, you can put away -- well, keep H(A)08, if you would.

A. Keep?

Q. Yes, keep it, H(A)08 -- sorry, H(C)8, forgive me.

A. Sorry. This H(A)08 I can return, yes?

Q. Do you accept that Comodo was a company of yours which was used to hold and manage the properties that you acquired at Cap d'Antibes?

A. I don't. I can't. I don't remember because again, I'm sorry, again it was not structurised by me. It was structured everything by -- as I remember again -- by Mr Hans-Peter Jenni and Mr Bordes, who sold me this property. It means that I don't remember the name.

Again, I can't exclude that, Mr Sumption, to be very precise.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, I'm a bit puzzled by this because these are the very transactions that the French investigating magistrate was looking at --

A. Yes.

Q. -- and which you answered questions about only four months ago.

A. Yes.

Q. In the written answers --

A. Sorry, Mr Sumption, if it's so, could we open again the questioning and mention this company? Is it possible?

Q. Of course. If you look in bundle H(C)8, at page 131 -- perhaps you should look first at 127 which is the first page of the document H(C)8/127. On page 127, if you look at the heading at the top --

A. 127. What is that?

Q. You will see that these are your answers to questions that were put to you by the French investigatory magistrate.

A. Yes, I see.

Q. Right?

A. Yes.

Q. And if you turn to page 131 H(C)8/131, you are asked what you can tell the judge in France about a number of companies. If you look --

A. Just a second. Where is that?

Q. If you look down the bottom of the page 131, about three inches from the bottom you will see a heading that says:

"SIFI Sarl, OVACO AG [and] COMODO LIMITED."

A. Fantastic, yes. It's written here, it's so.

Q. "These companies were used to hold and manage the properties acquired at Cap d'Antibes: namely the Chateau and the Clocher de la Garoupe."

Then at the bottom of the page:

"I was the ultimate beneficial owner of Comodo Limited until mid 2007..."

Now, I take it, since that's what you told the French investigating magistrate, that it's true?

A. Yes, it's true. It's that -- and I correctly answered you -- I don't remember that. Definitely before the questioning I was refreshed which company I'm beneficial owner. But for that time definitely I forgot completely that.

Q. Would you now put away bundle H(C)8 and take bundle E3. Now, I would like you to look, please, at bundle E3, which you're about to be given, at flag 10, which is

Mr Shvidler's statement, and paragraph 126, which has a table E3/10/37.

A. Just a second. 126?

Q. Yes. I don't think that these figures are controversial, but you can tell us if they are, because they are substantially the same as the figures produced by your witness Mr Jenni in his witness statement. All right?

A. Yes. No, again, you ask me confirmation; I should have a look at least.

Q. Yes. Looking at this table, this is a table showing loans from Abramovich companies to Comodo; do you see?

A. Yes.

Q. And, at approximately 6 French francs to the US dollar, this adds up to about $20 million.

A. Just a second.

Q. I'm not going to ask you to do the maths; we can all do that for ourselves in due course if there's a dispute about it.

Do you accept that you received, by way ostensibly of loan through Comodo, these sums?

A. I think it's -- if it's this information, I don't have chance to check this information. Unfortunately we were able to prove Mr Shvidler is not correct in many times. But nevertheless, okay, let's suppose it's so.

Q. Okay. Well now, all of this money was used, wasn't it, was spent on acquiring and doing work or filling up your property in France?

A. Mr Sumption, I don't remember. Mr Sumption, believe me, I don't remember what happened in ten years ago, even more. How this money was spent, I don't remember.

Q. Now, the amounts that you received --

A. And moreover, I never even have seen that because I was not responsible for that. I told you, it's again not the reason, my Lady, that I want to push everything what is the facts, yes? This amount of money. I don't want to produce impression that I'm just hiding -- don't know anything. But it's really I don't know. It was my job. It was a company who operated by the other people and who got money and spent money.

Q. Well, it was operated --

A. And moreover, to getting money and to spend money was not -- at this, it was not my responsibility.

Q. Mr Jenni's evidence in this action is that although these were on the face of it loans, they were never intended to be repaid and were never in fact repaid; they were outright payments therefore. Do you recall that?

A. No, not at all. I don't remember that. I don't -- not remember, I don't know even that, because again it was not my responsibility. I was not involved in that at all.

- Q. Now, you do accept, however, I think, that all of your expenditure on your south of France properties was paid by Mr Abramovich's companies, don't you?
- A. Again, through Mr Abramovich company but not -- I am not sure that all -- as I gave you example before, I remember that also we got payment, and you read that, also from ORT. But no doubts that 95 per cent of my expenses in France were paid through my interest in Sibneft; maybe later on of my interest of Rusal. But I don't know that, I don't remember.
- Q. Now, at any rate, you agree that the great majority of what you spent on your French properties came from Mr Abramovich's companies?
- A. Through Mr Abramovich companies, correct.
- Q. Okay. Now, what was the system by which you decided how much was to be paid through Runicom and Comodo?
- A. I don't know. The system was the same. Badri mainly was responsible to connection to Abramovich; it doesn't mean that sometimes I referred Abramovich directly and Abramovich present his understanding, "Are we able to spend now this money or not"? If we're able to spend money, he paid me. If we were not able to spend this money because he want to buy, let's say, the other companies -- Sibneft was developing at that time and, as you know, my Lady, we bought a lot of companies which were -- which become business of Sibneft. Moreover, we bought even company which didn't relate directly to Sibneft, for example gold company, for example food production company.

And Abramovich was responsible to say me, to tell me, "Boris, we don't have money now. You need to find another way to do that". And I gave you clear example when Abramovich told me that and I went to Deripaska and Deripaska gave me loan for $13 million.

- Q. Let's treat this particular expenditure on your property in the south of France as an example. The system was this, wasn't it: whenever your agent, Monsieur Bordes, wanted more money, Mr Jenni's office -- he was your Swiss lawyer -- would pass the demand on to Mr Shvidler and ask him to pay it? That was the system, wasn't it?
- A. I don't know, but I am not able not to trust you. If this was the system, this was the system; I just was not aware how it works, this system, and how they organised that.
- Q. You weren't aware of that; is that your evidence? You weren't aware of the system?
- A. I don't know how payment was done and how they organise because there were several company. As I know,

Mr Bordes, as I told you, he not just help me to buy the property; he also manage the property.

Q. Yes.

A. It means that he was responsible for month-to-month expenses and he knew that the source of this money is my business, business in Sibneft.

Q. And when you need --

A. And Mr Jenni, as I told you, he is my Swiss -- he is Swiss lawyer and he help us to create the company -- to have a partner of Andre & Cie from Switzerland and he was responsible to organise financing of the property as well.

Q. Do you accept that when Mr Bordes wanted more money for your French property, he approached Mr Jenni's office and got them to ask Mr Shvidler for it?

A. I don't know, and moreover I have a lot of doubts. I explain you why: because without Badri approval, because without Badri involvement, I have a lot of doubts that it's possible to do that.

Q. Do you accept that when --

A. Because, as I understand, Mr Shvidler understood who is Badri in our relation but he doesn't understand who is Mr Bordes, who is able to ask him to pay money.

Q. Yes, but he did understand who Mr Stiefel, Mr Jenni's assistant, was, didn't he?

A. Mr...?

Q. Mr Jenni's assistant was called Mr Stiefel and it was his job in Mr Jenni's office to ring up Mr Shvidler and say, "We need more money".

A. I'm sure that it doesn't work like that at all. It means that first of all they should agree it with Badri because, again, Badri was the person who present all my, let's say, money interests -- I mean money calculation interests -- in my relations with Roman Abramovich.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, it's just not true that the dealings on your French property were all handled by Badri. They were handled by you, weren't they?

A. Again, it was not handled by me. Again, I just -- I own that, and according of recommendation of Mr Bordes and Mr Jenni we create a structure which are able to support this property, because it's cost a lot, as I understand, several millions yearly. It means that we should organise in proper way to financing that.

And according of French law, which very different from this country, yes, it's a lot of tax problems there and so. And as I understand, they were professional to organise that. It's not organised by me; I just follow the way how they organise that. And I am sure that impossible for Hans-Peter Jenni or Mr Bordes to ask Shvidler directly, "You should pay that and that"; definitely it was Badri involved in that.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, do you remember that there were occasions when Mr Shvidler wouldn't pay? Do you remember that?

And Mr Jenni told you that there was a problem because Mr Shvidler wouldn't pay; do you remember that?

A. I don't remember that. I can't exclude that definitely, as I told you already before, I gave you example, clear example, and sometimes they didn't have enough money to pay for my personal expenses and I can't exclude that. I don't remember definitely that but I can't exclude that, that Shvidler can say, "We don't have money".

But again, more than 100 per cent, I am sure that it was not me involvement; it was Badri involvement in that.

Q. Mr Jenni, when Mr Shvidler refused to pay, Mr Jenni would speak to you personally and would ask you to sort it out. You --

A. It could -- it could be --

Q. Let me finish.

A. Sorry.

Q. You then rang Mr Abramovich and said, "Mr Shvidler isn't paying my money; make sure, please, that he does"?

A. I can't exclude that. It could be like that.

Q. That's what Mr Jenni says in his witness statement.

A. Okay. Fine. I didn't read Mr Jenni's statement. It could be like that, but what is wrong with that? What is wrong compared with I present to you my position?

Q. Nothing wrong with that at all, Mr Berezovsky.

A. Great.

Q. The point that I'm making to you is that this was a demand-led system, wasn't it?

A. Definitely not.

Q. The amount that you got depended first of all on your demands and secondly on a process of continuous negotiation with Mr Shvidler and Mr Abramovich?

A. Mr Sumption, it's absolutely wrong conclusion.

Q. Now, if the $20 million, roughly speaking, that you got from Runicom in 1997 represented the profits attributable to your 25 per cent of the shares of Sibneft, then the total amount of Sibneft profits would have had to be over $80 million, wouldn't it?

A. I don't conclude that.

Q. If we add in --

A. I explain you again, Mr Sumption, very simple, and it's only correct point. Abramovich managed the company. If I ask money, he pay me money. If he was not able to pay, he inform me, "Boris, we don't have", this is the point, or inform Badri that we don't have money. Mainly Badri, sometimes me.

And again, definitely I try to recollect maybe the other examples when Abramovich said that we are not able to pay for something. I give just the most recollected example: that when I want to buy property here because my second family moved here, to London, and they need to buy house, and I asked Roman, "Are we able to buy? Are we able to pay?" He said, "Boris, we don't have money now". I said, "Fine, no problem", and I went to Deripaska and I asked, "Oleg, could you help me?" And he said, "I help you". This is the point.

Q. The amount --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just a second, Mr Sumption.

Can you just explain this to me, Mr Berezovsky. If you were getting paid out of the gross revenues of Sibneft as opposed to the declared profit, how did you calculate or estimate whether you and Mr Abramovich were getting equally 50 per cent of the gross revenues or the net profit?

A. I didn't calculate it. I just know that Abramovich understand our relations and Badri understand our relations and if you -- and Abramovich, I trust him that he equal share profit generated Sibneft directly or indirectly between us. That's it. And sometimes --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: But what was the method of working out what, as between the two of you, were the profits of Sibneft?

A. Sorry, my Lady, again?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Let me put the question again. If the deal was, as you say --

A. Yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: -- that you and Badri on the one side and Mr Abramovich on the other were going to share the profits generated by Sibneft 50/50 --

A. Correct. Sibneft or the company which connected to Sibneft.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes -- what was the method for working out whether each side was in fact getting the 50 per cent?

A. It means that it's Abramovich and Badri, they understood how much we're able to -- how much company generate generally and when we put request to pay some amount of money for something, for my private expenses or for my personal -- let's say ORT, doesn't matter -- all the time Badri told me, "Boris, we have enough money for that", or, "We don't have enough money for that".

And it's --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, but my question to you, if you'll forgive me --

A. So sorry.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: -- and if you don't know, just say, how as between you and Badri on the one hand and

Mr Abramovich on the other did you work out what each of you were entitled to? 50 per cent of what: gross revenues, net profits, net net profits?

A. As I understand, all profit which company is able this year or this month to split with this -- between owners.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I see. Thank you.

A. Thank you.

MR SUMPTION: I wonder if you could be given --

A. My Lady, the best example -- again, I'm sorry that I refer again -- is what happened at Le Bourget. It's exactly they calculate how much we have, how much is already expenses between us spent and how much, for example, Roman should pay us more as our part of our deal.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I see. Thank you.

MR SUMPTION: What you were discussing at Le Bourget was in fact how much was still due to you of a sum which Mr Abramovich had already, three months before that meeting, agreed to pay you; namely $305 million. That's what you were discussing at Le Bourget.

A. Mr Sumption, in Le Bourget, Badri, in my presence, tried to create a balance between what Abramovich already paid, what he should paid and what is the prediction for the next year because of tax changes in Russian government policy, and nothing more. Again, and it's absolutely clear that it's dividends or profit which we discussed from Sibneft and from Rusal.

But, as you promise me, we return back to Le Bourget transcript and we will, I hope, also create position that you will not have any doubts that it's confirmed absolutely clear that we own Sibneft, that we own Rusal and we got money generated these companies, directly or indirectly.

Q. Now, Ms Nosova tells us what she understood the system to be, and I want to ask you to look at what she says.

A. Mm-hm.

Q. It's in bundle D1/09, page 150 D1/09/150.

A. Sorry, D1?

Q. Flag 9, page 150. Have you got --

A. 150, I have it.

Q. Paragraph 203, right at the bottom of that page. Do you have paragraph 203?

A. Yes, I try to read that.

Q. "My understanding was that the way Boris received this money was very ad hoc."

A. What means "ad hoc"?

Q. That means that it wasn't planned in advance --

A. Oh, I see.

Q. -- it was simply arranged from time to time.

A. Yes. Mm-hm.

Q. "There was no single arrangement by which he would always receive money. Rather, he..."

And this is you, Mr Berezovsky.

"... would identify some personal asset which needed to be paid for and would inform Badri or Mr Abramovich or his team what it was and who the money needed to be paid to, and they would arrange it. This could, for example, be jewellery for Elena Gorbunova, for real estate, or whatever."

A. Yes.

Q. That is a correct description, isn't it, of how this worked?

A. This is partially correct description but it doesn't mean --

Q. It's not partially correct --

A. Sorry -- but it doesn't mean that it's incorrectly what I said before: that Badri and Roman calculate the balance all the time. This is the point, and this is a key point.

Q. That paragraph isn't partially correct; it's completely correct, isn't it?

A. Again, I gave you answer.

Q. Now, the huge sums that you received in 1997, at least $70 million on the material that we've got, were larger than the entire profits of Sibneft for that year, weren't they?

A. Which Sibneft show up.

Q. Yes. And you have no reason, as you've told us, for saying that what Sibneft was showing as its profit was not its profit?

A. I already explain you that the profit which Sibneft show up was done in the way, in the usual way like it was, let's say, it was acceptable at that time. It means that nobody can say, except of Mr Abramovich and Shvidler, what the real profit was because the profit generate not directly as dividends. As I understand, dividends were introduced to share only when we already almost left the company, Badri and me, when we were squeezed to leave the company. Only after that they start to share profit in the way of dividends.

It's just one more confirmation that our presence when we have been there, it was in interest of Abramovich -- it's not direct, indirect statement, indirect my understanding -- was not reasonable for him to show the real profit of the company.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, it was not acceptable at the time, was it, when you had a public company, with members of the public holding about 10 per cent of the shares, for some shareholders to strip off assets from the company without having dividends while the rest of them had to content themselves with the zero dividends that the company was declaring? That wasn't acceptable --

A. Mr Sumption --

Q. That wasn't acceptable, was it?

A. It is not acceptable at all. But it's not my deal to manage the company; it's what Abramovich has done. And if it's wrong, it's Abramovich mistake, not my mistake.

Q. And it wasn't acceptable either, was it, to present your audited accounts on the basis of US GAAP which were false? That wasn't acceptable either, is it?

A. It's question not to me; it's question to Abramovich what they present.

Q. You said that the method which you thought was being applied was acceptable in the mid-'90s. I have put it to you that it was not, and I don't think you think it is.

A. No, again, I describe you the method which company use to obtain the profit directly or indirectly and the way was absolutely the same for all the company. I never calculate numbers and my relations was absolutely simple: I made request directly to Abramovich or Shvidler or indirectly through Badri. If Abramovich was able to pay, calculating what is our interest, Badri and me together, he paid that. If he was not able to do, he said, "Boris, we don't have money now to spend because we invest it to buy something or because company didn't generate this money".

I never demand Abramovich to do that, never, because it was responsibility of Abramovich, 100 per cent, to manage the company and I'm not crazy to destroy my company just thinking to buy another house, yes?

I understood priority. If we don't have money, we don't have money. If we have money, I want to spend this money how I like to do.

- Q. If you didn't have money because Mr Shvidler didn't think that he could properly provide it for you, your response was to ring up Mr Abramovich and say, "Pay", wasn't it?
- A. Not. Not so.
- Q. In 1998, Sibneft made a profit of $36 million. It retained that for reinvestment and declared no dividend.
- A. Mm-hm.
- Q. You received, on Ms Goncharova's estimates and on the figure that you gave to the French judge or your lawyer gave to the French judge, $50 million in that year, one and a half times the entire profits of Sibneft, didn't you?
- A. It could be. Again, I'm not responsible -- I can't recollect the numbers, but it could be. And the way -- and the reason why it could be I'll also explain: it's the same way when company present itself as a company with not dividends at all and generate dividends in another way. And unfortunately -- I don't know how to say that -- it was the regular way of almost all oil company. I don't know really exception.

At least, again, this question was investigated in details in Khodorkovsky case, in details. Even on the level of Strasbourg it was investigated and Strasbourg gave negative conclusion that it looks like fraud, it's true. But I just want to stress it's not my point. Maybe now finally, after this hearing, it will be another hearing what Abramovich have done as a manager of the company and maybe something crime was there.

But it's not a point to discuss today because it's absolutely clear and I give absolutely truthful answer my understanding how generate money, and maybe even squeezing interest of the other shareholders.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, are you suggesting that you were paid during the 1990s by methods which looked like fraud?

A. I didn't have any idea that time how Abramovich paid. Moreover, I start to think about that when Khodorkovsky -- when they put Khodorkovsky in jail and start to investigate the method how company were paid.

Mr Sumption, again and again, I don't want -- I'm sorry that I'm a little bit maybe not correctly in my voice. Mr Sumption, I want just to stress again and again, I wasn't responsible at all how Abramovich managed the company, how he generate profit, how he organised the payment. I just -- it was my clear understanding that we share 50/50 and if Abramovich paid this enormous amount of money through the company to me -- no doubts, believe me, Abramovich is not a person who doesn't care about himself -- it means that Abramovich got the same, at least the same amount of money if just because -- belongs to me.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: How are the payments characterised in the accounts, or don't you know? The payments to you or at your direction.

A. I don't know how it was characterised. I am sure that Abramovich did not show that it's dividends because it was not dividends definitely. Dividends --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: It would have been expensed, would it? Or you're speculating?

A. I don't know.

MR SUMPTION: Mr Abramovich was paying you these sums in excess of the profits of Sibneft because that is what you were demanding for your political services in Russia; is that right?

A. Mr Sumption, I provide my political service in Russia not for Sibneft; I provide my political service in Russia for all Russian businessmen without any exception. When I went as deputy secretary of security counsel trying to stop the war in Chechnya, I understand well that if I will do that, it capitalise the country, not only Sibneft. I never have done any exception for Sibneft being on the position of serving State.

- Q. The first year in which Sibneft made profits greater than the amount that you and Badri received was 1999, and the same was true in 2000. Do you accept that?
- A. I don't know, because I didn't see the numbers of Sibneft generally.
- Q. Well, let's look at the picture in 2000. The audited accounts for 2000 -- you can take this from me -- showed a profit in that year of $675 million.
- A. Just a second. Could you refer to the --
- Q. Do you want to put that away? You're very welcome to. That's Mr Shvidler's statement: you can put that away.
- A. And the other bundle which you...?
- Q. I want to look at the picture in 2000. I'm not going to show you another set of accounts because I imagine your answer will be the same: you don't know. But let me tell you that the audited financial statements of Sibneft in 2000 showed a profit of $675 million, by far the largest that the company had ever made. And the dividend for the first time was declared in that year, which was paid in November 2000, of $50 million.

A. November 2000?

Q. Now, I want to ask you, against that background, about your receipts in 2000.

What I suggest is that in 2000 your demands considerably increased. Would you accept that?

A. Mr Sumption, again -- Mr Sumption, don't put me in front of my Lady as a person who just repeating and repeating the same point that I was not aware in my own how it was paid and so in position that I create impression in front of my Lady that I just was pushed out. It's true because we -- Mr Sumption give me the same and the same question and I understand now the reason: because he want to produce impression that I don't want to answer to this question. But the question is the same, nothing new.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Well, I know you disagree that you were demanding money.

A. Definitely.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: You say you were entitled to your share.

A. Absolutely correct.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So don't let's get hung up on the use of his word "demand". But he's putting to you now the position in relation to 2000 and I'm going to allow him to ask that question.

A. Yes, yes.

MR SUMPTION: Do you accept that in the course of 2000, your demands for money increased?

A. I don't accept "demands".

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, let's use a neutral word: "request".

A. No, it was -- again, my Lady, it was not a request; it was obligation of Abramovich to share with me.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes I know you say that. We're just now looking at the amounts you get paid and how -- the money doesn't come to you automatically; you generate some sort of request for payment, presumably?

A. Yes, I just -- mainly the way was as I described before. I told Badri, "Badri, we need that and that", for reason of ORT or for reason of charity or for personal reason to buy jewellery to Elena, yes? And Badri calculate with Roman what is opportunity to pay or not. That's it.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: What Mr Sumption is asking you about is how your need for money in 2000 was dealt with, okay? He's using the word "demand" but I appreciate that you dispute that, so I'm suggesting perhaps a more neutral word, but you don't like "request" either. So let's address the question on the basis that Mr Sumption is asking you about how your need for funding was satisfied in 2000.

A. No, 2000, first of all, 2000 was the year when I left Russia.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

A. And I left Russia in October 2000. And as now Mr Sumption present that the first dividends were paid when I already left Russia, is it correct, in November 2000?

MR SUMPTION: No, I'm asking you about the --

A. No, no, no, just to clear --

Q. I'm asking you about the entire year, not just after but before you left Russia.

A. As I can recollect, that time when we start to be squeezed Roman stopped to pay at all and it was one of the points which Badri later on discussed with him. I don't remember at which time Roman stopped to pay us dividends already but it's simple to understand when it's happened. And again, I don't remember how much money we got in 2000 altogether.

Is it the answer to the question, my Lady, or not?

Q. Do you agree --

A. Is it the answer --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, no, thank you, you've answered my question. I'm saying just deal with the questions that are being put by Mr Sumption on the basis that I understand that you dispute the word "demand" every time he puts it to you.

A. Correct. Correct.

MR SUMPTION: Do you agree that your desires for money in 2000 increased by comparison with earlier years?

A. I can't say that because as far as 2000, the beginning, as I understand, was election campaign of president and we agreed with Abramovich to pay 25, 25, altogether 50 million, to support this campaign. Definitely ORT in election campaign need more money than in regular days, it's true, but it's happened already in March 2000, Putin was elected. And I don't see that at that time we need more money than before, in spite of I decide to move to France at that time and definitely start to think what happened then.

And then, as you know, we had a meeting with Mr Abramovich in Le Bourget, it was exactly 2000, in December, and nothing happened unusual during this meeting. I did not tell, "Roman, now I immediately need more money"; I just told that we have new situation now and we need to calculate how much we're able to obtain through our business in Sibneft. That's it.

Q. Well, let me give you an example in which you were personally involved. At the Dorchester Hotel meeting in March, Mr Deripaska pressed you for repayment of a loan of $16 million that he had made to you. Do you remember that?

- A. I remember that perfectly. And first of all, it was not 16 and 13, and I want you try to ask your assistant to give you exact number: it was $13 million. Deripaska did not press me, it's not correct --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Sorry, 13 million or 30?

- A. 1-3. Not 1-6, 1-3, yes?

MR SUMPTION: You say it was 13. Do you agree that Mr Deripaska pressed you for its repayment?

- A. No, again, I continue to answer. Give me, please, opportunity to answer. I remember your question.

And Deripaska never press me and Deripaska just remind that I have this debt and I was very surprised, and I remember, because I thought that it's already repaid because Badri knew about that debt and that debt, as I understand, based on some collateral which were given to Deripaska, I don't remember which one. And it was just -- when Deripaska remind me that, I really -- my first reaction was that it surprised me because I thought it's already paid because I have done this debt in 1997 I think, like that, and I had obligation to pay him not for long term, yes?

And I just said Roman, who present at the same meeting in Dorchester Hotel, to pay this debt if we have money and I know well that already months later or a little bit -- around that time the debt was returned to Deripaska.

- Q. Exactly, Mr Berezovsky. You were presented with Mr Deripaska asking for his debt to be repaid and you immediately returned to Mr Abramovich and said, "Please pay him"?
- A. It's correct.
- Q. Right. And that was how the system worked: you identified a need of yours, you turned to Mr Abramovich --
- A. Absolutely.
- Q. -- and you said, "Please pay this debt"?
- A. Yes, and Abramovich said, "Boris, we have money to pay". It's correct.
- Q. He paid it for you, didn't it?
- A. Not he paid for me. He paid my money to him because I thought that's already paid. And when Deripaska said that it was not paid, I said it's wrong, because I didn't ask before. And as far as we had money, Abramovich paid next month. What is wrong with that?
- Q. In the autumn of 2000, when you had fallen out with Mr Putin but before you had left Russia, you got Mr Patarkatsishvili to ask Mr Abramovich for what you called a financial cushion?

A. Financial...?

Q. You asked for a large additional payment because you thought you might have to leave Russia?

A. Mr Sumption, it's absolutely speculation. Believe me that at that time I still trust that Abramovich is proper partner and money which we were able to have as a profit of Sibneft and the company connected to Sibneft was more than enough to stay for thousand years in London, not thinking how to pay -- how to obtain this money.

It's absolutely incorrect to say that I had so-called -- there was a pillow -- a cushion, I'm sorry, to be sure that I able to stay in London or abroad. It's absolutely wrong. Pillow I need for the other purpose: to sleep well, that's it.

Q. Mr Patarkatsishvili negotiated on your behalf and his own an additional payment of $305 million to be paid by the end of the year, didn't he?

A. If you refer to -- if you refer to Courcheval -- if you refer to Le Bourget, Le Bourget discussion is completely wrong. It's just obligation of Roman Abramovich, who didn't cover still his obligation to pay us profit generated Sibneft at that time, I think; Sibneft or Rusal, I don't remember. It was not special request of

Again and again I want to stress you: at that time, in my mind, Abramovich was proper partner. It means that I was able to -- not to ask a special help, exception.

Q. Whatever the reason for paying it, the payment of that sum was specifically negotiated by Mr Patarkatsishvili on his and your behalf with Mr Abramovich, wasn't it?

A. It's completely wrong. We discuss in Le Bourget the obligation of Abramovich to pay our profit of Sibneft, nothing more.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, the next document I want to refer to is a spreadsheet which is only really easily consulted actually on the screen using the Excel software.

I wonder if Mr Berezovsky could have the assistance of somebody who can operate the Excel system for him.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, certainly.

MR SUMPTION: Now, this is a document, Mr Berezovsky, which is referred to in my client's evidence as the "bolshoi" balance, the big balance.

A. It's reference of whom?

Q. What?

A. Reference of whom? Who has done that?

Q. This is a document that was prepared by accounting staff, supervised by Ms Panchenko on the instructions of Mr Shvidler. One of these documents was produced, although not necessarily in exactly the same form, each year from 1999 onwards but we do not have the corresponding spreadsheet for 1999. Now, that's what it is.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Can you give me the reference?

MR SUMPTION: The reference in the bundle is H(A)40 --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: H(A), not RA?

MR SUMPTION: No, H(A)40 2000 BB.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Will I get the Excel spreadsheet if I do that or do I have to get the one that's on the screen?

MR SUMPTION: I think it's not accessed through the Magnum system, it's accessed directly through -- on your Ladyship's desktop you will find an "Excel spreadsheets" folder.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I have that.

MR SUMPTION: If your Ladyship clicks on that, you will come up with the --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, thank you.

MR SUMPTION: At the bottom of the screen, could you please click on the tab which says "2000 total cash incl monthly". Would you go to the extreme left, so using the sliding bar, you will see that there are various sections. Can we go right up to the top as well, please.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just a second, Mr Sumption, I'm going to need a more specific reference in "Excel spreadsheets".

MR SUMPTION: Does your Ladyship have the spreadsheet open?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, I'm being told I can't access it. Could somebody give me the actual --

MR SUMPTION: Somebody, I think, is volunteering to assist.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you very much. I've gone into the Excel spreadsheet file but I think it's important I have it up. (Pause)

Right, Mr Sumption, I'm there.

MR SUMPTION: Right. Now, your Ladyship has clicked on the tab "2000 total cash incl monthly".

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR SUMPTION: The first two sections of this table show cash flows through Sibneft which is coded "BS" and aluminium assets which is coded "BAL". Now, those aren't profits, they're gross cash flows, positive and negative. Now, if on the same table you go down right to the bottom end, the last three sections, you'll see that the last section is headed "ORT" and the two previous ones are headed "PRB" and "PRBR".

A. Just a second. "ORT", could you find me that?

Q. All right?

A. ORT, yes.

Q. Now, the "PRB" section shows month by month the amounts paid to you and entities associated with you and the "PRBR" section gives the corresponding information about Mr Patarkatsishvili.

A. P -- thank you. Yes.

Q. Do you see the "PRB" section --

A. Yes.

Q. -- which starts at line 84 and then the "PRBR" section, which is Mr Patarkatsishvili, which starts at line 89. I see in the Russian version there may be a different... Can you see that there are "PRB" totals month by month?

A. Yes.

Q. And "PRBR" totals month by month?

A. Yes, I see.

Q. Now, if you slide to the right-hand end of that table, you'll see the totals and they should show that you received $461.3 million in 2000 and that Mr Patarkatsishvili received $28.8 million in the same period?

A. Yes.

Q. In round figures, a total of 490 million between you?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you accept that you received $490 million between you and Mr Patarkatsishvili in the year 2000?

- A. It means -- the question is that is it correct to say that this money belonged to us together, correct?
- Q. I'm asking you whether you received it, between you and Mr Patarkatsishvili.
- A. I accept that the number which is written here, which is written here, is written by the commercial department for Abramovich. I can't accept that because I didn't check that but let's suppose that it's correct number, and it means that Badri and me together, we got this number and some 460 written to my name and 25 -- 28 written to Badri name. I accept that.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, can I just finish this document before your Ladyship breaks?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, certainly. Do.

MR SUMPTION: Now, if you would click on the tab at the bottom labelled "FOM", which stands for Fomichev, your financial manager, you'll see the same figure of 490 million has been broken down?

A. Mm-hm.

Q. Under the "PRB" section, the one that relates to you, you'll see that payments -- there's a heading for cash payments in rubles, then payments to various third parties, like Camros, TWC, Metrascop, et cetera, and then cash payments in dollars out, "Cash out" at the bottom of that section, do you see?

A. Yes.

Q. Then there's a heading "Set off against Al", set off against aluminium --

A. Yes.

Q. -- and if you look against "May" you will see that that is Mr Abramovich paying the 16.271 million due to Mr Deripaska in accordance with your request, shall we call it, at the Dorchester Hotel meeting?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, if you look at the monthly breakdown, which we'll need you to look at as it slides across, you'll see that there is a very large increase in the scale of payments being made to you from October onwards. Look at the monthly totals and you'll see that in the last three months of the year, there's a very considerable increase in the amounts that you receive.

A. Okay.

Q. That is because it was in October of that year or thereabouts that Mr Patarkatsishvili negotiated the additional payment of 305 million with Mr Abramovich. Do you agree?

A. No, I don't agree. I agree only what we discuss in Le Bourget and it's absolutely clear, we didn't ask any additional payment. It means that it was what Abramovich should cover as our profit generated the company, nothing more. No one discussion to pay something because we have political difficulties. Again, my Lady, I want to stress, we have absolutely enough from our business in Sibneft and Rusal, nothing more. I never ask Abramovich and I don't remember that Badri ask him to pay something additional because we left Russia.

- Q. Well, Mr Abramovich's evidence is that it was because you were about to leave Russia, but never mind what it was for, he negotiated an additional payment of that amount, didn't he?
- A. I remember only his negotiation in Le Bourget. It was clear figure which were paid as our profit from Sibneft and Rusal, nothing more.
- Q. Do you see there's a heading "Tiberius, Pennand", which is where most of the additional payments are going to in the last three months of the year. On the right-hand side you'll see that -- it's line 8 in the version I've got. Do you see Tiberius, Pennand received a total of $237 million?
- A. Yes.
- Q. Now, Pennand was a company owned by you, wasn't it?
- A. Again, I don't remember. I can't exclude that at all.
- Q. Well, Pennand Inc was a company owned by you which had been set up for you in October, hadn't it, by an asset manager called Valmet?

A. I remember just that Valmet, with Valmet, we start to discuss but it's happened at the beginning of 2000, correct, we start to discuss the structure to make transparent our participation in Sibneft and Rusal assets, and I can't exclude that the Valmet, it's Mr --

Q. Samuelson.

A. No, no, Mr -- who owned -- Valmet it's not Mr -- Samuelson, yes. Mr Samuelson.

Q. Valmet was run by Mr Samuelson.

A. It's Mr Samuelson who we asked to create the structures.

Q. Valmet set up two trusts for you and Mr Patarkatsishvili in October?

A. Correct.

Q. One was -- well, two trust companies.

A. Yes.

Q. One was Pennand Inc which was your company and the other was Tiberius Limited, a Gibraltarian company, which was Mr Patarkatsishvili's company?

A. It could be.

Q. Both of those companies opened accounts in October 2000 with the Abu Dhabi Commercial Bank, didn't they?

A. I can't exclude that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Choose your moment, Mr Sumption, won't you?

MR SUMPTION: Those accounts were specifically opened in order to receive the $305 million promised by Mr Abramovich to Mr Patarkatsishvili in about October. Do you agree with that?

A. I don't remember that at all. I remember correctly the meeting in Le Bourget and they discussed the amount, 300, exactly, 305 million which is a payment for our profit -- as our profit from Sibneft and Rusal. This is correct and it's absolutely clear from our conversation in Le Bourget that this debt of Abramovich, not our demand, not our request, it's debt of Mr Abramovich to pay us. That's it.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, that would be a convenient moment.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well. I'll sit again at 2.05.

(1.05 pm)

(The short adjournment)

(2.05 pm)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, Mr Sumption.

MR SUMPTION: Mr Berezovsky, the spreadsheet we've been looking at showed that between you, you and Mr Patarkatsishvili received about $490 million in the year 2000. Now, is it really your suggestion that that amount represented Sibneft profits?

A. My suggestion is that it present Sibneft profit and I think Rusal as well, because Rusal, as I understand, also start generate money and it's the reason why the number could be increased. Again, I don't know details how it was organised. But what is clear from Le Bourget meeting that Rusal discussed as well that it was not payment just, when they discussed $350 million and so, it was not just payment for Sibneft profit generated but at the time Rusal as well.

It means that the increasing of amount of money after we marriage(?) with the other company, Deripaska SibAl, after we obtained, after we bought the aluminium assets, it could be increasing of amount of money which we got.

- Q. Well, the reference to Rusal, I mean, first of all, Rusal had not actually been incorporated yet; it was incorporated three weeks after the Le Bourget meeting, on Christmas Day 2000, wasn't it?
- A. Formally, yes. But as you clear -- I would like to stress -- clear understand from the discussion in Le Bourget, it's under discussion also the amount of money which should be paid by Rusal because the company which -- aluminium company which we include in Rusal never stop to operate and never stop to generate money. It means that in spite of the -- and moreover, even if Rusal was fixed a little bit later, we already had assets, our assets, which belonged to our group, and these assets definitely generate money itself.

- Q. The point is this, isn't it, Mr Berezovsky: that when Mr Abramovich agreed with Mr Patarkatsishvili the payment of the extra $305 million, he told him that $30 million of that would have to come from his aluminium assets? That's right, isn't it?
- A. You mean from whom, Abramovich assets? It's wrong. It's our assets which belong us together and it just comes from what I told you: that Rusal already start to generate money and explanation of Abramovich was this part came from Sibneft profit and this part came from Rusal profit. It means that my guess that Rusal start to already generate money and we already start to get this money is absolutely correct.
- Q. Would you please take bundle R(F)4/281. Sorry, I said 281; in fact I'd like you to turn to -- yes, R(F)4/28/1, right at the beginning of the bundle.
- A. I'm sorry, I don't have that.
- Q. You're about to be passed it. I'm giving the page reference for the benefit of those who are helping you from behind.
- A. Thank you very much.
- Q. Now, what you are looking at, if you have got the first page open, is the report on your tax affairs which was commissioned by you from Pricewaterhouse in order to show to the United Kingdom Inland Revenue, right?

A. Yes.

Q. I'd like you to turn there to page 131 in the bundle numbering on the bottom left RF4/28/131.

Q. 131 in the numbering that appears on the bottom left.

A. Yes.

Q. Okay?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, this is a report which was compiled from information provided by you and your staff, wasn't it?

A. Personally I just had, I think, one or two times meeting with represent of Pricewaterhouse. When I came -- start to base in United Kingdom, definitely I was looking -- I tried to understand the tax policy here and that's reason why I met them. I never discussed with them details; I just explain him -- explain the company, which kind of assets I own and what is the situation there. That's it.

I never have seen this report. It doesn't mean that we are not able to discuss it, definitely we will discuss, but just inform you that I gave absolutely truthful statement to Pricewaterhouse about the sources of my money.

Q. The person who was involved in greatest detail with the preparation of this report on your side was Mr Fomichev, was it not?

A. Fomichev, at the beginning he was the person who mainly was involved in all my financial, let's say, activities or financial understanding. Just later on Natalia Nosova came to London and changed him this position. But it depends what time we are discussing now.

Q. Well now, would you look at paragraph 15.3.

A. Just a second. May I put you question? When it was done?

Q. When was this report done?

A. Yes.

Q. This report was prepared -- I think it was finalised in 2010.

A. 2010, it means --

Q. So clearly finalised some time after you broke up with Mr Fomichev.

A. No, it means that I think that mainly who know much better about that, it's Natalia Nosova; because, as I told you, my financial activity here, Natalia Nosova took step by step in her hands just, I think, 2003/2004 she already mainly start to operate.

As far as Ruslan Fomichev, I broke my relations with him much earlier than 2010.

Q. Yes. Now, would you look at paragraph 15.3, please.

A. 15.3. Just a second.

Q. "PE" --

A. Just a second. 15...?

Q. 15.3.

A. Sorry.

Q. It's on the page that I was showing you.

A. Yes. Yes, I've got it.

Q. Now, PE is -- that's you, isn't it? It stands for "Platon Elenin", which was your alias?

A. Yes, it's true, I took the other name here.
Platon Elenin, it's correct.

Q. "PE's share of profits in Sibneft were paid to vehicles controlled by him through a vehicle associated with RA, Runicom Limited, in the form of loans or promissory notes. Payments were made in this form in order to disguise PE's interests and for Russian tax purposes."

The route is then discussed. The paragraph goes on:

"Profits were paid to PE entities associated with PE until 1999, when PE and BP..."

That's Badri.

"... established a vehicle to invest in France, Comodo Ltd, a company registered in the Cayman Islands."

Now, that's not strictly right, is it, because it was in 1997 that Comodo was --

A. I don't remember, sorry. I don't remember that.

Q. The sentence which follows says this:

"Payments of 100 [million francs] and £4.35 [million] were made between October 1997 and June 1999. We are not aware that any further profits of Sibneft were paid to PE or to BB until the disposal of promissory notes described below."

A. Yes.

Q. Now, the reference to "the promissory notes described below" is to the promissory notes referred to at paragraph 5.15 over the page.

A. Mm-hm.

Q. Could you look at that, please.

A. Yes.

Q. That deals with the payments made to Tiberius and Pennand in 2000 that we've already discussed.

A. Yes.

Q. Okay?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, your accountants, therefore, are telling the Inland Revenue that the only Sibneft profits that you have received were the payment to France, in fact we know that that was in 1997, that was the 100 million francs and £4.35 million, and the Tiberius/Pennand payments in late 2000.

A. Mm-hm.

- Q. That's what they're saying.
- A. Yes.
- Q. And was that true?
- A. I don't know. I don't know. It's my financial adviser who absolutely professional, I mean Natalia Nosova, and I think that the Pricewaterhouse is also absolutely professional company. I have nothing to hide, I'm absolutely open, and I don't know at which stage is that and what is going now. At least at nowadays I don't have any problem with tax. I never tried to hide something and we know the result: I am still free, I am not in prison, they trust what we are presenting them. I don't have any notes that we made something wrong.
- Q. Mr Berezovsky, I'm not trying to suggest that you have deceived the taxman; I'm interested in matters that are relevant to this dispute. What I'm asking you to comment on is the fact that your accountants have said that the only Sibneft profits that you received were the payments of 100 million francs and £4.35 million, which were the payments made in 1997 for your property in France, and the payments made in 2000 to Tiberius and Pennand.
- A. Mr Sumption, I just want to repeat again: I am not able to comment what present my financial officers. I just want to tell that I'm sure that they're completely professional and I don't know this presentation, why it's happened in this way. I don't think that they made any mistakes. I think that they continue in cooperation with Pricewaterhouse and until now we don't have any problem with that.

When you put me exact extract and try to -- and asking me to comment the relation with Pricewaterhouse and was I correct or not, impossible to comment in this way. I just present you my clear understanding what I know, and my knowledge is you calculate this -- show these numbers which we have seen all together and it's clear that -- I think that that number is more or less correct because you said this confirmed even by my lawyers, but I don't have explanation of that.

And it's impossible to say if it's written here, one of that is wrong. I don't think so. Moreover, I am sure that they're professional.

Q. Now, a third element of the agreement that you say was made in 1995 was that you say that it was agreed that any future business which any of the parties -- any of the three of you -- might have were also to be shared in some proportions.

A. Not in some proportions; in the same proportions.

Q. Okay. Let's look at what you say in the pleadings. Can you please be given bundle A1.

- A. Can I return back this?
- Q. What have you got in front of you?
- A. Yes. I can --
- Q. What is it?
- A. It is --
- Q. You can put the tax report away.
- A. Yes.
- Q. Yes, absolutely.
- A. Thank you.
- Q. If you've got bundle A1 and would care to turn to flag 2 at page 3 A1/02/3 --
- A. It's my --
- Q. -- you'll see what this document is: it's the re-amended particulars of claim, the current version. Okay?
- A. I'm sorry, Mr Sumption, I need to understand what is that. This is particulars of claim made when?
- Q. This is the one that is up to date now. It was made on various dates with various amendments over a considerable period of time. But this is what we are given now to show what your present case is, okay?
- A. No, no, I understand. I just ask when this particulars of claim was signed -- when it was signed and who signed --
- Q. In this particular form it was in July of this year and that is when you appear to have signed it; see page 34.

But in fact parts of it have appeared in earlier versions.

A. Yes, I see. I see. Yes, okay.

Q. Now, would you please turn to paragraph C34, which is on page 11 A1/02/11.

A. Yes.

Q. Okay? Now, this is where you say what the terms of the 1995 agreements were --

A. Yes.

Q. -- and I've already cross-examined you about items 1 and it. I now want to look at item 3, where you say it was also agreed in 1995 that:

"... any future business... they acquired, whether or not related to Sibneft, would be shared between them in the following proportions..."

50% Abramovich, 50% Berezovsky, 50%

Patarkatsishvili.

A. Yes.

Q. Do you see -- sorry, 50% between Berezovsky --

A. Between Badri and me, yes.

Q. Yes, okay.

Now, is that account of what was agreed in 1995 correct according to your evidence?

A. Yes, it's correct.

Q. I see. Just leave that open, would you, and take your witness statement, paragraph 104. It's on page 218 of the bundle D2/17/218.

A. Just a second. My witness statement, yes.

Q. Right?

A. Yes.

Q. What you say here is:

"During the discussions..."

And this is also about the 1995 agreement.

A. Yes.

Q. "During the discussions with Mr Abramovich, we also agreed that there would be a right for each side to share in future business ventures in the same manner: 50% Badri and me, and 50% Mr Abramovich. I proposed this condition so as to avoid potential conflicts of interest that might otherwise have produced counter-productive tensions... The idea was not to create an obligation to invest. Rather, if either side identified a new business opportunity it should be offered to the others and each side, Mr Abramovich or Badri and I, would have a right of first refusal to take part in the venture on the same 50:50 basis on which we were partners in Sibneft."

A. It's correct.

Q. Well, you have described two things which are correct which are different. In your pleading you say that the agreement was that future businesses, whether or not related to Sibneft, would be shared 50/25/25 --

A. Just a second --

Q. -- and in your witness statement you say that this was simply a right of first refusal. Which is correct?

A. I think that according to my understanding, and that understanding never changed, the correct is, let's say -- okay, may I give you example to understand better, if you want to understand, yes?

As far as Badri is concerned, we have difference exactly, it was one point what was different with Badri: with Badri also share 50/50, yes, 25/25? But we agreed that we invest together, it does not matter what happened, all the time. We -- I didn't have obligation to propose Badri the first refusal right, yes? We -- Badri operate and we just have several exception, I would like to stress, when it was not like that.

As far as Abramovich is concerned, it's absolutely correct that it was a right to refusal. It means that any business which I think could be opportunity, I must to propose Abramovich and Abramovich can right to refuse that. And the best example is Rusal. Rusal we propose Abramovich, he told me, "I need to think about that", and after a short time, a week or less, he returned and said, "Boris, we like this business, we go together".

This is the description what was reality, how it works.

On the other hand, as far as, for example, mass media opportunity, I propose Abramovich to participate even from the beginning, to share even ORT together, and Abramovich refuse that. Okay, it's his right. It's his position. It means that I just describe how I understand it works.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, as I understand it from the further information that was served on us, what you say at paragraph C34 is the gist of the words used when you made this oral agreement in 1995.

A. May I read? It's C32; correct?

Q. No, it's 34.

A. C34?

Q. C34.

A. Just a second.

Q. I understand your case to be that this was the gist of the words used.

A. Okay. May I read, yes?

Q. Yes.

A. Thank you. (Pause)

Okay, Mr Sumption --

Q. Could the interpreter also help by giving you the Russian equivalent of "the gist of the words used", just so that there's no room for confusion about that.

A. May I tell: I didn't have any knowledge about what is written here as a law. I just understood absolutely precisely that this is important part of our agreement, that I -- if we don't want -- if we want to be guaranteed that no one partner damage the other partner, it will be organised like that because it's common understanding for all businessmen. If you create new business, you are not allowed your partner to go out and if we -- until we able to agree that if we create new opportunity, you may share that and you have first right of refusal.

But how it's formulated in Russian law, I didn't know at all that time.

Q. I'm not asking you about Russian law or any law. I'm asking you for your recollection of what was agreed orally between you and the other two in 1995.

A. I --

Q. Let me finish.

A. Sorry.

Q. Was 34(3) the gist of the words that were used when you had this conversation with the other two in 1995?

A. I may tell what I recollect, what conversation connecting to this point, exactly what I recollect: that we agreed that if we will get one of the sides decide to invest to some new opportunity, the side who decide to invest should make proposal to the other side as a first right -- as a first right hand to participate in that; and if the other side will decide not to participate, I am free to make proposal to some other one.

It means that our agreement does not have obligation of the other side to invest in any case. That's it. This is the sense of our agreement. As I told you, we very precisely -- I mean Badri and me -- follow this agreement.

Q. That's not what you said in paragraph C34(3), was it? It doesn't say anything about right of first refusal, no obligation to invest.

A. Sorry, again, Mr Sumption --

Q. You're saying this is a partnership.

A. No, no. Just a second, Mr Sumption. Let's -- about terminology, let's discuss about terminology. Now I describe you the sense.

The sense, I never changed my mind where the sense is concerned. The sense is absolutely clear. I have obligation in front of me, Badri and me, we have obligation in front of me for Abramovich and Mr Abramovich had same obligation in front of us.

If we had any proposal to invest, we should first of all to go to Mr Abramovich, say, "Mr Abramovich, we got this opportunity and we propose you to join to us at the same condition", because the terms and conditions of cooperation we agreed before, 50/50 everything; and if Mr Abramovich accept our proposal, we invest together through our dividends or through our profit generated everything connected to Sibneft.

That's it. This is my understanding.

- Q. Now, in 1995, when you claim to have entered into this agreement, you have told us that you regarded Mr Abramovich as a minor oil trader with no real business track record. That was your view of Mr Abramovich in 1995, wasn't it?
- A. Yes, Abramovich didn't have any powerful name in oil trade or special and I told you that the main reason why I accept to cooperate with Abramovich, because I was surprised how he is perfect in cooperation with very complicated people. My impression was about his cooperation with Mr Gorodilov Viktor, that's it, because I knew this person, I knew how complicated he is, and I was surprised that Abramovich, being so young, create so fundamental relations with this gentleman.
- Q. Are you seriously trying to say that Mr Abramovich in 1995 was given an absolute right to have 50 per cent of any future business opportunity that might come your or Badri's way? Is that your evidence?
- A. It's absolutely correct. Everything what's generated by Sibneft profit. And, as I told you already and I gave my witness statement, that everybody round me, Badri first of all, Natalie Nosova, who is sitting, and my wife Elena, everybody was surprised that I, from the first, from the very short knowledge of Abramovich, proposed him -- proposed that. Because Badri proposed different. I want to stress, Mr Sumption, that it was my proposal, not Abramovich proposal. It was my proposal. Because Badri proposal was to share one-third, one-third, one-third, and it's also -- it also looks like absolutely perfect.

But understanding that it's a great business, understanding that Abramovich produced to me great impression and I think that it's absolutely -- if I want to build long-term relations with this person, I am not greedy; 25 per cent of Sibneft is more than enough. And it's the reason why I took this decision.

Moreover, Mr Sumption, I tell you a little bit later Abramovich learn a little bit about my way of making business and if you remember, when we made marriage, my Lady, with Deripaska and he came with -- I forgot the name -- SibAl company, he had just -- his assets were just half of assets which we bought from -- company was our aluminium assets which we just recently bought, and Abramovich came to us already with proposal to give Deripaska 50 per cent and I was surprised why he said 50 per cent Deripaska if he has just half what we have. And Abramovich explained exactly, like I explained long time ago to him, that if we want to have proper partner which will be happy, which never trick you, you should pay respect to him. And it's exactly what I was doing at that time.

Again, Mr Sumption, you're absolutely correct, it surprised everybody around me. But I think that if we create so strategic important business, if Abramovich take opportunity to manage them, he should pay respect me forever and it's the reason why I was so, so shocked when I recognised that he had tricked me.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Mr Berezovsky, I'm going to cut you off a bit because you're going on a bit.

THE WITNESS: So sorry, my Lady.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Could I just ask you this: when you say in your witness statement at paragraph 104?

A. 1...?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Paragraph 104 of your witness statement --

A. Just a second.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: -- which Mr Sumption has just been asking you about.

A. Yes. Yes, yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: What were the terms of the right of first refusal? Was there an agreement that if you wanted to go into the new venture, you had to put up 50 per cent of the capital for it as well?

A. Yes, absolutely. It means that we should put --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Match the capital that the other party was putting in?

A. Absolutely correct. Absolutely correct.

MR SUMPTION: Was that actually agreed? Do you say that was agreed?

A. Absolutely correct. It was agreed that we invest 50/50, definitely.

MR SUMPTION: Right. So that's something we should add to your witness statement, is it?

A. Thank you very much, but it was absolutely clear because we share the profit 50/50 and if we go to new business we should share 50/50 our investment.

Q. Now, Mr Berezovsky, if you are right about this, it would mean that you would be a minority holder or might be a minority holder of any future business enterprise that you might decide upon. Do you follow me?

A. I don't understand why.

Q. Okay. Let me explain. According to you, Mr Abramovich had a right to a 50 per cent participation, if he wanted to take it up, in any future business opportunity that you or Badri might identify.

- A. 50 -- whatever we obtain together, it's correct.
- Q. Right. Now, that meant, if he said, "Yes, I'll take that up", that you, Mr Berezovsky, would only have 25 per cent?
- A. 25 per cent me, 25 per cent Badri and 50 per cent Abramovich: the same conditions like we agreed as far as Sibneft is concerned. It's correct.
- Q. So you say that you were agreeing to give Mr Abramovich an absolute right to 50 per cent of any business opportunity that you might subsequently light upon and to reduce your own holding to 25 per cent?
- A. Why my own holding? I said that we and Badri one part, Abramovich is the other part, and we go at the same proportions as we go to Sibneft. Why I should reduce that? I don't understand. Where's the logic?
- Q. But what you say about your partnership with Badri was that you each had half. So effectively you were agreeing that you, personally, would only have 25 per cent of your own future business opportunities; that's what you're saying.
- A. Yes, it's correct. Together with Badri we have 50.
- Q. And indeed it must have been obvious to you that Badri, like you, was mortal and might die?
- A. I don't want to return to this point. You're absolutely correct but we discussed in absolutely opposite way with Badri. Badri was ten years younger than me and one day -- and it's happened already in this country, after Litvinenko, Alexander Litvinenko was poisoned and died, he was my close friend, and I start maybe the first time to think that I could maybe also be, let's say, seriously damaged. It was not the first -- it was plot here to kill me, not Litvinenko and it was officially registered by British intelligence service and announced publicly, but nevertheless I didn't think that it's so close. When Litvinenko died, I realised it's really very close.

And I told to Badri, "Badri, look, I have a lot of wishes", and I told Badri, "Badri, look, if I die, that, that and that". I understand the formality, a lot of issues, but it's necessary not only to write; it's necessary to act. And when I start to discuss with him, Badri told me, "Boris, stop, stop, stop, but I will die first", because I have so big family and so many children that Badri refused the idea that he stay alone in front of my problems.

It means that you're absolutely correct, Mr Sumption, that I should think about that, but I did not think so much about that.

Q. I thought the effect of the answer that you've just given was that you must have done because you feared that you were going to be killed?

A. Mr Sumption, I gave you answer. My way of understanding my life and understanding the dangers which I am, unfortunately it's too much, it's true. But believe me that I did not calculate in terms that Abramovich will die and they finish the story and what happened then, because I thought that Abramovich in many case is a truthful partner and he knows what problem I could face. It turned out that it's not, but at that time I didn't think about that.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, you couldn't possibly have agreed to give Mr Abramovich a share in any of your future businesses that was twice as large as yours?

A. No, Mr Sumption, moreover, I not only plan it from the very beginning; I even demonstrate that when I propose Abramovich to share ORT 50/50, the TV channel company. When Abramovich refused to participate in payment in ORT because I thought that it's clear that as far as it was the best argument in front of president that to obtain any business opportunity to funding ORT, and Abramovich refused that. It was his choice and I can't say anything.

Q. A large part of your reason, according to your evidence, for saying that 50 per cent of Sibneft should go to Abramovich was that he was actually going to be managing the company. Do you agree?

A. It was other reason, because my reason in front of Badri, I said, "Badri, they will manage the company, it means that they should pay also for management, they should be loyal partners for us because they manage, they may calculate like they are, and if you want Abramovich will be happy with that, we give him 50 per cent; the rest is enough for us".

Q. But as I understand it --

A. This is my philosophy.

Q. As I understand it, what you are now saying was agreed in relation to future ventures was that Mr Abramovich would be entitled to a 50 per cent interest even if he wasn't managing the future business opportunity.

A. You're absolutely correct, and what happened as a result exactly this story, when Abramovich insist to manage it himself, and months later he gave up it to Deripaska. It really surprised me.

Q. But if there were some future business opportunity that you or Badri had identified in which Mr Abramovich had no expertise and no experience and no interest and was not going to be managing, as I understand what you're saying, he was still going to get 50 per cent?

A. You're absolutely correct, and moreover I even didn't think about that at the time when I agreed to reduce the conflict of interest. We should share everything 50/50.

Q. This part of your evidence and pleading, Mr Berezovsky, has been invented by you in order to help you with the claim that we haven't yet come to, to Rusal, hasn't it?

A. I don't understand.

Q. You made it up --

A. Just a second.

Q. -- in order to help you to establish an interest in Rusal?

A. No, I just gave you example. I gave you example that it's happened when I got proposal to buy these aluminium assets, according of our agreement '95 with Abramovich, I came first of all -- definitely we discussed that -- with Badri and then we agreed that we go to Abramovich to propose him to participate in that.

Q. Now, I want, before coming on to your intimidation allegations, to deal with a number of relatively minor points.

First of all, you say in your witness statement that you told Mr Abramovich that you and Badri were in partnership on a 50/50 basis at some time in 1995.

A. Yes, from the very beginning when I return back from the cruise from the Caribbean and when I introduce them to each other, from the very beginning I -- moreover,

I think -- moreover, I don't remember well but I think that already being on the boat, I told -- I discussed with Abramovich how I close with Badri because it's well-known story, my relations with Badri.

Q. Mr Abramovich's evidence is that he could see by simple observation when he was introduced to Badri in March 1995 that he was a close business associate of yours, and that was confirmed over the following months and years, but he never knew what the terms of your arrangements with Badri were and had no reason to enquire. What do you say about that?

A. It's absolutely wrong. It's all wrong because my relations with Badri and my participation 50/50 in everything was common knowledge for business community and we were not -- and we were very visible in business community already at that time, I mean in '95, when I introduced directly Abramovich to Badri.

Moreover, I tell you my recollection now is that Abramovich knew well that Badri is my partner even when we had been on the boat because all people who present to me, Mr Abramovich -- I mean, Mr Aven, who invite us together, and first time when I met Mr Abramovich on the boat, Mr Fridman -- they knew well my relations with Badri.

Q. In the Chancery proceedings, Mr Berezovsky, your case is that you didn't become Badri's partner until August 1995. So you can't possibly have said that to Mr Abramovich right at the outset.

- A. We discuss the point how it's happened that we become partners with Badri. My partnership with Badri on the basis of 50/50 happened when we moved to ORT. And it's absolutely wrong to say that it's happened just on the late or middle '95 because ORT story was a special story when people who work in Logovaz split in two camps: those who want to go to ORT and those who refuse to buy ORT because it was too dangerous.

And Badri made a choice in my favour and it's the reason why I become -- I propose Badri to become my partner on the condition like Abramovich, because Badri didn't have a lot of assets at that time and a lot of shares in the company, and I split with him 50/50. It was always the same like with Abramovich, but long-term already agreed before with Badri.

- Q. Now, Mr Berezovsky, one of your other business partners, indeed possibly your closest business partner of all, was Mr Glushkov in the 1990s, wasn't it?
- A. Yes, it's correct. But, as you remember maybe, that in '92 Glushkov left Logovaz, giving me all his shares for nothing, and joined Avtovaz.
- Q. Yes. But you were a joint venture partner with Mr Glushkov in, for example, Andava in Switzerland, weren't you?

- A. What do you mean "joint venture"? We had absolutely clear structured Switzerland company with the shares in the company.
- Q. Yes, and you and Mr Glushkov were in that business together, weren't you?
- A. Yes, we have been together. It's correct.
- Q. When did you first tell Mr Glushkov that you were in a 50/50 partnership with Mr Patarkatsishvili?
- A. I don't remember that well. As I told you, Mr Glushkov made the other choice. Mr Glushkov decide to go to Avtovaz in '92 and after that my very close relations with Glushkov changed and, as you know, after that Glushkov never returned back to Logovaz. He made his personal choice in favour of Aeroflot and after Avtovaz he moved his activity to Aeroflot.
- Q. Andava was a company that you owned together with Mr Glushkov well after 1992, wasn't it?
- A. This company was created Glushkov and me and I don't remember, maybe some other parties, and this company was created to generate -- to find the funding on the west to create a common (inaudible) company, which I start to develop Andava, you're absolutely -- Ava, sorry. Ava. It's the reason why it's the name Andava. You're absolutely correct.

- Q. Now, Mr Glushkov tells us that he didn't learn about your arrangements with Mr Patarkatsishvili until after he came to England in 2006.
- A. It's exactly what I told. I don't remember how we discussed that with Mr Glushkov. It's the reason -- because he -- we split with him and he start to make his different business. And it could be that Glushkov didn't know that but Abramovich was informed about that because we planned to have joint business -- I mean Abramovich, Patarkatsishvili and me -- and Glushkov that time already left business which were owned -- which were managed together.
- Q. So it's not in fact correct, is it, to say that your relations with Mr Patarkatsishvili were well known? One of your closest friends and business partners, Mr Glushkov, didn't know until five years ago.
- A. Mr Sumption, it's absolutely perfect known fact in business community who, let's say, operate that time in -- maybe mainly in Moscow, yes? But I would like to stress you again that Mr Glushkov split with me and he was not more involved in business which I pay at least a little bit attention.

It means that Mr Glushkov generally is very special person, and you will definitely recognise that when you question Mr Glushkov. I don't know anyone in the world who, just for nothing, gave me, present me his shares when he left Logovaz, the company which we created together.

Q. No, he presented them to you -- I think you've got the date wrong, Mr Berezovsky. He presented you his shares in 1997 --

A. Yes, 1997.

Q. -- not when he left Logovaz in '92?

A. No, not when he left Logovaz, it's correct wording. After he left Logovaz, it's correct wording. But definitely he gave me his shares later.

But again, it's very special man, it's very special, incredibly truthful and you will see that. But it's absolutely true that I did meet Glushkov a lot after he left Logovaz and then it was his choice and he joined finally Aeroflot, in spite of he refused the first time proposal to become -- to took a position there, first deputy of general manager of Aeroflot.

Q. Right. Can I turn, please, to your political position in Russia in the last two or three years of the 1990s.

Now, I think it's your case that you were a man of very great political influence throughout the period '95 to 2000. That's right, isn't it? That's what you say.

A. Yes, that's what I say.

- Q. Now, there was, however, a time, wasn't there, during the premiership of Mr Primakov in 1998 and 1999, when you experienced some political difficulties?
- A. All the time I had a lot of political difficulties, not just in time of Primakov.
- Q. Mr Primakov was a former member of the Soviet Politburo, wasn't he, whose political views were very different from yours?
- A. Who was?
- Q. Mr Primakov.
- A. Yes, yes. Mr Primakov, former member of the Soviet Politburo. Is it true? I don't remember that he was member of Politburo. Maybe.
- Q. His political views were very different from yours, weren't they? You didn't see eye to eye with Mr Primakov, did you?
- A. Primakov is a member of Russian Academy -- of Soviet Union Academy of Science, and I also member of Russian Academy of Science, and I knew him well in Soviet time. And I met him not once, because this Academy of Science of Soviet Union was very, as you told, enclave organisation because it was just 800 selected people from all Soviet Union, the best scientists which were elected to Academy of Science of USSR, and I was one of them on the position of correspondent member. It means that it's less position than academic, and Mr Primakov was academic but I knew him well.

Q. Are you trying to suggest that you were friendly with Mr Primakov during 1998 and 1999?

A. You know, it could be funny but it's correct.

Q. Really?

A. Yes, because --

Q. What you say in your --

A. Just a second, may I tell you? Because it was -- I was one who discussed with President Yeltsin when we faced a crisis in '98, it was intersection of political crisis and economic crisis. Everybody knew that Primakov was left wing, that Primakov close to Communist, he already was not Communist but he close to Communist, and on the other hand we didn't have choice at that time because we should reduce political and economic crisis together at the same moment.

And I was the person, personally, I was the person who communicate to Primakov, who talk to Primakov, asking him to accept the proposal of president to become prime minister. As soon as he become prime minister, we become enemies. But what is important, that at that time I didn't understand that he immediately start to move left. On the other hand he was very helpful that time, Mr Sumption, because he was the person who solved the crisis.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: This was the financial crisis?

A. Financial and political crisis, because many people in Duma, in Parliament, were hate Yeltsin and they also -- they even tried to impeach him, yes? And Primakov was the person between Democrat and Communist, he was at that time very correct person, and it's the reason that I was not enemy with him. When he become to this position and fight against of business, then we become enemies; it's correct.

MR SUMPTION: By early 1999 you describe in your witness statement how you became one of Mr Primakov's main targets.

A. You're absolutely correct. As I told you, in short time we become enemies.

Q. Yes. And he got you dismissed as the CIS executive secretary?

A. You're absolutely correct.

Q. Now --

A. Not "he got"; he got president, he convinced president to dismiss.

Q. Okay. He got Boris Yeltsin to dismiss you?

A. Yes, correct.

Q. Now, as a result of your falling out with Mr Primakov, you found yourself at the receiving end of police raids and criminal investigations, did you not?

A. Yes, it's true. But, as I remember, criminal investigation as far as Aeroflot is concerned start even before Primakov took power.

Q. Yes. Well, they had been on and off, hadn't they, these investigations?

A. Yes, yes, many times. Putting off, then putting on; it's the same story.

Q. In January 1999, after you'd fallen out with Mr Primakov, the public prosecutor reopened the investigation into allegations that you and Mr Glushkov had defrauded Aeroflot?

A. Yes, it's correct.

Q. On 26 April, were you interviewed by a special investigator from the public prosecutor's office --

A. Yes.

Q. -- and charged with currency violations and money-laundering?

A. Yes, it's correct.

Q. 26 April 1999.

A. I don't remember exact the date which you said but I think it's correct.

Q. On 12 May 1999 Mr Primakov was dismissed as prime minister by President Yeltsin, wasn't he?

A. It's correct.

Q. It was widely reported at the time that you were a significant factor in the dismissal of Mr Primakov; is that correct?

A. It's absolutely correct.

Q. Is the position this: that on about 28 April, a day or two after you had been charged with currency violation and money-laundering, you went to see Mr Yumashev about it?

A. Not at all. And if you also -- if you really want to understand what happened, the same day when I was questioned by the general prosecutor office, I went out of the office and it was a lot of mass media, yes, and I made interview and I directly said that it's Primakov who try to squeeze business and so-so, like that. And when I returned back to my office in Logovaz Club, I got a call from former prime minister, Mr Chernomyrdin. He said, "Boris, are you free now?" I said, "Yes, I'm free". He said, "Could you come to meet Primakov", at that time prime minister, "because he disagree what you said in your interview".

And I jumped to the car. In half an hour I have been in White House and I -- there was Mr Chernomyrdin who were waiting for me and we together went to Primakov office and Primakov said that, "Boris, you are absolutely wrong, I never tried to convince general prosecutor to open the case and so-so". But I present him paper which was with me in my pocket, when he by hand wrote message to general prosecutor to open the case against of me, against of the company, okay? It was completely illegal because he didn't have power to influence to another branch of power what I said to him, and after that definitely we become absolutely enemies.

And I report definitely that to all my close circle, including Mr Yumashev, that Primakov doesn't pay attention even to the law, which we just tried to establish was the beginning, and it's one of the reasons and I'm happy that I was so influential to dismiss Primakov, to help dismiss Primakov at that time.

Q. Did you or did you not, at the end of April 1999, go to Mr Yumashev and try to persuade him to get the president to sack Primakov?

A. I can't exclude that.

Q. Well, you say you can't exclude it, but in your asylum application you positively asserted that you had done that.

A. Fantastic. It means that it's -- my asylum application was done long time, it means that I was absolutely correct that I -- I can't exclude, it means that I don't remember, but now you remind me.

Q. Right. So you did remember when you prepared your asylum application that you had been to see Mr Yumashev and you say that your concerns about Mr Primakov had some impact because about two weeks later, on 12 May, Primakov was dismissed by the president?

- A. Again, I don't refuse that. You just asked me exact what happened '98 and you refer me back to my political asylum statement, which was given 2000 -- I don't remember -- 3, 2002. I just don't remember that, but it's absolutely logical. And it's the reason why I answer that I can't exclude that, because it's my way.
- Q. In the light of the witness's answer we don't need to turn this up but for your Ladyship's reference and the transcript that is at bundle R(E)1/01/1, is the document and this is at R(E)1/01/36 and 37, paragraph 82 of the document.
- A. Mr Sumption, my Lady, if you allow me to make this point more clear, I just --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, go on.

- A. Two minutes. Because, as I understand, the idea of Mr Sumption is that because I afraid to be arrested, yes, in fraud and something, and I decide to influence to fire Primakov.

I just give you an example: when in 2000 I was already not in good relations with our president, new president, I mean Putin, I was voluntarily decide to leave Parliament, as a member of the Parliament, in spite of I have immunity as a deputy. It means that I don't afraid Primakov, believe me, it's not the reason why I tried to convince president to fire him, because I recognise that he's really dangerous not for me personally, for the country, and it was only reason why I try to convince president to make this step. This is the point.

MR SUMPTION: Now, this incident was a particular display of your political influence, wasn't it? It demonstrated quite how influential and powerful you were at that stage?

A. I think it demonstrate what we discussed from the beginning: that I have power to persuade people and to explain the others what from my point is correct and to build logic and -- under that. This is only. Influential, you may "influential" to bribing people, yes? You're also influential, yes? It's not bribe. It's my belief what I were doing and it's influence to people definitely.

Q. Would it be fair to say that in the period of a year after May 1999, you were at the height of your political influence in Russia?

A. You were...?

Q. That your political influence in Russia was at its highest point during the period after the dismissal of Primakov in May 1999?

A. I can't say that. It's not my estimation should be done. I just was happy that president took this decision because not only me who help him to take this decision, it will be finally to say, but Mr Putin as well help president to take this decision because, as you know well, the two main targets of Primakov at that time were Putin, as the head of FSB, and me as well. Putin as the head of FSB because Primakov want to put his person to this position. It's reason why exactly at that time we become very close with Putin.

Q. Now, Mr Putin took over as acting president at the very end of 1999, didn't he?

A. Acting president, yes. It was 31 -- 1 January, I would like to say.

Q. 1 January, right.

A. Yes.

Q. Was that because of Boris Yeltsin's illness?

A. Yes.

Q. And your relations with Mr Putin, as I understand it, were initially very good, were they not, at first?

A. They were very good because I knew Putin from '91 and we cooperate -- he was not my close friend but we had very good relations.

- Q. And you supported his election campaign, didn't you?
- A. Mainly I supported the Parliament election campaign because it was decisive point in '99. But as well I supported his election campaign as a president but it was already game over because after Yedinstvo, the new political power, won Parliament election, no doubt that who is in the chair of prime minister will win election and at that time in chair of prime minister was Putin.
- Q. Yes. Well, you supported his election campaign with both money and broadcasting support, didn't you?
- A. You're correct.
- Q. It wasn't until the summer of 2000, when your media started criticising Putin's policies and competence, that your influence in government declined?
- A. No, it's not so. You said my media: yes, that time I control ORT, the most influential channel, and newspaper Kommersant and other TV channel. But conflict with president -- with Putin started before. And as far as Chechnya, the second war of Chechnya is concerned, ORT and Kommersant criticised Putin even before he become president, even when he has been just prime minister.
- MR SUMPTION: My Lady, I'm going to turn to the question of intimidation and your Ladyship may find that a convenient point to break.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, very well. Ten minutes,
Mr Berezovsky.

THE WITNESS: Thank you.

(3.08 pm)

(A short break)

(3.18 pm)

MR SUMPTION: Mr Berezovsky, I want to ask you some questions about your case in relation to intimidation leading to the sale of ORT. I'm going to deal with Sibneft later.

In your witness statement starting at paragraph 310, if you want to remind yourself of what's in your witness statement --

A. I don't remember coincidence with the number and what is written.

Q. I'm just trying to help you by telling you whereabouts you deal in your witness statement with this subject.

A. Thank you.

Q. 310 and following.

A. Just a second, I'm sorry.

Q. In this part of your witness statement you describe meetings which you and Mr Patarkatsishvili had with --

A. Sorry. It's unfortunately different -- it's wrong.

Q. D2/17/263.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Paragraph 310.

MR SUMPTION: I'm not going to ask you about specific bits of it but I want you to have it open.

A. Yes, yes.

Q. Okay.

Now, in this part of your witness statement, you are describing meetings which you and Mr Patarkatsishvili --

A. Yes.

Q. -- had with President Putin's chief of staff, Mr Voloshin, and then with President Putin himself, at which you say they threatened you --

A. It's completely wrong. I have been alone; Mr Patarkatsishvili have not been.

Q. Yes, I know, but Mr Patarkatsishvili had other meetings which he told you about.

A. Correct.

Q. I understand that. Now, the meeting which you had with Mr Voloshin, as I understand it, that was at your request; see paragraph 310.

A. I return -- I have been in France.

Q. Sorry?

A. Sorry. I have been in France when a submarine sunk and Putin had been in Sochi, in Black Sea location.

Q. Yes. But you rang up Mr Voloshin --

A. Yes, yes, I ask -- it's exactly what I want to add. First of all I asked president to have a meeting by telephone and I return but he said when he will be Moscow back, we will have, and he said, "Connect to Voloshin". And when I returned back to Moscow I called to Voloshin and asked organise meeting with president; it's correct.

Q. Now, if Mr Voloshin and Mr Putin had wanted to threaten you, they surely would not have waited for you to drop in for that purpose, would they?

A. What does mean "drop in"?

First of all I would like to remind you, Mr Sumption, that the first meeting that I had with Voloshin without presence of President Putin and only next day they have been together. And I was shocked, not less than you in your question now, when I came there to explain why president is doing wrong hiding, not appear -- not show up for the people, and this was my main reason to meet Mr Voloshin.

But instead of this point, Voloshin start to present me that ORT is placing president -- president only told me by telephone, "What, did you decide to fight against me?" But I think it is a joke, yes, because we had good relations still. But Voloshin was absolutely serious, saying that I'm against of president and I follow Gusinsky to jail, because Gusinsky, as you remember, at that time already was jailed a couple of times I think.

Q. Now --

A. And if -- that surprised me.

Q. Have you read the witness statement of Mr Voloshin in these proceedings?

A. Yes, I read -- I don't remember well but I read it from the beginning to the end.

Q. Right. He has denied your account of the meetings that you had with him and President Putin, has he not?

A. I didn't recognise if he denied that. The contrary, as I remember: he confirmed that there were two meetings with him personally and as president and him.

Q. Yes, he doesn't deny the meetings occurred; what he denies is your account of those meetings.

A. Yes, definitely Voloshin denied. My question is just one: why he decide deny today but not immediately after my open interview where I blame him personally that he tried to threaten me? It was -- it's happened a couple of days later when I met president. I especially didn't mention president, not to put him directly, that he also was threaten me, that he threaten me, but I put directly that -- I don't remember -- "High-level officials from your administration threaten me", this was my presentation, and Voloshin never refused that, that time. Now, when he support Abramovich, he decide to say completely opposite.

Q. He says that at the meeting that you had with him, he did say that the government wanted you to stop using ORT for your own political purposes but he did not demand that you should sell out of ORT.

A. He is lying.

Q. He also says that at the meeting with President Putin, Putin said that he wanted to see ORT run collectively by its board of directors and its director general, and not just by you in your own interest.

A. He is lying.

Q. He's lying about that too, is he?

A. Correct.

Q. And on neither occasion were you threatened with imprisonment or with the fate of Mr Gusinsky.

A. He is lying as well.

Q. Now, I suggest that you have overdramatised this incident in the account that you wrote about it shortly afterwards in Kommersant for the purposes of the press campaign that you were in the process of running against the president.

A. That time Mr Voloshin had great opportunity to answer and say, "Berezovsky is lying". It didn't happen like that because I took absolutely open position, gave interview to mass media, and it's just only question: why that time Mr Voloshin did not answer openly? This is the question. Because he absolutely perfectly knew that it was true. And moreover, what happened later just demonstrate that it's true.

Q. Your initial response to the dispute between Mr Putin and yourself was to announce that you intended to place your ORT shares into the hands of a group of journalists and prominent cultural figures so as to safeguard it from the State. Do you remember that?

A. Even more, maybe you remember also it is in my witness statement that when Putin run presidential campaign and become president, recently -- shortly after, I came to Mr Voloshin as I remember, but I think I talk also to president, that I decide to give my share up to under control of -- not under control -- to make ORT like BBC, really that I don't want more to have control in OR -- to be shareholder of ORT because it's too much for me because I believe that Putin becoming president continue Yeltsin reform. It's the reason what I voluntarily came to Voloshin, and I talk to Putin as well, that I don't want more to own ORT shares, I want to give them up.

Q. Right. You were --

A. And you're absolutely correct, that when I recognise that Putin turn back, that he -- I mean back from democracy, to --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just a second, please.

Right. I'm told that sound has been lost in the other room. Is that right?

COURT OFFICIAL: It's okay now.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: It's back. Thank you very much indeed.

MR SUMPTION: Perhaps I should talk louder.

THE WITNESS: No, still people who are interested again in the other room even.

MR SUMPTION: Now, that proposal to put the shares of ORT into the hands of a group of journalists and intellectuals was made in September 2000, wasn't it?

A. I think yes, in September 2000.

Q. Right.

A. As a trust, TV trust.

Q. Shortly after that, the possibility arose of your selling your stake instead to Mr Abramovich. Do you recall that?

A. No, I don't recall that. Opportunity happened when Abramovich threatened me, saying that being messenger of Putin.

Q. Do you say that there was no discussion with Mr Abramovich about the possibility of his acquiring your shares in ORT until your meeting with him that you say happened at Cap d'Antibes in December?

A. First of all, not until my meeting at Cap d'Antibes in December; until my meeting in Le Bourget, and you know that well. And the second, I really knew that Badri start to negotiate that. It does matter that I was completely opposite of that but it's true that Badri start to discuss that before our meeting in Le Bourget.

Q. Yes. In fact he started to discuss it right back in September or October, didn't he?

A. I don't remember that --

Q. And he discussed --

A. -- in September/October, but definitely it was completely opposite what was -- what I was trying to do to give up my shares to trust to journalists and intellectuals.

Q. He discussed it with Mr Abramovich and you knew about that presumably because he told you, Mr Patarkatsishvili told you?

A. Yes, we had completely different opinion what to do and Badri position was that we need to be calm, we need to be quiet, that it's dangerous for us. My position was completely opposite and I present my position also openly. It's the reason why I decide to create TV trust and the decision to cancel this idea.

I declared only after Nikolai was arrested, December 7, 2000, and I gave interview to several mass media, including Ekho Moskvyy, where I announced that I don't have choice. And I didn't have this choice also referred to people who I invited to trust saying that now it's dangerous not for Nikolai, who is in jail, but elsewhere for them and that is the reason why I decided to stop that.

Q. Right. Now, when this subject was raised with you by Mr Patarkatsishvili in September or October, as I suggest, you were initially reluctant to sell but you authorised Mr Patarkatsishvili to continue his discussions with Mr Abramovich, did you not?

A. I never authorised Mr Patarkatsishvili to continue his discussion with Mr Abramovich because, as I told you, I was opposite of that. But I understood dangerously where we are, particularly after Mr Putin interview in Figaro, as I remember, 26 December, when he said -- and it's quoted -- "State has cudgel in his hand and the State will hit at the head but once", and the head -- not a head, the head -- it was addressed to me, to request to the question of journalists.

Q. That was in October, wasn't it?

A. Yes, 26 October.

Q. Right.

Now, Mr Patarkatsishvili would not have engaged in negotiations on this subject with Mr Abramovich if you were opposed to him having discussions at all, would he?

A. No. Badri and me, we had completely -- first of all -- different understanding -- not completely different understanding but what is the most important, different behaviour. Badri all the time tried to find the solution because he afraid that Abramovich -- already at that time he start to afraid that Abramovich will try to cut his obligations in front of us and that is the reason why all the time Badri was very accurate with Abramovich, up to -- even up to almost his die, he all the time tried to negotiate to Abramovich more or less, tried to be in touch with him. It was completely opposite of my position.

Q. In the course of the negotiations between Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Abramovich, they reached agreement in principle that your stake in ORT would be sold to Mr Abramovich. Initially the price agreed was $100 million. Do you accept that or do you deny it?

A. No, not at all. Mr Sumption, you know that as a fact, that the discussion started when Mr Gusinsky was in jail, from that time State start to ask us, to press us to sell the shares. And it was meeting, as you correctly said, not only me with Putin but also meeting with Badri with Putin, yes, and Putin put Badri in front of the choice: or Badri will stay with me and continue to do any business he want; or Badri stay with me and he will be pressed like me.

And after that, Putin recommend Badri to meet Mr Lesin, at the time minister of information, and Lesin propose Badri to pay $300 million for shares, for our shares in ORT. It's well-known fact.

Q. Yes.

A. And we refused that. We refused that. I refused that. Badri said, "Boris, we should sell", and so, and I said, "Badri, no". And we didn't sell, even for 300.

Q. Mr Lesin subsequently withdrew his offer of $300 million, didn't he?

A. I don't know anything about whether he withdrew. I know that just Mr Lesin is exactly the person who got signature of Gusinsky when Gusinsky had been in jail and Gusinsky gave up his shares of ORT to under State control. Exactly Lesin was the person who visited Gusinsky in jail.

Q. While these discussions between Mr Abramovich and Mr Patarkatsishvili were going on, Mr Abramovich visited you at Cap d'Antibes on 6 November 2000, did he not?

A. As far as me is concerned, I don't remember this meeting at all. I remember our meeting in Cap d'Antibes in December 2000, after Nikolai was arrested; this I recollect, this I remember. But as far as our meeting in 6 November -- in 6 November, I don't remember this meeting.

Q. Since your acquisition of the Chateau de la Garoupe at Cap d'Antibes, you must have seen Mr Abramovich there many times?

A. Yes, it was our favourite place to meet for me and Mr Abramovich as well, and later on he bought property himself in the same region.

Q. Now, you can't possibly remember now, can you, whether one of those meetings happened on 6 November --

A. No, again, I remember perfectly meeting in December and I don't remember at all -- again, I'm very precise, I don't say that impossible and so. But I don't remember any meeting in November with Abramovich at all but I remember well meeting in December with Abramovich.

Q. Mr Abramovich's flight records show that he flew from Moscow to Nice on 5 November and returned late on the 6th.

A. Mr Sumption, my proposal is very clear --

Q. I haven't asked my question yet.

A. Ah, sorry. Excuse me.

Q. Can you think of any other reason why he might do that --

A. Could you repeat, please, the date?

Q. -- in November 2000, other than to come and see you?

A. I see a lot of reasons why he can do that. I know that he many times has been on the south of France without visiting me.

Q. Now, subsequently, in the middle of November, there was a further meeting between Mr Abramovich and Mr Patarkatsishvili, was there not, at which Mr Patarkatsishvili said that you were unhappy with the terms previously agreed and invited Mr Abramovich to renegotiate them at a higher price of $150 million?

A. Again, I don't remember anything about such kind of meetings, the first. The second, I'm sorry that I refer to the previous question, Mr Sumption: if we operate with the stamps in the passport of confirming our travelling, it's a completely different story and not to make -- not to mislead my Lady, we need first of all to give knowledge to my Lady what it means.

It means that let's operate in just -- just not in fact of stamps in the passport because you know well the problem which we have together, and Abramovich and me --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just track back a bit.

Do you deny that the meeting took place in November or do you accept that it's possible that it may have done but you have forgotten?

A. Yes, it's good question. I likely deny that then, to say that it's --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: You positively remember it didn't happen?

A. Yes. Absolutely correct.

MR SUMPTION: Mr Berezovsky, how can you possibly positively remember that among the many meetings that you've had with Mr Abramovich in the south of France, one of them did not happen on 6 November?

A. I explain you why: because that time I just left Russia, yes? I left Russia, as I recollect, 30 October.

Q. Mm-hm.

A. And next point what I remember: that we agreed we need to talk, because I left not very well prepared to leave, yes, to leave Russia, and next -- and we discuss with Badri and with Abramovich, I think with Abramovich by telephone, to organise a principal meeting, we start to discuss at approximately the middle of November, at the middle of November. We start to discuss principally: do we have chance? When we will fix the meeting to discuss about what is happening?

My Lady, if you read my statements, I did not remember at all at the beginning, I forgot completely -- and this is my answer to Mr Sumption -- meeting in Le Bourget, the principal meeting when we talk so much about how we deal -- continue to deal together. And if, my Lady, you analyse what I present, I forgot completely about meeting in Le Bourget; completely. And only when I was informed that there is a taping of that and I was reminded, I was presented here first of all extract of this meeting and I heard voice of Abramovich, I heard voice of Badri and myself, only then I recollect that we had this meeting, but I didn't recollect even when exactly; and only when I got the full transcript, step by step, I reconstruct that it's happened 6 December 2000.

Just to give you better understanding how my memory is organised, yes? I didn't remember at all the principal meeting when we agreed and we understand each other much better, I understood that Abramovich already is betraying me. But it's principal meeting, but I forgot that. I know the reason, I explain it later, why I forgot. I know the answer now.

Q. At some stage in the first half of November 2000, Mr Patarkatsishvili came to you or spoke to you and told you, didn't he, that Mr Abramovich was prepared to pay $100 million for the stake in ORT, and you said you were unhappy with that. Do you agree that that exchange took place between you and Badri?

A. I don't remember then Badri told me that Abramovich -- or maybe -- just a second. (Pause)

I don't remember that.

Q. You don't remember that. Do you deny it?

- A. I deny it.
- Q. And you said that you might be interested at a higher price, didn't you?
- A. 100 per cent wrong, because I was not even -- it was not even under discussion from my position to sell it.
- Q. Subsequently, Mr Patarkatsishvili came to Mr Abramovich in Moscow and said you were unhappy about the deal previously agreed, that it could probably be done for $150 million?
- A. Mr Sumption, impossible. Again, I did not take a decision to sell ORT shares until Nikolai was arrested. It's absolutely no doubt about that.
- Q. Do you recall that in October and November 2000 you authorised Mr Fomichev to discuss with Mr Gorodilov, one of Mr Abramovich's staff, the administrative details of the transfer of your ORT shares to Mr Abramovich?
- A. Definitely not.
- Q. Are you aware that in fact Mr Fomichev did discuss the details of that transfer with Mr Gorodilov in October and November 2000?
- A. Definitely I don't -- I was not aware about that. Definitely I also read -- not so attentively like Mr Voloshin's statement -- Mr Gorodilov's statement and, as I remember, he discussed about that.

Again, Mr Sumption, I didn't authorise anyone, including Badri, to talk about selling ORT shares. This is absolutely 100 per cent I am sure in that because it was my clear position. Up to the last moment, when they took Nikolai in jail, definitely I change my mind in a second; but up to that, no chance.

It's the reason why even understanding the battle, even convince journalists to create a TV trust, to put in trust my and Badri's shares. It's the reason why we prepare to restructure finally our relations to shares of ORT, because before ORT was partly in ORT-KB, shares of ORT, ORT-KB, and it was in Logovaz, which also were owned through, let's say, not only Badri and me, but preparing to give it to trust, to journalist. We make it absolutely clear, transparent, that half of 49 per cent belonged to Badri structure, half of 49 per cent belonged to my structure.

Q. Now, if Mr Fomichev had discussions with Mr Gorodilov in October and November 2000, which is what Mr Gorodilov will say, Mr Fomichev would not have done that, would he, without your approval?

A. No, no, it's absolutely wrong, because, as I told you, Mr Fomichev was much closer to Badri. He is not under my control, Badri controlled -- no, what is under my control? We had good relations, definitely Fomichev understood my position in our -- with Badri relations, but Badri connect to Fomichev directly himself.

- Q. Mr Fomichev was your financial manager, not Badri's.
- A. It's wrong again because Mr Fomichev was financial manager, not mine, he was our financial manager; and, again, Fomichev report to Badri, not to me.
- Q. Mr Fomichev, according to Mr Glushkov, was appointed as your financial manager in 1999. Do you deny that?
- A. Again, it's completely wrong. Fomichev never was appointed as my financial manager. Fomichev had position in Obedinyonniy Bank, as I recollect, he was the chairman of Obedinyonniy Bank, and definitely I knew almost nothing how Obedinyonniy Bank is operating and Badri knew a lot; and definitely Fomichev communicate to Badri and not to me.
- Q. Now, Mr Fomichev had worked for the Consolidated Bank in the mid-1990s, hadn't he?
- A. Approximately from that time.
- Q. Yes.
- A. He was recommended to me my daughter.
- Q. You say that Mr Glushkov has got it wrong when he says that Mr Fomichev was your financial manager from 1999 onwards?
- A. I did not read Mr Glushkov's statement but it's wrong.
- Q. I see.

Now, would you agree that Mr Fomichev was the only person who knew everything about your financial affairs in the period immediately after your flight from Russia in October 2000?

A. In October 2000, I think Badri knew better.

Q. I see. Because that's what you told the judge in the North Shore litigation. Do you remember that?

A. No.

Q. Would you like to take bundle H(A)98 at page 97, please. H(A)98/97.

A. Again, just a second. I want to concentrate. This is my --

Q. This is your evidence in the North Shore litigation?

A. Yes, yes, I remember.

Q. We have already referred to it for other purposes. All right?

A. Yes.

Q. You are being cross-examined here by Mr Swainston --

A. Yes.

Q. -- and you're being cross-examined about Mr Fomichev's functions, right?

A. Yes.

Q. And at line 3 on the top left-hand box --

A. Just a second.

Q. -- on page 97 --

A. Just a second.

Q. In the minuscrit it's page 57, starting at line 2. You can see from the page before that it's about Fomichev that you're talking.

A. Just a second. May I read this line which you have mentioned?

What is Q, what is A?

Q. Question is Q, answer is A.

A. Ah, sorry. It's my answer; correct?

Q. It's your answer.

A. Thank you.

Q. What you say is:

"He was involved with all my financial activity when I moved to London. We start our relations, I think, in 1995/1996 and when I moved to London he was only person, starting from 2000 up to -- even not to London, even when I moved to France from Russia, from autumn 2000 up to 2003, he was only person who know everything and who managed my money, my business and so. Because Badri at that time, my partner, he was in Georgia, he was not able to travel here and wasn't able -- also, he was also left Russia because political problems and I didn't have, let's say, I'm sorry to say, my right hand, Badri. It's the reason why Ruslan..."

That's Mr Fomichev.

"... took the position of my right hand and he knows well all the problems which we had with our money."

Now, is that evidence --

A. It's absolutely correct, I confirm everything, because, as you know, Badri left Russia and lost opportunity to move all over the world in March 2001. It means until that time Badri was the person who manage everything, including connection with Fomichev.

Q. But what you are saying in this evidence is that from the time that you moved to France from Russia --

A. Yes.

Q. -- Mr Fomichev knew everything and managed your money and business.

A. Again, Mr Sumption, let's be correct, because I mentioned that when Badri moved to -- I moved to France, as you know, October 2000, but Badri still continued to travel and he was able to manage everything. And definitely Fomichev took much more that time that -- when I have been in Moscow, in my communication, because I was not able to communicate every day to Badri.

But again, Fomichev really took a lot of financial control over my activity after Badri was stuck in Georgia in March 2001. And when I moved to London, long time -- around two years, maybe even more -- until Natalia Nosova joined me here in London, Fomichev was responsible and he got direct -- connect directly to me, without Badri participation, because Badri was stuck in Georgia.

But until Badri was able to travel, to move, Badri was definitely person who communicate to me and to Fomichev.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, what you are saying in this evidence was that it was before you moved to London. You say:

"... even when I moved to France from Russia, from autumn 2000 up to 2003, he was only person who know everything and who managed by money, my business and so."

A. Okay, Mr Sumption, I explain my position. It's absolutely clear that it's not precisely what you tried to just to do like wording. But, again, the situation is absolutely simple and clear: Badri manage until he was able to communicate to me. As far as Badri was not able to communicate to me as often as before, when I moved to France, Fomichev start to took more and more position in that. It's true.

Q. You see, a moment ago you were trying to pretend that Mr Fomichev was some sort of agent of Mr Patarkatsishvili and that he was not your manager.

A. No, it's not agent. It's not agent. He employed by us, by Badri and me. But when I had direct connection to Badri, I communicate to Badri directly; when I did not, I communicate through Fomichev. And it's happened that after 30 October I moved to London but Badri -- I moved to France but Badri continue to communicate to me directly; but when he was not able to communicate to me directly, we communicate through Fomichev.

This is a very simple position, simple situation, I'm sorry to say.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, do you or do you not deny that in 2000, from the time that you fled to France, Mr Fomichev was managing your affairs? Do you deny that or not?

A. I did not deny. I deny that he managed that alone; he managed that together with Badri.

Q. He managed it instead of Badri, which is what --

A. No, not instead; together with Badri.

Q. Which is what you --

A. At the beginning, until Badri left Russia -- left to Georgia in March 2001, Fomichev and Badri. And I told you correctly that role of Fomichev was increasing at that time but he was not only one.

It means that I was not precise here. The precise situation is simple: that until Badri was able to connect to me, mainly I tried to do everything with him, but that time already we had difficulties as to communicate because I was not able to travel at all,

I stuck in France -- no, I travelled to London and so, but I was not able to travel like before. And it's the reason for why Fomichev's role was increasing.

- Q. Ms Nosova, in the North Shore litigation, gave the same evidence. She gave evidence that from about 2000 Mr Fomichev was managing your affairs, operating your finances, setting up your bank account, instructing your lawyers and paying your bills. Do you deny that?
- A. I don't see any contradiction between what I said and what Mrs Nosova said. And in science it's called like a transformation, like transformation time. It was time of transformation from one structure which we had, where Fomichev communicate to me just through Badri, to the other structure. Finally I start to communicate through Fomichev to Badri because Badri was in Georgia and he was not able to move. It's transformation period. It's very correct what I said there.
- Q. Do you remember telling Mr Samuelson at the beginning of September 2000 that Mr Fomichev was your most trusted lieutenant as well as Badri's?
- A. I can't exclude that even I think before, I think that in the spring 2000, I think we start to form western-style organised structures and Mr Samuelson was involved in that because we decide to restructure our relations with Badri in western way and we create several trusts, we create several structures and so.

And Fomichev was key person with that because, as I recollect, Mr Fomichev the person who brought -- no, Mr Curtis, yes, Mr Curtis, the person who brought Mr Samuelson, and Mr Fomichev was the person who present me and Badri this negotiation. And the reason also was clear because Fomichev had excellent speaking English and he is professional. That's it.

- Q. Now, if we can go back to the point which gave rise to this little excursion, if Mr Fomichev, this trusted lieutenant of yours, your business manager, if he had negotiations with Mr Gorodilov about the sale of ORT in October and November 2000, he wouldn't have done that without your approval, would he?
- A. Once more, I never gave him any power to negotiate any subject concerning ORT. This is the point.
- Q. Now, your ORT stake and Badri's was 49 per cent of the company, wasn't it?
- A. Correct.
- Q. And 38 per cent out of that was held by you and Badri through a company called ORT-KB?
- A. Correct.
- Q. The other 11 per cent was held through the same company by Logovaz; is that right?
- A. The same -- you mean ORT was owned Logovaz 11 per cent, correct.

Q. Logovaz had another 11 per cent of ORT --

A. Correct.

Q. -- and they held that 11 per cent also through ORT-KB, didn't they?

A. No, no, no, no. 38 per cent was owned by ORT-KB and 11 per cent owned Logovaz. It means that I don't remember that Logovaz own ORT-KB; I don't remember that. I think it's not so.

Q. Now, I think that you accept, but let me know whether you do or not, that in early November 2000, shares in ORT-KB were transferred from various intermediate holding companies to you and Mr Patarkatsishvili personally.

A. It's exactly what I mentioned before. We were preparing to put our shares to ORT to TV trust and to make it absolutely transparent. And in proper way we first of all structured my and Badri relations 50/50, Badri put under his personal control 25 per cent and I put under my personal and direct control the shares, to present the people who we invite to trust to show that everything is absolutely clear and transparent.

Q. The purpose of these transfers, as I think you've just confirmed, was to equalise your holdings with Badri's so that it was 50/50?

- A. Absolutely correct.
- Q. Right. Now, if this was in preparation for transferring the shares to your telly trust, why was it important that they should be held 50/50?
- A. It's important because it was common knowledge for all journalists, for all in Russia, that we own with Badri 50/50 and it would be strange that we propose him the structure which surprise them and they start to think, "Oh, there's something wrong with these people, they trick us and so", and it's the reason why we want to put absolutely precisely.

Common knowledge was exist even without that, that we are 50/50 partners and we show our shares when we equal partners, which help them to accept our proposal and understand that we don't trick them at all.

- Q. Mr Berezovsky, it was completely unnecessary to equalise your share with Badri's for the purpose of transferring the shares free to a telly trust; it was only necessary because you were planning to sell them to Mr Abramovich?
- A. It's absolutely wrong because maybe you don't face like me with journalists, so often like me, but I know well that journalists are very, very curious and very care what they are doing and believe me that it was very complicated to convince first-level journalist of Russia in situation when they understood well that I am fighting, I start to fight against of president, to take my proposal. Believe me, it was not simple. And I don't want to create any doubts what is the source of these shares, who owned the shares.

Q. The shares in ORT were in fact owned, as you've confirmed, by ORT-KB. You could have transferred those shares to your telly trust without anybody having the slightest idea --

A. Definitely not.

Q. -- who owned the shares of the holding company or in what proportions?

A. Definitely not, Mr Sumption, because journalists want to know how -- what is the source of the shares and how they're owned. And if we take Logovaz shares, for example, 11 per cent of, it was mess at all because we -- formally I own, I don't remember, even 7 per cent of Logovaz, and Badri maybe more, I don't remember well. No, at that time already more I own.

But it already was not clear that its shares belong just to Badri and to me, that's it. And this is the reason why we -- again, I'm referring to the same point -- we want to show journalists absolutely clear story.

Q. Why should the journalists have cared a fig where the shares came from as long as they received them?

A. No, it's absolutely clear why. Journalists must know that the story is not fake, the story is not -- the story is completely transparent. And what we declared before -- okay, could you imagine that we, before it was reference that Badri and me, we have equal shares, and then the journalists will go to the source and will recognise it was not so? They put the question: why it was not so? Why they present that they have 50/50 partner but the shares which we got aren't clear that it's, let's say, Badri share, Badri part more than Berezovsky or to the contrary? It's the reason why we decide not to create any problem, to present them completely truthful story.

Moreover, as you know, we decide to equalise -- to equalise and to create a trust using by Russian law, not English law, yes? What we have done before, we used English law. But that time we decide to use just Russian law again, to make clear for journalists it's Russian story, because journalists did not have experience like we have, that we have offshores and trust, already we knew that. Many people in Russia didn't like that. They didn't understand why Russian company should be on offshore, on abroad. It's not simple story to explain. It's the reason why we even used Russian law for that.

- Q. Now, if these equalisation transfers were designed as a preparation for your transfer of ORT shares to the telly trust, why was Mr Gorodilov, one of Mr Abramovich's staff, involved in that process?
- A. This question, I don't have any answer to that. As before you said that Mr Fomichev was responsible for that; I don't have any idea about that. I know just that it was done by Badri. Why Badri used Mr Gorodilov or Mr Fomichev -- or Mr Gorodilov, not Mr Fomichev, definitely I don't know that.
- Q. Now, on 10 November a notice was prepared by your and Badri's company, ORT-KB, saying that you and Badri proposed to sell your shares to a company called Akmos which was controlled by Mr Abramovich?
- A. I don't know anything about that.
- Q. Would you look at bundle H(A)23/61.
- A. H(A)...?
- Q. H(A)23/61. Now, this is a notice which is required to be registered with the companies register in Russia --
- A. Yes.
- Q. -- announcing the intention of a shareholder to sell his shares so that any other shareholders who may have pre-emption rights can exercise them.
- A. Yes.
- Q. What it says, it's dated 10 November and you will see the stamp of the private company registry --

A. Just a second.

Q. The stamp of ORT-KB at the bottom.

A. Yes, yes, I see that.

Q. Okay?

A. Yes.

Q. The middle paragraph says:

"... ORT-KB has received notices from two shareholders... that own 23,726.25... registered shares [in the company]..."

A. Yes.

Q. Now, that must be a reference to you and Mr Patarkatsishvili; do you agree? Those were the number of shares you owned.

A. It could be. I can't refuse that.

Q. Well, we can see that when we compare the ultimate sale agreement.

A. Yes, yes.

Q. The notice goes on:

"The shareholders expressed the wish to sell Akmos Trade LLC all of the common registered shares of [the company] that they own at a price of USD 2,107.37... per share in rubles at the exchange rate... as of the date of payment."

A. Yes.

- Q. Now, this is a notice which is being served on your behalf and Mr Patarkatsishvili's behalf on 10 November announcing your intention of selling your shares to Akmos, isn't it?
- A. It looks like that.
- Q. At a later stage, shortly after 10 November, this document was deposited with the Moscow companies registry.
- A. Just a second. Where did they deposit?
- Q. They deposited it with the Moscow companies registry.
- A. Okay. Where is that, the information that they deposit there?
- Q. I'll give you chapter and verse in a moment. But at any rate, what we see on this certificate is an announcement of an intention to sell Akmos. That intention must already have existed on 10 November 2000?
- A. Mr Sumption, I can't exclude that. I just tell you that I don't know anything of our preparation to sell the shares to Mr Abramovich. This is the point.
- Q. Mr Berezovsky, you've been trying to exclude it for the last three-quarters of an hour by suggesting that you never authorised anyone to negotiate about a sale to Mr Abramovich before December.
- A. I just confirm that again.
- Q. And in fact you did, because here is a certificate in which you and Badri are announcing your intention of selling to Mr Abramovich's company Akmos?

A. I just want again to stress: I didn't have any approach to sell ORT shares. What Badri was doing is completely different story, as I told you that Badri, even if we return back -- I'm sorry, if we return back to Le Bourget and it's already December, December 2000, and even there you see how Abramovich insist that we finally took a decision to sell and, as you know, we took a decision to sell and signed the papers only 24 October -- 24 December, after Glushkov was prisoned.

Q. You see, I'm not suggesting to you that you entered into a legally binding agreement to sell the ORT shares before December. What I am suggesting to you is that by the end of November, at the latest, you had agreed in principle, through Mr Patarkatsishvili, that you would sell your shares to Mr Abramovich for $150 million.

A. Again, it's wrong. I did not accept that. What Badri is doing is other story and I told you from the very beginning that Badri is trying to protect our interest; Badri was trying not to lose everything. It was his game, I don't know how to say else, but the game where -- which I don't accept, up to the last moment.

Q. And Badri wouldn't have done that, would he, if you didn't approve of the idea of selling your shares at all?

A. I just can follow Badri advice what to do, but Badri knew absolutely perfect that I was not in position to sell shares to anybody.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, I'm about to embark on a chunk that is a good deal more than five minutes long.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. I will rise then for today.

Mr Berezovsky, 10.15 tomorrow, please. I repeat the warning: don't talk to anybody.

THE WITNESS: Okay. We're finished now, yes?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: We've finished now.

THE WITNESS: Okay.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Don't talk to anybody about your evidence.

THE WITNESS: Definitely.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well. 10.15 in the morning.

    Cross-examination by MR SUMPTION .....2

Tuesday, 11 October 2011

(10.15 am)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, Mr Sumption.

Cross-examination by MR SUMPTION (continued)

MR SUMPTION: Do you want to stand up, Mr Berezovsky?

A. I start with that, maybe I sit. When you put me down,
I sit!

Q. No, no, no, you do what you like.

Could you please be given bundle E6. This is the Le Bourget transcript.

The main purpose, as I understand it, of the meeting that you attended at Le Bourget was to discuss the state of your accounts with Mr Abramovich and in particular to work out how money could be paid to you and Badri outside Russia in a tax-efficient way. Do you accept that that was what this meeting was mainly about?

A. Generally, yes. I -- I'm sorry, you put me down already. Generally, yes, my Lady, but I just want to mention that it was, in my recollection, the first meeting with Mr Abramovich after I left Russia, in spite of my wife, she recollect that we have a meeting at --
I left Russia, as I remember, 30 October. As far as my wife recollect that we had meeting at 31 October as Badri birthday in Paris, I don't recollect that.

The reason of this meeting was absolutely correct, mainly for calculate what is happening because it's new reality, but -- okay, that's it. Just to show, to mention that there was the first meeting, at my recollection, after at least -- after I left Russia between Badri, Abramovich and me.

Q. There was at least one other meeting, wasn't there, on 6 November but we'll come to that later. Let's not take up time on 6 November now.

Looking at this transcript, I'm not going to take you through the whole of this transcript, but in broad terms the conversation began with a discussion of the state of accounts between you and Mr Abramovich; is that right?

A. As I understand, I initially didn't participate almost at all in discussion as far as account is concerned. As my recollection is and when I read that, as I told you, my Lady, I forgot at all about this meeting. My recollection was that the first meeting was just in Cap d'Antibes and only later on I recollect, when I got this recording I recollect.

As I recollect, I almost did not participate in discussion at all, except of some principal points. And if you watch who is speaking, me or Badri or Roman, it's clear that it's mainly discussion between Roman Abramovich and Badri as far as accountings is concerned.

Q. Yes. Well, you explain that and the reason for it at box 29 in your commentary --

A. Just a second, Mr Sumption. I'm sorry, could you please give me the Russian transcript.

Q. You've got it, I hope --

A. Yes, yes, it's in parallel.

Q. -- in parallel columns. English translation, then Russian text, then your commentary and then Mr Abramovich's commentary.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Could you give me the page, please, Mr Sumption?

MR SUMPTION: Page 8 of the bundle E6/01/8.

A. Just a second.

Q. If you've got E6, that should be the version which has both the English and the Russian text.

A. No, I have -- you see in --

Q. Are you looking at the right bundle, Mr Berezovsky?

A. Just a second. In E6 there is English translation of our conversation.

Q. Yes. Look at the second column: it should be the Russian text. If it's not, then you've got a different version of E6.

A. Yes, yes, it's true, but it's in English our conversation and I prefer to have two, English and Russian as well.

Q. You should have both.

A. Yes, thank you.

Q. Well then, fine.

A. E6 and E7 as well.

Q. Now, would you look at E6/01/8, box 29. Okay?

A. E6, box 29.

Q. Page 8, box 29.

A. Yes.

Q. You'll see that at 28 Mr Patarkatsishvili says, "well, where shall we start?" which is the effective beginning of this discussion.

A. Just to be -- to identify, R is Roman, yes?

Q. Yes.

A. A is Badri?

Q. No, A is Mr Abramovich.

A. P is Patarkatsishvili and B Boris, yes, or Berezovsky, yes?

Q. Yes.

A. Thank you. Now it's clear.

Q. If you look at your commentary against box 29, what you say is:

"... I did not play an active role in [the discussions that followed this box] as it was my practice to leave the detail of our joint business affairs to both these men."

Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. Just to make sure I understand this, you have told us on a number of occasions that you left the details of your financial affairs, particular transactions and so on, to other people?

A. Yes.

Q. And that included not just Mr Patarkatsishvili but also, as I think we established yesterday, Mr Fomichev, the other people who dealt with your affairs?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, that meant, did it not, that when you were at this meeting you did not yourself have the detailed information about the discussions and transactions that had happened earlier that Mr Patarkatsishvili had?

A. Definitely, yes.

Q. And that must have made it quite difficult for you to follow at the time what they were talking about?

A. You're absolutely correct.

Q. Now, the discussion opened with the $305 million which we discussed on a couple of occasions yesterday, did it not? If you would look on to box 35, which is on page 13 E6/01/13, you'll see that Mr Abramovich says:

"So, this is last year's."

That's referring to what Mr Patarkatsishvili was just saying.

A. Just a second. It's box...?

Q. If you look at box 35 --

A. Just a second because I need in parallel Russian and English. 35. Yes.

Q. Now, box 35, Mr Abramovich says:

"So, this is last year's. This is what we had agreed, 275 million."

Okay?

A. Yes.

Q. And Mr Patarkatsishvili says:

"Absolutely (correct)."

And Mr Abramovich says:

"From this point. And 30 million -- it was... Aluminium."

Mr Patarkatsishvili says:

"Ah, Aluminium. Yes, correct. It's 305."

A. Just a second. This is the box now we discuss number?

Q. Well, I've been referring you to boxes 35 to 39.

A. Thank you. Ah, 35 to 39. Yes, I'm sorry.

Q. Yes. I mean, in fact references to the 305 million continue into subsequent boxes.

A. Could you give me chance to read that?

Q. Very well. (Pause)

A. Yes, okay.

Q. Now, those are the amounts, 275 million plus 30 million, which make up the 305 million?

A. Yes.

Q. And you'll see that Mr Abramovich refers to that as the sum which had been agreed, box 35, and Mr Patarkatsishvili agreed --

A. Yes.

Q. -- and then there's additional 30 million making up the 305 at box 37.

A. Yes.

Q. So it looks, doesn't it, as if Mr Abramovich and Mr Patarkatsishvili had agreed at some previous stage that you would be paid $305 million?

A. Yes, it looks like -- just I want to go back my comment. When Badri said in 35, in 35 -- just a second. When Roman said at box 35 that, "This is last year", in English, I need to understand, "last year", it's clear identification that it's money for Sibneft because the previous year, I mean the year before 2000, as I understand, we did not get a profit from aluminium because we did not obtain that time aluminium assets.

Q. Well, it's obviously the current year, isn't it, ie 2000, which was just coming to an end?

A. Just a second.

Q. It can't have been 1999.

A. Just a second, okay.

Yes, I think they calculate now the year 2000 from the beginning.

Q. Yes. Now, therefore at some stage before this meeting Mr Abramovich and Mr Patarkatsishvili had obviously agreed that you were going to be paid, the two of you, $305 million, hadn't they?

A. I think that they definitely discussed that. I don't have almost any doubts that they discussed before.

Q. And the reason why it was broken down into two amounts of 275 and 30 was that $275 million was going to be funded from Mr Abramovich's oil trading operations and $30 million from his aluminium operations?

A. Maybe. I only -- I refuse the word "funding". It was not funding; it was our profit which we share with Abramovich in Sibneft and profit which we start to share with Abramovich in aluminium.

Q. Well, we'll have to agree to disagree on that, Mr Berezovsky. But Mr Patarkatsishvili's complaint was that so far he said he'd received only $100 million out of the 305 and he wanted to know when he'd receive the rest; isn't that right?

A. Where is mentioned?

Q. I think you may find that it helps to look at box 60

E6/01/23. This is a very long and rambling conversation. Do you see?

A. Just a second, Mr Sumption, because I need to list two sections.

Q. Don't look at E7 because I'm referring you to E6.

A. Just a second.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Sumption, it's helpful if you refer to the page number just because it then gets automatically hyperlinked, if you could.

MR SUMPTION: Yes. In that case it's E6/01/23.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you.

THE WITNESS: Just a second. Why it's different here?

MR SUMPTION: Is that --

THE WITNESS: Just a second, Mr Sumption, because it's different in two bundles. Just a second.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: You're being directed to box 60.

THE WITNESS: Yes. My Lady, I need to look as well at the other bundle because there is --

MR SUMPTION: What is the other version?

THE WITNESS: -- a different translation. Russian, because conversation had been in Russian, and it's reason why I like to watch our comment in --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: You have it in Russian in the box next to the English, the translation.

MR SUMPTION: Did you write the commentary in Russian or in English?

A. No, I wrote the commentary in Russian.

Q. I see. Okay. Well, E7 contains a Russian version of the commentaries as well as a Russian version of the text.

A. Yes, correct.

Q. Right.

A. Okay, again I return back. 60?

Q. Well, the numbering is the same so just look at the Russian version if that's easier for you.

A. Yes.

Q. In box 60 on page 23 you'll see that Mr Patarkatsishvili says:

"No, here, look... to get 275 plus 30, right?

Instead of which we got 100."

So in summary what Mr Patarkatsishvili is saying is: you said you'd pay us 305 million, we've only had 100 of it?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you agree?

A. Yes. But, my Lady, I'm sorry for interruption because I have different story in two bundles with the same number, 60. I'm sorry. I don't know what's happened, it's technical problem, but it's different.

Q. The commentary is different, are you saying? Is the commentary different --

A. Just a second.

Q. -- or the text?

A. Okay, fine.

Q. The text seems to be the same.

A. Fine, okay.

Q. It's just on different pages.

A. No, the same, okay. Yes.

Q. All right.

Well now, I think we've established, have we not, that Mr Patarkatsishvili's complaint is he'd been promised 305 and he'd only got 100? Do you agree with that?

A. Yes.

Q. Now --

A. Yes, finally I got it.

Q. Could you turn on to box 90, please, which is E6/01/36, though you may prefer to look at it in the Russian version.

A. Just a second.

Mr Sumption, I have a question. What we are watching now, it's --

Q. Sorry?

A. I have a question. What we're watching now, this E6 and E7, it was Abramovich last correction how he said that,

"I later recognise", and so-so or it's just initial version which was presented by us?

Q. I'm sorry, I can't tell you anything, Mr Berezovsky, about the Russian version; what I can tell you about is exclusively the parallel texts in English and Russian and the commentaries in English because --

A. No, no, I just -- my Lady, it's very important because initially, when the first detailed explanation of Le Bourget was done by our team, not Abramovich, Abramovich initially presented just three pages in his witness statement, yes? Or reply.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Okay. Well, what you've got now is clear in the English version.

THE WITNESS: No, no, no, it's no doubt about that. But later on Abramovich added (inaudible) correct what he understood after he start to listen attentively, what he did not understood and what he want to add as he remind how to continue. My question is very simple: is it initial version or it's which corrected by Abramovich later?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I imagine this is the finalised version. Could Mr Rabinowitz and Mr Sumption agree that this is the final version?

MR SUMPTION: I am told that there are minor translation issues in relation to just the text but not the commentary which have yet to be resolved but I also understand that they don't actually affect the substance of the matter.

THE WITNESS: No, no, my Lady, I'm sorry --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, I'm going to direct that we work on this one at the moment. If Mr Rabinowitz has any concerns with the cross-examination on the current translation, that is something he will have to raise in re-examination with you.

Are you content with that, Mr Rabinowitz?

MR RABINOWITZ: I am, my Lady.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Let's proceed on this at the moment, please.

THE WITNESS: Thank you.

MR SUMPTION: I am not going to ask you about

Mr Abramovich's comments because that's a matter for his evidence. But if you look at box 81 on E6/01/34, or you may prefer to look at it in the Russian version --

A. I just want to mention, I don't care about Abramovich comment; I care just correction of initial text. This is important point.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, we're going to proceed for the moment on the footing that this is a correct translation but if you want to make any points about the translation when giving your evidence, you must feel free to do so.

- A. No, I worry just about the other point: I worry that Abramovich added the text. It's only translation or it's added text? This is simple question.
- Q. No, Mr Abramovich has not edited the text.
- A. Good.
- Q. You mustn't be so suspicious, Mr Berezovsky.
- A. Yes, okay. No, no, because he added text at the last his correction.
- Q. Do you see at box 81, which is on page 34 in the version that the rest of us are looking at, Mr Abramovich is on the phone? Do you see that?
- A. Just a second. Yes.
- Q. And he is on the phone to Ms Panchenko, who is the accountant. That's not apparent from here but --
- A. It's his statement that it's Mrs Panchenko.
- Q. Absolutely.
- A. I didn't comment that.
- Q. Yes, I quite understand that you have no direct knowledge of that. But what happened was that he rang somebody, and I'm telling you it was Ms Panchenko, and he then handed the phone over to Mr Patarkatsishvili -- see boxes 83 and 84 -- so that he could discuss with the accountant directly.
- A. Yes. Yes.
- Q. And then, it's obviously a bit difficult to follow only one side of a conversation that's been recorded but if one turns to box 90 at E6/01/36 --

A. Just a second. Now we go to box 90?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes.

Q. -- it looks as if it's been established during that phone call that there is $85 million outstanding from the $305 million. Do you see that?

A. Yes, I see that.

Q. Right, and that seems to have been agreed.

Now, I'd like you to turn on from there to a different subject covered by this transcript at box 159, which is at E6/01/59.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, that is a discussion, isn't it, of the raid by the police on ORT's offices in Moscow which had happened the day before?

A. You're absolutely correct, 5 December 2000. It's the point where we start to recognise when happened this meeting.

Q. Yes. In your commentary on this, you appear to suggest -- and your commentary is quite a long commentary on this box but the essential point is at the bottom of E6/01/61 to 62.

A. Sorry, again?

Q. In the version I'm looking at at E6 --

A. Yes.

Q. -- it's at the bottom of pages 61 and 62 of the page numbering.

A. Could you please -- because I want the other version in Russian, better for me -- could you just refer to the box, 90 or 89?

Q. Well, I'm referring you to the box but it's a very long commentary on this box.

A. Yes, yes, yes. It's just one box, 158 -- 9?

Q. 159, Mr Berezovsky.

A. Yes.

Q. Towards the end of your commentary on that box --

A. Okay.

Q. -- in fact the last paragraph of your commentary on that box, you say:

"When Mr Abramovich returned to Russia without our Signatures..."

That's on the ORT contract.

"... Mr Putin realised that he needed to increase the pressure to make us sell. Consequently, the following day, 7 December 2000, Mr Glushkov was arrested."

A. It's correct.

Q. What you are saying there is that it was because of what happened at Le Bourget, or what didn't happen at Le Bourget, that Mr Glushkov was arrested on the following morning?

- A. You're absolutely correct because it's absolutely -- my Lady, and I want to make a special comment to that for better understanding because it's absolutely the way of KGB black op. At 5th they organise their Maski show, they demonstrate power, at 5th; at the 6th, Abramovich came to discuss that push us to sign papers and ask how I -- "Vladimir Vladimirovich Putin is waiting, I need to report him", "to report him" we will find here; and on the 7th, because we did not give clear answer to Abramovich that we sell, and next day they arrest Nikolai Glushkov.

Just understanding how I worry about that, because I put direct question to Mr Abramovich, "Tell me, Roman, could Nikolai be arrested?" And Roman said, like, "I think not, I think not. Not likely. I think not".

It means that it's typical KGB way. Everybody know from their classical books that the threat, then negotiation; and if negotiation is not successful, another threat. This my understanding, I'm sorry.

- Q. Now, the first question I want to ask you about this part of your commentary is: did Mr Abramovich have a draft agreement for the sale of ORT with him at Le Bourget ready for you to sign?

A. I haven't seen anything what Abramovich had but they discuss with Badri that everything almost ready.

Q. You see, he didn't.

A. But Abramovich insist, "Let's sign something".

Q. His evidence is that he did not have an agreement with him for signature --

A. No, no, no, no.

Q. -- and I think your last answer indicates that you never saw one?

A. You're correct. It doesn't mean that it didn't exist.

Q. Right.

A. I haven't seen that. You're correct.

Q. Now, if he didn't have an agreement for signature, he certainly can't have pressed you to sign such an agreement at the Le Bourget meeting, can he?

A. Mr Sumption, it doesn't mean like you just now mentioned. I haven't seen, it means that I'm sure that if Abramovich be sure that we are ready to sign, he could have this agreement with him or some paper to sign, because if you really read attentively the text, Abramovich told absolutely clear, "Can you sign something that I report Mr Putin that we are -- that you are selling -- you sold ORT". This is the point. And Abramovich mentioned that directly in Le Bourget.

- Q. Mr Abramovich never asked you to sign any particular document at Le Bourget, did he?
- A. Particular, no, but the sense what he was asking to sign is absolutely clear: to report Mr Putin, how he said directly, that we made a deal. This is the point, to sign anything.
- Q. Now, the next aspect of this I want to ask you about is your suggestion that it was because of the non-signature of something at Le Bourget that Mr Glushkov was arrested. As I understand what you said a few moments ago, this is something that you infer from the sequence of dates: the raid on the 5th, the meeting on the 6th and the arrest on the 7th.
- A. You are absolutely correct.
- Q. Right.
- A. And my clear understanding is that Abramovich like to get clear answer, clear understanding that we finalise the deal, and he did not get. He did not get. And it is reason why he several time mentioned, "What I need to report Vladimir Vladimirovich?" What he means, like not -- to convince us to finalise the deal, and he did not get that. And the next day they arrest Mr Glushkov. And I put direct question to Mr Abramovich, "What do you think about Nikolai, could he be arrested?" Because I start to worry about that because I already calculate.

Mr Sumption, you as a professor understand that it's impossible just to take one point without understanding what happened before and day after. And it's absolutely clear it's KGB black op operation. That's it.

- Q. You had known for five weeks at the time of the Le Bourget meeting, hadn't you, that Mr Glushkov was going to be arrested?
- A. Definitely not. I'm not -- he could be arrested, I know that well. He could be arrested. He took a risk. Moreover, Nikolai Glushkov -- you will have chance to question him -- I recommend him to leave Russia. He refused that. He did not believe. And I believe because I knew -- I know -- I already can recognise these people better. It's the reason why I left Russia.
- Q. Yes. When you left Russia, you advised Mr Glushkov that he should leave Russia as well, didn't you?
- A. We discussed that with him.
- Q. Yes. You advised him that he should leave Russia?
- A. He's already not young man and he made his personal choice but I talked to him about that.
- Q. Did you advise him that he should also leave Russia; yes or no?
- A. As I recollect, yes.
- Q. Right. So you obviously anticipated at the time that you left Russia that he was going to be arrested?

A. I think that he could be arrested, yes.

Q. The occasion which finally pushed you into leaving Russia was that on 30 October you learnt that you were going to be summoned for questioning by the public prosecutor on 13 November, didn't you?

A. No, main reason was, as I mentioned yesterday, that president of Russia, Mr Putin, said that he has a cudgel in his hand to hit me on the head. This is a little bit more dangerous than the other reasons.

It means that clear that after that Prosecutor Office start to operate in the manner like they know how to operate, just starting to increase pressure, they press me to leave my house, which I rented years, stay with my family, with my children, and then they start to make other -- I don't recollect exactly. I wrote in my statement how they developed the pressure: opening again investigation, then calling me to General Prosecutor Office to meet and finally issue -- finally issue warrant to arrest me. But this happened a little bit later.

But, as I recollect, on 13 November 2000 I was invited for questioning to Prosecutor Office.

Q. Yes.

A. But I have been that time already abroad when I was --

Q. On 30 October the deputy public prosecutor,

Mr Kolmogorov, publicly announced, did he not, in a live television interview in Russia, that you were going to be charged with misfeasance related to Aeroflot? He publicly announced that, didn't he, on 30 October?

A. I don't recognise the 30, I think 31 October, but maybe 30 October, you are correct. But it's happened, it's correct.

Q. That's what Mr Glushkov tells us in his witness statement.

A. But it's clear to clarify, I think 31 October it was.

Q. Well, he says 30 October --

A. Okay.

Q. -- and that is consistent with the documents that we have.

A. Good.

Q. Now, when Mr Kolmogorov gave that interview, he also said, did he not, that he was proposing to charge Mr Glushkov?

A. Yes.

Q. So you had therefore known at the time of the Le Bourget meeting for five weeks that not just you but Mr Glushkov were going to be charged?

A. Yes, I knew that, definitely.

Q. Yes. And if they charged Mr Glushkov, that meant that they were going to arrest him, didn't it?

- A. It's -- you already know the practice of Russian KGB because if they --
- Q. Not dissimilar to other police forces.
- A. -- if they invite someone to questioning, it's practice that the same day they practise to arrest, yes? And it was really my worry that Glushkov on the one hand did not follow my advice and understand that he could become hostage and it was my worry about that.
- Q. Now, in the middle of November your newspaper, Kommersant, reported that when Mr Glushkov appeared for interrogation he was going to be arrested. Do you remember that?
- A. Again, I don't remember that definitely but I just now present you the regular practice of General Prosecutor Office that people -- that people are invited for questioning and in the second it could be that they -- from the witness could be converted to suspicion. And it's exactly happened when Mr Kolmogorov, to whom you refer, after Putin took cudgel in his hand, inform immediately that Berezovsky could be turned from witness to suspicion.
- Q. At the time of the Le Bourget meeting you and everybody else close to Mr Glushkov knew already, didn't you, that the date fixed for Mr Glushkov's appearance at the interrogation by the prosecutor was 7 December?

A. Yes, it's correct.

Q. Right. And presumably you also know that Mr Glushkov was tipped off by a friend in the security services about that also? That's what he says in his witness statement.

A. Look, you know, there is a principal point here and the details are important. As I know, Glushkov came to this questioning with a suit, yes, not with the heavy things which people are prepared -- when people are prepared to go to jail. It's very important. For example, when Badri met Mr Patrushev, when he was invited and after that they go to president together -- maybe you remember, my Lady, we discussed that -- Badri took his sweater, Badri took his special trousers, being prepared to be arrested.

Nikolai Glushkov was not prepared to be arrested, even at that situation. And I think it's -- some details are important to understand what Glushkov feels, not what I feel, yes? This is important.

Q. You did think that he was going to be arrested on the 7th anyway?

A. Definitely not. I hope, and it's the reason I ask Abramovich and he gave me the positive indication, not negative indication. But my question definitely create for Abramovich clear impression that Glushkov is very important for me because I did not participate attentively when they discussed the numbers, and you will see that clear. But I really worry about Nikolai and it's reason why I put the question to Abramovich.

Q. Well, so far you've given two answers to this question. On one occasion you have said that you were aware he was going to be arrested on the 7th; you now say that you were not. Can I ask you to look at your commentary at box 642, please, which is E6/01/206, box 642.

A. Just a second.

Q. Do you have box 642?

A. Just a second. I've got it, I just try to read it, okay? Because the first -- I read the question in Russian -- the comment, the transcript. (Pause)

Yes.

Q. Now, that confirms, does it not, that you were aware at the time of the Le Bourget meeting that he was going to be arrested on the following day or interrogated --

A. Definitely not. Mr Sumption, if I were aware, why I should put question to Abramovich if I already aware? As you mentioned before, I knew that Glushkov already is invited, I'm sorry --

Q. Yes, for the next day.

A. Mr Sumption, please let me finish. Invited. And if I was sure, as you tried to explain my Lady, it's not correct, because it's exactly the question which I put Mr Abramovich. If I was sure, I didn't put this question or at least would get the answer that: yes.

Even Abramovich has doubt about that, more informed than me. Definitely I'm not informed like Abramovich at the time being informed. And if Abramovich created doubt that he could -- no. His answer is, "I think no", this answer from Abramovich, and for me he is an expert now, much more than me, because he is in Moscow, I am not. And as I told you, referring how Glushkov was prepared for this meeting, he was in suit. Nobody who is prepared to be arrested goes to the suit to Prosecutor Office.

Q. I will come to Mr Glushkov in a moment.

A. Thank you.

Q. Let's just look at what you wrote. Did you write in your commentary, which is part of your witness statement:

"I, and everyone close to Mr Glushkov, was aware that he had been summoned to the Prosecutor-General's Office for an interrogation interview on 7 December..."

Did you write that?

A. Yes, yes. Yes, I wrote that.

Q. And was it true? Were you aware of that?

A. I knew that he next day should be in General Prosecutor

Office.

Q. Yes, and you told us a few minutes ago that the practice was that when you turned up for interrogation, you were arrested?

A. The practice was that it's not definitely that he -- many people go to Prosecutor Office and were not arrested. Many people. But one of the terrible practices that people are invited as a witnesses and then transfer to the suspicions and arrested. But it's not the regular way what Mr Sumption tried to insist. It's happened like that, it could happen with Glushkov, and it's the reason why I ask Abramovich, "What do you think about that?" And his answer is completely opposite. He said, "I think no".

Q. Mr Berezovsky, Mr Glushkov in his witness statement said that on 13 November it was announced in Kommersant that he would be arrested at his interrogation and he says:

"From then on, I knew that I would be arrested and detained."

Now, you're not questioning Mr Glushkov's evidence about what he himself knew, are you?

A. No, I -- Glushkov is writing his witness himself, not me. I never even, I'm sorry to say, I haven't seen his witness statement. But again, as far as my clear understanding, Glushkov -- whatever Glushkov is writing now, my understanding is completely opposite. Glushkov didn't exclude that he could be arrested but he did not know that he would be arrested.

Q. You were very close to Mr Glushkov and in constant contact with him before his arrest, and with his lawyers, weren't you?

A. I was not in very close contact with him because I had a lot of headaches except of that, but definitely I worry about Glushkov. He is my closest -- one of the closest friends and definitely we discuss that and it is reason why I think that he also should leave Russia, it's correct.

But, on the other hand, nothing more than I said and it's just confirmation that you tried to -- as I understand, you suggest that I knew that Glushkov was arrested. No, as I told you before, my Lady, I am optimist. If we maybe have much more evidence that he could be arrested, I think that he will not. This is the problem.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, if the prosecutor had announced his intention to charge Mr Glushkov five weeks before the Le Bourget meeting and if you already knew, as you have admitted in your witness statement, that he was going to be arrested, then the Le Bourget meeting cannot have had anything to do with his arrest on the 7th, can it?

A. Completely wrong. Moreover, Mr Sumption, go a little bit ahead. As, my Lady, I told you yesterday, I forgot about Le Bourget meeting at all and definitely I analysed how it's happened that so important meeting I forgot. And now I know the answer absolutely clear: because I was so shocked that Glushkov was arrested.

You know, like maybe you have a mother who is sick and you know that one day maybe she will die, but when she dies it's shock; and definitely for me it's absolutely shock that Glushkov was arrested. Again, particular because Abramovich answer is, "I think no". And after Glushkov was arrested, later on, I didn't have any doubt that Abramovich played game together with Putin and the Prosecutor Office and so, no doubt at all. This one of my key -- turn point.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, I've referred you to what you yourself said at box 642. It's inconsistent with the untruthful evidence that you have been giving for the last five minutes, is it not?

A. No, it's absolutely truthful what my understanding -- what is written in box -- in my comment box 642 and my answer now.

Q. Right. Let's look at box 234, which is at E6/01/93.

A. 200...?

Q. E6/01/93, box 234.

A. 200...? Sorry, I'm sorry.

Q. 234.

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. Now, this is where Mr Patarkatsishvili turns to the proposed sale of ORT to Mr Abramovich.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, it is obvious, isn't it, from the fact that he is raising this subject that there had been previous discussions between him and Mr Abramovich about the sale of ORT, hadn't there?

A. And not only between him and Mr Abramovich; also between me and Badri as well.

Q. Right. Well now, what he says in 234, if you'd just like to read the Russian text of the tape, is that:

"We had a problem with Borya..."

That's you.

A. Yes.

Q. But that had been sorted out and he, Mr Patarkatsishvili, was now ready to go ahead. That's essentially what was being said, wasn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. So it looks as if already on 6 December there had been an agreement in principle which everybody was ready to go ahead with?

A. Everybody are not go -- are not prepared to go. As

I told you, Badri and me, we had different understanding what is happened and different approach what to do. My position was absolutely clear: I was not prepared to sell ORT till Nikolai was arrested. Badri tried to play kind of game, as I understand, try not to cut our relations decisively and so. And he is playing his game because he knew perfectly that I am not in position to sell ORT that time.

Q. Well, let's have a look at what he said.

A. Yes.

Q. "We had a problem with Borya, and we sorted that out too."

So what he's referring to there, as you point out in your commentary, was your earlier resistance to the idea of selling. What he says is that that problem has been sorted out; and it had been, hadn't it?

A. Again, Mr Sumption, it's absolutely the same answer.

Badri play his game, I play his game, because I knew already the pressure and the pressure was not -- the source of the pressure was not Mr Abramovich; the source of the pressure was president of Russia, who made clear statement, eyes to eyes, I mean me and him on the one hand, and when I did -- I mean our meeting in Kremlin in presence of Voloshin, when he said that I should immediately transfer my shares under State control. And after that, when I refused to do that, after that he made a clear statement that he has stick to hit to my head. What do you think, it's not impressive enough? It's impressive.

But again, I already start to collect people for TV trust and I took some obligations, and only after Glushkov was arrested I deny my obligations because I recognise that people are in danger because Glushkov already in jail and they follow him to jail. This is only the position.

Q. You say that Badri was playing games. Please explain to us why Mr Patarkatsishvili should have said that the problem with you had been sorted out if it hadn't been?

A. Because Badri and -- you see that I -- and if you watch what has happened in Le Bourget, I didn't confirm that there. Because Badri want to say that, "Roman, I will control Boris and I am finally -- we'll find a solution with Boris", and it's clear that he said Boris was a problem, yes.

It's complicated nevertheless to understand what kind of problem that is: a problem general that I refuse to go or a problem with a payment which I don't accept. My recollection is that the problem was that he explained that he knows -- Roman knows well that I'm not prepared to sell, but I can't exclude that the same time it could be discuss about the way of payment. But my recollection is that mainly both or one and the other point.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, would you like to focus on the question, which I will ask again.

A. Mm-hm.

Q. You say that Mr Patarkatsishvili was playing some sort of game.

A. Yes.

Q. I want to try and discover what sort of game you think he was playing and my question is this: why should Mr Patarkatsishvili say that your objections to this deal had been sorted out, and say it in your presence, if it wasn't true?

A. What does mean the "game"? The game is game. And what we discuss with you, it's just mislead person who insist that we make a deal now because he want to report Mr Putin.

Q. But why --

A. And I am not prepared to give him documents to report Mr Putin that he made a deal. This only the point.

Q. I'm not asking --

A. And Badri -- I'm sorry. And Badri understood that well. He play in his way the game, trying to -- not to make deal today because he understand that I'm not prepared to make any deal.

Q. But, Mr Berezovsky, on the contrary, he is saying that there's a deal to be made today because he's saying that your objections have been sorted out.

A. Mr Sumption, it's very simple. If it's so -- let's suppose that it's so -- why it was not done? Why there was no paper which confirm that the deal was done? This is the crucial question. And why only 24 December I gave finally confirmation to Mr Dubov, who is sitting here, that we don't have choice to sell because it's price for Nikolai freedom? Why it did not happen immediately? If everything was ready.

And even when 7 December, my Lady, I announce publicly, "That's it, do this", I accept to sell because Nikolai is in jail, I don't want to danger the other journalists, and why, again, 20 days or more, allowing 20 days after, the papers were prepared? Why if they were ready now? Why it should take again 20 days more to prepare the papers? This is question.

Q. Would you have a look at boxes 235 and 236. The reference is E6/01/95.

A. Sorry, Mr Sumption, 235?

Q. 235 and 236, the very next boxes after the bit of Badri that I've been referring you to. Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. Mr Abramovich says in answer:

"We also have everything ready, as always and like everybody."

A. Yes.

Q. Mr Patarkatsishvili says:

"Yes."

A. Yes.

Q. Right?

A. Yes, yes.

Q. Now, that suggests that the two of them were in fact agreed that it would now be possible to go ahead, doesn't it?

A. Your mentioning "two of them" is absolutely correct; not three of us but two of them.

Q. In your presence?

A. In my presence and I don't comment that.

Q. And without any objection by you? You didn't say, "Hang on" --

A. But without any confirmation.

Q. Let me finish my question.

A. Sorry.

Q. You isn't say, "Hang on, I'm not agreed to all this", did you?

A. Because Badri is playing game and I don't want to destroy his game.

Q. What sort of game did you think he was playing?

A. Not to sign anything because he knows well my position, not to sign to selling ORT. This is the point.

Q. Would you look back at box 234 on page 93 in the E6 version E6/01/93.

A. Yes.

Q. After observing --

A. Just a second. 234, yes?

Q. Yes. After saying that the problem with you had been sorted out, there's a slightly obscure part of the text here but the text as appearing in the translation says:

"He..."

Or "it", I think.

"... is in England, he is ready, we disclosed the documents, everything, and we are ready to sort it all officially."

A. Mm-hm.

Q. Now, that rather obscure piece of text is a reference, isn't it, to the fact that you and Mr Patarkatsishvili intended to credit the proceeds of the ORT sale to trust accounts in England?

A. Mr Sumption, it's absolutely correct. On the other hand, again and again I repeat the same point, and the point is very simple, my Lady: where is the result? If it's everything like Mr Sumption try to present, not like me, suppose Mr Sumption is absolutely correct that deal already done, no questions, why after that it took 20 days more, and only after Nikolai was arrested, when I confirm that I'm ready to sell? If everything is done already, as you try to insist, and Badri said done, I don't object, why not to sign next day or day after? Why it takes 20 days more to make this deal happened?

Q. Because, Mr Berezovsky, Mr Abramovich had an election campaign to fight in Chukotka and it took time to get the documents prepared and to sort that out with Logovaz?

A. Really? I have completely opposite information. I know that people what I read in the witnesses of Mr Abramovich said that they plan -- they were waiting for Mr Abramovich. My Lady, it's important what Mr Sumption mentioned now. They waited Mr Abramovich on 5 December to fly with them to Chukotka but they postponed -- but Abramovich postponed to fly, yes? And they fly without Abramovich even. I don't remember on the 7th or on the 8th or the 9th, but later on.

And now Mr Sumption gave us answer why it's happened: because Abramovich promised Mr Putin definitely to get a result and he did not. And the result he wants to get -- again, Mr Sumption, I would just to remind you why Mr Abramovich was in hurry:

because Putin was in hurry, because on 24 January, according of the government or presidential decree, government elections in many Russian regions were planned to happen and Abramovich as well participate as a -- at these elections, and Putin was in hurry to put under control ORT at that time to be sure that nothing happened wrong in information -- in information space. This is the point.

- Q. Mr Berezovsky, on your own case, as it emerges now from your latest witness statement, you decided to sell on 7 to 10 December and it still took 20 days to sort the documents out, didn't it? Your present case is that you decided to sell between 7 and 10 December --
- A. Mr Sumption, you are absolutely correct. It means that it took time. Everybody need to take time to prepare the papers. If papers would be ready, it will be signed next day.
- Q. Right.
- A. The papers were not ready. This is the reason why the signature --
- Q. That's exactly what I put to you a moment ago.
- A. Just a second. It's the first. And the second reason why: after that I had discussion with Mr Abramovich about conditions, final conditions, and the final conditions was releasing of Mr Glushkov, not money sense. And this is the reason why they were not signed immediately, the basic reason.

Q. Would you go to box 237 again E6/01/96. We've looked at it before for a different reason. The point which is being made by Mr Abramovich here is this, isn't it: Mr Abramovich was saying that he's dealing, is he not, with the problems of paying the ORT proceeds to you in the west? Do you agree with that?

A. Yes.

Q. And what he says is:

"The simplest thing would be to do what (Gorodilov) was explaining..."

And Mr Gorodilov had been on the phone.

A. Mm-hm.

Q. "... to me last night: we transfer part of the money in Moscow from Moscow to a person who would, you know, to your account, say, 20 million dollars. The rest we shall transfer to the West..."

A. Yes.

Q. Now, that's a reference, isn't it, to potential exchange control problems that might be encountered in making payments out of Russia?

A. I think so. I think so.

Q. And you had your own reasons for not wanting to receive funds in Russia, didn't you --

A. I have --

Q. -- because there was a threat of criminal proceedings against you?

A. No, that was not against -- because of criminal proceedings; because I knew well that Russian may freeze my money using this criminal proceeding.

Q. So Mr Abramovich is referring to a proposal from Mr Gorodilov that a small part of the money should be paid to you in Russia and the rest outside?

A. Yes, it was proposal by Mr Abramovich and Badri; I don't remember well how they decide to do that. But it's -- at this paper, it's Abramovich proposal.

Q. Now, if you look at box 238 E6/01/97,

Mr Patarkatsishvili says:

"No, in fact, when we made our agreement, when we made our agreement in Moscow, yes, you said the following: that as you are taking it all on your account, I mean, you are the one who is paying for it, right, so you will not have any problems with transfers, because the payment transfer will originate from the West."

A. Yes.

Q. Now, what do you say was the agreement to which Mr Patarkatsishvili is referring in that box?

A. I said -- I don't comment that. No, I comment that --

I comment then lower.

Q. Well, comment on it to us now, will you, please. What do you say was the agreement to which Mr Patarkatsishvili is referring?

A. Again, the question? What is the question again? I'm sorry.

Q. What do you say is the agreement to which Mr Patarkatsishvili is referring in box 238?

A. Here, I will comment that below.

Q. Well, what is your answer?

A. My answer is that I comment that below and --

Q. Can you not remember what you think about this, Mr Berezovsky, without finding it in your commentary on this transcript?

A. I don't remember that, definitely.

Q. You don't remember?

A. As I told you, I even don't remember initially that this meeting happened.

Q. Well, it's obvious, isn't it, that Mr Patarkatsishvili is referring in your presence to an agreement that he has made with Mr Abramovich in Moscow about the sale of ORT?

A. It's correct.

Q. Right. What he --

A. Not made; is preparing and is discussing.

Q. And what he is saying in this box is that he had been assured by Mr Abramovich that when they reached agreement in Moscow, Mr Abramovich had said "We'll find a way somehow or other to pay the money in the west". That's the point he's making, isn't it?

A. Yes, it's correct.

Q. Now, if you would turn on to box 249, which is at E6/01/99. This is part of a discussion between Mr Abramovich and Mr Patarkatsishvili --

A. Yes.

Q. -- about Russian exchange control problems.

A. Yes.

Q. And it's in this context, isn't it, after the conversations we've just been looking at, that Mr Abramovich refers to his conversation with Mr Putin, box 249?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay?

A. Yes.

Q. And in his witness statement Mr Abramovich says that he had spoken to Mr Putin in order to make sure that the government would not object to his buying ORT and had been told that it would not object. This is Mr Abramovich reporting that conversation to you, isn't it?

- A. That Mr Putin will not object it? This happened at Le Bourget, Mr Abramovich said that -- described how Mr Putin will help or not help to organise payment for ORT. It's the first time when I had clear identification that Abramovich is a messenger from Mr Putin and he has direct connection to Mr Putin and obligation, some kind of obligation to help Mr Putin to convince us to sell ORT. It's true.
- Q. Well, all he said is that he's gone to Mr Putin to find out what Mr Putin's view would be about an acquisition of ORT, which was majority government-owned, by him. That's all he said, isn't it?
- A. Yes, he said many things and including that. But the main point is his phrase, "Can I report already Vladimir Vladimirovich". It means that it's absolutely clear target of Abramovich at this meeting to find the final decision of us that he may report Putin that everything is done.
- Q. And he returns to that subject, doesn't he, at box 259 E6/01/102, when he says -- this is referring to Putin:
- "He doesn't want to say 'yes'... He says, 'If you can sort it out yourselves, so it doesn't involve me, then I don't mind, go ahead...'"
- That was what he was saying Mr Putin's reaction was to the possibility of him, Mr Abramovich, acquiring the 49 per cent stake in ORT?

- A. Yes, because Putin has just one target, to obtain control over 49 per cent and he said, "Roman, find the solution yourself, find the solution with Badri, with Boris, it doesn't matter for me how you... don't involve me to this money sense transaction". That's it. Nothing more. And Abramovich is proposing how to find the solution.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, it may assist if we just finish this rather turgid transcript before we have the break.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, very well.

MR SUMPTION: I don't think it's going to take much longer.

Could you turn on, please, to box 339, which is at E6/01/123.

A. 339?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, this is the conclusion of a very long series of exchanges about Mr Gorodilov's proposals for getting the money to you in the west.

A. Yes.

Q. Okay?

A. Yes.

Q. I'm not going to go through all the previous discussions about that rather technical subject.

A. Yes.

Q. But at box 339 you will see -- and I'll ask you just to remind yourself in a moment of what it says -- that Mr Abramovich telephoned Mr Gorodilov in the course of this meeting; Mr Abramovich handed the phone to you so that Mr Gorodilov could explain the payment method. That appears from 340.

A. Yes, it's correct.

Q. Sorry, to Mr Patarkatsishvili, isn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. Sorry, not to you.

The next 40 boxes or so are Mr Patarkatsishvili's side of a conversation with Mr Gorodilov interspersed with occasional exchanges directly between you and Mr Abramovich.

A. Yes.

Q. And then at box 402, which starts off at E1/01/136 --

A. Just a second.

Q. -- the conversation ends with Mr Patarkatsishvili saying in effect that he doesn't mind where the money comes from, provided it gets to London.

A. Yes.

Q. And Mr Abramovich and Mr Patarkatsishvili both agree about that.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, then, if you turn on to boxes 403 and 404 you'll see that they agree about that --

A. Sorry, box?

Q. Well, you've confirmed that that was agreed?

A. Yes, it was agreed between Abramovich and Patarkatsishvili.

Q. At the end of box 402 he hands the phone back to Mr Abramovich.

A. 40...?

Q. End of 402. Okay?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, at box 406 E6/01/139, if you move on a bit, Mr Patarkatsishvili tells Mr Abramovich that he will organise the mechanism for payment of the ORT proceeds straightaway.

A. Yes.

Q. And there's then a discussion about some other things that Mr Patarkatsishvili wants Mr Abramovich to pay. And at box 408 you refer to -- at 407 you'll see Mr Abramovich is still on the phone to Mr Gorodilov and at 408 the text says:

"Borya, well, we need to finish this off, don't you think? So a decision must be taken, one way or another, right? I am absolutely fine with what I am being offered..."

That's Mr Patarkatsishvili to you. And your comment is this is Mr Patarkatsishvili "continuing to string Mr Abramovich along".

A. It's correct.

Q. How could Mr Patarkatsishvili have been trying to string Mr Abramovich along when Mr Abramovich was not a party to this conversation but was on the telephone to Mr Gorodilov?

A. No, it's very -- it's absolutely simple: that -- just a second -- that understanding well that Abramovich is present in here and continue to do absolutely the same because, as I told you, Mr Sumption, if it was agreed, the question is why it was not signed. The position is absolutely the same: that not Badri, not me -- not Badri, maybe he accept that, but me definitely he knew absolutely perfect that I am not prepared to make any step to sell ORT shares.

Q. Now look, please, at box 428.

A. Just a second.

Q. Yes? 428. It's at E6/01/148.

A. Just a second. 428.

Q. Have you got box 428?

A. Yes.

Q. Would you read boxes 428 to 431, quite short bits of text.

A. Yes, yes. (Pause)

Yes.

Q. Now, Mr Abramovich says:

"We could now close this deal as it is, and later -- I promise -- we shall always find understanding on this matter..."

And Mr Patarkatsishvili says:

"Sure, sure..."

A. Yes.

Q. And Mr Abramovich says:

"(So then) we shall finalise this deal, so that I could report on it without further ado, (that) the deal is done..."

And Mr Patarkatsishvili says:

"No problem..."

A. Yes. But if you go a little bit -- sorry, sorry.

Q. What I am suggesting to you, Mr Berezovsky, is that this shows that while the formal documents would no doubt have to be agreed and signed later, the deal was done in principle by this stage, was it not?

A. Definitely not. Because it's not occasionally that Abramovich mentioned in paragraph 432, if you read that -- 432. I just want to find that in English.

The purpose why Abramovich is in hurry, he phoned me later himself, absolutely clear:

"... (So that he can finish the election campaign in peace)..."

This is the main reason why Abramovich want to report Mr Putin not to worry about ORT problem and, as you know, the result, the result is absolutely clear: we didn't signed anything, in spite of Abramovich was asking, "Sign please anything because Vladimir is waiting me with anything you sign". And we did not sign and next day they put in jail Mr Glushkov and everything happened automatically, nothing more.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, the boxes that I've referred you to show Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Abramovich, in your presence, agreed in principle that the deal was done, don't they?

A. In my presence, it's absolutely correct. Badri, as I told you before, played a game which he knows to play because he knew my position: that I don't accept to sell ORT. And it's absolutely clear: as a result -- I would like to stress, my Lady, that why I insist and I can confirm my position: because the deal was done on 24 or 27 December and if everything was ready, like Badri and Abramovich are discussing now, why it was not signed the next day, after I gave up and said, "Finish the story, Glushkov in jail, I ready to sign"? Why it was not signed? Only because of one reason: because it was not still a deal. It was not ready to sign.

Because what was signed finally -- and this is the question, because I didn't pay attention to this question -- what was signed finally, how it was corrected and so, it's important, maybe not so important, but what is important that it was not signed. It was not signed until 24 December. If everything was ready, why not to sign immediately? Because it was not ready.

Q. The only thing that was outstanding after this meeting was the arrangements for the transfer of the funds to the west in a way that would solve any problems related to Russian exchange control or western money-laundering regulations; that's correct, isn't it?

A. It was one of the worry what Badri had and me, if we took a decision to get the money.

Q. Finally, Mr Berezovsky, would you turn to box 449, E6/01/154.

A. 449?

Q. Box 449.

A. Yes, just a second. Yes.

Q. Mr Abramovich says there:

"What, then, should we sign then so that I could take it to Vladimir Vladimirovich, show it to him and say: here you are, the deal is done..."

He's asking what documents should be signed so that he could establish that the deal is done.

A. Yes.

Q. And Mr Patarkatsishvili, two pages further on at box 450 E6/01/156, says:

"... we have signed everything. Now, as soon as the payment goes through, they can already get the shares... we have already signed everything (we have everything signed)."

Now, that is a reference, isn't it, to the fact that all of the preliminary steps necessary to transfer the shares, such as the issue of the pre-emption notices and so on, had been sorted out in Moscow in the course of November with Mr Gorodilov?

A. It's very good word what you mentioned now, "preliminary signed". I hadn't seen anything preliminary signed, yes? I hadn't seen anything preliminary signed and this is a good point. And moreover, as I have clear recollection, Mr Dubov called me surprising that he should sign paper on 24 or 20 -- 24, I think, December and only that time the papers were completed; not before.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, that would be a moderately convenient point to break.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Have we finished with this transcript?

MR SUMPTION: Yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well. I'll take ten minutes.

(11.32 am)

(A short break)

(11.44 am)

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, having told your Ladyship as we rose that we could put away E6, there is one thing that I should perhaps --

A. I'm sorry, I don't have it.

Q. -- have pointed out to the witness. Perhaps the witness can be given E6 again. If you could find for the witness box 408 E6/01/140.

A. 408?

Q. 408, yes.

A. Oh, we miss that. E6. 408. We miss these papers.

Q. Sorry?

A. We miss these papers, there is no papers. We have 400 and then 426.

Q. Well, you certainly had it 20 minutes ago because I asked you a different question about this, so I'm not sure what's happened to it.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: It's page E6/01/140 in the English.

MR SUMPTION: Can somebody find the witness box 408, please, or the piece of paper on which it was once written.

THE WITNESS: Because it doesn't --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Are you looking at it in the Russian?

THE WITNESS: I look not. I look at the English translation, Russian text and commentary in English and there is no papers with --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: The page is missing.

THE WITNESS: The page is missing here.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: You look at it in the Russian then.

THE WITNESS: Yes, yes.

MR SUMPTION: Now, between boxes 408 and 411 there is a private conversation between you and Mr Patarkatsishvili while Mr Abramovich is on the telephone. Do you see that? You can see he's on the phone from 407 and from 409.

A. Just a second. (Pause)

Yes, yes.

Q. Right. Now, the private conversation that you had while Mr Abramovich was on the phone consisted of Mr Patarkatsishvili saying:

"Borya, well, we need to finish this off, don't you think? So a decision must be taken, one way or another, right? I am absolutely fine with what I am being offered..."

And then he continues, 410:

"The only thing is, they're saying that we should make the transfer from offshore... This will not, in any case, achieve legalisation, right? Therefore, what is the point of it for us?"

And you say:

"Yes."

Now, there's then a further conversation about the cost of legalisation which appears to be concerned with satisfying money-laundering enquiries.

Now, this isn't Mr Patarkatsishvili playing any game, is it, because this is a private conversation with you?

- A. No, it's not so. I explain you. It's private conversation that Abramovich is still hear. It's my understanding, again. And it means that Badri not -- didn't tell me in secret, yes? And he is discussing with me, you're correct, but again I want just to confirm that Abramovich still hear. I don't know what kind of acceptance of the situation Badri has. But again and again, I never gave any confirmation on any messages that I accept what they are doing, what Badri is discussing.
- Q. What you didn't say privately to Mr Patarkatsishvili was, "I'm not selling at all", did you?
- A. Again, Abramovich is here telling by telephone. It's the situation like it is and game is absolutely the same, as I understand.
- Q. Now, let's just move on to the next day, 7 December.

Mr Glushkov was arrested in Moscow on 7 December.

A. Yes.

Q. You, I think at that time were in Cap d'Antibes, having returned there from Paris the night before. Is that right?

A. I returned back to Cap d'Antibes the same day of meeting in Le Bourget.

Q. Yes. Now, you tell us in your witness statement that at the time of Mr Glushkov's arrest, his lawyers were with him. This is in fact in I think one of your later witness statements. You may be able to remember it.

Do you remember being told that his lawyers were with him --

A. Yes. He called me around -- he called me around 10 o'clock French -- European time. It was around 12.00 midday in Russia when Nikolai was arrested; immediately he called me.

Q. Right. I thought it was in fact his lawyers who called you?

A. It's complicated. My recollection is that likely it was Mr -- I don't remember -- Borovkov, I think, lawyer called me.

Q. Mr who?

A. I think my recollection is it may be Mr Borovkov, lawyers, who was lawyer, he called me. But lawyer.

I don't remember Borovkov, but I remember Borovkov as a lawyer.

Q. As I understand it, as soon as you heard the news about Mr Glushkov's arrest, you concluded that this was Mr Putin's way of getting at you. Is that correct?

A. It is correct.

Q. Now, you then immediately, after hearing the news of the arrest, decided, didn't you, that you would give to Mr Putin what you thought he wanted and sell out of ORT?

A. No, immediately I made the -- immediately I made the call to Badri, because Badri still had been in Paris that time, and I call him because -- as I remember, when I returned back from Paris I also called him; it doesn't matter -- I called him and talked to him about this news. And I don't remember well what happened then but definitely conclusion was that we are now in the corner; we don't have any choice.

Q. Right. So as soon as you heard the news of Mr Glushkov's arrest, you decided that you would have to sell?

A. I even gave interview to Ekho Moskvyy at the same day saying that I decide to sell it and I tried to conclude that in short time.

Q. Yes. Now, if you decided as soon as you heard the news of Mr Glushkov's arrest that you would have to sell out of ORT, then it can't have been any visit by Mr Abramovich to Cap d'Antibes that caused you to do so?

A. It's completely opposite. I took a decision -- first of all I try, as I told you, to recollect exact date, and it was a lot of investigation. I have done my -- my wife's recollection, my bodyguard's recollection, people who have been there, and not only; we even calculate the flights and so. Today my recollection, the most my recollection is that has happened on the 7th, the same day, or it happened 8 December.

My recollection is -- and again, my Lady, the point is that I forgot at all about Le Bourget, and I forgot at all about Le Bourget because everything what -- because Nikolai arrest was, as I told you, absolutely was shocking me and it's the reason that only later on I remind -- recollect that meeting in Le Bourget.

My recollection even now is it's happened definitely 7th or 8th but I can't make a choice and I can't --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: What are you saying happened on the 7th or 8th?

A. 7th or 8th, correct.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: What are you saying happened on the 7th or 8th?

A. It's meeting with Mr Abramovich in Cap d'Antibes.

MR SUMPTION: Well, we'll come to the date. But there's a difficulty, isn't there, before we get to that? Your evidence is that as soon as you learnt of Mr Glushkov's arrest, which was very shortly after it happened, you decided you'd have to sell out of ORT?

A. Yes, I announced that on the evening of the 7th.

Q. Yes. Well now, if you decided straight after hearing about Mr Glushkov's arrest that you were going to have to sell out of ORT, unless Mr Abramovich was already there in Cap d'Antibes when the news came through, you couldn't have been influenced by anything that he said to you, could you?

A. No. The point is that, as you remember, our discussion with Mr Abramovich in Cap d'Antibes is the condition to give up is Mr Glushkov release. And this is a key point because after that I told that I am not interested more in money at all; I am interested in just the condition should be Glushkov should be released.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, I don't think you're really grappling with the point I'm putting to you. Your case is that you would never have sold out of ORT if it hadn't been for what Mr Abramovich said to you on this visit to Cap d'Antibes. That's your case, isn't it?

A. My case is absolutely clear: that I would not sell ORT if Glushkov would not be arrested and I would not sell -- I wouldn't sell ORT if Glushkov would not be released, and this is the point which I discussed with Mr Abramovich in Cap d'Antibes. As I told you just now, I don't remember, happened on the 7th, and it means that I decree -- that I decree my position, present my position, when already Abramovich visited me or it's happened later, one day later.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, is it your case or is it not that it was Mr Abramovich's threats that caused you to decide to sell out of ORT?

A. Definitely, but threat already have done by Putin himself, putting Mr Glushkov in jail.

Q. Now, the point I'm putting to you is very simple --

A. Abramovich was just messenger of that.

Q. If you decided to sell out of ORT as soon as you heard the news from Mr Glushkov's lawyer that he'd been arrested, unless Mr Abramovich was already at Cap d'Antibes, he couldn't possibly have influenced your decision?

A. Definitely he could not influence to my decision but I still have in mind my clear understanding that the condition finally will be if Nikolai Glushkov will be released. I was very emotional, as you understand, that day and I don't remember exactly what happened. But the point is absolutely clear: that condition was to release Glushkov, in spite of I said I don't have choice, but

I have arguments to make happen that Glushkov will be released because I had hope that if he will not be released, I will not accept that.

Q. Would you please turn to paragraph 361 of your witness statement D2/17/274. What you say --

A. Just a second. Paragraph?

Q. Paragraph 361.

A. Yes.

Q. What you say is that you regarded Mr Abramovich's words to you as being an implicit threat --

A. Yes.

Q. -- that if you didn't sell out of ORT, he would keep Mr Glushkov in jail for longer.

A. Yes.

Q. That's your case, isn't it?

A. Yes, it's correct.

Q. Right. Now, you say -- see the last sentence of this paragraph -- that:

"On [this basis, and [on that] basis alone, [you] agreed to sell [your] interest in ORT."

A. You are correct.

Q. And you agreed, as I understand your case, with Mr Abramovich there and then, while he was at Cap d'Antibes, that you would sell?

A. Mr Sumption, you remember that in my interview I said:

I will take a final decision in two days, if you refer to my interview to Ekho Moskvyy. It means that I was in position -- sorry, Mr Sumption -- that I was in position: on the one hand I didn't have choice; on the other hand I want to be sure that if I sell, Mr Glushkov will be released. This is the point. And if you open my interview in Ekho Moskvyy, it's written clear: I will take a final decision in two -- in couple of days. This is the point.

Q. That is what you said to Ekho Moskvyy.

A. Yes, correct.

Q. But what you actually decided to do was to sell your shares to the State, and you made that decision immediately and certainly on the same day, the 7th, didn't you?

A. Mr Sumption, I present my position in Ekho Moskvyy like it is. Definitely I already took my decision to sell ORT shares because they put me in the corner, but I said that I need two days more to take a final decision. It means that I present my position. My understanding that I am in the corner, I was really shocked, and I present my position. But I took the final decision, as it's correctly I gave in my interview, only after we agreed that Mr Glushkov will be released because I will sell my shares in ORT.

Q. Could you please turn to bundle H(A)29/206, which will be produced.

A. H...?

Q. Somebody is just about to give it to you. Right?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you have page 206? This is a report in the Moscow Times which is based in part on an interview with you.

A. Just a second. What is date?

Q. 20 April 2001.

A. Okay.

Q. Now, if you look at the bottom of the article from the Moscow Times, what you say is:

"'Glushkov's arrest was a clear signal to me that I have to sell my stake to the State immediately'..."

A. Yes. Yes, it's true. It's correct, yes.

Q. That was true, okay. Now, you will see on the same page, about two-thirds of the way down, there's a reference to an interview --

A. Which page?

Q. Same page, about two-thirds of the way down the page, there's a reference to an interview on your website which I think was called grani.ru. That's your website address, isn't it?

A. What does mean "my website"? It's site which I funded.

Q. Yes, and which has got an awful lot about you in it?

- A. It's not -- definitely it's not correct to give any answer. Maybe they know a lot about me; maybe they don't know.
- Q. Right. Well now, I wonder if you could -- I'm afraid this is not in the bundles but we will make sure that it gets into them. I want to show you an interview with yourself that appears on the website and there's a Russian and an English version of the website. You may prefer to look at the Russian one. (Handed)
- A. When it was?
- Q. This was posted in April 2001.
- A. April 2001, yes, yes.
- Q. What you say here, if you look at the first answer under the photograph:
- "I regard this..."
- You are being asked by Mr Korsunsky, the interviewer, about a statement you made about your intentions relating to TV6.
- A. Yes.
- Q. You then say:
- "... You know that recently Kremlin bought ORT, namely the portion of shares that was owned by me and my group. It was done through Roman Abramovich, but it was done under the strongest pressure, and I would like to" --

- A. I'm sorry, I don't follow you. Refer, please, again where it is written.
- Q. The first answer that you give under the photograph of yourself.
- A. Yes, yes.
- Q. "You know that recently Kremlin bought ORT, namely the portion of shares that was owned by me and by our group. It was done through Roman Abramovich, but it was done under the strongest pressure, and I would like to point out again that I decided to sell my shares to the State on the day Nikolai Glushkov was arrested."
- A. Mm-hm.
- Q. That was the time that you made that decision, was it not?
- A. Mr Sumption, why you don't want to open my interview to Ekho Moskvyy? What is written there?
- Q. I accept --
- A. I just want to say, to tell you, immediately, the same day and so, again, it was so painful for me. On the one hand, I clear understood, my Lady, that I don't have choice after Glushkov was arrested and it's position which I presented but I definitely took some -- how to say? -- some break to understand how it could happen.
- And only way for me to sell it, even when I said after Glushkov was arrested, "It means that he will be released if I will sell, yes?" This is the point: that he will be released if I sell. And the point what I discussed with Mr Abramovich, "I accept any price you like and for me the importance is only releasing Glushkov", that's it. And I never changed my understanding of that or changed my position on that.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, when you learnt that Mr Glushkov had been arrested, you've told us that you regarded that immediately as being Mr Putin's way of getting at you to make you sell out of ORT.

A. Yes. Definitely, yes.

Q. So without Mr Abramovich having to tell you so, you realised that one way of getting Mr Glushkov out of jail might be to do what Putin wanted and sell out of ORT?

A. You are correct.

Q. You didn't need Mr Abramovich to tell you that, did you?

A. No, I need Mr Abramovich because -- Mr Sumption, definitely I told you that I didn't remember Le Bourget meeting when I describe the meeting in Cap d'Antibes initially. But later on, definitely, if you -- but nevertheless meeting in Le Bourget happened; no one able to refuse that finally. And if it's happened, it means it just was continuation for me that time because that time it was continuation for me what happened in Le Bourget.

And as a result of that, I was in position to sell and definitely I want to understand: is it possible to exchange the selling to releasing of Glushkov? We are not able now to -- again, to discuss just in Cap d'Antibes without understanding the day before happened Le Bourget and day before happened Maski show. It's not correct because all events has a logic together, only altogether; not just to pick up one of them.

Q. Look at paragraph 358, please, of your witness statement D2/17/273.

A. 300...?

Q. 358.

A. Yes, just a second.

Q. "I gave a telephone interview to the Ekho Moskvya radio station on the day of Nikolay's arrest and expressed my view that President Putin was trying to get at me via those closest to me. However, I announced immediately that I would be giving President Putin what he wanted, namely ORT. In an interview on 7 December... with NTV (which was reported in Russian newspapers), I announced that I was abandoning my plan to transfer ORT into a trust. I explained that I was doing this because the trust would have been placed under incredible pressure by the Kremlin. This was correct, but I also understood that I would have to give up ORT to the State so as to secure Nikolay's release."

A. Yes, correct.

Q. Now, my question is this, Mr Berezovsky: you came to that conclusion without needing to have any conversation with Mr Abramovich?

A. Definitely. On the one hand conclusion was without any conversation with Abramovich. On the other hand, I want to understand condition and I want to send clear message that I don't worry more about money, I worry just about releasing of Nikolai Glushkov. And as far as Abramovich already took mission to be messenger between Putin and me, he is absolutely correct person to present my position to Mr Putin.

Moreover, moreover, Abramovich said that Nikolai will be released, as I understand he already talked to Putin, I don't know, by telephone or somehow, that Nikolai -- or Voloshin, maybe, I'm not sure, president maybe with Voloshin, because he said that his message is from Voloshin and Putin, and he already said -- and he accept during our meeting in Cap d'Antibes.

Moreover, Mr Sumption, I would like to remind you that from the very beginning I told that it have been meeting in Cap d'Antibes and Abramovich at the beginning did not refuse that, did not refuse that it have been meeting. Moreover, Mr Sumption, I would like to stress you to -- again, my Lady, it's important what we are discussing, the principle important, because, as Abramovich in his witness statement, after Le Bourget I met him just once and meeting have been in Le Megeve in beginning of January. If you read the statement of Mr Abramovich in Le Bourget, you will recognise that Abramovich said, "But it was meeting between Berezovsky, Badri and me, and Berezovsky did not say anything".

My Lady, you know me a little bit, I speak maybe too much, and it's almost impossible to accept what Abramovich present in his witness statement: that after Badri was arrest, I met Abramovich the first time in Le Bourget and didn't say anything at all. It doesn't work. It's the reason why I was absolutely sure from the beginning that this meeting have been -- I forgot about Le Bourget, it's true; but when Le Bourget happened, I already create the logic of what has happened, but it's impossible that I did not meet Abramovich at all after Nikolai was arrested and met him just one forever, forever.

I said, "Roman" -- in Cap d'Antibes, I said, "Roman, this is our last meeting, I don't want to see you more". And next time I met him in Hermes shop in Sloane Street just to serve him invitation to the court; that's it.

Q. Let's get back to 7 December.

A. Yes.

Q. Your old friend Mr Goldfarb came to visit you at Cap d'Antibes on that day, didn't he?

A. Mr Goldfarb recollect that, I didn't, but I accept his recollection.

Q. Did you meet him at the airport?

A. Whom?

Q. Mr Goldfarb?

A. I don't remember that.

Q. Did he stay at the Chateau de la --

A. No, no, moreover, I am sure that I did not meet him in airport and he came to visit us because his son stay in the house near the main house in Clocher, in Cap d'Antibes the same.

Q. He stayed at the Clocher de la Garoupe, which you used as a guest house for the chateau?

A. You are correct.

Q. Did he come straight to your property from the airport?

A. I don't remember that.

Q. Well, we know that he arrived in Nice at 9.50, from his own witness statement, in the morning.

A. Yes.

Q. And he says that on his way to see you he was phoned by a journalist friend in Moscow who told him that your intention to sell out of ORT was already out in Moscow, together with reports that Mr Abramovich would be buying the shares.

A. Mr Sumption -- sorry.

Q. He says that he asked you on his arrival whether that was true and you confirmed that it was. Is that correct?

A. Yes, first of all, the first interview about Glushkov arresting I gave just, as I understand, late afternoon, not in the morning. It means that Mr Goldfarb's recollection is completely wrong.

Q. I see.

A. Moreover, I know well that I did not discuss -- not I know well -- I did not remember that I discuss with anybody except of my wife and except of Badri at that time what was happening because I afraid to -- I afraid to break my opportunity to release Glushkov.

It's the reason why, again, we discuss all the time when it happened, the 7th or the 8th. My -- again, not my recollection, my logical understanding is it happened more likely at the 7th than at the 8th, and Abramovich came with Badri from Paris and Badri came the first just to make me come, because he knows that I didn't have any doubt that Abramovich is a messenger and play game together with Putin.

Q. So is this your theory? We know that Mr Abramovich returned to Moscow on the evening of 6 December because his passport stamp records his entry into Moscow Airport on that date. You say that at some stage after Mr Glushkov's arrest on the next morning, he flew straight back to Paris, met Mr Patarkatsishvili, and the two of them came down to Nice to see you. Is that your theory?

A. Definitely not.

First of all, you're referring to passport stamp. It's a special story, my Lady, and if you'll see how long time we spent to identify what means one stamp, what means the other stamp. And until now, as I know, Mr Abramovich refuse to invite the person who gave him information how it's happening in Russia, it's the deputy of FSB --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, we don't need to go into that. Just give your evidence.

A. Absolutely, 100 per cent. It's not the base for that.

But, on the other hand, in Le Bourget transcript, which you I understand read attentively, it's clear that Abramovich said, "I will fly tomorrow". Abramovich is rejecting now that. But it's his words, as I recognise. Abramovich later on said, "No, it's not my words". But his -- my recollection, again, the most likely recollection -- I want to be very precise, my Lady -- that they came the next day, Badri and Abramovich separately. Badri came the first, just to prepare me, because he know that I didn't have any doubt that it's Abramovich and Putin together, and then Abramovich appeared. This is my -- the most likely recollection.

MR SUMPTION: Mr Berezovsky, I'm not going to cross-examine you on anything connected with the stamps for the additional reason -- and my Lady should know this -- that we have received from Addleshaws a letter saying that, having examined the original of the passport, they confirm that the 6 December 2000 stamps in both Mr Abramovich's and Mrs Irina Abramovich's passports are no longer in dispute.

Now, could you please turn to paragraph 359 of your witness statement D2/17/274. Now, you have just said in your last answer that you now clearly remember that Mr Abramovich came down to Cap d'Antibes shortly after the arrival of Badri, that Badri prepared you for the imminent arrival of Mr Abramovich and that Mr Abramovich himself then appeared. Right?

A. Yes, it's my most likely recollection.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Excuse me. When you say your "most likely recollection", a moment ago you seemed to be suggesting that you were, as it were, constructing a theory logically.

- A. No, no, no. Because my recollection -- on the one hand you're correct, my Lady. On the other hand I still have a little bit doubts about the 8th. And it means that my recollection almost -- not 100 per cent, first of all, but almost 100 per cent that has happened on the 7th.

MR SUMPTION: So you're not reconstructing from documents; you are actually recollecting almost 100 per cent that this was when it happened. Is that right?

- A. I don't reconstruct any documents, you are correct; I reconstruct just my memory. I try to understand my feelings and my memory, nothing more. On the other hand, when I present this position, definitely I try to understand how it's happened and events which happened before and events which happened after. Again, my recollection is that it's happened at the 7th.

Q. Well, Mr Berezovsky, if you have a look at paragraph 359 of your witness statement --

- A. Yes.

Q. -- what you wrote here is:

"A couple of weeks after Nikolay's arrest, towards the end of December 2000 and a day or two before Christmas, Mr Abramovich came to my house in Cap d'Antibes, where I was then living..."

- A. Yes.

Q. You obviously then did not have the recollection you've just described when you wrote this witness statement.

A. Mr Sumption, I changed my recollection many times.

Q. Indeed you have.

A. I changed my recollection many times because it was so emotional and if you look at my witness -- at my discussion with Mrs Duncan in Tel Aviv in 2000 --

Q. 2007.

A. -- 2007, you will see that I told there that it's happened shortly after Nikolai was arrested.

Q. I think you told her that it was on 17 December.

A. This Michelle Duncan, this Michelle Duncan mark 17 because initially I also want to remind it's happened on the 7th or 17th. Then definitely I recollect that it's happened on 7 December, Nikolai arrested. But I really change many times of my recollection, it's happened immediately or it's happened later, because information which influence to me, particularly Le Bourget meeting and so.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, what's actually happened is that you have put various dates as being the date when this meeting occurred.

A. Yes.

Q. Each time you identify a date, someone points out that you were somewhere else, usually on the other side of the world, when this happened, so then you try another date. That's what's happened.

- A. I didn't try anything. You put me the question: is it your reconstruction, logical reconstruction of events, or it's just because of your recollection? And I gave you absolutely clear answer. It's not reconstruction because I put logical construction: definitely I fix some point and then try to follow this way. I just present my -- my reconstruction -- my feelings, my memory, my recollection. That's it.

Because, Mr Sumption, again, I don't want to explore too much the same point --

- Q. No, I'm not surprised.

- A. -- but, my Lady, just to pay you attention, I really forgot about Le Bourget. I really forgot about Le Bourget, a principal meeting, because arrest of Nikolai was just like explosion and I forgot a lot what happened before.

It's happened once in my life when I had car accident and it's very famous story in psychology: when you have a shock, you don't remember what happened ten minutes ago or half an hour ago. I have car accident and I didn't remember what happened two hours before. I remember that well. This almost the same.

Again, I don't ask excuse. It's my recollection which unfortunately changed several times.

Q. Well now, Mr Berezovsky, you told us a few moments ago about what you said to Michelle Duncan: you said that you told Michelle Duncan that it happened on the 7th. I'm going to ask you to look at Michelle Duncan's notes of that meeting, which will be handed to you: they're in R(D)2/30/120. This is quite a confusing bundle to handle because there are internal divisions 1, 2 and 3.

A. I can take this H(A)29 --

Q. Yes, in a moment somebody, I'm sure, will remove that for you. You don't need it anymore. It's in flag 30 --

A. Just a second.

Q. I'm addressing not you, Mr Berezovsky --

A. Sorry.

Q. -- but the gentleman who is trying to help you behind.

Now, is that headed at the top of the page "Michelle Duncan's notes of Tel Aviv meetings with Badri in November 2007"?

A. Just a second.

Q. I'm not asking you, I'm asking the assistant. Right.

Could you look at it, please, and look at the top heading on the first page that's open in front of you, "Michelle Duncan's notes of Tel Aviv meetings with Badri in November 2007". Do you see?

A. Yes.

- Q. Right. Now would you please turn in the bottom left-hand numbering to page 122 R(D)2/30/122. It's the third page behind the flag.
- A. Page?
- Q. The bottom left-hand numbering, page 122. It's the third page. If you turn two pages on from the bit you've just been looking at.
- A. Yes.
- Q. Right? You will see in the margin on the left the initials "BB": that's you.
- A. Yes.
- Q. And you'll see in the second box down from the top:
"Glushkov arrest Dec[ember]."
Do you see that?
- A. Just a second. "Glushkov arrest Dec[ember]", yes.
- Q. "17 [December] RA came to France -- arranged by Badri."
- A. Mm-hm.
- Q. So the date that you actually gave Michelle Duncan was not the 7th, it was the 17th?
- A. No, it's not what I gave her, it's what she wrote here. She write nevertheless.
- Q. She wrote 17 December.
- A. Again, she wrote like that. I can't recollect that I said 17th or 7th but I think, again, that it's correct written here that I said 17th.

Q. Right, thank you.

Well now, in your statement in support of Mr Glushkov's asylum application, which was made in February 2007, you said that Mr Abramovich's threats to you were delivered at the end of December. Do you recall that?

A. I think so. I don't want to check but I hope you're correct.

Q. Right. And in your main witness statement for trial, as I've just shown you --

A. Mm-hm.

Q. -- paragraph 359, you say that it was a couple of weeks after Mr Glushkov's arrest and a day or two before Christmas.

A. Yes, yes.

Q. Now, the common feature of all these statements is that they place the meeting in the second half of December, at least ten days after Mr Glushkov's arrest. Do you agree?

A. Yes, but -- yes, I agree.

Q. Now, as I understand your evidence, it was at the meeting with Mr Abramovich --

A. It was --

Q. Let me finish the question -- at Cap d'Antibes and faced with the threat that Mr Abramovich, you say, had made to you, that you said to him, "Okay, I'll sell the shares".

Is that correct?

A. You're absolutely correct.

Q. Now, you say in your witness statement that after the meeting with Mr Abramovich -- look at paragraph 365, if you would D2/17/275.

A. 365, yes.

Q. It's just a page beyond the last bit you had open. You say that:

"After the meeting with Mr Abramovich... [you] left it to Badri and Dr... Dubov to deal with the detail of how the shares would be transferred."

Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. That's true, is it?

A. Yes. And I refer today that I met -- that I talk to Mr Dubov how the shares will be transferred at around 24 December 2000, correct.

Q. Well now, Mr Dubov was the deputy director general --

A. Yes.

Q. -- of Logovaz, wasn't he?

A. Yes, yes, correct.

Q. And Logovaz held 11 per cent of the shares in ORT-KB?

A. Yes, correct.

Q. And was that the reason why you were --

A. No, not -- just ORT, not KB. ORT-KB own 39 per cent and Logovaz itself own 11 per cent.

Q. Okay. That was why Mr Dubov had to be involved, wasn't it?

A. Correct.

Q. Now, presumably you wanted both Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Dubov to deal with the details as fast as possible?

A. They made it at the 24th and I ask them to move as quick as possible after I agreed with Abramovich that Nikolai will be released. Definitely we're in hurry to release Nikolai on the eve: on the one hand 24th; on the other hand it was birthday of Nikolai Glushkov, 24 December.

Q. Well now, if Mr Abramovich visited you at Cap d'Antibes on 7 December --

A. Mm-hm.

Q. -- why did you wait until 24 December before telling Mr Dubov to get on with organising the transfer?

A. I didn't give Mr Dubov information to organise the transfer. I confirm when Dubov called me with all prepared documents that we are doing that. He need my confirmation. It means the preparation, completely opposite to your previous discussion, started just when I decide to sell ORT and change Glushkov to ORT.

But, my Lady, on the other hand, the same meeting with Michelle Duncan, the same, and if you turn to the page 130, the page before the last, and if you will see "AP" on the top, it's written here:

"2 meetings w[ith Roman Abramovich] -- Fouquet [plus] Antibes."

It's written clear here.

Q. Now, Mr Berezovsky --

A. Threat made.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, I entirely accept that you have said before that this meeting happened but, as you will understand, the point that I am leading up to is that you've made this up.

A. Mm-hm.

Q. But we'll come to that.

Now, you may recall -- have you read Mr Dubov's witness statement?

A. Sorry?

Q. Have you read Mr Dubov's witness statement in this action?

A. No, not at all.

Q. Could I ask you to look at a part of it now, please.

Bundle D1/12. Right. I would like you to turn in Mr Dubov's witness statement to paragraph 114, which is on D1/12/285.

A. Mm-hm.

Q. Okay?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, in the previous paragraph, paragraph 113, he is describing a conversation with Mr Abramovich. In paragraph 114 he then says:

"Immediately after Roman called me on 24 December, I spoke with Boris. Boris called to tell me that I should proceed with the deal..."

Now, Mr Dubov's evidence therefore was that you telephoned him and told him to proceed with the deal on 24 December.

A. Yes.

Q. He says:

"... it was clear that he and Badri had already agreed this with Roman."

Okay?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, the question that I have for you is this: if Mr Abramovich came and threatened you and forced you to agree to sell on 7 December, as you now suggest, why did you wait until the 24th before talking to Mr Dubov?

A. It's absolutely clear: because after in principle we agreed with Abramovich that Nikolai will be released, we start to negotiate -- not me personally, I don't remember that, because, as I told you, after that meeting I never talked to Abramovich at all; it was negotiation which I think led by -- Badri leads -- that Nikolai should be released until 24th. This is the point.

And it's nothing illogical that after we took a principal decision, we want to be guaranteed that Glushkov will be released. Definitely we are not able to get written guarantee because no one could imagine that written guarantee; it means something from Mr Putin that time. But it's absolutely clear that our approach was to release Glushkov as quick as possible.

Q. You say, as I understand your evidence, that Mr Abramovich gave you that guarantee. Is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. And you now say that he gave it to you on 7 December?

A. And he gave it on 7 December, if we calculate the meeting. I recognise meeting was on 7 December.

Q. So I repeat my question: having got that guarantee on 7 December, why did you wait until the 24th in order to get Mr Dubov to act on it?

A. Again and again, if Glushkov will be released, we will immediately release the paper; but as far as Glushkov was not released, definitely we continue to insist to release Glushkov because, as I told you just before, we are not able just to have written guarantee and Glushkov will be released automatically.

Q. Why didn't you, if your story is true, Mr Berezovsky, ring up Mr Dubov on 7 December itself, immediately after your meeting with Mr Abramovich, and tell him, "I've made this agreement to sell out of ORT, please get moving on the 11 per cent that Logovaz owns"?

A. Because, as I understand, first of all Badri continued to manage this situation and to prepare all agreements and that completely coincide with my previous point of view that nothing was prepared for that.

On the other hand, as you know the result, Nikolai Glushkov was never -- was not released. It means that we insist that he should be released and they did not release him. Finally we agreed, and I remember that well, that he will be agreed (sic) on the 24th, and we wait up to the last moment; and when finally recognise that it will not happen, we decide, okay, what to do. We don't have choice now.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, it's become apparent to you, hasn't it, over the last few weeks before the opening of this trial that the date which you originally gave for this meeting was impossible because you flew to Luton on 16 December and from there to the United States, where you arrived on the 17th?

A. You're absolutely correct. As more information I have about my flight, more opportunity I have to recollect what has happened, to excluding when it can't happen.

Q. You accept that you were in Washington on 18 December and in Aspen, Colorado on 21 and 22 December, don't you?

A. I absolutely accept that and we wrote when we investigate in absolutely details all flights and all -- I reconstruct events and Alex Goldfarb remind me that I have been in Washington opening the Foundation for Civil Liberties in conference. And when we really reconstruct and reconstruct what was not -- when it was impossible to think what happened, but I think I still continue to recollect, to recollect what has happened. And it's absolutely natural way to exclude what logically impossible.

Q. And your passport stamp shows that you passed back through Luton on 26 December from America?

A. It's my stamp in the passport, it's correct. And moreover we call all hotels, all credit cards bank, all aviation, I mean the company which I use and company which even I use before, asking them to give us all information.

Q. Now, you now say, as you've told us, that this visit occurred almost certainly on 7 December; that's right, is it?

A. Yes, that's correct.

Q. That's your evidence now. Now, in your latest witness statement, you say -- and you also said this orally yesterday -- that you always remember or you usually remember events that are of great emotional significance to you. Do you remember saying that?

A. Yes. You're correct.

Q. Was the arrest of Mr Glushkov an event of great emotional significance to you?

A. The most. One of the most in my life.

Q. And Mr Abramovich's visit to Cap d'Antibes, was that an event of great emotional significance to you?

A. Much less, but also emotional strong.

Q. Now, if these two events happened on the very same day, I suggest that you would always have remembered it and you wouldn't have had to shift about choosing one date after another.

A. I was waiting this your question. It's good question. And I tell you I recollect definitely the arrest of Glushkov; I recollect definitely the meeting with Abramovich in Cap d'Antibes. I did not recollect that it's happened in the same day and I think, again, because it's so emotional, was Nikolai Glushkov arrest, that I did not coincide those two events, I did not put those two events in one day. It was too much for one day. It's the reason why initially I didn't remember that it could happen at the 7th.

Q. If Mr Abramovich came to see you at Cap d'Antibes on the 7th, after the arrest of Mr Glushkov, which occurred, you've told us, at about midday in Moscow, Moscow time, he would have had to get into an aeroplane from Moscow at mid-day Moscow time, head for Paris, meet Mr Patarkatsishvili, then come down to Nice and then arrive, according to your wife, after lunch at Cap d'Antibes to see you.

A. I don't believe in that.

Q. No.

A. As I told you, I believe that Abramovich came from Paris together with Badri and there is a plane who took three passengers, because they don't put name in the flight list, they put just number of passengers and dates. And Abramovich came, as I understand -- definitely logically, not my recollection -- came the same day.

They land in -- not in Nice airport, which happened regularly, they land in Marseilles, and then we reconstruct because that time was the summit of European leaders in Nice and they came from by helicopter or by cars, I don't know, by cars, I don't know. And Badri -- as I remember, when Abramovich came -- it's again picture in my eyes -- when Abramovich came, I already had been with Badri. I remember the room where we were sitting and this was not sunshine that day, but this is other story.

Again, it is the reason why I think that it's almost 100 per cent it's happened on the 7th, not on the 8th, and what is -- definitely it's happened. And Abramovich, it's not -- your theory that Abramovich he turn back, then returned back, as far as stamps is concerned, my Lady, it's a very special story; we will discuss that, I think, again and again. And until now, as I understand, the key witness statement (sic) is not ready to go and to give witness statement, who -- I mean this higher level officer who is head of -- who is head of custom officer, who made statement for Mr Abramovich, but he refused, I don't know why, to come as a witness statement -- as a witness.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, I don't think you need to go into that at this stage. I still have to make the ruling about that.

A. Just to let you know that it's special story about stamps is concerned. On the other hand, as I told you in Le Bourget transcript it's clear for me -- and it was not made by me, it was made by professional -- that Abramovich said, "I will fly tomorrow".

MR SUMPTION: You'll be glad to hear, Mr Berezovsky, that we won't be discussing this particular stamp endlessly because your solicitors have told us that the passport stamps of Mr Abramovich and his wife for that date are no longer in dispute.

Am I right in thinking, however, that the whole of this notion of yours that Mr Abramovich came to see you on the 7th depends on the idea that instead of going back to Moscow on the evening of the 6th, he actually stayed in Paris overnight? Is that what you're suggesting?

A. Yes.

Q. I see. Well, at least we know where you're coming from.

Now, what I suggest happened is that you remembered a meeting in Cap d'Antibes in late 2000 when you came to devise your case in this action but it was in fact the meeting of 6 November that you remembered. I'm telling you this so that you get a chance to comment on it in a moment.

A. Yes.

Q. You then made up this story about threats and associated it with the meeting that you had had with Mr Abramovich at Cap d'Antibes. Because the story that you had made up involved threats about Mr Glushkov's continued imprisonment, you had to place the meeting in December, so you placed it in December, but without checking where either you or Mr Abramovich were at the time. As a result you have simply been found out. Your story is nonsense.

Do you follow the point that I'm going to be submitting in due course? Now is your chance to say something about that.

A. I completely disagree with your way of thinking and with your conclusion.

Q. Now, you were, I think, very close to Mr Patarkatsishvili in this period, were you not?

A. Yes.

Q. Did he tell you all about his dealings with Mr Putin and Mr Voloshin?

A. What does mean "all about his dealings with Mr" --

Q. Did he tell you about them?

A. What do you mean? As I told you, I know that he visited Putin in September -- in August 2000, as I told you, convened(?) by Mr Patrushev, head of FSB. That only I know about meeting of Badri and Mr Putin.

Q. Now, you knew about that because Mr Patarkatsishvili told you?

A. About this meeting which we are discussing?

Q. Yes. Is that right?

A. Yes, definitely. Mr Patarkatsishvili told me about proposal of Putin to leave me and to stay with Putin. Yes, I know that well.

Q. And did Mr Patarkatsishvili tell you about discussions that he had had with Mr Abramovich? When Mr Patarkatsishvili had a discussion which affected both of you with Mr Abramovich, was it his practice to tell you about his discussions?

A. Not every time definitely.

Q. Usually?

A. I think mainly, yes.

Q. Now, could you please have a look at bundle R(D)1/02/13.

A. Sorry?

Q. Let the assistant get it for you.

A. Yes. What is that?

Q. Hang on. Right, do you have -- sorry, the referencing system is quite complex in this volume. Have you got flag 2 at the beginning of that volume?

A. Yes.

Q. Right. That should be a note, as you will see from the top right-hand corner, dated 30 June 2005 of a meeting with Mr Patarkatsishvili. You were not present on this occasion.

A. Yes, I think it's -- okay, I don't remember. Yes, okay, fine.

Q. Now, this is a typed up version of Mr Stephenson's note of his meeting with Mr Patarkatsishvili on that occasion.

A. Yes.

Q. Mr Stephenson, as you'll recall, was a partner of your then solicitors, Carter Ruck.

A. Correct.

Q. Now, could you turn on to page 20 at the very bottom right-hand numbering of the bundle to find the relevant part of this note R(D)1/02/20.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, you'll see a line about a third of the way down the page, a horizontal line.

A. Yes.

Q. The note records:

"Badri met Lesin..."

He was the minister of telecommunications.

A. Yes.

Q. "He negotiated -- agreed 300 [million]. That's all they had -- need to pay for Gusinsky [and] ORT. Badri wanted to sell first -- BB stubborn -- not going to sell -- did not go back to Russia. Agreements breached by gov[ernment] don't trust them."

Then he goes on:

"So we needed trustworthy man" --

A. Sorry, again?

Q. "So we needed trustworthy man..."

That's the next block of text under the line. Okay?

A. Mm-hm.

Q. "... rec[eive]d invitation from Roman to meet -- met in Paris. RA said for your sake -- I will buy shares [and] give them to government -- offered $150 [million] -- before that agreement with Roman -- for election campaign for Putin $50 [million] -- our share was $25 [million]..."

He then refers to, "Fouquet Champs Elysees 3rd table":

"NG mentioned one of main reasons to sell -- Before meeting -- even if not paid -- we will give free for NG release. -- Didn't hesitate. -- Evidently he couldn't -- Voloshin promised in personal conversation with Badri later -- not easy to persuade BB -- thought would deceive -- Badri believed should keep."

Now, what Mr Patarkatsishvili is saying there is that he wanted to sell and would have liked to accept an offer of 300 million from the Russian government and you were more reluctant, and the agreement with the Russian government for whatever reason failed. It then goes on to say, so you and Mr Patarkatsishvili needed a trustworthy man, and that was Mr Abramovich, wasn't it?

A. Mr Sumption, first of all, it's dated 2005. As I understand, it's the first time when I start to act and ask Mr Stephe -- Andy Stephenson to visit Badri in Tbilisi that time. As we know and as we'll see many times, the notes of lawyers were not absolutely the same what it was the reason to discuss -- what was the real sense of discussion. That time which Badri describe, I don't understand exactly which time he discuss, and it's correct to say that I did not want to discuss to sell at all after Gusinsky was arrested and they start to press me. That's it, because my understanding of ORT was completely different and the price even completely different. But what is the question?

Q. The question was that, after the discussions with the Russian government had got nowhere, you and Mr Patarkatsishvili decided that you needed a trustworthy man. Do you see that's recorded?

A. I don't remember that at all.

Q. And that trustworthy man was Mr Abramovich, wasn't it?

A. I don't remember that at all.

Q. And it was Mr Patarkatsishvili, therefore, who was keen to do a sale to Mr Abramovich?

A. Mr Sumption -- could you please, my Lady, allow me to have a look for the interview which was given by Roman Abramovich press secretary, I don't know, Mr Mann, in 2010 who based here, that to make story a little bit shorter, and Abramovich never refused this interview.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, I'm afraid I am going to set the agenda for this cross-examination and I want your answers about this document.

A. Okay.

Q. Right? Now, I have suggested to you that the trustworthy man was Mr Abramovich because, as we see from the note:

"... rec[eive]d invitation from Roman to meet -- met in Paris."

Do you see that?

A. Again, I can't exclude that at all. I just tell you that I don't know.

Q. Now, Mr Patarkatsishvili says in the note taken by the solicitor that Mr Abramovich offered, for your sake, to get the two of you out of the difficulty of owning ORT, now that you had fallen out with Mr Putin, by buying the shares off you. That was what Mr Patarkatsishvili told the solicitors, wasn't it?

A. No, it was solicitor wrote after he discussed with Mr Patarkatsishvili. It doesn't mean that it's exactly what Patarkatsishvili said. I'm sorry to say that.

Q. Now, Mr Patarkatsishvili is then recorded in this note as saying that one of the main reasons for selling was the position of Mr Glushkov, and we know from the material we've looked at earlier this morning that from the end of October it had been appreciated that Mr Glushkov was going to be charged and arrested?

A. It means for me now that, unfortunately, Andy Stephenson that time lost completely the subject, I am sorry to say. Because it was first discussion with Badri at all, the first meeting of solicitor, and it's completely wrong story at this point.

Q. But you weren't there, Mr Berezovsky. How do you know what Mr Patarkatsishvili told Mr Stephenson?

A. No, because I know the story, the real story. I won't -- I haven't been there but I know that Patarkatsishvili was well-informed and it's not the story which he present.

Q. Now, according to Mr Patarkatsishvili, who ought to have known, it was Mr Voloshin who had promised, in a direct conversation with him, Mr Patarkatsishvili, that Mr Glushkov would be released. Do you see that?

A. Again, I don't know anything about meeting of Mr Patarkatsishvili with Mr Voloshin, and it's exactly the reason why I have a lot of doubt what is written here.

Q. Right.

A. You're absolutely correct --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: You can't say whether there was a meeting between Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Voloshin?

MR SUMPTION: Or a phone call.

A. Yes, yes. I said that I -- I'm sure that Mr Sumption is correct, that if Badri meet Voloshin, I am almost sure that Badri inform me about that but --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Or if he spoke to him on the telephone?

A. He will tell me that.

MR SUMPTION: Well, Mr Berezovsky, he did tell you about that, didn't he, and that's why you were happy to sell out of ORT?

A. Mr Sumption, I understand, you put the question, I am not able to move away, but if you see the document which I want to present you, it's absolutely clear that I didn't want to sell ORT, including even if Glushkov would not be arrest, because the price for ORT was completely different and Mr Abramovich spokesman confirm the price was completely different. That time the price of ORT was more than billion dollars, this is the point, and this direct reference to Mr Abramovich spokesman which he gave this estimation on the -- November 2010. And again I was 100 per cent sure, no, okay, 100 per cent sure, that if Mr Badri -- Patarkatsishvili talk to Voloshin, definitely he will tell me that.

Q. Right. Because, you see, it's not just Mr Stephenson who recorded that but the same point was independently noted by Mr Lankshear also of Carter Ruck, if you would like to look on to -- sorry, he was of Streathers. If you look on behind flag 3.

A. After flag 3?

Q. After flag 3, and in the bottom left-hand numbering --

A. Just a ... Before?

Q. After flag 3.

A. It's in writing, yes?

Q. Yes but I'm going to ask you to look at the typed-up version which is at page 39.004 R(D)1/03/39.004. Do you see "PAGE 10"? It's 39.004, there's a heading "PAGE 10".

A. Yes.

Q. Right?

A. Yes.

Q. "Didn't hesitate that RA fulfil agreement. 'How would release be arranged'. Voloshin promised to release in conversation with Badri later."

Now, what actually happened was that you concluded that the best way of getting Mr Glushkov released was to sell out of ORT because of a direct conversation that Mr Patarkatsishvili had had, either face to face or on the phone, with Mr Voloshin, the head of Mr Putin's administration?

A. Mr Sumption, I don't know anything about Badri conversation with Mr Voloshin, believe me. It doesn't mean that Badri did not have but I'm almost sure, almost 100 per cent, that if Badri in this important time for us, to release Mr Glushkov, will talk to Mr Voloshin, I think he will inform me about that.

Q. Now, I suggest that the reason why, in these interview notes, Mr Patarkatsishvili doesn't mention any threat by Mr Abramovich is that there wasn't one?

A. It's your suggestion. My understanding and my proof moreover is completely different. Tell me the reason why I never met Abramovich again after.

Q. You did meet him again. You met him at Megeve early in January, that's part --

A. And it's strange that Abramovich wrote that I didn't say even one word. I met him in Megeve in January 2010 but did not talk anything at all about Nikolai's arresting, I know connections Abramovich to Putin well, that he is messenger and so, and I just keep silent. It's impossible, Mr Sumption.

Q. Now, Mr Berezovsky, in fact, Mr Glushkov was not released after the sale of the ORT shares and you say, in your witness statement, paragraph 365, that you think that Mr Abramovich deliberately arranged for Mr Glushkov to stay in prison so that he could use the same threat a second time in order to force you out of Sibneft as well?

A. You are correct -- I am correct, sorry.

Q. That is a very serious allegation. What evidence do you have for it?

A. I present my evidence in my witness statement and I can -- again, I can just, to make the story shorter and more better for understanding, my clear understanding is that after Mr Abramovich recognised how important Mr Glushkov is for us and that we, without any discussion about price or anything, agreed that Glushkov will be released if we will -- if we'll sell -- return back our shares and not to be keep in jail a long, long time. Abramovich recognise that it's -- this point is very sensitive for us.

And just later on, but not too much later because even in autumn 2000, when we have been in Russia, Abramovich already mentioned that Sibneft is under pressure because of my new and -- because of my tension with Putin and he already that time start to, already that time start to present position that we had become more dangerous for the company than even before. But when he recognised that he has amazing leverage, then he made -- he is progressing in his, I don't like to say, violence. Because initially he put Putin behind -- he put Putin in front of him as far as ORT is concerned, saying, "This is Putin, this is not me, this is Putin asking".

In Sibneft, position was different, "Putin is behind of me and you know that he is dangerous, he can do everything and I'm the person who has special relations with Putin", and he may influence -- "I may influence to his decision".

In Rusal case, he even did not put Putin at all as a name because he already was form himself, I'm sorry to say, as a gangster, yes, because he already knew that it's enough him to do any step, we are not able to do anything. It's like evolution of crime of Mr Abramovich and in Sibneft it was the same story but it's the story of Abramovich with Putin behind of him.

- Q. What is your evidence, if you have any, that Mr Abramovich deliberately kept Mr Glushkov in jail so as to be able to use the threat a second time? If you don't have any evidence, fine; if you do, now is your chance to tell us what it is.
- A. It's exactly the point. The point is that Abramovich has a great influence to Mr Putin. I don't think that Putin point was to seize Sibneft because he got that time what he want to get, ORT under his control, and recognising the importance for us of Glushkov, Abramovich used the same method, the same method, threat, and we didn't have choice. We didn't have choice for two reasons. Because, first of all, Abramovich did not deliver on the one hand that Glushkov will be released. On the other hand, he again said that he -- that Glushkov will be released and we will start negotiations, because it's long story, not just for five minutes. And it is the point that we accept absolutely seriously, serious, that this is threat and Abramovich (sic) stay in jail long, long time if we will not sell our shares or if we will not sell --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Sorry, you mean Mr Glushkov?

A. Yes, yes. Or our shares will be just seized by State or by whom, I don't know, this was the point of threat of Abramovich.

MR SUMPTION: The short answer to my question "What is your evidence that Mr Abramovich deliberately kept Mr Glushkov in jail?" is that you haven't got any evidence, isn't it?

A. I have a lot of evidence.

MR SUMPTION: I see.

My Lady, would that be a convenient break?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. Very well. I'll sit again at 2.05.

(1.03 pm)

(The short adjournment)

(2.05 pm)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, Mr Sumption.

MR SUMPTION: Mr Berezovsky, in your witness statement you say that at the meeting that you contend occurred in Cap d'Antibes in December, you concluded that Mr Abramovich was a blackmailer. That's your case, isn't it?

A. Yes. She (sic) blackmail me and made a threat from the name of Mr Putin.

Q. And you say that you felt that he had betrayed you and that you never wanted to see him again?

A. It's correct.

Q. And you say that you never in fact did speak to him again until 2007, when you served the writ in this action?

A. It's absolutely correct.

Q. Could you please have a look at bundle H(A)28/18. Now, this is --

A. Just a second. Yes.

Q. This is an extract from an interview with you --

A. Yes.

Q. -- and the Russian version you will find at page 18R on the yellow sheets. You may prefer to look at that.

Okay? Now, this appeared in Kommersant --

A. Yes.

Q. -- your newspaper, on 11 January 2001. You'll find the date in the English version on the top right of the print-out.

A. Just a -- again, the date, please? Sorry, I find it my own.

Q. If you look on page 18 in the English version, you will see the date "01-11-2001" --

A. Yes.

Q. -- which I think is the American dating because if you look in the first paragraph, you will see that it says, five lines down from the top of the first paragraph:

"Following is the text of a report by Russian newspaper Kommersant on 11 January..."

A. Yes.

Q. "... In an interview with Kommersant correspondent Natalie Gevorkyan, Boris Berezovsky commented on the situation with regard to the sale of shares in Russian Public Television..."

A. Mm-hm.

Q. Could you please look at the second page of the English or I think it's probably also the second page of the Russian.

A. Yes.

Q. I can't tell you exactly where the Russian is. But if you look at the English text on page 19, you will see, about ten lines up from the bottom --

A. Just a second. Page 19.

Q. Yes.

A. Yes.

Q. There is a question from the interviewer:

"(Gevorkyan) Will not the story of the ORT sale resemble..."

Can you see that?

A. Just a second. Which line?

Q. If you count 11 lines up from the bottom of the page.

A. Yes.

Q. "(Gevorkyan) Will not the story of the ORT sale resemble the earlier story of the sale of Kommersant..."

Do you see?

Now, would you like to find the Russian equivalent of that.

A. Yes, yes.

Q. Okay, have a look then. It will probably be on page 19R. Have you got that?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, the question that the interviewer put to you was:

"Will not the story of the ORT sale resemble the earlier story of the sale of Kommersant" --

A. Earlier story, yes, it's '9 -- just a second -- '98/'99, yes.

Q. "... when some purchaser was announced but then it turned out to be you. This time Abramovich, for example, could actually be that purchaser..."

And your answer was:

"Well, how can I rule that out? I cannot rule out anything at all. I simply know what I know and I am only saying that. I cannot say anything more than that. I trust Abramovich as a business partner.

"(Gevorkyan) Does Abramovich remain your business partner?

"(Berezovskiy) In the business that I created jointly with Abramovich he remains my partner to this day. He had no part at all in creating the ORT business."

A. Yes.

Q. Now, what you said in that interview was, "I trust Abramovich as a business partner". That seems a rather odd thing to say about somebody who has just blackmailed and betrayed you, doesn't it?

A. No, it's absolutely correct because at that time Abramovich was the person who still could be messenger between me and Putin to help to release Glushkov and that time I don't want to put Abramovich as my enemy publicly because I want to give him space to deliver what we discussed to deliver.

Q. But you didn't have to say anything about your feelings about Abramovich, did you? You could simply have said he remained your partner in other business ventures.

But what you actually said was that you trusted him.

A. Mr Sumption, I already express my vision: if I trust him at least once to discuss what happened after meeting in Cap d'Antibes, at least once I should meet him and to discuss if I trust him.

As you know, 23 January should be my birthday and I celebrate my birthday with all my friends and it's the first time when Abramovich was not invited to my birthday, it was January 33 -- 23, 2001. It means that I didn't have any trust of Abramovich but to try to -- not to explode that because Abramovich still was in position of one person who I understood perfectly was able to convince Putin to keep Glushkov in jail and to help to release him.

It's only reason why I understanding that Glushkov could stay in jail forever. I didn't want to break my public relations in -- I don't want to break in public my relations with Abramovich.

Q. You met Mr Abramovich together with Mr Patarkatsishvili at Courcheval in Switzerland on 10 January, didn't you, about the same time as you were making this statement to Kommersant?

- A. Once more, I just want to stress that I met the last time Abramovich just in Cap d'Antibes at the time -- after Mr Glushkov was arrested.
- Q. Sorry, I said Courcheval; it was actually Megeve.
- A. I didn't meet him, not in Courcheval, not in Megeve.
- Q. I see. I suggest that you had a perfectly amicable meeting, witnessed by at least one third party who will be giving evidence.
- A. Sorry?
- Q. You had a perfectly amicable meeting with Mr Abramovich in Megeve, didn't you?
- A. Once more, I want just to stress: I haven't meet Abramovich at all in Megeve. This is the first point. I didn't meet Abramovich in Courcheval as well at all. I had -- the last meeting I have had him in Cap d'Antibes and I absolutely -- and I remember the wording that I said, "Roman, I see the last time, we'll never meet again". This is the point.
- Q. You never did say that, did you?
- A. Sorry?
- Q. You never did in fact say that, did you?
- A. I said that in -- "I don't want to see you more", and this exactly what I said in Cap d'Antibes.
- Q. You were in Megeve on that day, weren't you?
- A. I have been in Megeve, as my wife recall me. I have been in Megeve in -- for vacation, and Badri had been as well, but I didn't meet Abramovich there.

Q. You knew he was there, didn't you?

A. I can't recollect did Badri told me but I'm sure he told me that Roman is here.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: The [draft] transcript has recorded at line 15, "but I did meet Abramovich there". I think your evidence you gave was "I didn't meet"?

A. I did not meet. I'm sorry, my Lady. I did not meet him.

MR SUMPTION: Could you please turn to bundle H(A)55, which you haven't got but which somebody will find that for you. You can put away the bundle I just referred you to.

A. If I can take away this?

Q. Leave your witness statement but you can put away everything else.

Now, in the volume you've just been passed, I would like you to turn to page 157.001. So the reference is H(A)55/157.001.

A. Yes.

Q. Right. This is another extract from the collection of interviews and speeches that you published under the title "The Art of the Impossible".

A. Mm-hm.

Q. Now, I would like you to turn, if you would, in the bundle numbering to page 004 H(A)55/157.004 or in the numbering in the book you might find it easier to turn to page 733. It's about the third page beyond the first.

A. Yes.

Q. All right?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, right in the middle of the page, there's a question from the host, as he's called:

"Will you comment, please, on the statement that all this is also due to the mischievous scheming of Abramovich, who is at odds with you."

A. Just a second. What we are reading now? The host, "Will you" -- yes.

Q. You're referring to the extradition proceedings that Russia had begun against you in England.

A. Yes.

Q. And you're asked to comment on the statement that all of this is due to the scheming of Mr Abramovich and you say:

"As for my quarrel with [Mr] Abramovich or with any of my former partners, I have absolutely no quarrel with them."

A. When -- just a second. When it was?

Q. Why did you say that -- can I ask you a question before you answer, Mr Berezovsky.

A. When it was? When it was?

Q. This was in 2003, the interview, the date of which appears on page 002. It was on Channel Three, Russian Channel Three, on March 25, 2003.

A. Mm-hm.

Q. Now, why did you say you had no quarrel with Mr Abramovich if the truth was that he had blackmailed and betrayed you?

A. It's absolutely the same reason: because, as you remember, at that time, as I recollect, we still did not get money, didn't get money from sale of Sibneft. And, as you remember, Badri asked me -- asked me on the one hand say that we still did not sold it; on the other hand, I try not to press personally Abramovich at all because of the other reason, because I was sure that as far as Mr Putin is concerned, as far as he reached his target and got under his control ORT, he is not -- let's say, we were not fighting for Sibneft or something himself. Moreover, as you remember, even in Le Bourget, Putin said that, "They may sell; it's not a problem. You pay him money, them money, but made quiet". It means that Putin did not try to squeeze us himself by his initiative in business.

Abramovich is a different story and Badri thought that if I will do something, if I will present some public position against Abramovich, he may just stop to return our payment. And on the other hand I just want to remind you that Mr Glushkov still was in jail and it was not threat, just one second; it was continuous threat, as far as my clear understanding and Badri clear understanding. And we understood well that Abramovich is able to influence to Putin to keep Glushkov in jail so much -- how much he need.

- Q. Well, we'll come to that last suggestion at a later stage because you also make it in trying to explain why you never originally complained about the circumstances in which you were sold out of Sibneft. But the facts as regards the payment are that 100 per cent of the money which Mr Abramovich had agreed to pay, $1.3 billion, had in fact been paid into the account of Devonian by August 2002, well before this interview had been given.
- A. No, as is my recollection, the last money we got just in 2003 is the first point. But there is another reason which I mentioned to you: Glushkov was still in jail and this is the biggest -- my number one priority. But as far as money is concerned, try to check, please, with your assistants: we didn't get all money in 2002.
- Q. The position was it had all been paid to Devonian and all, apart from $134 million, had been paid to you by Devonian. Those were the facts when you gave this interview.

A. In 2002?

Q. In March 2003 --

A. Just a second. Interview was given in -- when interview was given?

Q. In March 2003 the situation was that the whole of the $1.3 billion had been paid by Mr Abramovich to Devonian and all but $134 million had been paid by Devonian to you.

A. It was paid just -- it's correct, it was paid just at -- the final payment was done in 2003, it could be. But I present you two reasons, because I can't recollect exactly. But the main reason, as I told you from the beginning, was that Glushkov was not released. But nevertheless there is -- I remember that it was also economic reason and, as I understand that time, Rusal still was not -- at that time we did not sell Rusal steel. It means that we have on the one hand economic reason and maybe you correct that Sibneft was paid already, but Rusal still was not paid.

But again, the main reason was that Glushkov was in jail and I understood that for Putin, it already was become the periphery of his thoughts about me; but for Abramovich it was important.

Q. The position of Mr Glushkov at this stage was that he was indeed still in jail but his trial was actually in progress, wasn't it?

A. Glushkov was in jail, spent in jail two and three years and he --

Q. Yes. His trial was in progress, wasn't it?

A. Just a second, Mr Sumption, okay? Our clear understanding was that Glushkov is in danger and I am threatened until Glushkov return back in London. And even more, when he already has been in London and was looking for political asylum, until he was granted political asylum, only that time I become quiet. But -- because of my personal experience, because I've read that Glushkov -- that Russia will issue warrant to extradite Glushkov, what I had myself.

Q. Was his trial in progress or was it not at the time you gave this interview in March 2003?

A. I don't understand. What does mean "progress"?

Q. It meant that the trial had opened in August 2002 and was still continuing.

A. Just a second.

Glushkov, he was under the control of General Prosecution Office until he leave Russia. He leave Russia. And he leave Russia -- he was arrested in 2000 and until he leave Russia in 2006 I was threatened and my main priority of worry was Mr Glushkov and I don't follow which condition trial had. I just know one thing: that Glushkov ran away from Russia, he ran away, he was not allowed to cross the border, and he ran away himself because he afraid. This is the point.

Q. You can't possibly have thought that Mr Abramovich was going to be in a position to influence the fate of Mr Glushkov at a time when his trial was actually in progress? It was too late for that, wasn't it?

A. Completely wrong. First of all, definitely I don't remember in which condition trial of Glushkov was. I just knew that Glushkov is in jail. This is the point. Moreover, the situation changed dramatically in April 2003 because it was -- because it was classified that Glushkov tried to run away from the jail and situation become even worse after that.

Q. That was in 2001, Mr Berezovsky. You've got the dates wrong?

A. Sorry, you are correct, in 2001, agreed. But situation generally become worse after he attempt -- so-called attempt ran away because Lugovoi, as we know now, just fix this fake.

Q. Now, Mr Patarkatsishvili remained on perfectly good terms with Mr Abramovich, didn't he, after December 2000?

- A. Definitely not. Abramovich -- after -- it was absolutely clear understanding in Badri and me, after meeting in Le Bourget and definitely after meeting in Cap d'Antibes, that Abramovich is enemy. And Badri played game against of the enemy, yes? How he can do that? Trying to protect our interests. All the time we were under pressure of Abramovich; all the time.
- Q. He met Mr Abramovich on many occasions both before and after the deal about the $1.3 billion was concluded in 2001, didn't he?
- A. You're absolutely correct. You're absolutely correct.
- Q. And relations between them were perfectly amicable throughout that time?
- A. Perfectly, perfectly, perfectly hypocritical, it's true.
- Q. Who was the hypocrite?
- A. I think both of them.
- Q. Your claim that relations between you and Mr Abramovich broke down suddenly in December 2000 is just untrue, isn't it?
- A. It's 100 per cent true and no one have any evidence that I met Abramovich after that. Only evidence is personal Mr Abramovich, La Megeve; but strange situation, I did not tell anything at all. And after Glushkov was arrested, after I was squeezed, after I had clear message that Glushkov stay in jail forever, you think I did not talk to Abramovich anything -- meeting him in La Megeve? But it's not my witness statement. It's witness statement of Mr Abramovich, not mine. My statement is that I never met Mr Abramovich again.

Q. Now, let's turn to the circumstances in which you say that you sold out of Sibneft in the course of 2001. As I understand it, your case is that you sold out of Sibneft because you were threatened that otherwise your interest that you claim to have had in Sibneft would be expropriated and Mr Glushkov would be kept longer in jail. That's your case, isn't it?

A. My case is that I did not plan to sell Sibneft at all; I sold that just because of threat of Mr Abramovich, who kept Putin as a bogeyman, and I had clear understanding that Glushkov will continue to stay in jail.

And I would like to just say you what Badri said after he returned back from Munich. I didn't want to use this word but you yourself initiate to use the so-called proper Russian words, very special. What Badri said me when he returned back, he said -- in Russian, I'm sorry, and then I translate it -- he said, "Borya, (Russian spoken)". And this word "zamochit", it was important because it was part of our discussion with judge in my defamation case, Judge Eady.

Q. Will you tell us what it means before --

A. Yes, and I -- it means to kill.

Q. It means what?

A. To kill. It means to kill.

Q. To kill, I see.

A. Yes.

Q. So what's the whole sentence?

A. "Borya, (Russian spoken)."

Q. Perhaps the translator sitting behind the witness could tell us what the translation is.

THE INTERPRETER: Borya is a term of endearment in Russia, this is Boris.

"Boris, you don't understand, they will waste him, they will do him in, they will kill him."

MR SUMPTION: Thank you.

Now, you say that was what Mr Patarkatsishvili said to you after Munich?

A. When he returned back -- after Munich, when he returned back. It's absolutely correct.

Q. Well, we'll come to the Munich meeting in a short time.

A. But again, Mr Sumption, I just want to tell you, it's special word which President Putin also used when he mean that he will kill Chechen terrorist.

Q. Now, when was the first time that you publicly alleged that Mr Abramovich had intimidated you into selling out of Sibneft?

- A. I think that -- I don't remember well, but I think after Nikolai -- definitely after Nikolai was ran away from Russia but I can't exclude that it could be happened earlier because I had a lot of emotions. But at least I tried to keep me in my hands until Nikolai was in Russia because, again, I blame a lot of Putin.

I said a lot -- I gave a lot of interviews that Putin, so-so, I fight against of him, but I try to keep quiet as far as Abramovich is concerned because Putin already recognised that I'm his political opponent, he did not push us to sell our assets himself; and moreover, maybe you know well that after we sold Rusal our shares, Badri insist that we invest again in Russia if --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Sorry, say that again?

- A. After we sold our interest in Rusal -- it happened later on and we got around $600 million -- Badri, what surprised me, insist to invest again into Russian business, in Metalloinvest, because he said, "I know well Mr Anisimov", who as I understand is present today here --

MR SUMPTION: Mr Berezovsky, I'm not asking you about that.

- A. No, no, I just answer to my Lady's question.

Q. The first public statement that you made that you had been pressured by Mr Abramovich into selling out of Sibneft was in December 2003; that was three years after you say that it happened and three years before Mr Glushkov reached England.

A. Mr Sumption, I was absolutely correctly said that sometimes my emotions were over my logic and my rational behaviour. But you just yourself mentioned, and I think it's happened when we already sold Sibneft, and you are correctly mentioned that all those years I kept silent.

Q. Would you, please, look at bundle H(A)69. Somebody will give it to you in a few minutes. The reference I want is H(A)69/2. This is a report on 1 December 2003 from the Moscow Times, an English-language paper, and I would like you to look at page 3 in the bundle numbering, the second page of the report.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, what you were being asked about was the --

A. It's in English.

Q. This is the Moscow Times which is an English-language paper.

A. Yes, yes, it's correct.

Q. Now, what you are being asked about is the recent news about the abandonment of the second Sibneft-Yukos merger and the fate of Mr Khodorkovsky. That's what you're being asked about. And I would like you to look at the middle of the second page of the report, where you will see a paragraph that begins:

"In a telephone interview from London, where he is now in exile, Berezovsky said..."

Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. Well, what you are quoted as saying is that:

"... he had discussed a possible takeover attempt by Abramovich with Nevzlin during a trip to Israel last week.

"'I raised parallels between what happened at Sibneft and what is happening now with Yukos,' he said. He said Abramovich had pressured him into selling his stake in Sibneft or risk facing the collapse of the company."

A. Yes.

Q. "He said the same seemed to be happening now with Yukos."

A. Yes.

Q. "'Nevzlin did not rule out that this analogy was correct'..."

Now, did you say that "Abramovich had pressured [you] into selling [your] stake in Sibneft or risk facing the collapse of the company"?

A. Yes, you are absolutely correct, and it's exactly the explanation why I said that because emotions were all, because that time I recognised that Abramovich is doing exactly the same what he have done against of us, pushing me to sell Sibneft: he's trying to play the same game with Yukos. And you know the story, finally -- there were two attempts to marriage with Yukos because Abramovich was trying to --

Q. I'm not asking you about the details of that.

A. Okay, sorry. But that was exactly why my emotions were over: because I recognised that Abramovich is doing -- is playing again the same game.

Q. All that happened on the second occasion, Mr Berezovsky, is that Sibneft pulled out of a proposed merger with Yukos shortly after Mr Khodorkovsky had been arrested. That's what happened on the second occasion.

A. But Abramovich still did not return $2 billion to shareholders of Yukos. He obtained just $3 billion and still nobody knows how he used this $3 billion.

Q. Now, if you look at the passage from the interview that I've just pointed you to --

A. Yes.

Q. -- you'll see that the pressure that you said that you were under when you gave this interview was that Mr Abramovich had told you that if you didn't sell out of Sibneft, the company, Sibneft, would collapse.

That's what you were saying at that time, wasn't it?

A. Mr Sumption, I said absolutely precisely that if there are two ways of threaten me: one way was that Glushkov will die in prison; the second way was that our shares just will seize to somebody, to Abramovich, to State. It means that -- or just seize for nothing, we will get nothing. This is the point and this is my case, nothing more.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, what you were saying in this interview was not that your own stake in Sibneft would be expropriated. What you were saying is that if you continued to be associated with Sibneft, the Russian government would destroy the whole company; just as in 2003 it was destroying Yukos.

A. Mr Sumption, again you are absolutely correct. We should clarify this in context. My case is what I think -- what is reality for me is written in my case. There are two points again: that if I will not -- Badri and me will not sell Abramovich our shares, Nikolai will be under his death -- Nikolai will die in there, in the prison; and the second, that our shares will be just seized by State or someone. This is my case and it's written clear.

You refer to interview. Definitely interview is different story. Moreover, sometimes you -- because I recognise me as a politician and definitely I try to send messages. And what happened with Yukos, it was my real prediction that Yukos finally was destroyed completely, nothing more. And Abramovich, definitely he was lucky because he was in connections with Putin, they just -- he just squeeze me and Badri, he got our shares, and Sibneft survived until he sell it for $13 billion.

With Yukos, completely different story, and I present absolutely correctly.

Q. Well now, can I please ask you to be given bundle K2 and you can put away the bundle you've just been looking at. K2/01/1, it's the first page of text in the bundle.

This is the letter before action sent by your solicitors, Carter Ruck, in May 2007 to Mr Abramovich.

A. Yes.

Q. And it is the letter in which they say that they are going to claim --

A. Yes.

Q. -- and on what grounds they're going to claim, unless Mr Abramovich pays up. Okay?

A. Just a second. Yes. Yes, I remember that.

Q. You presumably supplied the information that went into this letter; do you agree?

A. Sorry?

Q. You must have supplied the information to Carter Ruck which they put into this letter?

A. You're absolutely correct, I talk discussion with Andy Stephenson and his assistant, I forgot her name now, and I described them the story and they put that in written form.

Q. Right. Let's have a look at the letter. They start by saying they act for you.

"We write in connection with transactions concerning the sale of his beneficial interests in three companies, [ORT, Sibneft and Rusal] as described below. In each case he was forced to dispose of his interests at a very significant undervalue. In each case you unconscionably and improperly took advantage of the threats and persecution he suffered at the hands of the Russian authorities... directly in relation to Sibneft and Rusal, to enrich yourself and your partners."

Now, in that paragraph your solicitors do not seem to be saying that Mr Abramovich made threats; they seem to be saying that Mr Abramovich took advantage of threats that had been made against you by the Russian State.

A. Mr Sumption, you absolutely correctly said that it was just a letter before actions and I describe absolutely correctly to Mr Andy Stephenson what was reality and Mr Stephenson put in this way. It's happened not one time. Because, for example, "beneficial interests" is written here; I never told about beneficial interest, yes, in these terms? I told that Abramovich is holding -- was holding our shares and we have interest and so.

Again, I can comment and I will answer to all your questions definitely, but I try to explain you that understanding of lawyers step by step changes but the facts are the same which I present from the beginning. Because I just want to stress you, Mr Sumption, for better understanding, in '99 I said that if we take Sibneft company and put in United States -- it's written in some my interview -- its value will be $50 billion. And could you imagine that I buy myself without any pressure, without any threat, decide to sell it for nothing?

It's not nothing, definitely, $1.3 billion it's a lot; but company was $50 billion, it's nothing. And it's just my will, just because I decide I'm not under threat, just because Nikolai is not in jail?

Q. Well, let's look at the facts.

A. Just like that?

Q. You say we should be looking at the facts.

A. Yes.

Q. The facts as you presented to your solicitors are summarised on the second page under the heading "Sibneft" where you say, in the first paragraph under the heading "Sibneft" --

A. Just a second. Yes.

Q. "Notwithstanding our client's agreement to relinquish his shareholding in ORT, you advised Mr Patarkatsishvili that for as long as our client continued to hold any beneficial interest in the oil company, Sibneft, the company, its management and owners would face continued persecution from the Russian Prosecutor's Office and the tax authorities."

And then if you would now look two paragraphs below that:

"In May 2001, you..."

That's Mr Abramovich.

"... advised Mr Patarkatsishvili that if he and our client did not relinquish their beneficial interest in the shares of Sibneft, the companies would come under the same attacks from the state authorities as had the companies controlled by Mr Gusinsky. You also, again, assured Mr Patarkatsishvili that if their interests were sold, Nikolai Glushkov would be released from imprisonment."

I'm going to come to the bit about Mr Glushkov in a couple of minutes but at the moment I want you to concentrate on what you said about the threat relating to Sibneft.

According to your solicitors, the threat relating to Sibneft was that, for as long as you were associated with Sibneft, the company Sibneft would be persecuted by the Prosecutor's Office. You were not saying that your particular stake in it would be expropriated, were you?

A. Mr Sumption, it's absolutely incorrect to say that I didn't say that, what you mentioned just now. It's just Andy Stephenson's understanding, the result of our discussion, nothing more. And you know that long time, when I already met -- faced with other solicitors, with the other barristers, it was not simple to understand this story, even when they put all the time -- for example, in Devonia agreement they put, "Berezovsky sold beneficial interest", because they don't understand what was agreement in Russia and how it could be without beneficial interest. It's just terminology, nothing more.

But again, I present from the very beginning not the story; I present from the very beginning my personal involvement in all events. And they describe even later on, the other company got, Cad --

Q. Cadwalader.

A. Cadwalader -- they also describe in different terms than Andy Stephenson describe.

Definitely, definitely, your point and your position is to prove that Berezovsky just play trying to form according of English law and so. I don't know -- I didn't know anything. Do you know that time I don't know what does mean "implicit" or "explicit"? I didn't know that at all, definitely, if it was explicit choice of law or implicit choice of law. I didn't know anything at all. I just present my story and this is just reflection of my solicitors.

Q. The story that you presented was the one that they summarised in the bottom half of this page of the letter, isn't it? That's what you told them?

A. Again, I told the same story which I tried to present to my Lady and to you, to explain what is the real story. It's the only reason why we are here. If the story was like that, Abramovich won't strike out and we did spend time here for nothing.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, the story as summarised by Mr Stephenson of Carter Ruck in this letter was exactly the same, wasn't it, as the story that you told to the Moscow Times in the interview that I showed you a few minutes ago?

A. Definitely -- Mr Sumption, again, what journalists reflect, how they -- how I present the story, it depends on political reasons, first of all, not on economic reasons. This is the story. Because definitely I sent all the time messages not to Abramovich on newspaper; I send messages to Putin. And this is for political battle, not economic battle. And when I return to the point of economic battle, I present my understanding in economic terms and what's happened in reality.

Q. Would you please put that bundle away and be given bundle H(A)95/84.

Now, let me tell you what this is before I ask you a question. This is a witness statement made by you in September 2007 in Mr Michael Cherney's action against Mr Deripaska. This was a witness statement made in support of Mr Cherney's application for permission to serve the claim form on Mr Deripaska out of England, right?

A. Yes, correct.

Q. Now, if you take page 86 and page 87 of the bundle numbering, I would like you to have a look at paragraphs 9, 10 and 11.

A. Yes.

Q. Just read those to yourself, if you wouldn't mind.

A. I more or less remember this statement. It is the reason I will not take a lot of time.

Q. Right. Have a look at it.

A. Yes. Just a second.

Q. Now, this isn't your lawyers, this is you, and at the last page of it you say it's true.

A. Yes, it's me, and last page has a signature. I have seen this witness statement.

Q. What you say at paragraph 9 is:

"... Mr Patarkatsishvili informs me, and I believe, that Mr Abramovich told him that for as long as I continued to hold any beneficial interest in the oil company, Sibneft, that company, its management and its owners would face continued persecution from the Russian Prosecutor's Office and the tax authorities."

A. I'm sorry, I just concentrate a little bit. It's point number...?

Q. Paragraph 9.

A. 9, just -- okay.

Q. You've read that once; if you would like to read it again.

A. Yes.

Q. You are describing what you say Mr Patarkatsishvili said to you.

A. Yes.

Q. What he said to you, according to this document, is that if you continued to hold a beneficial interest in Sibneft, "Sibneft, the company, its management and its owners would face continued persecution" from the Russian authorities.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, you do not say that the Russian authorities were simply going to expropriate your particular interest in Sibneft, do you?

A. Yes, I understand the point, Mr Sumption.

Mr Sumption, this statement, my witness statement, made mainly to help Mr Chernoi in his litigation and against of Mr Deripaska and the main point, as I understand here, was the relations with Mr Deripaska which -- and the way how Abramovich and Deripaska in parallel doing the same way. If you recognise, it's written here also "beneficial interest", what is not so again.

And again, I responsible for this witness statement, but on the one hand, it's nothing wrong; on the other hand, it is not added that at the same time it's absolutely clear that Glushkov will stay in jail forever, yes?

Again, I present absolutely the same story. Definitely it's my witness statement, which was prepared with the help of my lawyers, and moreover definitely my lawyers have truth to prepare this statement; but again, what I describe in my presentation is exactly what I describe in my witness statement at this hearing.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, let me just try and explain the problem to you.

A. Yes.

Q. You say in your witness statement for this action that Mr Abramovich threatened you that he would get Putin to expropriate your interest in Sibneft.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, I understand what you're saying, although we don't accept it, as you know. What you're saying here is that the danger was not to your interest in Sibneft but to the whole company, and Mr Abramovich couldn't possibly have said to you, "I will ensure that Sibneft is destroyed if you don't sell out of the company", because it was his company, on your case, just as much as yours.

A. Completely wrong. Abramovich, his message was very clear: that my shares and Badri's shares which will be taken somehow just State and Abramovich did not discuss that he -- it will -- his part will be destroyed.

At the very beginning, in autumn 2000 -- in August 2000 maybe, when just I start to fight against of Putin strongly, he discussed exactly in wording which you presenting now. At the first stage Abramovich really said the company will be destroyed, it's dangerous for the company; but later on he completely changed his presentation. He never said that he will be destroyed; only we will be squeezed. And this is a big difference what he start to -- how he talk in the autumn 2000 and how he talk already in 2001, when he decide to squeeze us, threaten us -- threat us to give our shares under his control. And we know the result again.

Mr Sumption, my Lady, I appreciate you that you told me: is it your recollection or is it your logic just, when we discuss about meeting in Le Bourget? And I said: my Lady, it's recollection, but definitely recollection based on the new knowledge, as much knowledge I have because it's ten years ago, it's impossible to... and I try to -- definitely I try to be logical as well.

But the basis of my presentation is recollection, yes? And it's exactly the same at the beginning and you will see it's clear that in 2000, in autumn 2000, Abramovich said about company, that company is in danger and so, but later on he completely changed his position and that we will be squeezed, Nikolai will stay in jail forever. This is the point.

Q. Would you turn over the page, please, of this witness statement. Paragraph 10:

"... Mr Patarkatsishvili... tells me... that Mr Abramovich told him in May 2001 that if he (Mr Patarkatsishvili) and I did not relinquish our respective beneficial interests in the shares... the companies would come under the same attacks from the state authorities as had the companies controlled by Mr Gusinsky."

A. Yes.

Q. And you then say in the next paragraph:

"Based on these representations... an agreement was entered into [to sell out of Sibneft]."

A. And the next paragraph?

Q. Paragraph 11: "Based on these representations", you agreed to sell your interest, as you call it, in Sibneft?

A. To sell to whom? To sell to Mr Abramovich, not to State. It means that it's absolutely logical that company is not destroying because Abramovich become shareholder. And it's exactly what I all the time try to present: that Abramovich, understanding well that we have enormous difficulties, he decide just to squeeze us, having Putin back to him, and to buy our shares for very low price. That's it.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, in the last few answers you have said that the very clear message of Mr Abramovich, as described to you by Mr Patarkatsishvili, was that your shares would be expropriated and that this was your own clear recollection.

Now, if that is true, why did you not say so in these paragraphs of your witness statement for Mr Cherney?

A. I don't have clear answer to that. I just have clear understanding that it was not a decisive point for evidence of Mr -- for Mr Chernoi and it's clear understanding that Abramovich, starting from 2001, never mentioned that the company will be destroyed completely if we'll continue to stay as a shareholder. Abramovich position was very clear: to take our stake for nothing, for his personal benefit. That's it.

Q. Now, you say that wasn't the critical point for Mr Cherney. Was it the critical point for you in this action?

A. I don't think that it is critical point because it's a lot of evidence where present my position all the time in the same way.

Q. Well, would you please look at bundle K2. You can put away bundle H(A)95. Bundle K2, flag 3. This is how you originally put it --

A. What is the date?

Q. Well, your statement of truth, if you look at page 14 K2/03/14, was dated 6 September 2007.

A. Page 14. Yes, I see that.

Q. Now, if you look at page 9, paragraph 15 K2/03/9, you say:

"At the May 2001 meeting" --

A. Page 9?

Q. This is your pleading.

A. Page 9, sorry?

Q. Page 9, paragraph 15. You say:

"At the May 2001 meeting, the Defendant..."

That's Mr Abramovich.

"... told Mr Patarkatsishvili:

"(1) that so long as the Claimant continued to hold any beneficial interest in Sibneft, Sibneft, its management and its owners would face continued persecution from the Russian Prosecutor's Office and the tax authorities;

"(2) that if the Claimant did not relinquish his interest in Sibneft, it would come under attack by those in power in Russia in a manner similar to companies controlled by Mr Gusinsky;

"(3) that if the Claimant did not relinquish his interest in Sibneft it would simply be seized by the Russian State without compensation. Accordingly, he had no alternative but to dispose of it to the Defendant."

Now, what you say there is both versions; is that right?

A. What does it mean, "both versions"?

Q. Ie both that there was a threat to expropriate your interest and that there was a threat to the company.

A. It's like, as you see, it's particulars of claim and it's -- I have more responsibility what you present before, my witness statement, my personal witness statement to Mr Chernoi, and it's really I should -- it's also not at the beginning -- what year it was? 2000 -- in Chernoi, could you remind me again?

Q. What are you asking, Mr Berezovsky?

A. The time when you just refer to my witness statement for Chernoi, what time was that?

Q. That was in September 2007.

A. 2000 -- always the same -- all of the same time, and this is particulars of claim. And again, it was understanding -- and definitely, even preparing the witness statement which I sent personally for Mr Chernoi, definitely it was preparing by lawyers, with the help of my lawyers, and that the position which they recommend me to put in, exactly like particulars of claim, it's also prepared by lawyers, not also -- I have more responsibility for claim for witness statements for Chernoi than this one, yes?

But again, I present again, Mr Sumption, the same story. I never change the facts. The interpretation of the facts is like lawyers' understanding. And at the beginning, particularly at the beginning, it was a lot misunderstanding what I presented and what was reality; what I presented and how they accept it.

Q. Now, if you look at the way in which for the first time you suggested that there was a threat to expropriate your interest, which is at paragraph 15(3) on page 9?

A. 15...?

Q. 15(3). I've just shown it to you. Page 9, paragraph 15, subparagraph 3.

A. Just a second. Yes.

Q. You do not suggest there that Mr Abramovich was threatening to bring about the confiscation of your interest; what you say is that Mr Patarkatsishvili told you that that is what the Russian State would do. There's no suggestion that Mr Abramovich was responsible for what the Russian State would do.

A. Well, first of all, it's absolutely clear that my understanding what Abramovich is doing as far as Sibneft is concerned based on connections with Mr Patarkatsishvili because that time, after December 2000 Cap d'Antibes, I never met Abramovich again. It means that it's the result of my meeting with, on the one hand, with Patarkatsishvili; on the other hand, I want to stress again it's particulars of claim. It's how lawyers accept what we discussing.

Q. But it was signed by you, Mr Berezovsky, personally --

A. Definitely it's signed by you (sic) but --

Q. -- as a true statement.

A. This is true statement, no doubt. But this how my lawyers convert that to legal form; nothing more.

Q. If you weren't satisfied with the account that they gave about the facts -- this is a description of what Mr Patarkatsishvili told you but can only have come from you.

A. Again --

Q. And if you weren't satisfied with it, you would have said, "No, you've got this wrong, I want it changed", wouldn't you?

A. I didn't know the way what is -- what accent should be done in the claim in Great Britain. I didn't have this experience. And I just present this story how it is. And how they reflect this story, it's completely other point, according of my understanding. And you will see that we asked to put changes but never changes connected to the facts, which are present from the very beginning.

Q. Now, would you please turn to paragraph 383 of your witness statement D2/17/280.

A. 3...?

Q. 383 of your witness statement.

A. This I can --

Q. You can get rid of the other bundle that you've got there if you like.

A. K2 I should keep still or not?

Q. No, I would put away K2.

A. Thank you.

Q. This is the point of your witness statement where you say what you claim now --

A. Sorry, which point number?

Q. Paragraph 383 is the section of your witness statement where you deal with what Mr Patarkatsishvili told you had been said at the Munich Airport meeting in early May. You say at paragraph 384:

"Badri telephoned me from the meeting. I was at my home in Cap d'Antibes..."

A. Yes.

Q. Right? Then you summarise the conversation at 385:

"The first thing we discussed was the release of Nikolay from prison, which, Badri told me, he had raised. He said that Mr Abramovich had told him that although Nikolay had not been released in December 2000, if we were to sell our interest in Sibneft to him, he would see to it that Nikolay was now released."

A. Yes.

Q. Now, what you are saying there is not -- you then go on to say:

"I understood from this that, unless we sold our interests in Sibneft, Mr Abramovich would use his influence with President Putin... to ensure that Nikolai would not be released from prison."

Now, as I understand your evidence, you're not suggesting that Mr Patarkatsishvili was telling you that Mr Abramovich would use his influence in that way; that was just what you claim to have inferred. Is that right?

A. No. Definitely after -- as I told you, after Le Bourget and after meeting in Cap d'Antibes we understood absolutely perfect the influence of Abramovich. And when today we started from the Le Bourget transcript, we touched some point but we didn't touch the point that it was the first time when Badri and me recognised how powerful Abramovich become and how connection he has in Prosecutor's Office. It's absolutely clear that -- and Badri and me understood absolutely the same when Badri mentioned Prosecutor's Office and Putin.

Q. In fact --

A. And it's clear absolutely reason here that Nikolai could stay in jail forever. And, as I told you, when Badri met me after this meeting already eyes to eyes, he said me that, "They kill him, they kill him". It was what Badri thought as -- what Badri expressed, which I accept as a result of the meeting.

Q. Are you saying that Mr Patarkatsishvili said to you, "Mr Abramovich is going to ensure that Mr Glushkov stays in jail"?

A. Definitely. Our common understanding was Mr Abramovich can ensure that Glushkov stay in jail.

Q. Are you saying that that's what Mr Patarkatsishvili said to you?

A. It's exactly what I told you. When we met with Patarkatsishvili when he returned back, if he said me that they can kill him, it means that he understood well that Abramovich is able to ensure that Glushkov stay in jail. This is the point.

Q. Well, he was talking about the state killing him, not Abramovich killing him.

A. Definitely Abramovich is not killer, as I understand it still until now, but influenced the killers, he had this opportunity.

Mr Sumption, you know well, already from the new history, Mr Magnitsky died in jail, they kill him. Unfortunately my prediction of what this power can do was front of the other, in front of the other, I predict a lot what they have done later. And definitely my worry was that they kill Mr Glushkov. Particularly he was very sick and Abramovich knew that, that he is sick. And they raised several times questions -- the point that Glushkov is sick and can die any time. Like happened with Magnitsky, like happened with Aleksanyan who recently died, just for dying, he stay in jail even being -- even having cancer.

Glushkov is lucky, he doesn't have cancer, but he has a health problem which very dangerous. He is invalid of the first rate. It means that the most rating invalid -- there are three rates in Russia, the third, the second and the first, and Glushkov, as I understand, is like the first rate.

Q. Would you please take bundle R(D). The reference I want is R(D)1/03/39.004. What you're looking at or about to be looking at is Mr Lankshear's notes of June 2005.

A. Lankshear, it's from the Carter Ruck, yes?

Q. Well, Lankshear was in fact Streathers. They were assisting with this at that stage.

A. But here -- I'm sorry, Mr Sumption, I want just to remind.

Q. Mr Lankshear worked for the people who were then your solicitors: they were a firm called Streathers.

A. But they work together with --

Q. With Mr Stephenson of Carter Ruck.

A. Yes, good. Thank you very much that you helped me to remind.

Q. Now, these are notes of an interview with Mr Patarkatsishvili. You weren't present but Mr Patarkatsishvili gives his account of what was said at the Munich meeting. Okay?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, if you look on this page --

A. Page number?

Q. 39.004, which should be open in front of you.

A. Just a second. Yes, I open.

Q. You will see there's a heading at the bottom of the page "Sale of Sibneft". Okay?

A. Just a second. Yes, I have it.

Q. And right at the bottom of the page, under that heading, it says:

"Date of Munich meeting. Either April/early May 2001. No specific mention of [Glushkov], but not necessary as implicit."

Do you see that?

THE INTERPRETER: I'm so sorry, Mr Sumption, which part of --

THE WITNESS: No, no, "Implicit".

MR SUMPTION: Last two lines of 39.004.

THE INTERPRETER: Thank you very much.

THE WITNESS: Okay.

MR SUMPTION: Now, what Mr Patarkatsishvili remembered when he was interviewed by your solicitors was that there had been no specific mention of Mr Glushkov but that it wasn't necessary as it was implicit.

A. Mr Sumption, I already face many demonstration when my solicitors did not put me questions at all for some area, but later on they asked me. I give you the best example: I never was asked, when we return back to Rusal, I never was asked about their -- which kind of -- how to say this? -- law we discuss; but when I was putting the direct question, I gave answer.

It means, again -- I just want to stress again -- it's just the beginning. It's just the first -- what is the date? It's also 2005 or which year?

Q. 2005, yes.

A. 2005, yes, I'm correct. It's just the beginning of understanding what happened in very complicated Russian story, where a lot of killers -- well, the president is almost killer and so and so. It's not simple to understand and it's -- and I don't see any unusual according of my personal experience.

Q. You see, it's obvious that the solicitors did in fact ask Mr Patarkatsishvili about the Munich meeting and what had been said at that meeting about Mr Glushkov because that's why Mr Patarkatsishvili told them that Mr Glushkov hadn't in fact been mentioned.

A. Mr Sumption, I want just to stress again and again: this is discussion solicitors at the very beginning. How it would happen that they didn't get that if Badri -- it was the first point which Badri discussed with them and there's a lot of evidence that it's so. If you read the statements of Badri -- not statements -- yes, statements or his notes of lawyers meeting with Badri later on, it will be clear, because I also not read in too details, but no doubt that Glushkov was a key point of the meeting in Munich.

Q. Indeed. And if you look in flag 6 of the same bundle, you will see -- flag 6, in the very bottom right-hand numbering, page 79 of the bundle numbering R(D)1/06/79.

A. 79?

Q. Yes. Flag 6, page 79. This is the draft proof that they prepared on the basis of the interview we've just looked at and you should see -- there are lines numbered on the left and I'd like you to look at line 377, which is his account of the Munich meeting:

"We agreed a price of $1.3 billion. When negotiating this deal there was no specific mention made of [Mr Glushkov] but this was not necessary as it was clear that his release was one of the reasons we were prepared to sell."

There was no threat by Mr Abramovich, was there?

- A. No, Mr Sumption, completely wrong, because what is written here that it's clear that Mr Glushkov is a key issue to sell the company; the key issue, I would like to stress.
- Q. Yes.
- A. And again, it's how solicitors made the note and all the time Glushkov is mentioning here. It means that absolutely clear that Badri discuss story of Nikolai Glushkov. How they accept that, how they put it in the note, is the other story.
- Q. What it means is that whatever was known or thought about Mr Glushkov, he wasn't mentioned at the meeting?
- A. Mr Sumption, I have a lot of doubts that Mr Glushkov didn't mention on the meeting, the first point. The second point: it was just the beginning of our preparation for the claim, it was 2005, it's just the first meeting of Mr Patarkatsishvili with solicitors and it's clear that there were a lot of questions which will be clarified later on.

Unfortunately Badri is not with us now and definitely we are not able to ask him what happened. But, again, just note of the solicitors which -- who met him and understood in this way, and we had a lot of examples that solicitors understood not correctly.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, I'm coming to a natural break in a moment.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Fine.

MR SUMPTION: Now, Mr Berezovsky, if you could look at bundle A2, flag 12, page 69 A2/12/69.

A. Yes.

Q. You are asked for some further information about your claim.

A. When it was? When it was?

Q. Do you see the heading "Under paragraph 51" on page 69? Page 69, Mr Berezovsky, you see a heading --

A. Yes, 69.

Q. -- "Under paragraph 51". They're asking for further information --

A. Just a second. Yes. Yes.

Q. -- about your statement:

"Mr Abramovich undertook a course of conduct in which he made and was party to the implicit and explicit coercive threats and intimidation pleaded above."

They ask:

"Please clarify...

"a. precisely which statements... are alleged to have constituted an explicit... threat... [and]

"b. ... which conduct of the Defendant is alleged to have constituted an implicit coercive threat..."

Right? Then over the page you will see the answer which you sign a statement of truth for.

A. Could you please read me the question and with help of translator?

Q. I think actually the answer is self-contained. Let's have a look at your answer, which is what you said was true:

"The statements pleaded at paragraph C41...

That's of the main pleading.

"... were implicit threats, in that Mr Abramovich intended by these statements to cause Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili to fear that, unless they sold their interests in Sibneft to Mr Abramovich, Mr Abramovich would use his influence... to cause their interests to be expropriated."

You go on to say:

"The statement... at... C46(1)(a) was an implicit threat, in that Mr Abramovich intended by this statement to cause Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili to fear that, unless they sold their interests in Sibneft to Mr Abramovich, Mr Abramovich would use his influence within the Putin regime to seek to ensure that Mr Glushkov would not be released from prison."

The reason I'm asking you to look at those was that that was the first occasion -- and it was on the fifth day of the hearing in the Court of Appeal of your claim on the strike-out hearing -- that you said in clear terms that Mr Abramovich was threatening to bring about these results himself. That's right, isn't it?

- A. Mr Sumption, I, as I've told you before, answer to request of my lawyers and when they ask me to confirm or to refuse something, I prepare to give my truthful statement as far as the point is concerned. And my lawyers put me the question, I give the answer.

And I don't understand, I'm sorry to say, what is the problem. Because, as I understand, every day there are new questions, even today, during the hearing, and answers which are not contradict. This is the most important, are not contradict. You are not able to -- that I lie, that I change my -- change the facts. I didn't change the facts; I just follow advice with my lawyers to give or not to give answers. That's it.

- Q. Mr Berezovsky, the reason why this was introduced into your claim is that Mr Abramovich was applying to strike out your claim on a number of grounds, one of which was that you hadn't pleaded a threat of action by Mr Abramovich but only a threat of action by the Russian State and he wasn't liable for that. Your response to that was to change the facts so as to say that Mr Abramovich intended and you understood that he was threatening to do these things himself. That's what happened, isn't it?

A. Mr Sumption, it's not the change of facts; it's added the facts. It's a big difference between that -- the first one and the second one. Moreover, I would like to tell you that finally, as a result of that, including that, the court took decision in my favour.

Q. It took the decision that now that you had changed your case, you had produced a legally arguable case.

MR RABINOWITZ: With respect to Mr Sumption --

A. I completely disagree.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, Mr Sumption, we don't need to argue the analysis of the Court of Appeal.

MR RABINOWITZ: -- that is factually false as well.

MR SUMPTION: Well, I quite agree. I'm not going to cross-examine Mr Berezovsky about what was actually decided. We can read the judgment ourselves.

I apologise.

Mr Berezovsky, what I suggest to you is that there was never a threat and you never understood that there was a threat by Mr Abramovich either to get your interest expropriated or to get Mr Glushkov kept in jail.

A. Mr Sumption, I'm sorry that I am already boring to say that I am not an idiot. If the company -- I understand value and I declare that even in '99, understanding that everything is growing, my estimation is $50 billion in the United States, yes, if to put in protection in -- protected area. Do you think that seriously I just, my personal will, will sell it? Estimation is $2.6 billion because we sold 50 per cent for $1.3 billion. It's not serious at all. It's impossible to establish this position; impossible.

Only threat, only Nikolai Glushkov in jail under pressure that he could be killed, and we have example that it's happened so with many people, businessmen in jail. You know it well, not less than me. How it's possible to imagine that just because I'm idiot to sell Mr Abramovich, nice guy, my and Badri 50 per cent, $1.3 billion, and in three years Abramovich sold the same for $13 billions? I'm really, really crazy, completely. It's impossible to believe in that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right, I'm going to take the break now, if that's a convenient moment, Mr Sumption. Ten minutes.

(3.28 pm)

(A short break)

(3.40 pm)

MR SUMPTION: Mr Berezovsky, could you please be given bundle R(D) again. The reference I want is R(D)2/30/123. Do you have that?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: R(D)2/30/132?

MR SUMPTION: No, 123. I'm sorry, I think I did say 123 but that's certainly what I'd like.

Mr Berezovsky, just before we took the break you had asked the forensic question: why in that case did you accept the $1.3 billion? And I'm going to show you a passage from a discussion in which you took part which explains that. These are Michelle Duncan's notes of the meeting in Tel Aviv with Mr Patarkatsishvili in November 2007 at which you were present.

A. Mm-hm.

Q. On the page that you should have open, page 123, the bottom left-hand numbering, you will see that there is a grey horizontal band about two-thirds of the way down the page where I would like you to start. Okay?

A. Yes, okay.

Q. Right. Now, this is the part which deals with the discussions that led to the sale, as you put it, of the Sibneft interest.

First of all, there's a measure of uncertainty about this but Michelle Duncan has put in the left-hand margin "AP via BB". So if that's right, this is Mr Patarkatsishvili but through you. Okay?

A. Mm-hm.

Q. What the note says is that:

"... [Mr Patarkatsishvili], [understanding] the reality, started to play same game.

"He spoke to RA, said I [understand your situation], we need to work out how to save [you].

"Therefore started disc[ussion] on Sibneft, [Patarkatsishvili] spoke to [Berezovsky] [e]xplained his position [and] using BB disagreed gen[eral] but u[nder]stood logic... that c[ould] lose assets [and] agreed [Patarkatsishvili] sh[ould] share.

"[Patarkatsishvili] met [Abramovich] in Munich at airport. In v[ery] small room -- not conf[erence] room.

"- Ruslan, he our financial m[anag]ler, BP, RA and his financial m[anag]ler, Irina [Panchukova]."

As they call her. Then there's a bit where Patarkatsishvili takes over himself, according to Michelle Duncan's note.

A. Sorry, what he took himself?

Q. Do you see it says "AP"? The first bit I've just read says "AP via BB" and then we've got a thing that just says "AP". Right?

"BB [and] I decided 2.5 [billion].

"We start to disc[uss] with him."

That's with Mr Abramovich.

"I [understood] his pressure [therefore] I had no choice but to take what he offered -- not poss[ible] to negot[iate] [because] if we didn't agree w[ith] his price, he c[oul]d walk away [and] give us nothing.

"BB felt differently.

"Also understood [Abramovich] hadn't paid us."

There's a reference to a gold mine. And taking it up just opposite "AP" on the next page --

A. Yes.

Q. "[Had not paid] any div[idend]s for a few months. We were outside co[mpany], no other income -- BB needed [money] to fund political career."

A. Yes.

Q. "So accepted 1.35 [billion]. Also agreed he needed to pay 500 [million] in 3 m[on]ths and balance in 12-15 months.

"Agreed this, shook hands -- that is all.

"[Meeting] only took 1 hour."

Now, summarising that, what Mr Patarkatsishvili is saying in your presence is that there was a meeting with Mr Abramovich at Munich Airport and that you didn't think that your bargaining position was very strong because Mr Abramovich could just pay you nothing; you were outside the company with no other income and needed the money to fund your political career.

Now, that was why you agreed to accept $1.3 billion, wasn't it?

- A. Definitely not. I explain you. First of all, to discuss about that, we need to go to the beginning. And the beginning was again ORT, who sold because we didn't have a choice or Nikolai continue to stay in jail forever and they take our shares in ORT for nothing.

Then the same story happened with Sibneft. The difference is just that beneficiary of ORT was Mr Putin and beneficiary of Sibneft was Mr Abramovich. It means that you start to discuss from the point which already middle of the story and it's not correct. This is already a story that we accept under pressure, under everything, to sell the company, under threat.

And now we are discussing about number and Badri said that even the proposal $2.5 billion which we give to Abramovich, he refused because he's strong, Putin behind of him, Glushkov is in jail. And I'm not in hurry, let's say, political. We understand that or we get anything or we get nothing, and this is the reason.

Again, it's story which described by Michelle Duncan, yes, this kind of story, and the story impossible to interpret without understanding why we start to discuss 2.5. This is the story.

- Q. Michelle Duncan wasn't describing the story; you and Mr Patarkatsishvili were describing the story.

Now, if you look at this note, first of all it doesn't suggest that there was anything said at this meeting in Munich about Mr Glushkov and the reasons given for accepting the $1.3 billion are nothing to do with either Glushkov or a threat of expropriation, are they? It's all about your need for money now that you'd left Russia.

- A. Mr Sumption, completely wrong. I already gave my explanation, not one time; and I not only gave my explanation, I gave my recollection and I gave -- and, as I understand, I present completely logic what everything what happened. Why we were in the corner? Glushkov in jail, we should sell. It's decision which was done under threat, nothing more. We voluntarily never planned to sell.
- Q. Why didn't you say at this meeting, "Hang on, Badri, you've got this all wrong. Don't you remember? We decided to accept the $1.3 billion because he threatened to keep Glushkov in jail and get our interests expropriated"?
- A. Mr Sumption --
- Q. Why didn't you say that?
- A. Mr Sumption, what Mrs Duncan put in that, it's her priority, her understanding at that time our discussion.

I don't have any doubts that we present this story like I present it today, without changes of the facts. Maybe really I understood better what is priority to make the story, to make the story more understandable, but I never changed the sense of the story, the facts of the story.

Q. The question that I actually asked you was: why didn't you, at this point in the meeting, say, "No, that's not the right explanation; the explanation is that we were threatened"?

A. It's not -- it doesn't mean that I didn't say anything. It doesn't -- it means that Michelle Duncan understood priority like she understood and put on the note; nothing more at all.

Q. Now, do you say that Mr Patarkatsishvili didn't really say at this meeting that you needed the money to fund your political career? You see, that's what Mr Patarkatsishvili is quoted as saying. Do you say that Mr Patarkatsishvili never said that?

A. I don't remember that at all.

Q. Do you deny that he said it or do you --

A. No, Mr Sumption, I don't deny. Maybe we discuss about that I continue a political battle and so and I need money, it's true, but not -- I'm sorry, it's maybe not correct, not peanuts which they propose me. I never hide that I want to spend money for political reason,

I never hide it, because we start to create -- what year is that? It's 2000...?

Q. 2007.

A. Yes. I already two of my friends, they were killed.
Maybe, my Lady, you didn't read that, yes? And definitely I will continue, definitely I need money, but it's not the basic reason that -- to sell for nothing.

Q. Because, you see, this was in November 2007, about four months after you'd started this action, when it was very important to discover what the real facts were, wasn't
it?

A. Mr Sumption, I answered the questions which Mrs Duncan put me and she fix what is important for her, what is not important for her, and that's only the story.
I don't know why it's in that way.

And moreover, I understand that it's not simple again to understand the story and she just start to discover the story and, as I understand, Mrs Duncan accept to give evidence and definitely she has better explanation what is happening compared with me and why it's happened so. I don't think -- I don't know,
I don't suppose -- I don't propose that it's mistake but I don't know the reason why it's happened so.

Q. Now, as with the ORT threat, these threats that you say induced you to accept the $1.3 billion, you have simply made them up, haven't you?

- A. Mr Sumption, I already gave, I think, clear answer. And I think it's a very special story to pridumat story like that. Unfortunately it's life, life in Russia.

And moreover, all events which happen after we under threat, sold ORT, sold Sibneft and sold other company -- or at one case it was threat from Putin, the other case it was threat from Abramovich -- it was just the beginning of the new Russia. We just were the first victim. And then step by step they increased number of victims and their way, Jesuitic way how they raid the other company, how they destroy the other company, how they got under control the other company. We just were the pioneers, I am sorry to say.

- Q. Would you look at paragraph 377 of your witness statement D2/17/279. You can put away bundle R(D).

- A. Paragraph?

- Q. Paragraph 377 of your witness statement. Would you like to read that paragraph to yourself before I ask you about it.

- A. Thank you, Mr Sumption, just a second. (Pause)

Yes.

- Q. Now, what you are saying here is that before Mr Patarkatsishvili met Mr Abramovich in Munich in May 2001, you discussed with him how your agreement would be recorded and agreed that it would need to be in writing and subject to English law. Do you see? That's your evidence there.

A. Yes.

Q. If you turn on to paragraph 382 over the page, you will see there's a bit more information about that. You say:

"... it was very important for us that the agreement be in writing and subject to English law, and recording the interest in Sibneft which we were giving up."

And you give three reasons why it was important.

A. Yes, I remember.

Q. First of all, you say you wanted to be able to enforce it if Mr Abramovich didn't pay; is that right?

A. Yes. Not enforce it -- what the terminology I use?

Q. You wanted to be able to enforce it if Mr Abramovich didn't pay up, so you needed it in writing for that reason, among others; yes?

A. Mr Sumption, don't be in hurry, please. I'm already tired(?) a little bit like you as well.

No, the first:

"... we wanted to be sure that... Abramovich would not find a way to avoid making payment."

Q. Yes. And that was why you wanted it in writing?

A. Secondly, we want to have absolutely transparent money; and the third, we need a record that later on, when -- I mean, unfortunately after ten years it's happened today, what I predict at that time: we're in the court finally and to have arguments enough to prove that it was sale.

- Q. Now, if it was so important to you to have the transaction in writing, why did neither you nor Mr Patarkatsishvili ask Mr Abramovich for a written agreement?
- A. Sorry, we have two -- we discuss two opportunities. The first, direct sale from Mr Abramovich to us, direct sale. And the second, if Abramovich will not accept that, because of some reason which we don't understand if it's truthful agreement '95 and '96, then to find a way how to obtain this money nevertheless. Money should be absolutely transparent, not like you present in your skeleton that it's money-laundering, special professional team. And the third one, to have record of that, that one day to return to --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: To have what on it?

- A. A record. A record. To fix it in writing that we sold our interest or our shares, then to have opportunity to prove in the court that it was our shares which was sold.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR SUMPTION: Did you or Mr Patarkatsishvili, so far as you knew, ever ask Mr Abramovich to enter into a written agreement about the basis on which he would be paying you $1.3 billion?

A. As I told you, I never met Abramovich more. And, as I know from Badri, the first -- he tried to realise the first idea, to have direct sale from Mr Abramovich; was not successful. And after that we returned back to the mechanism which we use already before, I mean sheikh, the way how we sold ORT; not the same exactly way but the way using the same vehicle -- the same type of vehicle, the same people, and that was done.

In case of ORT, Abramovich did not hide that he sold because he agreed with Mr Putin, as he told before, he insist that I shouldn't be visible as well. But in Sibneft case we use the same mechanism but even more accurate for Abramovich not to be linked to us directly.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, what I'm interested in is discovering, so far as you knew from Mr Patarkatsishvili, what was actually discussed between Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Abramovich.

What I want to ask you is this: so far as you are aware, did Mr Patarkatsishvili ever ask Mr Abramovich for a written agreement recording this agreement?

A. Written agreement recording the agreement?

Abramovich -- Mr Patarkatsishvili, from the very beginning, we understood that our priority is direct agreement between us and Abramovich. This is the point and that what exactly I discussed with Mr Patarkatsishvili. I don't remember -- or maybe Mr Patarkatsishvili discussed that with Abramovich but the result, I remember well the result, the result was negative: finally we should go through the scheme where sheikh was included. This is the point.

Q. You see, in fact there was no suggestion at any point by Mr Patarkatsishvili to Mr Abramovich that this transaction should be recorded in writing. Are you in a position to challenge that?

A. No, Mr Sumption, completely wrong. Completely wrong. And I told you again, and it's mentioned in my witness statement, that the first option was direct agreement between us and Abramovich. This is the first option and Abramovich refused this option. This is the point. And after that --

Q. When did he refuse it?

A. Sorry?

Q. When did he refuse it?

A. I don't remember when he refused it. Badri told me that we don't -- we have just this option, this one which we used finally.

Q. Well, we will come to the discussions that led to the Devonia agreement --

A. Yes.

Q. -- I'm afraid not today but tomorrow, and we'll have to go through that.

But did you decide or did Mr Patarkatsishvili decide to make, having not got any kind of written record from Mr Abramovich, did you decide to make any note or memorandum or record of your own?

A. Mr Sumption, I completely follow what Badri was doing. As I recollect, Mr Curtis, the professional English lawyer, was involved to create agreement between us, sheikh -- and I think Mr Curtis present sheikh, not us, and Mr Fomichev was involved in that -- how to make happen that our interest in Sibneft was fixed under Abramovich name and Abramovich paid to us $1.3 billion. Sheikh took commission, as I remember, a lot -- a big commission. That's it.

Q. Now, what about Mr --

A. It means that it was fixed in this agreement the way how Abramovich pay us money and how we put under his control and how we fix that it was our interest.

Unfortunately -- not unfortunately -- they wrote even in agreement "beneficial interest" because everybody understood that it's beneficial interest. It's mistakable -- if it's mistake, definitely, because we didn't have a beneficial interest, we just had agreement '95, but everybody on the west understood that it's beneficial interest. That's it.

Q. So far as you know, Mr Berezovsky, did Mr Abramovich ever ask you or Mr Patarkatsishvili for a document recording the transaction?

A. Mr Sumption, I told you that I didn't talk to Abramovich at all after last meeting in Cap d'Antibes.

Q. So far as you knew, did Mr Abramovich ever ask Mr Patarkatsishvili for a document?

A. I don't remember that.

Q. Because you see, according to you, Mr Abramovich was promising to pay you $1.3 billion in return for the surrender of your interests in Sibneft. That's your case, isn't it?

A. Yes, it's my case.

Q. Now, so far as we are aware, Mr Abramovich never asked you for any written record that you had surrendered your interest, did he?

A. Mr Sumption, I didn't talk to Abramovich at all. My -- and Mr Abramovich knew absolutely perfect that my interests are presented by Badri and it's the reason why he talked to Badri directly.

Q. So far as you are aware, Mr Abramovich never asked Badri for a written record that you had surrendered your interest either, did he?

A. Mr Sumption, I already gave this answer: I don't remember that at all.

Q. If Mr Abramovich was really agreeing to buy out your interest in his company, then I suggest to you, Mr Berezovsky, that both sides would have insisted on a written record.

A. It's wrong.

Q. And in fact neither did.

A. It's wrong. The written form is what you have seen in the paragraph 377 and it's absolutely clear that sheikh bought not air. Sheikh understood perfectly what he bought and he understood perfectly that what he is buying is Abramovich interest in Sibneft -- should be transferred to Abramovich as his -- as -- according of this deal, we sold our interest of Sibneft to Mr Abramovich and sheikh absolutely perfectly knew that.

Q. Now, you have given evidence earlier today that the reason why you never referred to these threats before 2003 was that you were worried about the position of Mr Glushkov. That's evidence that you have previously given?

A. The main priority; it's not the only one, as I told you.

Q. Yes.

A. Because before they did not pay us -- didn't pay us full amount of money, we even continue -- I even continue, because of Badri request, say -- present that I still own Sibneft. How I may at the same time say that it was threat from Abramovich if I still continue to have that? It's not logical at all.

Q. Could I please ask you to look at bundle R(E)2/7/169.

A. Could I keep my witness statement in front of me?

Q. Yes, please. This is behind flag 7 of bundle R(E)2.

A. What is that?

Q. It's your statement in support of Mr Glushkov's application for asylum.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, if you turn to page 229 --

A. When it was done? When it was done?

Q. July 2006. Please turn to page 229 R(E)2/7/229. This is while you were planning your action against Mr Abramovich.

A. Yes.

Q. And at paragraphs 164 to 167 you explain why you have said nothing about -- sorry, September 2008. I gave you the wrong date before. I apologise.

A. No, no. Thank you. 2008, yes?

Q. Yes, so after this action had begun.

Now, what you are dealing with here is you are explaining why it is that you had not mentioned being intimidated out of your stake in Sibneft in your own asylum application some years before --

A. Mm-hm.

Q. -- but you are saying it now in support of Mr Glushkov's asylum application.

A. Yes.

Q. In summary, what you are saying is that you did not wish to mention it in the earlier application made on your own behalf because you and Mr Patarkatsishvili were trying to negotiate with Mr Abramovich compensation for the undervalue.

A. It's true that Badri discussed with Mr Abramovich compensation undervalue, it's correct.

Q. Well, first of all, there were no negotiations with Mr Abramovich about compensation at any time before you began these proceedings, were there, either with you or with Mr Patarkatsishvili?

A. Before -- no, no, no. According of my understanding, Badri negotiate to Abramovich about compensation even in 2004/2005.

Q. Well, if it was in 2004 and 2005, that was after your application for asylum, wasn't it?

A. My application for asylum, I think it's a little bit -- for my asylum or for Glushkov asylum?

Q. No, your application for asylum in which you didn't mention the threat which you say forced you out -- let me --

A. Sorry.

Q. You didn't mention in your application for asylum being forced out of Sibneft by these threats. That application for asylum was originally made in October 2001 and was successful in September 2003.

A. Mr Sumption, I gave application for political asylum, it's clear that the accent -- and I told you even now -- that Abramovich made this threat because he had behind of him -- not behind of him -- because he was supported by Putin. And Putin is a key person because he put Putin, show Putin and say, "If you will not do that, Putin will be -- will damage you".

I just want to tell you that this is important to understand: that it was impossible in Yeltsin time because Yeltsin never -- no one can accept that Yeltsin will support you to raid something. In Putin time it's different and I make political -- you're absolutely correct -- I made political application because I try -- I start -- I try to stress that it's political motivated and I think it's correct what I have done.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, the point I'm getting at is actually quite a limited one.

A. Yes.

Q. I have challenged you on your account of these things.

A. Yes.

Q. I am now interested in discovering why you never publicly said anything about the threats you say forced you out of Sibneft until long after 2001.

A. I -- sorry.

Q. In this asylum statement you say that your reason was that Badri was negotiating with Mr Abramovich.

A. Yes.

Q. You do not say, as you did this morning, that your reason was that you didn't want to make trouble for Mr Glushkov in Moscow.

A. Mr Sumption, I have many reasons not to do that and all the reasons, if you want, I may repeat those reasons again. The reason was, first, that the first priority was Nikolai and my belief was that not Putin more fight for Nikolai to be in prison but Mr Abramovich is fighting for Nikolai to be in prison. It means that even when I came to the battle against of Putin openly, I tried to keep Abramovich aside of that because I knew that if Abramovich will come to Putin just caring of his interest, he will make influence Putin to be more aggressive. This is the point.

Q. Well now, I understand your evidence that you've just given to be that you didn't want to make public statements that you had been intimidated into selling out of Sibneft in case it made Mr Abramovich cause difficulty for Mr Glushkov in Moscow. I understand that's your evidence.

A. It's one of the reasons, you're correct.

Q. Now, I would like you to look, please, at bundle

H(A)69/3.

My Lady, I think this may take just five minutes or perhaps a little more.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well. Can we put away the asylum statement?

MR SUMPTION: Yes, we can.

Would you please look at H(A)69/3, which is a document you've seen before where you said for the first time that you had been pressurised by Mr Abramovich into selling out of Sibneft.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, you've seen that before and you said sometimes your emotions got the better of you?

A. Yes, correct.

Q. Now, on the same day that you made this statement to the Moscow Times, you also issued a press statement to Agence France Presse, didn't you?

A. Yes.

Q. We'll find it at page 5 of the same bundle.

A. Okay. Yes.

Q. And a few days after this you told the Novosti wire service that you were preparing a claim for damages; see page 13.001 of the same bundle H(A)69/13.001.

A. Yes.

Q. Your statement a few days after that to Novosti?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, you didn't just do this in a fit of emotion, did you? You took very great care over several days to give your intentions the widest possible publicity?

A. Yes, and what? That connect -- I need to recognise what events happen exactly because I was emotional, it doesn't mean that I emotional one second, yes? It means that something happened, I don't remember, maybe -- I don't remember well, as I told you, because in parallel there were very other -- a lot of other events which were happening. For example, in 2003, was killed my partner from liberal Russia, I don't think that it was December or at the end(?) of the year but it was something what made me emotional and not for a second, that's it.

You are absolutely correct: there are several statements which contradict with my previous position. It is that something happened, I don't remember well what happened exactly, I try to analyse that and to give you the answer but it's nothing what didn't coincide with my position that sometimes I have been emotional.

Q. Now, at the time that you made these statements to the various news agencies and papers, Mr Glushkov's trial was in progress in Moscow, wasn't it, and he was still in jail?

A. I don't remember when Nikolai Glushkov was released from the jail --

Q. In March 2004.

A. Yes, 12 March 2004, correct.

Q. Right.

A. It means that he still have been in jail.

Q. You wouldn't have made these statements if you had really been concerned that Mr Abramovich would respond by making difficulties for Mr Glushkov, would you?

A. Again, Mr Sumption, again and again, sometimes my emotions were over, yes, and I'm a human being. I understood that it's the most dangerous because Abramovich is -- in case of Glushkov, he's more dangerous than Putin, but I have done that. You have correctly said that it's just few examples of that and you gave example which coincide with almost -- which made almost at the same time. It means that something really touched me a lot and I made this statement.

Q. Well, would you turn to bundle H(A)90, page 55 H(A)90/55. You haven't got it yet but somebody is about to give it to you. This is an extract from Kommersant and there's a Russian version on the yellow pages that immediately follow.

A. Yes, fine.

Q. Now, this is 18 months or so later, in July 2005, when you publicly announced that you would be suing Mr Abramovich shortly. Do you see?

A. July 2000...?

Q. July 2005.

A. Yes.

Q. And what you say is:

"The experts and my lawyers are estimating the losses I suffered when forced to dispose of the assets. I had to do it under the pressure of Putin, Voloshin... and Abramovich. I was, in effect, under the racket. I'm no short in proofs of their actions having political background."

So you are saying you are about to sue Mr Abramovich, that's what you were announcing?

A. Just second, I want to open Kommersant, okay? What is the paragraph?

Q. In the English, it's the second paragraph of the article.

A. Yes, yes. (Pause)

Yes.

Q. Then after saying a bit more about your proposed claim, in the fourth paragraph of the article you say:

"The timing for the suit is not accidental: the public opinion on Putin has changed in Great Britain. They used to believe his actions resulted in economic growth in Russia, that, for instance, he had to rectify Yeltsin's errors. Today's public opinion is rather that political persecution started in Russia exactly in the time of Putin..."

A. Yes.

Q. Now, at the time you made this statement, Mr Glushkov was in the middle of his second trial in Moscow, the retrial that was ordered by the Court of Appeal?

A. Yes.

Q. So this was a particularly sensitive moment for Mr Glushkov, wasn't it?

A. Glushkov was -- as I remember, Glushkov that time was already not -- was already -- just a second. When Glushkov was released?

Q. Glushkov was released in 2006 --

A. 4, yes.

Q. Sorry, Glushkov was released from jail in March 2004, he left Russia in 2006.

A. Yes, 12 March. It means that Glushkov already was not in jail and to put in jail much more complicated than to release from the jail, particularly Glushkov -- proof Glushkov was in jail not because he accuse what they initially tried to prove but Glushkov was in jail mainly because he tried to run away from jail. It was the final conclusion.

Q. Now, you told us this morning that the reason why you had taken so long to make public allegations and you have said in your pleadings that the reason why you took so long to start this action was that you didn't want to do anything until Mr Glushkov was safely out of Russia. Now, he wasn't safely out of Russia at this time and yet you explicitly said that you planned to have an action against Mr Abramovich by September?

A. Yes, again I want just to stress, that time Glushkov was not already in jail. Definitely it's again, as you see later, it's politically motivated, what I said, because I connect with Putin position that time and definitely it's -- again it does not help Glushkov but my calculation was it will not damage him to be in jail again.

Q. You can't mean that, Mr Berezovsky.

A. Sorry?

Q. You can't possibly mean that. What you have literally said is that Mr Glushkov wouldn't mind going back to jail and I don't think you meant to say that.

A. No, no, no. I mean that I understand that Glushkov already was released again, that he is on the trial and it's -- I don't remember what time I discuss with him to run finally -- to leave Russia and he was completely, he was in completely different position when he was in jail and I tried to -- not to present any strong statements against of Mr Abramovich.

Q. This morning, what you told us was that you couldn't make strong statements even after he left jail until he was safely out of Russia?

A. You're absolutely correct but, again, my position, as I told you, my emotions sometimes and my situation sometimes move me, push me to make such kind of statement.

Q. It wasn't your emotions that pushed you to make this statement. The reason you made this statement appears from the fourth paragraph. You made it at this time because it would maximise the political impact of what you were saying?

A. You are again -- it's exactly the reason why I mentioned when I gave explanation that it was political reason for that. And all the time, I would like to stress that Glushkov being in jail told me, "Boris, don't change your political battle to my freedom". It's not my word, it was wording by Glushkov.

Q. Mr Glushkov's position had nothing to do with the delay in making this allegation and bringing this action, did it?

A. No, it's completely wrong and you know well that I serve or that I start action almost the last days when I had limited time to start and it's only the reason why I wait up to the last moment was -- and I discussed that with Glushkov, was the reason that maximise -- minimise the risk for Glushkov. It was the main reason. But when Glushkov already had been in -- again, it's declaration that I will start action. It's not -- and only when Glushkov had been in London already and when he was almost to get political asylum, because it also was the point which I discussed with Mr Glushkov and Glushkov accept my position finally, I file -- I start the process. I ask Andy Stephenson to write a letter for action only after I talk to Glushkov and Glushkov accept to start these steps.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, I have one more question, I'm quite happy to leave it until tomorrow if your Ladyship wishes to rise now.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I can't sit beyond 4.30.

MR SUMPTION: No, it should take less than that, even under difficult conditions.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Well then, put it,
Mr Sumption.

MR SUMPTION: Mr Berezovsky, you say in your witness statement that even after Mr Glushkov arrived in England, you didn't want to start this action in case Mr Abramovich got the Kremlin to obstruct Mr Glushkov's asylum application.

A. Yes, it's absolutely correct. I afraid that it will be -- it will come extradition warrant to arrest Glushkov and what happened with me and it's reason why I wait up to last moment to start the process.

Q. In your evidence you're not talking about extradition warrants; indeed, you hardly could because the trial had already occurred. But what you say is that you were concerned that Mr Glushkov's asylum application might be obstructed by the Kremlin at the prompting of Mr Abramovich.

A. Exactly, because as equally from personal experience, when I was asking political asylum and a long time I didn't get political asylum, exactly at that moment Russia sent extradition warrant and I faced with the two case together in parallel: political asylum and extradition. And I fight in parallel with -- against of one and for another one. And I got political asylum automatically only when extradition warrant was refused.

It's exactly what I afraid --

Q. It was the other way --

A. -- what Glushkov could face at that time.

Q. It was the other way around, Mr Berezovsky.

A. Sorry?

Q. It was the other way round, Mr Berezovsky.

A. Mr Sumption --

Q. -- the home secretary granted you asylum and then the extradition warrant was refused.

A. Mr Sumption, you're absolutely correct. But the point is that in parallel I face two problems: political asylum fighting and extradition fighting. And extradition was refused after I was granted political asylum. But, before, when I just start political asylum, it was refused at the initial stage. It is reason why I went to the court to fight for that.

Q. Your own experience must have shown you that the Russian government had no influence over asylum applications against Russia in England because your asylum application was granted in spite of protests by the Russian government, wasn't it?

A. I have completely different experience because I know well that unfortunately -- know well unfortunately, or it maybe coincide, but when I was looking for political asylum and there was no answer at all, one and a half year I think, and then when Russian sent extradition warrant, that time asylum was refused.

It means that it was some coincidental between my attempt to obtain political asylum and waiting for extradition warrant. I don't want to say that British government coordinate with Russians but it is the reality. And after that I faced with two problems together: I was refused political asylum, and start to fight for political asylum, in surrounding of extradition warrant.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, that's a natural break.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well. 10.15 tomorrow?

MR SUMPTION: Yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well. 10.15 tomorrow.

MR BORIS BEREZOVSKY (continued) .....	1

(10.15 am)

Discussion re housekeeping

MS DAVIES: My Lady, before we start the evidence may we just deal with one short matter relating to Clydesdale Bank.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MS DAVIES: My Lady has made two orders against Clydesdale Bank and that has resulted in various material being produced, but the material that's been produced contains some redactions apparently on the ground that the redactions relate to names which are not names of the parties.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MS DAVIES: Essentially the parties have now agreed that various terms should not be redacted and Clydesdale, through their solicitors, Dundas & Wilson, have accepted that they would not oppose an order requiring those terms to be unredacted and we therefore ask my Lady to make an order requiring those terms to be unredacted.

I hope in front of you you have a draft order, which has been seen by my learned friends for Mr Berezovsky and for the family defendants who are concerned with this.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: It was handed to me just before I came down. I haven't read it. I better just read it. I'll read it over the short break.

MS DAVIES: I'm very grateful, my Lady.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: But there's no opposition from Clydesdale or from the claimant?

MS DAVIES: There's a letter at the back of the clip from Dundas & Wilson of last night indicating they're neutral on the application.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Well, I'll read it in the short break.

MS DAVIES: I'm grateful, my Lady.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Berezovsky, good morning, you're still on oath.

THE WITNESS: Good morning.

MR SUMPTION: Good morning, Mr Berezovsky.

You may remember that in your witness statement and in oral evidence yesterday you gave us one of your reasons for wanting the agreement over the $1.3 billion to be in writing: that you would need to satisfy western money-laundering regulations. Do you remember that?

A. Yes, I remember that there were several reasons and one of the reason was that everything should be absolutely transparent and clear for the banks.

- Q. Yes. That was because you were aware that the banks would be bound by rules requiring them to discover the source of the funds?
- A. At that time I already understood much more about requirements of western banks and it was one of the reasons why I want to have -- don't have any problem with western regulations of money sources.
- Q. Now, in 1999, as we established the day before yesterday I think, Mr Fomichev became your financial manager?
- A. I think he became financial manager a long time before that but in 1990 (sic) he was financial manager of our group, it's absolutely correct.
- Q. Well, by 1999, it may have been earlier, he was the financial manager of you personally, your affairs, wasn't he?
- A. As I told you, till I leave Russia, everything what -- all operations with money or main operation with money was done by Badri.
- Q. Was it Mr Fomichev who suggested to you that you should consider shifting your assets into offshore holding companies and trusts?
- A. Which kind of companies?
- Q. Well, any kind of companies and trusts. As I understand it, in about late 1999 or 2000 --
- A. Yes.

- Q. -- you and Badri had a project to put your assets into offshore holding companies and trusts?
- A. Yes, you're absolutely correct that at the end of '99 and the beginning of 2000 we start to think how to construct our assets in western manner. It's correct. And Ruslan Fomichev was the one who accept to help us to do that.
- Q. Yes. Was the suggestion originally made by Mr Fomichev?
- A. I don't remember well. I think that it was mainly Badri and my personal understanding already at that time that the way how even we manage our business with Mr Abramovich, it's time now to move forward and to do in western manner.
- Q. Yes. Well now, when you say "in western manner", you mean shift the assets into western financial institutions, don't you?
- A. It means to create more protection on the one hand and to another hand to create more transparency for banks on the west. And on the other hand, more -- to increase our protection as far as Russia is concerned.
- Q. Now, Mr Fomichev has often been mentioned in the course of the evidence and I'm afraid he's going to be mentioned quite a lot more.

You are aware, are you not, that at least one of the various firms of solicitors who have acted for you in this litigation have interviewed Mr Fomichev?

Cadwaladers did so in December 2007, didn't they?

A. Definitely I don't remember that but if you said that and it's so, I absolutely believe in that.

Q. Well, that was evidence given in the striking-out application but you may not know one way or the other.

I understand that you have quarrelled with Mr Fomichev about a loan and indeed you sued him in the North Shore litigation?

A. Moreover I won the case and it's the final decision of Supreme Court to refuse the appeal of Mr Fomichev. It's final decision and I won around $35 million, it's true.

Q. Yes. Well, you've fallen out with Mr Fomichev. Have you asked Mr Fomichev to give evidence in this action?

A. Definitely not, because after I lost my trust to Mr Fomichev and after I recognise him as a crook and moreover I went to the court and passed through all courts, I mean the initial court, the appeal court and finally the other, I don't have now any doubt that he's crook.

Q. Well, you had a quarrel over a loan; it's not quite the same thing as being a crook.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Is that a question?

MR SUMPTION: Yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: What's your answer to that?

A. I'm sorry. (Pause)

The reason of my separation with Mr Fomichev was exactly the reason that he is crook. I didn't recognise that from the beginning but I -- after recognise that, me personally, I identified as a crook.

MR SUMPTION: If you do not know all the details of your financial affairs and Mr Fomichev, as you said in your evidence in the North Shore litigation, does know all the details of your financial affairs, what have you got to lose by calling him?

A. That he lost his credibility. Impossible to call person who is playing game, as I know now. He has already relations with team of Mr -- with the team of Mr Abramovich, I know this, I got this knowledge from people from Salford, and it means that he's playing game.

But that time definitely I didn't know that, but I lost my -- any my respect to him. I recognised him as a crook. And how I may ask him to be witness at this court which, from the very beginning, my understanding is that to present true, only true and nothing except of true? It will be illogical completely.

Q. Does Mr Fomichev live in England?

A. I know that he has apartment here with his wife and children. I know as well that his father is general -- was general of KGB and that he's continued travelling to Russia. This my knowledge is.

Q. Well, he lives at least for much of the year in England, doesn't he?

A. I didn't meet him last two or three years at all.

Q. Now, Ms Nosova tells us that Mr Fomichev introduced you and Badri to Mr Samuelson of Valmet in Geneva. Is that correct?

A. I think this is correct. This was introduction by Mr Fomichev and as well I think Mr Curtis as well was introduced to me by Mr Fomichev.

Q. By Mr Fomichev or by Mr Samuelson? Ms Nosova thinks it's Mr Samuelson.

A. I don't remember that. Ms Nosova definitely has better memory than me and I think that she's correct.

Q. Now, Valmet and Mr Samuelson were specialists, were they not, in creating offshore structures to hold assets for very rich individuals?

A. As I understood from the beginning, it was exactly the reason to introduce me to them. I did not aware -- was aware that they work just for rich; I think that they work for everybody who want to create proper structure to keep their assets in legal way. But I didn't know anything about other clients of them.

Q. No, okay. Well now, is it right that before you ever met Mr Samuelson, there had been preliminary meetings with him by Mr Fomichev and Ms Nosova?

A. Again, I don't recollect that. But I am sure that if Mr Fomichev decide to introduce him to me, it means that he had knowledge who is this gentleman.

Q. Now, at paragraph 249 of your witness statement D2/17/248 you tell us -- and this is consistent with what you said this morning -- that at the time when Mr Samuelson became involved, which I think was in 2000, you already knew something about western money-laundering regulations.

A. I didn't know anything about money-laundering regulation but I knew the word "money-laundering" and I knew that it's bad.

Q. Yes.

A. But I didn't know anything about regulation.

Q. Well, you have told us earlier this morning that you realised that western banks had certain duties to perform about investigating funds deposited with them?

A. It's absolutely correct. It means that if I know that it's money-laundering regulation, it means that something what is possible to check.

Q. Yes. Now, when I talk about western money-laundering regulations, I'm talking about the regulations that required the banks to carry out those investigations.

Do you understand? It's a shorthand.

A. Yes, yes, and I understood that I should present absolutely clear picture the source of the money and what is there.

Q. Right.

Now, if you look at paragraph 249?

A. 249, sorry?

Q. Yes, 249.

A. Yes.

Q. Right. At the very bottom of the page you're talking here about the offshore trusts, the Hotspur and the Octopus Trusts --

A. Yes.

Q. -- and you say that these structures were created to legalise or to formalise your interests in various businesses:

"This was not solely in order to provide protection from political attacks; we had also learned by this time that, in order to comply with Western money laundering compliance requirements, it was necessary to have interests in assets formally recorded so that the source of funds could be demonstrated where required."

A. Yes, correct.

Q. Now, as I understand it, you understood by this time -- that's to say early 2000 -- that the best way of satisfying western financial institutions about the source of funds was to demonstrate that they represented an asset that you owned?

A. Yes, it's optimum.

Q. Yes. And you also realised, didn't you, that in order to satisfy western institutions about that, you would need to have documents establishing your ownership of them?

A. I understood well that the words are not enough; you need to present the picture which they want to have.

Q. Yes, with documentary evidence?

A. If -- definitely it's the best way.

Q. Yes.

Now, in 1999 and early 2000 you and Mr Patarkatsishvili were receiving large sums of money from Mr Abramovich and companies associated with him which you were unable to explain with any documentary evidence; do you agree?

A. It's exactly what I try to make happen and it's the reason why I call professionals in establishing the foundation and it's -- not foundation -- the professional who can establish the structure and exactly that I want to explain them what is source of my money and they accept my explanation.

Q. Now, would it be fair to say that during the period after you left Russia, the need to satisfy western institutions about the source of your funds was a significant issue for you and Mr Patarkatsishvili?

- A. It was significant issue even when I have been in Russia and, as you correctly mentioned, I start to think about that in '99, at the end of '99, the beginning of 2000. And as you remember, I left Russia in autumn 2000. It means that I start to think about that not when I -- when I left Russia but at the moment when I recognised that it's now a moment already because it was already clear that Putin will become president, it was election campaign March 2000, and we start to think how to make transparent our assets.

And if again we return back to meeting in Le Bourget, it's my request to Mr Abramovich was absolutely the same: I want to make everything transparent for western bank.

- Q. Yes. And you have had to face, since leaving Russia, haven't you, money-laundering investigations by prosecutors and judges in a number of countries?
- A. You're absolutely correct. I face that -- faced the source of this investigation was just Russia and it was just political motivated, what was accepted in this country when I was granted political asylum. All the rest investigations, Mr Sumption, you know well, are closed because no one reason was found that it was money-laundering. I mean Switzerland, I mean Holland and --

Q. France?

A. -- and as far as Russia is concerned, I don't calculate at all because it doesn't matter.

Q. I'm simply trying to establish the significance in your financial affairs of this question of money-laundering regulations.

A. And we know the result.

Q. Yes. Well now, you have mentioned Russia, Switzerland and Holland and I think there have also been investigations in France and Brazil, haven't there?

A. In Brazil it's still ongoing.

Q. Yes.

A. And as far as France is concerned, as I understand, we don't have investigation of money-laundering. We have investigation now already activity of Runicom company, which belong to Mr Abramovich. And as I understand from the last question of French lawyer, lawyer accept the position that impossible to discuss just about Berezovsky at this matter without discussing of role of Mr Abramovich and Mr Shvidler at this matter. This is my understanding of what French judge recognised.

Q. Now, did you meet Mr Samuelson of Valmet at your house in Cap d'Antibes at the beginning of September 2000?

A. My recollection is that I met him earlier, I met him in spring 2000, and then I had several meetings with him and could be in September as well.

Q. I see. Could you perhaps be given bundle H(A)19.

I would like you to turn to H(A)19/10, please. This document is a note made by Mr Samuelson, an internal note within Valmet made by Mr Samuelson about discussions that he had had with you and Mr Patarkatsishvili. The date of the discussions does not appear from the document; the document itself is dated 5 September 2000. It's the American dating system that's been used.

A. It could be the same May 9 but I don't want to argue against of that now.

Q. Yes. Well now, you think that it was in spring that you had discussions with Mr Samuelson?

A. My recollection is spring, the beginning of our relations, of our conversations. But, as I told before, I can't exclude that -- not I can't exclude -- it could be several discussions and one of them could happen in September, what is less probable. But nevertheless I had several discussions with Mr Samuelson.

Q. Yes, understood.

Now, if you look at the bottom of page 10 and the top of page 11, there is a description, a summary, in Mr Samuelson's note of the Hotspur and Octopus Trust structures. Do you see that?

A. Just a second. Okay.

Q. Now, that suggests, at any rate to me, that at the time this note was prepared the Hotspur and Octopus Trust structures had been created already. Is that correct?

A. I don't know. I don't know. I just remember the big -- how to say? -- pieces of paper which a lot of trusts and mentioning aluminium, Sibneft and connection how symmetrical trusts for Badri and for me will be organised; not only trust but how everything will be specified.

Q. Did you discuss with Mr Samuelson what assets you wanted to transfer to these offshore structures?

A. Yes, I discuss with him. We discuss that it will be almost all valuable assets which, as I understand, Badri and me share. And we discuss about Sibneft, we discuss about aluminium assets, we discuss about our -- as I remember, our mass media -- our TV, our newspapers, about future privatisation -- possible future privatisation of Aeroflot and Transaero, which we already own at that time. We discuss about all potential -- all existing potential assets which Badri and me own or will own together.

Q. If you would look at the top of page 11, you will see, five lines down from the top, Mr Samuelson says:

"We will start by moving the Sibneft holdings in to the funds in about ten days."

A. Just a second.

Q. Five lines down.

A. Just a second. Mr Sumption --

THE INTERPRETER: Five lines down.

THE WITNESS: Mr Sumption, I ask you very much: don't push me, I am not in hurry.

MR SUMPTION: I'm trying to help you by telling you where to find it.

THE WITNESS: Thank you very much, I have help from my translator.

THE INTERPRETER: Sir, is this --

THE WITNESS: Even translator doesn't understand where is that.

MR SUMPTION: Top of page 11, five lines down from the top.

THE WITNESS: Okay, just a second.

THE INTERPRETER: "We will start by moving..."

THE WITNESS: Yes.

MR SUMPTION: Right.

"We will start by moving the Sibneft holdings in to the funds in about ten days. These holdings are owned through Cypriot companies mainly today."

Did you tell Mr Samuelson that your holdings in Sibneft were held through Cypriot companies?

- A. Not at all. I don't remember that at all because I didn't know that -- as I told you, my relations with Abramovich at that time were that he hold my shares and it means that it was not organised in any way how it's structurised. And it's exactly the reason of if I already own through Cyprus company, why I should -- what the reason to change one way to another way?

- Q. Well, quite, but let's just establish the facts.

Your interests in Sibneft, as you claim, were not in fact held by Cypriot companies for you, were they?

- A. Again, my interests in Sibneft hold by Mr Abramovich and he organise how to hold that. I was really the first time informed how it's organised in Le Bourget, as you remember, Mr Sumption, I think well, because exactly there Mr Abramovich said, "Oh" -- when I said, "I want to organise in western manner", and Abramovich said, "Boris, it's already organised for me". And I don't remember who is owning what, Zhenya or Zhenya, he said exactly in his -- in our discussion at Le Bourget: it means Evgeny Tenenbaum or Evgeny Shvidler. And I was a little bit surprised that he already organise everything in western manner and why he does not want to do me the same, in the same way.

It's exactly what I start to think at the beginning of 2000 and Abramovich just confirm that he already have done that. I didn't know that until I met him in the -- during our meeting in Le Bourget.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, you must have told Mr Samuelson that your Sibneft holdings were held for you by Cypriot companies or Mr Samuelson wouldn't have recorded the fact in this note?

A. Mr Sumption, my position is very simple and very clear: I never mislead Mr Samuelson. What he wrote in his papers, maybe he think that best way is Cyprus; I don't know at all. But I never mentioned him that I have any structure which own my shares in Sibneft because I knew well that it's owned by Abramovich.

Q. Can you suggest any way in which Mr Samuelson could have been under that impression if you or your staff had not told him?

A. Mr Sumption, I give you clear answer: I didn't know anything about how that time all shares, including which belonged to me, Abramovich structurised. I got this knowledge just in Le Bourget. And you -- and if you read attentively, and from yesterday I understood that you read attentively what happened in Le Bourget, it means that Abramovich already had a structure to structurise and I insist and press Mr Abramovich to do the same; Abramovich refused.

Q. Now, did you tell Mr Samuelson that you had a large stake in Aeroflot?

A. Definitely I informed Mr Samuelson that we are going to privatise Aeroflot. At that time I didn't have, as you told, stake. As I know, being already many years before managing Aeroflot, Logovaz had maybe less than 1 per cent share there.

But the plan which we established from the beginning was to go to privatise Aeroflot and, as you know well, at that time we already owned Transaero -- it's, my Lady, also very big air company -- and my plan was to integrate together Aeroflot and Transaero like one company, and this company should control more than definitely maybe 70 per cent of Russian market in passenger -- in transportation by air.

Q. Transaero was a charter and internal airline within Russia, wasn't it?

A. It's not correct.

Q. What was it?

A. Even now it's one of the most famous for foreign airlines as well and you know well that they have even domination in some countries, like Israel, and they have flights also in Great Britain.

Q. Now, Aeroflot had been privatised about five years before this, hadn't it?

- A. Unfortunately not. Unfortunately not, and Aeroflot really become privatised only -- very small portion of Aeroflot was privatised at the time when Glushkov, Nikolai Glushkov, was deputy general manager of Aeroflot; and, as I told you, Logovaz had just very small portion of that.
- Q. Mr Glushkov tells us in his witness statement that when he joined Aeroflot at the beginning of 1996 it was in the process of being privatised. Initially, he says, it was 51 per cent owned by the State and the rest by the employees. As I understand it, the privatisation occurred in the mid-1990s. Is that wrong?
- A. No, maybe it's -- you are correct. I mean that privatisation not for the market, I mean that State kept 51 per cent control. And I didn't recollect that -- definitely I don't remember -- that maybe the employers (sic), maybe correctly, own 49 per cent. But it was not privatisation itself as we understood well; it was not on the market to buy and to sell. It's the reason why, as I told you, Logovaz, we owned just very small portion of that.
- Q. You did not own any stake in Aeroflot in 2000, did you?
- A. As I remember as well, I did not own anything and we just -- and at that time Abramovich move to the Aeroflot and, as you remember, he even sold shares of Aeroflot because, breaking our agreement, he already operate himself and only who I know the first real private owner except of employers (sic) was Mr Abramovich and his team.

Q. Mr Glushkov tells us in his witness statement that you were not involved in Aeroflot either as a director, shareholder, employee or otherwise. Is that correct?

A. It's absolutely correct. Again, and as I told you before, I'm not sure did Logovaz -- how much Logovaz owned; it means my involvement may be one-hundredth part of per cent. But, as I know, we did not start -- we try to start privatisation in real sense and we were not successful that time. Only Abramovich was successful when he took control over Aeroflot.

Q. If you look back at Mr Samuelson's note on page 11?

A. Page?

Q. 11 -- you'll see that he records that you and Mr Patarkatsishvili owned a large stake in Aeroflot. That's what you told him, isn't it?

A. I never told him that because I did not own. It's absolutely clear.

Q. Would you look at the top of the next page, page 12, please.

A. Yes.

Q. What's recorded here is that you had been:

"... lent on by a past Prime Minister to support his Presidential campaign and, having refused, was targeted for the attention of the Prosecutor in Moscow on the Aeroflot cash collecting arrangements."

A. Again --

Q. And in the third and fourth line of that page --

A. Yes.

Q. -- Mr Samuelson records:

"Aeroflot was partially owned by [Berezovsky] and also by the State."

That's what you told him, isn't it?

A. No, I didn't told him that. Maybe his understanding was that because Aeroflot, as you mentioned now, what I recollect, was privatised by employers (sic) partially, maybe his understanding was that it's my privatisation. I didn't have -- again, I did not have any shares but I planned to participate in privatisation of Aeroflot. What happened later, when Abramovich privatised, this exactly was my plan which Abramovich realised when I left Russia.

Q. You didn't have any plan to privatise Aeroflot, Mr Berezovsky, because it had already been largely privatised in the middle years of the decade, hadn't it?

A. Again, it's not correct. I told you precisely that private -- I mean businessman, I'm sorry, in this terminology, did not privatise Aeroflot until Abramovich came there. There is no one had any real stake. Maybe the employers (sic) they had shares, small shares, but it was not privatised in the sense that business control Aeroflot. And only Abramovich was successful with that, basing on what Mr Glushkov had done before.

And Abramovich came there because he asked me personally, "Boris, could we also manage Aeroflot?" We have -- I had real understanding that he is good professional manager with Shvidler and so, having experience in Sibneft already, and it's the reason why -- and Glushkov was not happy with that, he did not like that, but finally I organised meeting of Mr Shvidler with Mr Jenni as well, Mr Jenni who, as I understand, will give witness statement here, and it's the way how they start to be involved in Aeroflot. And finally they privatise, not me.

Q. Well now, could I ask you, please, to look at bundle H(A)18.

A. 18?

Q. Yes. The full reference is H(A)18/221.003.

Now, this is something which in this litigation has been called the "Explanatory note". The Russian version starts at page 003.

A. Yes, I have it.

Q. There's an English translation of the first page over the page and then the following pages follow. Okay?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, we don't know a great deal about the origin of this document except that it's been disclosed by the family defendants and appears to have come from the office of Mr Kay.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, it appears to be a plan or a draft plan for the restructuring of your assets at some stage around 2000 or possibly a bit earlier.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, if you look at stage 2 in the proposal that's been made --

A. Just a second. Could I have the English as well? Because I have just Russian.

Q. You will see on the page after the Russian --

A. Yes, yes, fine.

Q. -- there's a translation.

A. Yes, yes, good.

Q. And each page of Russian is followed by its own translation.

A. Yes, thank you.

Q. Okay? I'm looking at the translation and at the bottom of page 003T of the English H(A)18/221.003T, stage 2 of this process is described.

A. Yes.

Q. This is describing a process of distributing assets to partners in proportion to their stakes.

A. Yes.

Q. Over the page in the English, you will see a list of seven assets:

"It is initially envisaged that assets owned by the partners in the main business interests will be distributed. Such business interests include:

- "1. LOGOVAZ;
- "2. The aluminium sector;
- "3. SIBNEFT;
- "4. ORT and other media;
- "5. AEROFLOT..."

A. Yes.

Q. Now, were you telling your staff around 2000 that you owned part of Aeroflot?

A. Mr Fomichev, who you mentioned before, knew absolutely perfectly what situation is as far as Sibneft, aluminium, Aeroflot as well, and he knew well that we plan to privatise Aeroflot at that time.

It's the reason why all the time I'm a little bit sceptical when you mention the date of Valmet document, insisting that it was September, not May. I can accept September as well, but in September, as you already know, I was in fight already with president and I did not pay -- I did not wait that I will be able to privatise Aeroflot. But nevertheless it was a plan and it's absolutely clear reflected here.

But if you demonstrate me the other paper with the structure which my Lady mentioned, big list with a lot of companies and so-so, you will find out clear that Aeroflot is not mentioned there because it was just plan for the future. It's mentioned there just aluminium and Sibneft as the main assets there.

And it's just -- I don't know is it argument or not, but my understanding is absolutely clear that that time we are going to privatise Aeroflot; what Abramovich have done later but without our participation, breaking our agreement.

- Q. Mr Berezovsky, we have seen two documents from entirely independent sources but both relating to your assets which refer to Aeroflot as an existing asset. What I suggest to you is that you were giving people the impression that you owned part of Aeroflot.
- A. Mr Sumption, I already gave you answer to this question; I can just repeat the answer if you insist to do that. I plan -- because it was absolutely regular way at that time and you know also that well from Russian history that if one business group planned to privatise something, they try first of all to take management control.

It's exactly what Mr Abramovich have done, and Mr Shvidler, with Sibneft. They knew well general manager of the companies and they went there and -- in their witness statement, moreover, Mr Shvidler said precisely that we were surprised to privatise because it's enough, for us, financial streams to control. Definitely it was hypocrisy, and Mr Abramovich was happy to privatise, but it was a general approach for privatisation: first of all you put team who professional is able to manage in market economy and then you try to privatise.

- Q. Mr Berezovsky, while you've been answering those questions we've checked the position on Aeroflot. 49 per cent of the company was privatised in the mid-1990s; the other 51 per cent is still owned by the Russian State to this day. That's the position, isn't it?
- A. Mr Sumption, you remind me, even today I didn't remember that, but it's not privatisation itself because if you compare -- it was -- sometimes State made this step to privatise for employers (sic) and you were absolutely correctly said that it was not privatisation itself; it's just the beginning of privatisation when State split shares among of employers (sic), not on the market.

Q. There has been no further privatisation of Aeroflot either in 2000 or since 2000, has there?

A. As I recollect, it was -- it's happened later when Abramovich took control over the company.

Q. It never happened. The Russian State still owns the same 51 per cent as it owned in the mid-'90s. That's the position, isn't it?

A. I can't recollect that. I just know that Abramovich privatised the company and sold his stake. This is the point.

Q. Was --

A. And it's -- I don't -- definitely I don't know how Abramovich got this stake but it's absolutely clear that he become -- he finally bought the stake of Aeroflot, not me.

Q. Now, was Andava a joint venture company originally owned by you and Mr Glushkov and I think Andre & Company?

A. Andava was created by my initiative, together with Mr Glushkov and I understand with Andre & Cie, who were -- who are still or who were our partners in Logovaz, and a company was created for the collecting money for the -- for finding money to fund the new project, which name is Ava. And I start this project in '93, before the coup, and when coup happened it was autumn '93: everything collapsed, market collapsed. I didn't have enough money on the internal market and it's the reason why I, having experience with the Forus company, which help me to fund Avtovaz, I create -- I propose the same idea to fund Ava project.

And it's absolutely correct: you said that this company was created by me, Mr Glushkov and Andre & Cie, maybe -- no, Badri definitely as well. As I understand, that's it.

- Q. Did you, in 2000, still have a significant interest in Andava?
- A. I think that in 2000 I still continue to have shares in Andava; how much definitely I don't remember. But it's clear to understand because Andava is transparent company, it's not a problem to understand what is that. Moreover, as I told you before, it was a lot of investigation in Switzerland, pushing by Russian Prosecutor Office, and they finally were closed all of them without any judging against of me.
- Q. The case that you have made in the Chancery action is that after 1996 you held 75 per cent of Andava; is that correct?

- A. Maybe together with Glushkov or someone. I don't remember that I control Andava at all.
- Q. Well, not in connection with Glushkov because, as you have told us in your evidence, Mr Glushkov gave his shares to you in about 1996 or '97, didn't he?
- A. Mr Sumption, I just want to remind you that he gave me shares of Logovaz.
- Q. Of Logovaz?
- A. And later on, when Glushkov returned back to --
- Q. Well, Mr Berezovsky, I'm puzzled about that. I'm reading from your pleadings in the Chancery action, where you say --
- A. It's --
- Q. Let me finish.
- A. Sorry, sorry.
- Q. -- Mr Glushkov gifted his shares in Andava to BB such that BB held a 75 per cent stake in Andava, and that's said to be in 1996.
- A. Mr Sumption, you're absolutely correct because I still have been in 2000 year, and that was a different time. You're absolutely correct then when Glushkov gave up his shares, including Andava, he gave up to me. You're absolutely correct.
- Q. Now, in 2000 were you still receiving income from Andava?

A. I really don't know did that time Andava generate money, but what I understand that -- and why I forgot about Glushkov, because when Glushkov return back to -- when he return back and went to serve Aeroflot, it was happened in '96. He served Aeroflot between '96 and '98. He, as I recollect, used the Andava as a vehicle for Aeroflot.

Q. Yes.

A. It's the reason why I forgot that he did not -- I think that he become again shareholder but it's the reason why I forgot -- I thought that we discuss about already new time. Sorry.

Q. Well now, is it right that from 1996 onwards Andava managed the foreign currency -- that's to say the non-ruble -- treasury of Aeroflot?

A. It's absolutely correct. And it was the idea of Glushkov to concentrate all foreign streams which were spread through more than hundred banks in one hand, that to control -- first of all to put all income of Aeroflot in one place and, basing on that, to obtain the credit to lease the new planes for Aeroflot. Yes, it was idea of Mr Glushkov, it's correct.

Q. Okay. Now, Mr Jenni says in his witness statement that when Mr Glushkov arranged for Andava to manage the foreign currency treasury of Aeroflot, it had no other business thereafter; its only business was managing the foreign currency treasury of Aeroflot. Do you agree?

A. Mr Sumption, as I told you before, I was not involved in managing anything at all. I just follow at that point Andava. As I told you, at the beginning we create Andava to find funding for other project; it's the reason why it's Andava, yes? Later on Glushkov decide to use that for the purpose of Aeroflot and I don't have any connection how it was managed and Glushkov completely was responsible how to do that.

Q. Now, in 1996 and '97, is it right that substantial sums of money were paid by Andava to companies controlled by you?

A. What do you mean? Which company controlled by me?

Q. Anros, Forus and Ruco, principally.

A. I participate in Anros, I participate in Ruco and definitely Andava was not -- how to say? -- Andava was a business project, not just a charity.

Q. You see, the Swiss court, in its judgment against Mr Jenni, has established in some detail, hasn't it, that funds derived from the management of Aeroflot's foreign treasury were transferred to companies including Anros, Forus and Ruco in which you, and in some cases Mr Glushkov, were interested?

A. Believe me that I did not read the judgment of Swiss court or Swiss judge but I want just to stress you: there were a lot of attack to me from Russian Prosecutor Office which they spread all over the world, including Switzerland. And as I told you recently, today, I didn't have any charge from Swiss authorities against of me.

And moreover, all investigations which Russia initiate for many years is closed now. I have official paper which demonstrate that they don't have any -- anything what I have done illegally there.

And again Andava was a business, not charity: it means that absolutely clear that this company generate money.

Q. Now, Aeroflot's foreign treasury was still being managed by Andava in 2000, wasn't it?

A. It's a great story. You're absolutely correct. As I heard, I don't remember well, that even when Glushkov was in prison in Russia, Russian -- Aeroflot continued to use the vehicle which Glushkov created. And it's really -- they charge him because he create this mechanism first of all, Andava, and on the other hand they continue to use this mechanism for the purpose of Aeroflot. It's just demonstration again that his charge, the case against of Glushkov was just political motivated, nothing more, because his connection to me.

Q. Now, Mr Berezovsky, we've seen in Mr Samuelson's note in two places that he was given to understand by somebody that you owned a large part of Aeroflot. What I suggest to you is that that was the impression that you gave him because you were receiving large sums of income via Andava and the other companies, Forus, Anros and Ruco, which actually emanated from Aeroflot.

A. Mr Sumption, it's absolutely wrong. I gave all my answers to your questions. I never mislead Mr Samuelson as, I would like to say you, nobody who I met in business.

Q. Now, at some stage after the meeting that Mr Samuelson records in his note -- which I should tell you does not refer to problems about meeting money-laundering regulations at all -- at some stage after that meeting did you and Mr Patarkatsishvili decide that you would need to consult a specialist, a lawyer, about money-laundering requirements?

A. I don't remember that at all. I just know that all -- everything what's concerning our visualisation -- legalisation on the west, you're absolutely correct, was -- at that time was managed by Mr Fomichev, as I understand. Mrs Nosova also participate but not so much like Mr Fomichev. And as I recollect, he introduced to us several people, including Mr Samuelson,

Mr Curtis, as I remember later, or the same time,
I don't remember.

But again, the point is not what -- not that we want to hide something; we want to make it transparent, that's it. Transparent and protected from western regulation -- from point of view of western regulation.

Q. Mr Curtis of Curtis & Co was a solicitor that you had,
I think, briefly had dealings with at the time of your litigation against Forbes, is that right, in 1998?

A. I don't remember that, '98. Maybe you remind me it.
Mainly I remember Mr Curtis appearance connected to the time when we decide to create the proper western structures but I can't exclude that I met him earlier.

Q. Right. Well now, can you tell us when you first met
Mr Curtis in connection with the western structures?

A. I don't remember well. I met him many times generally,
I met him many times in London. He based in London.
I knew him well and he organised this idea with sheikh and so. And if -- maybe it's so, the way to remind, maybe -- already I know that Roman pay to us our profit,
I forgot from aluminium or from Sibneft, already using the structure of sheikh. Definitely sheikh was --
I knew, I got knowledge about sheikh through Mr Curtis, it's true.

Q. Now, Mr Patarkatsishvili appears to have consulted

Curtis & Co, Mr Curtis's firm, in October 2000. Were you aware of that?

A. I don't remember.

Q. You can't remember?

A. I don't remember. I know that Badri, as I told you, as only we decide to create the proper western structures and Ruslan Fomichev took initiative to organise that because he said that he has connections, proper connections on the west. And Natalia Nosova as well, but less that time I think, but she remember that better.

And at that time I was introduced to several people. As far as Curtis, I told you that I didn't remember that I met him in '98 but I met him a lot already in -- being in France, I think, and definitely more often in London. And he was the key person, as I understand, who organise the Devonia deal, when we sold our interest in Sibneft, and -- because his connection to sheikh, as I understand.

Q. Now --

A. And I just want to mention to you that I was confirmed by Mr Nevzlin and, as I recollect, Mr Khodorkovsky that Mr Curtis is a proper lawyer because they -- he serve them as well; I mean Menatep Group.

Q. Now, at the end of 2000, as we know, you and

Mr Patarkatsishvili agreed to sell your stake in ORT for $150 million. Now, do you remember that the agreement that you signed to sell your stake to Mr Abramovich's company Akmos only mentioned $10 million of that $150 million price, $5 million to each of you? Do you recall that?

- A. No, I just remember well that we decided to organise payment in the way which is proper for Mr Abramovich, which is proper for us, because you remember in Le Bourget Abramovich mentioned that Putin does not like to be involved in that and so and so. And as my recollection is the price was, as you correctly said, 150 is completely wrong as a price because even press secretary of Abramovich gave clear evidence in 2010 that the price was at least $1 billion, but we didn't have choice, as I told you. And because of tax reason or some other reason I don't understand, Abramovich --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just a second. Mr Berezovsky, when you say that the secretary of Abramovich gave clear evidence in 2010 that the price was at least $1 billion --

- A. You are correct.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: -- are you talking about the price or the value?

- A. I'm talking about value of the company which is -- was estimated by Central Bank when they gave a credit to ORT. It was '99, after the crisis, and estimation -- and we gave our collateral, 13 per cent, 1-3, 13 per cent, and they gave credit 100 million.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I see.

A. This is the point which I mentioned. That means that I understood well the real value of ORT that time.

MR SUMPTION: Mr Berezovsky, I'm asking you about the terms of the agreement that you signed for the sale.

A. The terms of the agreement were very simple.

Q. A very simple question. There were two agreements for the sale of ORT to Akmos, one by you and one by Mr Patarkatsishvili; do you agree?

A. Mm-hm. I don't remember Akmos name but I remember well, as you mention, terms of agreement.

Q. The price mentioned in each of those two agreements was $5 million, wasn't it?

A. It's absolutely correct.

Q. So the only price that was referred to in your agreements for the sale of ORT was a total of $10 million, not 150?

A. Where is mentioned?

Q. The price mentioned in the sale agreements between you and Akmos was only $5 million each, a total of $10 million, not $150 million?

A. Mr Sumption, as I told you, I follow advice of Badri and my financial advisers and I told them clearly what I remember well: that the price, real price, is $150 million but we're --

Q. I'm not quarrelling with you about that. I quite accept it was $150 million. The point I'm putting to you is that out of that $150 million, only $10 million was referred to in the written agreements. Is that right?

A. Mr Sumption, as far as my signature under $5 million or $10 million -- I don't remember well -- you are absolutely correct.

Q. Thank you. Now, was that because you wanted to avoid receiving the other $140 million in Russia?

A. It's absolutely correct.

Q. Did that mean that you had no documented explanation for the fact that your actual receipts were $150 million?

A. I don't know that at all, but I am sure that if banks accept that, they have reference why -- what is that. And you remember well, again in Le Bourget Mr Abramovich insist -- not me, Mr Abramovich insist -- that it should be in this manner. And I never insist -- I prefer the direct payment, like --

Q. In what manner?

A. Sorry?

Q. In what manner do you say Mr --

- A. In manner that we should think about tax, we should think about that Central Bank maybe not give me this money because it needs to discuss with the Russian -- because you know all that what happened in Le Bourget.
- Q. Did you or Mr Patarkatsishvili instruct Curtis & Co to assist you in documenting the source of the $140 million?
- A. As far as me is concerned, I am sure that not. As far as Badri concerned, I think likely that he instructed, or Mr Fomichev, I don't remember. But definitely I never -- I don't remember that I gave any instruction, as you said, to my financial adviser, so people who organised the deal.
- Q. What do you know about a company called Spectrum General Trading?
- A. I know I heard the name but I don't -- can't identify. If you remind me, I'll do that.
- Q. Well, from your recollection, however, can you not tell us anything about Spectrum Trading?
- A. I don't remember the name. I just --
- Q. You don't remember the name?
- A. The name Spectrum?
- Q. Spectrum General Trading.
- A. I don't remember the name.
- Q. You don't remember the name. I see. Would you please take bundle J2/2, flag 9.

A. Just a second.

Q. This is addressed to the assistant so that she can find the page for you: flag 9 of bundle J2/2, page 122 J2/2.09/122.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, this is part of the witness statement of Mr Marino, your then solicitor --

A. Yes.

Q. -- which was used in the striking-out proceedings.

A. Yes.

Q. He talks about Spectrum in this part of his witness statement.

A. Yes.

Q. At paragraph 381 he refers to the sale agreement, then at paragraph 382 he says that:

"A third party was involved... Spectrum, which was an Abu Dhabi corporation."

A. Yes.

Q. Owned by Sheikh Sultan bin Khalifa et cetera.

A. Mm-hm.

Q. And in the next paragraph under 382 he says that he understands from you --

A. Just a second.

Q. Last sentence of 382.

A. 382, last sentence, yes.

Q. "I understand from Mr Berezovsky that Spectrum... entered into a deed of assignment with Akmos, pursuant to which Spectrum assigned its rights under the call option to Akmos."

A. Yes.

Q. Now, you appear to have discussed Spectrum with Mr Marino; do you agree?

A. No, look, again, if they present me how it was structured, because definitely I did not participate how it was structured, and they mention, "This is Spectrum, which made a deal with Akmos", definitely I can identify that it was so. But when you put me the question, "Did I remember Spectrum?", I gave you the answer: I don't remember Spectrum at all, the name.

Q. Were you the chairman of Spectrum?

A. I don't know.

Q. You don't know?

A. I don't remember.

Q. You don't remember whether you were the chairman of Spectrum?

A. Definitely.

Q. If you were the chairman of a company, you wouldn't recollect that at all; is that right?

A. I recollect -- I just remember that I was executive secretary of CIS countries and so, but I definitely didn't recollect in which company I was chairman because there were 1,000 different companies and only Badri and my advisers regulated where I should be chairman or not.

Like it's happened, for example -- and you know well example: it's NFK. I was -- it turned out that I was chairman and definitely it was not my approach to become chairman of this company; it was approach of Mr Shvidler and Abramovich to put me in this position, and Badri.

Q. Let's concentrate on Spectrum, shall we?

A. I concentrate already. I didn't -- I don't recollect anything.

Q. Spectrum was a company 100 per cent owned by the sheikh. Did the sheikh, as 100 per cent owner of Spectrum, make you its chairman?

A. I don't know that. I don't remember that.

Q. Do you remember that on 6 January 2001 you applied to open an account at Clydesdale Bank?

A. I knew only that account was opened in this bank, definitely I don't remember the date, but I know that the money which were -- which should be paid from the transaction of -- I don't remember -- Sibneft definitely but I don't remember the others, ORT and so, they paid -- finally they should be on the account of this bank -- what is the name?

- Q. Well, this is a personal account of yours, not an account in the name of one of your trusts.
- A. It means that I didn't recollect that I had personal account there.
- Q. Well now, could you please look at bundle H(A)27/248. Do you have that? This is an account opening application form.
- A. Yes.
- Q. Do you see?
- A. Just a second.
- Q. It's signed and I think completed in manuscript by you; is that right?
- A. I recognise my signature here.
- Q. Yes. And do you recognise your handwriting on the rest of the form?
- A. Not. It's not my wording, my hand.
- Q. But it is your signature?
- A. Signature is mine, definitely.
- Q. Right.

Now, this shows that on 6 January you applied to open an account at Clydesdale Bank. Whose idea was it that you should open an account at that bank?

- A. I think it's idea of Ruslan Fomichev or Curtis, I don't remember.
- Q. Now, over the page, second page of the document, you describe yourself as the company chairman of Spectrum.

Can you tell us why you did that?

A. First of all, definitely, as I told you, it's not my hand.

Q. Right.

A. It's someone who prepare that and even there is no signature at this page. It means that it could be almost 100 per cent that I even didn't see this page because my signature is only on the front page. And you may put me very correct question: is it your -- your hand which put the letters? I said: signature is mine, all the rest is not mine.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, if you signed a document which described you as the chairman of Spectrum, that must be because you or one of your staff gave that information to the person who actually wrote it out before passing it to you for signature; is that right?

A. Mr Sumption, I want to be very, very precise. This is my signature, it's correct. I am responsible formally for everything what is written. As you have seen before, I put my signature even where I was mentioned and even not me was mentioned because my birthday was completely wrong. You have seen this document.

I am sorry to say it's not good, I agree with you, but believe me, it's almost zero per cent probability that I have seen the second page. They gave me it to sign; I sign. They said me that it will be your account; fine. Because it's prepared not by me, it's prepared by people to whom I trust.

Q. Like Mr Fomichev?

A. Absolutely correct.

Q. Right.

Now, Spectrum was the company through which you intended to pass most of the proceeds of the sale of ORT, wasn't it?

A. I don't remember that, but I think you're absolutely correct. Because, as I told you, the mechanism to sell our assets through sheikh was created before Sibneft and even before I think ORT because part of the -- again, it's my recollection, I don't want to insist that -- that part of our profit from Sibneft or maybe from aluminium -- again, I don't want now to mislead you -- we pass in the same way. And it means that this Clydesdale Bank operate in our favour, it's correct.

Q. Right. So sometime before 6 January --

A. 6 January which year?

Q. 2001.

A. Yes.

Q. -- you and Mr Patarkatsishvili had decided, for whatever reason, that you would be using Spectrum as a structure for getting you the proceeds of your ORT stake?

A. Be sure it was -- be sure it was not my decision.

Definitely it was decision of my adviser and maybe first of all Badri because, as I told you before, Mr Sumption, I trust Badri, it was time when I trust Fomichev as well. And it's my way -- maybe it's the reason why I'm here in the court -- to trust people who I really think that they are fair and they are truthful, but it's happened different.

But again, Mr Sumption, you don't have -- you shouldn't have any doubts that I never went into details. I was asking to sign; I signed that. Moreover, I wouldn't too much surprise, I was lucky that it was not -- it is not my signature on the second page. I just was lucky, because it could be that my signature also could be there, because I just follow advice of my financial adviser. And it's not good, I know that.

Q. Now, could you please be given bundle H(A)28/73.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Can we put this one away?

MR SUMPTION: Yes, my Lady.

I'm told that there may be an error on [draft] line 22 on the current page of the transcript where "lucky" has been rendered as "slightly", but maybe that can be checked on the tape in due course.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. Yes, it was "lucky".

MR SUMPTION: That was what we remember.

Now, this is a letter from Mr Curtis to an official at Clydesdale Bank. He says that he's acting for Spectrum at the very beginning of the letter, as you'll see.

A. Just a second. Yes.

Q. Now, if you look at the third paragraph, you will find the basis -- I mean, your evidence was you don't know about this but just to show you, in the third paragraph you will find that Mr Curtis says:

"... we have previously acted for Mr Berezovsky, our first instruction being in 1998. Mr Berezovsky's associates in turn introduced me to Mr Arkady..."

That is obviously Mr Patarkatsishvili.

"... who I have acted for for a period of three months."

It is for that reason that I suggested to you that Mr Patarkatsishvili had consulted Mr Curtis in October.

A. Yes. Logical.

Q. Now, looking at the rest of the letter, Mr Curtis in this letter describes the two sums of $70 million that are to be credited to the accounts of you and Mr Patarkatsishvili. I should tell you that there's also an application form to open an account at Clydesdale Bank for Mr Patarkatsishvili.

A. Mm-hm.

Q. In the second paragraph:

"Pursuant to the option agreement, it is proposed that Mr Berezovsky" --

A. In the second paragraph?

Q. Second paragraph.

A. The first page or the second?

Q. The first page.

A. Yes.

Q. "... it is proposed that Mr Berezovsky and Mr Arkady will each be paid the sum of US$70 million. These sums will be remitted from Spektrum's account with the National Bank of Fujairah and we are advised by Dr Jumean that they will be accompanied by confirmation of non-criminal source."

Now, if you look over the page, he asks Mr Sykes in the second last paragraph whether they would be prepared to accept these two sums of $70 million, one for each account.

A. Yes, okay. Just a second. Yes. Mm-hm. Yes.

Q. What he is explaining to Mr Sykes is that there is going to be an option agreement. I'm trying to find the first reference to the option agreement but it's also referred to in the first full paragraph on the second page of the letter.

If you look at the first paragraph of the whole letter on the first page, in the opening of the letter he says:

"We have been instructed by Spektrum... in connection with a proposed option agreement. Pursuant" --

A. It's the first paragraph?

Q. Yes, first paragraph on the first page.

"Pursuant to the agreement Spektrum's nominee will acquire 99% of the issued share capital of ORT KB... which we understand is the largest [TV... operator...]"

Et cetera. Over the page Mr Curtis says:

"We have yet to finalise the terms of the option agreement and are agreeing the format of this with Mr [Ivlev, as he should be called], the senior partner of Eversheds [Moscow bureau]..."

A. Yes.

Q. So what Mr Curtis was explaining to Clydesdale Bank was that there was going to be an option agreement --

A. Yes.

Q. -- and that the $70 million that each of you and Mr Patarkatsishvili were going to receive represented the amount payable under that option agreement.

A. It's written here.

Q. Yes. Now, what can you tell us about this option agreement?

A. Nothing.

Q. Nothing?

A. I don't know anything how they organise the payment. My request was just simple: I want to have this legally on the west. And, as I know, until now nobody, even Russian Prosecutor Office, didn't charge me about this sum.

I want like nevertheless, Mr Sumption, to stress what is I think very, very important: Russian Prosecutor Office is fishing all over the world for the last ten years and big, big amount of money, billions, they never even recognise, knowing well, and I know why: because it's paid by Abramovich. If it would not be paid by Abramovich, they immediately recognise that it's dirty money and I already was charged in all countries which connected to that. It's only reason, because it's a lot of money. They find even $5,000 which were transferred to my account, I mean Prosecutor Office.

Q. Would you agree with me that you had never agreed with Mr Abramovich in relation to ORT that there would be any option agreement?

A. Me personally? I don't remember --

Q. You personally.

A. Me personally, I don't remember at all how it was organised. We just discuss, and you see it in Le Bourget again transcript that there is discussion about amount. I don't discuss with Abramovich definitely about any option or somehow.

Q. Right.

Now, the option agreement that we have is not dated but, for various reasons that I won't trouble you with, it must have been prepared after 9 February. And I'm going to ask --

A. 9 February which year?

Q. 2001.

A. Mm-hm.

Q. Well, it must have been signed, sorry, after 9 February.

I won't trouble you with the reasons for that because it's not matters that you would necessarily have known about.

I want to ask you to look at one of the three execution copies of that agreement which was signed by you.

A. Okay.

Q. You'll find that in bundle H(A)28 at page 225

H(A)28/225. Okay?

A. Just a second.

Q. Do you have 225 open? If you flick forward to 231,

I think you'll find your signature.

A. Just a second.

Okay, it's my signature.

Q. Now, this agreement is an agreement relating to what are called the option shares -- look at page 225 -- and that's 23,726 shares owned by you in the capital of ORT-KB.

A. Yes.

Q. That is the correct number of shares that you had owned back in December in ORT-KB, isn't it?

A. Definitely I don't remember correct or not correct.

I don't remember these numbers. I just know what I own in shares. In shares my impression is that Badri and me own together 49 per cent.

Q. Well now, this document which you signed is a document which, on the face of it, grants to Spectrum an option to acquire your shares in ORT-KB for $70 million.

A. Yes.

Q. See clause 2 on page 226.

Now, somebody must have explained to you when they asked you to sign this what it was?

A. Mr Sumption, I don't recollect at all. I absolutely confirm that it's my signature, it's absolutely correct. I absolutely confirm that we discuss about $70 million to me and $70 million to Badri as a sale of ORT. I don't remember this paper.

- Q. Did you know when you signed this document that the transfers of your shares in ORT-KB had actually been registered in the Moscow Companies Register on 29 December 2000?
- A. Definitely I didn't know. I know that it should be registered. I know that Abramovich is beneficiary, is final buyer of that. Definitely I don't know how it's organised in Moscow. I know that -- just that I deliver all request of my team and Mr Putin to sell my shares. That's it.
- Q. You wanted the transfer to go through as soon as possible after you'd agreed it with Mr Abramovich in order to get Mr Glushkov, you say, out of jail?
- A. Definitely it's correct.
- Q. Right. So it won't surprise you to learn that it did in fact go through very soon after the agreements were signed on 29 December, even if you don't know the exact date?
- A. Again, I just want to tell you what I told you yesterday: that definitely -- and it's just confirmed -- that it took time to prepare. It's completely opposite what Abramovich insist and you insist: that it was prepared in Le Bourget. And definitely up to the last moment I try to get Nikolai Glushkov out of the jail and it was agreed that he will be released after his birthday, the 24th. And when I got the call and then when I recognise that it will not happen, I signed this agreement.

Q. You see, Mr Berezovsky, the agreement that you signed here is a completely bogus document, isn't it? It's pretending --

A. It's completely...?

Q. It's a completely misleading document because it is pretending to be selling to the sheikh's company for $70 million shares that had in fact already been transferred to Mr Abramovich's company Akmos weeks before.

A. Mr Sumption, I don't want to argue against your definition, yes? I just argue against of what happened. Never no one, again, charge me of something wrong with this paper -- not the bank which got the money; not Russian Prosecutor Office; not Mr Putin personally -- because it was organised not by me. It was organised in proper way, as I understand, because no one charge was done against of this paper.

And if you will be lucky, after this court it will be charged. But I am sure it will not be because it's nothing against of law as I understand, at least until now. It means that to insist, to continue to insist that it was money-laundering and so on, it's not correct already.

- Q. Mr Berezovsky, this document, I suggest to you, was signed by you for the sole purpose of being shown to Clydesdale Bank in order to get them to accept your $70 million. That's the position, isn't it?
- A. Mr Sumption, it is not. The position is that I follow advice of my lawyers, including, as you know, as you mentioned yourself, professional English lawyer, Mr Curtis or some others, but professional English -- certified English lawyers. And what is wrong with that? Never after that I had any problem with this payment. What is wrong with that?
- Q. You mustn't assume that everything I am putting to you is necessarily an accusation of wrongdoing, Mr Berezovsky. But would you agree with me that you did not in fact sell an option on your shares in February or thereabouts of 2001 in ORT because you had already sold them to Akmos and they had been registered already in Akmos's name? Do you agree with that?
- A. Mr Sumption, I even don't understand what you are telling. I'm sorry to say that.
- Q. Can you tell us what the point of this agreement was then?
- A. The point was very simple. Putin threat me -- messenger was Abramovich -- to sell my shares in ORT. They kept in jail my friend, Mr Glushkov, and he was very sick. And I didn't have choice, under threat, to sell my shares of ORT. How they organise, through option, through not option, I don't care at all. I just care that finally the western bank should accept this money without problem for me and for the bank. It was done. That was done. That's it.

Q. Hadn't you pretended to be chairman of Spectrum in your account opening form in order to prepare the way for this agreement?

A. Mr Sumption, I was absolutely sincere and truthful when I told you that I even don't remember this name, this company.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, would that be a convenient point to break?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. Can I just ask you, Mr Sumption, is there a reference to any transfer to -- just a second.

MR SUMPTION: We have the document which records the registration of the transfer in ORT-KB to Akmos. Would your Ladyship like the reference to that?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I would like the reference to that. You can give it to me later.

MR SUMPTION: I will give that to you on your Ladyship's return.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, very well.

Yes, ten minutes, Mr Berezovsky.

(11.44 am)

(A short break)

(11.55 am)

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, I will invite your Ladyship to look at the document because it will give the witness the opportunity to do so as well.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR SUMPTION: It's in bundle H(A)26 at 151 in the Russian and 152 in English H(A)26/152.

A. H(A)28?

Q. H(A)26, page 151. You are being given it, Mr Berezovsky.

A. You will not need that more, the previous one?

Q. Don't put any other bundles away for the moment, please, because you may need them again. If I can ask you, in spite of rather encumbering your desk, just to take the bundle that's being given to you.

A. Yes.

Q. H(A)26/151 is the Russian version of an extract from the register of ORT-KB --

A. Yes.

Q. -- at 29 December. You will see that this records that at 29 December --

- A. Just a second. Just a second. 29 December.
- Q. Top right.
- A. Yes. I already left Russia. Yes, okay.
- Q. Halfway down the document, you will see that the party into whose name it was registered was Akmos Trade Limited, which was the Abramovich company to which you contracted in late December to sell the shares.
- A. Yes. It's the page -- let's see in English, which page?
- Q. It's the following page in English.
- A. Okay, thank you. Where are you referring to Akmos?
- Q. Halfway down the page.
- A. The third paragraph, let's say?
- Q. The third box, yes.
- A. Thank you.
- Q. Okay?
- A. Yes.
- Q. So at the time when Mr Curtis was drafting and you were signing documents which were apparently assignments of your shares to Spectrum, in fact the same shares had already, with your consent, been registered in the name of Akmos?
- A. I didn't know anything about that.
- Q. I see.

Well now, my Lady, just for the transcript, I don't think there's any dispute about the chronology.

Mr Ivlev, who is being called as a witness and was Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili's Moscow lawyer at the time, confirms the date at paragraph 33 of his witness statement D1/08/107; so also does Mr Gorodilov, who handled the transfer on our side, at paragraph 78 of his first witness statement E2/04/32.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, thank you.

MR SUMPTION: Now, I would like you, please -- you can put away the bundle that I've just been showing you, Mr Berezovsky, and perhaps you could be given instead bundle H(A)27/218.

Mr Berezovsky, you may remember that I showed you earlier this morning an extract from Mr Marino's witness statement in which he said that you had told him about an assignment between Akmos and Spectrum.

A. Yes, I remember that, that you told me that.

Q. And I showed you the passage from Mr Marino's evidence in which he said that he'd been told about this assignment by you.

A. I can't refuse that.

Q. Well now, this is the assignment in question. It's a document which appears on its face to be an assignment of the option that you had just granted to Spectrum by Spectrum to Akmos Trade --

A. Yes.

- Q. -- and this too was drafted sometime after the middle of January.
- A. It could be.
- Q. And there is, on page 220 a signature on behalf of Spectrum and there is a signature on behalf of Akmos which I have to tell you is a forgery.
- A. Okay, it's --
- Q. You wouldn't know about that but it is a forgery.
- A. I don't know anything about this document.
- Q. No, I'm not suggesting you do.
- A. And you have proved that it's not correct?
- Q. That will be our evidence.
- A. Okay.
- Q. Now, this document is pretending to be an assignment back to Akmos of the shares that you had granted an option to Spectrum over.
- A. Mm-hm.
- Q. Now, what I want you to help us on is this: how were you able to tell Mr Marino when he made his witness statement about this document? You obviously knew about it, didn't you?
- A. Definitely -- I just describe, my Lady -- definitely I don't remember about this document, about Spectrum, about how it's organised. But when Marino put in his -- what it was, statement or somehow?

Q. Yes.

A. -- he just use information how he understand that.

Q. Yes.

A. Believe me, I never know about this document and I even -- maybe he remind me that it was Spectrum involved and so, but I didn't know anything about that.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, that can't be true, can it? Because what Mr Marino said -- you saw the document this morning J2/2.09/122 -- was:

"I understand from Mr Berezovsky that Spectrum then entered into a deed of assignment with Akmos, pursuant to which it assigned its rights under the call option to Akmos."

A. Mr Sumption, again, if he told me, "Boris, do you know that it was organised like that?" I just say that, "Mr Marino, I didn't remember that definitely, but if you have evidence that it's organised like that, I confirm that it's organised like that". Definitely, Mr Sumption, you understand well that I didn't know not Spectrum, not anything, before someone remind they me that it's Spectrum and it's Akmos. I even don't know that.

Again, Mr Sumption, I don't want to present me that I don't have memory at all, and so I have memory what I remember, yes, and I remember the most important for me. That was not important for me at all; I was just presented my assistants what to do. And if Mr Marino, who is very professional, present me that it was organised like that, "Boris, can you confirm?" I said, "I think so". That's it. Believe me, I didn't went in investigation how it was organised.

Q. This --

A. And now you even said that it's false. I don't know at all what is that.

Q. This document appears to have been disclosed by Mr Patarkatsishvili's widow and may not have been available to Mr Marino when he made his witness statement.

A. I don't know anything about it.

Q. But you told him about it, didn't you? He didn't tell you about it; you told him?

A. Mr Sumption, again, the technology is very simple. They -- my lawyers, they try to investigate how happened maybe ten years ago, maybe five years ago, and they told me, "Boris, look, it was organised like that. Do you remember anything about that?" Definitely my -- the probable answer, "I don't remember. But if you investigate that, put like that".

Mr Sumption, believe me, I'm not misleading you. My Lady, I'm not misleading you. I just present what I remember and what I think happened that time, when Mr Marino present his pleading or something.

Q. Did you read Mr Marino's witness statement before he served it on us in the striking-out proceedings?

A. I did not. I just --

Q. You did not?

A. I just -- he told me about general position but I did not read that in any details.

Q. I see. Well, did you read it at all?

A. Definitely I didn't read that, that pleading.

Q. Why did you say in your own witness statement in the strike-out proceedings:

"I have read the first witness statement of Pietro Marcello Marino dated 16 April and confirm that to the best of my knowledge and belief it contains an accurate account of events."

A. I signed it because, as I told you, Mr Marino explain me what is in this pleading. But I didn't read all details what were presented there.

Q. Well, you must have read it carefully enough to be able to confirm that it contained an accurate account of events, surely?

A. Mr Sumption, again, I believe, I trust Mr Marino and definitely you understand already well that I did not read that attentively what he present and if I need to sign that I understand what is this document, I sign that.

Q. In the course of your evidence about this transaction this morning you have been trying to distance yourself from it although in fact you know full well what its purpose was, do you not?

A. I didn't try to distance myself. I just present what I know about that, what I remember about that. And my recollection is very simple: we agreed finally that we will pay -- we will be paid $175 million. $25 million I should return back to Abramovich in favour of election campaign of Putin. It was very hypocritical at that time because I already was out of the country, but nevertheless it was agreement before and we deliver that.

Then we discuss that how it should be structured and to protect our money and not to be squeezed and should be transparent enough for the west and so-so. But it's not my point which I discussed personally; I just heard about that, nothing more.

What I remember well that we agreed that $10 million will be paid in Russia, $140 million will be paid abroad. It should be finally put in proper western bank. That's it. This is my knowledge. What I know today again just confirm that everything was done in proper way: no one commission, no one prosecutor charge me or Mr Abramovich or Mr Badri for that.

- Q. Mr Berezovsky, could you please be given bundle H(D)2. This is a note in documents recently produced by Clydesdale Bank. You probably won't have seen it because they were produced while you've been giving evidence.

I'd like you, please, in H(D)2 to turn to page 4a, which is behind flag 4 H(D)2/04/5.

- A. It is in -- not in typing, yes?

- Q. It's a manuscript note. There is a typed-up version behind it -- not in my copy. I'm told there is a typed-up version. We'll have to produce that in due course. It is on Magnum but it hasn't found its way into the bundle.

Let me just tell you what this is. This is a note made by an official at Clydesdale Bank of a conversation with Mr Curtis on 22 January 2001.

- A. 2001?

- Q. Yes.

- A. Which month?

- Q. January.

- A. January, thank you.

- Q. On the second page of the note, and I'm sorry that the handwriting is not that easy --

A. No problem. I trust you.

Q. On the second page of the note you will see that there's a break in the page and just about halfway down the page there's a paragraph that begins:

"Berezovsky is v[ery] political animal..."

And about four lines down...

The typewritten version I'm told is on the screen now. Does your Ladyship have that?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I have it.

MR SUMPTION: And I hope the witness does as well.

You will see:

"Berezovsky is v political animal -- has own views. He had a large part to play in putting Yeltsin in power. New guy started campaign against Berezovsky. B[erezovsky] also has shares in Aeroflot and receives Russian flyover fees."

Now --

A. And what?

Q. -- it looks as if either you and some member of your staff told Mr Curtis that you had at this stage a share in Aeroflot, doesn't it?

A. Mr Curtis, I already gave many times answer to the same question: I didn't have shares in Aeroflot.

Q. No, but you did tell Mr Curtis that you did?

A. I did not tell Mr Curtis about that. I present

Mr Curtis just true, nothing more. He is English lawyer.

- Q. But your evidence is that you didn't have shares in Aeroflot. What about the overflying --
- A. My evidence is that I did not have shares of Aeroflot, it's correct.
- Q. Tell us about the Russian overflying fees -- flyover fees?
- A. Overflying fees, it means that, as I understand again, that Russia -- Mr Glushkov, definitely he is professor in that, he will give you a correct answer. But, as I understand, every country, including Russia, take fees for their flights over the -- this country.
- Q. Indeed.
- A. And company collect this money or State collect this money; it depends on the country, as I understand. This is the fees, yes.
- Q. Yes. And were you, Mr Berezovsky, entitled to receive Russian flyover fees?
- A. Mr Sumption, I told you I don't know. I don't know because not me operate with the business concerning Aeroflot. As you correctly said, it was Andava company, based in Switzerland, which provides service for Aeroflot, and it was business itself for Andava. As I know, Glushkov never was charged for something wrong with that --

- Q. I'm not asking you about Andava or Aeroflot; I'm asking you about flyover fees.
- A. Okay, okay. My answer: I don't know.
- Q. Right. Somebody told Mr Curtis that you were entitled to receive Russian flyover fees. That was wrong, wasn't it?
- A. I don't know. I don't know. Again, I don't know how Mr Curtis obtained wrong information, as I understand.
- Q. Do you agree it is wrong?
- A. Sorry?
- Q. Do you agree that it is wrong? You weren't entitled to receive Russian flyover fees?
- A. No, I don't know. In amount of money that Andava made, maybe it was, as I say, money of this flyover. It could be. But I told you I don't know that.
- Q. Mr Berezovsky, I'm not asking you about Andava. Andava may have had nothing to do with these flyovers.
- A. Yes, it's correct. Okay, I don't know --
- Q. Russian --
- A. -- I don't know that this money was paid to me. I don't know about it.
- Q. Russian flyover fees, given the size of Russia's land mass, charged, as you correctly say, on commercial flights overflying Russian territory, amount to a very large sum, don't they?

A. I don't know how much they charge.

Q. Are you seriously --

A. I know that they charge.

Q. Are you seriously suggesting that you could have been receiving Russian flyover fees without knowing it?

A. Again, I don't know did I receive or not this money; this is the point number one. And definitely I don't know the amount of money that the State or company charged for these flights.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Can I just ask you this. You've mentioned Andava; you say you don't know whether Andava received some flyover fees.

A. Yes, because my impression was that Andava operating with the Aeroflot, as we told before, that maybe Andava charged this money for flying.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Okay. But did you personally receive -- forget about Andava. Did you personally receive any flyover fees?

A. No. Definitely not. Definitely not.

MR SUMPTION: You see, what I would suggest to you is that this is an example of you telling, either directly to Mr Curtis or via your staff, fibs about what you owned.

A. Mr Curtis -- sorry, Mr Curtis unfortunately not with us but you are there.

Q. But I am.

A. I refer -- yes, I'm happy as well.

Q. I'm very grateful for that confirmation.

A. I'm sorry, Mr Sumption, for this comparison.

Mr Sumption, I really never report -- never mislead Mr Curtis, understanding well the rules of English lawyers. And not only because of that but English lawyers, first of all, I really learn from the very beginning that English lawyer not person who just protect me; it is the person who try to present the truth to the court, as you said at your interview in BBC, five minutes' interview recently, and I really believe that you also want not to mislead my Lady but to present the truth in front of the court.

Q. Just in case your Ladyship is wondering, that was not an interview on the subject of this case.

A. But -- no, it's your general position.

Q. Okay.

Now, Mr Marino tells us in his witness statement for the strike-out application that the procedure used to deal with the $1.3 billion, when that came along a few months later, was similar to the one used in the case of the ORT proceeds, and I think you said something to much the same effect earlier.

A. Yes, my understanding was that generally for the selling our interests in Sibneft was decided -- first of all Badri, and Mr Fomichev I think at that time as well, but he assist just Badri -- that this way will be the -- factually it's only one because, as you remember well, in my witness statement I said that our approach was to ask Mr Abramovich to pay us directly but Mr Abramovich refused that and he even explain why he refused: because maybe he will -- because of he will be harmed. And we didn't have choice, we accept this way; as in ORT, we also have not a lot of choice how to do that.

Q. We'll come to that in a moment, Mr Berezovsky. But, as I understand it, your case is that because of what you say was Mr Abramovich's intimidation, you entered into the Devonia agreement, selling your interest to Devonia. That's your case, isn't it?

A. My case is that not the mechanism how it was sold; my case is that it was sold under threat. And how it was organised, this is the other story.

Q. Well, what you are saying in this action is that you didn't actually sell your interest to Mr Abramovich; you sold it to the sheikh's company, Devonia?

A. I sold my interest to Mr Abramovich definitely, but mechanism how it was organised, it was organised with sheikh, and exactly did he insist that I sold my interest in ORT or my shares not to Abramovich. I sold to Abramovich exactly that I sold again through sheikh, exactly what happened with Sibneft, I sold my interests through sheikh to Abramovich.

It's absolutely -- if to compare those two events, it's absolutely clear that I sold my interest in Sibneft, Abramovich recognised my interest, using the technology -- the same technology, that's it.

Q. What involvement did you personally have with the planning of the Devonia structure?

A. Not -- I don't recollect that I have any involvement. As I told you, that I didn't recollect that I have any involvement in selling of ORT. I just was told by Mr Curtis, I think, and then already Mr Badri, that this is factually only way how we can make it transparent for the bank, to be guaranteed that it will be finally paid by Abramovich and give us track that it's happened, that we sold that. And as I told you before, yesterday, I need to have this track because I took a decision that one day I go against of Abramovich to the court, what is happening now.

Q. Who was it who suggested the Devonia structure?

A. I don't remember well. I think or Badri or Mr Curtis himself or Mr Fomichev, I don't remember. I think likely it was Fomichev that time because -- ah, Devonia structure -- no, Devonia, you mean Sibneft. Just a second, I just want to recollect that. I think it's Mr Curtis who discussed that.

Q. Yes.

A. Or Fomichev. Mr Curtis and Fomichev, I think.

Q. Well, the evidence you gave in the North Shore litigation was that the structure was proposed by Mr Curtis in order to protect your assets and your money because the Russian authorities were after your assets all over the world.

A. It's a very rare example where I really recollect that it was Curtis, it's true.

Q. Well now, could you please look at your witness statement, paragraph 379 D2/17/279. Now, you say here that:

"One possibility we discussed was a direct sale to Mr Abramovich... another... was a sale to a third party..."

Now, as I understand it -- correct me if I'm wrong -- this refers to discussions that you had with Mr Patarkatsishvili which you mention in the previous paragraph. Is that right?

A. I don't see anyone who could talk to Mr Abramovich -- as far as me, I already didn't talk to him at all, and it means that it's Mr Patarkatsishvili the most probable.

Q. So "we" in that sentence means you and

Mr Patarkatsishvili?

A. It means that he present my interests in front of Mr Abramovich. As I told you before, I never talked to Abramovich after we --

Q. That's not what I am suggesting.

You discussed a direct sale to Mr Abramovich, you say, and, as I understand it, you discussed it with Mr Patarkatsishvili. That's what you're saying here; is that right?

A. Again, to be absolutely precise, I never talk to Abramovich more after Cap d'Antibes; the first point. It means that when it is said "we", it means Badri, from my name -- the most probable, Badri discussed that with Mr Abramovich, correct.

Q. What you're saying here is that you discussed it with Mr Patarkatsishvili; isn't that right?

"... we discussed... a direct sale to Mr Abramovich."

A. "We" -- again, "we" means --

Q. "We" means you and Mr Patarkatsishvili?

A. Mr Sumption, don't please do that like what you are doing. I told you absolutely correctly that I didn't talk to Abramovich at all; I talked to Badri.

Q. If you listened more carefully, Mr Berezovsky, you would realise I'm not suggesting that you spoke to Mr Abramovich about this; indeed, I entirely accept that you never did.

All I'm trying to ask you is: was this a subject that you discussed with Mr Patarkatsishvili and is that what you're saying in this paragraph?

A. Yes, I discussed this subject with Mr Patarkatsishvili, it's correct.

Q. Thank you.

A. The subject how to organise the technology to sell.

I discussed the subject because Abramovich refused to sell directly, correct.

Q. Who else did you discuss it with, in addition to Mr Patarkatsishvili?

A. I think Mr Curtis also.

Q. You discussed it with Mr Curtis, right.

A. Mr Curtis. I don't remember -- and I think maybe Mr Fomichev as well.

Q. Yes. And did you discuss it also with Mr Jumean, the head of the sheikh's private financial office?

A. You mean Eyhab?

Q. Sorry?

A. You mean Eyhab?

Q. Eyhab was his first name.

A. Yes, yes, yes, I know him. I know him, I would like to say, well. I was introduced to him and maybe he is the first person who I identify with sheikh, he is like right hand or head of administration, and I can't -- I am sure that I talk about that also with Eyhab as well.

Q. So you discussed the Devonia structure with Mr Curtis, Mr Patarkatsishvili, Mr Fomichev and Mr Jumean?

A. Not correct at all. I didn't discuss the structure. Again, I did not discuss the structure. I discussed the deal should be done through sheikh. I never discussed structure of Devonia. I don't know even what is that.

Q. Did you discuss with those people the fact that the Devonia transaction was used simply as a means of effecting the sale of your interest in Sibneft?

A. No. We discussed -- my recollection is, and the only way how I can discuss, that we are selling our interest in Sibneft; we are selling that to Abramovich.

Q. Mm-hm.

A. This the number one point. We need to get this, the money, the payment, in the proper way that to have that on the western bank and we discuss that we already have done that and example was ORT. And my recollection is that I just was present at the moment when we decide to do it the same way.

What is the structure of Devonia? I did not know when ORT was transacted, I didn't know when was transaction of money for sale of our interest in Sibneft.

And moreover, Mr Sumption, you definitely remember how and where I signed Devonia agreement. I signed that at Nobu at 10 o'clock pm, on the table of Nobu.

It means that this is -- I don't want to present -- my Lady, and it is important -- I don't want to present that I really don't remember everything and I just refuse and worry what happened if I start to go into details but it's really what I know. I don't know more; I know just that. I never went into -- I never was even presented the structure of Devonia, never.

Q. Well, I think what you have said, however, is that there were some aspects of the transaction that you did discuss with Mr Curtis, Mr Patarkatsishvili, Mr Fomichev and Mr Jumean.

A. We discussed.

Q. Now, just tell us what you did discuss with them.

A. Yes, yes, exactly.

We discussed that it will be done in the same way like ORT, through Sheikh Sultan. We discuss that we have a bank on the west and that this bank, which is Clyde -- sorry -- Clydesdale Bank, which where money will be. We discussed that we should have no problem, legal problem, with that transaction. And we discussed that I want to have at least track of that transaction.

And Mr Curtis, as I understand -- because later on I was shown the papers -- that he understood that it's our beneficial interest. It's really complicated to explain our relations with Mr Abramovich but this only what I was interested in, nothing more. I didn't know -- even -- and you know well that I even didn't see sheikh until the moment when he already -- I already based in London and he came to our family, my wife have been here and me, and he came also with his wife -- it was 2003 or 2004, I don't remember well, maybe 2005 -- and I was introduced before to Mr -- to sheikh.

Q. Now, you said a moment --

A. And I knew later, or that same time, I knew about commission which we should pay to sheikh.

Q. I'm going to come to that.

A. Yes, okay.

Q. Now, you mentioned as part of that answer that one of the things you had discussed was that you had banking arrangements in England for receiving the money with Clydesdale Bank.

A. I discussed maybe not Clydesdale Bank but I discussed the bank in England because I already had my personal understanding of the country and it's the reason why I worry that -- I prefer definitely that money should be in London.

Q. Were you planning to pay the $1.3 billion into accounts of the Itchen Trust and the Test Trust at Clydesdale Bank?

A. When?

Q. In 2001.

A. No, the question is -- when?

Q. Were you planning that when you received the $1.3 billion, you were going to have them paid into accounts of the Itchen Trust and the Test Trust with Clydesdale Bank?

A. It's -- again, it's not my decision, it was Badri decision, because he operate with our money, and I think Curtis and Fomichev as well. And that time I already -- we signed agreement in June or July 2001, I still that time based in France, but I don't remember where I was -- I think that I had been that time -- no, I signed agreement in Nobu, in London, but I spent mostly my time that time in France.

Q. The Itchen Trust was your trust, wasn't it?

A. Yes, I remember that it's -- there were two trusts, I think one Badri and one belonged to me.

Q. Your trust was the Itchen Trust, wasn't it, and his was the Test Trust?

A. I think so.

- Q. Right. Now, accounts were being opened, were they not, for those two trusts at the Clydesdale Bank?
- A. It's so -- again, I don't recollect it, but I am sure that it's -- we don't have the other bank that time, as I understand. We don't use the other bank, as I understand.
- Q. And what you needed -- is this right? -- was a document which might explain where this money had come from?
- A. Not me, I don't need that. Bank need that document to make money absolutely sufficient, absolutely clean.
- Q. Well, you knew perfectly well, didn't you, that both of you would need documents to prove that you had sold assets, namely an interest in Sibneft, and that that explained where the $1.3 billion came from?
- A. Definitely I think it was request of financial institution. But on the other hand, as I told you before, I need the track, the recognition that I sold my interest to Mr Abramovich; and as far as Mr Abramovich refused to make it directly, it means that it was done in the way through -- which you described just now, through Sheikh Sultan.
- Q. Now, you say that Mr Abramovich refused to give you a document. When do you say that he refused to give you a document?
- A. I didn't say that he refused to give me document; he refused to pay directly. We never discuss about document; we discussed just about his payment, his obligation to pay. And he refused that from the very beginning when we start to discuss how it will be organised and we, as I understand, start to discuss that immediately after Badri met Mr Abramovich or before. It was -- in any case it was spring 2001.

Q. When did you say that Mr Abramovich refused to pay you directly?

A. I should recollect. I think, as I recollect -- it is in my witness statement, but I think it was after we took -- after Badri met Mr Abramovich in Munich or Cologne.

Q. Are you referring to what you say in your witness statement at the top of page 282, paragraph 391 D2/17/282?

A. Just a second. 2 -- paragraph?

Q. Paragraph 391 of your witness statement.

A. I'm sorry. Yes.

Q. Is that what you're referring to?

A. Absolutely correct.

Q. Yes. Now, Mr Abramovich, I must suggest to you, did not say that to Mr Patarkatsishvili; that at least will be his evidence. Are you aware of any attempt by Mr Patarkatsishvili to get a written document out of

Mr Abramovich?

A. Mr Sumption, I never discuss -- I don't remember at least that we discussed about any document. We discussed just about the payment of Abramovich to us, our interest in Sibneft, and we -- our preference was to make it absolutely transparent and direct payment. That's it. Nothing more. And when Abramovich refused that, motivating that it will harm him and so, we didn't have choice. That's it. And it's the reason why we decided to use the same vehicle which we used before for ORT; almost the same, as I understand.

Q. Now, did Mr Curtis visit you at Cap d'Antibes on 17 May 2001?

A. 17...?

Q. Mr Jacobson --

A. Just a second.

Q. -- says that he did.

A. 17...?

Q. 17 May 2001.

A. I don't remember that.

Q. If Mr Jacobson says that Mr Curtis visited you at Cap d'Antibes, you wouldn't deny it, presumably?

A. I wouldn't deny because I don't remember that.

Q. I see.

Well now, did Mr Curtis ever advise you that you needed to have a written agreement with Mr Abramovich?

Did he advise you that?

- A. You see, I had a lot of advisers -- not a lot. I don't understand -- I don't understand that moment Mr Curtis understood reality or did not understand reality, I think that definitely as a lawyer, as a proper professional English lawyer, he advised me to do it in simple way, in direct way, and I don't remember that we discussed that. I really don't remember, but in any case I am sure that his advice would be to make it directly. But he already had experience with ORT because he organised ORT deal.

- Q. Yes. Well now, could you please turn to bundle H(A)30/148, which you haven't got yet.

Now, let me just explain to you what this document is, with information that I have obtained from Mr Jacobson's witness statement. Okay?

- A. Yes.

- Q. This document was prepared in London at Mr Curtis's office while he was in Cap d'Antibes with you and it was faxed to the Villa Medy Roc, which I think was Mr Patarkatsishvili's house --

- A. It's correct.

- Q. -- at 2.47 pm during your discussions and Mr Patarkatsishvili's discussions with Mr Curtis.

- A. So sorry. Again, I had been with Mr Patarkatsishvili at that time or with Mr Curtis?
- Q. According to Mr Jacobson --
- A. Yes.
- Q. -- Mr Curtis came out to Cap d'Antibes for discussions with you and Mr Patarkatsishvili and I think also Mr Fomichev.
- A. And all together we have been at the Badri place, yes?
- Q. Well, I don't know which house this was in. Mr Jacobson has --
- A. No, Medy Roc is Badri's house.
- Q. Yes. Well, it may have been in Mr Patarkatsishvili's house or it may have been in yours, but it was at Cap d'Antibes; that's what Mr Jacobson says?
- A. My question is -- I'm sorry that I ask you that because I should know better than you, but I don't remember -- we have been together with Badri at that time or we have been separate this time with Badri?
- Q. Well, Mr Jacobson appears to suggest that he had discussions with all of you and I have assumed that they were together, but perhaps you can help us on that.
- A. No, unfortunately I don't, because I don't recollect that.
- Q. Now, this document is described as a:
- "Preliminary discussion draft..."

Do you see the italicised heading just below the fax details?

"Preliminary discussion draft for [Mr Curtis] SLC to discuss with the Vendors and Ruslan Fomichev in the South of France on 17th May..."

A. Sorry, where is that? (Consults interpreter)

Yes, okay.

Q. Okay?

A. Okay.

Q. Now, "the Vendors", as you'll see by turning over the page, means you and Mr Patarkatsishvili.

A. Where is that?

Q. If you look, you'll see that the sale and purchase agreement is between Boris Berezovsky --

A. Yes, yes, yes.

Q. "The Vendors".

A. Yes.

Q. So this is a draft being sent to Mr Curtis in the south of France to be discussed with you and Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Fomichev.

My question is this: did you discuss this draft with Mr Curtis?

A. I don't remember that.

Q. Now, I suggest that you must have done because this document was specially prepared to be discussed with you and the others.

A. Mr Sumption, again, I don't remember that. I don't refuse: it could be discussed. I don't have anything in my memory about 17 May 2001. I'm sorry to say that. I even don't remember did I really meet that day Mr Sumption -- sorry -- Mr Curtis or not. This is the point.

Q. Now, Mr Jacobson also tells us that he thinks that Mr Curtis rang him from France to get his office in London to amend this document and that that explains the manuscript notes that one can see on page 161 H(A)30/161.

These are manuscript notes in Mr Jacobson's handwriting --

A. Just a second. 161?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, you wouldn't necessarily have seen these notes; I quite accept that. You certainly wouldn't have seen them at the time. These are notes which Mr Jacobson made in London. According to Mr Jacobson, he made these notes when Mr Curtis rang him from the south of France and said, "We'll need to make changes to the draft", and suggested what changes should be made.

A. I can't comment that. I don't know that at all.

Q. I see.

Now, at the same time as he faxed this document to you, the one that starts at page 148 --

A. Faxed to whom?

Q. To the Villa Medy Roc.

A. Yes, okay.

Q. -- Mr Curtis also faxed a draft deed of release by which Mr Abramovich was to -- it starts at page 163. Sorry, let me just check this. Yes, this document starts at page 187.

A. 187?

Q. 187.

A. Yes, because this document which you showed me started that we have 44% to sell to Mr Abramovich. It's not correct, I'm sure.

Q. The first document that starts at 148 --

A. 148?

Q. 148 is a draft sale agreement directly between you and Mr Patarkatsishvili to Mr Abramovich, yes?

A. Yes.

Q. The document that starts at 187, which was also sent at about the same time to Mr Curtis from London, is a document which says "In consideration of Abramovich paying to the Transferees", that means you and Mr Patarkatsishvili, various sums that are set out, a release is being agreed.

Clause 1:

"... the Transferees hereby... undertake to [Mr] Abramovich that upon receipt of all such payments detailed below... they shall release all or any claims of any nature they may have [in relation to the shares]."

Do you see that?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I can't see it.

MR SUMPTION: It's on page 187 -- I'm told Magnum has the wrong document.

MR RABINOWITZ: I think we all have the wrong page.

MR SUMPTION: Well, there's another reference, H(A)30/142.

This is to assist the people operating the Magnum system.

THE WITNESS: No, no, no, that's no problem. I just want to know the page.

MR SUMPTION: You've got the right document,

Mr Berezovsky --

THE WITNESS: I think H(A)30.

MR SUMPTION: -- I'm just ensuring that so does the judge.

THE WITNESS: I'm sorry.

MR RABINOWITZ: With respect to my learned friend, I'm not sure the document he's referring all of us to is the right document because I also can't find it.

MR SUMPTION: H(A)30/142 I'm told is the deed of release.

Yes. I've got it up under that title on Ms Davies's screen.

Does your Ladyship have that?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I do.

MR SUMPTION: It's a fax which was sent to the Villa Medy Roc at 14.29 on the 17th.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I have that.

MR SUMPTION: Does the witness have that?

THE WITNESS: Was sent -- yes.

MR SUMPTION: Okay.

If you look at clause 1 of this document, you will see that it is a draft of an undertaking by you --

A. What is by me?

Q. -- that as soon as you have received --

A. Yes.

Q. -- the payments listed below, you will release Mr Abramovich from "all... claims of any nature they may have" in relation to the shares.

A. What is the question?

Q. The question is: did you discuss a document of that kind with Mr Curtis on the 17th?

A. As I told you before, I don't remember the discussion. What is important is that this paragraph you mentioned now, because I was even absolutely surprised when the first time I was shown the same way how Badri managed that with Abramovich in case of Rusal selling, yes, that Badri took obligation in front of Abramovich not to make any claim of that, and I was absolutely surprised.

As far as this is concerned, this point is concerned, I never -- I can't recollect at all that we -- that it was under discussion because for me, as I told you from the beginning, that before Badri travelled to Munich I said, "Badri, one day we go to the court", and definitely I never accept this point.

I don't know what happened in reality; I never have seen that it was signed by our side. I just know that Badri signed the same in this way the document concerning Rusal and I completely -- and I am sure 100 per cent that I never even was shown this paper. It means that when you show me this now, the first time I see that, Mr Sumption, and I surprised that it is here. I never accept that.

- Q. Now, in fact, as I think you accept, no direct agreements, either by way of release or by way of sale, were ever made in writing with Mr Abramovich about the $1.3 billion, were they?
- A. I don't know a direct agreement. I know just how it was done finally through Sheikh Sultan.
- Q. Nobody on your side ever approached Abramovich and asked him to sign these documents containing a release agreement and a sale agreement, did they?

A. I already answer to this question. Badri told to Abramovich and insist even that we should have direct sale from Mr Abramovich to us; Abramovich refused that. This only my knowledge about that.

Q. When do you say that happened?

A. It's happened -- it's happened I think after meeting in Munich.

Q. Well, the meeting in Munich had happened earlier in May and these documents were being produced on 17 May.

A. Again, I don't have anything with this document, Mr Sumption, and I told that absolutely precisely.

Q. The proposal to abandon direct dealings with Mr Abramovich, I suggest, Mr Berezovsky, was made for this reason: you abandoned the idea of entering into written agreements with Mr Abramovich because you knew perfectly well he was never going to sign a sale agreement, didn't you?

A. Mr Sumption, I already gave my answer to this question.

Q. He was never going to sign a sale agreement because there had never been a sale.

A. Mr Sumption, this is the case and this is why we are argued here. Abramovich own my shares. Abramovich -- I sold finally under threat and intimidation my shares, my interest in Sibneft to Abramovich, and this is the case.

Q. Would you please turn to bundle H(A)35/89.

A. Yes.

Q. This is the signed version, which you signed, as you rightly remember, at Nobu restaurant at 10.00 pm. This is a document by which you are apparently selling your interest in Sibneft to the sheikh's company, Devonian. Were you aware that that's what this document was when you signed it?

A. Not so good but I was informed that it's our sale of our interest in Sibneft to Mr Abramovich and it's prepared by professional English lawyers.

Q. You were told, weren't you, that it was a document which recorded a sale of your interest to Devonian, not to Mr Abramovich?

A. Yes, because it was agreed that it will not be the direct sale because Abramovich refused to have direct sale.

Q. Ms Minty was the solicitor who produced this document for you to sign at the restaurant, wasn't it?

A. Definitely I don't remember her name but -- because I was preparing for this and I was shown, I was told that it was Mrs Minty. I don't recollect her now but I think it's so. She is -- as I understand, she is from the Mr Curtis company.

Q. Well, just so that you don't answer questions under a misapprehension, Ms Minty -- and I don't think this is at all controversial, Mr Berezovsky -- what had happened was that Mr Curtis decided he couldn't act for both you and the sheikh.

A. Yes, I knew that later.

Q. So he acted for the sheikh and he arranged for Reid Minty, which was Ms Minty's firm, to act for you in the last three or four days before this was signed on 5 June?

A. You're absolutely correct because my impression long time was that Mr Curtis operate for us but it's turned out that Mr Curtis operate for sheikh interest. It's the reason why the other company appeared as a company who present our interest.

Q. Now, could you please look at bundle H(A)35/240.

A. We should close this one?

Q. No, no, it's the same bundle. If you turn on to page 240, you will see a note made by Ms Minty.

A. 240?

Q. Yes. Now, what she records -- and it's in the third block of text down on page 240 -- is that she met Mr Fomichev and you at 10.00 pm in the foyer of the Nobu restaurant in Park Lane.

A. Yes.

Q. She records that she gave you the amended letter of advice and the agreement.

A. Yes.

Q. And Mr Fomichev went through those documents with you answering questions, presumably from you, in Russian.

A. I don't remember that, okay.

Q. And they had a copy of the agreement which had been faxed by Mr Patarkatsishvili. You already had, apparently, a copy of the agreement --

A. A copy of the agreement which we are discussing now, yes?

Q. Yes. And then you signed it.

A. Mr Sumption, I really even not able to recollect. It's important event in my life to get 1.3 billion but it's happened like happened. It's happened in Nobu, at 10 o'clock pm, and she's correctly -- she's correct. Again, I don't remember but it's written here, I don't have any --

Q. So --

A. Just a second, Mr Sumption. Definitely I was not able to read that, this a lot of papers. I trust what they present to me and I don't recollect that I have seen this document before. I don't remember that. It doesn't mean that it was not happen.

- Q. In your witness statement, it's paragraph 393
D2/17/282, you say you have seen this attendance note, you summarise it.
- A. Sorry, the paragraph?
- Q. 393.
- A. Just a second.
- Q. You say:
- "I do not specifically recall this, but I have no reason to doubt that everything happened as written in this note."
- A. Okay, it's exactly what I just told now.
- Q. Yes, absolutely. So you don't doubt, do you, that you were in fact taken through the agreement by Mr Fomichev, asked questions, and apparently had them answered?
- A. I don't remember that at all. And, moreover, I have a lot of doubt because, as I told you, maybe it's -- again maybe it's rubbish, maybe it's bad, but I trust that time to Fomichev and definitely I didn't spend my time to read what they write here. I trust him and it's reason why I signed this document. I can't recollect that I investigate this document. It doesn't mean that it did not happen but I can't recollect and it's not very high probability that I went into details of this document. As I told you before, I didn't know about structure of Devonian, I didn't know anything and I didn't pay attention to them because I just trust Badri and Mr Fomichev. That's it.

- Q. I suggest that you did actually understand the transaction because you were taken through this agreement in detail by Mr Fomichev in the presence of your solicitor, Ms Minty.
- A. Mr Sumption, I can't not accept what you are saying but you also can't produce impression that in Nobu restaurant I go through this document at 10 o'clock pm.
- Q. Now, if you turn back in this bundle to page 84 H(A)35/84, you will see the other document --
- A. 84?
- Q. Yes -- which Ms Minty says was explained to you. This is the letter of advice which is referred to in Ms Minty's note.
- A. Yes.
- Q. And it's a letter of advice which was written by her partner, Mr Stephen Moss, who was the other person at Reid Minty involved in this transaction?
- A. Yes.
- Q. I won't read you the whole of it. What it begins by saying is that Mr Moss has been told by Mr Curtis that you wish this firm to act for you in relation to the sale of your interest in Sibneft:

"I attended a meeting... with Mr Curtis... who are acting for [the] Sheikh...

"As I understand it, the proposed transaction consists of a sale by you of a percentage of your beneficial interest in Sibneft, and a series of options enabling (but not requiring) Sheikh Sultan to acquire further tranches of your beneficial interest. I enclose a copy of the current draft of the agreement and I should be glad if you would read through this carefully to ensure that it represents your intentions..."

Right. Now, before I ask you anything, if you just look at the next paragraph --

A. What paragraph was that, what you just read?

Q. The second paragraph in the letter.

A. Yes, okay. Give me time, I just want to --

Q. Of course, just read it to yourself. (Pause)

A. It's addressed to me, yes? (Consults interpreter)

Q. All right?

A. Just a second.

Q. The next paragraph, the very next paragraph of text if you look at it, he specifically draws your attention to the warranty section:

"The lawyers representing Sheikh Sultan have asked you to give various warranties in relation to the shares..."

And they include --

A. What --

Q. I will tell you what a warranty is. A warranty is a promise that something is true, okay?

A. Yes.

Q. One of the things that you had agreed to promise was true was that you had the right to sell this interest, okay?

A. Yes.

Q. And he says that he cannot advise you -- see six lines down from the third paragraph:

"I cannot advise you to give these warranties because, as I understand it, you are not involved in the running of the company..."

That's Sibneft.

"... and have no documentary evidence that the beneficial interest in the shares is held... for you."

A. Yes, and what?

Q. Now, you were given this advice, were you not? You were told what the nature of the transaction was, see the second paragraph, and then you were told that you should not give the warranties that were contained in the agreement because you had no documentary evidence to support it?

A. Mr Sumption, I follow advice of my lawyers. If they put questions, I gave truthful answer. If they didn't put the question, I did not comment at all and, as I mentioned from the beginning, I wanted everything should be done in proper western way, in proper English way. That's it.

Q. Were you taken through this letter?

A. I don't remember.

Q. It's recorded in Ms Minty's attendance note that we looked at last that you were taken through it.

A. No, it's my signature at the second page. It means that she told me about that, at least, yes.

Q. And you signed it --

A. And I signed it, yes, it's correct.

Q. -- to acknowledge that you had read it and understood it?

A. Definitely. And what?

Q. So, now, you did understand, didn't you, that this was a sale of your beneficial interest to the sheikh? You understood that, didn't you?

A. Definitely, Mr Sumption, I explain them absolutely precisely that I -- that my point is that I -- Roman Abramovich is holding my shares. How they call that beneficial interest, it's their understanding of that, and it's happened many times that people understand that it's beneficial interest because definitely on the west it's almost impossible to imagine that two men shake hands, agreed and that's it. I understand your point.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, I'm not asking you about that. I'm asking you what you understood the contract with Devonian to mean at the time. Do you see that in the second paragraph, Mr Moss points out in his letter --

A. Second of which page?

Q. The first page, second paragraph. Mr Moss points out in his letter that the Devonian agreement which you were being asked to sign contained various options. It wasn't an outright sale of the shares in Sibneft, it was a series of options, right?

A. It's the mechanism, as I understand, how it was done, my Lady. Because the payment was done not in one shot, it was done in several portions in some period of time. It means that step by step, according of the payment from Mr Abramovich, the shares -- our interest become interest of Abramovich. That's it.

Q. Now, do you see that you are being advised in that second paragraph that, under the agreement you were about to sign, the sheikh in fact had no obligation to buy your shares at all; he only had an option to do so.

A. Mr Sumption, again, I sign that. I understood well that we made a deal with sheikh and with Abramovich and how it technologically was organised is another problem.

I just sold my interest in Sibneft to Mr Abramovich through Sheikh Sultan, like I have done almost the same with ORT. And what I know, the payment was done not in one shot, it was done in several payments and this is the point what we are discussing now.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, I'm going to be a little longer on Devonia. I say a little, far too long to try and accommodate it before the break.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well. I'll sit again at 2 o'clock.

Ms Davies, I thought my clerk had taken the draft order up to my room, he hadn't, he'd left it there.

I'll look at it over the luncheon adjournment.

MS DAVIES: I'm very grateful, my Lady.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well. 2 o'clock.

(1.02 pm)

(The short adjournment)

(2.00 pm)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Ms Davies, I've read the papers now and I've made the order. I've made one slight amendment to the recital which deletes "and counsel for the respondent's" and substitutes "and upon reading Dundas & Wilson's letter dated...", et cetera.

MS DAVIES: Thank you very much, my Lady.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Once it's been sealed, can you provide my clerk with a copy, please?

MS DAVIES: Of course.

MR SUMPTION: Mr Berezovsky, are you aware that the Devonian agreement which you signed provided for the transfer of one-thirteenth of your Sibneft shares that you claim to have, followed by 12 options for further thirteenths which had to be exercised over the next year? Are you aware that that was the shape of the agreement?

A. I just knew that it will not be paid -- it will not be paid in one shot, it will be paid in several payments and it takes time.

Q. You see, Mr Moss, in this letter of advice which you should still have open in front of you, was pointing out to you, wasn't he, that under this agreement you weren't necessarily going to get the whole $1.3 billion because the sheikh did not have any obligation to exercise those options; he only had a right to do so?

A. I don't recollect that at all. I just remember that it will be paid in several shots and I don't remember what you mention. I'm reading now that he has right to retain that and so on. But my understanding was clear that we made a deal and he will get commissions for that and money will be paid in several steps and it takes -- as I recollect, they finished to pay at the very beginning 2003.

Q. Were you aware that in the course of Mr Patarkatsishvili's meetings with Mr Abramovich in May, it was agreed between them that the payments of the $1.3 billion would be made to an account nominated by Mr Fomichev, $500 million within the next month and then instalments of $100 million eight times over the next year? Were you aware that that was the agreed timetable for payment?

A. No, I did not -- I don't recollect that. I just understood, as I told you before, that it will be not in one shot, it will be several payment.

And what is also agreed with Badri that in contradiction -- or additionally to our agreement with Badri that I will be paid -- I will be paid for sale 2:1, 2 in my favour, 1 to Badri favour, because we now have new situation that we are in difficulties. I accept position -- I don't remember who initiate that, maybe me, maybe Badri -- that 500 will share equally, not in proportion 2:1, and the rest 800 will be shared in proportion 2:1 in my favour.

That's only my recollection; it does not connect at all to what you said just now.

Q. Well, I'm not going to cross-examine you about that because your only claim in this action is for half of it or half of the total loss.

Now, would you agree that the Devonia structure was thought up by your lawyer, Mr Curtis, in order to protect your interests?

A. As I told you, and this is a point which is little controversial, that Mr Curtis, I understood him as my lawyer but it's turned out that he serve sheikh formally and it's reason why the other lady came to sign the agreement from the other company. Definitely I didn't pay attention to that at that time, I didn't understand that well, because he -- I mean Mr Curtis -- he operate like my lawyer. I didn't understand that time that he formally present interest of Sheikh Sultan.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I think you may have told me this: was the sheikh a client of Mr Curtis prior to your introduction to him?

A. Sorry? Sorry?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Was the sheikh a client of Mr Curtis?

A. Yes, yes, as turned out, he was a client of Mr Curtis.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

A. But I did not understand that because he communicate with me like presenting my interest.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, but prior to your introduction to the sheikh in the context of the ORT agreement, did you know that he was a client of Mr Curtis's?

A. No, I didn't know that. I didn't know that.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, I think one of Mr Curtis's letters to the Clydesdale Bank which I referred to this morning refers to his having been a client of Mr Curtis for, from recollection, three years.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I think that's where I picked it up from, yes.

MR SUMPTION: Now --

A. And as I told you, my Lady, I met sheikh just later on, already being in London.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, you told me that.

MR SUMPTION: Now, the question that I put to you was about the purpose of the Devonia structure. What I want to know is: do you agree that its purpose was to protect your interests?

A. I understood it well that its purpose to protect my interest, definitely.

Q. Now, if we can just identify with your assistance what those interests were.

Was one of the purposes of the structure to protect your assets from being identified by the Russian authorities?

A. No, I formulate the general point which I already formulate today that I want to be paid, I want to be -- that money should be transparent for western banks and should be acceptable there. On the other hand, I want to protect myself from Russian authorities as well. But this what the formula which I formulate in front of Mr Curtis and Mr Fomichev; and not only me, I think that mainly Badri was involved in the realisation of the formula. But understanding is exactly like you just mentioned now.

And still now I am successful, Russian authorities never touch this money; maybe because it's money of Abramovich, I don't know.

Q. Yes. I mean, I think that you are saying much the same as you said in the North Shore litigation, where you said that the structure was proposed by Mr Curtis and the final beneficiary, you say, was Mr Abramovich:

"... but it was done through Sheikh Sultan. The reason to do that was just to protect my assets and to protect my money because the Russian authorities went after all my assets and my money all over the world."

Was that evidence true?

A. It's -- the evidence is true.

Q. Now, I think you mentioned in the last answer that you gave that there may have been another purpose and that's what I want to ask you about now.

Do you agree that the other purpose of this structure was to generate documents which would satisfy the enquiries of Clydesdale Bank?

- A. I don't know about anything "to generate"; I just formulate my understanding that I need to have clear money on the west, nothing more. I want as much as possible to be protected against of Russian attack and I want to have any record that in future I can use against of Abramovich understanding that it was threat, nothing more. Three points.
- Q. Well, you needed a document, didn't you, to explain to Clydesdale Bank where the money had come from?
- A. Mr Sumption, again, I don't need -- I didn't care about any documents; I care just about how to settle that that it will be proper for western bank. As you know, we had basic problem with documents, yes? Because I had with Abramovich, as you remember, agreement '95 and agreement '96, it's verbal agreement. It's agreement. And what is important for me that bank accept my explanation.
- And again, Mr Sumption, I again want to stress: nobody ever had any problem with this money. With the other, yes, they investigate a lot.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I've got that point.

THE WITNESS: Sorry, my Lady.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, I've got it.

MR SUMPTION: Now, could you please be given bundle J2/2.

This is Mr Marino's witness statement again. I'd like you to turn in that bundle to page 131.

A. Yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: It's tab 9, isn't it?

MR SUMPTION: It is tab 9, yes. The reference for Magnum is J2/2.09/131.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you.

MR SUMPTION: Now, this is part of Mr Marino's statement.

I think perhaps you should start on the previous page just to get the context.

A. The page previous is 130?

Q. Yes. Now, first of all, do you see paragraph 405?

"Mr Berezovsky informs me that it was his clear understanding, including from discussions with Mr Curtis, Mr Patarkatsishvili, and Mr Fomichev that the interests being sold under the Devonia transaction were being acquired by Mr Abramovich, or one of his companies, and that the Sheikh and Devonia were merely acting as intermediaries in the transaction."

Is that the information that you gave to Mr Marino?

A. I think that yes.

Q. Now, Mr Marino then goes on to describe a dinner at Mossimans and at paragraph 407 you will see that he quotes from a document of 14 May.

A. Just a second. 14 May --

Q. Paragraph 407.

A. Just a second. 14 May which year?

- Q. 14 May 2001.
- A. 2001. And what is this document?
- Q. Now, he is referring to a note --
- A. Note of whom?
- Q. -- of a conversation -- it's a note made by Mr Jacobson of a conversation between Mr Curtis and the compliance officer at Clydesdale Bank.
- A. Okay.
- Q. Okay?
- A. Jacobson refer to conversation of Mr Curtis --
- Q. Mr Jacobson was present at this conversation --
- A. Yes. But he refer to conversation, yes.
- Q. -- and he prepared a note of it, and the note is quoted in this paragraph.
- A. Yes, okay.
- Q. Have a look at it, would you? (Pause)
- A. All of items to read or just first one?
- Q. I would like you to read the whole of paragraph 407.
- A. Yes, I see. Okay, yes.
- Q. Have you done that?
- A. The four points, yes?
- Q. That's right. (Pause)
- A. Okay, fine.
- Q. Now, in summary, what that note records is that Clydesdale Bank were told that Mr Abramovich's funds were coming from Latvia and Ms Hilton, the compliance officer of Clydesdale Bank, said that was going to be a problem because Latvian banks would not be bound by the same stringent money-laundering regulations as UK banks.

A. Mm-hm.

Q. Then in 4, over the page, Mr Curtis suggests that the new deal would be more along the lines of the option scenario.

Now, if you look next at paragraph 408, the next paragraph, Mr Marino --

A. Just a second.

Q. For the transcript, my Lady, I will give your Ladyship the bundle reference to that note --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, thank you.

MR SUMPTION: -- which is H(A)30/33.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you.

MR SUMPTION: Now, Mr Berezovsky, what Mr Marino is saying at paragraph 408 is that the original plan was to have a sale directly between Mr Abramovich and you and Mr Patarkatsishvili but that was unattractive to Clydesdale Bank because of the problems of identifying the source of funds coming from Latvia if they came from Mr Abramovich.

A. Mm-hm.

Q. By contrast, Ms Hilton said that they were happy with the idea of receiving money from the sheikh because they had undertaken due diligence on the sheikh already.

Now, this is Mr Marino's explanation of why the Devonia structure was adopted: he says it was adopted in order to satisfy the Clydesdale Bank.

A. I don't have any doubt that it's so.

Q. Sorry?

A. I don't have -- I think it's so.

Q. Right. Therefore, he says in paragraph 409:

"These problems were overcome by the Sheikh purchasing Mr Berezovsky's and Mr Patarkatsishvili's interests... using his own funds and then entering into a separate arrangement... to sell [them to Mr Abramovich]. The purchase was effected through Devonia..."

Now, he says:

"I understand from Mr Jacobson that the Sheikh did not actually commit to being involved in the transaction until on or about 29 May..."

Now, the purpose therefore, in addition to protecting your assets from the Russians, was also, was it not, to satisfy the money-laundering requirements of Clydesdale Bank, to satisfy their money-laundering enquiries?

A. Mr Sumption, I even start to understand a little bit more -- thank you very much -- how it's happened. But I just want to tell that from the very beginning, I want just again to concentrate for three points which arise when we decide -- when we decide to sell. Three points. Money should be absolutely transparent for bank: it means that bank accept that and in future I will not have problem. The second: it should be a record that it's happened. And the first one I already forgot because several times I repeat the same.

But the point, the most important point, the point is that my condition was absolutely clear: I don't want -- not I don't want -- I don't know how to organise that, is it possible to organise that or not? Because my advice, what is written here, my proposal was to pay directly because I'm not able -- I'm not in position to hide. It's my money; it's not fund of Abramovich, it's my money. I want to get that. I want to get it in the most simple, transparent, but protected way. This is the story.

If they decide to organise that through option, it's not my point. I'm advising by professional lawyers and I got my money. Again, I want just to stress that till now I don't have any problem with this money. It means I know that a lot of -- you know, a lot of -- there exist a lot of ways how to reduce the tax. There are many legal ways to reduce the tax; there are many illegal ways to reduce the tax. And as to make it absolutely legally, that monies should be identified like my money, and again I want to stress: no problem with that any time at all, in spite of a lot of problems with the other monies.

Q. In your --

A. And Latvian bank -- I'm sorry that I just want to add -- and Latvian bank, I have experience with a Latvian bank. Now they are much more transparent for -- not much transparent -- they operate in proper way. I don't want to discuss which bank I use before Russia close my account there, sent letter to bank, "Berezovsky is using money from your bank". It has happened recently, my Lady, yes? But again, it's not a problem for me if they decide to follow this way.

Q. Right. Now, Mr Berezovsky, earlier today, you gave evidence that the reason for why you abandoned the direct sale proposal involving a contract directly with Mr Abramovich and instead sold your interest, you say, to Devonia was because Mr Abramovich had refused to engage in a direct transaction.

A. It's correct. Abramovich refused to engage direct transaction; it's true.

Q. Mr Marino does not say that, does he?

A. Okay.

Q. What he says is that the reason was that it was not possible to satisfy the Clydesdale Bank's enquiries if the money came directly from Mr Abramovich.

A. Mr Sumption, it's not so. Many times you already find confirmation that Abramovich refused to make direct transaction. Even recently it was written somewhere. I forgot where it was written.

Mr Sumption, again and again, my point was very simple: as more transparent as better; as more simple as better. Only problem that time I worry really seriously how to protect my money from Russia. Nothing more. But money should be transparent. It's happened. It's happened as a fact. And after many years, after many years, nothing happened more.

It's well known, it's absolutely clear for British authorities when I move here how my money moved because I declared in front of Pricewaterhouse that I sold my interest in Sibneft and Rusal. I'm sure that they investigate in details and if something crime here, definitely I'll have a problem earlier, not now.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, we established this morning that you had read Mr Marino's witness statement and you said in your own witness statement in the strike-out proceedings that you agreed with it.

A. Mr Sumption, where I put my signature, it means that I agree. It means -- on the other hand, it doesn't mean that I go into details. I responsible for that, what I was writing, it's true, and only my Lady able to estimate is it correct what I have done or not correct. I absolutely open in front of you. I told you everything how I understand and it's -- you are judge and you took a decision.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, presumably when you write and sign a document saying that something is true, you go to some care, do you, to ensure that it is? Or don't you?

A. Mr Sumption, yes, definitely yes, and I responsible for that. I try to explain you. My way unfortunately is not correct and even the document of sale of $1.3 billion I signed in the restaurant. It's wrong, I agree with that. But you want to know the truth; I present you the truth.

Q. Now, I would like to ask you to turn, please, to bundle H(A)34/64. Now, this is a letter from Mr Curtis to the sheikh's private financial office.

A. When it was written?

Q. 1 June 2001.

A. 1 June 2001.

Q. Yes.

A. Okay, thank you.

Q. And I can tell you that a copy of this letter was sent to the Clydesdale Bank.

A. Okay.

Q. My Lady, for the transcript, the reference to that is H(D)2/22.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you.

MR SUMPTION: Now, at page 65, which is the second page of this letter, Mr Curtis is writing a letter to the sheikh --

A. Which paragraph?

Q. It's the second full paragraph beginning, "The bank also have to satisfy themselves..."

A. Yes.

Q. "The bank also have to satisfy themselves with regard to the underlying assets. They are aware of the position with regard to the shares in Sibneft and, in particular, that these are registered in Mr Abramovich's name. I am required to make yourself aware of the potential dangers of acquiring a nebulous beneficial interest without any third party confirmations from Mr Abramovich as to ownership. I am not sure whether you are addressing this independently with your lawyers in Abu Dhabi but in either event, I would be grateful if you would again be kind enough to countersign this letter in order that I can show to the bank that the issues detailed above, including the question of the beneficial interest in the shares, have been brought to your attention."

So he's writing this letter to the sheikh --

A. Yes.

Q. -- in order that it can subsequently be provided to the bank, as indeed it was.

Now, if you look at the next paragraph after that, you will see that there's a reference to Mr Abramovich's position:

"It is likely that we are going to have to provide additional information with regard to the shares in Sibneft... As yet I am unclear... what the bank will require. I have explained the reluctance of Mr Abramovich" --

A. Just a second. Yes, mm-hm.

Q. "... to provide written confirmation of his trustee status and this may be a sticking point. Ruslan..."

That's Mr Fomichev.

"... is providing me with articles including one from The Financial Times in which Mr Abramovich acknowledges [Mr Berezovsky's] involvement. I will address this with you again [later]."

Now, either you or somebody working for you must have told Mr Curtis that Mr Abramovich would not be likely to provide a written confirmation of his trustee status and that that was likely to be a sticking point?

- A. I don't know anything about that at all. As I told you, I knew just from the beginning Abramovich refuse to make direct payment. I don't know why Mr Abramovich used Latvian bank for that if he already was so great businessman and knew well that Latvian bank is not transparent enough. It's already -- it's question definitely not to me; I don't know anything about that.

But again, it means that just I provide absolutely fully information which I have about this deal; or Badri provide, I don't know. It means that we didn't hide anything at all, not in front of Mr Curtis, not in front -- not Curtis in front of Mr Sheikh. It means that it was absolutely correct what we described there.

- Q. If you would look at the next paragraph but one, the last full paragraph on the page --

- A. The last -- "I am sure..."?

- Q. The last full paragraph on the same page:

"I am sure there will be a number of other hurdles that we will have to address... generally, there is certainly a willingness to proceed with this transaction given your [the sheikh's] involvement. I have copied this letter to Ruslan and Joseph and will ask them to bring this to the attention of their principals."

A. Mm-hm.

Q. Now, Mr Curtis is there saying that he sent a copy of this letter to Mr Fomichev, who was your financial manager, and Mr Kay, who was Badri's financial manager, in order that they could bring the letter to your attention.

Did Mr Fomichev bring a copy of this letter to your attention at the time?

A. I can't recollect that completely. Moreover, I'm sure that not, but again I don't remember that.

Q. You are sure he didn't?

A. Again, I am sure that he did not, but I can't guarantee that. And again, it was not my problem at all. My problems finished when we agreed in principle what we will do: sheikh involvement, the English bank and so and so. After that, I'm almost sure that nobody inform me what was happening. And definitely when you remind me that it was not paid in one shot, I also at the beginning of our conversation forgot about that.

Q. Now, can you think of any reason why if Mr Fomichev was asked to bring a document to your attention he should not have done so? Surely if he was asked, he would have done?

A. Because it's turned out that he is not professional, it's turned out for me that he is crook. I don't know why. It's my -- but that time I didn't think so; I didn't have, let's say, example of that. Now I know that he's crook and it is the reason why I don't invite him as a witness to this hearing.

- Q. Do you say that the sheikh sold this interest you say that he bought from you on to Mr Abramovich or do you not know?
- A. It was agreed from the beginning and I -- what I know from Badri and -- because I, as you know, I didn't communicate to Abramovich directly. What I know from Badri and from Fomichev and from Mr Curtis that it was interest because in other case, what is the reason that Abramovich pay money? This exactly our agreement with Abramovich: that we sell our interest in Sibneft to him in this way, not direct way. But the final beneficiary of this deal definitely is Mr Abramovich and all the world knows that.
- Q. Are you saying that somebody on your behalf agreed with Mr Abramovich that he would buy your interest from the sheikh?
- A. Again, I gave all power to Badri to organise and to Fomichev and to Curtis to organise that. I didn't have any doubts that Abramovich camp absolutely knew for what he paid money. This is the point.
- Q. So are you saying that somebody on your behalf agreed with Mr Abramovich that Mr Abramovich would buy your interest from the sheikh?

A. Badri during his conversation -- from the sheikh, that time we didn't discuss the sheikh; we just discussed with Badri that Abramovich will buy our interest. And mechanism how it will be done became later, as a parallel with mechanism of ORT. And it means that I didn't have any doubts that the final beneficiary will be Abramovich because Abramovich once already was involved in that. Exactly like transaction of ORT interest; it's nothing new with Abramovich.

Q. Well, you may not know the answer to this question, in which case you must say you don't know.

A. Okay.

Q. But what I would like to know is: do you have any knowledge that there was actually some agreement with Mr Abramovich that he would buy the stake --

A. Now I understand, yes.

Q. -- in Sibneft from the sheikh's company?

A. I don't have any knowledge about his agreement, direct agreement, with sheikh of buying share or buying my interest.

Q. Yes. You see, I must suggest to you that there never was a sale by the sheikh to Mr Abramovich and there was never intended to be.

- A. It's your suggestion. You have right for this suggestion. It's completely wrong what you said. Abramovich perfectly knew what was happening and sheikh perfectly knew what happening and Mr Curtis perfectly knew what happened and Badri perfectly knew what happened. And if Abramovich did not knew, it's just his point, not my point.
- Q. How do you know that Mr Abramovich knew about the Devonia structure?
- A. I don't know anything about Abramovich knowledge of Devonia structure at all. I don't know anything because I did not communicate to Abramovich at all.
- Q. This whole transaction, as you knew, was a sham which was designed to hide your assets and to deceive banks, wasn't it?
- A. No, I didn't know that at all. I knew that it's absolutely legal way to get my money for my interest in Sibneft, what's advised by my lawyers.
- Q. Could you, in the same bundle that you've got open, please turn to page 62, which is the previous document H(A)34/62. This is a document written on the same day as the letter to the sheikh we've just been looking at --
- A. Yes.
- Q. -- and it's addressed to Mr Fomichev and Mr Kay.

A. Just a second, I have the other one. What is the number?

Q. Pages 62 and 63.

A. This document addressed to Mr -- signed by Mr Curtis; correct?

Q. Yes.

A. And addressed to Mr...?

Q. Fomichev and Mr Kay.

A. Yes.

Q. If you look at the last paragraph of the letter, he says that unfortunately he doesn't have email addresses for you and Mr Patarkatsishvili and would not wish to send this letter via the London office.

"May I therefore impose upon each of you to bring this letter to the attention of your respective principals."

So Mr Curtis is writing to Mr Fomichev and Mr Kay and asking them to show you this letter.

A. Yes.

Q. The likelihood is that if Mr Fomichev was asked to show you this letter, he did show it to you; do you agree?

A. He -- I never -- I can't say precisely but I can't recollect that I have seen this letter at all, at all. Moreover, I have told you many times already, Mr Sumption -- you may believe me, you may not believe me -- it's in so details, they never inform me about that; never. Maximum what could happen that they show it to Badri and not to me. It's 100 per cent.

Q. Let's have a look at the last paragraph on the first page that begins "Finally..." Do you see that? This paragraph says:

"Finally, you will appreciate that in order for the proceeds" --

A. Just a second. May I look? Where is that? (Consults interpreter)

Q. First page of the letter, last paragraph, "Finally..."

A. Yes, sorry. (Pause)

Okay.

Q. Have you had translated to you that paragraph?

A. Half of the paragraph. You need -- you want I translate all the paragraph?

Q. I would like you to go to the end of the paragraph.

A. Yes, okay. (Pause)

Q. Mr Curtis is saying in that paragraph, towards the end of the paragraph, that it would be very useful if Mr Fomichev could produce some newspaper articles in which there was reference to your owning a stake in Sibneft. That's what he's saying, isn't it?

A. I don't know.

Q. Well, have a look.

"Leigh has been incredibly helpful in trying to find a way round this."

A. Yes, sorry.

Q. "It is possible that we will require additional comfort..."

A. Yes. It's why: we didn't read the end. Okay, please.
(Pause)

Q. "... Ruslan is endeavouring to provide" --

A. Just a second.

Q. -- "back up documentary evidence in the form of newspaper articles." (Pause)

A. I'm sorry, I didn't catch: she is trying to find confirmation of what?

Q. Of the existence of your interest in Sibneft.

A. Yes, yes, yes.

Q. And Mr Fomichev was looking for newspaper articles which referred to your being an important shareholder or having some kind of interest in Sibneft?

A. Yes, clear.

Q. Right. Now, the problem was, was it not, that there weren't any articles of that sort because you never had claimed in any newspaper that you had an interest in Sibneft?

A. No, I claimed that I have interest in Sibneft; I never claimed that I am shareholder. But you gave a lot of examples of my controversial position that I -- on the one hand I try to prove, to demonstrate publicly that I am not shareholder, but on the other hand that I have interest in that.

And maybe the best -- one of the best confirmation is not my presentation but Khodorkovsky presentation when we merge with the Yukos, when Khodorkovsky said that Berezovsky definitely will be shareholder of Yukos. It came not from the air, it's because of merge of Sibneft, and Khodorkovsky was aware definitely that I not just simple shareholder, small; that I founded Sibneft and I am one of the principal shareholders of Sibneft.

But what is important in this letter, finally I find the answer to the question which you put me, Mr Sumption, many times, many times: that Abramovich has problem in Russia, not somewhere -- it's written here exactly that he has made in Russia, yes? You know, it is written here that he has made in Russia. The problem which Abramovich has, he has a problem in Russia. And it's correctly what Badri told me: that if there will be direct sale, it harm Abramovich in Russia. This is the point and it's clear reference to this problem; the first time I have seen, I'm sorry to say.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, at the time this letter was written, on 1 June 2001, there weren't any newspaper articles which said that you had a significant interest in Sibneft, were there?

A. Mr Sumption, you know well that there are many reference to my interest in Sibneft in many articles.

Q. Not at this stage.

A. Not what --

Q. Later there were references, but --

A. No, no, no, no, no, no, no. Even from the beginning when we start to create Sibneft, there were a lot of reference that I'm founder of Sibneft. It's completely wrong what you are saying now, completely wrong. That I'm the principal founder of Sibneft from the beginning.

Q. I've taken you through that material and it's perfectly true that you had claimed to be a 50 per cent owner, through Consolidated Bank, of FNK.

A. Okay, through Consolidated Bank. Okay, fine.

Q. Now, the point that I'm putting to you is this: is it right that as a result of Mr Curtis saying it was desirable to get newspaper articles, you started, in June 2001, claiming for the first time that you were a large shareholder in Sibneft?

A. Mr Curtis -- Mr Sumption, there are a lot of coincidental in our life and believe me it's not the reason -- because you raised this question yesterday, as I remember, or the day before yesterday -- that the first time I start to talk about that so and so. I started to talk about that, as we recognised yesterday, because of the merge of Sibneft and Yukos the second time.

And I was over my emotions, as I told you, but there are a lot of references, a lot of references, and it's the reason why Mr Shvidler and Mr Abramovich all the time tried to distance me and we had a special agreement '96 which we discussed with you that my distance from Sibneft.

It's not correct what you said now.

- Q. Mr Berezovsky, the second Yukos merger was proposed in 2003, well after these events.
- A. 2003. You understand that the first time in 2001?
- Q. Yes, well, the first one was in fact in 1998, wasn't it?
- A. The first merge was -- attempt to merge, '98.
- Q. Now, the interview with Mr Khodorkovsky that you are referring to where you say that your interest was referred to is at bundle H(A)10, page 29.
- A. H(A)...
- Q. H(A)10/29. Now, this is the interview with Mr Khodorkovsky and at the bottom of the first page of the text there is in fact, I think, a Russian version immediately after it.

A. Yes, yes.

Q. What he says is -- the question is:

"You said that you did not give a thought to the list of shareholders. But have you discussed this merge with Mr Berezovsky?"

"Yes. We have discussed this deal. And with Mr Berezovsky also, though he is not a direct Sibneft shareholder. Five and not two companies are involved in this deal. Two main companies and three supporting ones. Mr Berezovsky indeed is not a Sibneft shareholder, but he is part of the Group and obviously will be one of the shareholders of the new company."

A. Yes, correct.

Q. Now, it's not true, is it, that that interview establishes that you had an interest in Sibneft?

A. It's written here correctly that "[he] is not a [direct] Sibneft shareholder". It's the language which you already know well when, for example, Mr Shvidler used in his witness statement present to my case against Forbes magazine. On the one hand he put the paper which is false, as I understand it, I told you, my Lady; on the other hand he wrote that Berezovsky is not shareholder.

It's the language. I'm not shareholder, it's true, but I have interest in that and there are a lot of reference to that. You yourself, as I remember, demonstrate that at the beginning of our hearing.

Q. Now, could you please have a look at bundle H(A)36/187. You can put away the H(A) bundle that you have just been looking at. This is an article that you've seen before, which was the first occasion when you publicly claimed to have half of Sibneft.

A. Yes.

Q. I want to look at it again in the context of the document I've just been showing you.

A. Just a second. When it was published?

Q. This was published on 28 June in the Moscow Times.

A. June of which year?

Q. 2001.

A. Yes, okay.

Q. "Boris Berezovsky announced Wednesday..."

And that was 27 June.

A. Yes.

Q. "... that he owns half of Sibneft, backing away from earlier contradictory statements that he either owns 7 per cent of the No. 6 oil company or no stake at all.

"The announcement, which left some market watchers scratching their heads and others tight-lipped, also flies against repeated denials by Sibneft that Berezovsky has any interest in the oil company that he helped [to] form.

"Berezovsky said his shares in Sibneft are being managed by a team overseen by Roman Abramovich, the oil and metals tycoon who was a close ally of [his] in the 1990s..."

And below you will see there's a strong denial by Sibneft.

Now, what I suggest to you, Mr Berezovsky, is that, at the suggestion of Mr Curtis, Mr Fomichev came to you and said, "We must find some newspaper articles which refer to your owning half of Sibneft", and what you went out and did is that you generated such newspaper articles by claiming, contrary to previous statements, that you owned half the company.

Do you follow my point?

- A. Yes, I absolutely follow your point. It's absolutely wrong. It's absolutely not truthful. It's -- even here it's written I own 7 per cent; it's more or less known fact. It's registered, moreover, that in this company PK I own 7 per cent. It means that it's not news and the news is just that I present that publicly. As I recollect what we discussed before, that Badri worry that Roman will stop to pay us if I refuse that I am shareholder and we don't need to hide more. This is the point.

My point was that -- and it's the reason why it's happened; not because nobody knew that I had been shareholder of Sibneft. All the time I try really to hide that. I try not to present it publicly because of request of Abramovich and Shvidler as well.

Q. Could you please be given bundle H(D)2 and turn to flag 19 H(D)2/19/121. Have you got that, Mr --

A. Just a second. I am waiting for it.

Q. Understood.

Now, what you are being handed, Mr Berezovsky, comes from the files of Clydesdale Bank that were disclosed to us last week --

A. Yes.

Q. -- and what you see here is a copy of the same article --

A. Yes.

Q. -- and you will see Mr Curtis's initials just by the headline.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, it's apparent that what happened was that Mr Curtis suggested that newspaper articles should be produced, you gave a press interview in which you claimed an interest in Sibneft, somebody -- probably Mr Fomichev -- then promptly sent a copy of that to Mr Curtis and Mr Curtis supplied it to Clydesdale Bank.

A. Mr Sumption, I want just to repeat again and again:

I don't responsible for coincidentials, even if even they are positive for me or negative, I am sorry to say. I didn't initiate anything specially, anything to support the Devonian deal. What happened, that's happened; I'm not responsible for it.

But it's absolutely common knowledge all over the Russia, all over the business community in the world, that I create Sibneft first of all, I find the way how to privatise Sibneft, and I was -- I have interest in Sibneft. This is the point. It's common knowledge.

- Q. The limited point that I was putting to you is that you deliberately claimed for the first time in newspaper interviews in June 2001 that you had an interest in Sibneft in order to supply the evidence that Mr Curtis said he needed to show to Clydesdale Bank.
- A. I'm sorry to say, Mr Sumption, even here is -- the title is absolutely wrong. I never claimed that I have half of Sibneft; I claimed that I have just 25 per cent of Sibneft. And if I would be -- I would like to be correct in front of bank, definitely I wrote Badri and me, we have 50 per cent, not half; 25 per cent each. It means that I mislead the bank.
- Q. Now, do you remember, Mr Berezovsky, that there was a problem later in 2001 because the money was arriving in Clydesdale Bank's accounts in instalments which did not correspond to the instalments in the Devonia agreement? Do you remember that problem arose?

- A. I remember problem. I don't remember -- and moreover I remember that we should move our money from Clydesdale Bank to another bank and we have done that.

I didn't understand the reason because nobody informed me why that happened. My understanding is because Russian were pressing them because I have all the time the problem to open any account in bank because banks -- many banks operate in Russia, they afraid to lose business there, it's natural. And the reason -- but I never informed about the reason of why they decide to do so.

As I know, I ask my adviser at the time, Fomichev and Natalia Nosova, to help me to move money because at that time I didn't have direct connection to Badri because Badri is -- which year it was? Which year it was?

- Q. Which year what was?

- A. They asked me to move money from the bank.

- Q. At the end of August 2001 Clydesdale Bank said they wouldn't accept any further money into the trust accounts and they asked you to close those accounts within two weeks.

- A. I remember that well and I remember that we move money to another bank which accept our money.

Q. Right.

Now, could you please look in the same bundle that you should have open, H(D)2, at flag 29, which is another letter from the Clydesdale files H(D)2/29/147.

A. Yes.

Q. This is a fax letter from Mr Curtis to the compliance officer at Clydesdale.

A. Yes.

Q. In the first paragraph he is saying that, having spoken to Mr Jumean:

"All parties have agreed that they will [vary the Devonia agreement]... pursuant to which..."

So that the sheikh can purchase --

A. Just a second, Mr Sumption. I don't follow you. It's the first paragraph, is it?

Q. Yes, it is.

A. Okay. From the beginning or in the middle?

Q. Well, he starts by saying --

A. "All parties", okay, fine.

Q. -- he's spoken to Mr Jumean.

A. Yes. (Pause)

Okay.

Q. Now --

A. Okay, fine. Just the first paragraph, yes?

Q. Right.

A. Yes.

Q. The reason this letter was written was that money was turning up from Devonia's account in Latvia to the trust accounts at Clydesdale Bank in multiples of $20 million instead of $100 million and therefore the instalments were not matching what was said in the Devonia agreement. So Mr --

A. I don't know anything about that.

Q. Mr Curtis was saying that, "All parties have agreed that they will enter into a variation agreement", so that the sheikh can buy in multiples of $20 million instead of $100 million.

Now, "all parties" included you. You were a party to the 12 June agreement. Had anybody ever, at about this time, suggested to you that you should amend the agreement so as to alter the instalments?

A. Again, Mr Sumption, definitely I don't remember about this agreement. I remember only that we agreed that our money will be moved to Clydesdale Bank; then we had a problem with the bank -- it's absolutely correct what you said -- and we moved money to another bank which accept that money.

The point -- the problem, as I understand why it's so, as I mentioned to you before, because Russian tried to follow my money everywhere and -- or Clydesdale Bank decide that it's dangerous for them, because they work in Russia, to keep me as a client, because, as I told you, I never have any problem with this money, and it's the reason why they afraid to condition relations with me.

It's happened recently, as I told you, recently, just maybe two months ago, when one bank account was closed because of request of Russian Prosecutor Office.

- Q. Mr Berezovsky, the problem with Clydesdale Bank rejecting your money arose after this, at the end of August. I would like you to concentrate, please --
- A. I concentrate.
- Q. -- on this letter.
- A. Thank you for same advice.
- Q. What Mr Curtis was telling the bank was that all parties had agreed to enter into a variation agreement of the Devonia agreement so as to allow the sheikh to buy the shares in instalments of $20 million instead of $100 million.
- A. Okay.
- Q. Now, my question to you was: did you ever agree to enter into a variation agreement of that kind at about this time?
- A. I follow all advices which were given me by Curtis and my financial officers and if they advise me to do that, it means that I will do that, and maybe there is even my signature somewhere that I accept that. It does not mean that I understand what is happening. It means that I just follow again the same agreement which I have done, principal agreement, which Badri have done, not me, Badri have done with Mr Abramovich, that he will be paid $1.3 million -- billion for our interest in Sibneft. Nothing more.

- Q. Well, I can reassure you on one point, Mr Berezovsky: there is no documentary evidence that any proposal was ever made of the kind described by Mr Curtis in this letter to you or to Mr Patarkatsishvili --
- A. Yes, maybe.
- Q. -- or anyone else.
- A. I don't know.
- Q. We do not know where Mr Curtis got this information from but it appears to be wrong.
- A. Mr Sumption, I already gave my comment.
- Q. Now --
- A. I still don't understand why Mr Abramovich decide to have this headache if he just gave me one more present, $1.3 billion, and have this headache with a Latvian bank, with Devonia and so-so, if it's just his goodwill to give me just for my service, political krysha, and why he should have this headache. I don't understand at all.

Q. Now, the Devonian agreement was amended much later, wasn't it, two and a half years later, at the end of 2002?

A. No, I'm sorry to say, this letter dated by 1 August 2001, as I understand. The agreement with Mr Abramovich to sell our shares in Sibneft is 2001, not two years before.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, listen carefully to the question, please.

There was an amendment to the Devonian agreement, was there not, at the end of 2002, some time after this?

A. Oh, I see. Okay.

Q. Do you agree with that? You give some evidence about it in your witness statement.

A. Amendment to this agreement?

Q. An amendment to the Devonian agreement that you had signed in the Nobu restaurant?

A. Yes, yes. Yes, it's correct.

Q. Now, it may be that you can recall the outlines of that agreement without looking at it, but if you have difficulty of course I will show it to you.

Is it true that in early 2002 Mr Curtis raised with your advisers, Mr Samuelson and Mr Fomichev, the problem of how the agreement could be amended so as to match the actual flow of funds that was happening? Do you remember that?

A. Just a second. I don't remember that, but I can't exclude that.

Q. Right. Because there's a note of that meeting in which Mr Jenni attended as an observer on your behalf. Do you remember that?

A. Mr Jenni -- Hans-Peter Jenni?

Q. Sorry?

A. Hans-Peter Jenni, yes?

Q. That's it.

A. Okay.

Q. Do you remember Mr Jenni attending on your behalf in early 2002 a meeting with Mr Curtis and Mr Samuelson to discuss the problem about the flow of funds out of the Devonia account in Latvia not matching what was said in the Devonia agreement?

A. I don't remember definitely that but I can't exclude because I -- Mr Hans-Peter Jenni, I knew him long time from establishing of Logovaz as a Swiss lawyer and definitely he was involved in many my transactions.

Q. Well now, do you remember signing a retrospective agreement in December 2002 which altered the contractual schedule of payments from Devonia so as to match the actual flow of funds?

- A. I don't remember that, but I can't exclude that it was necessary to sign the kind of document referring to Devonia payment and I signed that. I can't exclude that.
- Q. Yes. What happened was this, was it not: you had agreed with -- or Mr Patarkatsishvili, rather, had agreed on your behalf with Mr Abramovich in May the instalments?
- A. In May which year?
- Q. In May 2001.
- A. Yes.
- Q. That was paid to the account nominated by Mr Fomichev, which was the Devonia account, and money was paid out of the Devonia account in instalments which had no relation at all to the instalments in which Mr Abramovich was paying?
- A. I don't remember that at all. Again, as I understand, the Devonia itself was the intermedium between Abramovich and me and Badri on the other hand.

And again, I did not add anything compared with what was my position from the beginning. I want to have -- again, 100 times to repeat: I want to have transparent money, I want to have on the west, I want to have track of this payment; that's it. And Abramovich refused from the beginning and now he finally -- I find out why he said there is the difficulties in Russia, why he was not able to make direct payment, as I understand, from the letter which we discussed before.

Q. Can you please be given bundle H(A)51/89. This is the amending agreement of December 2002, signed by you.

A. Yes.

Q. What it does is, if you look at page 93 H(A)51/93, you will see a schedule of payments into the Clydesdale Bank accounts --

A. Yes.

Q. -- which started out in multiples of $100 million but were then reduced to multiples of 35, then two of 20 and then one of 25. Do you see?

A. Yes.

Q. And then there's another schedule on the next page --

A. Yes.

Q. -- which is sums paid into other accounts after the Clydesdale Bank refused to accept any more.

A. Yes.

Q. And what this agreement does is that it retrospectively amends the Devonia agreement so that the parties agree that the obligation of Devonia is to pay the instalments set out in schedule 1 and schedule 2.

A. Yes.

Q. What this was about was creating a document trail that would support, in the eyes of banks, the money that you were actually receiving, wasn't it?

- A. I don't know. I don't know the purpose of that. I just confirm that it's my signature again and it's Badri's signature even. Just a second, just a second. Yes, my signature and Badri's signature what I -- which I able to recognise.

But I don't understand, let's say -- and I understand that it was the reschedule, as you mentioned, is it correct. But the reason why it was reschedule, I just make guess that it's because they have difficulties with our money. Why they have difficulties? I don't know, as I told you. That's it.

- Q. Well, the difficulty that they had was that you had produced the Devonia agreement to explain the receipt of funds and it didn't explain the receipt of funds because they were coming in in different amounts at different times.

- A. I didn't produce -- I did not produce Devonia agreement. It was produced by professional lawyers and their responsibility. Why there were more questions after that? It's not question to me. I did not produce Devonia agreement. They produce the technology and Devonia agreement, professional lawyers.

Later on they had difficulties I think because of me, because my problem in Russia generally, because bank want to continue to develop business in Russia, as I told you. It's my guess; it's not my knowledge.

Q. Your agents --

A. But it's not my problem at all why they decide to reschedule this -- to reschedule the payment.

Q. Your agents provided the Devonia agreement to the Clydesdale Bank and subsequently to other banks, did they not?

A. I don't know.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, would that be a convenient moment?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. I've got one question.

A. Yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Do you know who was the bank signatory to the Devonia bank account?

A. Just a second. (Consults interpreter)

I don't remember that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: You don't remember or you don't --

A. I am not able to insist that I don't know. I don't remember at all, yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I see. Yes, thank you.

Yes, I'll take ten minutes.

(3.14 pm)

(A short break)

(3.27 pm)

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, the answer to your Ladyship's questions are that the Devonia account in Latvia was operated by Mr Neyadi, who was a person who we understand to have worked in the sheikh's private financial office and had been nominated as the sole director of Devonia. The reference to that is H(A)40/188. That is a document of December 2001 but we do not understand the position to have been any different any earlier. There are large numbers of transfers which he authorised.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you.

MR SUMPTION: There were also accounts for the trusts at Clydesdale Bank which were operated -- I don't know whether your Ladyship wished to know who operated those but the account opening documentation shows that those were operated by Mr Fomichev and by two --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: This is Itchen, is it?

MR SUMPTION: This is the Itchen Trust account at Clydesdale. They were operated by Mr Fomichev and by one or other of two solicitors at Denton Wilde Sapte Gibraltar: Mr Keeling or Mr Murphy.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR SUMPTION: And the reference to that is H(D)2/17/48.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you.

MR SUMPTION: Mr Berezovsky, I would like to ask you about commissions payable to the intermediaries involved in the Devonian transaction and for that purpose I would like to ask you to look at bundle R(D)1/20/151. Have you got that?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, you will see that this is a record by Mr Lindley, then your solicitor, of a meeting at Downside Manor, which was Mr Patarkatsishvili's English home, wasn't it?

A. Yes, yes.

Q. And various people are recorded as being present, including you and Mr Patarkatsishvili.

A. It's the note, yes, of Mr Lindley.

Q. Yes, that's right, and you will see that you were present from the third line.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, commissions are dealt with towards the bottom of the page. There's a paragraph, it's the fourth paragraph from the bottom, beginning:

"With regard to Signeft, there was an agreed commission of 15% to be paid to [the sheikh] and this had been represented to [Mr Berezovsky] and [Mr Patarkatsishvili]."

So it was being said that the sheikh had taken 15 per cent and you had been told about that.

"Representations had been made to [the sheikh] that their commission was 4%.

"1.3% was paid to [Mr Curtis] and it appeared that the remaining 1.7%..."

This is the two sums that make up the 4 per cent above.

"... was in some way distributed between [Mr Kay, Mr Jumean]..."

Who was the head of the sheikh's private office:

"... and [Mr Fomichev]."

A. Yes.

Q. Now, do you agree that those commissions were paid?

A. Mr Sumption, this is not important but this is more or less what I remember, not in this way, I'm sorry to say. I was remember perfectly and I remember that from Eyhab that it should be commissioned 15 per cent and I don't remember -- it was almost the same with ORT as well, as I remember, and later on it was a point to discuss with Abramovich that he should cover 50, but it doesn't relate now to your question.

My understanding was that sheikh -- at the beginning, maybe it come later, it's already 2007, but at the beginning my understanding was that sheikh should be paid 15 per cent: he will get 11 per cent personally and 4 per cent will be splitted between Eyhab, between Fomichev and between Joseph Kay, Badri adviser. I did not remember that time involvement of Curtis in the sharing of this money.

And as I told you, Mr Sumption and my Lady, I remind you that I had a meeting with sheikh just one time in London, already later when everything happened, and before the meeting I was told by -- I was informed by -- I was informed by one, I don't remember who one, not to mention sheikh that he got just 4 per cent. It means that people who were around him trick him, saying me -- we were informed that he will be paid 11 per cent and not 4 as a reality, yes?

Q. Not 15?

A. Sorry, no, no. They told that 15 per cent but the sheikh himself will get 11 and the rest 4 will be distributed between them, between Ruslan Fomichev, between Joseph Kay and between Eyhab; but it's turned out that sheikh was paid just 4 per cent. I think that that knowledge I got from Mr Curtis.

And this is one of the point which I decide to discuss with sheikh because I want -- don't want to lose face in front of him when he visited me. And as I remember, and my wife was present at this our meeting, I told him that I did not understand what is reality and he mentioned me that he is fully now informed about everything and I shouldn't worry about that. This is what he mentioned.

- Q. Do I understand this right -- I hope I haven't misunderstood what you've just said.
- A. Yes, yes.
- Q. Mr Curtis told you that part of the sheikh's commission was being secretly deducted and shared between the head of his financial office, Mr Jumean, your financial manager, Mr Fomichev, and Mr Patarkatsishvili's financial manager, Mr Kay?
- A. Absolutely not.
- Q. I see.
- A. Absolutely not.
- Q. I see. What are you saying?
- A. I was told first of all not by Mr Curtis; I was told by Eyhab, sheikh head of administration, about that sheikh will get 11 per cent and the rest party -- I mean, they agreed Joseph Kay, Ruslan and himself will get -- I -- because I was not involved in so details, I immediately passed that to Badri.
- The point is that Eyhab -- it's happened so that Eyhab become close to me because he based in London and it's the reason why he told me that. But I immediately referred it to Badri and after that I don't know anything about what happened.
- Q. But this 4 per cent that was being taken out of the sheikh's share, 1.3 per cent was paid to Mr Curtis; isn't that right? According to that note.

- A. I was not -- again, as I recollect, I didn't know about that. It could be that -- it's my recollection; it could be that it's different. But I don't remember that, that Curtis was paid as a percentage. I remember that Curtis was paid money for that, that I remember well. But is it percentage of 15 per cent or some different? I don't know that, I don't remember that.
- Q. Mr Curtis's commission was in fact at your expense, wasn't it, because he deducted it from the monies paid into the Devonia account with your consent?
- A. No, again, it was agreed that 15 per cent will be sheikh money and not my money and it will be commission from this which he will be paid because of this transaction. And it's his problem how he share his money; it's not my problem. But definitely, as I told you, I didn't have discussion with sheikh about that; I just had discussion with Eyhab, who have been and still now, as I understand, chief administration of sheikh.
- Q. And when you said that somebody was tricking the sheikh, who do you say was tricking the sheikh?
- A. Somebody. Somebody, I don't know who. Maybe those people who it's -- I thought that maybe -- I thought maybe Eyhab trick sheikh. But again, as far as follows from conversation, mine and my wife and sheikh and his wife in London, it's turned out that it's not so; that sheikh understood the reality.

Q. Could you please look at bundle H(A) --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Sorry, just before you leave that, Mr Sumption.

The statement, "Representations had been made to SS that their commission was 4%", who is "their" in that?

A. I think that "SS" it's mentioned that's Sheikh Sultan.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I appreciate that.

"Representations had been made to [Sheikh Sultan] that their commission was 4%."

Who is "their", in front of the word "commission", referring to?

A. Sorry, just a second. (Pause)

I think that 4 per cent, it's exactly coincide with 4 per cent at the beginning we discuss, yes? 11 plus 4, it means 15.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I see.

A. It means 4 per cent for --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So the 4 per cent going to the four people who are mentioned in the next paragraph?

A. Just a second. Next paragraph.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Sorry, that's --

A. Joseph Kay, correct.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

A. This is correct. And Ruslan Fomichev, this is correct.

This is my understanding.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: That's 3 per cent. I'm just not following the arithmetic quite.

A. Yes, me as well.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, right. Okay.

MR SUMPTION: Well, let's look at what went to Mr Curtis.

Could you please look at H(A)54/256.

Now, this is a letter of 28 February which is from Mr Curtis --

A. Just a second, I'm sorry. 20...?

Q. 28 February.

A. Which year?

Q. 2003.

A. Thank you.

Q. And it's Mr Curtis, addressed to Mr Hussein, the head of the sheikh's private office in Abu Dhabi.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, this is about commissions.

A. Yes.

Q. And if you look at the second paragraph you will see that:

"At that meeting..."

And he's referring to a meeting that he had had with the sheikh a few days earlier:

"At that meeting, I also presented to you and His Highness the enclosed handwritten Schedule of Fees, gifts and payments received by me or my family relating to His Highness' gift, the Sibneft transaction, Itchen Trust and [Rainbow Fund]. I wanted these major payments to be highlighted to His Highness and to Boris Berezovskiy so that there would not be any misunderstanding."

And he goes on below on that point on the page. The next paragraph --

A. Just a second. May I try to understand. I'm sorry.

(Consults interpreter)

Sorry, I understand, okay.

Q. Right. If you look at the next paragraph, it says:

"I have copied this letter to Boris by way of clarification so there can be no misunderstandings as to the benefits, gifts and payments that [he has obtained]."

A. Mm-hm.

Q. And over the page you will see the typed up version of what he appears to have handed them in manuscript at the meeting a few days earlier.

A. Sorry, which page?

Q. Page 257 of the bundle H(A)554/257.

A. 257, the next page, yes?

Q. Yes. And you'll see that item 1 on the schedule is:

"Kind Settlement by His Highness Sheikh Sultan... of £3 million (equivalent US$4.5 million) proceeds used to purchase [his] Penthouse..."

That appears to have been a gift. Then item 2 is:

"Payments procured by Eyhab Jumean on behalf of His Highness..."

And you will see the first of those payments is a sum of £481,000 invoices of his firm plus authorised disbursements of 388,000. So those are the professional fees and disbursements of his firm as solicitors.

A. Mm-hm.

Q. Then item 3 is:

"Payment made by Devonia Investments to Stephen Langford Curtis $13.8 million."

A. Mm-hm.

Q. "Payment made by Devonia Investments on request of Itchen Trust $4.5 million."

He then says:

"You will recall that I introduced this transaction and it was agreed by His Highness that while I represented him on the Sibneft transaction, he had no problem with me... or Curtis & Co working for the Itchen Trust or the other vendors in the Sibneft transaction (provided that I took no action for them in relation to the Sibneft transaction)."

Now, adding the $13.8 million and the $4.5 million, it looks, does it not, as if Mr Curtis received, in addition to his professional fees and disbursements, $18.3 million in commissions?

A. Mr Sumption, look, I don't know the relations, business relations between Sheikh Sultan and Curtis. It turned out he serve not me, he serve him. And it's, as I understand -- again, I didn't catch. Was this letter shown me or not, I don't remember --

Q. Yes, it was.

A. -- I don't remember that, but it's not reason why I answer you.

I just want to mention that my understanding, and as far as I understand your understanding, is clear that Mr Curtis serve not me, he serve sheikh, and it's sheikh decision how he want to appreciate Mr Curtis. And this is his decision; that's it. And I think that he paid this money through this 15 per cent, but it's his decision, not mine.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, the point is that if you look on the first page --

A. Yes.

Q. -- can I remind you that Mr Curtis was saying he wanted these payments to be drawn to your attention and he has therefore copied this letter to you. Do you see that?

A. Yes, I see that. I see that.

Q. And the reason for that is that items 3 and 4 on the schedule are payments made by Devonia Investments and those sums came out of the bank accounts whose balances would otherwise have been paid to you.

A. Yes, Mr Sumption, I just want to repeat again: Mr Curtis serve not me, he serve Sheikh Sultan. And if Sheikh Sultan decide to pay him and decide to inform me that he is so grateful to Mr Curtis, it's not my point. Again, even if I was informed about that, it doesn't mean that it was my decision to do that; it's decision of Sheikh Sultan.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, it may have been the sheikh's decision but it was directly at your expense, wasn't it, and Badri's, because it was coming out of the Devonia monies, wasn't it?

A. Yes, I don't care at all how Sheikh Sultan will spend this 15 per cent. He decide to be grateful to Mr Curtis or he decide to use this money to pay other people, it's not my point at all.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, you are not listening to my question.

A. Yes.

Q. I am making to you the point that you were paying Mr Curtis this $18.3 million, not the sheikh. You were paying him --

A. I don't -- I don't remember --

Q. -- because the money was coming out of the Devonia accounts.

A. Again, Mr Sumption, I don't know anything about that. I just know that I paid 15 per cent to sheikh. If it was another additional expenses, I just don't remember that. But again, as I understand, Mr Curtis served Mr -- Sheikh Sultan, not me.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, item 4 is a payment of $4.5 million paid on request of Itchen Trust. That was your trust, wasn't it?

A. It's my trust, it's correct.

Q. Yes. And your trust had asked that that $4.5 million should be paid to Mr Curtis, hadn't it?

A. Again, Mr Sumption, I don't know why it's came through Itchen Trust. It's not again my point. It's the point how Mr Curtis was paid. He was paid by his request and the reason why they mentioned here Sheikh Sultan, it does not connect to my Itchen Trust. Why the reason that they mention -- that they inform Mr -- Sheikh Sultan about that? What is the reason for that?

Q. The reason that they were informing you was that they needed your consent, and you gave it in writing, didn't you?

A. I don't remember that at all, that I gave this in writing. Again, I can't exclude that. But again, it's all the connect to Devonia agreement and if here sheikh is mentioned, it means that because of sheikh want to do so -- because in opposite case why he is mentioned here -- we'll do that. But --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Can I be clear: are you saying that what Mr Curtis received by way of commission came out of the sheikh's 15 per cent?

A. My understanding is so, but Mr Sumption understanding is different. He said that I paid from my Itchen Trust --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, we can see it comes -- it's a payment made by Devonia on request of the Itchen Trust. What I'm trying to understand is: is it your case that any payments made to Curtis by way of commission came out of --

A. Of 15 per cent.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: -- the sheikh's 15 per cent?

A. It's my understanding. Correct, my Lady.

MR SUMPTION: Could you please look at bundle H(A)55/153.

I'd like you to leave open the last document you looked at.

A. Yes.

Q. Don't please take away bundle H(A)54.

Have you got open in front of you H(A)55/153?

A. Sorry, no. Yes, now I have it.

Q. Now, this is a letter dated 24 March 2003, about four weeks after the letter we've just looked at. Right?

A. Yes.

Q. And it's addressed to the sheikh and it's written by Mr Curtis. He says:

"Your Highness

"I refer to the Settlement Agreement which I am in the process of negotiating..."

Then in the next paragraph:

"On the basis that I am able to successfully negotiate that you retain the $5.8 million referred to [in that agreement]... I understand that you have agreed to acknowledge the payments detailed in my last letter to Mahmoud."

That's the one we've just looked at.

"This letter was sent only to satisfy my obligations to all parties to disclose my fees and those of Curtis & Co and I confirm that Boris is aware of these payments and has already signed to acknowledge them. I have however asked Boris to countersign this letter by way of his further confirmation in this regard. Neither the letter to Mahmoud or this letter imposes any obligation on you to make any payments..."

He goes on:

"In consideration thereof, I understand that you will have also agreed that Curtis & Co shall terminate its retainer..."

If you look at the text at the bottom of the page --

A. Yes.

Q. -- the sheikh signs by way of confirmation of the above and there's a countersignature of yours:

"Countersigned by way of acknowledgement of payments made to Stephen Curtis and Curtis & Co pursuant to the letter dated 28th February 2003 and confirmation that there are no further obligations on His Highness in relation to such payments."

Now, that's your signature, isn't it?

A. This my signature but not under this letter, as I understand, because there is a reference:

"Countersigned by way of confirmation of the above."

And what is that?

Q. Well, that's the sheikh's signature.

A. No, no, no, no, no, just a second. And my signature also "Countersigned by way of acknowledgement" and so-so. My signature, it's not on the letter of Mr Curtis, as I understand, sorry, as I understand --

Q. What you are signing is an acknowledgement to show that you consent to the payments made to Mr Curtis. Do you agree?

A. I can't disagree but I don't understand what I sign because this is not the letter which you just read; it's a little bit different.

Q. This is a letter which was written four weeks or so after the letter of 28 February. There's a letter of 28 February which lists the payments; then there's this letter on 24 March which refers to the letter of 28 February. Do you see?

A. Yes, yes, I see.

Q. And this letter asks the sheikh to sign by way of acceptance that Mr Curtis is going to get those commissions, and you also sign at the very bottom.

A. Again, Mr Sumption, my clear understanding is that this how sheikh decide himself to share 15 per cent. Again, this is my understanding, yes? And again, Mr Curtis serve sheikh, formally at least, not me, and I accept any proposal which lead to sheikh or people around this deal to -- that Mr Curtis should be paid.

I don't know exactly why it's organised like that but my understanding is that -- finally, I mean, understanding is -- that Mr Curtis paid by sheikh, not by me.

Q. Well, Mr Curtis was in effect paid by you because the money came out of the Devonia accounts which would otherwise have been paid to you?

- A. No, again, Mr Sumption, it's again -- because we -- if you calculate correctly and I accept to calculate correctly, is the money inside of 15 per cent or inside of 85 per cent, definitely I should accept the logic. But my understanding is that it's from commission which we paid already -- which we had obligation to pay sheikh and sheikh spread money between his people, not me. And this is again my understanding and the answer to question of my Lady.
- Q. Why did you consent to the payment of these large sums to Mr Curtis in addition to his professional fees?
- A. Again, I just follow advices of people who organise this deal, Devonia agreement: it was Badri, it was Curtis, it was Ruslan Fomichev. I didn't create any initiative myself and I never accept only myself any payment. It means that, as I told you, it was a big mess with this 15 per cent; I don't know who even now finally got it. And I told you absolutely correctly that I was a surprised a little bit when I knew that sheikh was just 4 per cent and the rest was shared between the other parties.
- Q. Mr Berezovsky, would you please take bundle H(A)61, page 137 H(A)61/137.
- A. I should keep that open?
- Q. I think your desk is getting a bit crowded. Perhaps they could be kept handy behind just for the moment.

The first document I'd like you to look at is H(A)61, page 137. This relates to the $4.5 million and it's a letter of 17 July 2003 from Mr Keeling, who was the solicitor to the Itchen Trust in Gibraltar --

A. Yes.

Q. -- addressed to Mr Jacobson of Curtis & Co. He was in fact a trustee of the trust. And what he says is:

"You will recall the decision that a special payment be made to [Mr Curtis] out of the monies due to the Trust from the [Berezovsky/Patarkatsishvili]/Devonia/Sheikh Sultan agreements as amended."

A. Mm-hm.

Q. Now, what he is saying is that the special payment, which was the $4.5 million -- and you can see that from the following page --

A. Yes.

Q. -- where it's resolved that:

"... in consideration of the services provided by Mr... Curtis to the Trust... the Trustees should award a special payment to Mr Curtis in the amount of US$4,500,000 and the payment of that amount to Mr Curtis be and hereby is approved."

A. Yes, yes, sorry.

Q. Now, Mr Keeling is referring to a decision that $4.5 million should be paid to Mr Curtis out of your trust.

A. Mm-hm.

Q. And you were aware of that, weren't you? You were paying that $4.5 million?

A. Just a second. Let's try to clarify. Before we discuss about $13.5 million, correct?

Q. I'm not talking about the 13 --

A. Just a second. What we discuss in previous discussion, we discuss about the same payment or this is different payment?

Q. In the previous documents, two payments are referred to: one of $4.5 million and one of $13.8 million.

A. It means that the previous what we discussed, that was 13.5; yes, correct?

Q. Right.

A. And now it's 4.5?

Q. There are two sums being paid to Mr Curtis referred to in the previous document.

A. Yes.

Q. This document that I'm showing you now is only concerned with the $4.5 million. Okay?

A. Only of one payment, yes?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes.

- Q. And what it is showing is that that $4.5 million was paid out of your trust? You --
- A. But the previous $13.5 million also was paid?
- Q. Forget about that. I'll deal with that in a minute.
- A. Okay, okay. It's absolutely -- my answer is absolutely the same.
- Q. Right.
- A. I can't -- I can't present you now the clear understanding of what is that. My clear understanding connect only to one point: that Mr Curtis, as I understand perfect now, work for Sheikh Sultan and we paid Sheikh Sultan 15 per cent. Was it done from my Itchen Trust which I control, by request -- by some other reason or not? I don't know. I don't know anything that we, I'm sorry to say, bribe Mr Curtis in this way. I don't know anything about that.
- Q. Mr Berezovsky, first of all, Mr Curtis in fact acted for you up to 1 June; he only acted for the sheikh in the last four days before the transaction was signed. That's a matter of record, I can tell you that.
- A. This is also news for me because on the one hand at the beginning I thought that Curtis operated for me; then it's turned out that he operate for sheikh; and now it's clear that he operate just five days. I don't know anything about that, believe me.

Q. It must have been obvious to you when Mr Curtis came and gave you advice on 17 May that at that stage he was acting as your solicitor and that's what you had told us before?

A. Mr Sumption, I don't understand anything now because my impression is -- was that Mr Curtis operate for my favour; then it's turned out that he operate not for my favour, for Mr -- for Sheikh Sultan favour; now it's turned out again that he operate for... I don't understand anything.

I just want to present what I know here. I made -- I deliver everything what my financial adviser decide to deliver. If they decide to deliver, and my understanding still now is that Mr Curtis was not bribing, he was professional English lawyer and he was paid by Sheikh Sultan the way from 15 per cent, the way how he was paid is that, but I don't have any idea why it should be different.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, the truth is that Mr Curtis actually acted for both you and the sheikh.

A. Ah, okay. It's great.

Q. I'm interested in what you consented to.

This document, the reason I'm showing it to you is that it demonstrates that the $4.5 million actually came out of your trust and not the sheikh's money at all; you paid it.

A. No, no, no, no, definitely it came from my trust, it's absolutely correct.

Q. Right.

A. I don't know how it was agreed Mr Curtis will be paid, directly from sheikh or from my -- money which came to my trust and later on send it back to Curtis. I just really, my Lady, don't understand anything now because I don't understand the position of Mr Curtis now already.

Q. Well, let's have a look at the document that records the same thing in relation to the $13.8 million.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Sumption, just before we go along this, it must be a matter of record what is the total in relation to which the 15 per cent was agreed?

MR SUMPTION: $1.3 billion.

THE WITNESS: No, no, no.

MR SUMPTION: $1.3 billion.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: $1.3 billion. Therefore if one is looking at the figure of US$26.38 million and the additional $5.8 million that was paid, one must be able to work out what all the percentages are as a matter of arithmetic.

MR SUMPTION: Yes, one can. It doesn't exactly match. But we do know what was in fact paid to Mr Curtis and these two documents demonstrate that. The attendant --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: What I'm asking for, and I'm not asking for it now, is I would quite like a bit of paper that sets out the total and the percentages and what the percentages were of the total that Curtis received and the sheikh received and anybody else received.

MR SUMPTION: Yes. We'll certainly supply that. But these documents at least show what the figures were in actual money.

Mr Berezovsky, could you be given H(A)51/9, please. This is Mr Keeling's attendance note --

A. Just a second, Mr Sumption.

Q. Mr Keeling was a trustee of your trust and this is an attendance note of points being made about these payments. Most of them are not relevant to the present point but could you please look at paragraph 10 on page 10, which is.

A. It's dated 5 December 2002; correct?

Q. Yes.

A. At page? Which page?

Q. Page 10.

A. Yes.

Q. And that says, paragraph 10:

"SLC [Mr Curtis] made the point that the fees due to him of which the US$13.8 million form part, are part of the fee of" --

A. Just a second, I'm sorry. The paragraph number?

Q. 10?

A. So sorry, yes. 10, fine.

Q. "SLC made the point that the fees due to him of which the US$13.8 million form part, are part of the fee of 0.66% of the 'turn' between the price at which Sheikh Sultan purchased the Sibneft beneficial interests from [Berezovsky] and [Patarkatsishvili] and the price at which he has sold those beneficial interests to Abramovich. Originally the Sheikh was going to pay those fees but it had been agreed that it would be taken from BB's share (i.e. Itchen Trust) and credit would therefore be given for that amount in the context of the Sibneft shares..."

So what is being said here is that originally the sheikh was going to pay them but then it was decided that you could pay them.

A. No, no, no, no. It is exactly answer, as I understand, to question of my Lady. It is exactly written here that 0.666 (sic), it's just the percentage which, as I understand, is are part of the payment of 15 per cent which were paid to sheikh, or sheikh was paid less to this 0.666 (sic) percentage.

Q. Look at the next sentence, please, Mr Berezovsky.

- A. Yes.
- Q. "Originally the Sheikh was going to pay those fees but it had been agreed that it would be taken from BB's share (i.e. Itchen Trust) and credit would therefore be given for that amount in the context of the Sibneft shares... transaction."
- A. It does not mean that it was not paid from -- it means that it's paid just from Itchen Trust, it's correct, but it doesn't mean that it's additional payment.
- Q. The Itchen trustees had a formal meeting at which, with your express consent, it was agreed that the $13.8 million should be taken out of your trust?
- A. Again, Mr Sumption, I don't want to say that I don't know; I don't remember anything of that. I just understand today that Mr Curtis work for both sides, for my side and for sheikh's side. And how it was agreed to pay, again I never was involved in that. I never knew that Mr Curtis was bribed in any way. And, as I understand, everything was part of agreement which we had from the very beginning. This is the point.
- Q. Let's look at a document which you signed, Mr Berezovsky. I would like you to turn to bundle H(A)55/166.
- A. Thank you.
- Q. Now, what you've got here is a minute of the meeting of the trustees of your trust.

A. Yes.

Q. Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. And present are Mr Keeling --

A. Yes.

Q. -- and Mr Jenni, who was your lawyer?

A. Yes. Yes.

Q. If you look over the page, you will see that you signed it?

A. Yes, I see that.

Q. Would you look at item 3 --

A. It's not signed, it's just my confirmation because they --

Q. All right. But that's your signature, isn't it?

A. Yes, the -- just a second.

It looks like my signature. I am not sure 100 per cent but it looks like my signature.

Q. Would you look at paragraph 3(b), please.

A. Yes.

Q. "IT WAS FURTHER NOTED that an additional sum of US $13,800,000, also emanating from the Trust's entitlement pursuant to the Agreements mentioned above, had been remitted directly at the request and direction of the trustees and also [Rainbow Fund] to Stephen Curtis in respect of his appointment as managing director... of [Rainbow Fund]."

A. Yes, it's written here.

Q. Right. Now, that $13.8 million, which we've seen described in an earlier document as an introduction commission, came out of your trust with your consent, didn't it?

A. Definitely, if it's my signature -- and I think it's my signature -- definitely it's so.

Q. So the position is, is it not, that a total of $18.3 million was paid out of your trust to Mr Curtis? And my question is this: what service did Mr Curtis perform for you that justified the payment of $18.3 million to him on top of his professional fees?

A. Mr Sumption, it's again the same answer. As I understand, Mr Curtis serve me and Sheikh Sultan. How it was paid? It was paid from Itchen Trust or it was paid from Sheikh Sultan, a cover(?) he support. It's turned out now that Mr Curtis, unfortunately, was a little bit controversial even for my understanding for whom he was working. I just follow advice of my lawyers to pay this money. My understanding was, if I can recollect that, that it was money which was paid in the frame of 15 per cent which sheikh was paid for this deal, nothing more.

Q. Well, we've seen that they came out of your trust. Can I repeat my question. What service did you understand Mr Curtis to have performed that justified the payment of £18.3 million to him on top of his professional fees?

A. Okay, I don't know --

Q. Dollars, I'm sorry, not pounds.

A. I'm sorry, I don't know top or not top because I don't know how Mr Curtis was paid. I had a lot of -- not a lot, I had several deals which organise by Mr Curtis and it was not my point to decide how much he should be paid. I don't know -- I understand it is a lot, 18.5 million. I don't understand that time definitely -- now I understand a little bit better -- that lawyers got a lot of money, but believe me that I don't understand what kind of service he was paid.

Q. Well, I will suggest to you what kind of service he was paid. Mr Curtis had performed for you a service that was worth a lot of money, he had helped to launder your money, hadn't he, with your consent?

A. Mr Sumption, it's not correct to say that because I never made anything illegal and -- I accused [in] Russia many times that I made illegal but never happened that on the west somebody can say me that it's something I have done illegal. The point is in Russia, it's political motivated, I don't want 100 times to repeat that, but I never was even mentioned that it's something I have done illegal. Believe me, I paid Curtis, according of my understanding, when he serve me. I didn't know that he change several times who he serve, I already don't know, but I don't have any reason to -- for your statement that it was help of money-laundering. It is not help for money-laundering because it was -- (inaudible) it will be discovered as money-laundering. That's it.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Sumption, just before you stop, I can't seem to get up the page that is on the screen. I know what the reference is: it's H(A)55/166.

MR MALEK: Try 170 H(A)55/170.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: 170, thank you very much. That's it. Thank you very much.

Yes, Mr Sumption.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, I think five minutes worth of Rusal will not be very instructive at 4.10 but I'm in your Ladyship's hands.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, I think that's enough for today.

Mr Berezovsky, I repeat the warning I've already given you, don't talk about your evidence or the case.

THE WITNESS: Be sure, my Lady.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Fine. 10.15 tomorrow. Very well.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, I should say that I would expect, with all the reservations that one has about any prediction, to finish probably late tomorrow morning.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: What, all cross-examination?

MR SUMPTION: My cross-examination.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Are any other members of your team following you on the cross-examination?

MR SUMPTION: Not of my team but I understand that other parties wish to cross-examine, I understand for a short time.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well. Thank you very much.

    Cross-examination by MR SUMPTION .....2

(10.15 am)

(Proceedings delayed)

(10.25 am)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just a second, Mr Sumption.

It has been brought to my attention that this morning somebody took a photograph in this courtroom. It is a contempt of court to use a camera anywhere in the building, particularly in court. I should not have to be making this announcement. Please will the person who took the photograph identify herself to Mr Pollen, who is standing at the back of the court, so that he can ensure that the photograph has been deleted on the mobile phone. Mr Pollen will be waiting outside. I'm not requiring the person who took the photograph to leave immediately but during the course of the next quarter of an hour or so, I would expect that to take place.

It would be extremely boring for everybody if they had to give up their mobile phones at security at the desk when they come into the building in the morning. I hope that I won't have to repeat this sort of announcement.

Yes, Mr Sumption.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, checking the transcript overnight, there was one matter relating to the Sibneft side of the case which I have not put to Mr Berezovsky and should now do so.

Mr Berezovsky, the meeting at Megeve on 10 January 2001, your position on that, as I understand it, is that so far as you're aware there was no such meeting?

A. You're absolutely correct.

Q. The evidence --

A. No, no, meeting -- I have not been at this meeting.

This my position is.

Q. Yes. The evidence that will be given in due course is that you were present at a meeting between Mr Abramovich and Mr Patarkatsishvili at which there was a discussion of a final pay-off of your krysha. I'm going to give you a summary of what that is to give you an opportunity to comment on it.

What happened was that at the heliport, as Mr Abramovich was leaving, there was a meeting between Mr Abramovich and Mr Patarkatsishvili in your presence at which it was agreed in principle that there should be a final pay-out. Mr Patarkatsishvili justified this not on the basis of any interest in Sibneft but on the basis that he wanted and you wanted certainty instead of the irregular arrival of sums of money as had happened over the past few years. No figure was finally agreed but Mr Abramovich said that he would expect to be in a position to pay about $1 billion and the meeting then, so far as relevant, came to an end.

What do you say about that?

A. I already expressed my position, my Lady. I have not been at this meeting. It's my clear recollection because after meeting in Cap d'Antibes I never met Abramovich more, except of this meeting in the shop.

Q. Megeve?

A. Except of my meeting in the -- on Sloane Street.

Q. Yes, I see.

Now, I want to turn to the Rusal side of the case, Mr Berezovsky. I want first to ask you about the acquisition of the aluminium assets. Now, I'm not asking you at this stage -- I shall come to that -- about the subsequent arrangements for the merger with Mr Deripaska's interests. At this stage I'm only interested in the acquisition of the original aluminium assets.

Now, as I understand it, you say that the discussion about investing in the aluminium assets began when

Mr Bosov approached you with a proposal that you should buy the aluminium concerns at Bratsk and Krasnoyarsk.

Is that a correct summary of your evidence?

A. It's correct summary of my evidence.

Q. Mr Bosov, was he the manager of Trans-World Group which was controlled by the Reuben brothers and Lev Chernoi?

A. I don't -- that time when he made this proposal I didn't know that because I was not paid too much attention to aluminium business and I just knew about aluminium business and I have very strong connection in the base -- in the main region of Russia which -- where aluminium company allocated because of Mr -- because that time governor of this region, Krasnoyarsk, was General Lebed, to who I have strong connections.

Q. Mr Bosov, you say, approached you with a proposal that you should buy these two aluminium concerns. Who did you think Mr Bosov was?

A. I just -- he was my friend. I knew that he was involved in aluminium business, I didn't know his direct position in this business, and that's it. Moreover, before Mr Bosov came to me, I even didn't identify him as a main -- as a big figure in aluminium business.

As I told you, my Lady, just now, I have been already in this region, in Krasnoyarsk, because of request of aluminium people as well, like Mr Bykov Anatoly, and he had a conflict with governor and he knew -- they knew well that my -- I have strong connection to governor and they ask me to help in the conflict. And I flew to Krasnoyarsk, it was I think '98, the beginning of '99 maybe, it was wintertime, and I came there, tried to create the peace inside of -- in them and I was successful that time.

I met General Lebed, governor of Krasnoyarsk. I met Anatoly Bykov, at that time one of the biggest figures in aluminium. Later on he was accused of criminal and so. It was a lot of criminals around. But nevertheless this meeting happened and they shake hand. It's the reason why I knew some people but I never heard before -- not never heard before -- I didn't recognise Bosov when he came as one of the main player in this business.

Q. I'm asking you about your meeting with Mr Bosov because that's when you say that this proposal to acquire the Bratsk and Krasnoyarsk assets was first brought to you.

A. And two more assets.

Q. Can you please tell me when you say that this meeting with Mr Bosov occurred?

A. My recollection is that it was the end of '99.

Q. Right.

A. The problem is that -- I just want, my Lady, again, again, again, sorry, to return back. The end of '99, it means Parliament elections, which were absolutely crucial point for me itself, and I support that time Putin party, Yedinstvo Internova(?), I participate in the creation of this party. It means that my attention mainly was turned to politic again. But nevertheless I remember this meeting with Mr Bosov.

Q. Right. Now, if you would look at your witness statement at paragraph 256 D2/17/250. Someone is about to bring it to you, Mr Berezovsky. Now, at this paragraph --

A. Paragraph which one?

Q. 256. What you say here is that you and Mr Patarkatsishvili raised the Bosov proposal with Mr Abramovich?

A. It's correct.

Q. And as I understand it, the Bosov proposal is the one that's referred to at paragraph 254 -- see the previous page -- which was a proposal to purchase aluminium interests in Bratsk and Krasnoyarsk?

A. It was proposal -- definitely I don't remember well which kind of assets but later on it was clarified there were at least two -- four assets. Four assets.

Q. That was later.

A. Just a second, Mr Sumption.

At that time I did not pay attention which exact assets there were, but finally it was four assets: it's Krasnoyarsk aluminium plant, it's Krasnoyarsk hydro station, it was Bratsk aluminium and Achinsk special company which produce initial material for glinozem in Russian, I don't know translation --

THE INTERPRETER: Alumina.

A. -- alumina for aluminium factories.

MR SUMPTION: Now, still on paragraph 256, as I understand it, you say that you and Mr Patarkatsishvili had a meeting, did you, with Mr Abramovich?

A. It's correct.

Q. And at that meeting, as I understand it, you raised the Bosov proposal, whatever it was, with him and he eventually agreed to proceed with it?

A. No, no, no, it's not so. I even remember where this meeting happened: it's happened in the office of Sibneft and we -- according of our agreement with Mr Abramovich '95, '96, and we were very precise to follow the agreement, we proposed Mr Abramovich -- we informed Mr Abramovich that we got proposal about aluminium business and Badri and -- I didn't understand a lot about this business but Badri made some investigation, as I understand, and we think that it could be profitable business, good business for us, and it's the reason why we ask -- why we decide to inform

Mr Abramovich about new opportunity. And we have done that, I remember that very precisely.

Q. Well now, look at paragraph 256.

A. Yes.

Q. It's not inconsistent with what you've just said but, as I understand it, you said to Mr Abramovich --

A. Yes.

Q. -- you and Patarkatsishvili said --

A. Yes.

Q. -- this could be good business.

A. Yes.

Q. He said he would discuss it with Mr Shvidler --

A. Absolutely correct.

Q. Yes?

A. And Abramovich answer was not immediate answer.

Abramovich said that, "I should think", because, as we, he didn't have experience in this business and definitely he want to take break to discuss it with Mr Shvidler. It's absolutely the same what I told you before.

Q. And at some subsequent stage he agreed to proceed with the proposal; that's your evidence, isn't it?

A. He agreed to think about that and to discuss that with Mr Shvidler. That's it.

Q. Yes. And subsequently, shortly after this meeting, you say that he agreed to proceed with the proposal?

- A. And after this meeting, after, as I understand, he discussed it with Shvidler, he accept to participate -- he said that it's good idea and, as I understand, Shvidler understood as well, participate in this business. That's correct.
- Q. So all that was agreed on this occasion that you talk about at paragraph 256 is that Mr Abramovich would proceed with Mr Bosov's proposal?
- A. What we agreed with Mr Abramovich that he generally think that it's good business and that we start to discuss if we go to this business under which conditions we'll do that, and that Mr Abramovich and Mr Badri together took responsibility for negotiation about how should be organised. And moreover, as far as Badri had much better occasionally -- I don't know, not occasionally -- links to people who already were involved in this business and who owned this business, it means that mainly Badri at this stage discuss how it will be -- what will be the deal.

Moreover, Mr Sumption, I want to stress you that according of information which I got from Badri, after I inform him about Bosov proposal and so, Badri said that, "Boris, I had the same proposal from Mr Anisimov and from people who are involved in that business already and I have" -- and Bosov a little bit overplay that he initiate -- that he initiated that deal.

- Q. Mr Berezovsky, would you please look on the screen at the answer that you gave which starts at [draft] line 17 and continues up to [draft] page 9, line 2. You've dealt with two matters in that last answer: one is what was actually discussed on this occasion with Mr Abramovich and the other is about something that Mr Patarkatsishvili discussed with you later. It's the first of those things that I'm interested in.

So would you remind yourself of what you said between [draft] line 17 at page 8 and [draft] line 2 of page 9.

- A. Which lines?

- Q. Start at [draft] line 17 on page 8 and continue to [draft] line 2 of page 9.

- A. Just a second. (Pause)

And what? What is wrong with that?

- Q. Nothing is wrong with it --

- A. Nothing wrong with it?

- Q. Nothing wrong with it, Mr Berezovsky. That's your evidence.

Am I right to understand that that is the sum total of what was agreed at this meeting that you had with Mr --

A. Mr Sumption --

Q. Let me finish my question, please.

A. Sorry.

Q. That is the sum total of what was agreed on this particular occasion with Mr Abramovich?

A. Mr Sumption, okay, I think it's very tricky -- I'm sorry, my Lady, to say that -- what you are doing because my recollection is the recollection of long time ago and my recollection is absolutely clear. I prepared to repeat that again.

I got proposal from Mr Bosov. I discussed this proposal with Mr Badri. We decide, according of our agreement of '99 (sic), '96, to present this proposal to Mr Abramovich and we had a meeting with Mr Abramovich in Sibneft office to make this proposal to him. He said that he need to talk to Mr Shvidler about that and after he talk with Mr Shvidler about that, later, he said that this proposal is proper and they also pay interest to participate in that. This is the point; nothing more.

Q. I understand, thank you.

Now, Mr Abramovich's evidence is that in fact he was approached about possible aluminium acquisitions not by you at all but by Mr Patarkatsishvili alone.

A. Mr Sumption, it's -- according of my recollection, it's wrong. I remember well discussion in Sibneft office about this initiative and if recollection of Mr Abramovich is different, fine; I hope he will have chance to prove that in witness box. My recollection is that one.

Q. Now, at paragraph 258 of your witness statement D2/17/250 you discuss the reasons why, according to you, it was important that your and Mr Patarkatsishvili's interests should not be visible. Do you see that? Just remind yourself of what you said at paragraph 258, would you?

A. Just a second. (Pause)

Yes.

Q. Now, why was it important to you that you and Mr Patarkatsishvili should not be visible? You say that this was because you had come under attack from Prime Minister Primakov. That's your reason, is it?

A. Yes, it's -- it was my reason as well because I already have experience that situation change quickly and today you are friend, tomorrow you are enemies, in politics at least. And I understood well that the clash with Primakov already happened or will happen no doubt because we -- as I told you before when we discuss about Primakov, I told you before that it was choice, I mean Primakov as a prime minister, just because we didn't have alternative that time. But it became absolutely clear very soon that Primakov become enemy.

Q. Mr Primakov had been dismissed, had he not, as prime minister in May, in part as a result of your efforts?

A. I already confirm that. Yes, it's true.

Q. And that happened in May, didn't it?

A. But the battle -- but our -- not battle but our fight, I don't know how to say that, start earlier, practically as only he took his position, and I already describe that previous days. It mean that Primakov all the time was person who didn't coincide with me as far as vision of future of Russia.

But again, I just want to stress that we didn't have choice. We need to consolidate people because at the same time, my Lady, as I told you before, we had economical and political crisis at the same time in '98 and it's the reason why Primakov was selected as a prime minister.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, I'm interested in late 1999, when you say that all this began.

A. Yes.

Q. In late 1999 you had seen off Mr Primakov, he'd been dismissed about six months before --

A. Yes.

Q. -- and you were at the height of your power, weren't you?

A. Yes, it's correct. But I told you that I had already lesson that how could be changed the -- how the situation could be changed if you involved in political battle. And this is the reason why I still was in position to afraid my political exposure because it was December 2000 -- '99 and I understood that I'm under attack of Mr Primakov as well because, as you know, exactly Mr Primakov was in a position of to meet Mr Yeltsin and you know that Primakov and Luzhkov together, they fight against of Putin and Yeltsin when they -- and they'd been together. It means that Primakov was dangerous because he pretend to become president of Russia. Definitely it's true.

Q. Isn't this secrecy simply an explanation put forward by you as to why you took no part in the negotiations of the acquisition of these assets?

A. Mr Sumption, I already mention that my position all the time was the same: I just present at the idea of the business and the initial steps. Then I left everything to Badri and to Abramovich later. It means that I participate in some meetings.

After December '99, when I was elected deputy of the Parliament, I was not participate direct, I was not, say, put my signature and so, because it's prohibited according of the Russian -- not law but some kind of law and it's the reason, for example, my signature is not on the agreement when we got these assets. And I was surprised that Abramovich put his signature because that time he also was a deputy of the Parliament. But I think that I could participate nevertheless because we start to discuss this business before I was elected deputy of the Parliament.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, as I understand the evidence you've just given, you didn't participate in any meetings after December 1999. Is that right?

A. It's wrong. It's wrong. As I told you, Mr Sumption -- okay. I am sorry that I am so emotional because you trick a little bit according of my understanding.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, did you participate in meetings after December 1999 or was it only up to December 1999?

A. No, it's -- I gave you absolutely clear answer: I participate in meetings after December 1999 and in 2000 as well.

Q. Well, what you say in the answer a moment ago:

"After December [19]99, when I was elected deputy of the Parliament, I was not participate direct..."

A. Mr Sumption, it's absolutely wrong. I participate -- I try not to participate, I mean directly to put my signature, but I participate in many meetings concerning Rusal, and you know that well.

Q. Right. Would you please tell me which meetings you say you participated in other than the Dorchester Hotel, which I shall come to.

A. Yes. The meeting in Dorchester Hotel --

Q. Well, apart from that?

A. Just, Mr Sumption, please --

Q. I'm not asking you about the Dorchester Hotel, Mr Berezovsky.

A. No, Mr Sumption, please let me answer.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Hang on. You're being asked a question --

THE WITNESS: Yes, and I -- sorry, my Lady.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: -- Mr Berezovsky. We don't want your evidence about the Dorchester Hotel at this stage. Mr Sumption in the course of his cross-examination is coming to that later.

Please can you answer the question, which is: apart from the meeting at the Dorchester Hotel, which meetings do you say you participated in?

A. I participated in several meetings before meetings in Dorchester Hotel and those meetings were happened in Russia and as a preparation for the meetings in Dorchester Hotel. Part of the meeting were reflect to creation -- to acquisition of our assets, of buying our new aluminium assets, I mean like Krasnoyarsky aluminium plant, like Krasnoyarsky hydro station, like Bratsky aluminium plant, like Achinski alumina complex. And the part of that were already after we bought these assets and as a preparation when Abramovich create idea to merge with Deripaska and to --

MR SUMPTION: I'm not asking you about that either. My questions are only, at this stage, concerned with the original acquisition.

A. Okay. No, you ask me after '99 and I gave you answer including preparation -- you said after '99 but before Dorchester, and I gave you clear picture what I recollect.

As far as acquisition is concerned, we had a meeting to discuss first of all which kind of assets we are obtaining, we are buying, and -- just a second, it was very quick -- yes, and we agreed that Mr Abramovich will manage the business and Badri, again, refuse at the beginning that saying that he will manage the business but because of all events, again, as election campaign of president, Putin was elected president on 7 March and ORT, as, my Lady, you know well, was one of the key leverage for this election.

And situation was almost the same like with Sibneft: when Badri want to manage the company, Abramovich propose that he will manage the company and I took decision in favour of Mr Abramovich as well.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: And was that done at a meeting? Was that decision taken at a meeting?

A. The decision that Abramovich will manage the company?

Yes, it was done on the meeting.

MR SUMPTION: Mr Berezovsky, I want you to focus, please, on the meetings at which the acquisition of the original aluminium assets --

A. Yes.

Q. -- was negotiated between the sellers and the buyers.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, I'm not at the moment asking you about discussions that you had with Badri or with Mr Abramovich.

A. Yes.

Q. I would like to know about what meetings you participated in which were concerned with the negotiation between the -- sorry, what meetings you participated in at which negotiations occurred between the sellers and the buyers of these assets.

A. As I told you, I gave up to Badri to negotiate with the sellers and, as I told you, I met with Mr Bosov, who was one of the, let's say, owner of assets which we sold -- which, sorry, we bought. I recollect my meetings with Lev -- just a second -- with Mr -- with Lev Chernoi, who was -- who I knew well before and he was one of the owner of assets which they sold. I recollect my meetings with Mr Anisimov as well, as one of the sellers. And I don't remember well but I recollect the meeting with brothers, with Mr Reuben David, who present the Trans-World company who as well sold the assets.

Those people who I recollect I met and they were the main shareholders of the assets which they sold, and Badri as well participate in meetings with these people.

Q. Now, can I ask you this. You say you met, along with Badri, Mr Chernoi, Mr Anisimov and Mr Reuben. I would like you, please, to be more specific. When did these meetings occur and where?

A. These meeting took place in short time, in short time, and it was on the one hand in Badri office in -- but it was many meetings, in Badri office and in -- as far as Mr Anisimov is concerned, I think it was -- again, I think it was in my -- in Logovaz on the one hand; on the other hand in my house, country house in Alexandrovka, near the Moscow, as well.

Q. And what terms were agreed, do you say, at these meetings?

A. The terms was -- you now are interesting only in discussion that between me and Badri and not Abramovich? I mean in terms of selling, yes, not terms of our relations with Abramovich?

Q. Exactly.

A. Okay. As I understand, as I remember, first of all they present us the reason why they decide to sell and the reason why they decide to sell: because they were not sure about political stability in Russia and it's big-scale business. It's the reason why they -- for me it was a little bit surprising that they decide to sell because I have different vision: I think that political stability will be more than before. But they worry about that.

And we discuss about -- as I remember, again, we discuss about the price which they propose to us. The price was around $500 million, maybe a little bit more. Maybe 500, a little bit more. We discuss their -- as I told you, what company will be sold: it's four, as I remember, main companies. What else? And we discuss also that it should be done in proper western way, I mean the proper law should be put to obtain these assets, because already I had some experience and we discuss before with you, Mr Sumption, that I worry about to protect my assets and we even start to create a western structure with trust and so. I don't remember that we had any difference in our vision how it should be settled.

But again, I participate in several discussions but definitely there were many discussions about that because Badri knew much better these people and Badri met them much often than me.

Q. And these --

A. And it is the reason why I said you that my also recollection is that there were some meetings in Badri office in Itar-Tass, he had office there, but I don't recollect that --

Q. These were important discussions, were they?

A. Sorry?

Q. The ones that you participated on, they were important discussions?

A. Mr Sumption, I already told you, definitely it was important but not so important for me because for me much more important at that time was elections, campaign of elections -- election campaign. Because December '99 was just Parliament election campaign and then we're on the way of presidential election campaign and definitely I was mainly put my attention not to aluminium, obtaining aluminium assets, as much attention pay Mr Abramovich, Mr Shvidler and Mr Patarkatsishvili.

But I have been at several meetings because -- I think first of all because people who decide to sell, they want to understand clear that I am a buyer, that I will buy that. Because, again, the reason why they decide to sell for so low price -- my Lady, this is important. They decide to sell for very low price. In reality it was even funny business because we bought big stake and then sell -- merge with Deripaska and compensate at the same price. It means that we got -- as the business is concerned, we got for nothing, yes, the big stake aluminium. And the reason why it happened, only one reason: because they afraid of new development. They didn't understand what is happening in Russia and so. I'm sorry to say I also did not understand because I didn't understand that Putin changed his mind.

But they came to me because of one reason: because they recognised that it's dangerous, they want to sell, they want to have good relations, not on business, yes? It's the reason why they came to me, not to Abramovich, like he described. It's funny to say that they came to Abramovich; he was nobody at that time. And they came to me just because they afraid of political situation and they decide to sell.

I think mainly my just guess, yes, is that Mr Reuben, I mean David Reuben, he being western, absolutely, he already had a big headache with aluminium already for that time when he start business in Russia and I think he decide to stop that. I don't know really but maybe, my guess is.

On the other hand, definitely it was worry of Mr Lev Chernoi, who owned that. It was worry of Mr -- as I understand, Mr Anisimov as well and Mr Bosov, who decide also to sell. Later on it was funny because later on it's turned out that brother of Chernoi, Michael, become a partner with Deripaska in merge with us: one brother sell, the second brother become partner. I didn't understand the relations.

But I'm sorry for so long answer.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, would it be fair to say to you, as I do, that you were not involved in the detailed discussion leading up to the purchase of the aluminium assets?

A. Mr Sumption, I already answered your question. I was involved in details which I just describe you and this is absolutely correct answer. I didn't go in too much detail; I just knew several basic points.

The first point: which asset we are proposed to buy. That estimation of these assets is low, that could be because of, again, political risk which we were prepared to take and the other were not prepared to take. We discussed that it should be organised in proper western way. What was mean "proper western way"? Because already that time I had experience with trust, with, as you remember, a little -- almost that time I start to create some structure abroad. It means that for me it was absolutely clear that we should make it more professional, if it would like.

On the other hand I had still a lot of risks and it's the reason why I accept the idea of Abramovich to be not visible: because I had positive experience with Mr Abramovich in Sibneft before, on the same condition, not to be visible. I just want to transfer to make it more western-oriented.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, if you concentrate on my question and answer that question and not 25 others, we will actually get this --

A. I predict your questions.

Q. -- done earlier.

A. Okay.

Q. Now, would you look at paragraph 262 of your witness statement D2/17/251. What you say here is that:

"[You were] not involved in the detailed discussion leading up to the purchase of the aluminium assets."

A. Mm-hm.

Q. Now, that is quite inconsistent with the evidence that you've just been giving for the last ten minutes, isn't it?

A. No, absolutely wrong. I just tell you: I was not a lot in detailed discussion. If you think just to mention the company which will be part of the deal, it's detail. I am very surprising; you have a lot of experience in business relations as well, as I understand. And if I tell you that the price will be approximately $500 millions, it's also not detail: it's not 500-and-so. If I tell you that it will be organised in proper western way, it's also not detail. What means "proper western way"? It's the other story I'm sure we will discuss later.

It means that I'm absolutely correct with my answer.

Q. You do not mention in your witness statement these meetings with Mr Chernoi, Mr Anisimov and Mr Reuben, do you?

A. I don't remember what I mentioned, sorry. Not -- I remember, but just I remind my meetings with Chernoi, with Mr Reuben, with Mr Anisimov as well.

Q. Why haven't you mentioned any of that in your witness statement?

A. I can't recollect, did I mention that or not?

Q. No, you didn't.

A. Okay. Because -- it's again clear because, as I understand, you cross-examine me exactly the reason that to understand more details about what I present in my witness statement.

Q. Mr Anisimov, who did participate in these negotiations, says that you didn't attend any of these meetings and your name wasn't even mentioned.

- A. It's -- again, I can't comment what Mr Anisimov said. It's his understanding. My understanding is completely opposite. I have met Mr Anisimov, and moreover not one time. I explain even why it happened. So because, as I told you before, on the one hand it was proposal of Mr Bosov to me, yes? And on the other hand, when I told about that to Badri, Badri said that, "I have already this proposal from Mr Anisimov", first of all. It means that -- and Mr Anisimov insist that he has long-term good relations with Badri and he is involved in this business long time before and it's absolutely reasonable that Badri met Mr Anisimov and I as well met Mr Anisimov.

- Q. What I suggest to you, Mr Berezovsky, is that you had absolutely no part in the negotiations for the purchase of the original aluminium assets.
- A. It's completely wrong.
- Q. Now, you also tell us in your witness statement that you were not involved in deciding upon the structures by which these assets would be held. Is that correct?
- A. I was not involved in the structures except of I knew that the structure which will be organised the payment for that will be western structure and I knew that Badri, Mr Abramovich and Mr Shvidler on the one side -- definitely I didn't -- I recollect Mr Shvidler only later on, when I was preparing for the court. That time initial my reaction was I didn't remember Mr Shvidler. But Mr Shvidler was there because I was shown the paper.

And on the other hand the parties who sold acquisitions, like Mr -- as I told you, Mr David Reuben, Mr Anisimov and others, they signed a document which give -- which fix the result of negotiations between seller and buyers.

Q. Would you please be given bundle H(A)18/150, which is the Russian version of a document whose English equivalent is H(A)16/111. Sorry, I've given you a false reference, forgive me. We may as well deal with this now that you have it open.

A. Sorry?

Q. Have you seen this document before?

A. Which one?

Q. The one that, if you're looking at the Russian version, is at H(A)18/150.

A. Just -- could you let me have a look.

Q. It's headed "Protocol".

A. Yes, yes. (Pause)

I don't remember that I have seen this paper before. Just a second. Can I read that?

- Q. Well, it will take you a long time to read the whole thing.
- A. In Russian I will read much quicker than in English.
- (Pause).
- I never have seen, I think, this paper. I have seen another one also with proposal that Badri is just intermedium, just middleman.
- Q. Yes.
- A. But this one I think I haven't seen before.
- Q. Well, there are four of them and you've seen therefore at least one of those; is that right?
- A. I have seen one of them which you demonstrate yesterday, when we discuss about Aeroflot, as I remember. That one I have seen. It's absolutely correct.
- Q. No, this is nothing to do with Aeroflot and that was a different document.
- A. No, no, there is -- at first page it's also written that Badri is middleman at the document which you present me yesterday. I may prove that.
- Q. What I'm asking you about is this document. This document is an agreement between Mr Patarkatsishvili and in this particular case Galinton, which was one of the four companies which was going to hold the newly acquired aluminium assets.
- A. Okay, again, I don't know anything and did not know anything about this type of documents before the preparation to the court.

- Q. This is a document which is signed by Mr Patarkatsishvili as intermediary and records that what he was going to get out of this was a commission; do you agree?
- A. I -- first of all, as I told you, the first time I see this paper. The second time, I absolutely disagree that Badri was middleman. Moreover, all events which happen later will just simply prove that it's not so. And moreover, I don't know any paper that Badri was paid as a middleman. I don't know any evidence, because definitely I try to understand for my better -- for myself better why it's happened so, why Badri took this position. So -- and I just tell you I didn't have any confirmation and, as I know, your side didn't present any confirmation that ever Badri was paid as a middleman.
- Q. Were you aware that Mr Patarkatsishvili went to the trouble of having these four protocols, one with each of the acquiring companies, recorded as evidence by a Moscow notary in March 2000?
- A. Mr Sumption, I make just guess why it's happened, why Badri have done that. I think that one of the reasons that Badri all the time was looking for opportunity how we will be paid because of Roman Abramovich obligations and unfortunately, unfortunately, Badri was looking not to direct way, I don't know now clear why, because maybe Abramovich again trick him that time, I don't know.

I know just absolutely clear that there is no one evidence that Badri was paid as a middleman. And we, as I understand, we ask you to present this paper; you never present these papers.

- Q. Do you have any explanation of why Mr Patarkatsishvili should have entered into a commission agreement in relation to the acquisition of these assets if he was in fact buying them for your and his own account?
- A. I just try to give you explanation and I again -- again, it's my speculation, yes, but speculation which could be logical: that Badri was looking the way how he will be paid by Abramovich because all the time Abramovich insist that we shouldn't be visible.

On the other hand, Mr Sumption, what is I think really important that when we finally decide to sell Rusal, why not to use this simple base which already, my Lady, created? Why to organise in the way how it finally was organised, through fixing that Badri was shareholder and then to sell the next day, if we have this paper and Badri is just middleman? Why not to pay him through this agreement? Why it was not ever happened?

Q. He was actually paid a considerably larger sum rather later, wasn't he?

A. On absolutely different basis: on a real basis that he is shareholder. And this is correct, and this is not correct.

Q. Well, we shall come to that.

A. Yes.

Q. Could you please be given bundle H(A)17.

A. Fine. This finished?

Q. Yes. You've got H(A)16, have you?

A. Sorry?

Q. Which bundle are you asking me about?

A. No, you're asking me. I'm asking 18.

Q. Right, you can put away 18.

Now, I would like you to look, please, at H(A)17/33.

A. Could I have it in Russian, please?

Q. I'm not sure that it is in Russian. I think it was --

A. It means that they just follow already western standard.

Q. I think this was drawn up in English, but let me check that.

MR RABINOWITZ: Page 38.

MR SUMPTION: Page 38 I'm told. Quite right. I'm grateful to my friend. H(A)17/38 is the Russian text.

A. Yes, thank you.

Q. And the Russian text is the signed version.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, this is one of a number of agreements which were dated 10 February although actually executed on the 15th.

A. Executed -- sorry, sorry, sorry. (Pause)

I don't know anything when they signed that; I just follow this document which also was presented, yes.

Q. When did you first see this document, Mr Berezovsky?

A. I -- the first time I have seen this document only when it was signed already and I even did not recollect that I have seen that in Moscow. I think that I have seen that the first time -- I just knew about this document, I knew about this document well, but I didn't recollect that I have seen him in Moscow. That's it.

Q. Now, there were also, bearing the same date and also in fact executed on the 15th, ten individual purchase agreements, one for each of the assets being acquired. Could you keep that open and look at H(A)16/136 for an example of one of those.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, when did you first see that document or a document like it?

A. The first I see this document I think now. I think now.

Q. Sorry, are you saying you have just seen it for the first time now?

A. Yes, I think now.

Q. I see. Okay.

Now, can I take it therefore, if you've only just seen this document now, that you were not involved in the negotiation of its terms?

A. It's absolutely wrong. One is not the implication of the other.

Q. Do you claim that you were involved in the negotiation of the terms of the 11 agreements dated 10 February and executed on 15 February?

A. I don't remember that. I think no.

Q. Now, those were the negotiations which actually concluded the deal to acquire the original aluminium assets, weren't they?

A. If it's this document, it's yes. But I was not involved, as I told you, as I recollect.

Q. Now, you say that you and Mr Patarkatsishvili agreed --

A. Can I take it away or keep still?

Q. Yes, you can. You can put both of the H(A) bundles away. I'm now referring to paragraph 260 of your witness statement D2/17/251.

Now, you say in this paragraph --

A. Just a second, please.

- Q. -- that you and Mr Patarkatsishvili agreed that your share of the cost of acquiring these original aluminium assets would be paid out of Sibneft profits.
- A. This is correct.
- Q. Right. So was the result of that that you did not have to put your hand in your pocket for a single cent?
- A. Sorry, again?
- Q. You didn't have to pay cash at all for this acquisition?
- A. Yes, because Sibneft is my company and it means that Sibneft is paying my dividends and we agreed with Mr Abramovich -- between Mr Abramovich, Badri and me that Sibneft, my money, my personal money, as my dividends or my profit, will be paid for aluminium.
- Q. Sibneft only declared a dividend later in this year of $50 million. Are you saying you were getting a dividend that the other shareholders were not?
- A. Mr Sumption, I was very correct. I don't recollect when they paid dividends, when they paid profit, as I said, dividends or profit. I was very precise.
- Q. Well --
- A. I already learn your style.
- Q. -- if you were very precise, no doubt you will be able to answer this question. When these agreements were made, in fact by others, and when you made the agreement that you refer to at paragraph 260, how much were the acquisitions expected to cost?

- A. As I told you, what I understood that all to all it should be more than 500 but less than 600 -- I don't recollect exact number -- and it will be covered -- it will be paid through my, Badri and Abramovich interest in Sibneft.
- Q. Can you really not remember, Mr Berezovsky, how much you were paying for these aluminium assets?
- A. I really don't remember, Mr Sumption.
- Q. And can you tell us precisely what your share of Sibneft profits amounted to in money terms at the time you say you made this agreement?
- A. Again, sorry? Could you help me? (Consults interpreter)
- In money sense, no. In the sense of my interest which was holding by Abramovich, I remember well it's nothing changed from the very beginning.
- Q. When you made this agreement that you referred to in paragraph 260 did you know how much was due to you in respect of Sibneft profits?
- A. Definitely I understood well that I should -- that my share in -- my participation in aluminium should coincide with our agreement of '95, '96. It means that 25 per cent of my income -- of my interest, of my interest, should be the same proportion paid through my profit.

Q. Did you know how many dollars that was?

A. I don't know.

Q. Did you know at the time you made this agreement how many dollars it was?

A. If to divide this 500 somehow more to four, it will be exact number.

Q. I'm not asking you about your proportion of the price; I'm asking you about your proportion of Sibneft profits. When you made this agreement, did you know how much money was due to you in respect of Sibneft profits?

A. I did not.

Q. So was the agreement that you're referring to at paragraph 260 that your share of the cost of acquiring the aluminium assets would be paid out of Sibneft profits, whatever the Sibneft profits turned out to be?

A. It's the reason why Mr Abramovich, I think, took a decision to participate in Sibneft -- in the aluminium, I'm sorry, and it's the reason why he took time to calculate: are we able to buy these assets or not? Because he was responsible, as I told you, for payment of Sibneft because he took responsibility in front of me and in front of Badri according of agreement '95 and '96. It means that it's absolutely natural that Abramovich took time because he should calculate how much it could be, how much we can accumulate money to buy these assets.

- Q. The total price payable for the original aluminium assets was $581 million, was it not?
- A. I said you that what my knowledge was, it's more than 500, my -- not knowledge, my recollection, yes? I don't remember 581; I remember better number 575. This I remember better.
- Q. Well, $575 million was the price to which the figure was reduced when the two contracts relating to the Achinsk assets, which amounted to $6 million, were dropped.
- A. I don't know anything about that.
- Q. No, you don't. Right. Okay. Well, let's proceed on the basis that after that happened the price was $575 million.

Now, two days after the master agreement and the ten specific agreements were executed, that's to say on 17 February, a protocol was drawn up. I'd like you to look at that: it's at bundle H(A)18/37T. There's an English and a Russian version.

Now, were you aware that there was a timetable in the ten individual agreements governing the time at which the payments were supposed to be made?

- A. No, I didn't know that. At least I don't remember that but I think I even was not informed about that.

- Q. If you look, you'll find the Russian version, I think, at -- I think it starts -- I'm looking at H(A)18/37T and I think the Russian version may be after that. Yes, it is, it's after a pink sheet.
- A. No, I have already Russian version, I don't have English version.
- Q. Right. If you have the Russian version, that's fine.
- A. I have just Russian. Where is it in English?
- Q. If you want the English version, it's about six or eight pages earlier at 37T. Look at whichever one you prefer.
- A. Earlier? It's 32, 18/32?
- Q. No, 18/37T but it's actually, rather confusingly, about six or eight pages earlier.
- A. We can't find it. Just a second. No, we can't find it.
- MR RABINOWITZ: It's not in my version either.
- MR SUMPTION: The English version or the Russian one?
- MR RABINOWITZ: The English version.
- MR SUMPTION: It's on the screen and it should be in my learned friend's bundle; it's certainly in all of ours.
- THE WITNESS: Okay, let's see the screen, it's fine.
- MR SUMPTION: Do you want to look at the English version or Russian version, Mr Berezovsky?
- A. It doesn't matter, I have both now.
- Q. Okay, right?
- A. Thank you.

- Q. Now, what you are looking at is a protocol prepared in Moscow dated 17 February 2000 --
- A. Yes.
- Q. -- which summarises the payment schedule and the dates have been taken from the ten individual asset agreements that we were discussing a moment ago.
- Now, the first question I want to ask you is: have you seen this document before?
- A. I think no.
- Q. Right. Well, do I take it therefore that you were not involved in the preparation of it?
- A. Mr Sumption, I made absolutely clear statement: I participate in the principal points of that. Mr Sumption, I'm sorry to say again, 7 March is presidential election. Do you think it's really important point for me that time? I don't think so. And he accept completely.
- Q. I don't mind what your reason was, Mr Berezovsky; I just want to know whether you were involved in the negotiation of this.
- A. I was involved -- I was involved and I present you my involvement in that. Nothing more, nothing less.
- Q. Now, if you look at this, you will see that $175 million was payable under the agreements that had been reached within a week of the date of this document, by 24 February 2000. Do you see that? There are two payments --

A. Just a second, Mr Sumption. Where is that?

Q. Do you see paragraph 3.1?

A. Yes.

Q. Party 1 -- and that's Mr Abramovich, Mr Shvidler and Mr Patarkatsishvili and companies represented by them -- are going to pay two sums of $150 million and $25 million by 24 February, which was about a week ahead.

A. It's 3.1, "Party 1" -- yes, okay.

Q. Right.

A. And Badri is member of party 1: that he is paying but he has just commissions. Fine.

Q. Now, $300 million was then payable at various dates over the rest of the year 2000 -- you can take the maths from me -- and $275 million was then payable on 10 June 2001, over the page.

A. Yes.

Q. So that makes up the total of $575 million. You've got $300 million over the year 2000, including the sums payable in February --

A. Yes.

Q. -- plus $275 million payable on 10 June 2001.

A. Yes, thank you, Mr Sumption, but I'm sorry because you a little bit press me in timing. I just want to understand. Is it correct I understand that Badri is also the party who paid money in this document?

Q. No, because Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Shvidler were not entering into this document in a personal capacity.

A. No, no, it's written, it's written. Roman --

Q. I'm not going to argue with you about this.

A. Sorry, sorry.

Q. You are paying good money to Mr Rabinowitz to argue your case for you and I will debate that as a matter of law in due course.

A. Thank you very much. Mr Rabinowitz I think happier.

Q. Now, this document shows the timetable for the payment of a total of $575 million and your and Mr Patarkatsishvili's 50 per cent share of that, if you're right, came therefore to $150 million in the year 2000 and another $137 million in June 2001. Do you agree?

A. Mr Sumption, I told you, I have not seen this document before. It's true. I am not able to comment; I just follow your way of thinking, logical or not. Just what I pick up from that, that Badri person who pay for that. This is fine for me. But how much and so, I don't understand because I need to investigate that. I have seen the -- now I watch this document the first time.

Q. Just take it from me that the effect of this, if you are right in saying that you and Mr Patarkatsishvili were 50 per cent participants in this acquisition, then the position is that you were undertaking to produce out of your Sibneft profits $150 million in the year 2000 and another $137.5 million in June 2001. That's what it says.

A. Again, everything what's connected to my financial activity was managed by Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Abramovich. As only Abramovich took a decision to participate in this project, I understand that he calculate well and I think not only he won -- and I think that they talk with Mr Patarkatsishvili at that time. I was involved only on the level which I described to you; that's it. Nothing more.

Q. Now, we have seen --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Sumption, let me interrupt for a moment. Can you, Mr Sumption, explain to me the point that you made a moment ago at [draft] line 24 on page 38 where you said:

"... because Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Shvidler were not entering into this document in a personal capacity."

Where do I get that from this document?

MR SUMPTION: Your Ladyship does not. But the position is -- it's best illustrated by reference to the position of Mr Shvidler. Mr Shvidler --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Is this common ground?

MR SUMPTION: No, it's not. No, this is a point which is made and it's largely a point of construction; indeed, as my learned friend puts it, it's entirely a point of construction.

But the position was that the actual signatories of this were listed at the beginning -- this was, so to speak, a home-made document -- and Mr Shvidler, if we can take him as the paradigm case, was not -- and nobody has, I think, suggested that he was -- a person who had any interest in the aluminium assets. So that a number of persons who were not intended to have any interest in the aluminium assets signed this.

Our case is that Mr Shvidler was one of those, who had no share of the property being acquired; another was Mr Patarkatsishvili, who, like Mr Shvidler, was involved in the negotiation of this document and in its execution but was not intended to be a beneficiary of any proprietary interest.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I see, thank you.

Yes, Mr Rabinowitz, obviously you're in dispute about that.

MR RABINOWITZ: Indeed.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Does your dispute extend to Mr Shvidler as well as to the status of
Mr Patarkatsishvili?

MR RABINOWITZ: Well, my Lady, I would rather leave that to explore in evidence with Mr Shvidler.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right, okay.

MR SUMPTION: Now, we have seen a couple of days ago,
Mr Berezovsky, that in the year 2000 you received payments from Mr Abramovich's companies to you or to your order, you and Badri between you, amounting to $490 million.

A. I don't recollect that.

Q. Well, you may remember being taken through a Excel spreadsheet on the screen. It's not on the screen now and I'm not going to take you to it over again. Two days ago I was cross-examining you about the amounts that you had received in 2000 from Mr Abramovich's companies and I took you to a computerised spreadsheet.

A. Yes.

Q. I'm told it was Monday. Time flies.

I took you to a computerised spreadsheet and that showed $461 million being paid in that year to you --

A. Yes.

Q. -- and $28 million, in round figures, to Mr Patarkatsishvili.

A. Yes.

Q. It looks as if, therefore, $490 million was paid to you and Badri between the two of you in 2000 from Mr Abramovich's companies.

A. It's according of Abramovich company information.

Q. Yes.

A. Good.

Q. Now, it's your case, as I understand it, that your total entitlement to Sibneft profits was even greater than that figure because you have to add to the $490 million your half-share of a sum of some $300 million that was payable in 2000 under these agreements. Is that right?

A. Mr Sumption, I already gave many times the answer; I will give the same my Lady also. Maybe it's unusual to think that I didn't calculate my money; Badri and Roman Abramovich calculated my money. I didn't know how much they put in my favour and then paid from my name because I did not operate with them. I was not involved in accounting at all.

I just knew that Abramovich is delivering his obligations because of Badri, Badri report me and Mr Abramovich report me as well, and you remember well that I really trust him. Even in Le Bourget Abramovich refer that, "Boris trusting me". That's it. This is the point. I never calculate my money, sorry to say that.

- Q. If you are right that your share of the cost of acquiring the aluminium assets was going to be paid out of Sibneft profits --
- A. It's what Abramovich said.
- Q. -- you must have been receiving, together with Badri, a total amount in respect of Sibneft profits which was almost as large as the entire Sibneft profits for the year 2000. Are you aware of that?
- A. I don't know anything, I don't know anything about that, Mr Sumption, anything at all. I just know that Abramovich accept that we should buy this project and it means that Abramovich calculate how much money we have together with Badri, as I understand. That's it. This all my knowledge, nothing more.
- Q. And so can I take it that you are unaware of when the price of the aluminium assets was in fact paid?
- A. I just -- as I told you, I recollect the number, 500, 600, and then I remember the 575. Why? Because I think the same price we got from Deripaska when we merge. It means that, my Lady, what I told you before: that the deal was from business point of view amazing because we pay and got back quick the same money and we got a big stake in aluminium business. That's it.

This my understanding and this my recollection is:

that it was good from the business point of view but we took political risk that time and it was payment that we took political risk and the other were not able to take this political risk as well. It's happened with Sibneft as well like that.

- Q. At the time when the agreements were made for the acquisition of the aluminium assets, the merger hadn't even been proposed, had it?
- A. You are correct. I don't -- sorry, sorry, sorry. The merger -- yes, definitely, because in the first stage Abramovich insist, I would like to say, insist to manage again the company and Badri was against of that and that, for me, was surprising that in very short time Abramovich came with the idea that we should merge with Deripaska.
- Q. You see, Mr Berezovsky, I suggest that there was never any agreement that you would participate in these acquisitions; you never had anything to do with it and that's why you are unable to give any information about it.
- A. Mr Sumption, you create your logic, I create my logic, and only my Lady estimate who is correct on that.
I can't answer -- I can't add more at this stage.
- MR SUMPTION: My Lady, I'm going to turn to the merger. It may be a suitable time to break.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well. Ten minutes.

(11.37 am)

(A short break)

(11.48 am)

MR SUMPTION: Mr Berezovsky, could you please be given

H(A)18/198. I think it's the bundle that you already have open. If so, perhaps you would turn to page 198.

A. Sorry, again the page?

Q. H(A)18/198. This is another extract from the published collection of your speeches and interviews.

A. Yes.

Q. And it's an interview with Vedomosti on 26 March 2000 --

A. Yes.

Q. -- about six weeks after the events we've just been discussing.

A. Yes.

Q. At the bottom of the first page, the correspondent asks you:

"... do you approve of the LogoVAZ decision to expand into the aluminium industry?"

Do you see that?

A. Just a second.

Q. Last bit on the page.

A. Yes. Yes.

Q. Your answer is:

"Believe it or not -- I was out of Russia at the time; I got a call from Badri Patarkatsishvili, who also manages my interests, and he said that a certain deal had just taken place. He informed me of the deal and asked if I approved. I said: 'Will this make money?' He said: 'This will make money.' [You] said: 'Then I approve.'"

Now, I'm just wondering whether you can help us on how we reconcile that statement with your suggestion that you were involved in the negotiation of these agreements.

- A. Exactly as I discussed -- as I explained before, it's my -- again, my interview to Vedomosti, it means that I'm very careful because we agreed that I will distance and why I should make the comment which I make in here to Vedomosti newspaper if we agreed that I will try to distance, as has happened in Sibneft as well?
- Q. I understood your evidence to be that when you agreed to distance yourself from it, that was to be achieved by having your holding held in the name of Mr Abramovich's companies. Are you now saying that you weren't even allowed to admit having participated in the negotiations?
- A. Mr Sumption, I already gave answer about my participation in negotiation and I was very precise with that, that I didn't negotiate details. I initiate this business, me personally -- I was proposed, not anybody more -- to start with this business and my involvement limited the subjects which we discuss before the break; nothing new.

Q. Was the answer that you gave in this interview which I've just referred you to, was that answer true or untrue?

A. You know, it's hypocritical answer and that's it.

Q. Thank you.

Now, let's turn to the merger of the aluminium interests whose acquisition we've been discussing with those of Mr Deripaska. Now, leaving aside --

A. Could I leave that or...?

Q. You can shut that volume, yes.

A. Thank you.

Q. Leaving aside for the moment the Dorchester Hotel meeting, which I'm going to come to, you did not, did you, take part in these negotiations?

A. In which one?

Q. The negotiations for the merger of the aluminium interests with those of Mr Deripaska.

A. Definitely I was involved.

Q. You were definitely involved? Very well. Can you please tell us which meetings you participated in between the Deripaska representatives and the recent acquirers of the aluminium assets?

A. I did not present in Deripaska before -- we discuss everything before Dorchester Hotel; correct? We discuss now -- I want just be clear, not to discuss what you don't like to discuss -- we discuss now that we already bought aluminium assets and that when Abramovich came the first time saying that he think that it will be good deal to merge with Deripaska and until the Dorchester Hotel; correct? We are discussing this period of time?

Q. Well, I'm just listening to your evidence.

A. If it's so, if it's so, I was very surprised when very shortly after we, let's say, bought the assets -- and again I try to be very correctly: I don't know the terms of payment for buying these assets -- but very shortly after that, Mr Abramovich came to me and Badri, as I recollect, and said that it will be very good deal if we make a merge with Mr Deripaska. I was a little bit -- not a little bit, I don't remember -- I was surprised because of several reasons.

Because the first one: because Abramovich insist, I would like to stress, insist that he will manage our aluminium business and it's a little bit strange that so quick he decide not to manage, referring that Deripaska has big experience in aluminium business and it's the reason why it will be good for us to make this merge.

The second what surprised me was that Deripaska own the assets which were approximately half what we bought but nevertheless Abramovich propose to participate -- to participation Deripaska in the same proportions, in the equal proportions: it means that Deripaska should own 50 and we should own 50. And I did not even at the beginning understood how it could be, but Abramovich explained that Deripaska will cover the difference in cash for that. Definitely it's logical, it could be covered; the problem -- the point is how much.

And, as I already mentioned, the funny thing was that Deripaska will pay the same what we paid for the -- to buy assets. It means that we will get 50 per cent of the business in aluminium for zero and we'll share in the same proportions with Abramovich and Badri and so, like we discussed before.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, would you like to listen carefully to my question.

A. Yes.

Q. I am asking you about the negotiations for the merger agreement between the two sides.

A. Yes.

Q. There was a negotiation for this merger between the Deripaska camp and what I will loosely call the Abramovich camp. It doesn't matter what we call it.

A. I don't know what means "Abramovich camp" but we accept your definitions.

Q. Listen, I don't want to get involved in that argument, Mr Berezovsky.

There was a negotiation between the Deripaska camp and the people who had just acquired the aluminium assets in February. All right?

A. I never participate in negotiations with Deripaska --

Q. Right.

A. -- before meeting in Dorchester Hotel about merger.

Q. I see.

A. It's -- everything was under Abramovich response and I explain you again why: because we agreed with Mr Abramovich after we bought the aluminium assets that Abramovich now is responsible for everything except of the principal points is concerned. And definitely merge with Deripaska was a principal point, definitely, and Abramovich need to get our confirmation that we accept that. And finally we accept that and, as I understand, as I understand, Badri participate in this negotiation. I don't remember well, I'm sorry to say that.

But me, as far as me is concerned, definitely I did not participate in any negotiations with Deripaska or Deripaska camp, as you said, before meeting in Dorchester Hotel. It's correct.

- Q. Right. Now, what do you know about Mr Patarkatsishvili's participation in the negotiations for the merger?
- A. As I understand, as I understand, Patarkatsishvili participate in some negotiations; I don't recollect which one, what he said me, but my understanding is that he participate in that. But, again, as I told you before, Abramovich was responsible for everything what is concerning of merge is concerned, except of we discuss how will construct our relations, our relations.
- Q. You see, Mr Patarkatsishvili did not participate in the negotiations for the merger any more than you did, did he?
- A. I don't remember that. I don't recollect that. My impression is -- again, my impression is that Patarkatsishvili participate in negotiation but I don't recollect that.
- Q. Were you aware that there were negotiations for this merger agreement which took place at the Kempinski Hotel and at Mr Abramovich's house at Sareevo? Were you aware of that?
- A. At Abramovich -- no, I don't know. I don't recollect that?
- Q. Were you aware that agreement in principle was reached in those places?

- A. With -- you mean between our group and Deripaska of merge?
- Q. Between the people who had just acquired the aluminium assets and Deripaska's group.
- A. I don't -- I don't remember that.
- Q. Right. Mr Patarkatsishvili did not participate in either of those meetings.
- A. Again, I don't recollect that. I just know perfectly that Abramovich inform us and we start to discuss how it could be, let's say, it could be organised. And that I remember. But the details, did Badri really participate or not, I don't recollect that.
- Q. Did you have any discussions with Mr Abramovich about the merger before the Dorchester Hotel meeting?
- A. Definitely.
- Q. Tell us when you had those discussions.
- A. I think we have these discussions -- I'm sorry -- maybe a week, maybe a little bit more, before meeting in Dorchester. Meeting in Dorchester we had 13 -- 14/13 March. I think week or a little bit more before, ten days maybe, before meeting in Dorchester Hotel.
- Q. And who else was present apart from you and Mr Abramovich, according to you?
- A. Badri present at this meeting, I think three of us.

Three of us present at this meeting and it was preparation for the merge in general terms again, in general terms. As I remember, we confirm all our obligations according of agreement '95, '96. We discuss about the law which will be implement in our general relations. I mean, what does mean "general"? In all concern, general, all relations.

We discuss about how will Abramovich will present our interests on the one hand. We discuss how will be -- will merge happen; I mean, again, under which way of law. And we also discuss that no one of -- because Deripaska, I never had business before with Deripaska except of this credit for $13 million and definitely I didn't knew -- I knew him from the middle of '95 but -- and also what is important, I also know that he and Mr Fridman also were looking to buy the same assets which we bought from the other group, from the Chernoi and... that I know. I know that he was involved deeply really in aluminium business and even was looking to buy the same assets, yes.

And we also discuss about that no one party able to leave business without acception of other party. I mean, as far as Abramovich, Badri and me is concerned, about as far as this 50 per cent which we obtained together and agreement, we confirm agreement between us of '95, '96; on the other hand, we required the same from Deripaska, that Deripaska would not be able to leave business without our confirmation.

Again, it's absolutely general terms what we were discussing before meeting in Dorchester Hotel.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, there were no discussions between you and Mr Abramovich on the subject of the merger before the Dorchester Hotel meeting, were there?

A. Mr Sumption, you put me the question; I gave you answer. That's it.

Q. Would you please look at bundle H(A)16/47. There's a Russian version of this and an English version at H(A)16/47T.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, the Russian version is the one with the signatures.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, this is the signed but undated preliminary agreement which recorded the terms of the merger in principle.

A. Yes.

Q. When did you first see this document?

A. I don't remember -- just a second. I'm not sure that I have seen even this document. Just a second. (Pause)

When it's signed?

Q. Let me ask you my question first. Have you seen this document before?

A. I don't recollect that I watch this document before.

Q. Do you know anything about the circumstances in which it was prepared?

A. No. I know that before meeting in Dorchester Hotel it was prepared already preliminary document for the deal and, as I know also, that it was -- at the meeting in Dorchester Hotel we just -- it was meeting of principals and we just need to confirm the result of -- the result of negotiation Mr Abramovich and Mr Deripaska. This is my recollection.

Q. We're going to come to the Dorchester agreement.

A. Yes.

Q. Do you know anything about the circumstances in which this document was negotiated?

A. Again, I know that it was preliminary document which was discussed and even was discussed -- just a second -- and even was discussed in which terms, in which law terms. It's agreed with Deripaska between Mr Abramovich -- yes, between Mr Abramovich and Mr Deripaska, and that everything what we discuss with Mr Abramovich is already prepared for confirmation of principals, including, as I told you, that everything should be done in western way. Even more: in precise British, as I told that time, British law way. That's it. And we also discuss our relations with Abramovich before meeting in Dorchester Hotel, that our relations also should be constructed in precise British law way.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, I'm going to ask the same question again until you answer it. Do you understand?

A. Yes.

Q. What do you know about the circumstances in which this document was negotiated?

A. What does mean "circumstances"? (Consults interpreter)

I know that this document was negotiated by Mr Abramovich and Mr Deripaska and I know -- according of our agreement with Mr Abramovich, and I know that this document was prepared before meeting in Dorchester.

Q. Right. And that's all you know; is that right?

A. No, I know as well that this document should reflect agreements which we agree -- which we accept together with Abramovich, which I mentioned before.

Q. Now, did you have any part at all in negotiating the terms of this document?

A. I didn't have any part at all except of Abramovich, as I told you. I negotiate just with Abramovich; I didn't negotiated that with Deripaska.

Q. Now, were you aware at the time of the arrangements which were made at the time when this agreement was drawn up for finalising its terms?

- A. As I told you, we agreed to meet in Dorchester Hotel -- no, in -- sorry, not in Dorchester definitely -- in London. We agreed to meet, as I told you, one week or ten days before meeting in Dorchester Hotel.
- Q. And were you aware at the time that a working party was set up to negotiate the final terms of the agreement?
- A. No, I just -- as I told you, Badri and Roman mainly were discussing but we had meeting three of us together, I mean Badri, Abramovich and me, and we agreed about the basic terms of agreement which will be done with Mr Deripaska. And I mentioned you which points we discuss during our meeting, three of us, Abramovich, Badri and me.
- Q. There was a working party which was responsible for preparing the final terms of agreement. Do you know that? Are you aware of that?
- A. No, I understand -- no, I didn't know anything about working party; I understood just well that there are people who on the next level are preparing the merge agreement. It's absolutely clear that it's not Badri or Roman himself. There are people who professional to do that.
- Q. Neither you nor Mr Patarkatsishvili had any involvement in the work of that working party, did you?
- A. As far as me is concerned, definitely not.

- Q. Now, the Dorchester Hotel meeting appears to have occurred on the afternoon of March 13, 2000. Do you agree?
- A. It's my recollection, yes. You are correct.
- Q. The evidence of every other witness in a position to give evidence who was present is that you turned up an hour after the meeting had begun. Do you remember that?
- A. My recollection is that I came later than others. Unfortunately I really very often was later than others and it's the reason why people were waiting for me.
- Q. You think they were waiting for you, do you?
- A. No, no doubts they're waiting for me because everybody understood that I am a key person, not anybody more.
- Q. In paragraph 274 of your witness statement --
- A. Can I close this one?
- Q. Yes. In paragraph 274 of your witness statement D2/17/255 you say that:
- "A meeting was arranged...
- This is the Dorchester Hotel meeting.
- A. Yes.
- Q. "... to finalise the agreement for the merger at the Dorchester Hotel in London."
- A. Yes.
- Q. A little further down, in the same paragraph, you say:

"This was a meeting of principals, the purpose of which, as noted above, was to finalise the key details of the deal to be made."

A. Correct.

Q. What were the key details of the agreement to be made which needed to be finalised at this meeting?

A. The key details, the key -- first of all, the main point, it was a first and, as I remember, the last meeting of principals and the key point were that first of all the proportions of merge --

Q. The proportions of...?

A. Of merge. Deripaska 50 per cent, Abramovich 25 per cent, Berezovsky/Badri 12.5 per cent, and that no one party able to -- by own to leave their -- to sell their interest anybody. This 50 per cent is one unit which presented -- which will be presented by Abramovich, he will present our group. Deripaska will present the other group, he also had some people who participate in that, and it's exactly why I was a little bit surprised, as I told you, about Chernoi position and so. Then we discuss about law.

And moreover, what does mean we discuss? Badri lead the negotiation, not Abramovich, not me, and I think this is the basic principles what we discuss. And we discuss and Badri announce what is the result of our internal negotiations. We inform Mr Deripaska that our interests will be presented by Mr Abramovich. As I remember, Shvidler also present at this meeting, as I remember. Shvidler also present at this meeting. That our interests will be presented by Abramovich and Deripaska and his group interests will be presented by Deripaska himself.

That the agreement will be signed in -- by English law; and the same way as we understand, and as maybe Badri agreed, that agreement between parties, between Deripaska on the one hand and our party on the other hand, will be signed also in terms of English law. And also -- again, I think that's almost everything what we were discussing.

And as well we discuss about, as I remember, about the price. I don't remember we mentioned or not, but we discussed about the price that it should be paid Deripaska because of difference of the balance. I think that almost... And also we discuss, as correctly you remind me, about my debt to Deripaska, $13 million, what I was really surprised because I didn't even know that time that it was not covered because several times I discuss that with Badri and --

- Q. I'm only asking you about the terms of the merger, Mr Berezovsky, the key terms that remained to be agreed.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, you have seen and may still have open the preliminary agreement which you were not involved in, as you told us.

A. I was not involved in the writing, definitely. It's correct.

Q. And I think you told us that you had not at the time seen this agreement; is that right?

A. I don't remember that I seen this agreement, you are correct.

Q. And you hadn't seen it at the time of the Dorchester Hotel meeting either, had you?

A. I think I did not -- again, I can't recollect. I don't remember that I have seen this document, you are correct.

Q. You see, you've mentioned four key details which you said remained to be finalised at the Dorchester Hotel meeting --

A. Yes.

Q. -- the proportions, the law, the management arrangements and the price.

A. And I mentioned also, as I told you before, that no one can leave the company without acceptance of others. It means it's connected to our agreement with Abramovich on the one hand, internally, like it was in Sibneft as well, and on the other hand it's now spread to obligation of Mr Deripaska also not to leave the company without confirmation -- without, let's say, acceptance of other side.

Q. Well, you didn't actually mention that in the context of the Dorchester Hotel meeting; that was your evidence about a previous meeting with Mr Abramovich.

A. No, just a second, Mr Sumption. You ask me -- I am not able to recollect everything, yes? Definitely. It's long time ago. But I recollect what was agreed and Deripaska was absolutely perfectly knew and we -- no, no, we discussed that, Deripaska absolutely perfectly knew that we agreed not to leave any side without agreement with the others. It's absolutely natural. Deripaska, for me, was absolutely new in business, as I told you, and it's the reason definitely we discussed that.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, the proportions, the governing law, the management arrangement and the price had all been agreed already and been recorded in the preliminary agreement, had they not?

A. As I told you, I haven't seen the preliminary agreement. I knew that preliminary agreement is done in -- according of English law. I am sorry, my Lady, at that time we did not use the correct -- was sometimes "English", sometimes "British", and even I read recently the reply of people who follow English people, they also refer to British law often.

But I already explain you what we agreed between three of us, I just want to stress you, between Badri, Roman and me, as far as law is concerned, and I knew that the merge agreement was done according of British law -- sorry, according of English law.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, the preliminary agreement was made at the beginning of March 2000: about ten days or a bit more before the Dorchester meeting.

A. Yes.

Q. You, as you have confirmed, had nothing to do with it. The point I am putting to you is very simple: these key details that you say remained to be finalised at the Dorchester Hotel meeting --

A. Yes.

Q. -- had in fact all been sorted out ten days earlier, in your absence, in the preliminary agreement, hadn't they?

A. As I told you before, Mr Sumption, I pay attention just to basic point and we agreed about this point with Abramovich, because that time I was a little bit more educated what we should discuss preliminary and I told you that we discussed with Abramovich that our relation should be done in -- as a trust, that already I learn, and follow the -- and according of British law as well.

And this is my recollection.

- Q. What do you say was agreed about the management arrangements, for example?
- A. That -- you mean in merge?
- Q. Yes, at the Dorchester Hotel.
- A. That Deripaska will take power to manage, to manage the company; that Abramovich will present our group in this merge; and then that Abramovich will communicate directly to Deripaska and he will present to attention to Deripaska the problems which could arise or Deripaska will present the problem which could arise through Mr Abramovich to us. It was form -- it was not formally; it was just agreed between us that now it's responsibility of Mr Abramovich to care about our 50 per cent, yes? Our part.
- Q. What was actually agreed, and it's recorded in clause 7 of the preliminary agreement, was that the management would be carried out by a board on which each side had equal representation. Do you agree with that?
- A. Mr Sumption, you ask my recollection; I gave you my recollection. My recollection is absolutely clear. I don't recollect about the board, I'm sorry to say that. I don't recollect that.

I just recollect principal points: that Deripaska will manage the company, how it will be organised, the board proportion 50/50 or Deripaska -- I understood that Abramovich has experience and he will not allow Deripaska to do something against of our interests. It means that we agreed that Deripaska managed the company, Abramovich will present our interest; and if Deripaska need, he will communicate to Abramovich; and Abramovich, if need, he will communicate to Deripaska. That's it.

Q. And what do you say was agreed about the price --

A. As I told you --

Q. -- at the Dorchester Hotel meeting?

A. -- I don't recollect exactly what we discuss about price. I just think that before that, before that meeting, it's already agreed at the initial stage that the price will be as I told you before.

Q. What was that?

A. It's 575, like that, 581, what you mentioned. I don't remember that.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, I think you may be getting confused with the negotiations about the original acquisition.

$575 million was the price of the original aluminium assets and you gave some evidence about that earlier this morning.

A. No, I mean about compensation which Deripaska will pay us. Compensation will be around the same, as I told my Lady before. Maybe I real confuse a little bit, I'm sorry, because I did not follow your way. We discuss about this just compensation which will be paid by Deripaska for -- because of the difference in what we own and what Deripaska own. This is the point.

Q. And how much was the compensation payment going to be?

A. And compensation, as I told you, is about 500 more, 575, because it's the same number what we paid for our assets, around that.

Q. And do you say that was agreed in your presence at the Dorchester Hotel meeting?

A. I think that yes, it was decided as well at my presence in Dorchester Hotel. You're correct.

Q. Well now, in fact the compensation payment was $400 million; see paragraph 3 of the preliminary agreement.

A. Okay, it may be 400. I don't remember the number exactly. Show me, please.

Q. It's paragraph 3 of the preliminary agreement on H(A)16/48T.

A. Okay.

Q. Paragraph 3 refers to a payment of $400 million which was in fact the compensatory payment to be paid by the Deripaska camp --

A. Yes, I see that. My recollection is different. My recollection is that we were compensate exact number. I don't know how maybe in agreement it's 400, but my recollection is absolutely clear that we were paid finally the same amount which we pay -- were paid by Deripaska the same amount of money which we paid for obtaining these assets. This is my recollection.

Q. Do you recall actually negotiating that figure of $575 million at the Dorchester Hotel?

A. Again, I don't remember well. I remember that it was mentioned that we will pay and it was the reason that we will be compensate the same amount what we paid for obtaining the assets, but I don't remember exactly how it was done. But my clear understanding and clear recollection is that we were paid the same amount what we paid for obtaining the assets.

Q. At paragraph 278 of your witness statement D2/17/255 you refer to this sum of $575 million.

A. Just a second. In paragraph...?

Q. Don't put away that bundle, if you wouldn't mind.

A. Okay.

Q. Have a look at 278 of your witness statement.

A. Sorry. 27...?

Q. 278.

A. Yes, okay. It's written the sum 575.

Q. Right. Now --

- A. I give you just exact what I recollect. I told you I don't remember the other number. I don't remember.
- Q. Now, is it your evidence that that figure of $575 million was agreed at the Dorchester Hotel meeting?
- A. It's my statement, yes.
- Q. Right. So you think that $575 million figure --
- A. Yes, I think so.
- Q. -- was negotiated by you?
- A. It was negotiated and agreed, it was negotiated by me, yes?
- Q. At the Dorchester meeting?
- A. I did negotiate -- I'm sorry. In Dorchester Hotel we just want to fix our agreement which was done before, and the number 575 I recollect only because it's coincide with the number which we paid for assets. What is written in this agreement which you show me, I even did not recollect. I don't remember that because I maybe even hadn't seen that document and I told it from the beginning.
- Q. You see, the $575 million figure wasn't in fact agreed until May, was it? More than two months after --
- A. I don't remember that.
- Q. It was actually agreed some two months after the Dorchester Hotel meeting, on an occasion when you were not present.

A. Mr Sumption, I just present my recollection. Definitely it could be the same. But my recollection from the very beginning -- I want to stress that again -- why I recollect that, because it was funny; not the other reason. The funny was that we paid the same amount for obtaining assets and we got back the same amount to participate. This is the reason why I remember this number.

I don't remember 400, believe me, I don't remember it and I told you I don't recollect that I have seen this preliminary agreement. I just knew the principal terms of what we were discussing with Mr Abramovich.

Q. You see, what I'm suggesting to you, Mr Berezovsky, is that you cannot have been concerned with or present at the negotiation of the $575 million figure at the Dorchester Hotel because it was actually not agreed until two months later.

A. Mr Sumption, I present you my recollection. You may judge it like you want. I don't remember anything more. I remember that perfectly, what I remember. Could be -- but again, my recollection is just because I really was surprised of this funny thing. I'm sorry.

Q. Was any written agreement signed at the Dorchester Hotel meeting?

A. As I understand, in Dorchester Hotel nothing was signed.

It was -- as I told you, it was just meeting of principals to confirm what was prepared before, what we discuss in -- not in details, and I did not pay any attention to details. And, as I understand, the agreement of merger was signed later -- soon later after that, but not in Dorchester Hotel definitely.

Q. Did anybody produce a copy of the preliminary agreement at the Dorchester Hotel meeting which had been signed by the principals a few days earlier?

A. I don't remember that. I don't remember.

Q. Were any arrangements made at the Dorchester Hotel meeting for drawing up an agreement in writing?

A. Mr Sumption, I just present you what I recollect, yes? I know that we -- the meeting was just to fix between principals the basic point of agreement. Abramovich knows that perfectly well and Shvidler knows that perfectly well. Unfortunately Badri is not able to confirm it to us. That's it. Nothing more.

I don't remember, I don't recollect that anything was signed in Dorchester Hotel. I don't recollect that. I just know that the final agreement was signed later on, that's it, soon later on. And what I know well; that Abramovich paid to Deripaska this $13 million also later on in May, I think, and so. This is the point.

Q. Mr Berezovsky --

- A. I remember -- I'm sorry. I remember also well that we agreed in Dorchester Hotel that Badri, because of his role in merge, will be presented by the plain(?). It's also discussed in Dorchester Hotel, I remember that well.
- Q. Mr Berezovsky, I'm going to put to you, so that you have an opportunity to comment on it, our case about what happened at the Dorchester Hotel meeting. I'm going to describe in summary what we say happened and this is to allow you to comment on it. Do you understand?
- A. To comment? No comment.
- Q. Well, you haven't yet heard our case, so I think you better wait until you do before commenting.
- A. It's the reason why I said that.
- Q. The terms of the merger had in fact been agreed in principle but in some detail between Mr Abramovich and Mr Deripaska several days before the Dorchester Hotel meeting, without any involvement on your part, and you were entirely ignorant of the terms and contents of that document.
- Well, let's pause there. What do you say about that?
- A. Nothing.
- Q. At the meeting, you turned up --
- A. I think this is absolute -- sorry, nothing.

Q. At the meeting, you turned up an hour late. There was some discussion at the meeting about the aluminium --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, just a second. I think if you're putting a question in relation to each statement to him, he should have an opportunity --

MR SUMPTION: Well, I've already asked him, my Lady about that and he has --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, you agreed you turned up an hour late, do you?

A. That I came later?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

A. Yes, I agree.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: But whether it was an hour or not, you don't --

A. No, it's less than an hour, but -- and my impression, my Lady, is because I came from another court against of Forbes magazine and I was impressed so much and so-so. This I recollect.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: But you don't think you were an hour late?

A. I think maybe a little bit less. But could be -- okay, it's correct to say in frame of hour.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Next, Mr Sumption.

MR SUMPTION: At the meeting there was no negotiation of terms for the merger because those terms had already been agreed in principle ten days earlier and the details were being hammered out by other people, the working party, elsewhere.

A. Wrong.

Q. What do you say about that?

A. Wrong.

Q. There was some discussion at the meeting about the aluminium wars. Do you agree?

A. Sorry, there were...?

Q. There was some discussion at the Dorchester Hotel meeting about the aluminium wars, the --

A. Not some. We discussed what we discussed with you before. I mentioned all points which we discussed at the meeting in Dorchester Hotel.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Can I be clear: when you say "the aluminium wars", did you discuss the aluminium wars specifically at the meeting?

A. We discuss about merge for aluminium between Deripaska and our group.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: But was there any discussion about the aluminium wars, as Mr Sumption puts it?

A. Was -- I'm sorry.

MR RABINOWITZ: I think maybe Mr Sumption needs to make it clear what he means by that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I think you need to explain further,

Mr Sumption.

MR SUMPTION: "The aluminium wars" is an expression used by witnesses on both sides of this case to describe the state of lawlessness and racketeering which had damaged the aluminium industry over the past few years. (Pause)

A. Again, I'm sorry, I didn't understand what is that.

I don't remember at all that we discussed that. What I remember, when Abramovich came the first time -- not in Dorchester now -- the first time with the proposal for us, he said, "Boris, why" -- argument of Abramovich was, "Boris, there are a lot of mess, a lot of fight" -- not "war" but "fight" -- "about aluminium and better to make this merge because we reduce the tension, we'll have fantastic business and we'll reduce the tension", and it's the reason why I also accept that.

Because, as you know, all the time I was for merge, like Yukos and Sibneft the first time when we merge, and I also support that. And it's one of the argument, I would like to say, mainly for me political argument, that we reduce the tension and we create one of the biggest in the world company which can compete on the world market.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Are you saying that the aluminium wars weren't discussed at the meeting at the Dorchester --

A. Absolutely correct: we did not discuss that in Dorchester Hotel.

MR SUMPTION: The evidence of others present was that you did.

A. Fine. What I can do with the other witnesses?

Q. Finally, there was, as I think you accept, discussion about the money that Mr Deripaska claimed you had not repaid to him.

A. We discussed that, it's true, and I said that in my reply as I remember.

Q. Now, the final agreement for the merger was drawn up and executed on 15 March, the terms having been negotiated by the working party that was working elsewhere. I'd like to ask you to look at bundle H(A)18/124.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, this was intended to be, was it not --

A. Is it possible -- it's just in English or in Russian as well this exist?

Q. This one I think is just in English.

A. Yes, because English lawyer. Okay.

Q. And the signatures appear on the English text. This is an agreement between Runicom, Mr Abramovich's company, and GSA (Cyprus), which was Mr Deripaska's company.

A. Yes. And what?

Q. Now, when you did you first see this agreement?

- A. I even don't recollect that I have seen this agreement.
- Q. Ever?
- A. I think so.
- Q. Until now?
- A. I don't recollect.
- Q. I see. Well now, this agreement followed the basic lines of the preliminary agreement that had been made at the beginning of March.
- A. Okay.
- Q. And if you look at -- first of all, I take it from the fact that you haven't seen this agreement that you were not involved in negotiating it?
- A. I was involved in negotiating, as I told you, as I told you precisely, between me, Badri and Abramovich before Dorchester Hotel. I was involved in negotiation in Dorchester Hotel directly between principals and I didn't was involved in any -- in this -- in the final stage of preparation and I haven't seen, I think, even this document before.
- Q. Now, this document was actually drawn up, do you agree, by a working party consisting of Mr Tenenbaum, Ms Panchenko, Mr Osipov and Mr Schneider on Mr Abramovich's side and Mr Mishakov, Mr Bulygin and Mr Hauser on Mr Deripaska's side. Do you accept that?
- A. I don't know anything about that. I know just that Abramovich took responsibility to present our group, completely like it's happened in Sibneft for example, and Deripaska present his group. I'm sure that they create a working group but it absolutely does not contradict of our agreement with Mr Abramovich.

Q. The evidence that will be given is that the people who belonged to that working party and drew up this agreement knew nothing about any discussions at the Dorchester Hotel.

A. Mr Sumption, I don't know anything about this witness statement; I just know about what happened. I know what happened at Le Bourget, for example, where we discussing aluminium assets and how to share the profit from aluminium assets. It's reality. It's words of Mr Abramovich, which he accept; it's my words, which I also accept. Unfortunately Badri is not able to confirm that it's his words. But Abramovich confirm, I think, already that Le Bourget happened and it's absolutely clear that we own aluminium business 50/50, that we got a profit for that.

What we are discussing, I don't believe, I'm sorry to say.

Q. Look at page 126, please.

A. 126, thank you.

Q. Do you see there's a series of definitions at the top of the page, including a definition of a term called the "Transfer Price"? Do you see that?

A. "Transfer Price", yes.

Q. The transfer price is the compensation payment that was payable by Deripaska's company to Abramovich's company.

A. Yes.

Q. And it's $400 million, not 575.

A. Mr Sumption, I present you my recollection; that's it. It's my memory. I am sorry to say I don't remember 400 at all.

Q. You actually got the 575 figure from the May restatement of this agreement when the terms were amended, didn't you?

A. Mr Sumption, again my recollection is like that. I present you my recollection. I don't remember 400, sorry. My memory is not so good to remember 400. My memory just remember 575. What I can do with that?

Q. Are you aware that there was a renegotiation and restatement of this agreement in May?

A. I don't remember that.

Q. You don't remember that. So were you involved in any renegotiation and restatement of this agreement?

A. I don't remember that.

Q. At that stage there was a revaluation of the assets that were being contributed by each side and an addition of the Bratsk assets and the compensation payment was therefore increased to --

A. Compensation payment?

Q. The compensation payment was therefore increased from $400 million to $575 million. Are you aware of that?

A. I don't remember that at all. I just remember, as I told you before, the principal assets which we bought, it's four, as I mentioned you before: it's Krasnoyarsk aluminium plant, it's Krasnoyarsk hydro station, it's Bratsk aluminium plant and it's Achinsk aluminium complex. And, as I recollect, later on, later on, we also bought the additional assets, I don't remember well which one, but it's happened that we bought more than -- already when merge happened, when merge happened we bought some additional assets. This I remember well.

Q. When was --

A. Nikolaevsky, I think -- not Nikolaevsky. I don't remember. Novokuznetsky, Novokuznetsky aluminium plant, as I recollect.

Q. When was it decided to include the Bratsk aluminium assets in the merger?

A. My understanding is from the very beginning.

Q. No --

A. We discuss --

Q. -- it was decided in May.

- A. No, I said you, my recollection, my recollection is that from very beginning we discuss Bratsk aluminium. My recollection, I say again.
- Q. There's no doubt that the Bratsk aluminium assets were acquired in February but they weren't included in the merger until May, were they?
- A. Mr Sumption, I can't comment that. I don't know. I know -- I recollect perfectly that there were four assets from the beginning which we accept -- which we propose to sell and we accept to buy. That's it.
- Q. You see, I suggest that the reason why you can remember so little about the terms of this agreement is that you had nothing whatever to do with their negotiation.
- A. Mr Sumption, I already gave in details what part, what was my role in this project; nothing more, nothing less. It's what I recollect and what I present to you.
- Q. I want to turn to what you say was agreed between you and Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Abramovich, okay? We've been talking about what was agreed between the buyers and sellers of the aluminium assets and between the two parties to the merger. I now want to turn to what was agreed between you, Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Abramovich.
- A. Yes.
- Q. Now, the first question I want to ask you is this: you say that there was an agreement not to sell without the consent of the others and that that was a point that was important to you; that's your evidence, isn't it?

A. You are correct.

Q. Can you tell us why that wasn't included in your original claim form?

A. I don't know.

Q. Did you tell your lawyers that an agreement like that had been made?

A. If they ask me, I -- definitely I told them. If they don't ask, maybe I did not.

Q. Well, they can hardly have asked you, "Was there an agreement about whether the other people's permission would be required?" You must have taken the initiative and told them what this agreement was.

A. Mr Sumption, I gave my answer. Again, I precisely answer to questions of my lawyers, if I recollect that. If the question have been done, no doubts that I will give answer to this question.

Q. So is your position that in relation to these oral agreements, you just sat there in silence and waited for them to think of questions to ask you?

A. No, Mr Sumption. I tried to describe some points I could forgot, for example, and it's already the problem of how lawyers understand and what to put me questions. Again, Mr Sumption, I told you that in the agreement concerning '95, '96, I don't already remember, we agreed with Abramovich about this point and we just repeat again the same position, nothing more.

Q. Now, Mr Berezovsky, I suggest that no agreement was ever made between you, Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Abramovich about whether it would require the consent of the others to sell.

A. I understand that I am not good in business but not so stupid. Definitely it was done.

Q. Now, I want to turn to another thing that you say was agreed, namely that English law --

A. Yes.

Q. -- was going to govern the relationship between the three of you, you, Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Abramovich. Do you understand?

A. As my recollection is that we -- I use the "British law", the word, and, as I recollect, this was in terms of "proper British law way" or "precisely British law way". In Russian it's (Russian words). I'm sorry for my --

Q. I'm going to use the expression "English law" because it is, as I think you acknowledge, more correct, but I'm not seeking to take a point on the difference between English and British. Do you understand?

A. I didn't understand the question.

Q. I am not going to trouble you with the difference between English and British.

A. Thank you.

Q. It may well be that you use the terms, if you use them at all, interchangeably. That's not a point I'm making against you.

A. Thank you, Mr Sumption.

Q. Right. I want to investigate with you the question whether any agreement was made about the governing law at all. Now, I understand your evidence that it was.

You say, as I understand it, that it was Mr Anisimov who suggested that you should make your arrangements among yourselves in what you call a very precise British way. Is that right?

A. Anisimov definitely was one of the person who spend a lot of time with Badri and he -- and it was -- and I mentioned that because he talked to Badri. Anisimov -- as I remember, Anisimov also told about the importance of western law; I don't remember that he mentioned me that.

But, as I told you already before, that starting from the end of '99/the beginning of 2000 we start to care more -- I mean Badri and me -- how we structurise our business. And we had already meetings with different people, including Mr Samuelson -- I don't remember exactly the date, yes? But it's absolutely clear that we start to change -- that we progressing in our understanding what it should be done.

And, Mr Sumption, again, I'm sorry to return you back once and once to Le Bourget meeting. It's absolutely clear my understanding --

- Q. Mr Berezovsky, I'm only asking you about Mr Anisimov's suggestion.
- A. Mr Anisimov, Badri told me that Anisimov suggest him. Finish.
- Q. Mr Anisimov denies that. What do you say?
- A. Fine. Nothing. It's Mr Anisimov should answer to the question here and he will give answer.
- Q. Would you please look at paragraph 411 of your witness statement D2/17/287.
- A. 411.
- Q. Now, this is a passage in your witness statement which roughly corresponds to what you have told us on a number of occasions, including a couple of minutes ago: that you have:
- "... grown to understand the importance of formal records of our interest in... assets..."
- Is that correct?
- A. Just a second. Formal records, yes, correct.

- Q. So in early 2000, is it right you appreciated the importance of formally recording your interest in assets when you had acquired one?
- A. Correct.
- Q. Now, why then did you not formally record the arrangements that you say were made between yourself, Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Abramovich?
- A. It's absolutely clear why: because we just start this process, we had already experience with Mr Abramovich, he was correct partner, and step by step we decide to change, to more formalise. It doesn't happen in one day, it takes time for do that, and we start to move in this direction.
- Q. Mr Berezovsky, this is your introductory section introducing the Rusal sales. What you say is that:
- "From early 2000..."
- The period we've just been talking about.
- "... [you and] Badri... had both grown to understand the importance of formal records of our interest in... assets..."
- A. It's correct.
- Q. Did you appreciate the importance of having formal records of your interest in assets in February and March 2000?
- A. Definitely, yes. But the point is that it doesn't happen in one day and we start to prepare that.

Q. It would have been easy enough, wouldn't it, if you had made an agreement of the kind that you allege with Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Abramovich, to record it in writing?

A. Mr Sumption, I was not in hurry that time. I have another problem, I tour(?) a lot, and we just took a decision, principal decision with Badri that we should change to more formal way our relations with whoever, but Mr Abramovich was the last in my agenda because I trust him that time. I trust him. This is the point. And he was last in my agenda to change to more formalise our relations. I already put, sorry to say, my two foote to him, yes? That's it.

Q. If you had in fact made the agreement which you allege, you would have recorded it in writing, wouldn't you?

A. No. No. Not, Mr Sumption.

Q. What did you know about English law trusts in February and March 2000, Mr Berezovsky?

A. Not a lot. I just understood that it's more defended as a structure, I understood a little bit what means "offshore". I just understood that I will give my assets to Mr Abramovich, some structure, western structure, as my shares and he will hold that, and he will give me back if I ask him to return me back under my control and I will have --

- Q. My question was different, Mr Berezovsky.
- A. Just a second. Don't, please, interrupt me. I try not to interrupt you. And you asked me what I understand. It's my understanding.
- Q. What you understand about a specific thing.
- A. Specific, nothing.
- Q. I would like to know what you understood about English law trusts. I'm not asking you what you understood about what you had agreed with Mr Abramovich; I want to know what you knew in February and March 2000 about English law trusts.
- A. I understand about English law what I -- and my conclusion was just that it's absolutely fair laws, according of my experience in -- against of Forbes, and I think I was the most experienced Russian as far as English law is concerned because no one that time had this type of experience. I understood the trust, that trust is some offshore that could be managed by different law, and my preference was -- not preference -- my understanding was English law or British law trust. That's it; nothing more.
- Q. Ms Nosova tells us that you had in the past, ie before 2000, used offshore trusts for a number of specific ventures with Mr Patarkatsishvili and that you had experience of such trusts in Delaware, Ireland, the Cayman Islands, the BVI and Cyprus. Is that true?

A. Believe me that it's only partially true because, if it's so, only Mr Badri -- Mr Patarkatsishvili provide this service, maybe together with Mrs Nosova, but not me. I did not participate at all in that.

Q. Now, you must have realised, Mr Berezovsky, that English law trusts set up in a precise British way were invariably created by a written document?

A. Mr Sumption --

Q. Did you realise that?

A. No, I did not realise that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I'm not sure I understand that question because, as a matter of law, English trusts can be set up orally --

MR SUMPTION: They can, yes, but in practice --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: -- so I'm not quite sure I understand the thrust of the question you're putting to Mr Berezovsky.

MR SUMPTION: In practice, Mr Berezovsky, English law and other common law trusts are invariably recorded in writing in commercial transactions. You must have been aware of that?

A. No, I did not.

Q. Every other aspect of the --

- A. Moreover, Mr Sumption, my experience here in this country is that shake hands, if you really have agreement shake hands, means a lot, even I think more than in Russia because I have some litigation here against of me and I lost this case. I mean in some -- I sold some assets, some property here and I was -- it was just shake hands, nothing more. We never -- we didn't sign anything and I lost the case here. I have absolutely different impression, I think that word in this country even value more than in Russia.
- Q. Every other aspect of the acquisition of the aluminium assets and the making of the merger agreement was agreed in writing, wasn't it?
- A. As my knowledge is, yes. It was in writing merger agreement, it was in writing when we sold -- when we bought our assets and we -- what else? It's additional reason why -- I don't understand why you don't believe that we discussed our relations with Abramovich in the same way. It's absolutely natural what we -- that we -- I had in my mind real impression of English or British way of law, according from personal experience, and definitely we discussed that, as I told you before, with Mr Abramovich exactly in that way.
- Q. If every other aspect of the acquisition of the aluminium assets and the merger were agreed in writing, why not the arrangements between you and Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Abramovich?

A. I already state my position because, first of all -- not because first of all -- because Abramovich has reason not to do that and I accept these reasons because I have -- still I was in danger, you see, and it was political battle that time and later on. And I didn't have -- I didn't have doubt about that position but I start to change this position and I start to prepare to be absolutely fix -- to fix as agreement our relations and you know the structures which you have seen. But that time again, I trust Abramovich, he present the reason why I shouldn't be visible and I accept that.

Q. What do you say Mr Abramovich's reasons were for not entering into this in writing?

A. No, I think that again the same, that he afraid that our company would be more dangerous if it turn out that we have a written agreement. That's it.

Q. If you remember expressly agreeing with Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Abramovich that your arrangements were to be governed by English law, why didn't you say so in your original claim in this action in 2007?

A. Mr Sumption, I already gave answer to this question.

I gave answers to my lawyers when they put me direct question, I didn't pay my personally attention. Later on, definitely, I recognise that it's important but, again, I did not make any fact statement which controvert to the next events. It means that when I really was put a question, direct question, "What is your understanding and what was discussion, if it was, between you, Abramovich and Patarkatsishvili", I gave clear answer.

- Q. They must have asked you, at the outset of this action, probably several times, "What did you agree about these aluminium assets with Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Abramovich?" and you must have told them.
- A. Mr Sumption, my clear understanding is that I gave all the (inaudible) -- all the time picture and I make -- nevertheless I just want to mention to you that it's really a lot of examples but something I present to my lawyers and they did not write in proper way in notes. But when we were discussing in more details, it's turned out that they accept what I told.

Again, I didn't pay attention, particularly at the beginning, and it's absolutely truthful. What is important in legal system here? What is not important? When I was put -- when I was asked directly, I give direct answer. That's it.

MR SUMPTION: Well, we'll go through the things that you paid detailed personal attention to this afternoon.

My Lady, I'm afraid progress has been very much slower than I had hoped and I expect to be most, if not all, the afternoon.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well. 2 o'clock, Mr Berezovsky.

THE WITNESS: Thank you.

(1.00 pm)

(The short adjournment)

(2.00 pm)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Sumption, before you start I want to correct something I said this morning.

Apparently the photograph that was taken on the mobile phone was taken yesterday during the course of Mr Berezovsky giving evidence. I have taken steps to ensure that the photograph has been deleted and, as presently advised, I don't propose to take the matter further. But again I reiterate the point that I made this morning that no photographs are to be taken in court, particularly not when any party or any witness is giving evidence. If the matter happens again, if a similar incident happens again, I will regard the matter as very serious indeed and treat it as a contempt.

Yes, Mr Sumption, continue.

MR SUMPTION: Mr Berezovsky, I was asking you when her Ladyship rose at 1.00 about the absence of any mention in your original pleadings of an agreement that English law should apply. Now, I want to explore this a little further with you.

The notes that we have of interviews with Badri indicate that there were five days over 2007 when Badri was interviewed in your presence: just to remind you, on 29 April at Downside Manor --

A. Which year?

Q. 2007 -- on 11 and 13 June at Downside Manor and on 29 and 30 November in Tel Aviv.

A. Just a second. This is 2007 and in Badri house, yes?

Q. Well, the first three were in Mr Patarkatsishvili's house at Downside Manor; 29 and 30 November was at Tel Aviv.

A. When Tel Aviv? I'm sorry, again.

Q. 29 and 30 November was in Tel Aviv.

A. Which year, please?

Q. 2007.

A. You refer now only 2007?

Q. I'm referring only to 2007.

A. Good.

Q. There were five days on which the allegations that you have been making were discussed in 2007 in your presence --

A. All of them?

Q. Yes -- with Mr Patarkatsishvili.

A. Mm-hm.

Q. Now, in particular, Rusal was discussed at the June meetings in the presence of Mr Gruder QC and at the Tel Aviv meetings.

A. Mr Gruder was in Tel Aviv, yes?

Q. No, Mr Gruder was at the June meeting at Downside Manor.

A. Mm-hm.

Q. Now, I'm not going to take you through these notes again in order to establish what they don't say, but at no point in the course of these meetings did you or Mr Patarkatsishvili mention that there was an agreement that this arrangement should be governed by English law. Can you tell us why that is?

A. I don't know why it was not putting in the notes and I even don't remember did I face this question. I just -- as I told you, when I face this question, I gave direct answer.

But, my Lady, I don't want definitely to say that everything what is written in notes is completely wrong but I just want to give you example which for me is very important: that, for example, these notes, as I understand, we never mentioned about Le Bourget meeting, for example. It means that we forgot that and nobody ask us about, "Have you had the -- which kind of meetings you have after", yes?

I just again don't want to argue -- what is written in notes, it's written in notes and it's absolutely precisely -- but I just want to stress that it does not mean that I mislead somebody; it just means that I did not face direct question and it is reason why I didn't give the reply.

Moreover, definitely, I did not pay the attention which I understand important for this litigation and it's the reason why myself, my own, I did not present that. I just describe events; that's it.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Sorry, I don't understand that last point you're making. Can you just amplify it?

A. Yes, I just -- just a second.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: You say, "definitely, I didn't pay the [in]tention...".

A. Definitely, I didn't pay attention of the law, you understand? It means that I didn't -- on the future proceeding, I mean. And it's reason that definitely I did not, let's say, myself made an accent of some points because I didn't understand what is important, what is not important; I just describe and answer to questions which my lawyers put in front of me.

MR SUMPTION: You are actually mistaken, Mr Berezovsky, when you say that the Le Bourget meeting was not discussed on these occasions. On 11 June the notes made of the meeting do refer to the Le Bourget meeting.

A. 11 June?

Q. Yes. It's a by-way, I'm not proposing to turn back to it, but in fact --

A. Could you show me please this, please?

Q. Very well: R(D)1/17/126.

A. It's a meeting of when?

Q. 11 June at Downside Manor. At the top of the page:

"Le Bourget airport/Sibneft.

"Roman last time met in chateau."

A. Just a second. (Pause)

Yes, I see that. I didn't see that before. You're absolutely correct.

Q. Would you please take bundle K2.

A. It's 2007 -- just a second. I just -- Mr Sumption, just one moment. My Lady, I just want to remind -- no, it's happened later that we got this tape, yes? Recording from Le Bourget we got later, yes?

Q. You tell me.

A. I don't remember when we got Le Bourget taping.

Q. Well, I can't give evidence, Mr Berezovsky, about when you got that tape. You tell us.

A. Sorry. My impression is that we got it later, just to understand for myself how I didn't recollect that we talk about Le Bourget.

Q. Yes.

A. Okay.

Q. Would you take bundle K2 and turn to flag 4. I'd like you to look, please, at K2/04/35.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, what you are looking at, as you can see from the first page on page 16, is your particulars of claim. This was in fact the second attempt to plead the case, the first one having been in the documents that you delivered to Mr Abramovich in Sloane Street.

A. Yes.

Q. It's got a statement of truth at the end.

A. Yes.

Q. And at paragraph 62 you'll see what you at that stage were contending had been agreed at the Dorchester meeting. You say it was agreed that there should be a trust; you don't say anything about English law.

A. Mr Sumption, I understand your point. As I present you just before afternoon, I remember what we discussing in Dorchester Hotel. My understanding of -- my comment, again, I don't -- I am not responsible to comment instead of the lawyer, but my understanding is that for lawyers mentioning "trust" automatically means English or western law as a minimum, yes?

Again, you asked me to interpret, yes? I try to interpret. But again, my absolutely clear recollection, which I presented you before the break, that we discuss that as far as Mr Abramovich, between three of us, as far as the meeting in Dorchester Hotel. And my just, let's say, explanation, it's again explanation, would be that meaning "trust", they think that it's already western at least law and as far as we discussing about Dorchester, it means English law.

And it's not unusual because, as you have seen yesterday in -- Mr Curtis, who prepared the Devonian agreement, they put even that we are beneficiaries, yes? And I never told him that we are beneficiaries of -- that we are beneficiaries in trust as far as Sibneft is concerned but Mr Curtis understood like that.

This is my just explanation again, nothing more.

Q. Right. Would you please turn to the next flag, flag 6, which is the next version of your case --

A. Yes.

Q. -- where you, at paragraph 62 on page 64 K2/06/64, say exactly the same things as in the previous document about the Dorchester Hotel meeting.

A. 62?

- Q. Yes, paragraph 62 on page 64.
- A. Paragraph 62, sorry.
- Q. It's exactly the same as the paragraph I've just shown you in the previous document.
- A. Okay. Yes, I have seen -- yes.
- Q. This time you've added a bit about the governing law and you will find that at paragraph 75A on page 67 K2/06/67.
- A. 75?
- Q. 75A.
- A. Yes, 75A.
- Q. Yes.
- A. And then?
- Q. Now, if you look at 75A, you will see that what it says is this:
- "In the event that it is averred..."
- In other words, in the event that Mr Abramovich should say:
- "... that the proper law of the said claims is not English law, Mr Berezovsky [will say] that the proper law of the claims is British Virgin Islands law. Mr Berezovsky relies on [certain facts as pointing to that conclusion]."
- Namely, in summary, that the aluminium assets were going to be held by companies in the British Virgin Islands and -- item 3 -- that in any event:

"the... intention of all parties... was that the entities which held [the] shares... [were to be] domiciled outside Russia.

- A. Okay. Again, Mr Sumption, it's just my interpretation. It's confirmed that we really discuss about how it will be hold as a trust, that it's trust, and my understanding is that when I discuss about that it will be trust, maybe on Virgin Islands and so and so on, and this was just convert what -- my lawyer convert that it will be law just Virgin Island. I don't remember that I discuss Virgin Island law. We discuss about that offshore company could be located in offshore zones, this is correct, and I definitely did not know which kind of law implied to offshore company which based on Virgin Island.

Again, it's just -- the just continuation of my understanding what they are looking for and what -- but again, I never put direct question from my lawyers. If you show me -- I'm sorry to say, if you're able to present me that I was put direct question during -- even in notes the other story. Just again my interpretation, nothing more.

- Q. What was your side doing suggesting that it might be the law of the British Virgin Islands if there had been an express discussion and agreement that it should be the law of England?

- A. Mr Sumption, I follow just the way how my lawyers understand the problem. I don't understand. They understand the problem of law which we agree or the company which we put in the trust, where they're located and what law is there.

When I answer to direct question, you will find out simple that my answer is absolutely correct. Again, it's like I present my story, like lawyers understand the story and like they put on the paper; nothing more.

- Q. Do you remember a hearing before Judge Mackie in the Commercial Court on 28 April 2008?

- A. I don't remember but I try to recollect. It's Commercial Court about what?

- Q. About this case.

- A. I'm sorry, I don't remember.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, if he doesn't remember, Mr Sumption...

MR SUMPTION: Do you remember sitting in court in front of Judge Mackie with your legal team?

- A. Just a second. What is the event? What we discuss there?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: What was the subject matter of the application?

MR SUMPTION: It was the very first hearing of the case and the subject matter being discussed was whether you should be allowed to change your pleadings in order to rely on the law of the British Virgin Islands.

A. Mr Sumption, I several times have been on the hearing and I think it's good to be in the court and show up that you are here, you don't afraid. Definitely I don't remember exactly this discussion. I remember that I have been several times and one time, the first time, I came by -- I think I should be polite to be present. One time I remember I was recommended by my lawyers to go there. But in any case I haven't stay all over the day, I don't remember that, and definitely I don't remember that what was discussed about, I'm sorry.

Q. Do you remember being represented by Barbara Dohmann QC?

A. I remember that Barbara Dohmann -- Barbara represent me and solicitor was Michelle Duncan as well.

Q. Now, there was only one hearing at which Barbara Dohmann represented you in court. Do you remember being present at a hearing when you were represented by Barbara Dohmann?

A. Mr Sumption, you may believe me, maybe not: it don't reflect in my memory. I remember Barbara well because I met her several times and she was my barrister and she was presented to me, as I recollect, by Michelle Duncan, who become my solicitor. I don't recollect visual the picture that Barbara present something, but nevertheless, it doesn't mean that I would not recollect if I concentrate on that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Anyway, you don't remember particularly being in court?

A. I don't remember.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No.

MR SUMPTION: I wonder if I may assist the witness with a photograph that may help.

A. In the court?

Q. No, and I didn't take it! (Handed)

This is a photograph which comes from the Getty Press Images library headed:

"Exiled Russian tycoon Boris Berezovsky arrives at the High Court in London, on April 28, 2008. Berezovsky is suing Chelsea boss Roman Abramovich over alleged claims that he was forced to sell shares in... Sibneft, aluminium giant Rusal and the country's central TV."

A. I definitely don't recollect -- don't remember this picture. You know well that even I already don't remember the pictures of this hearing because there are thousands of pictures. I'm sorry, my Lady, I really...

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: All you're being asked is: do you remember the hearing where Barbara Dohmann represented

you?

A. I don't remember.

MR SUMPTION: I would like you to look at the transcript of that hearing. Could you be given bundle J1/2.

I understand from Ms Davies, who was present, that you were present during this part of the hearing.

A. I can't exclude that, I told you from the beginning.

Q. Would you please take bundle J1/2.02/69.

A. Thank you.

Q. It's after flag 2. It's the first page after flag 2.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, the argument that was going on, just to help you by summarising the background, Ms Dohmann was applying on your behalf to be allowed to change your pleadings in order to rely in the alternative on the law of the British Virgin Islands. That's what the argument was about.

A. Yes.

Q. And the first part of the transcript is taken up with a long argument about whether the draft pleading was properly particularised, ie whether it had enough information in it to be properly understood --

MR RABINOWITZ: Sorry, before my learned friend continues, my learned friend started by saying Ms Davies remembers that he was there and I'm willing to accept that generally, except that the first two lines of the transcript say that Ms Davies wasn't there.

MR SUMPTION: Sorry, my learned friend is quite right.

I had understood that she was, but she clearly was not.

THE WITNESS: Even your witnesses don't remember, how can I recollect all that?

MR SUMPTION: Ms Davies is not one of my witnesses.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Anyway, let's get on with the cross-examination.

MR SUMPTION: Could you please look at page 96 J1/2.02/96, where a discussion occurs after there has been an argument about whether your draft pleading is sufficiently precise. Now, above letter C --

A. Just a second. Page number?

Q. 96?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: In the bottom left-hand corner.

THE WITNESS: Thank you.

MR SUMPTION: And letter C along the right-hand margin.

This is Ms Dohmann speaking on your behalf --

A. Yes, yes.

Q. -- and, as we understand it, in your presence.

A. Yes, thank you. (Pause)

Okay.

Q. Now, what she says is:

"We do not at this point face a strike-out" --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: This is just below letter B, just above letter C. Do you have it, Mr Berezovsky?

A. Yes, I have letter C on the next page, 97.

MR SUMPTION: No, you should be looking at page 96.

A. Yes.

Q. Do you see letters B and C, if you start halfway between those two letters:

"We do not at this point..."

Just read that paragraph, if you will.

A. Just a second, Mr Sumption. Even with translator can't find it. But I will find it, definitely.

THE INTERPRETER: Sir, did you say between B and C?

MR SUMPTION: Between B and C on page 96 there's a paragraph that starts, "We do not at this point..."

A. Yes, I have it.

Q. I would like you to read that paragraph to yourself, please.

A. Yes. (Pause)

Up to which point I should read?

Q. You should stop at the end of the paragraph.

A. Yes, I stop at the end of the paragraph.

Q. Right. Now, Ms Dohmann is saying on your behalf that she has been working very hard with her team --

A. Yes.

Q. -- and she has put forward an amendment:

"... in favour of saying that the applicable law, which might well be Russian if you have shares in a Russian company and you are setting up certain agreements in Russia between Russians. But nonetheless it looks as though there is an argument for saying, 'No, everything was going to go offshore. Not only were all the individuals going offshore in due course, but their interests were run from offshore islands'..."

- A. I'm sorry, I'm sorry that I interrupt. It's discussion about aluminium or about Sibneft?
- Q. I'm just referring you to what your barrister is saying. She is talking here about the aluminium agreements and she's talking about the governing law of those agreements.
- A. I'm sorry that I -- maybe I was not attentively enough. I just want to -- please refer me to aluminium, where is written here? I just want to understand.
- Q. The whole of this argument, Mr Berezovsky, was about your application to amend your pleadings so as to say in the alternative that the agreement was governed by the law of the British Virgin Islands.
- A. It's again -- I'm sorry, because it's just part of the text. It's concerning aluminium, definitely, yes?
- Q. Yes.
- A. All right. This is the question. Thank you very much.

Again, I don't have any reason why Barbara is doing in this way. Again, as I told you before, I gave direct answer to all questions what they put in front of me but I don't know the reason why Barbara is operating like that.

Q. Now, what --

A. And this I think the reason why finally I was permitted to present my case and strike out, I won. It's one of the point which was under discussion. And I don't want to refer the previous decision, just I continue that my understanding.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: What's the question on this point, Mr Sumption?

MR SUMPTION: The question I want to ask you is this. Your barrister is saying that although there was a deal between Russians about Russian assets, there was an argument that it was governed by the law of the British Virgin Islands. Now, why didn't you say, "No, no, we expressly discussed the governing law and we agreed it was going to be English law"? Why didn't you say that?

A. Mr Sumption, it's absolutely clear why: because during discussion with Barbara, she never ask me about that. And she has her way, I don't know the reason why she think that better to present that it's Virgin Island.

MR RABINOWITZ: My Lady, we are, I think, trespassing into areas of privilege where there hasn't been --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Sumption, I don't think

Mr Berezovsky can be regarded as responsible for what Ms Dohmann is submitting orally.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, that is quite right, but he can be responsible for the absence of any instructions by himself. Ms Dohmann was submitting that there was an argument that it might be governed by the law of the British Virgin Islands. What I am asking the witness is why he didn't point out that this very subject, the governing law, had in fact been discussed and agreed back in March 2000.

MR RABINOWITZ: With respect to my learned friend, it's difficult to see how one gets into the answer to that without getting into areas which are covered by privilege.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. Well, I don't think it's going to assist me, Mr Sumption, in my assessment at this point. It's a point you can easily make in submission.

A. My Lady, nevertheless, Mr Sumption start his logic from the point that I have been there, I have listened what they discuss and why I did not refer to her. This is the point what Mr Sumption started to base his position. And I answer -- my answer was clear: I don't remember that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Fine.

A. This is the point. Thank you, my Lady.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Let's move on, shall we?

MR SUMPTION: There's one other document I want to refer you to, Mr Berezovsky.

I do need to do this, my Lady, because this is the basis of a submission that I shall be making to your Ladyship. If the witness has something to say about it, it's reasonable that he should be allowed an opportunity to do so.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Certainly.

MR SUMPTION: Would you please take bundle K2, flag 15, page 191 K2/15/191. 191 is the first page of this document which I'm showing you simply in order to identify what it is: it's your reply in this litigation served in October 2008.

A. Just a second. 2008 October, yes?

Q. Yes. And if you look at the last page, you will find your signature.

A. Mr Sumption, please, you are much more quicker than me in thinking. I am not so quick. It's reason why I want to identify. It's October 2008 and it's my reply --

Q. Yes.

A. -- during the strike-out?

Q. No, it's before that.

A. It's before --

Q. Yes.

A. Okay.

Q. It's in October 2008 and you will find your signature saying you believe that the facts stated in this reply are true on the last page, page 247 K2/15/247.

A. Yes, I see that.

Q. At page 238 --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just a second. Page 246, you'll see that it was served on 2 October 2008. So that's when --

A. Yes, yes, yes. Yes, just a second. I believe --
2 October, yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: When you were still being represented by Ms Dohmann.

A. I don't remember.

MR SUMPTION: Well, she has signed this document.

A. Ah, okay. Not I signed this document?

Q. You signed it as well. You signed it with a statement saying that it was true.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, if you look at page 238 K2/15/238, you will see there's a paragraph --

A. Page?

Q. 238. There's a paragraph about the governing law.

A. Yes.

Q. It's the first paragraph on that page, paragraph 64.1.

A. Yes.

Q. What is said on your behalf is this:

"It is denied that the trust was governed by Russian law. Paragraph C75A is repeated."

That's the paragraph about the law of the British Virgin Islands.

"Further or alternatively, as Mr Abramovich admits... the concept of a trust, and in consequence a beneficial interest, does not exist in Russian law. Mr Berezovsky (and Mr Patarkatsishvili) as the settlors of the trust expressly agreed with Mr Abramovich... as set out at... C63..."

And then the next sentence says:

"By obvious inference, the... agreement required the governing law of the trust to be one which recognised the validity of such trusts."

And the conclusion of that paragraph is that in those circumstances:

"... the governing law of the trust is, alternatively should be deemed to be, British Virgin Islands..."

Which has now emerged as the front runner.

"... alternatively English, law."

Now, the first question I want to ask you is: when you were asked to put your signature to this document saying that the facts stated in the reply are true, did you read it?

- A. Mr Sumption, the same answer, unfortunately: definitely I look it through and I am responsible for my signature, and I can't refuse that I am not responsible for that. But you want to know true? It's true that I have seen not definitely in details because I don't have even the time for that but I trust my lawyers and whatever they wrote, it's my responsibility, not them -- not only them.

But again I think, even reading that, I think that there's big mess around because on the one hand it's trust agreed with Abramovich and trust in offshore zone; on the other hand that we discuss that everything should be settled in English law. It's I think the mess -- and it may be in my head as well, but just my recollection -- in the head of lawyers that they don't understand what we are discussing, but they never put me direct question. When they put me direct question, I give direct answer.

- Q. Mr Berezovsky, why didn't you say, when you read this through, "Hold on a moment, this was a subject we actually discussed"? Because this is a document being served on your behalf. You could have said, "Well, it's simpler than that: we actually agreed all this".

- A. Mr Sumption, I already gave this answer. I understand that whatever they asking my attention, I give reply. I didn't understand really which -- how it's connect a trust in Virgin Island with English law or not. This is the point. And they discussing about Virgin Island law, as I understand, here.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. I think the simple point that is being made to you is that if you actually agreed expressly that there was going to be English law governing your arrangements, your relationships in relation to the aluminium interests, why did you let your solicitors or your barristers write in this document "by obvious inference"? Why didn't you say, "Well, hang on, we actually agreed it, you don't need to infer anything"? That's the point that's being made to you.

- A. Yes, I understand the point and my answer is very simple: because I didn't understand what the preference from them -- for them there is. I just present direct answer to direct question. I didn't want to mislead my lawyers because I did not understand why, I'm sorry to say, at that time it was very important, yes? And there's a reason why I just gave direct answer when they --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: And is the point you were making earlier that there is a difference in your mind between the law that governs the trust --

A. Correct.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: -- and the law that actually governs the whole arrangements between the parties?

A. Absolutely correct, my Lady.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: That's the point you're making?

A. Absolutely correct, my Lady.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you.

A. Thank you.

MR SUMPTION: Do you remember telling us this morning in your evidence that the agreement on English law was one of the most important points of the agreement that was made at the Dorchester Hotel?

A. Yes, because, as I told you, we just start at that time to focus on their structuring on the western manner. But again, in spite of we discuss English law, on the other hand we discuss that it will be trust offshore. And it is the reason why I did not understand well the difference between English law, which I present as our agreement, and the law which imply if it will be offshore for the trust.

It's exactly the point which maybe I mislead, but I didn't understand that well. And I think my lawyers as well, they didn't understand that well, and step by step they start to recognise what is happening.

- Q. If there had been an agreement on English law and if this was an important point for you, as you have said, then you would have drawn that to the attention of your lawyers at the very latest when this document was drafted and probably earlier?
- A. Mr Sumption, now I recognise even a little bit more. Now, my Lady, maybe I even recognise why we use British law, not even English law: because British Virgin Island, as I could imagine that time, it had the same party, like England. It means that when we discussing about trust and when we discussing about English law or British law, for me it's the same, but I recognised them as an English law. And again, it's just because -- okay, definitely it's again my responsibility fully, but it's again because I didn't understand perfectly the trust law and the English law which we are discussing.
- Q. One month or so -- a bit more than a month -- after this reply was served, Mr Abramovich's solicitors applied to strike out your claim. Do you remember that?
- A. I remember that it was strike-out but I don't remember the date.
- Q. Well, I can tell you that it was in November.
- A. In November which year?

Q. November 2008.

A. 2008.

Q. About four to six weeks after this pleading was served.

A. Yes.

Q. One of the grounds on which they did it was that it was common ground that Russian law did not recognise the concept of a trust.

A. I didn't know that.

Q. Now, it was only when you were faced with the prospect of having your Rusal claim struck out that you, for the first time, said that there was an express agreement that it would be governed by English law; that's right, isn't it?

A. Mr Sumption, when I was faced with direct question, I gave direct answer, because I didn't understand. And it's only true that when we are discussing about trust, what is that? It's British Virgin Island; it's also, for me, British law. I'm sorry again to repeat the same point. And finally, and I think -- I don't know why lawyers didn't from the beginning focus exactly, but finally, as I understand, I'm sorry that I use the same argument, my Lady, but strike-out was strike out; it means that the court accept that. I'm sorry that I used the same argument again.

Q. You amended your pleading in response to the strike-out application to allege that there was an express agreement, did you not?

- A. Mr Sumption, I just present the same position -- I'm sorry, my Lady, I present the same position to my lawyers and it's not my correction. It's correction of lawyers how they understood me, yes, or how they recognise importance of that; nothing more.
- Q. All that has happened, I suggest, in this case is that you have invented an agreement about the governing law in order to get round the possibility that your claim in respect of Rusal might be struck out.
- A. Mr Sumption, I gave my answer. I didn't mislead anybody; I just answer to questions of my lawyers. And I think they also had the same mess maybe at the beginning like I had, with the trust and with the English law. This is the point.
- Q. What I suggest to you is that there was in fact no agreement to create a trust at all and no agreement about any particular law.
- A. It means that you controvert yourself because your way of logic based that it was we discuss about trust.
- Q. Now, you say that you and Mr Patarkatsishvili received money from Mr Abramovich's companies after 2000 which you say represented your profit share in Rusal. That's part of your case, isn't it?

- A. Just a second, Mr Sumption. We switch to the other point?
- Q. Yes, I'm now dealing with what you claim to have been profit distributions after 2000.
- A. Thank you. Just a second. I can take away?
- Q. Yes.
- A. Thank you. (Pause)
- Now, what we discussing?
- Q. As I understand it, you say that you and Mr Patarkatsishvili received money from Mr Abramovich's companies after 2000 representing your profit shares in Rusal. Is that right? Is that your case or part of it?
- A. That we got money from Abramovich starting from 2000?
- Q. Yes.
- A. It's absolutely correct. We got money for Rusal and for Sibneft and, again, in Le Bourget we are discussing how to share the profit.
- Q. Why did you remain, on your evidence, a partner of Mr Abramovich in aluminium after 2000 if you regarded him as a blackmailer, which I think is your position about what happened in 2000 in December?
- A. Again, we are discussing about which time? We're discussing about 2000 or 2001 already?
- Q. I'm discussing the period after 2000, ie between 2001 and 2004 --

A. Yes, good. Finally.

Q. -- when your case is that you remained a partner of Mr Abramovich in relation to aluminium.

A. "Remained"? (Consults interpreter)

It's absolutely correct.

Q. Why did you remain a partner with Mr Abramovich in relation to aluminium if you regarded him as a blackmailer and no longer trusted him?

A. Do you think I have a lot of choice? It's not. First of all, he under threat took my shares -- my shares -- my interest in Sibneft, mine and Badri interest in Sibneft, and definitely after that we start to worry what -- how to solve the problem. And definitely, as I told you, I never met Abramovich more, but Badri continued relations with him and Badri tried to make everything quiet that finally to get a solution, not to lose everything.

And finally, as I remember, in 2000 -- Badri mentioned that we have problem long before but in 2003, as I remember, Badri -- me and Badri in 2000, even earlier, but we start to discuss several options for aluminium or to sell it to Abramovich because we knew that sooner or later we lose that or to -- with Abramovich together to sell to anybody because we -- as I told you, Badri keeps still relations with Abramovich and met him, or -- that's it: two options which we had in our mind.

And, as I recollect, in 2003, but I just -- I'm sorry to say, my Lady, again, I should -- we should understand the events which happen in parallel. In parallel I try -- I concentrate of the killing of my two partners in politics in 2002 and 2003, Mr Golovlyev and Mr Yushenkov; definitely it was not my focus, yes? But nevertheless in 2003, as I recollect, Badri start to think how we settle that and, as I remember, had meeting in Georgia with Mr Curtis that time and he just present our position which -- I don't remember did he agreed with Roman or not or did he discuss with Roman or not -- that we want to sell our shares directly to Abramovich -- no, directly or indirectly, doesn't matter -- to sell Abramovich.

Q. What steps did you or Mr Patarkatsishvili take from 2001 onwards to discover what the profits of Rusal were?

A. You know, Mr Sumption, I was not responsible for that. I think that Badri communicate to Roman and he inform me that he has connections to Roman and he even met Roman. I knew that Badri had a telephone of his secretary, Marina her name, and Badri told me that, "This telephone which any moment I can communicate to Abramovich", and this is our connection.

But what Badri -- how Badri -- Badri didn't report me; Badri just report me that we -- it was already in situation with Sibneft that Roman stop to pay us our interest and it's happened, as I recollect, with Rusal as well that he didn't pay us what we are part of.

- Q. Did Badri ever tell you that he had taken steps to discover what the profits of Rusal were?
- A. I don't remember that, but I think that he have done that because of just logic, because he just inform me that Roman is not paying us what he must to pay.
- Q. Your case is that you no longer trusted Mr Abramovich in 2001 and later because he'd blackmailed and betrayed you in December 2000.
- A. I stop to trust him completely at all after our meeting in Cap d'Antibes and even in Le Bourget I already maybe have the same understanding. It's correct, I didn't trust him.
- Q. I understand that's your case. So you must have been particularly keen to ensure that you found out what the profits of Rusal were so that you got your 25 per cent?
- A. Mr Sumption, again and again, I never, never -- I want just to stress -- I never was trying to calculate, to check. Badri have done that and Roman have done that; I never do that. And I told you just now that I had amazing headache because my two friends were killed that time. And you think that I go to calculate how much Roman should pay us? I am sorry, it's not.

Q. If you had actually reached an agreement which entitled you to 25 per cent of the profits in Rusal, you would have made sure that you found out what those profits were, wouldn't you?

A. Mr Sumption, again and again, Badri was responsible for that. I trust him, I trust him completely, like I trust before Mr Abramovich.

Q. Neither of you in fact, the evidence will be, made any enquiries on this subject at all.

A. Sorry?

Q. Neither you nor Mr Patarkatsishvili made any enquiries about the scale of the profit at all.

A. Mr Sumption, I am responsible just for myself. I didn't. As far as Badri is concerned, I am sure that he did.

Q. Now, one of the things that you say in your witness statement is that a sum of $175 million in Rusal profits was paid over to you between 2002 and 2005. Do you remember that part of your evidence?

A. My evidence is that when we took a decision to make a second sale of 25 per cent, it was agreed that we'll get -- I don't remember exact number -- $450 million and Roman will pay finally our dividends $135 -- like that -- million. This is my case.

Q. Let me just remind you of the relevant part of your witness statement. If you look at bundle D4, which you haven't got in front of you, but perhaps --

A. D4.

Q. This is your sixth witness statement. It's behind flag 9 in bundle D4.

A. Yes. Flag?

Q. Flag 9.

A. Yes.

Q. And if you turn to page 76 in the bundle numbering D4/09/76, you refer to some paragraphs of Mr Mitchard's witness statement in the strike-out proceedings.

A. Just a second. Mitchard strike-out. Who is Mr Mitchard? I'm sorry, I forgot.

Q. Mr Mitchard is a partner of the firm of solicitors representing Mr Abramovich.

A. Ah, thank you very much.

Q. He made a witness statement in the strike-out. I think I can help you by just summarising what this is about.

A. Yes.

Q. Mr Mitchard had explained that commission payments were made to Mr Patarkatsishvili in relation to this matter and they amounted to $377 million.

A. I don't know anything about that.

Q. I understand. What you're saying, you then refer on paragraph 38 to Mr Marino's witness statement in the striking-out action.

A. Yes.

Q. And Mr Marino is saying that these amounts were not in fact commission payments but they were payments in respect of Rusal profit shares.

A. May I tell, Mr Sumption, I'm almost sure that this knowledge Mr Marino got not from myself directly; maybe he analyse papers and so.

What I remember well, in my witness statement which we are discussing -- I mean not reply but the fourth my witness statement -- that finally we agreed with Mr Abramovich, my Lady, that he will pay us 450 for our interest in Rusal and 155 like that, definitely. I didn't remember all those years; I just recollect when I start to prepare to -- to prepare for the litigation and step by step I recollect what was happening.

And it's the -- I don't remember the point which is in my witness statement but it's clear written here when we sold -- it was the second sale of 25 per cent Rusal, we will got $135 million as our interest cover, our interest for Rusal. This is the point.

Q. I'm going to come to that. I'm talking about a different sum here and it may well be that you can't help us on this.

A. I can't. Definitely I don't remember this number.

Q. But you will see that in paragraph 39 --

A. Yes.

Q. -- you adopt Mr Marino's explanation in his witness statement --

A. Okay.

Q. -- and you say that:

"... [you] believe that $175 million was paid by Mr Abramovich in 2003 and 2004 in respect of... [Rusal profit shares]."

A. Mr --

Q. Can I just help you by putting the question to you.

A. Yes.

Q. I understand that this is not something which you know from recollection but that Mr Marino has deduced from all sorts of documents. Is that right?

A. I don't know. Sorry, Mr Sumption, I don't know.

I don't remember well what we discussed with Mr Marino, yes? And maybe we discuss about some sums. So definitely I didn't recollect 175 or something like that; it's absolutely correct.

Q. You see --

A. And it means that definitely it's the result of Marino -- Mr Marino discussion with me and with the others and with documents which he obtain; nothing more.

Q. Right. I don't want to take up time asking you questions about something which Mr Marino had deduced from documents but you really don't know anything about.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, if the position is that you do not yourself know about this $175 million, it was something that Marino deduced from documents, well, we can look at the documents ourselves in due course and I won't bother to ask you questions about it.

A. Yes.

Q. If, on the other hand, you claim to remember something about it, then I may have some questions. So what's the position?

A. The position is that I remember not everything definitely and I need time to remind better. I'm sorry, my Lady, I am not 18 unfortunately. But if I take time, I can remind; and if I presented some documents and so, some arguments, I can remind, definitely.

And it's happened not one time. It means that when Mr Marino signed documents, I don't remember did he present me some papers or not, but I accept the position. That's it.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So, looking at paragraph 39 --

A. Yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: -- what was the $175 million paid for,
as you can remember now?

A. As I can remember now? It --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Now, yes. Forget about Mr Marino.

A. Yes, as I can remember now, it's our interest in Rusal.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: For your capital interest in the shares or your interest in the profits?

A. No, no, no, no, no, not capital. It's as a profit.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: As a part of the profits or the whole of the profits you were owed in relation to certain years which you can't remember?

A. Absolutely correct, my Lady. Absolutely correct, my Lady.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right.

MR SUMPTION: Now, how do you know that?

A. Because I know that 450 is the other number and it's only number which my Lady put me the question if I remember that it was paid for Rusal as the shares or is it paid as our interest in Rusal, because I remember well what was paid for shares -- not shares -- for shareholder interest: it was 450.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, I think -- I'm quite genuinely trying to help you.

A. Yes.

- Q. I think you are getting confused between what was agreed in July 2004 and what was paid to you in 2003 and 2004. Now, I understand that you are saying that in July 2004 it was agreed to pay $450 million for your shares and $135 million for profits.
- A. Absolutely correct.
- Q. I understand that's your case and I'm going to come to that.
- A. Yes.
- Q. This is a different amount which was paid earlier than that: it's an amount of $175 million which was paid to you between 2003 and 2004. Right? It's a different amount. It's not the same as the $135 million agreed in July 2004.
- A. I think you're correct and it's give me additional understanding that it's just for my interest in Rusal, nothing more. Because what we got for our share or, sorry, for our holding of the shares of Rusal is concerned, it's just $450 million. That's it.
- Q. How do you know that the $175 million that you are talking about in paragraph 39 was a payment of Rusal profit shares?
- A. I think because we recollect together with the others, with Mr Marino on the one hand, with my assistant on the other hand, I was presented some papers and I accept that it's payment for that.

- Q. Right. So do I understand you rightly: in relation to the $175 million, your view -- is this right? -- was based on some documents that your solicitors showed you at the time that these strike-out witness statements --
- A. Not only documents but also, again, I have -- I was lucky that still people with whom I work in Moscow, they are still here, they can help me to recollect what is happening. And, as I understand, that time Mr Fomichev continue to serve me, who was more deeply involved compared with others, and maybe it's Mr Fomichev recollection. I don't just able to say this correctly.
- Q. Mr Berezovsky, in the light of what you have said about the way you operate, it wouldn't surprise anybody to know that you didn't go through these accounting documents in detail at the time. I am simply trying to establish: are you able to help us about the detailed mechanism by which this money reached you and to explain why it must be Rusal profits and not something else?
- A. Again, again, Mr Sumption, I knew perfectly that Roman has obligation to pay money to us because of Sibneft, but we sold that time, and also some continue to come, and Rusal as well.

And my understanding, when we start to present the case we just try to find out all paper which possible to find, all arguments which possible to find, because, as I gave you in my statement, that a lot of documents were destroyed because of rates in Russia, in other places and so on, and I just need -- just use help of my assistants of papers which we have just to reconstruct what happened before. Nothing more.

Q. Right. The dispute about this $175 million is that Mr Abramovich says that the $175 million was part of a larger sum of $377.5 million which was paid, at the request of Mr Patarkatsishvili, to compensate Mr Patarkatsishvili and yourself for the fact that you had lost so much money in --

A. Okay.

Q. -- getting the $1.3 billion to England. That is one version: that's the version of Mr Abramovich.

Your version is that: no, this was nothing to do with compensation for the cost of getting the $1.3 billion to England; your version is that it was Rusal profit shares.

Now, what I want you to tell us is: why do you say that this was not, in fact, a compensation for that cost --

A. Because --

Q. -- but was Rusal profit shares?

A. First of all, I completely, as you know, disagree that Abramovich gave us -- gave, by his own will, some money to support our life abroad or in Russia, it doesn't matter. But again, it's my recollection, a recollection which is based on the papers which I was presented and with my employers (sic) which supply me this information. It's not my personal and only my recollection; it's recollection based on the documents and the other, let's say, facts which I was presented. But, my Lady, I told you -- really it's not a game what I'm playing -- I don't remember that myself.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well.

MR SUMPTION: There's no criticism of this at all.

Does this mean that you are not able to help us on the question why this $175 million was Rusal profit shares; we've got to look at the documents in due course?

A. Yes, I am sure that Mr Abramovich will help you when he will be in witness box.

Q. Let's turn to the sale of the second tranche of Rusal shares in July 2004. Did you have any personal involvement in the negotiation of that transaction?

A. Mr Sumption, give me one minute to switch from this point to the other one, okay?

Q. Yes.

A. Thank you.

Q. Do you want me to repeat the question?

A. Just -- no, I remember your question. Just a second. I want to recollect the events of this time and what happened.

Okay, definitely I did not have any direct involvement. Everything what happened based on Badri and lawyers' connections and with Roman as well. Only the real channel, as I recollect, I had that time was on the one hand my conversation with Badri, on the one hand; on the second hand, my conversation with Mr Fomichev, who assist me and Badri and who visited Georgia, where Badri based that time, to discuss about the sale after Abramovich breach our trust, our agreement of -- sorry, our agreement of '95, '96, and that's it.

But before even he breach, as I mentioned already before, we start -- Badri initiate to start negotiation to sell our shares. And it's happened in April, as I recollect again, 2003. It was meeting of Badri with Mr Curtis. I think Ruslan Fomichev as well -- I don't remember well -- present there. And they discuss the point how to sell our shares, our interest, our shares, in Rusal to Mr Abramovich direct -- to Mr Abramovich for himself.

I just remember one point why maybe I even remember that better, that because I did not trust Mr Abramovich that time already: I gave proposal to have right to buy back half of what we will sell Mr Abramovich, if we will sell. And it's the point which I just -- it's what my idea for Badri because, as you correctly mentioned, at that time I already didn't trust Mr Abramovich.

- Q. Could you focus, please, on the sale negotiations for the second tranche --
- A. Mm-hm.
- Q. -- which ultimately went through in July 2004.
- A. Just a second. July 2004. Am I correct to recollect that Abramovich sold in 2003 his -- the first part of our shares, 25 per cent, and we signed the agreement in 2004 in July? Is this correct?
- Q. You didn't, but Mr Patarkatsishvili did sign certain documents on 20 July 2004.
- A. Yes, yes. Yes, correct.
- Q. Now, the subject that I'm asking you about is the negotiations for those agreements in July 2004.
- A. Yes.
- Q. You have already confirmed that you had no direct involvement; that it was Mr Patarkatsishvili who was involved.
- A. Yes. Moreover, I remember that there were -- that the party, I mean Deripaska, which, as I understand, was presented for this deal by Mr Abramovich, as I remember, they insist that I even have -- that my name didn't have any record to this matter. At the beginning it was different: I was -- nobody hid, and Abramovich knew first of all himself well that I'm shareholder through him as a trust.

But you are correct: I didn't have any direct involvement in this negotiation.

Q. Understood. Did you have any knowledge of that negotiation otherwise than from what Mr Patarkatsishvili told you?

A. I had knowledge from Mr Patarkatsishvili definitely; I had knowledge from Mr Fomichev, as I recollect. That's it. I don't remember did Mr Curtis talk to me or not, I don't remember that well. But Badri and Fomichev definitely.

Q. Mr Curtis was dead.

A. I am sorry. At that time already?

Q. Yes, he died in March 2004.

A. Ah, it means that he just start to negotiate in 2003 in springtime and continued to negotiate in July -- June, July, August 2003, as well at the meeting with Mr Tenenbaum and Mr Fomichev and Badri as well. Yes, you're correct.

Q. You say your sources of information were

Mr Patarkatsishvili and possibly Mr Fomichev. As I understand it, it was Mr Patarkatsishvili who was in charge of the negotiations that led to the sale in July 2004. Is that right?

A. Definitely Mr Patarkatsishvili present his and my interests in that.

Q. Yes.

Now, did you see the various contractual documents that were agreed in July 2004 at the time?

A. No, I didn't see it.

Q. You didn't?

A. I have seen just the notes which were presented to me by -- made by Mr Curtis, but it's also later on. It's just when -- I didn't see the -- I'm sorry that it's too far. I didn't see it.

Q. You didn't see them. Now, were you interested in seeing them? Why didn't you look at them?

A. Because Badri was responsible for that and it is my usual way. It's not exceptional way. As you already put me many times question, correct question, have I seen this paper or this paper, and I absolutely truthful gave you answer: I didn't see that.

Q. So was the position that you trusted Mr Patarkatsishvili and if he was satisfied with the terms, then that was good enough for you?

A. If he explain me, if he explain me why he took this decision or not. I am not just puppet. It mean that if he take some -- if he discuss some way of settling the deal, he should report me and explain me why he make this step or another step. But I never went to the details.

But the principal problem was that -- and the principal problems mainly he discussed with me. One point which was absolutely new for me that he signed agreement with Abramovich not to have any claim against of Abramovich (inaudible). That never Badri discussed with me and it was surprise me when I have seen the first time already been in London.

But the other points maybe not also -- were also principal points, Badri discussed with me. The price, the condition that I will not be include in -- my name will be not mentioned: I accept that position because Badri told me that we don't have choice.

Q. You authorised him to contract on terms that only his involvement would be disclosed, not yours; that's your evidence, isn't it?

A. I accept the position that only his name will be in agreement and not -- and my name will not be at all.

Q. Now --

A. Initial -- again, initial discussion was different and you will see, my Lady, from the documents which we have that they openly discussed that my presence and Badri present as well. Later on they formulate the other position and we accept it.

- Q. Now, your evidence is that you understood from Mr Patarkatsishvili that under the terms that he had negotiated, you were going to get $135 million in outstanding Rusal profits and $450 million for the capital value of your shares.
- A. It was my understanding of what Badri agreed with Mr, as I understand, Deripaska --
- Q. I understand.
- A. -- and Mr Abramovich, because it was dividends or profit.
- Q. Could you please take bundle M4. M4/02/3.
- A. What is that?
- Q. This is the points of claim in the Metalloinvest action which you have brought in the Chancery Division.
- A. Yes.
- Q. Would you like to turn to page 4 M4/02/4.
- A. Just a second, I just want to understand. I understand this is claim for Metalloinvest: it's the first point. The second point: what is this? It's particulars of claim?
- Q. That's right. It's your particulars of claim --

A. It's presented by whom?

Q. It's presented on behalf of you.

A. Yes.

Q. And in paragraph 6 on page 4 you refer to one of the defendants --

A. When it was done? When it was done?

Q. Sorry?

A. When it was done?

Q. The date?

A. Yes.

Q. This was amended on various occasions but the initial document was served in October 2009. It's been amended at various times but not so far as affects paragraph 6.

A. 2009 -- October 2009, okay. Paragraph 6?

Q. Yes. Now, you're talking here about one of the defendants called Cliren, okay?

A. Cliren, okay.

Q. You say:

"... ('Cliren') is a company incorporated in the British Virgin Islands... Until 13 July... Cliren was owned by the Fifth Defendant ('Coalco'). On 13 July... Coalco and Mr Patarkatsishvili executed a Share Sale Agreement under which Coalco sold Cliren to Mr Patarkatsishvili. Mr Patarkatsishvili held Cliren on behalf of himself and Mr Berezovsky and used it to hold certain assets for himself and Mr Berezovsky in accordance with the Joint Venture."

A. Yes.

Q. Now, is that paragraph of your pleading true?

A. I think so. Again, definitely you understand well that I did not even maybe know the name of the companies. Coalco, as I now already learn that this company belong to Mr Anisimov and who -- and the case -- Metalloinvest is case mainly against of Mr Anisimov. But I can't ex -- but again, I confirm that it's correct.

Q. Well, I'm not asking about Coalco. But, as I understand it, you confirm that Cliren was a company which, after 13 July 2004, was acquired by Mr Patarkatsishvili to hold assets on behalf of both himself and you. That's your case, is it not?

A. Mr Sumption, I would like to be precise. This is particulars of claim. Definitely it's based on -- partly on information which I present and on the information which will become clear for us through the documents, through the witnesses and so. And definitely I just believe that it's true, I can't check that.

But again I'm responsible, my Lady, again and again, I'm responsible for that, but I want to explain how much responsibility I take. I am responsible for my signature, I am responsible for understanding that time when I was explained; definitely I am not responsible for my memory that this was like that. I never even remember the company name which Badri own in our favour.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, there's not going to be a convenient moment but would now be a suitable one?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Well, I'll rise now for ten minutes.

(3.17 pm)

(A short break)

(3.29 pm)

MR SUMPTION: Now, Mr Berezovsky, since you have said that you didn't see the agreements that were concluded on 20 July at the time, I'm not going to take you through those agreements. I would, however, like to ask you this.

Did Mr Patarkatsishvili tell you that the $135 million was the difference between what Mr Deripaska was prepared to pay for the 25 per cent second tranche and the amounts that Mr Abramovich had agreed to pay to him in commission? Did he tell you that?

A. My recollection is very simple: that it's money as dividends which Abramovich did not pay us -- not dividends, okay, interest -- which Abramovich didn't pay to us a long time -- I don't know what means "long time" -- and it's money which Badri and Abramovich -- maybe Abramovich and Deripaska together, I don't know that well -- accept to pay us as our profit in Sib -- aluminium business.

And as far as $450 million is concerned, it's a payment for our shares -- not for our -- for the second, because we never accept that Abramovich sold his shares. Yes, it's the reason why -- looking for terminology, I'm sorry to say, but the reality is so -- the second sale of 25 per cent and we got for that $450 million. This is my understanding.

Q. Mr Abramovich's evidence will be that the price that Mr Deripaska was prepared to pay was $450 million. He had agreed to pay a commission to Mr Patarkatsishvili of $585 million. The $135 million was simply the difference between the price that Mr Patarkatsishvili was able to get from Mr Deripaska and the amount of commission that Mr Abramovich had promised him.

Now, all of that was discussed on occasions you weren't present. All I'm asking you is this: did Mr Patarkatsishvili discuss that aspect of the transaction with you?

A. Mr Patarkatsishvili discussed with me very simple point: that we paid 450 million for our shares, let's say, in -- 25 per cent in --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Your beneficial interest that you say you had in the shares?

A. Absolutely correct. Absolutely correct.

And the rest is just what Roman is paying for and it's obligation of Deripaska to pay that and Roman Abramovich will cover -- will pay what we should be paid before for our interest as a profit in Rusal. That's it.

Q. Now, I want to ask you about a different aspect, which is the final stage of my cross-examination of you.

You have disclosed in this action the tape recording made at Le Bourget.

A. Yes, Mr Sumption.

Q. Is it right that you bought that tape from a third party last year in return for 5 per cent of whatever you win in this action?

A. Not only. I accept the proposal that I give 5 per cent of Abramovich if I win and that I also give a boat, Thunder B, to them because they want to pay immediately something, I didn't have cash enough, and Abramovich knows as well. I'm stopped by all parties which I fighting for. And I decide to propose them the boat and they accept the boat and they estimate the boat around $20 million.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: What's -- a boat, sorry?

A. Thunder B. The name of the boat is Thunder B.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Oh right, a boat. Yes, I see.

A. Which was arrested later by General Prosecutor Office when I already sold that.

MR SUMPTION: Right. Can you tell us: what other witnesses are due to be called by you in this action stand to gain financially if you win it?

A. Witnesses, I don't know anybody. I have obligation in front of my former wife, Galina, that she will be paid agreed amount of money. As far as witnesses is concerned, nobody, because it's bribing of the witnesses as I understand.

Q. Is it right that Mr Michael Chernoi stands to gain 5 per cent of your recoveries in this action and the Chancery litigation --

A. No, no, no, no.

Q. -- combined if you win them?

A. No. Definitely I didn't have any agreement with Mike Chernoi that he will be compensated. I try several times to accumulate our power talking to him but he decide to go his way, I decide to go his way -- my way, because of collision against of me is very big. And definitely Michael Chernoi, I know him much better now, because before I didn't know. I met him a lot, many times, after I start to -- he start also with this trial. Definitely we discuss and I give statement even in his favour. And he, as I understand, also is my witness.

But Michael Chernoi is much richer than me, now at least, and it's the reason why I didn't have any agreement with Mike Chernoi and no one witness to be paid from the commission -- as a commission if I win this battle.

- Q. Did Michael Chernoi agree to lend you $50 million to fund this litigation and the Chancery litigation in a transaction which, through Baltic Bank, in return for the repayment, interest and 5 per cent of your recovers in this litigation and the Chancery litigation?
- A. It doesn't coincide with reality completely. It's not a secret that Michael Chernoi help me not with litigation but, as I understand, one of the point of all the parties against of whom I'm fighting, they thought that I will not have enough money for my life even. And Mike Chernoi help me with my life, not with expenses for litigation, yes? It's also absolutely open point.

And moreover, I just want to confirm, my Lady, that we never discussed with Michael Chernoi the compensation as a result of my trial here. But on the other hand, I want just to stress that if I win and Michael will not have money enough for his life, definitely I will give him money for his life like he gave it to me.

Q. Has Michael Chernoi lent you $50 million or arranged for you to be lent $50 million by Baltic Bank?

A. No, no, no, no, no. The number is different, I even don't remember which, but much less.

Q. I see. And have you got an understanding with him that if you win this litigation, he will benefit financially?

A. Again, again, he gave me that money even without guarantee. I didn't sign because I didn't have -- what to put as a guarantee? Sometimes I put guarantee to obtain money: I put, let's say, my house as a collateral to obtain money in banks; I put the other house as well to obtain money for the litigation.

But as far as Michael Chernoi is concerned, it's also exception and surprise for me a little bit that person who didn't have very close relations to me in former time, even I harmed him a little bit when we -- and Gusinsky as well, we describe the aluminium war so-called, yes? And in spite of that, he, at my surprise, help me with my life; and opposite, the people who were very close to me did not do that.

But it's usual story, life story.

MR SUMPTION: Thank you very much, Mr Berezovsky.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, Mr Malek.

THE WITNESS: Mr Sumption, you have finished with me?

MR SUMPTION: Yes.

THE WITNESS: Thank you.

My Lady -- okay, later on. Because, Mr Sumption,

I just want to --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, just a second. The court is --

THE WITNESS: Sorry, sorry, sorry.

MR SUMPTION: You might be wise to keep this point to yourself, Mr Berezovsky.

THE WITNESS: No, you'll love that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, court is not a social occasion.

THE WITNESS: I'm sorry. Sorry, sorry.

Cross-examination by MR MALEK

MR MALEK: Your Ladyship asked us, the Chancery defendants, to confirm whether or not we adopted lines of questioning, and the reference for that is Day 2, page 146, lines 12 to 14, and I confirm that I do adopt the line of questioning raised by Mr Sumption.

Mr Berezovsky, can we start off by going back to the acquisition of the aluminium assets and going back to February 2000, which we covered earlier today.

A. Just a second, okay. February 2000. Yes, yes, now
I return back.

Q. Yes. Your case in substance is that the KrAZ assets were a portfolio of aluminium industry assets which you acquired with Badri and Mr Abramovich in February 2000;

that's your case?

A. KrAZ, it's Russian, it's Krasnoyarsky aluminium plant, yes?

Q. Yes, it's all those assets together.

A. Yes, because I already in English -- I forgot even in Russian. It's KrAZ, it's correct.

Q. I just want to clarify some aspects of this.

A. February 2000 you want to return back, yes?

Q. Yes.

A. Thank you.

Q. Can we just deal first of all with the question of the nature of the interests that you acquired.

As I understand it -- and confirm whether I've got this right -- the interests that you acquired was what? Was it against shares in companies? Was it in relation to claims against any person? Can you help us -- can you explain to us the nature of the interest which you acquired in February 2000, based on your understanding at the time?

A. Yes. That time we bought four companies which today present this position which -- just a second, February 2000 -- which we proposed to buy as far -- my recollection is that Mr Bosov the first person who presented to me and then Badri told me that he already knows about that and Mr Anisimov, the person who had already long relations, made this proposal. And -- but the discussions start, as I told you -- as I told today, at the end of '99 -- at the end of '99 and discussion was initiated not by me, by people who worry about political instability, and that's it.

- Q. I'm just trying to clarify because you could have acquired shares in particular companies; you could have acquired assets in the companies; you could have acquired rights against the companies.
- A. As I understand, we finally got shares of the companies. I don't know how it was structured before; I just understand that we -- when we bought -- first of all, it was agreement, yes, between parties: between on the one hand Badri, Mr Abramovich, Mr Shvidler, what we discussed together with Mr Sumption; and on the other hand the owners of the assets of the company. I don't know how it was structured. And, as I understand, it was agreement first of all and then, on basing of this agreement, they sold their offshore company, I don't know how it was organised, but the owners of KrAZ and the other company owned that through offshore company, again, as my understanding is.
- Q. Now, the KrAZ agreement, 10 February -- and the reference is H(A)17/146T to 150T --
- A. Just a second.

Q. -- we know that you are not a signatory to that.

A. Yes, it's correct.

Q. You tell us in your evidence -- and could you turn to that, please, in your fourth statement, paragraph 262, which is D2, tab 17, page 251 D2/17/251.

A. D2?

Q. Yes, it's going to be taken to you. D2/17/251.

A. Yes. The paragraph?

Q. Yes, it's at 262.

A. Just a second. (Pause)

Yes.

Q. You say that you've been shown a copy of the contract --

A. Just a second.

I was shown during litigation, not shown before.

Q. Yes. And my question is: am I right in saying that the first time that you actually saw a copy of that agreement was in the course of the litigation?

A. You're absolutely correct.

Q. Now, the next question is about how you held your interest in the KrAZ assets that you say you acquired in February 2000. You've explained to us in the course of your evidence that you were considering in late 1999 asset protections and schemes.

My question is this: was the interest that you acquired in KrAZ an interest that you held personally or was it held by a company or trust on your behalf?

- A. First of all, I can't recognise difference between how we hold KrAZ, I didn't think about that directly, yes, because for me it was just one deal about four companies, yes? I didn't specify it's KrAZ, it's Bratsk or something else.

And the way how we hold that, I also present today that finally we agreed between me, Abramovich and Badri conditions of our cooperations and then Abramovich and Deripaska prepare this document which we -- or team of Abramovich and Deripaska, they prepare that, and then -- and we discuss, as I present before, the terms, general our relations between Badri, me and Abramovich on the one hand and us and Deripaska from the other hand, and these terms we just as a principle confirm at the meeting in Dorchester Hotel. And, as I understand what was agreed, we hold that through the -- some structures which Abramovich create and keeping our interest as a trust.

- Q. The question is slightly different, Mr Berezovsky. You acquire assets but you normally hold them in a company. So, for example, the French property, it's not held in your own name; it's held in the name of a company. When you buy a boat --

- A. As I understand, it was holding -- moreover, in Le Bourget Abramovich told us that he already created trust structures which hold the shares. I don't know the details of that.

Q. But your interest in the KrAZ assets that you've told us about, can you help us in terms of which trust or company held it?

A. I don't know the company which hold that.

Q. Now, what about Logovaz? Because one of your witnesses is going to give evidence that Logovaz was involved in a possible deal involving Mr Zhivilo of Mikom. Is that something that you're familiar with?

A. I don't familiar with that. I just familiar that later on, when we obtain interest in aluminium assets and later on Roman and Deripaska, they extend empire and they try to obtain the other assets, like this Novokuznetsky aluminium plant. But I heard no details about that, I just heard they're expanding, because that time I already left Russia.

Q. And this morning you told us about an article in the Vedomosti in March, I think, 2000 where you made reference to Logovaz's decision to expand into the aluminium industry. Do you recall that?

A. Yes, yes, I can use Logovaz because it's company which I funded from the beginning and which directly or indirectly presence and maybe it's just for -- if I create some public -- maybe some publicly, me, my name, coordinate with Logovaz name because it's the story which I start from the beginning my own, yes? And that means when I say -- when I, let's say, present Logovaz, it means me, yes?

I did not know how it was organised in reality. I don't think that Logovaz was involved in that; at least I don't know anything about it.

Q. So did Logovaz acquire an interest in the KrAZ assets in February 2000?

A. Definitely not.

Q. So why were you reporting in March that --

A. Again, because people know me as Logovaz, yes? And it's reason -- maybe it's not special reason but -- I don't know why I said that -- but Logovaz itself was not involved in that.

Q. Misinformation?

A. Misinformation, if you like, like that.

Q. Could we turn to your statement again at 262, which is in your fourth statement at D2, tab 17, page 252 D2/17/252.

A. Just a second. Just a second. It's my witness statement, yes?

Q. Yes, at 262.

A. 262, yes, I have.

Q. What you say is:

"Although I was not a signatory to the agreement, I considered that I acquired interests under it as a result of the agreements with Badri..."

This is at page 252. You say that you:

"... acquired interests... as a result of the agreements with Badri and... Mr Abramovich that I have discussed above."

Do you see that?

A. Yes, yes --

Q. Do you see that?

A. The purchasers under the agreement are said to be Mr Abramovich, Mr Shvidler and Badri, yes?

Q. Yes. It's --

A. There are three signature -- all three are signed signature.

Q. Yes.

A. Yes, yes, okay.

Q. So the point is although you didn't sign the agreement, you acquired interest under it as a result of the agreements that you refer to?

A. Yes, I didn't sign that because of the reasons which I explain already today: because of the reason that, on the one hand, Abramovich insist and I accept that my political position is very exploded and it's the reason why I should not sign.

On the other hand, I accept that because at that time I have -- I will have been a member of the Parliament, as Abramovich as well, and it was forbidden to participate in business directly. I participate in the meeting: it's not just breach of law because I start this negotiation about acquiring aluminium assets before I become member of the Parliament.

Q. Yes, I don't want to interrupt you, Mr Berezovsky, but my question is: when you say that you acquired interest under it, am I right in saying that you thought that you were actually a party to the contract although you didn't sign it?

A. No -- yes, yes, I absolutely understand that I am party.

Q. Yes. And what obligations did you assume under this contract, personally?

A. I think that I almost deliver my obligations because everybody knew, including Abramovich, including all the party, that I was the key person who made this deal happen because, as I told you, it's a little bit strange, and you accept that the price was not market price, it was lower than market price, I mean for the assets which they propose. And the reason why they do that was only one: they afraid of future political battles and they decide to sell it.

And I accept the risk because I understood well that we winning, yes? Elections, I mean. Not many people understood that so clear like me. And it's the reason why I have benefit from my knowledge, from my intuition and from my hard work to reach -- to win the elections. It means that I took this risk and it means that my obligations are almost delivered that time already, not exactly, but everybody understood that Putin will become president in March.

And it's the reason why I think that everybody understood my obligations and I already invested much more than anybody more that time.

Q. You say that you were "the key person who made this deal happen".

A. Definitely.

Q. Are you sure about that?

A. 100 per cent.

Q. Could we have a look at your statement at paragraph 256 D2/17/250.

A. Yes.

Q. In fact I think it's 257. Let me just get the reference. You say that:

"I should say that although I have mentioned Mr Bosov, it was Badri who was the deal-maker with regard to the purchase of the Bratsk and Krasnoyarsk assets."

A. Yes.

Q. So what is your evidence: that you were the key person who put the deal together, or was it Badri?

A. I was the key person and it's clear why: because the initial point was people came to me asking -- proposing to sell. If they will not come to me, it means that it's no deal at all in the beginning.

It's in completion, I mean in negotiation later on, how to structure, how to -- and so-so, definitely Badri and Roman, they play amazing role in that. But as far as their generation of -- not generation -- as far as the beginning of everything, without being impossible to move forward, definitely I was the key person and everybody understood that.

Q. Yes, and I think you have told us that you were heavily involved in the negotiations and attended a number of meetings?

A. A couple -- in several meetings I was involved, as you know, for example Dorchester meeting, and I talk also with Mr Abramovich and with Mr Badri as well.

But again, if you ask me why I think that I'm key person, it's not because I talk with Mr Abramovich or with Mr Badri. It's not so. I key person just because people who propose that, they propose it to me; not even to Badri, I would like to say. Because they understood that we -- they did not maybe believe so much like we believe that we'll create political stability in Russia, we'll win elections.

It's regular story: before elections all the time, people don't believe what -- are not sure what is happening. And after it's happened with Sibneft, for example, absolutely as well because a lot of speculation even during our discussion and even still in Russia that we bought just for $100 million. We bought because nobody believe that Communists will lose. And next day after we won, I had proposal for $1 billion.

It's absolutely clear that we won political battle and people who propose us understood that we understood better what is happening later than they.

- Q. Mr Berezovsky, my question is really focusing at this stage just on the aluminium acquisition in the KrAZ assets in February. We're not talking about Dorchester.
- A. Mm-hm.
- Q. You told us in answer to questions from Mr Sumption this morning -- and you don't need to turn to it but the reference is at [draft] page 15, where you say you participated in several meetings before the meeting in the Dorchester Hotel. Then at [draft] page 17 you say you recall meetings with Lev Chernoi and you refer to meetings with Mr Anisimov.

A. Yes.

Q. And then you refer to meetings with the brothers and with -- with David Reuben.

A. Not brothers; with brother. With Mr Reuben.

Q. Yes, with --

A. Mr David Reuben, not with Simon.

Q. So it was just in fact David Reuben, not Simon?

A. Yes, yes, correct.

Q. So you've referred to a number of meetings.

Now, I just want to look at that in slightly more detail. So the point is that you, on your evidence, were heavily involved in the negotiations?

A. Not heavily, because people want to see me that I'm really real, I'm sorry to say that, and this was -- definitely they want to understand that it's really me who is part of this deal. I think particularly it was important for David Reuben because he was foreigner, he was not so hard involved in that. But on the other hand, as I told you, that time I had good relations with Mr Anisimov and who else who I mentioned.

Q. But the point is that you were involved in the discussions leading up to the agreement; that's what I think you're telling us?

A. Not -- yes, from general, general point that I'm the person who is really in the project.

Q. Could you pick up M4 and go to tab 4.

A. I should keep that?

Q. No, you can put the -- that's the only file that you need to have open. Turn, please, to tab 4. Go to page 35 M4/04/35. Somebody should find it.

A. Yes, 35. What is that?

Q. I'll explain this to you now. It's the defence of the third, fifth and tenth defendants: that's Mr Anisimov and the companies related to him.

A. Yes.

Q. And what is pleaded there -- could you turn to paragraph 20 --

A. Yes.

Q. -- which is at M4/04/35. What is pleaded there, set out, is this:

"Mr Berezovsky was neither a party to the KrAZ Agreement nor was he present at any of the meetings at which the sale of the KrAZ Assets was discussed or agreed. And, as far as Mr Anisimov is aware, at no time did Mr Berezovsky have any interest in, or entitlement to, those assets."

What I would like to do is focus on the first sentence, which is that:

"Mr Berezovsky... was [not] present at any of the meetings at which the sale of the KrAZ assets was discussed or agreed."

- A. Again, definitely I had a lot of meetings with Mr Anisimov and definitely it's absolutely not true what Anisimov try to present here.

As well you know, my Lady, that Anisimov said that he never have been my friend, that he doesn't even almost know -- doesn't know who is Mr Berezovsky. I just want to remind you -- this is in the papers -- that Mr Anisimov even present on my birthday when I celebrate in Cap d'Antibes. It was 2001, I celebrate 55 years, and it happened definitely after we already made a deal about Rusal is concerned. Anisimov, even more, he came even day before to celebrate birthday of my daughter, who was born 22nd January.

I just -- I'm sorry that is so long again. It's completely wrong what Mr Anisimov is presenting here.

- Q. And it's wrong because you were present at meetings at which the sale of KrAZ assets were discussed?

- A. I don't remember any meeting which I present. I just remember that I talk to Mr Anisimov about that or Mr Anisimov talk with me about that. I remember that Mr David Reuben talk with me about that. But I don't remember, I don't recollect meeting, formal meeting, where we are sitting together to discuss. I don't remember that. Moreover, I'm almost sure that I haven't present on the meeting.

Q. I thought earlier you were telling us that you were at a lot of the meetings?

A. "Meetings" means for me -- I'm sorry, maybe it's the miscalculation in translation. "Meeting" for me is, for example, I meet Mr Anisimov; not formal meeting, just to discuss with him. Or I met someone, David Reuben. For me it's not meeting; it's just we met and we discuss.

It's not meeting with prepared the plan of the meeting, with presence there, the date there; I haven't been there, it's true. But as far as my meeting, personal meeting with Mr Anisimov to discuss that, with Mr Reuben to discuss that, it's happened like that. It's not formal meeting, it's true, because I was not a party of this type of meetings.

Q. Could you move on to, in the same bundle, M4/08/122. Somebody should find that for you, please.

A. Yes.

Q. In response to this, what you -- this is your document --

A. Yes.

Q. -- served on your behalf. As to the first sentence, the one that we've just been looking at --

A. Yes, yes. (a), yes?

Q. Yes.

A. Just a second. Just a second.

Q. Read it to yourself.

A. Yes. What is that, this paper?

Q. If you go to page 117, it's a reply and if we go to the --

A. This is reply of whom?

Q. It's your reply.

A. Yes, okay.

Q. If you turn to the last page of this at 134 --

A. Just a second, again I want just to be correct. Where is the end of this reply?

Q. It's M4/08/134.

A. 134, just a second. It's my reply, it's not Mr -- no, it's Mr Marino, it's not my reply, yes? It's pleading of Mr Marino, as I understand, correct?

Q. Yes --

A. It's not my reply, yes?

Q. It is.

A. No, I mean -- Mr Marino signed, it means my reply but through Mr Marino, yes.

Q. Yes, but just look at the statement of truth:

"The claimant [that's you] believes that the facts stated in the reply are true."

A. Yes, yes, no, no, I accept.

Q. You understand?

A. I just want to clarify. Nothing more.

Q. What you say at paragraph 10 --

A. Paragraph?

Q. At page M4/08/122, at 10(1).

A. Paragraph 8. I don't see paragraph 8, I'm sorry.

Q. Sorry, it's page M4/08/122 and it's paragraph 10(1).

What it says is:

"As to paragraph 20..."

And I'll read it:

"(a) It is admitted, subject to paragraph 9(1) of this Reply, that Mr Berezovsky did not participate in the negotiations in person. As set out above, Mr Patarkatsishvili had conduct of the negotiations on behalf of the purchasers..."

If we then go back one page, you can see that 9(1) reads:

"Mr Patarkatsishvili was asked" --

A. 9?

Q. 9(1).

A. Just a second.

Q. Page 121, going back one page.

A. Yes.

Q. What is stated there is that:

"Mr Patarkatsishvili was asked in late 1999 to assist Mr Cherney and Mr Anisimov in resolving a dispute about control of aluminium production plants... Shortly thereafter, Mr Bosov approached Mr Berezovsky with a proposal that he purchase various aluminium plant interests in the Krasnoyarsk and Bratsk regions..."

A. Yes, it's absolutely correct what is written here.

Q. Yes, but the suggestion that you were involved in a number of discussions --

A. Again, number of informal, my Lady, discussions, which what I tell. It means that definitely they talk to me, they negotiate with me, I was not involved in formal discussion with a schedule and so, but definitely each of them who I mentioned, yes, they talk to me. I knew well that time, maybe even better than others except of Mr Anisimov, I knew well Lev Chernoi as well and I had already practise to cooperate with him on the other field, in politics and so, because he like to discuss that and so.

But again it was my participation as at private meetings, not in formal meetings. It means that I did not discuss exact terms and so-so, they knew that I'm one of the -- part of the party, that's it, and I am not -- not because of my status, not because of that, but definitely on the other hand I really had a lot to do but I met them privately and talked to them about this deal because I knew that they are those people who sell their interests. That's it.

Q. So the statement, going back to paragraph 10(1) at page M4/08/122, that you did not participate in the negotiations in person, is that true?

A. Again, what means meeting? Let's -- okay, let's go to the point. What means meeting and what means negotiations? Meeting for me is formal meeting; negotiations, it's negotiations during this formal meeting. I never participate in formal meeting, it's true, but I met them, each of them I knew, each of them well, and I discuss with them. Just, again, as I told you starting to answer to your question, I just show up that I am here. It's true that we are going to buy and I am part of this deal. That's it.

Q. What discussions did you have with Mr Anisimov about this deal in terms of --

A. Anisimov just -- I don't recollect definitely which kind of discussion I had with him but Anisimov was close friend of Badri and I didn't recollect that I met Mr Anisimov separately for that. I met him together with Badri and I don't recollect exactly what we were discussing.

At the same time I don't recollect exactly what we discuss with Mr Reuben David. And you remember that even in my statement, because I really forgot, even in my statement I think, which I present here, I did not mention Reuben and so but here I mentioned because that time I remembered this, that I had these meetings, yes. And that's it.

Q. You remember it today, is that right?

A. What do you mean today? Today, definitely I don't remember well.

Q. Yes. If we can turn to your statement at paragraphs 254 to 257 of B4 D2/17/250.

A. Just a second, can I keep that or you don't need it anymore?

Q. I don't need it anymore, you can put it away.

A. 25?

Q. Yes, 254. It's right that --

A. Just a second. I just need to remind because a lot of jumps from one point to another point.

Q. Yes, let me just pose a question and then you can answer it. There's absolutely no mention here of any discussion or meeting with Mr Anisimov, is there?

A. No, again, it's even did not mention here discussion with Mr Reuben as well, as I understand, but on the other hand I remind that, okay, in some moment, I present that today, my recollection, yes, that I met definitely Mr Reuben, I met definitely Mr Anisimov.

It's not possible without Anisimov because, as I said, Badri -- Anisimov was very close to Badri and it's Anisimov who was one of the shareholder, as I understand, the assets which we bought.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, it's very difficult, isn't it, to make things up as you go along? About ten minutes ago --

A. Sorry?

Q. It's difficult to make things up as you go along.

A. Yes.

Q. Ten minutes earlier, and this is at [draft] page 156, you said:

"Again, definitely I had a lot of meetings with Mr Anisimov and definitely it's absolutely not true what Anisimov tried to present here."

A. Absolutely correct, because I have meeting with Mr Anisimov not because of this deal as well. As far as this deal is concerned, I had meetings with Mr Anisimov in Badri presence. I don't remember that -- I can't recollect that I had separate meetings with Mr Anisimov. I recollect that with Mr Badri. What is wrong with that?

MR MALEK: My Lady, I was about to move on to something else.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well. I'll finish there for the day. The court is not sitting tomorrow. Monday,

Mr Rabinowitz, 10.15?

MR RABINOWITZ: Yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Malek, are you content with that?

MR MALEK: Yes, absolutely.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Sumption, are you content with 10.15.

MR SUMPTION: Yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well. 10.15 Monday.

Again, don't talk to anyone about --

THE WITNESS: Yes, my Lady. Thank you.

Cross-examination by MR MALEK .....	150

Monday, 17 October 2011

(10.15 am)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, Mr Malek.

Cross-examination by MR MALEK (continued)

MR MALEK: Mr Berezovsky, on Thursday, I was asking you questions about the acquisition of the KrAZ assets in early 2000. You gave evidence about your role in the negotiations in relation to those assets which you contend you acquired.

There's one point I want to clarify: in your oral evidence you said that you had a lot of meetings with Mr Anisimov and you made the point that there's a distinction in your mind between meetings and discussions and personal meetings and formal meetings. Now, Mr Anisimov disputes all of this and I'm not going to go into that, but I have one question and that is this: did you ever indicate to Mr Anisimov that you were one of the acquirers of the KrAZ assets?

A. I never talk to Mr Anisimov about KrAZ assets. I talk to Anisimov, and it's definitely, I talk about that I part of the deal of all four assets together. I didn't discuss that KrAZ or Bratsk or the other one, all of that. I never -- at least I don't recollect that I discuss especially about KrAZ. We discuss about all deal together and it's definitely correct.

Q. So the answer to my question is that you never indicated to Mr Anisimov that you were one of the persons acquiring the KrAZ assets; am I right?

A. Completely wrong. Anisimov absolutely knew perfect that I acquire four of them, including KrAZ as well.

Q. My question is: did you tell him that?

A. Definitely, because we discuss all assets together. Anisimov absolutely perfectly knew about KrAZ; and not only about KrAZ, about the other assets as well.

Q. Could we then turn to the pleadings in the Metalloinvest action and turn, please, to -- and you'll be provided with this -- M4, tab 04 at page 35 M4/04/35.

A. What is that?

Q. If you go back to page 28 of this bundle, you will see that it's the amended defence of the third to fifth and tenth defendants: that's Anisimov defendants.

A. This is Anisimov defendants, yes?

Q. Yes.

A. Okay.

Q. We focused on Thursday on the first sentence and let me just read it --

A. Which point, I'm sorry?

Q. Paragraph 20 at page 35.

A. Yes.

Q. "Mr Berezovsky was neither a party to the KrAZ Agreement nor was he present at any of the meetings at which the sale of the KrAZ Assets was discussed or agreed."

Then the second sentence:

"And, as far as Mr Anisimov is aware, at no time did Mr Berezovsky have any interest in, or entitlement to, those assets."

A. Mm-hm.

Q. Now, you dispute that and I think what you're telling us in relation to the second sentence is that you had a conversation with Mr Anisimov where it was clear that you were one of the acquirers of the KrAZ assets; that's correct, isn't it?

A. Yes, my Lady, first of all, last time we finish with a little bit misunderstanding of the word of "meetings", yes? Because I never pretend -- I never claimed that my English is so bad that I didn't understand the sense, but it's important to concentrate because "meetings" mainly, in my feelings of English, is mainly business meetings, yes? I discuss mainly about not social but not with plans, with paper, the date and so. I met many times Anisimov because, as I told you before, he was close friend of Badri.

And moreover, as I told before, Anisimov for Badri was key person who was involved in that business. For me, at the beginning it was Bosov, Mr Bosov, but Badri refuse that, saying that Bosov is just playing game and so-so. And I had a lot of meetings in Badri's presence with Anisimov as well, yes? And --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: You're saying these weren't formal meetings with agendas and boardrooms and --

A. Yes, absolutely correct. But all the time the point arise because it was big deal. And Anisimov and Bosov they discuss, moreover, I remember well that Bosov insist that he is the dealer who provide for us a deal, and Anisimov to the contrary said he is the person who made this deal happen.

And, moreover, Bosov later on even tried to -- I invite him in the court here. If he wants to be paid, as he told, commissions, I said, "No problem, come to the court and prove that you are person who really made this deal happen", yes? And definitely I met Anisimov as well, definitely I met Chernoi as well.

And, for example, I give you clear example that Anisimov was the person who came even to Kharacheyevo-Cherkessia when I fight for election campaign there, and it was late December/middle December '99. And Anisimov -- I have even picture. I forgot about that, I'm sorry to say. But we have even picture of Anisimov, who today claim that he hate me, but he came to support my election campaign in Kharacheyevo-Cherkessia. It's not -- and at that time we also discussed, in spite I was very much involved in elections campaign definitely. But Badri had been there, Anisimov had been there, Badri support me a lot also in election campaign, and definitely we discuss about this future deal.

Yes, it's not -- we just -- but -- and only -- also after, in 2000, it's happened the same. Time to time we met and we discuss that, with Bosov, with Anisimov, with Lev Chernoi, as I told before; not Michael Chernoi, Lev Chernoi.

MR MALEK: Have you finished?

A. Yes, thank you.

Q. Can we go back to my question.

A. Yes.

Q. Paragraph 20, which we're just looking here at M4, tab 4, page 35 M4/04/35:

"... as far as Mr Anisimov was aware, at no time did Mr Berezovsky have any interest in, or entitlement to, those assets."

And your evidence today is that you told him?

A. Absolutely.

Q. Now, let's see how you responded to that allegation.

A. Yes.

Q. And if you could turn in the same bundle, which is M4, to tab 08 and then go to page 122 M4/08/122.

A. Yes.

Q. We can see from page 117 M4/08/117 that this is your reply. So this is your pleading --

A. Just a second. This is my reply?

Q. Yes.

A. Just a second.

Q. 117.

A. Yes, just a second.

Q. And look at 134.

A. Just a second. 122, the page, yes?

Q. Yes.

A. Just a second, I just want to have a look to the end.

And I signed that, yes?

Q. It was signed on your behalf.

A. On my behalf. Who signed that?

Q. Mr Marino?

A. Mr Marino, okay. Where is his signature?

Q. 134 M4/08/134.

A. Okay, thank you.

Q. If we then turn back to 122 --

A. Just a second. Yes, I am on 122.

Q. It starts off:

"As to paragraph 20" --

A. "As to paragraph 20", yes.

Q. We've dealt with the first part but go to subparagraph 2:

"As to the second sentence..."

And then you just read that to yourself.

A. Yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: This is (b), is it?

A. (b), it's (b). 10.1(b); correct?

MR MALEK: 10, subparagraph 2?

A. Ah, 2, not 1.

Q. Yes?

A. 2?

Q. (a), (b), (c) and (d).

A. (a), (b), (c) and (d), yes. But (d) is on the other page; correct?

Q. Over the page at 123.

A. Yes.

Q. So if we could go to the first point at (a), that's a reference to --

A. I'm sorry, 2(a), yes?

Q. Yes. The first statement of Pietro Marino refers to Mr Reuben's account, and then the second point:

"Under the circumstances, it was common knowledge among the vendors that Mr Berezovsky was one of the purchasers..."

A. Yes.

Q. Point (c) is:

"It was... widely reported in the Russian and Western press that Mr Berezovsky and Mr Abramovich had together acquired the KrAZ Assets."

A. Yes.

Q. Then over the page at (d):

"In the circumstances, the second sentence of paragraph 20..."

A. Yes.

Q. It's right to say that there is no mention here of any conversation that you had with Mr Anisimov; that's right, isn't it?

A. I gave my answer: I had a lot of conversation with Mr Anisimov as well and Mr Anisimov perfectly knew that I am there, those ones who is acquiring to buy KrAZ as well. I don't remember that I discussed KrAZ separately from the other assets, but I remember well that we discuss not one time all assets which we are looking to buy.

Q. It's right to say that the first time that you made an allegation, whether in a pleading or witness statement, that you had discussions with Mr Anisimov to the effect that you were one of the acquirers was in your evidence last week?

A. Again, it's definitely not. It's -- again, it's -- as he done the pleading, decide Mr Marino how he understood me and I am responsible only what I am presenting you now. I repeat again and again: I talked with Mr Anisimov not one time, many times; not in formal meetings, in informal meetings, in presence -- I don't remember one to one, because Mr Anisimov was close to Badri, but many times in presence of Badri at least. And I never -- I don't remember that we discuss KrAZ separately from the other assets but we discuss KrAZ as part of the deal in general. This my memory is.

Q. The truth is, Mr Berezovsky, you had no discussions with Mr Anisimov about the acquisition of the KrAZ assets by you?

A. Definitely yes, again. Yes, yes and yes.

Q. I want to pick up a point that you make in this pleading, if we could just look at it again in your reply at paragraph 10, subparagraph 2(b) at the bottom of M4/08/122 where you make reference that:

"It was... widely reported in the Russian and Western press that Mr Berezovsky and Mr Abramovich had together acquired the KrAZ Assets."

In that context, could you turn, please, to your statement at D2, tab 17 at page 250 D2/17/250.

A. 250?

Q. Yes.

A. Just a second.

Q. Please just read to yourself paragraph 258 towards the bottom there. (Pause)

A. Okay. 258, yes?

Q. Yes, it's the last sentence that I would like to ask you some questions, where you say this:

"For this reason, we agreed at Mr Abramovich's request that Badri's and my interest in the aluminium assets subsequently acquired on behalf of the three of us would not be made visible and would instead be held by Mr Abramovich through offshore corporate vehicles."

A. Yes.

Q. If we can follow, using your phrase, the logic, that would mean that your name should not be referred to in the contractual documentation; is that right?

A. I think that is correct.

Q. And if you're right about that, could you explain why Mr Badri's name appeared in the KrAZ agreement of 10 February and other agreements?

A. I already gave you explanation: because Badri was not in the same area of risk like me. Badri also had been in the area of risk because he manage ORT, the main political leverage, but definitely it was absolutely different as far as me is concerned.

And moreover, you know well that even when I was in strong conflict against of Putin already, he propose Badri to stay in Russia because in spite of everybody understood well that we close friends and partners, but nevertheless they understood that we have different involvement in politics. And when I came and I already left Russia and Putin nevertheless invite Badri to talk to him -- I don't remember left or already was planned with Putin at least -- he invite Badri to propose him to stay in Russia and forget about me.

It means that definitely the understanding of the risk for Badri and for myself was completely different.

- Q. But looking at paragraph 258, where you say that Mr Abramovich made the request "that Badri's and my interest in the aluminium assets subsequently acquired on behalf of the three of us would not be made visible", the logic of what you're saying here would indicate that Mr Badri's name should not appear either in any contract documentation.
- A. It's happened what happened and, as you know, Badri signed agreement when we bought assets and me not. And this is the story, that's it. But again, I didn't sign for two reasons. One of the reasons, as I mentioned you, was much more involvement in politics than Badri.

On the other hand, I have been a deputy of Parliament and, according of that, I was not allowed to sign these documents. Abramovich signed, but it's his choice to go against of law. I continue participating in negotiation, again on the basis of not meetings, business meetings, because I start this before I was elected in Duma and it's the reason why I continue to participate in some kind of not precise negotiation how it will be concluded but general terms, what we discussed long time with Mr Sumption the last day, Thursday. It's exactly the way how I participate in discussions.

- Q. But if your interest was not to be made visible using the language in your witness statement, why were you giving interviews to the press in March 2000 referring to the fact that you had acquired an interest in aluminium?
- A. In March 2000, situation was a little bit different that time because, as you remember, Putin won elections and it was not -- at that time everybody calculate risk, at least me, less than before. It's turned out that very quick our relations were broken and nevertheless this was a little bit new time. And moreover, as you know well, we in spring 2000, we start to work to prepare the structures on the west which should structurise and put absolutely, let's say, in proper western way our interest in all our assets, including aluminium assets.

Q. Could Mr Berezovsky be provided H(A) volume 18, opened at page 198 H(A)/18/198.

A. Could I keep my evidence?

Q. Put it aside. We may need to go back to it.

A. And this one, Anisimov?

Q. You may put that away.

A. Thank you.

Q. Just putting it into context, you were elected to the Duma in the middle of December 1999?

A. I think 17 December '99.

Q. It was clear that President Putin was going to be elected by the end of 2000?

A. It was -- no --

Q. 1999?

A. No, Putin was elected in March 2000, in March 2000. But as far as me is concerned, for me, definitely understanding was much better than for the others and my prediction was that Putin will be elected and it's the reason why I took so much risk to myself.

Q. And the KrAZ assets, the documentation we see was in February, middle of February? We've seen the documentation.

A. I just want again to stress that I don't have in my mind the difference between KrAZ documentation, between the other plants' documentation. And, as I told you, I haven't seen the document which Badri, Shvidler and Roman Abramovich signed. I have seen this document just later, but that's it. This is my recollection.

Q. But President Putin had been acting president on 31 December 1999?

A. Ah, he become acting but he was not elected.

Q. Yes, but he was acting president --

A. Yes.

Q. -- on 31 December?

A. Yes. But, as you know, again, it was big battle who win elections, Communists or Putin again. And you know that even up to the last moment before elections on 7 March it was a big discussion: will we have the second round or not? We won in the second -- in the first round it's good. But you're absolutely correct that from 1 January 2000 Putin was announced [by] Yeltsin as the acting president.

Q. And if we now turn to 198, this is the interview that we looked at --

A. Yes.

Q. -- in your questions with Mr Sumption and that was an interview with Vedomosti on 24 March.

A. Mm-hm.

Q. What had changed between February and March which meant that you couldn't be visible in relation to the contractual documentation on 10 February and yet just about a month later you were quite happy to give press statements indicating that you were interested in the aluminium?

A. I think that I already gave the answer: because 10 February, Putin was not elected still. It was -- election was in front of us. And mainly people really, and particularly maybe Roman Abramovich because he doesn't feel well like me what happened later, everybody afraid that Putin will not be elected and I had -- but when he become elected, definitely it was much more predictability, much more clear what happen. At least many people think that we continue reforms; it's happened opposite, it's the other point. But that time completely different from the time of 10 February. It was before elections and after elections. This is the main point.

Q. Mr Rabinowitz told us on Day 1 that in March/April 2000 you were basking in the glory of having been involved in Putin's election victory. He went on to say political exile was some way off. Was that a fair summary of the position?

A. Just a second. Could you help me? (Consults interpreter)

I think it's not very correct what is written here. Maybe it's impression which I create to Mr Rabinowitz and partly it's correct, partly it's not.

First of all, I am not -- I don't -- I am not ambition man. I just follow my personal way, and my way is absolutely clear: I try to move Russia to democracy. And definitely I enjoy that we won elections in spite of no one believe in autumn '99 that Putin could become president -- if you open the press, he was absolutely unknown -- and I really was absolutely happy with that, it's true.

On the other point -- what is the second point mentioned here?

Q. Yes, I said --

A. Just a second. And as far as my prediction --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just a second. I think the point was: were you basking in the glory of having been involved in Putin's election victory?

A. Again, my Lady, my point not was to be unique among others, yes? I just follow my way and I have done everything what I can do that time to reach -- to move Russia to democracy. And I understand that Putin -- you remember Putin came to power as successor of Yeltsin, yes? It means that he should continue reforms. But Putin --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So you weren't basking in any glory?

A. Absolutely. I was happy with that, but --

MR RABINOWITZ: Perhaps -- I'm not sure that he understands precisely that English phrase. I think that may be a problem with this.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Well, maybe we needn't trouble about it.

MR RABINOWITZ: If someone perhaps tries to rephrase the words that I used in order to make clear what is being suggested, it may be a more clear answer.

A. On the other hand, my Lady, I just want to tell that as far as future is concerned, I didn't have any doubts what means power. And even when Putin was my close friend and when I support him and when he become on the top of his already acting president, I was -- it had been one interview when I was asked, "What do you think, does it mean that Putin forever your friend?" And so I said, "Not at all, because if Putin being in power decide that important for him to crush me, he will do that". I told that in the moment when we had fantastical relations with Putin because I understood what means politics and I understood that Putin decide that it's helpful for him to push Berezovsky, he will do that.

MR MALEK: The reality is you said in your evidence that you'd been involved in assisting Governor Lebed in the aluminium wars, you were elected to the Duma in the middle of December, President Putin at the end of December was acting president, ORT had supported President Putin in his election campaign. That was the reality. In the spring of 2000, things were looking good?

A. What is the question?

Q. The question is: at that point in time you were enjoying the political arena, you were on the stage --

A. That's correct.

Q. -- and you were very happy to make statements about your interest in aluminium although --

A. I didn't --

Q. Let me just finish.

A. Sorry.

Q. -- although the reality is that you had no interest at all?

A. The reality is that I have, and I create this company, one who -- the key person, as I told you, to create this company because it was proposal given to me, not anybody more, at that stage, at the beginning I mean. And reality is that definitely I understood that we are more protected because Putin is elected and, as I told you before, we start to prepare, Badri and me, the structure to visualise our interest and we were on the way; that's it.

And I decide that at that time -- again, a lot of emotions and so, but I don't see any controversial and illogical what is happening because I really think that time it's just the beginning of Putin become elected president -- not acting, elected president -- and I think that it's -- okay, it's time maybe for more openness and so. But still I already having experience in politics that everything change quick, what happened later, and maybe that I was -- I have been too enthusiastic with Putin -- who is Mr Putin, I'm sorry to say. That's it.

Q. Could you please go back to your witness statement at D2, tab 17, at page 251 D2/17/251.

A. Yes, I remember that.

Q. And turn, please, to paragraph 262.

A. 262. Yes.

Q. And I would like to look at the passage at page 252 D2/17/252.

A. Just a second. Passage? 252, sorry.

Q. "Another formal reason for not signing this personally was that I was a member of the Duma at this time, and I was aware that under Russian law I was not allowed to be directly involved in business and could not put my signature on this agreement."

A. Yes.

Q. And that's the agreement that you referred to at the beginning of paragraph 262, the document of 10 February 2000 that we've already looked at.

Now, is this another reason why you could not acquire an interest in the aluminium assets, the KrAZ assets? It couldn't be the situation that although you could not sign the contract, there was no objection to you being a party to the contract, as you've contended in your evidence to us last week?

A. You see, Mr Abramovich become party of the contract, being member of Duma; I am not. It's a little bit not logical what you present to us now.

The reason is that I didn't want to put -- to be directly involved, yes? As I told you, this deal start before I was elected, yes? Before. It means that, for me, it's absolutely legal at that time to negotiate about acquiring of assets; as far as Abramovich that time as well. But later on to put the signature was illegal. What Abramovich have done, it's illegal according of Russian law. Direct involvement in acquiring under his name the assets, it was illegal again.

As far as me is concerned, definitely it was hypocritical what I have done, but I didn't put my signature.

Q. Now, let's just look at one other point as to why you say that your involvement could not be visible and turn, please, to page 246.

A. Of my statement?

Q. Yes, at D2, tab 17 at 246 D2/17/246. Sorry, page 246.

A. Yes, page 246.

Q. And in fact it's at 247 D2/17/247.

A. 246 or 247?

Q. Let me just check my... It's page 247, at the bottom there, where you say this:

"Our use of offshore structures."

A. Just a second. Which point? Which paragraph?

Q. It's paragraph 246 at the bottom there:

"By late 1999..."

A. Yes.

Q. "... Badri and I had begun discussions aimed at creating more formal offshore structures to control and protect our major business interests in oil and aluminium... outside Russia, against politically motivated attacks and political opponents..."

A. Yes.

Q. Is this the position: that the investigation that had taken place in relation to Aeroflot had concerned you and you wanted to conceal your assets?

- A. Just a second. It was 199 -- late '99. I don't remember that time was investigation of Aeroflot still or not just -- ah, I think at that time it was already closed investigation; later on Putin open again. At that time it was closed.

Again, I was -- I already -- to give direct answer to your question, I was already more experienced in politics; I knew that everything could change in a second. And definitely, as I told my Lady before, that even when Putin was my close friend, I understood that he fighting for political position and he may tomorrow say that Berezovsky is enemy. Yes, if it's useful for him, that's it. It's exactly in '99 the same point; nothing new.

- Q. But if the intention was that you were going to have an interest in the KrAZ assets, why not use an offshore company which you controlled to hold that asset?

- A. I'm sorry, the point is that I didn't know what I control. Everything was Badri responsibility and Roman Abramovich responsibility. And the reason why they don't use that, I don't know, I don't know, because I was not a person who construct the structures. I just present my general position that I was in big risk area, this is the point, in much bigger than Badri was. Badri also have been in risk area. That's it. This is the point.

Q. Now, let's move on to the Dorchester meeting.

A. Yes.

Q. And just following up the point that you made earlier, when we were looking at the Vedomosti article towards the end of March 2000 --

A. Yes.

Q. -- and you were explaining that there was less of a problem, you didn't have to be visible.

My question is this: why did you not ask at the Dorchester meeting to have the shares in your own name, if visibility was not a problem?

A. I already gave explanation that on the one hand we start to prepare the visible structures; on the other hand I understood well that everything could happen even in nearest future. Because that time, as I told you before, I already have some confrontation with Mr Putin as far as Chechnya is concerned, starting at the end of '99, and it means that on the other hand I told precisely that I will not be surprised if Putin start fight against of me.

It means that my position was a little bit controversial. On the one hand I understood that we are in position to win elections, and even we won elections.

On the other hand, having experience -- having negative experience before, I understood that everything could happen. It means that a lot of uncertainty have been in January and a lot of uncertainty for me personally as to what to do as a next step.

On the other hand I want to be visible and make everything in proper western way which conform directly, yes? Not indirectly, directly. Our discussion with Mr Abramovich in Le Bourget where I insist to make everything visible, yes? And Abramovich is refusing that, saying that it's impossible, yes? But it's already the other story.

But my explanation is like I have presented here.

- Q. But the Dorchester meeting took place six days after President Putin's election, didn't it?
- A. You're absolutely correct, it happened 13th and Putin was elected on the 7th. But the situation for me still have a lot of uncertainty. Still I understood well that if it will be some reason to -- as Putin said later, to beat me by stick on the head, it's happened finally. Again, it's on the one hand I was happy what happened; on the other hand I understood that it's a lot of uncertainty as well.
- Q. But you told us at [draft] page 17 of the transcript:
- "The reality is that I have, and I create this company, one who" --

A. Just a second. What was the page?

Q. I'm just reading the transcript of what you told us a few minutes ago.

A. I see.

Q. I'm just reading it aloud:

"... the key person, as I told you, to create this company because it was [a] proposal given to me, not anybody more, at that stage, at the beginning I mean. And [the] reality is that definitely I understood that we are more protected because Putin is elected..."

A. Yes, it's correct. Moreover that it does not mean that I can't predict that could happen in different way, what has happened as a reality, because, as I told my Lady, that time I already had some point of conflicts with Putin, yes? Chechnya first of all, and it happened very quick when we, okay, took different ways to move forward, yes?

It means that I already was not so naive like before, when I start just political career, yes, and already had experience that everything could change quick. And I had, let's say, in my head as well not the clear vision that everything is fine. In spite of many days I think that it could be fine. But it's happened opposite and I was correct in my doubts.

Q. Now, as far as the Dorchester meeting is concerned, it's right that Mr Anisimov had no involvement in that meeting as far as you're aware?

A. I can't recollect Mr Anisimov even in any stage of merger with Mr Deripaska. I just know that as far as Badri is concerned, he was more involved. And as far as Anisimov told all the time to Badri and to me, I think, yes, but mainly to Badri, that he has a big experience in British -- in precise British way of law and he said that we should do the same -- the same way. But as far as Dorchester is concerned, Anisimov hadn't been there.

Q. Can we turn to your statement at D2, tab 17 at 253 D2/17/253.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Is that page or paragraph?

MR MALEK: Sorry, page 253.

A. Yes.

Q. What I would like to do is ask you a question arising out of what you say between paragraphs 267 and 269. I'd ask you --

A. 267 and 200...?

Q. To 269. Could you just read those paragraphs to yourself. (Pause)

I'm sorry, I'm told that you may be looking at the wrong place.

A. I'm looking only at the place which you point me, nothing more.

Q. You may be -- well, let's start again. It's at page 253 in the bottom there.

A. Yes, just a second. 253, I have it.

Q. Yes, and could you look at paragraphs 267, 268 and 269.

A. Yes. You point me correctly, I have seen before the same. (Pause)

Yes, okay.

Q. It's a conversation involving Mr Badri and Mr Anisimov about British law that I would like to look at.

A. Just a second, I would just to remind: it's happened before our meeting in Dorchester? It's happened before our meeting within Dorchester? Yes, correct. Okay.

Q. Now, it's right to say that you were not a party to this alleged conversation between Badri and Mr Anisimov?

A. I don't remember that I have been the party of exactly this conversation because, as I point here, Badri said that Mr Anisimov, yes? But on the other hand I was a party of conversation with Badri and Anisimov as well, I don't know exactly this party, when Mr Anisimov personally told in front of us that he -- as I remember, that time he based -- he had the business in Switzerland. And being even in Switzerland, Anisimov, as I recollect, told us that he use first of all western laws but even British law, yes, being in Switzerland.

And this is my recollection. It means that I don't refer exactly to the meeting, yes, I think, but I had meeting as well in my presence with Badri and Anisimov, and Anisimov talk about the way to use the western or British -- he said British law, I don't remember.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, this is all new to us. When do you say this conversation happened?

A. I told you, I told you that I don't recollect exactly, but we have -- except of that I said: this I refer to Badri. But as well me personally, I also talk to Mr Anisimov not one time and my recollection is that he also in my presence also talk about a positive experience with western law, which maybe is British law.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So you had one of your informal meetings with Anisimov --

A. Absolutely correct, my Lady.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: -- where he mentioned this point?

A. -- absolutely correct, my Lady.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I see.

MR MALEK: That's untrue, Mr Berezovsky. You had no discussions with Mr Anisimov about whether British law, Swiss law or Chinese law should be applicable?

A. It is absolutely true, I don't remember about anything Chinese law, you're absolutely correct, but I remember well about western law and absolutely -- and about the British law.

Q. Can we just look at this advice that you say Mr Anisimov gave to Badri that you're referring to in this section of your statement that we're looking at.

A. Yes.

Q. Am I right in saying this is in the context of your proposed merger with Mr Deripaska in relation to Rusal? Is that right?

A. It's correct to say that, as my recollection is, that Anisimov recommend Badri -- and this is the reference because my connections to Anisimov was much less, and it was part of a lot of other points -- but Anisimov recommend Badri all arrangements, all arrangements which we plan or start to do, to execute, should be in proper English -- proper British law or precise British law.

It's concerning the acquisition of that, it's concerned the merger itself and it's concerned our relations with Mr Abramovich. There are all arrangements here as -- and Badri, as I understand, present exactly this position in Dorchester Hotel.

Q. So when you are referring here at 268 -- you refer to:

"There was a similar discussion... in the context of the proposed merger with Mr Deripaska."

That's at 268.

A. As I remember, this is -- this point is in frame of preparation to Dorchester Hotel meeting before the -- I'm sorry, before Dorchester Hotel meeting. It's the preparation for the merger. But nevertheless, nevertheless it was discussed -- again, as my recollection is that Badri refer to Mr Anisimov position about all three steps and acquisition and merger and our relations with Roman.

As far as me is concerned, I definitely don't remember that Anisimov told me that, "Boris, you should do, let's say, acquisition and merger and relations with Roman by British law", and so. We discussed the general position, my recollection is. As far as Anisimov, my meeting with Anisimov, general recollection that Mr Anisimov mentioned his experience in western law because of his business in Switzerland and particular in British law, as my recollection is concerned, but not precisely: this, that and that.

This I don't mention that Anisimov, let's say,
I talk -- I met Anisimov and he told me that. It's the reason why I told he met Badri, because I don't recollect that he discuss exactly those points with me.

Q. So is this what you're telling us, Mr Berezovsky: that this discussion between Badri and Anisimov about British law --

A. Yes.

Q. -- was in the context or the frame of the Dorchester meeting; it had nothing to do with the original acquisition of the KrAZ assets?

A. No, no, no, no, no, completely wrong, because it's -- as I told you, all arrangements and as I understand arrangements and it was -- I think mainly it was -- Badri understanding how he should do the arrangements of acquisitions was initiated by Anisimov because already from this point -- because as you remember, I think, you remember that, that Anisimov was one of the seller of the assets.

And, as you remember, the deal was done between offshore companies, as I understand. One offshore company become, I don't know, will be created the new offshore company or they just sold the same offshore company where all aluminium assets already were registrated.

It means that discussion between Badri and Anisimov start not just before Dorchester Hotel meeting but even on the stage of buying assets.

Q. When you look at paragraph 269:

"Badri said that Mr Anisimov... had told him that we should make all our arrangements, including those as between ourselves, 'in a very precise British law way'."

A. Yes.

Q. "Badri said that Mr Anisimov had had positive experiences of using 'British law' in his dealings. Mr Abramovich, Badri and I agreed that the agreements we made regarding our aluminium interests, including those between ourselves, would be subject to British law. Today I understand that the correct word is 'English' and not 'British', but then we did not see the difference."

This appears to be a reference, does it not, to the arrangements in relation to what become Rusal? This is what you're referring to, is it not?

A. Again, sorry, Mr --

Q. Malek.

A. I'm sorry. I already precisely explain that understanding of what we should use came on the stage of acquiring and later on on the stage how should be fixed the deal of merger and our relations and the relations between us and Mr Abramovich as well. This is the point. Nothing more.

Q. Could you be provided, please, with bundle M5 and turn to tab 01, page 11 M5/01/11.

A. Vedomosti I should keep still?

Q. No, that one can go.

A. What is that?

Q. This is an affidavit, a statement, if you turn to page 1, from Mr Kelleher of --

A. Mr...?

Q. Kelleher. Page 1. M5, tab 1, page 1 M5/01/1.

A. What is that? Mr...?

Q. He's one of your solicitors.

A. Yes, okay.

Q. If we turn to page 11.

A. Just a second. Where is the last page where he put signature?

Q. The signature is at page 27.

A. Thank you. Yes, okay. October, the end of October 2009, okay.

Q. On paragraph 39 --

A. Yes.

Q. At paragraph 39, subparagraph 1, he says this:

"Mr Patarkatsishvili told Mr Berezovsky that Mr Anisimov had told him that the arrangements for the sale of the aluminium assets referred to in paragraph 22 above should be made 'in a very precise British law way'. These agreements were governed by English law."

A. Yes.

Q. And if we turn back to paragraph 22, you can see that these were in relation to the acquisition of the KrAZ assets; it's not in the context of Dorchester and the merger.

- A. Okay, and I don't understand what is wrong what I said.
Please -- just explain it please.
- Q. Well, let me just ask you to turn to one other document before I ask you a question.
- A. And we fix that it's not my presentation: it's just Mr Kelleher, how he understood at this stage. This again is the end of October 2009.
- Q. But he was your lawyer, wasn't he?
- A. No, no, I don't argue, I just want to fix that, yes?
That's it. He's my lawyer and even now he's my lawyer.
- Q. If we then turn to bundle M2. You can put that bundle away.
- A. I can take it away?
- Q. Yes.
- A. Thank you.
- Q. And turn, please, to tab 10. M2, tab 10, page 61
M2/10/61.
- A. Tab 10?
- Q. Yes.
- A. What is that?
- Q. This is a document which you can see from M2, tab 10 at 47 M2/10.47 is claimant's response -- that's your response -- to a request made by the third defendant for information. This is a document in one of the Chancery proceedings.

A. Just a second. Who signed this document?

Q. This was signed by Mr Marino --

A. Okay. And when it was done?

Q. -- with a statement of truth, and that was in November 2009.

A. Okay.

Q. I would like you to turn, please, to page 61 of this document, where it says that:

"Mr Anisimov had himself advised AP..."

That's Badri.

"... and Mr Berezovsky to ensure that a written agreement was drawn up between them and Mr Abramovich recording their business arrangements relating to RusAL
'in a very precise British law' way."

A. Okay. And what is wrong?

Q. Well, first of all, the statement that Anisimov had advised Badri and you, was that right, or was he just --

A. It's right because it's my impression of our discussion, general impression, and it's impression I present to Mr Marino and Marino reflect like that. Nothing wrong.
Not maybe too precise like we are trying to find out now. It's happened ten years ago, even more. What is wrong? I don't understand. What is the point? What wrong the point? What I made wrong say?

Q. It's your statement at paragraph 269 of your evidence --

A. Just a second.

Q. -- at D2, tab 17, paragraph 269, at 253 D2/17/253 --

A. Yes, okay.

Q. -- that Badri said that Mr Anisimov had told him.

A. Yes, okay. Again, it's Mr Marino how he accept that.

Generally it's absolutely precise what he accept: that

Anisimov was the person who supply me and Badri information of proper -- of useful -- how useful --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Can I just cut across you,

Mr Berezovsky.

A. Yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: What I need to understand is in paragraph 269 of your witness statement you seem to be suggesting there that the conversation about British law was just between Mr Patarkatsishvili --

A. I understood the point.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: -- and Mr Anisimov. In this paragraph we're looking at, or I'm looking at on the screen, at page 61, your case seems to be that Mr Anisimov had spoken not only to Mr Patarkatsishvili but also to you as well directly to --

A. Clear. I understand that, my Lady.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I'm a bit confused. So could you just explain to me: did you have meetings, informal meetings, direct with Mr Anisimov yourself --

A. Yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: -- where you had these sort of conversations or not?

A. No. I don't recollect my direct meeting with Mr Anisimov when he discuss about British law, yes? Correct. But I recollect -- and it's the reason why I did not refer to my meeting but I recollect well meeting with Badri when he refer to Mr Anisimov or British law.

But I recollect well meetings with Mr Anisimov when he discussed the word about useful to use western law because of his experience in Switzerland. This I recollect well. I can't recollect well that he discussed directly British law; I have this impression. But I have 100 per cent impression when Badri told me about that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, okay.

A. This is the point.

MR MALEK: The position is this, Mr Berezovsky: that you never had any discussion with Mr Anisimov about using British law, did you, whether in 2000 or any time?

A. Again, I remember well my discussion with Mr Anisimov about western law, 100 per cent. I have not 100 per cent recollection, let's say, about British law but I have 100 per cent recollection that Badri told me about Anisimov with British law. But again, I can't say that I am sure that I never had any discussion with Mr Anisimov, not about only western law but as well British law. I don't recollect that so well.

But as far as Badri referring to Mr Anisimov that he had discussion with him about British law, I recollect well. It's the reason why I use here the referring to Badri. This is the point.

Q. But you've never said in a pleading or a witness statement that you had a conversation with Mr Anisimov about British law; that's right, isn't it?

A. I never said that I had this discussion, again, as I recollect; but again, it doesn't mean that I did not. I present my recollection to Mr Marino and he present his understanding of my recollection. This is the point.

Q. And it's --

A. Again, I can't say that I had never had discussion with Mr Anisimov about British way of law. I can't say that. I just said that what is my recollection is clear, as far as Badri's discussion with Mr Anisimov, and referring to Mr Anisimov of recollection of precise British way of law. This --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Malek, I think we've covered this point now.

MR MALEK: Yes.

Now, the next and final topic that I would like to cover is the second Rusal sale. You can put --

A. Just a second.

Q. You can put M2 away.

A. Just a second, because I destroyed the... take, please.

Try to fix that. Thank you.

The second Rusal sale, yes.

Q. So we're now moving forward to June and July 2004.

A. Just a second. June/July, because the first -- my Lady, can you allow me to return back to the time. It was -- we start the sale of our 20 per cent to propose to Abramovich himself. It was the April meeting -- it was the April fixed meeting with Mr Curtis and Mr Badri in Georgia, it was April 2003; correct? And then we propose to Abramovich to sell it together to Deripaska and then --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just wait, Mr Berezovsky, because you haven't actually been asked a question.

A. Yes, yes, sorry. I just try to remind for myself. I'm sorry, my Lady.

MR MALEK: So we're now dealing with the second Rusal sale.

A. Yes.

Q. It's right to say that you played no part in the conduct of the negotiations relating to the second Rusal sale that took place in July 2004; that's correct, isn't it?

A. Just a second. It's the reason, my Lady, why I want to return back to this time. It was -- we sold it in -- I don't have any direct connection to this, you're correct. I didn't have any direct involvement in negotiation.

Q. And it's also right that you tell us that you didn't see any of the agreements that were entered into and nor did you see any drafts?

A. I didn't see -- I did not see any agreement; you're absolutely correct. I was just informed by Badri about that and it's happen finally when Abramovich without -- breached our agreement and sold himself 25 per cent; it's correct. I didn't have any involvement directly in negotiation of that. It was just Badri, as I understand, Mr Anisimov and Mr Abramovich -- Mr Anisimov assist him, Mr Abramovich -- Mr Deripaska, as I understand, and Mr Fomichev as well.

Q. And Badri kept you informed of any key developments in the negotiations?

A. Badri kept me informed, yes.

Q. We can see from the documentation that a number of persons were involved in the transaction, including solicitors Bryan Cave and Akin Gump, and it's right to say that you didn't have any contact with those professionals, did you?

A. I don't remember that I have any connection to any professional except of -- I don't remember, maybe Mr Curtis. Mr Curtis just participate in negotiation of the last -- with Badri in June/July/August, yes.

I didn't remember any connections to any professional with that.

Q. Mr Curtis was dead by this time.

A. Yes, yes, and I already learned that.

Q. In the course of these negotiations in June and July, it's right to say that you never wrote a letter to anyone involved in the negotiations stating that you had an interest in the shares being sold?

A. I didn't write any letter; this I remember well.

Q. And it's also right to say that not only did you not write anything, you did not have any conversation with anyone concerned with the negotiations to the effect that you had an interest in the Rusal proceeds; that's right, isn't it?

A. No, I -- as I told you, I negotiate to Badri, definitely, and I negotiate, as I remember, to Mr Fomichev as well, who was involved in this negotiation, and I think that's it.

Q. And you didn't speak to Mr Deripaska, did you?

A. No.

Q. And you didn't speak to Mr Anisimov about this either?

A. Not at all.

Q. Now, as far as Mr Anisimov's involvement is concerned, were you aware that he had been approached by Badri to assist in the sale of the second Rusal tranche of shares?

A. What do you mean? Again, who was -- just a second. Could you help me with the last question. (Consults interpreter)

Yes, I knew that; I knew that Badri cooperate with Mr Anisimov. Moreover, as I understand, it was even some conflict of interest between Salford. Now, this is an investment company which Badri and me, we created, and Mr Anisimov, as I understand, came because, as I understand, Salford, they want to organise this deal happened, my Lady, and Anisimov -- my recollection is that Anisimov propose to Badri his help and Salford, on the other hand, propose their help, and it was some competition there. And finally, as I understand, Badri took a position of it's not -- the conflict was solved without my participation. It was Badri's decision that he will go with the help of Anisimov.

Q. By early 2004 it's right to say that Badri was in exile in Georgia and was --

A. I think so. Badri --

Q. -- unable to travel to Russia?

A. Yes, Badri left Russia in 2003, I think, in March, approximately, yes? And after that he stay long time in Georgia and finally he start to move, I don't remember, I think maybe 2004, 2005 even, and as I remember the first my meeting after long term we didn't see each other abroad, I mean, it happened in Israel. I don't remember, 2005, I think, like that.

Q. I want to ask you a question about Badri's relationship with Mr Deripaska. Mr Anisimov will be giving evidence to the court that Badri did not have a good enough relationship with Mr Deripaska to feel able to negotiate with him over the phone or to ask Mr Deripaska to visit Badri in Georgia.

Now, what you say in your evidence -- and perhaps you could turn to this, please. It's at D2, tab 17, at page 290 D2/17/290.

A. Just a second, 290, yes.

Q. At paragraph 420 you say this, and this is the penultimate sentence there:

"Badri had a good relationship with Mr Deripaska whom he had known for a long time."

A. Yes.

Q. I just want to focus on that. What made you think that Badri had such a relationship with Mr Deripaska?

A. First of all, Badri was different from me: Badri had good relations with almost everybody. At least given that when Badri died and a lot of people fight against of me, see me as an enemy, as I know, even FSB generals made sympathy to his widow, saying that they -- they have sympathy to him. And Badri definitely had very good relations with Deripaska.

Q. And that was in June and July 2004 as well?

A. All the time. Badri never broke any relations with anybody. This is -- was Badri way. It's completely different from my way, but it's so. And Badri had good relations with -- even with Abramovich he continued to have relations, understanding that Abramovich betrayed us. But Badri is like he was; it's different from me.

Q. Could you, Mr Berezovsky, be provided with H(A) volume 89, opened up at page 262 H(A)89/262.

A. This I can move a little bit away?

Q. Yes. You should have open in front of you a document headed "Boris Berezovsky: Asset Requisition":

"Visit to Georgia Tuesday 28th June... to Thursday 30th June 2005."

A. Just a second. Which is the line?

Q. Lines 3 to 4.

A. Line 3, yes.

Q. And at line 8 you see:

"The following is the proof of evidence taken from Badri Patarkatsishvili... during a meeting which took place at his residence..."

And those present included Andrew Stephenson, who was at Carter Ruck, your lawyer; that's correct, isn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. And also Jim Lankshear --

A. Yes.

Q. -- who was assisting Mr Stephenson, and he's at Streathers?

A. And what is that -- this is notes, yes?

Q. Yes, it's a draft --

A. This is notes -- draft notes of Mr Stephenson, yes?

Q. Well, I'm not sure which one. But it's notes of a -- it's basically a proof of evidence based on the interview that took place with Badri.

A. Just a second. Again, this is notes of solicitor, yes?

Q. Yes.

A. Thank you.

Q. Then if you turn, please, to page 272 H(A)89/272, at line 357, under the title "Sale of Rusal" and then at 363:

"RA entered into negotiations direct with Deripaska for the sale of his 25%. The sale to Deripaska went through despite the agreement we had with RA that neither party would sell his 25% independently. After the sale had been closed, RA came to Tbilisi at my invitation to talk about the future."

And this is the sentence I would like to look at --

A. Which one?

Q. At line 366:

"I said to him" --

A. Just a second. "I said to him"; to whom?

Q. "I said to him that I did not want to stand alone with Deripaska."

So that's Badri --

A. Yes.

Q. -- saying that he did not want to stand alone with Deripaska.

A. Okay.

Q. "I wanted to sell."

Do you see that?

A. Yes, I see.

Q. Now, there's another passage:

"I did not want to deal with Deripaska direct."

Do you see that?

A. "I did not want..." Yes.

Q. And is that something that Badri had told you at the time?

A. I don't remember that at all.

Q. Now, if we then turn on to the next document --

A. Just I understood that Badri like that as far as Roman destroy our trust, he breach our trust, I understand that Badri position was to use Roman to help to organise at least what is possible to organise. And I think that maybe Badri understood that Roman feel not so comfortable what he have done and it's the reason why he think that involvement of Roman will help to make a deal happened.

And it's the reason why he maybe didn't want to stay face to face to Deripaska because in any case it was not possible to do because still Roman hold our shares or the second, let's say, 25 per cent. It means that without Roman, I don't think that Badri could do anything at that time.

Q. Could Mr Berezovsky be provided H(A) volume 95.

A. This is -- we are finished with that?

Q. Yes, it's finished.

A. Thank you.

Q. The question I have on this will come after this document. It's at page 247 H(A)95/247. These are the typed-up notes of Michelle Duncan --

A. When?

Q. -- of Cadwalader. She went to Tel Aviv and had an interview --

A. 2007, yes?

Q. Yes, November 2007.

What I would like to look at with you is at 247.

A. Yes, I have it.

Q. And then if you look at 247 then halfway down, where there's a discussion that -- notes of this discussion, it's a column starting "Badri".

A. Just a second. Could you help me? (Consults interpreter)

Q. Where it appears to say that --

A. Just a second. In the middle, at the end; where is it?

Q. It's the middle of the page.

A. Yes. How it start, the sentence?

Q. "After this no divs, no relat w OD..."

Which I read as "no relationship with Mr Deripaska".

A. It's Badri said?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes. "After this no" --

Q. No --

A. No dividends.

Q. Yes, but no --

A. No dividends.

Q. Yes, and then it's the phrase:

"No relat[ions]..."

It appears to --

A. I can't comment that. I don't understand.

Q. Where it says:

"No relat[ionship] w[ith] [Mr Deripaska]..."

A. I don't understand what Badri mean, I don't understand what Michelle Duncan. Badri had good relations with Mr Deripaska.

Q. Well, isn't that consistent with what Mr Anisimov will be saying: that there was no relationship --

A. Anisimov -- definitely Anisimov will comment himself.

I think that Anisimov absolutely wrong saying that Badri didn't have good relations with Deripaska. He had good relations with Deripaska.

Q. Now, it's right to say that Mr Anisimov was not instructed by you to do anything, was he?

A. He was not instructed by me, definitely.

Q. And he wasn't negotiating on your behalf, was he?

A. Anisimov?

Q. Yes.

A. No.

Q. And it's right to say, as I think you've confirmed earlier, you had no conversations with Mr Anisimov at this time about the sale of the shares, did you?

A. About sale of the shares of --

Q. Rusal.

A. -- of Rusal? I don't recollect that.

Q. Now, the --

A. I just recollect that at the end of the deal or when we have done the deal, Badri told that he is going to buy shares in -- not in Metalloinvest, that time it was Mikhailovsky GOK, yes, Mikhailovsky GOK which produce -- okay. And he said that it will be deal which Anisimov brought for us and that --

Q. We're talking about Rusal, just about Rusal.

A. No, no, because, as I told you -- what is the question again, sorry?

Q. You had no discussions with Mr Anisimov in June or July about the sale of any Rusal shares?

A. I can't -- I can't recollect that.

MR MALEK: My Lady, I've got another 15 minutes. I don't know whether that's a convenient moment to take the break?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, I'll sit on to 11.45.

MR MALEK: Right.

As far as the transactions developed, you've explained how you didn't see any of the contractual documentation. But if we could turn to your statement at D2, tab 17, at page 290 D2/17/90.

A. This finished with that now?

Q. Yes.

A. Thank you. Which page?

Q. Page 290.

A. Yes, I have it.

Q. Paragraph 423.

A. Yes.

Q. Your evidence is to the effect that there would be no formal recognition of your interest, where you say "my interest was not expressly recognised", that's line 9, and at line 4 you refer to this, because of your "continuing political involvement".

Now, it's right that at this time, in June 2004, at the time the negotiations were taking place, you were making statements to the press indicating that you had an interest in Rusal; that's right, isn't it?

A. I don't remember. Maybe. I don't remember.

Q. Could you turn, please, to H(A) volume 74, at page 123 H(A)74/123. There's a number of documents but I think one will be enough. It's at 123. This is a document, an article, June --

A. In Kommersant.

Q. Yes -- 2004, 2 June 2004. And then over the page --

A. Just a second. Do I have Russian version here? This one?

Q. Yes, it's at page 223.

A. 223, I have it.

Q. Sorry, 123.

A. 123, I have it.

Q. Then over the page at 124 there's a --

A. Just a second -- is it in Russian or it's in --

Q. This is in English.

A. Just in English, yes?

Q. Yes.

A. Okay.

Q. And over the page it is said that:

"... the... oligarch told Vedomosti that he and Badri... owned all 25% of [the] RusAl shareholding..."

A. Yes.

Q. And then it goes on to say that you hold the possibility of challenging the deal in court.

A. Yes, okay. I don't remember that, but it could be.

Q. It appears you did say that to Vedomosti.

A. Yes, yes. No, no, no, I just -- I don't argue.

Q. Now, what was the purpose of you making these statements to the press?

A. I don't remember that, what was the purpose.

Q. Well, was it because you were not prepared to assert a claim to the parties negotiating the deal because you wanted, in any event, the shares to be sold for whatever reason?

A. I don't remember that. I don't remember why I made this interview. But I think I had some reason, but I don't -- I can't recollect it now.

Q. And you tell us that Mr Badri kept you informed on key developments relating to the negotiations?

A. It's correct.

Q. Did you know that Badri had confirmed on a number of occasions to those involved in the negotiations that you were not involved?

A. It's completely wrong. You know well that there are a lot of evidence that in the first stage, on the initial stage, my name mentioned many times as Badri and -- "B&B". And I was also presented some papers, I'm not so good in papers, but I was presented enough to understand that it was clear understanding of Roman Abramovich and Deripaska as well, and definitely Mr Anisimov as well, that I am a party of that.

And later on they tried to hide me, let's say, deeper and deeper, and finally Badri said, "Boris, they will not accept if your name will be mentioned even", and I said, "Fine". As I told you, what I was not ever informed from Badri, that Badri signed that he never -- it happened already later on when I have seen this paper, I think during disclosure somewhere, I don't remember well -- that Badri even signed the paper that he will not go to court to fight for that. This never Badri mentioned me.

But all the rest, I was informed. I was informed that they start negotiation with clear pointing me as a part of the sale and later on, step by step, they require not to mention my name at all. And Anisimov knew well that even when we sold, it was our money, Badri and mine together, because we together invested in Metalloinvest this money -- not Metalloinvest, Mikhailovsky GOK this time.

Q. You said a moment ago, and the reference to the transcript is [draft] page 50, that you were:

"... also presented some papers, I'm not so good in papers, but I was presented enough to understand that it was clear understanding of Roman Abramovich and Deripaska as well, and definitely Mr Anisimov as well, that I am a party of that."

My question is this: those are not documents that you saw at the time, are they?

A. No, no, no, it's not documents; it was papers during the preparation for the trial. I just remind -- I just want to remember. It's just negotiations between parties and so, where my name was mentioned at the beginning as a party which are selling their second tranche of 25 per cent.

Q. Now, Mr Anisimov and Mr Streshinsky --

A. Who?

Q. -- Mr Streshinsky of Coalco will say that Badri told them that he was acting alone and that you were not involved in the deal. You're aware of that?

A. It's completely -- it's complete lie.

Q. It's a lie that Badri had that conversation?

A. Badri never had this conversation in front of Anisimov, in front of anybody from Anisimov, because everybody knew well that we were partners 50/50 and it's absolutely impossible that Badri could tell that to anyone.

Q. And it's also --

A. Moreover, if you return, as I propose to you, to papers where they start negotiation about selling our -- selling the second tranche of 25 per cent, it's absolutely clear that everybody, and first of all maybe Anisimov better than anyone, maybe Abramovich as well at the same level, understood well that who are really sellers of the second tranche.

Q. And it's right that in the contractual documentation Badri gave a declaration, a representation, a warranty to the effect that he alone held the beneficial interest in the shares being sold?

A. What I know, that Badri told me that they don't accept the position if I will be seen in any way. It means that everybody what Badri have done, he have done alone, but with clear understanding that for himself and for the other, that he is doing that under mine and his interest. This is the point.

Q. Could Mr Berezovsky be provided with H(A) volume 84 at page 2 H(A)84/2. Now, this is headed "Beneficial Owner Deed of Release" and you can see that it's signed by Badri, Cliren, Rusal and Eagle. And if we then go --

A. Just a second. Signed by Badri?

Q. Cliren, Rusal --

A. Cliren? Just a second. What is that, Cliren?

Q. Yes.

A. Cliren, what is that?

Q. It's the second company.

A. And Badri?

Q. Is the first party. He's the beneficial owner.

A. I see. Okay, good.

Q. I'm not going to ask you anything about contractual provisions --

A. Yes.

Q. -- but I just want you to look at paragraph 3 on page 4 H(A)84/4, where it says:

"The Beneficial Owner" --

A. Just a second.

Q. "[Badri] represents and warrants to the Purchaser and the Company that as of Completion" --

A. I'm sorry, I'm sorry, I didn't find that. Where is that?

Q. At the bottom of page 4, paragraph 3.

A. Just a second. Page 4, paragraph 3, yes.

Q. There's a representation and over the page there's an indemnity.

A. Ah, okay.

Q. And my question is: did you know that Badri had made a representation to this effect, that he was the sole beneficial owner?

A. I absolutely was surprised when I have seen the first time -- was referred to the first time that Badri signed an indemnity and it's really what he didn't discuss with me. If he would discuss with me, definitely I don't have clear, let's say, answer what I would do. My -- definitely my reaction was not to accept that.

And, as I understand, that time Nikolai already was not in jail. It's 2004: Nikolai was released in March, in March 2004. And I don't know what I would do.

Definitely I would not -- I think I would not accept that, yes? But what is the truth, that Badri never told me anything about that, never.

Q. So he never mentioned that he was signing this type of clause?

A. Never. He never mentioned me about that.

Q. Are you sure of that?

A. 100 per cent, because it's a principle position because, as I told you -- sorry, not you, as I told to Mr Sumption that I took a principle decision finally to go to court one day. It means that definitely it would not be useful if I would have that signed.

Q. Just two documents we would like you to look at. Can Mr Berezovsky be provided with J2, tab 2.11 at page 218 J2/2.11/218.

A. This I may take away?

Q. Yes.

A. Thank you.

Q. If we start off by looking at 171, so that you're aware --

A. I'm sorry, I still don't have that.

Q. I'm sorry.

A. Yes.

Q. Just behind tab 11 at page 171, J2/2.11/171, you'll see this is the first witness statement of Mr Mitchard.

A. Just a second. I have J2, flag 1, yes?

Q. J2 and then can you go to -- yes, J2, then 2.11, and it's at page 171.

A. Just a second, I have different one. J2/2, yes?

Q. J2/2.11/171.

A. Just a second. It's not J2/1, which I was given, no?

Q. J2/2.11/171.

A. J2/2.11. Just a second. Okay, 11. What is that?

Q. This is a statement of Mr Mitchard, who was a lawyer, a solicitor acting --

A. For Abramovich?

Q. Yes. What he says -- this is at page 218 J2/2.11/218, and what he says is --

A. Just a second.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Do you want page 171 or some other page?

MR MALEK: I want page 218 and I want to go to paragraph 78:

"It is notable that Mr Berezovsky gives no evidence about the July 2004 settlement arrangements in his own witness statement. However, in paragraphs 467 and 469 of Mr Marino's Witness Statement, Mr Marino effectively says that Mr Berezovsky's evidence is that Mr Patarkatsishvili misrepresented in the settlement documentation that Mr Berezovsky had no interest in Rusal Holding Limited. However, and again notably, this is not a matter which Mr Marino suggests Mr Patarkatsishvili himself confirmed at any time in any of the various interviews with him to which Mr Marino refers in his statement."

A. Just a second. Can I read, because I'm not so quick in English like you. Just a second. (Pause)

Q. If we then go forward to J2/2.19, page 240
J2/2.19/240. So go to tab 19, same volume.

A. Yes, same volume. Tab 9?

Q. 19.

A. We keep that, yes? We keep that.

Q. Yes. 19, so you're going the other way.

A. Okay. 19, what is that?

Q. This is Mr Marino's second witness statement in the Commercial Court action. Could you please read --

A. Just a second, I want to... Okay.

Q. Then go to page 257 J2/2.19/257. Do you have that in front of you?

A. Yes, I have -- just a second. Yes, I have it.

Q. And then at the bottom of 257 --

A. This is Mr Marino, yes?

Q. Yes.

A. This is Mr Mitchard and this is Mr Marino?

Q. Exactly, and we're looking at Mr Marino. Mr Marino was your solicitor, wasn't he?

A. Yes, yes, at that time.

Q. And what he says is this --

A. In which paragraph?

Q. Paragraph 94, at the bottom of the page.

A. Yes.

Q. "I am informed by Messrs Stephenson and Lankshear and by Mr McKim that Mr Patarkatsishvili explained the following to them..."

A. Yes.

Q. Then at (e), at the bottom:

"The sale documentation..."

A. Just a second. (e)?

Q. Yes. I'm going to read it aloud:

"The sale documentation was prepared by Mr Deripaska's lawyers. It contains no reference to Mr Berezovsky's name and it contains a warranty that Mr Patarkatsishvili is the beneficial owner of 25% of Rusal and an indemnity to cover the position if anyone else were to claim to have a beneficial interest in the shares sold."

A. Mm-hm.

Q. Then paragraph 95:

"I am informed by Mr Berezovsky that shortly before the sale of the 25% interest in Rusal to Mr Deripaska, Mr Patarkatsishvili discussed with Mr Berezovsky the proposed terms of the sale and mentioned the warranty and indemnity referred to above. Mr Patarkatsishvili explained to Mr Berezovsky that these terms were insisted on by Mr Deripaska. Mr Berezovsky agreed with Mr Patarkatsishvili's view that they had no choice but to accept these terms -- in the same way as they had no choice but to accept the price offered -- or risk not getting anything for the interests."

A. I see. I don't remember that at all. I don't remember that I have seen -- only after I have seen the paper which Mr Patarkatsishvili signed. I was informed -- I got information that it was condition of indemnity and before I never knew about that. This is the point, and definitely it should be explanation why Mr Marino referring to me, saying that I was informed about that. Definitely I was not informed about that.

Q. So when Mr Marino, your solicitor at Addleshaw, says that, "[Badri] discussed with Mr Berezovsky the proposed terms of the sale and mentioned the warranty and indemnity referred to above", is that true or not?

A. Again, I'm sure that I never discuss that with Mr Marino because I did not know that. I knew that only the documents were disclosed, the first time I have seen them. I never have seen that before.

Q. Now, the reality is this, is it not, Mr Berezovsky: that you were content for Badri to tell everyone that he was the only person involved and it was only his interest that was being sold?

A. It will be absolutely clear from the papers which are disclosed that as -- from the very beginning everybody understood who are real owners of that and that Badri and me the people who prepared to sell -- not prepared -- who want to sell, nothing more, and it's absolutely clear from all discussions and every parties knew that perfectly.

- Q. And it's right that you were content for Badri to contract on the basis that you had no interest in the Rusal shares; that's correct?
- A. I told Badri that he is absolutely free to do everything what he like to do. If they want to hide me, they may hide me. But, again, Badri never mentioned me that it will be indemnity to sell that shares, if we sell the shares. This is the point. Because as I told you -- Mr Sumption at the beginning, that from the very beginning I took a decision to go to court against of this threat and intimidation.
- Q. And you were content for Badri to give the warranty and indemnity that we've just --
- A. Absolutely correct.
- Q. And you knew that you had no interest in the Rusal proceeds and that is why you did not notify anyone of your interest?
- A. I knew that I had interest which presented by Badri and which later on we sold -- we invest to Metalloinvest. This my knowledge is. And my knowledge is that we have 25 per cent of Rusal on the equal basis with Mr Abramovich and Abramovich breached the trust. This my knowledge is.

Q. And the reason why you were saying to the press, the media, that you had an interest is that you wanted to remain on the stage and you wanted everyone to think that you had an interest, in exactly the same way as you'd done in relation to the KrAZ assets earlier?

A. Again, I don't remember the reason why I gave this interview. We may go into details and definitely take some time but I will remind. But the reality is what I described to you now: we owned on the equal basis with Mr Abramovich 50/50 Rusal and the rest Deripaska owned. And Mr Abramovich breach our trust and absolutely in terrible way because we start to discuss with Abramovich the first stage: as I told you before, it was the stage when we discussed to sell our shares to Mr Abramovich. It was the first stage. The second stage, to sell together to Mr Deripaska.

Abramovich didn't pay attention to that and one day just decide to sell himself. And I knew that, I knew that from Badri, which knew that from the news. It's incredible what Abramovich had done. And moreover Abramovich, as I understand now, already later, when it was disclosure, that Abramovich signed that the rest 25 per cent are not able even to influence -- to dilute the shares, what Abramovich signed in his agreement with Deripaska. But I think that Abramovich will have chance to explain that in witness box what he have done.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. I'll take the break now. Ten minutes.

(11.50 am)

(A short break)

(12.04 pm)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Have you finished, Mr Malek?

MR MALEK: I have finished, yes.

MR ADKIN: My Lady, I propose, if your Ladyship is happy for me to do so, to cross-examine from the back. If Mr Berezovsky can hear me properly and if your Ladyship can as well, it will save logistical difficulties.

THE WITNESS: Excuse me, my Lady, I'm sorry that I interrupt. Mr Adkin, it's not good --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: You can't hear?

THE WITNESS: Yes, yes. Not correct.

MR ADKIN: Let me try that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Is that any better?

MR SUMPTION: If Mr Adkin wants to come here and I'll replace him back there, I'm perfectly happy with that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: The trouble is he's got all his files there, haven't you? I was slightly hoping you were going to move, if you needed to move.

MR ADKIN: I'm happy to move if that would assist. If Mr Berezovsky cannot hear me, then clearly I have to move.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: How long are you going to be?

MR ADKIN: Not very long. Half an hour, I would think.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Well, let's start, Mr Berezovsky, and if there's a problem, I'll take an early lunch and Mr Adkin will have to shift forward to the front, okay?

THE WITNESS: Thank you, my Lady.

Cross-examination by MR ADKIN

MR ADKIN: Mr Berezovsky, I want to ask you some questions about the acquisition of the aluminium asset which led up to the agreement of 10 February 2000. Do you remember that agreement?

A. As I told you, I read this agreement only after that. I did not participate in preparation of this agreement and definitely I just know that the basic -- that this agreement of buying assets in aluminium and, as I understand, agreement itself between parties --

Q. Mr Berezovsky, sorry to interrupt you. I don't want to ask you about that agreement at this point.

A. Yes.

Q. I just want to make sure you understand what I am asking you about.

A. You ask me about agreement 10 February; correct?

Q. Correct.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, when it was suggested to you, do you recall, during cross-examination last week that Mr Abramovich had been approached in late 1999 by the vendors of the aluminium assets, you suggested in response that the idea was funny, so preposterous as to be amusing, and --

THE WITNESS: I'm sorry, my Lady, it's not good connection here.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Okay. I'll ask you to move to the front and I'll ask the usher to come and collect me when you're ready.

(12.06 pm)

(A short break)

(12.10 pm)

MR ADKIN: My Lady, I'm extremely grateful.

Mr Berezovsky, the question I was asking you was this: do you recall when it was suggested to you during cross-examination last week that Mr Abramovich had been approached in late '99 by the vendors of the aluminium assets that you responded by saying that the idea was funny and that Mr Abramovich was nobody at the time? Do you remember that?

A. I remember.

Q. Could you go to D2, tab 17, page 257 D2/17/257. This is your witness statement.

A. Yes.

Q. Would you mind reading paragraph 285, please, and 286.

A. 255?

Q. 285, please, and 286.

A. Yes, I remember that well.

Q. Yes, Mr Berezovsky. You say here, don't you, that by the end of 1999, Mr Abramovich's influence over the president and his circle had surpassed your own; that he went to Mr Putin's birthday party, which you did not?

A. Yes.

Q. Yes.

A. It's correct.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, you are not suggesting in these paragraphs that Mr Abramovich was a nobody, are you?

A. You are absolutely correct. And when I said that Abramovich is nobody, maybe it was not -- it was just part of the truth, because that time Abramovich really already took influence and he become known. Definitely not a lot of people understood that time. I just mention that his influential power just start to grow and he really was -- for many, many people he was nobody at that time and definitely his power, his power become strong only after Putin sat in the -- came in the chair of president.

But it's not correct what I said, that Abramovich not -- was nobody. But his influence just start to grow that time.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, do you remember the oath that you took at the beginning of your evidence?

A. Sorry?

Q. Do you remember the oath that you took at the beginning of your evidence?

A. Definitely.

Q. Can you remember what it said about the truth --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I don't think we need to go into the terms of the oath.

MR ADKIN: Mr Berezovsky, Mr Abramovich was not a nobody at the end of 1999, was he?

A. I would like to insist that for -- from the common point of view, from the -- sorry, from the general point of view he was nobody and it's absolutely correct. For the small circle of people, it was clear understandable that his power is growing.

And again, I just want to remind you that his position which he took of growing of power, it's made by me because his request to introduce him to Tatyana, to Valentin and later on to Putin. It means that

I understood that he is growing, but nevertheless not a lot of people at that time really recognised that he's so powerful become.

And you mentioned correctly he was invited to Putin's birthday. What do you know? How many people knew that Abramovich have been on Putin birthday party at that time? I'm sure that even very small circle understood that he become close to Mr Putin.

Q. Now, you said last week, didn't you, that the vendors of the aluminium assets wanted to sell their assets to you and that the reason for this was because of their fear of political instability as a result of the upcoming elections? That was your evidence, wasn't it?

A. You're absolutely correct, my understanding.

Q. And you suggested that that's why they had come to you and you were prepared to accept the risk because you knew that you would win the elections, by which I assume you meant President Putin would win?

A. It's correct what you said. But on the other hand, as you know, in my witness statement as well, already in '98/'99 I was invited [by] people from aluminium industry to solve the conflict between them on the one hand and on the other hand with the governor of Krasnoyarsk, General Lebed. And I just want to remind you that in 2000 Lebed continued to be governor.

It means that they came to me because of two reasons: because my influential power on the federal level and my influential power on the regional level. What is absolutely important that you understand if you build business in some region and I think they came to correct address.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, I suggest that the explanation that you have given as to why the aluminium vendors came to you and why they sold their assets is nonsense because everyone knew, from late '99 at the latest onwards, that President Putin was going to win.

A. It means that you didn't know Russian history at all because when Putin was appointed prime minister, even leading Russian politicians said that it is absolutely nonsense, Putin never will be elected. And it was a common view if you open what politicians, at that time famous politicians, like Nemtsov, like Chubais, like many others, told about Putin: they didn't believe at all that he would win elections. Even when he was appointed as the acting president from 1 January, it was common point that definitely he will -- he could lose the election to Communist.

It's absolutely wrong to say that everybody understood that Putin will become president. Me, yes, I understood; maybe five people more understood well, but not more.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, could you take up, please, bundle G(B) and turn to tab 1. Bundle G(B)1, sorry, I should have made that clear. Bundle G(B)1/1, tab 1.

I assume that you would accept that your Russian history expert knows about Russian history?

A. Sorry?

Q. I assume that you would accept that your Russian history expert knows about Russian history?

A. Definitely he knows. Much less than me, but knows.

Q. Would you look at paragraph 83.

A. Because I made the history; he just learned the history.

Q. Indeed.

A. Sorry?

Q. Would you look at paragraph 83, please; that's page 25 G(B)1/1.01/25.

A. Which paragraph?

Q. Paragraph 83.

A. The page 83?

Q. Page 25, that's on any of the numbering, page 25, and paragraph 83 on that page.

A. Yes.

Q. "Putin became Russia's acting President on the resignation" --

A. Just a second. Which is the --

Q. Would you please read --

A. Paragraph 83, yes?

Q. -- paragraph 83.

A. Yes. (Pause)

Okay.

Q. That's what your Russian history expert says.

I now want to show you what you say in your witness statement. Would you take up your witness statement, please --

A. Yes.

Q. -- at page 244, paragraph 228 D2/17/244.

A. Yes.

Q. Would you read that paragraph, please. (Pause)

A. Yes. And what of?

Q. It's a matter of record, isn't it, that the Duma elections were held on 19 December?

A. Yes.

Q. So what you're saying here is that it was already by this time that Putin would succeed President Yeltsin.

A. Yes.

Q. Is that paragraph true?

A. Again, it was -- again, where is that?

Q. Paragraph 228.

A. No, no, where is it that Putin succeed -- ah, here. It was obvious for me, it's correct. For me it was obvious.

Q. It was obvious for you?

A. Yes, it's my statement.

Q. Can I remind you of what you said during cross-examination.

A. Yes, definitely.

Q. That was on Day 6, page 145 --

A. Could you show me that?

Q. I think you will need to get that online, Mr Berezovsky, on the screen, if that can be done.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, he'll need some help.

THE WITNESS: Yes, I have it. Thank you.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: You can do it.

MR ADKIN: If you could get it, Mr Berezovsky, that's fine;
if you can't, then I'm sure you can be helped.

THE WITNESS: Yes.

MR ADKIN: At page 144 you were being asked by Mr Sumption about your relations with --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Hang on. Let him get the transcript up.

THE WITNESS: Page 44?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Day 6, page --

THE WITNESS: Yes, I have it. 44?

MR ADKIN: Page 144 we'll start at.

THE WITNESS: Yes, okay. Yes.

MR ADKIN: I'm using the page numbers -- I assume it's the manuscript page numbering. I'm looking at it on the screen.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: If you look at it on the screen, the page number is the number on --

MR RABINOWITZ: He has a hard copy, my Lady.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Fine.

MR ADKIN: At line 21 of page 144, you are asked a question by my learned friend Mr Sumption and would you read, please, from that to page 145, line 8.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: That's starting, "And your relations with Mr Putin as I understand it...?"

MR ADKIN: My Lady, yes.

THE WITNESS: Where I should start? Line -- page 144 or line which one?

THE WITNESS: 144, yes, and which line?

MR ADKIN: Line 21, please.

THE WITNESS: 21 line.

MR ADKIN: 21, and you should see there the question --

THE WITNESS: Yes, thank you, now I see that.

MR ADKIN: Hold on a moment, Mr Berezovsky. I'm just going to tell you what you should be reading. You should see at line 21 the question:

"And your relations with Mr Putin, as I understand it, were initially very good..."

Do you see that?

A. Yes, I see that.

Q. If you would read on, please, from there to page 145, line 8. (Pause)

A. Yes, it's correct.

Q. The reason you said that, Mr Berezovsky, and you didn't suggest it was only your own views, and the reason you said what you said in your witness statement, to which you've just been taken, is because when you were giving your evidence you were agreeing, weren't you, with what your expert has said, which is that it was obvious to everybody that from late 1999 President Putin was going to win?

A. You're absolutely wrong. It's terrible how you are wrong because I tell you that even to the last moment when presidential campaign start, it was up to the last day of election campaign, it was a lot of doubts for many, for majority, the biggest majority, that we'll have the second round. And in second round, what we afraid, that in the second round Communists really took -- had chance to win.

It means that it's -- again, it's my direct speech and it's absolutely correct what I'm saying here: for me it was obvious, definitely. For the others it wasn't so obvious. Like, for example, I'm sorry, my Lady, to say that for me in '96 also it was obvious that Yeltsin win, having rating 5 per cent against of Communists. But it was -- and it is the reason why Mr Soros said that I will be killed next day after Communists will take power, but I was sure that it's wrong. Exactly the same situation here.

And believe me, Mr Adkin, believe me that I'm really expert on Russian politics.

- Q. I'm going to suggest to you that your explanation for your previous evidence and for the aluminium sale and your involvement in it is completely false.
- A. It's completely wrong what you tried to present here, and you may be wrong(?).
- Q. Now, Mr Berezovsky, you gave evidence last week also, didn't you, that you assumed obligations to the vendors of the aluminium assets under the 10 February 2000 agreement despite the fact that you were not a named party to that agreement?
- A. Yes, it's absolutely correct that my role was from the beginning --
- Q. Mr Berezovsky, forgive me. I'm not asking you now about your role; I'm just reminding you of your evidence and I want to ask you some questions about that evidence.
- A. Which kind of obligation you mean?

- Q. Well, presumably very significant obligations: for example, to pay for their assets.
- A. Definitely I did not. Definitely I understood, after Roman Abramovich calculate money and said we have enough money, it was already obligations of Mr Abramovich, but in front of people who took -- who had proposed me that. I gave answer only after Abramovich said that we want to pay -- to buy.
- Q. Mr Berezovsky, you said you assumed obligations under that agreement. What obligations do you think you assumed?
- A. I think that my obligations was that we are proper buyers, that we are prepared to take risk and to buy that and that we able to pay for that. That's it.
- Q. I understand. So were you assuming the obligation to pay?
- A. After I met Abramovich and he said that he like idea to buy these assets.
- Q. Mr Berezovsky, forgive me, I'm going to ask the question again. Do you say under the 10 February 2000 agreement you were assuming an obligation to pay for the assets?
- MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: When he says "you", he means you personally. That's the question that's being put to you.
- A. Definitely people understood that I'm one of the owner of Sibneft. They didn't have any doubts. And it's the reason why they -- when I said that we buy that, they understood that I took this obligation in front of them.

MR ADKIN: And it's right, isn't it, that the Reuben brothers, who were on the other side of this transaction, were not Russian, were they?

A. As I understand, they are English.

Q. They are English. And it's also right that the Trans-World Group was a metals trading company based in the UK, isn't it?

A. I don't know that.

Q. And it is also right, is it not, that you were at the time of this agreement a highly controversial figure and that several public accusations of dishonesty had been made against you?

A. Could you tell that in more details?

Q. Well, you'd been charged with fraud, hadn't you, Mr Berezovsky?

A. That time, in December '99?

Q. Well --

A. I think you're absolutely wrong because it's -- again, the same story was Aeroflot and that time the investigation against of me was closed because I support Putin and I don't know who made this happen. But that time no one, as I remember, no one charge was against of me.

Q. No, the charges had been dropped in advance of this agreement, hadn't they, in 1999? But you had previously been publicly accused of fraud, hadn't you?

A. Nobody paid even attention to that.

Q. Nobody paid any attention to that?

A. Me as well.

Q. That was completely ignored, was it, publicly?

A. Absolutely.

Q. Nobody --

A. Because I knew from the beginning that it's completely falsified.

Q. It would not have had any impact on the way people behaved, would it?

A. You know that if people came to me that day, it did not influence at all for that people. We know the answer.

Q. I'm sorry, I didn't catch that.

A. The fact that people came to me and gave this proposal demonstrate that they did not believe in that.

Q. I see.

A. Good.

Q. So it's your evidence, is it, that nobody with whom you contracted in February 2000, or with whom you say you contracted, was in the least bit worried about the fraud allegations that have been made against you?

A. At least nobody mentioned me that. I don't know what they feel. They never mentioned me and I'm sure that if they felt like that, they never came to me.

Q. Why couldn't the agreement with you be in writing then, Mr Berezovsky?

A. Many times I gave answer to this question. I just can repeat the same: because of -- first of all because of request of Mr Abramovich and I accept his worry that we -- I still in very dangerous political -- in very dangerous area and as far as I trust him, I accept his position and, you know, in spite of Badri. As I told you, Badri fight -- not fight -- Badri propose that he will manage the assets, the company, aluminium, and definitely if Badri took this responsibility, it's absolutely clear that I'm the same.

And again, my argument was because of two reasons: because of also political involvement of Badri; but maybe the main reason, because that time, in front of election, presidential election, I need to be sure that the main TV channel of Russia will play their decisive role in elections on our side.

Q. What has that got to do with your agreement? What has that got to do, Mr Berezovsky, with not having an agreement in writing?

A. I just told: because Roman Abramovich, who I trust, insist that it should be just oral agreement; that's it.

Q. What has the running of ORT got to do with not having an agreement with you in writing?

A. I'm sorry, I had even more exposure position than Badri and Badri also had exposure position running ORT. We discussed a lot about that. And it's never changed in my understanding that we have a lot of reasons. And moreover, in '99 I understand -- on '99 and beginning of 2000 I understood much better than in '95/'96 when I also accept position of Roman that we shouldn't be visible.

Q. Mr Patarkatsishvili was named on the agreement, wasn't he? So your evidence is, is it, that Mr Patarkatsishvili, who was running ORT --

A. Yes.

Q. -- and publicly known to be doing so, could have his name on the agreement; but you, who were not running ORT, could not? Is that your evidence?

A. We already -- I already answered to Mr Malek to the same absolutely question. The point is that Badri also had a lot of reasons but Badri risk was much less than my risk, on the one hand. On the other hand, as I told you again, answering to Mr Malek, to his question, Badri was very flexible, very flexible person, and he had good connections even with those who I have been enemy.

Q. What reason do you give, Mr Berezovsky, as to why these western businessmen were prepared to accept from you very significant contractual obligations without having them in writing?

A. I think because they understood Russian history -- Russian reality a lot. Because it was not just businessmen who came just months ago to Russia. Mr -- brother -- Reuben brothers, they had big experience in Russia and they learn a lot about Russian history that time and they understood that my position, in spite of very exposure on the one hand, on the other hand, what I predict, it's happened.

And I think that they understood that I'm the person, first of all, who really -- I take obligations to buy, I deliver these obligations, because they knew well that I'm -- I own Sibneft. It's just today, after ten years, Abramovich decide to insist that I haven't been shareholder of Sibneft, I didn't own Sibneft. But that time everybody understood that. I have a lot of money to pay for that.

Q. I'm going to suggest to you that if there was any truth in your claim to have been a party to the contract made with those people in February 2000 --

A. Yes.

Q. -- you would have been named as a party to that contract?

A. The reality is different.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, I want to move on to the merger which you say you participated in with Mr Deripaska and I want to move on in particular to the meeting or meetings which you say you had with Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Abramovich before the Dorchester Hotel meeting.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, do you recall it was your evidence last week that the three of you -- that is you, Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Abramovich -- made an agreement some time before the Dorchester Hotel meeting about the proposed merged aluminium business?

A. Just a second. Could I take --

Q. You can put that away.

A. Yes.

Q. Do you recall giving evidence on that subject?

A. Yes, before --

Q. And do you recall also that it was your evidence that the three of you agreed that the arrangements made between the three of you would be governed by English or British law? And I'm not taking a point on any difference between the two.

A. Yes.

Q. And do you remember giving evidence that the three of you agreed that you would not sell without the consent of the other two?

A. Yes. Yes.

Q. And you also say in your witness statement, don't you, that it was agreed that Mr Abramovich would hold your interests and those of Mr Patarkatsishvili on trust?

A. It's correct.

Q. Yes.

A. Moreover, I also presented my surprise because --

Q. Mr Berezovsky, I haven't asked the question I want to ask you yet.

A. Sorry, no.

Q. Your case, as I understand it, is that you did not make any written record of the agreement between the three of you. Is that right?

A. It is right.

Q. And is it also your case that you did not consider it necessary to make such a written record because you completely trusted each other and it did not cross your mind that you would fall out?

A. No, it's completely wrong. It's wrong because I would -- definitely I want to have written agreement. And moreover, as you know well, that we start to move to this direction, starting creating the different structures on the west which fix in proper way our relations.

But the situation was, like I was describe many times already, that it was really risk for me to show up. I accept -- it was not my idea, it was idea of Abramovich, with whom we agreed that he manage. If he will feel comfortable doing like that, I accept that because I trust him; you are correct.

Q. So you did trust Mr Abramovich? Remember the question, Mr Berezovsky.

A. I did trust Mr --

Q. My question was -- well, let me put it differently so it's easy.

A. Yes.

Q. Did you completely trust at that time Mr Abramovich and Mr Patarkatsishvili?

A. 100 per cent.

Q. And did it ever cross your mind that the three of you might fall out about this and end up in court?

A. Again, my understanding of my relations with Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Abramovich was absolutely the same: I trust them 100 per cent. And moreover, it was very comfortable for me because I may spend my time for the purpose which I like to spend. And this is the reason on the one hand I trust; on the other hand, they helped me to do my business and they made their business.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, please can you help us with one thing.

If you completely trusted Mr Abramovich and Mr Patarkatsishvili and if it never crossed your mind that you would end up in court, why was it necessary for the three of you to agree a system of law to govern your relationship?

A. It's clear again why: because one day -- as I told you, at that time we already start to think about that: that one day I want to create absolutely structure which will not depend on Abramovich, which will not depend on Badri, but it takes time.

And it's the reason why already that time, understanding that Russia is political -- it's not stable enough even after the coming elections, which, as I told you before, I was sure that Putin will become president, but it doesn't mean that Russia will become stable just in one second. And it's the reason why we discuss about the proper legal way finally to have our interest, to fix our interest.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, you suggest that you might have wanted at some stage in the future to put everything into some sort of western structure. That is not what I'm asking you.

A. Mm-hm.

Q. What I'm asking you is about your evidence --

A. Yes.

Q. -- that the three of you agreed that your arrangements would be governed by British law.

A. Correct.

Q. That is your evidence, isn't it?

A. Correct. Correct.

Q. Why did you need to make that agreement?

A. Because, again, because we step by step move to the proper direction, to the final stage. It means that what we have done in '95/'96, when we just have oral agreement in Russia and so, and I understood that Russia is not the place where it is simple to realise your rights; it means that I decide step by step to move to much more protected area. That's it.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, an intention to put assets into western-style trust structures would not require, would it, the three of you to agree a system of law to govern your arrangements?

A. I already mentioned, absolutely correctly, that because of my personal experience on the one hand and because of the Mr Anisimov relations and influence and so-so on Badri on the other hand, I had absolutely clear understanding of British way of law. That's it.

Q. My suggestion to you, Mr Berezovsky, is that if you trusted each other enough not to write your agreement down, it was entirely unnecessary to agree a system of law to govern your agreement.

A. Your suggestion is wrong.

Q. The only reason why you would have needed to agree a system of law to govern your agreement, I suggest, is if you contemplated that you might fall out and that agreement might not be honoured. That's right, isn't it?

A. Okay, I gave my answer: your suggestion is wrong.

Q. And the suggestion that the three of you sat down, without writing anything down, and agreed that your relationship -- that your agreement would be governed by British law is a nonsense, isn't it?

A. It's not.

Q. Now, it was your evidence last week, wasn't it, that you knew almost nothing about English trusts at the time of making what you say was your agreement with Mr Abramovich and Mr Patarkatsishvili? That's right, isn't it?

A. No, I knew -- definitely I didn't know that time that settlor, then the protector; on this level how it's structurised I didn't know. I just knew that many people start to use the trust. I understood well that I gave my shares to Roman as a, I would like to say, nominee, yes? And he will hold my shares and anytime I'd like to get it back, by my request, he will return me back. That what I know.

We discussed last time that really, for me, the governing -- the law of what we discuss, Virgin Islands and so, I have in my mind that it's English law like that, and I had a little bit messed what we are discussing and what is separate for trust.

But again, I understood well that it is western protected structure what is the most important for me.

Q. Yes. You understood, did you, that it was a western protected structure?

A. Yes.

Q. My question is different. Did you understand what the English legal consequences were of a trust?

A. No. No.

Q. No?

A. No, I didn't understand.

Q. And you didn't take --

A. I understand that British -- I'm sorry to say -- even more British protected structure, as I explained last time, because I was impressed and I stressed many times the experience which I personally have.

Q. You took no advice, did you, from English lawyers on the agreement that you say you made with Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Abramovich?

A. I didn't get any advice.

Q. You didn't get any advice?

A. At least I don't remember that I took any advice.

Q. Presumably therefore, knowing nothing about the legal consequences of English trusts and not having taken any legal advice from an English lawyer, it's your case, is it, that you did not know what the consequences were of what you were agreeing under English law?

A. I knew well that this structure is more protected than any structure in Russia because many people already had experience, as I understand -- which I didn't know, but as I understand -- who also use these structures. Me personally, I didn't have this experience, but we already use. And it's absolutely clear from my conversation at Le Bourget that my understanding of western protection is perfect enough.

Q. Have you ever come across a structure such as the one that you are describing which wasn't written down?

A. No.

Q. No. Did you know -- well, you've already given evidence, haven't you, that you did not know what the consequences were of the trust that you say you were agreeing?

A. I knew the consequences. I knew that if I -- if better protected that just verbal agreement which were made in Russia with Mr Abramovich on the one hand. On the other hand I knew that many people start to use that structures; only because of reason that they don't feel protected in Russia, they start to use trust structure abroad. And if you go into statistic what Russian businessmen were doing that time and how they moved from Russia to the west, you will recognise clearly that I was just one of them. Nothing more, nothing less.

Q. I'm going to suggest to you, Mr Berezovsky, that you had no idea, as I think you've admitted, as to what the legal consequences were of an English trust --

A. I --

Q. -- and therefore that your suggestion you agreed to form an English trust relationship without knowing what the consequences of that agreement were is completely absurd.

A. You see, you know the logic, if assumption, is not correct; and implication even correct, that conclusion could be wrong or could be correct. Your case, the conclusion is wrong.

Q. Now, you say, don't you, that Mr Anisimov had told Mr Patarkatsishvili that you should make the arrangements between yourself, Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Abramovich in a very precise British law way. That's your evidence, isn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. I suggest to you that if it had indeed been said that you should make your arrangements in a precise British law way, you would have understood that to mean that you should write them down?

A. We discussed this point with Mr Sumption the last time and Mr Sumption accept the position that verbal is enough, that it's exceptional but it's enough. And maybe you were not present at that time here.

Q. Did you know that? Did you know that?

A. No, definitely --

Q. Did you have any idea?

A. I just said, I did not know that, I just understood that English law more comfortable for me, yes? And definitely later on only I learned that shake hands means more than Russia. That time I didn't know that. But I knew well that even in Russia it's valued. It means that in England definitely it was valued with much more power than in Russia.

Q. My question was a different one. Did you know in March 2000 that you could create a trust under English law without doing it in writing?

A. My understanding here is that I can.

Q. You knew that, did you?

A. My understanding, that I understand that.

Q. You understand that. What do you mean, Mr Berezovsky?

A. Yes, I understand that. Sorry?

Q. What do you mean by saying you understand that?

A. It means that I understand that if we have verbal agreement with Abramovich and Badri, between the three of us, and if we agree that it will be trust, I can go to court and to insist that I gave Mr Abramovich my shares to hold. This was my understanding.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: The question that Mr Adkin put to you was:

"Did you know in March 2000 that you could create a trust under English law without doing it in writing?"

A. Yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: And your answer was:

"No, my understanding here is that I can."

Can you just explain to me, did you know in 2000 or is it just as a result of knowledge you subsequently acquired?

A. I didn't have knowledge from lawyers about that. My understanding was --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, looking first of all in March 2000, what was the state of your knowledge then?

A. Ah, looking back to March --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

A. My understanding was that it's enough verbal agreement with Mr Abramovich about trust, that I can go to court and to prove my rights. This is the point.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you.

MR ADKIN: Mr Berezovsky, I'm going to suggest to you that that's not what you said and that was not your understanding at all.

A. You may -- you may have your personal vision. I just present my understanding and my vision that time.

Q. You had a good understanding of English law, did you, Mr Berezovsky?

A. Again, I didn't understand in details English law. I just understood well that, if I have a verbal agreement with Mr Abramovich and saying that we discuss in terms of British law, it's enough for me to go to court. This is my understanding.

Q. So if it was to be suggested to you that you had been told that you should write -- that in order for something to be in a precise British law way, it should be written down, that would be untrue, would it?

A. Again, I just understood that it's enough for me to have verbal agreement in proper British -- in precise British law way. That's enough for me to understand that I can go to court. This is the point.

Q. That's something Mr Anisimov told you, is it?

- A. I told you that I had discussion with Mr Anisimov but I did not learn this from Mr Anisimov.
- Q. Well, who did you learn it from?
- A. I talked a lot with Badri about that and, more than that, I learned that from the experience of others, Russian, who moved to fix the deal in frame of British law. As far as verbal agreement, again, I tell you that I have clear understanding like I have right to go to court. This is the point.
- Q. Mr Berezovsky, moments ago, you told us that you hadn't come across any single British law or other trust that wasn't in writing, so where did you get this understanding?
- A. My personal experience with British court confirm me that here the system of law is much more protected for people than in Russia. And it means that my understanding was, again -- and again just to stress that -- that my understanding was clear that I can go to court to fight for my interests. This is the point.
- Q. Mr Berezovsky, by this time, as I understand it, your experience of the English courts was a defamation case against Forbes, that's right, isn't it?
- A. It's absolutely correct but --
- Q. That's got nothing whatsoever to do with oral or written agreements, has it?

A. Mr Adkin --

Q. Do you agree with that?

A. You are absolutely correct.

Q. And it's got nothing whatsoever to do with trusts either, has it, Mr Berezovsky?

A. In the court, nothing.

Q. No, and you told us moments ago that the only experience that you'd had of trusts of a western style was that they were in writing, yes?

A. Sorry, again?

Q. You told us moments ago that the only western style trusts you had come across were in writing?

A. No, again, I didn't have my personal experience with trust at all.

Q. You had no personal experience in trusts at all?

A. I didn't have my personal experience. I knew that, later on, that many companies which were created in offshore zone were created like a trust but I didn't have my personal experience. I had my personal experience just that I start to believe in this system in general. This is the point, not because of trust exactly.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, I suggest to you that the evidence that you have just given about understanding that English law trusts did not need to be in writing at the time is completely fabricated. You have just made it up.

A. It's completely wrong your conclusion.

Q. You were asked last week about the instructions -- sorry, you were asked to explain why you had not said that you'd agreed British law to govern your arrangements with Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Abramovich in relation to Rusal until after Mr Abramovich issued his strike-out application against you. You were asked about that.

A. I told absolutely precisely. The first time when I was asked about that, I gave clear answer.

Q. Yes, and your answer was that you simply hadn't been asked about it by your lawyers. Do you remember that answer?

A. Yes, correct.

Q. Is that true?

A. Is it true? It is true.

Q. Would you please go to D1, tab 7 D1/07/92. This is the witness statement of Michael Lindley. He is married, as I understand it, to Ms Nosova?

A. Correct.

Q. And he has been instructed by you on various matters. He's a solicitor.

A. When it was? May 2011?

Q. This is the witness statement that he has produced in this action. He explains at paragraph 2 --

A. Just a second, when he produced this statement?

Q. In May 2011, you see that from the top right-hand. He explains at paragraph 2 that he's making the statement --

A. Just -- in the paragraph?

Q. In paragraph 2. You can take it from me, Mr Berezovsky, he explains that he's making the statement because of the order of my Lady that you produce certain notes and records of meetings you and your lawyers had with Mr Patarkatsishvili about the case against Mr Abramovich.

A. Yes.

Q. At paragraph 10 D1/07/94 he explains that he attended some of those meetings in June 2007.

A. Yes.

Q. And in fact we know from the witness statement of Mr Stephenson of Carter Ruck solicitors, who initially acted for you in your claim against Mr Abramovich, that the purpose of those meetings was to discuss the claim against Mr Abramovich so as to ensure that your solicitors had sufficient information to prepare the particulars of claim.

A. Yes.

Q. That's right, isn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. For the transcript the reference to Mr Stephenson's evidence is D1/11/255, paragraph 31. Would you please go, Mr Berezovsky, to paragraph 17 of the statement you're in, which is Mr Lindley's statement D1/07/95.

A. 17?

Q. 17, where he talks about a meeting that he attended on 13 June at Mr Patarkatsishvili's house.

A. Mm-hm.

Q. It was attended, he says at paragraph 18, by Mr Stephenson who was of Carter Ruck, your solicitor, Mr Geoffrey Gruder who was your counsel, yourself, Mr Patarkatsishvili, Ms Nosova and Dr Dubov.

A. Yes.

Q. Yes?

A. Yes.

Q. At paragraph 19, he refers to notes that he took --

A. Just a second. Paragraph 19?

Q. Paragraph 19, he refers to notes that he took of that meeting on 13 June.

A. Mm-hm.

Q. And could you please be passed bundle H(A)94, which is where we find those notes. There are typed-up versions of those notes at page 212 H(A)94/212 --

A. Just a second. What I can move away?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: He has too many files there.

MR ADKIN: I think you can move everything, please, but D1 and H(A)94.

A. D1. And my witness statement as well?

Q. I think you can remove your witness statement as well although we may need it back but you can remove it for the time being.

A. And H(A)94, where to open?

Q. H(A)94, well, there are certain -- if you turn to page 212 H(A)94/212, this is -- we see from Mr Lindley's statement, if you keep that open as well --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: He's given that back now, has he?

MR ADKIN: You should still have D1, I hope.

A. D1 I have.

Q. Yes. We see from Mr Lindley's statement at paragraph 19 that this is a copy of the notes that he took of the meeting on 13 July 2007.

A. Mm-hm.

Q. There are redactions and these redactions -- you will see blanked-out sections -- were made by your solicitors.

A. I don't know anything about that.

Q. Well, you may not therefore recall but you can take it from me that we obtained an order from Mr Justice Mann for your solicitors to provide us with unredacted versions of these documents --

A. Yes.

Q. -- on the basis that privilege against Badri could not be maintained. I want to put these unredacted versions to you and I've raised this with your solicitors. Can I hand up -- my Lady, these will be uploaded on to the database. (Handed)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Rabinowitz, is there any objection to the redacted passages being put to --

MR RABINOWITZ: The unredacted -- there is no objection to my learned friend putting the unredacted passages to this witness.

MR ADKIN: I'm grateful.

My Lady, it's proposed to put these behind the redacted versions of the same documents. Now, some parts --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well then, in that case they need to be hole-punched please.

MR ADKIN: We will make sure that that's done at lunch.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I think what I'll do is I'll rise now so that that can be done and I'll sit again at 2 o'clock.

(12.58 am)

(The short adjournment)

(2.00 pm)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, Mr Adkin.

MR ADKIN: My Lady should have two inserts into the trial bundle: they're both to go into bundle R(D), one behind tab 24 and one behind tab 25.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I don't have the hard copies, I operate on the electronic system. So no doubt they will be loaded on to that in due course.

MR ADKIN: We will make sure of that.

What they are, Mr Berezovsky, is unredacted portions of the documents behind those two tabs. Do you have bundle R(D)?

A. No, I have redacted, I don't have unredacted.

Q. Here we are. You can put away the H bundle that you've got there and take up, please, bundle R(D) and turn to tab 24 R(D)2/24/30.

Do you have that? Tab 24, and you should have a document the first word of which is "Meeting". Yes?

A. This is -- again, remind, please. This is meeting of who?

Q. This is a meeting which was attended by you, Mr Patarkatsishvili, Mr Lindley, Mr Jeffrey Gruder, your counsel, Mr Andrew Stephenson, your solicitor, and I think it's also said by Natalia Nosova.

A. That was when?

Q. That was a meeting, you will see from the top of the page I just referred you to, on 13 July 2007, and it's a meeting which your solicitor --

MR GILLIS: June, it's a typo.

MR ADKIN: I'm so sorry. 13 June 2007. I'm confident nothing turns on that. But it's either 13 June or 13 July 2007.

That is a meeting which your solicitor, Mr Stephenson, says was set up or at least was conducted in order to obtain information to finalise the particulars of claim in your action against Mr Abramovich.

A. Mm-hm. It's strike-out, yes? It's that?

Q. No, the particulars of claim: that's your pleaded case in your action against Mr Abramovich which you issued --

A. Before strike-out?

Q. No, your claim. The action, the claim that you have brought, and it is now being tried, against Mr Abramovich. Yes? Do you remember that that claim was initiated with a written document --

A. Yes, yes, I understand. Letter -- the first was letter of --

Q. Yes.

A. Yes, clear.

Q. And if you would turn, please, to page 37.

A. Of --

Q. This is using the R(D) numbering.

A. Of 24, yes?

Q. Yes, so tab 24 and it's R(D)2/24/37.

A. 37, yes?

Q. Yes.

A. Thank you.

Q. You will see there reference to -- or a notation of the word "Sibneft", various discussions.

A. Yes.

Q. And over the page at the top you will see the words:

"Law which govern agreement

"- What law governed --"

A. Just a second. On page 37, yes?

Q. On the top of page 38 you will see the words:

"Law which govern agreement.

"- What law governed --"

A. Yes.

Q. Now, the reason I've shown you page 37 is because

I don't want to mislead you, but I am going to suggest that the question of what law governed your agreement in relation to Sibneft was under discussion at this meeting.

A. I can't comment that, definitely I don't remember that.

And again I just want to repeat the same point what we discussed many, many times: when I was put direct question, I gave direct answer. I don't remember that here was direct question which law and so-so.

Q. And if you turn now to the new page, which is page R(D)2/24/41.001. It may be that you can be helped with that. Do you have that?

A. Yes.

Q. This is the unredacted portion of the documents which your solicitors had previously redacted.

A. Yes.

Q. I want to look at the unredacted words.

A. Yes.

Q. They start five lines down:

"Jurisdictions -- resident in the UK 1 June '07."

A. Just a second, seven lines --

Q. So five lines down from the top, it starts with the word "Jurisdictions". Do you have that?

A. Yes.

Q. Then the word "Contract", then the words:

"Sibneft contract governed by English law."

Then the following words:

"Rusal important. BB -- place where the deal was done."

A. And what?

Q. What I'm going to suggest to you, Mr Berezovsky, is that it is clear that you were discussing the governing law of the contracts upon which your claim would rely and one of those contracts and one of the things in respect of which you were discussing the governing law was Rusal.

- A. Again and again, first of all, definitely I don't remember that, yes? It's like Michael Lindley reflect or put on the paper what he think is a point for discussion but, my Lady, again I -- first of all, I don't remember that.

The second: again and again, when I face the question which laws, I give direct answer. This is the point. I don't know why my lawyers all the time put that between lines or somehow, I don't understand that. The point is absolutely clear. Like you also today was asking me -- okay, I don't want to return back, sorry.

- Q. Well, can you help us with this: are you able to explain why whoever wrote this document, Mr Lindley, considered that it was important in relation to Rusal where the deal was done, the place where the deal was done?

- A. I don't have any idea of that. I don't have any idea of that.

- Q. Well, I'm going to suggest to you that the reason that was written down is because the issue of governing law in relation to Rusal was raised at that meeting.

- A. Again, I don't remember that first of all and I don't know why Mr Lindley wrote like that. It's notes.

I don't know. I haven't seen that even until you show me now.

Q. Well, can I show you then, please, the document behind tab 25 R(D)2/25/45. It's the next tab along. Perhaps you could be helped with that.

A. Yes.

Q. This is a single-page document: it's an attendance note of the same meeting drafted by Mr Lindley.

A. Yes.

Q. And he says he drafted it shortly after the meeting?

A. Yes.

Q. And you'll see that the first three paragraphs have been redacted and I want to ask you to turn the page, where you should find the unredacted version of the same one-page document. Do you have that?

A. The next page?

Q. Yes.

A. Okay.

Q. Do you have that?

A. Just a second. It's page 45.001; correct?

Q. Yes.

A. Thank you.

Q. I'd like you to read, please, the first three paragraphs, which are the unredacted paragraphs.

A. And who wrote that: it's also Lindley, yes?

Q. Yes, Mr Lindley as well.

A. What is "AS" and "GG"?

Q. Well, we understand that "AS" means Andrew Stephenson and "GG" means Jeffrey Gruder, although I think in fairness to Mr Gruder that would be wrong, a wrong use of the G on his first name, but I can't think of anybody else it could be. Yes?

A. I don't know.

Q. Yes.

A. You made assumption, it's -- okay, fine.

Q. Now, as we understand it, the case that's articulated in the first paragraph is not actually the case you make today but we don't need to pursue that. I'm interested in the third paragraph, which is that:

"[Mr Stephenson] and [Mr Gruder, we believe] said that the difficulty in relation to this partnership..."

That's the partnership referred to in the first paragraph whereby you have a share of all of Mr Abramovich and Mr Patarkatsishvili's assets.

"... was jurisdiction as everything pointed to the partnership being a Russian partnership."

A. Yes.

Q. Now, Mr Berezovsky, when that was said, why did you not say, "Hold on. We agreed, at least in relation to Rusal, that our arrangements would be subject to English law"?

MR RABINOWITZ: My Lady, that is -- I'll call it a confusing question but it certainly doesn't arise from the document which is being put to the witness, the point about jurisdiction. It's now being suggested, as I understand it, that this raises a proper law point.

MR ADKIN: Do you understand the difference between jurisdiction and governing law?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, just a second, Mr Adkin. An objection has been made. Can you put the question more simply, please, remembering that the likelihood of Mr Berezovsky remembering what was said or not said at this meeting must be pretty slight.

MR RABINOWITZ: And indeed Mr Lindley is coming to give evidence.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR ADKIN: Well, indeed, but I --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Put your question and then I'll rule whether it's legitimate.

MR ADKIN: When the question of jurisdiction was raised, why did you not say anything about you having agreed English law as the governing law of your Rusal arrangements?

A. Just a second. It's completely mess.

MR RABINOWITZ: My Lady, in order to be fair to the witness, as Mr Adkin concedes and indeed as is obvious from the page, the jurisdiction point here related to Sibneft. If he wants to put it like that, then that at least may give the witness a fair opportunity to answer the question. But he says "jurisdiction" and then he slides into Rusal.

MR ADKIN: Well, with respect to my learned friend --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, can we just work out -- which document are we on?

MR ADKIN: We are on R(D)2/25/45.001.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. And that's the attendance note made up as a result of the earlier notes, is it?

MR ADKIN: I can't say, it would be going too far to say that it was made up as a result of the earlier notes, but it's an attendance note of the same meeting.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. And what is the paragraph you're wanting to ask Mr Berezovsky?

MR ADKIN: I've taken the witness to the first three paragraphs. The first paragraph talks about a partnership. It is not, with respect to my learned friend, solely concerned with Sibneft. As I read the first paragraph, what is being said is that they operated a partnership whereby it was agreed they would share all assets 50/50.

Then the second paragraph says that consideration was given to a possible action and the third paragraph raises the perceived difficulty of jurisdiction in relation to that partnership, and it is said that Mr Stephenson and Mr Gruder articulated that difficulty.

The short question I want to put to the witness is: if such a difficulty was articulated, why did he not refer to his English law agreement in relation at least to Rusal?

- A. Several points here. First of all, I don't have here at least any evidence that we discuss about Rusal. I don't see any evidence.

The second point is that we're discussing, as I understand here, about not a law but about jurisdiction. It's completely different story. Even I already learned that, I'm sorry to say.

And definitely the last point: I don't remember that at all. And I don't want my Lady to refer to Mr Lindley, who will give evidence, but really I am not able to comment even that, that point.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, thank you.

MR ADKIN: Mr Berezovsky, I want to ask you some questions about the period after the meeting that happened at the Dorchester Hotel agreement.

Now, it is your case, isn't it, that Mr Abramovich forced you to sell what you say was your interest in Sibneft to him at a gross undervalue during the course of 2001? That's your case, isn't it?

A. Is it connected to Rusal now or -- we discuss now Rusal or already Sibneft we discuss?

Q. I'm asking you whether that is your case. That is, as I understand it, your case?

A. It's my case. It's my case, part of my case, because the second part of my case is Rusal.

Q. Yes, indeed.

A. Can I move that away?

Q. Yes, you can take that away.

A. Thank you.

Q. Therefore, as I understand it, it is your case that Mr Abramovich was the sort of person who was prepared to intimidate, to force you to sell your interest at Sibneft at an absolutely knock-down price in 2001?

A. It's absolutely correct.

Q. Why didn't you do the same with Rusal?

A. Ah, because Abramovich already understood that he is so big man he doesn't -- even Putin not supported him, not with his help or just keep them as a --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Sorry, I don't understand the question, Mr Adkin. When you say, "Why didn't you do the same" --

MR ADKIN: Why didn't he do the same, my Lady. Why didn't --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: How can this witness speculate about what Mr Abramovich's alleged intentions were?

MR ADKIN: Well, I want to suggest to the witness, so that he can comment on it, if he has any comment to make, that if Mr Abramovich was able and willing to force him to sell his interest in Sibneft in 2001 at a vastly reduced price, he would have been able and willing to do that in relation to Rusal as well. I wanted to give the witness an opportunity to comment on that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So the question is you want him to speculate why Mr Abramovich didn't intimidate him in relation to Rusal as well? That's the question, is it?

MR ADKIN: Yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. What's your answer to that?

A. My Lady, I answer to this question I think from the very beginning when I said that impossible to think -- to understand what Abramovich was doing without three points together: ORT, Sibneft and Rusal as well.

At the first case, Abramovich came as a messenger of Mr Putin and said, "If you will not give, Mr Glushkov will stay in jail forever". I just very shortly make story.

The second time he came, for his benefit -- not for Putin; Putin benefit was to get under control ORT, what happened -- the second he came and said, "If you will not sell to me with this low, low price, Nikolai will continue to stay in jail forever".

But after that he already came without anything preliminary discussion even. He just sold like he likes because he knew we don't have choice. It means that crime of Abramovich was growing step by step; nothing more.

This is my speculation, as my Lady correctly mentioned. It's not my knowledge; it's my speculation about that.

MR ADKIN: And are you able to explain why Mr Abramovich, having done what you say he did in relation to Sibneft, continued, as you say, to pay profits from Rusal to you from 2001 to 2004?

A. Because formally he didn't get under control; the first point. The second point: he didn't pay. As we know later on, maybe he paid something, I don't know, but Badri worry was that he stopped to pay or paid not what we -- I expected. And, as you remember, when we settle the deal it was 135 -- I don't remember -- amount of dividend which Abramovich had obligation to pay us and did not pay.

Q. Well, I suggest to you that if Mr Abramovich was the sort of person who would do what you say he did in relation to Sibneft in 2001, he would have done the same in relation to Rusal and you would not have seen a penny in profit from it.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, that's a speculation, Mr Adkin, and a point that can be made in submission.

MR ADKIN: My Lady.

My final piece of cross-examination relates to the Rusal proceeds. Would you please go to bundle B(F).

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Tab?

MR ADKIN: At tab 11.

MR RABINOWITZ: We're going to have to get a file from somewhere else. We don't seem to have the B(F) series behind.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Can you read the document on the screen, Mr Berezovsky?

THE WITNESS: Yes, I'm fine with that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Let's have it flashed up on the screen.

MR ADKIN: Would you please then go to page 84 B(F)/11/84.

THE WITNESS: Could you help me? Ah, yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: It should be flashed up on the screen.

THE WITNESS: My Lady, don't you mind, I need a hard copy: I want to understand what is that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Okay.

MR ADKIN: I think we may have a spare copy on our side of the court, Mr Berezovsky, and to assist I'm going to turn straight to the page I want to take you to.

(Handed)

A. It's not falsified.

Q. So you should have page 84 of this document.

A. What is that document, please?

Q. This document, I'll tell you, is your solicitor Mr Marino's affidavit and it was sworn by him in the main Chancery action.

A. When?

Q. In October 2009.

A. Yes, okay. Fine.

Q. Would you read, please, paragraphs 40 to 43. (Pause)

A. Till 43 include or not?

Q. Till 43, that's absolutely right.

A. 43 include?

Q. Including 43. (Pause)

A. Okay. Thank you, my Lady.

Q. I want to help you by summarising what I understand your lawyer to be saying in those paragraphs. I understand him to be talking about the $585 million generated from the various agreements entered into in July 2004 which was paid, or at least meant to be paid, to Cliren's bank account at the Parex Bank in Latvia.

He's saying three things: first that there appear from the Parex bank schedules that you had obtained to be considerable sums missing; yes? Second, that you had not received your share of the $585 million, or what you claim was your share. And third, that there was a stark contrast between your lack of knowledge as to what had become of the Rusal profits and proceeds and the position of what was known by others.

Now, you had in fact obtained the Parex bank statements not, as it were, directly but by paying some employee of Parex bank to produce them. I don't want to make a point about that but I just want to establish that you hadn't, as it were, got them through formal channels, had you?

A. I don't remember anything about -- I know that Parex Bank is Latvian bank which was closed two years ago. I don't know anything that we had accounts in this bank, or maybe I don't remember. I had accounts in the other --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just a second. Is this a matter going to credit?

MR ADKIN: No, not at all. Just to --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, then let's leave that point.

MR ADKIN: I can tell you now, because this is common ground in the Chancery actions, that the reason you thought the monies was missing was because you believed the Parex Bank schedules were denominated in dollars whereas they were in fact denominated in lats.

But the point I want to put to you is this: other than the investment that you say was made with Mr Anisimov in Metalloinvest, at the beginning of these proceedings you had absolutely no idea, did you, of what had become of the $580 million paid under the July 2004 agreement?

- A. No, what I know that Badri from the very beginning propose to invest with Mr Anisimov to Mikhailovsky GOK, which later on become Metalloinvest, one of the largest in the world metallurgy company. I had a lot of doubts about that because recently we just gave -- went out from Russia and Badri propose again to go to Russia. For me it was surprising.

But Badri said that, as I already report to you, my Lady, that Badri has special relations, not like me, he was very flexible, and he said that it's not because just Anisimov; it's because Usmanov, who that time already was growing, and he really -- was common knowledge his relations with Mr Yastrzhembsky on the one hand, member of presidential administration, and on the other hand with Mr Medvedev, who later become president of Russia, yes? And with, as I understand, support of Mr Medvedev at that time, it was back finally Mr Usmanov and Mr Anisimov and we, as a part of that, bought Mikhailovsky GOK.

As I understand now, from the knowledge which I have of disclosure, only we, Badri and me, put real money, cash, which we got from Rusal, yes? And then Anisimov and -- but mainly Usmanov got credit from the VTB Bank, Russian bank, yes --

Q. Mr Berezovsky, I hesitate to interrupt but I asked you a question and I want to return you to it. I understand that you say you knew all about the Metalloinvest and the GOK investment, and that's what you're talking about now.

My question was this: other than that, I'm suggesting to you that you had absolutely no idea what happened to the remainder of the $585 million.

A. I don't have any idea.

MR ADKIN: Thank you.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: What was the balance?

MR ADKIN: My Lady, that is a subject of some dispute but we will take your Ladyship to it in due course.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well.

MR ADKIN: My Lady, other than adopting formally the lines of cross-examination taken by Mr Malek and Mr Sumption, I have no further questions.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you very much.

MR MUMFORD: My Lady, I have no questions for this witness.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you very much. Mr Rabinowitz.

MR RABINOWITZ: I do have some questions.

Re-examination by MR RABINOWITZ

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Berezovsky, I'm going to show you some materials and then ask you a question. Do you understand?

A. Yes, I try to understand.

Q. Now, please could you be given bundle N1, which contains the transcripts for the first few days of the trial, and for those trying to get it on the screen, N1, tab 4, please: the transcript for the fourth day of this hearing.

A. Yes.

Q. You should have -- if you go to -- what you will find is that there are on each page four pages' worth of transcripts. You have a manuscript. So could you please go to page 90 of the transcript.

A. Yes.

Q. And the first line of page 90, just to check you are looking at the right page, says:

"Again, I just want to stress, again, voluntarily."

A. Yes.

Q. You see that at line 2 Mr Sumption took you to the document at H(A)06/124. Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. Can you please be given bundle H(A)6, page 124, so that you can see what that document is. Keep the transcript with you.

You should have there the certificate prepared in connection with your appointment as deputy secretary of the Security Council of Russia.

A. Yes.

Q. Then if you go back to the transcript -- I just wanted to make sure that you knew which document we were talking about -- on Day 4, if you look at page 92 of that. It should be on the transcript, Mr Berezovsky.

A. Ah, 92, sorry, sorry, sorry. Yes, I see.

Q. Do you see between lines 21 and 23 you say that:

"... according [to] the decree, you should show only direct owners of shares."

A. Yes, yes, yes.

Q. You were having a debate with Mr Sumption about why this didn't show your Sibneft holding.

A. Yes. Yes.

Q. Now, can I ask you next, please, to go to bundle L(2011)18. It's a correspondence bundle. Someone is going to have to get it on the screen for you; we don't have those in court. If we go --

A. Just better to have the hard copy.

Q. We don't have a hard copy.

A. Sorry.

Q. L(2011)18, page 63, please L(2011)18/63.

Now, you should have --

A. Just a second, Mr Rabinowitz.

Q. It should be a letter from Skaddens, Skadden Arps, dated 16 September 2011. Do you have that?

A. Just a second. 16 September 2011, yes.

Q. That's right.

Now, just so you understand, Mr Berezovsky, this is a letter from Skadden: they were responding to requests from your solicitors, Addleshaw Goddard, in respect of Mr Abramovich's tax documentation and also his declaration of interests in connection with his political appointments.

A. Yes.

Q. Then can I first ask you to look at the two paragraphs of the letter concerned with tax returns and not with his --

A. Which letter?

Q. The letter that you're on. I want you to look, if you could, at the paragraph marked paragraph 1 on page 63.

A. Just a second.

Q. You see it says:

"It is common ground that Mr Abramovich's interests in Rusal and Sibneft were, at the relevant times, held indirectly through separate corporate entities (save for a very small personal shareholding). Accordingly, his interests in Rusal and Sibneft (and dividends paid by those companies) would not be expected to feature on his personal tax returns (save in an immaterial respect). Moreover, and in any event, Mr Abramovich's interests in those companies are not in issue in these proceedings and it is extremely difficult to see how or why, even if his tax returns made reference to his own indirect interests in those companies, that would reveal anything about the extent of Mr Berezovsky's alleged interests in those companies."

Then there is another paragraph dealing with tax returns --

A. Which paragraph?

Q. If you go to page 4 of this letter, it's page 66 of the bundle L(2011)18/66.

A. Just a second. It's -- I have just electronic copy.

Q. Someone will get you to the right page.

A. Page 4, fine.

Q. There is a paragraph at the top of the page which says:

"In relation to the Russian equivalent of our tax returns, our client does not have copies of these within his current possession or immediate control for the relevant periods. We understand that Russian tax returns would consist, so far as Mr Abramovich is concerned, of declarations to the tax office both as an individual and as a state 'employee'. We further understand that neither declaration would record shareholdings not registered in the person's own name or receipts of income from such shareholdings. We do not anticipate, therefore, that they would contain anything of relevance to these proceedings. However, we are prepared in principle, should you insist, to make requests of the relevant authorities for copies of these documents and to review them on receipt."

So, just pausing there, what Mr Abramovich's lawyers are saying is that Russian tax returns would not record shareholdings not registered in a person's own name or receipts of income from such shareholdings, then they go on to say that's one of the reasons why they're unwilling to provide Mr Abramovich's tax returns.

So that's just dealing with tax returns.

Now, can I ask you next to look at the third paragraph on this page, the paragraph beginning, "In relation to any declarations of interests..."

A. Yes.

Q. "In relation to any declarations of interests made by Mr Abramovich in connection with his appointment to political office which you refer to in section 1.2 of your draft Order, we believe that this is the first time that you have raised this. For the same reasons as explained in relation to the tax returns, we would not expect these documents to contain information relevant to this dispute."

Then they go on to say that they will make enquiries.

So what we have Skadden saying is that declarations of interests in connection with the appointment to political office would not record shareholdings not registered in the person's own name or receipts of income from such shareholdings unless they're registered in the person's own name. Do you follow?

A. Yes, I follow that.

Q. Does that assist you now in answering Mr Sumption's questions about why the document that you have open, which was your certificate of your interests, did not show any interest in Sibneft?

A. Yes, moreover we -- unfortunately we concentrate, my Lady, when we start to discuss the document, this is natural or not because the date of my birthday, as I understand, is wrong here. But when we start to discuss about the meaning of this document, I mentioned that, for example, ORT is not mentioned here, yes? The company which everybody knew that is 49 per cent no doubt, no doubtful, belonged to Badri and to me. And it's not written here because the same reason: because ORT were owned not directly, were owned through ORT-KB and Logovaz.

And here I mentioned only the company -- again, not me; it was recommendation of lawyers who made this paper, yes? And, as I understand, they calculate exactly the reason why to include something or not include in this paper. And it's the reason why I never had any problem with this paper in spite of a lot of investigation against of me in Russia. It means that this is not problem, how they present my --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Can I just make sure I've got your answer correctly. Are you saying that if you only have a beneficial interest in shares, as opposed to having your name on a share register, you don't have to include it --

A. Correct.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: -- for the purposes of some certificate or for tax?

A. Correct. Correct.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you.

A. Thank you, my Lady.

MR RABINOWITZ: Thank you, Mr Berezovsky.

Can I ask you next: you still have the transcript bundle in front of you; I hope you have that open at tab 4 for Day 4. Can I ask you to go to page 119 of that transcript. So you can put that away.

A. At all?

Q. Put it away entirely.

A. And to go?

Q. To go to page 119 of -- no, in the same transcript for Day 4. Again you have four to a page, so we're looking for page --

A. 119.

Q. -- 119.

A. Yes, I have it.

Q. All right.

Now, starting at line 10, you give to my Lady an answer about what Mr Shvidler wrote somewhere and you are comparing what he said in his witness statement to what was said in a particular document.

A. Yes.

Q. Can I just ask you, please, to be given the document that you were being asked about, which is at H(A)07, page 34 H(A)07/34.

A. Yes.

Q. So Mr Sumption was asking you questions about this document and in particular about the part of this document that was underlined.

A. Yes.

Q. You were making the point, if I can ask you to look back to the transcript at page 119, from line 10 on page 119 to line 6 on page 120.

A. Just a second. Starting from where?

Q. If you read from line 10 on page 119 --

A. "Because, my Lady"; yes?

Q. Yes, to yourself, if you read from there to line 6 on page 120.

A. Yes, clear. Just a second. (Pause)

Yes.

Q. So Mr Sumption was asking you questions about this document. You were making the point that there were inaccuracies in this, including the passage underlined.

A. Yes.

Q. And the particular bit that you were referring to in the evidence that I've just asked you to look at, at H(A)7, page 34 H(A)07/34, related to what this said about you and NFK. You see that if you go to the document at H(A)07, page 34, about four lines from the bottom, where, as you noted, Mr Berezovsky, it is said that you were the "chairman of NFK when it won the right to manage 51% of Sibneft's shares". Do you see that?

A. No. Where is that? What page?

Q. You're looking at the wrong --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: What page is it?

MR RABINOWITZ: H(A)07, page 34. It's the part which is underlined.

A. It's the certificate?

Q. Exactly.

A. Yes.

Q. And you see it says about you:

"... Boris Berezovsky, who is currently the Deputy Secretary of the Security Council of the Russian Federation, served on Sibneft's board of directors until 1996 and was chairman of NFK when it won the right to manage 51% of Sibneft shares..."

Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. What you were saying at page 119 of the transcript for Day 4 was that one should compare this to what Mr Shvidler had said in his witness statement about this?

A. It's absolutely correct.

Q. Can I then ask you, please, to be given bundle E3 and go to tab 10. E3, tab 10, page 14 E3/10/14.

A. What is that?

Q. E3, tab 10, page 14. This is from Mr Shvidler's witness statement.

A. The paragraph?

Q. Paragraph 49. The paragraph which says:

"I understand" --

A. I'm sorry, paragraph 49?

Q. Page 14.

A. Ah, page 14, not -- because we opened the page 40. This is the point. Okay, sorry.

Paragraph?

Q. 49. Mr Shvidler says this here:

"I understand that it has been alleged that NFK was a company which Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili controlled in equal measure with Mr Abramovich.

I disagree. Mr Berezovsky was on one occasion called Chairman of NFK solely to justify his position on the board of Sibneft. However, he was never appointed as Chairman of NFK."

Now, can you say whether this is the passage in the witness statement of Mr Shvidler that you were referring to in your evidence?

A. Yes, it's correct.

Q. Thank you. You can put away bundle E3, please.

Back to the transcript, Day 4. Can you go to page 151, please.

A. 151, yes.

Q. Now, again, just to give you the context of this part of the transcript, you were being asked by Mr Sumption about the creation of Sibneft and about the respective roles played by yourself and Mr Abramovich in that creation. Can I ask you to read to yourself lines 17 to 22, where, as you'll see, you referred to a statement made by Mr Viktor Gorodilov.

A. Page 151?

Q. So you're at page 151.

A. Yes, just a second.

Q. Can you read lines 17 to 22. (Pause)

A. Yes.

Q. So you're referring to a statement by Mr Viktor Gorodilov --

A. Correct.

Q. -- in front of the Prosecutor General of the Russian Federation.

A. Correct.

Q. You say he made some comments about the creation of Sibneft and the role of Mr Abramovich.

Can I ask that you be given bundle H(C)08, please, and go to page 110T H(C)08/110T.

Just so you can see what this document is --

A. Do we have in Russian that?

Q. The Russian text you will find at page 110 of the same bundle.

A. Yes, I got it.

Q. Right. So you see this is the minutes of an interview conducted by the senior investigator of the Prosecutor General of the Russian Federation with Mr Viktor Gorodilov.

A. Just a second. When it was?

Q. 27 May 2009: you see that at the top right-hand corner.

A. Yes, fine.

Q. If you go over the page in the English to 111T, the Russian 111.

A. Yes.

Q. Towards the bottom of the page you should have the first question, "Question by investigator". Do you have that towards the bottom of that page?

A. Yes. Yes, the first question of investigator, yes.

Q. The question:

"Would you describe how Siberian Oil Company was created?"

A. Yes.

Q. Can I ask you just to read to yourself that first question and the whole of that answer, please.

A. Just a second. (Pause)

All the paragraph to read, all the paragraph?

Q. If you read down to, "My son, Andre Gorodilov, had nothing to do with the creation..."

A. Yes, yes, just a second. Yes.

Q. In fact if you just read to the paragraph:

"I am not aware of the role that Roman Abramovich and Mr Patarkatsishvili played in the formation of Sibneft. I think that Abramovich appeared at Sibneft later."

A. Yes.

Q. Can you say whether this is the statement that you had in mind?

A. Absolutely correct.

Q. Thank you. Next can I ask you to go to the -- you can put those files away.

A. It's when I mentioned that now I learned that Abramovich was just middleman because my impression was completely different when he connect to me.

Q. You can also put away that before it falls as well, the other document file that you have over there.

Now, can I ask you next, please, to go to the transcript for the next day, so it's behind tab 5, and can we look at the transcript for Day 5, page 85, please. Do you have page 85?

A. I have.

Q. Thank you. Now, on this page -- do look at it -- you will see that you were being asked here about the funding of NFK's bid in the auction of 1995 and where the funding came from for the $103 million.

A. Yes.

Q. Can I ask you, please, just to read to yourself lines 2 to 25.

A. 2 to 25?

Q. Yes, so really the whole page.

A. Just a second. (Pause)

Yes.

Q. Do you see, Mr Berezovsky, there at lines 14 to 17 you refer to Mr Smolensky's statement to the General Prosecutor Office when they cross-examined him? Do you see that?

A. Correct.

Q. And you say that Mr Smolensky in his statement to the Prosecutor General gave some evidence about the circumstances in which he or SBS Bank agreed to advance the $100 million to NFK.

A. Correct.

Q. Can I ask that you be given, please, bundle H(C)08 and go to page 119 in the Russian, 119T in the English H(C)08/119T.

A. In Russian 119 and in English?

Q. At 119T. Again, I've just taken you to 119 so that you can see what the document is.

A. Yes, sorry. Yes, I've got it.

Q. You see it's minutes of an interview with Mr Smolensky?

A. No, I'm sorry, I didn't get.

Q. 119 or 119T, depending on whether you want the Russian or the English.

A. 119T, yes?

Q. 119T for the English.

A. We don't have -- I don't have... yes, this one. Yes, I got it.

Q. Okay. So, just to show you what the document is, it's the minutes of Mr Smolensky's interview, again with the Prosecutor General of the Russian Federation, the senior investigator from that office.

Can I ask you to go to page 122. If you want the translation it's at 122T H(C)08/122T. The translation always is at T.

A. Yes, but where was Russian? 122T, yes?

Q. That's right.

A. And now I just need to find -- and Russian on which page?

Q. 122.

A. Excuse me, could you help me. (Consults interpreter)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Not all these documents are on Magnum.

I couldn't find 119T. I've got this one but I couldn't --

MR RABINOWITZ: You've got 122T but not 119T?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

THE WITNESS: Okay, I don't see in Russian that. Okay, in English I have.

MR RABINOWITZ: I'm told it's after page 125, which is a little bit odd.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Oh, thank you.

MR RABINOWITZ: As one would expect if one were reading Hebrew.

A. Okay, I don't have Russian.

Q. Okay. Let's try in the English version, Mr Berezovsky.

A. Yes, fine.

Q. So 122T. Do you see question 3?

A. Yes.

Q. It's probably better if you just look at one page rather than trying to look at two at the same time.

A. Yes.

Q. Can I ask you just to read -- there's a number 3, that's question 3. You can see:

"3. Question by investigator..."

Can I ask you just to read the question and the answer number 3 to yourself, please.

A. Thank you. (Pause) Yes.

Q. You've read, presumably, the last sentence:

"But in as far as Berezovsky asked me to finance the purchase of the Sibneft shares, I can say definitively that Berezovsky was controlling Oil Finance Corporation. He lobbied for the resolution of this issue at the highest level. SBS-AGRO Bank financed the purchase of the Sibneft shares against Berezovsky's personal guarantees."

Can you say whether this was the interview that you were referring to at lines 14 to 17 of the transcript we have just looked at?

A. Absolutely correct.

Q. Thank you. You can put away H(C)08 now and if you go back to the transcript for Day 5 at tab 5. Can you go to page 104 of that transcript, please.

A. Yes.

Q. If you look at lines 11 to 21, Mr Sumption was asking you questions here about whether you were interested in what happened to the shares that were being sold in the 49 per cent auctions and you refer at line 12 to a prospectus "which written Runicom to Boris Berezovsky in English". Do you see that?

A. Yes, correct.

Q. Please could you be given bundle H(A)02 and go to page 194 H(A)02/194.

A. Yes.

Q. Can you say whether this is the document that you had in mind when you were referring to this?

A. Yes, absolutely correct.

Q. Thank you very much.

Can I ask you next, please, just go back to the transcript --

A. Just a second. Yes, exactly this document, yes.

Sorry?

Q. Put that away and go back to the transcript for the following day, which is Day 6. It should be behind tab 6.

A. Yes.

Q. If you go to page 21 of that, please, it's at Day 6, page 21.

A. Yes.

Q. You were talking here about a Russian concept of "kinut".

A. Yes.

Q. Can I ask you to read for yourself from line 10 to line 18, please. (Pause)

You see you refer to kinut being -- I think you said "it's [a] well-known example", I think you meant well known practice, in Russia not only in the 1990s but also now.

A. Yes.

Q. Can I just on this ask you to go to G(B)1/1.01.

A. Sorry?

- Q. You're going to be given a file. G(B)1, and then at 1.01, page 76. Now, just so you know what this is, Mr Berezovsky, it's the report of Professor Fortescue, the Russian historian. We all know you know more history than him.
- A. To whom we refer today already.
- Q. We've referred to this already today but I'm not going to take you back to that.
- A. Yes, just understand the same person, yes.
- Q. This is, as I say, part of the report of Professor Fortescue. Can I ask you to look at paragraph 278 of this and read it to yourself, including the interview with Vladimir Potanin which was given in 2010.
- A. Mm-hm. Just a second.
- Q. Do glance at footnote 167, please.
- A. Just a second. (Pause)
- Yes. This is 76, yes?
- Q. 167, footnote 167. Do you see?
- A. 16 --
- Q. Footnote 167. The little note at the bottom of the page.
- A. Yes. This, yes.
- Q. On the same page.
- A. Yes, I see it. My Lady, this -- when you interrupt me one day, when you said that it's social to discuss, but I exactly want just to -- as far as we spent so much time --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Can you speak up a bit or into your mic.

A. As far as we spent so much time on this word "kinut", Russian word, to help you and to help Mr Sumption for better understanding what it is, as far as Mr Sumption is one of the best intellectual in England, according to an interview, I just want to mention that I correctly construct the mathematical modelling for better understanding what does mean "kinut".

If you know the cooperative games, theory of games, cooperative games and noncooperative games, cooperative games when all players connected with binding agreement and if you breach binding agreement, game become noncooperative. In Russian, it means "kinut": it means transformation of cooperative game to a noncooperative game. It's the correct mathematical model the word what means "kinut". It's just thought when I have free time to explain it in better words.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I'm not sure that I know what a cooperative game is. Can you just explain?

A. Cooperative game when all players connect to each other with binding agreement, like we had with Abramovich agreement '95: this is binding agreement.

MR RABINOWITZ: Binding agreement?

A. Binding agreement. We had with Abramovich binding agreement and when he breach binding agreement, cooperative game become noncooperative game. It means kinut. And this is another way of game which is not noncooperative.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I see.

A. This is the point. For the future, because I'm sure you will have a lot of Russian in your court and they will use the same word.

MR RABINOWITZ: Yes, I'm sure.

You can put that away now, Mr Berezovsky. I think you've dealt with the point I wanted to raise with you, I think.

Can you next, please, go back to the transcript for Day 6, which you should have open in front of you.

I want you next to go back to page 47 of that transcript.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, at page 47 and really for a few pages going forward, you were being asked by Mr Sumption about a note of your evidence given to the French investigating magistrate which you gave by video-link to Marseilles.

A. Yes.

Q. Can I ask you to read to yourself lines 19 to 23.

A. 19 to 23, yes.

Q. It takes you to the document which contains your evidence.

A. Just a second. Question -- there is question first, yes?

Q. And the question. (Pause)

Just lines 19 to 23 there, please.

A. To 23, yes.

Q. All right.

A. Only the question, yes?

Q. Yes. I'm going to ask you next to go to page 52 because the line of questioning goes on for a while. If you go to page 52 and you look then at, on page 52, lines 5 to 6, you were told to look at page 188 of the note.

A. Yes.

Q. And then you see at line 10 you were referred to the statement from the French judge, "Maitre Temime has given me a document..."

A. Yes.

Q. Then if you go to page 53 and you look at lines 7 to 11, you see Mr Sumption quotes the following from the French judge:

"Once again according to documents from Maitre Temime. There were payments of 80 [million dollars] in 96, 50 [million] in 1997 and 50 [million] in 1998."

Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. Then at lines 15 to 18 --

A. Yes.

Q. -- same page, you were asked again by Mr Sumption about the document from Mr Temime that had been handed to the French judge which showed that there were payments of $80 million in 1996, $50 million in 1997 and $50 million in 1998. Do you see that?

A. Yes, I see.

Q. Then if you go to page 54 and you look at the following page --

A. Yes.

Q. -- there was some issue as to what the document was. And if you look at lines 8 to 12 you'll see that --

A. 8 to 12?

Q. Lines 8 to 12, you will see I tried to assist Mr Sumption about what these documents were but he doesn't want to be assisted in relation to that. Do you see that?

A. Yes, I see.

Q. Then if you go on to the following page at lines 2 to 4 --

A. "Following", it means 55, yes?

Q. On page 55.

A. And?

Q. Look at lines 2 to 5.

A. Yes.

Q. At lines 2 to 5, Mr Sumption asks you:

"... what were the documents which your lawyer gave the judge which showed you that you had received payments of those amounts?"

A. Yes.

Q. Now, can I ask that you please be given a document which I think is in the process of being loaded on to Magnum but hasn't got to the right place yet. Apparently one can see it on the automated Magnum screen but you won't be able to find it on your own Magnum database.

Do you have in front of you, Mr Berezovsky, a note sent to the French magistrate by Maitre Temime on 16 June, a few days before the hearing on 20 June H(C)08/150.001T?

A. Yes.

Q. Can I ask you to turn over the first page to look at section 2.1 of this note.

A. Yes.

Q. And if you could read to yourself the whole of 2.1, starting on page 2 and going to the second paragraph on page 3.

A. It means everything -- all the paragraph 2.1, correct?

All the paragraph?

Q. Well, until you get to page 3. You can stop before it says, "In paragraph number 58", which is the third paragraph. Do you see? So you --

A. Yes, yes, yes, yes. Sorry, I see. (Pause)

Yes.

Q. All right. And do you see on the top of page 3 it starts by saying, "According to Mr Abramovich..."

A. Yes.

Q. And then in the second paragraph on that page it says:

"Concerning the amount of these payments, he mentions in paragraph number 69..."

Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. Can I ask, please, that you be given Mr Abramovich's third witness statement, which you'll find in bundle E1, behind tab 3, at page 55 E1/03/55. Now, you should have this open at paragraph 69 of Mr Abramovich's third witness statement. Can I ask you to read paragraph 69 to yourself, please.

A. Yes, just a second. (Pause)

Q. You may want to focus on the second half of it rather than the first half.

A. Again, what is that? This is Abramovich statement?

Q. This is Abramovich's statement.

A. Yes. (Pause)

Yes.

Q. Now, having seen that, Mr Berezovsky, can you say whether this assists you in answering Mr Sumption's question, the question that he put to you about what were the documents that your lawyer, Maitre Temime, gave to the French judge containing references to these payments?

A. Yes, I'm sorry to say I never have seen Abramovich witness statement and this money -- these numbers coincide completely with what was mentioned by French lawyer.

MR RABINOWITZ: Thank you.

My Lady, I have a quite a few more questions for Mr Berezovsky. I wonder if it's a convenient --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, okay, I'll take the break now.

Ten minutes.

(3.17 pm)

(A short break)

(3.29 pm)

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Berezovsky, can I ask you -- I think you probably have Day 6 of the transcripts open in front of you.

A. Yes.

Q. Can you go to page 149.

A. 149?

Q. 149.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, at page 149 you were being asked by Mr Sumption about Mr Voloshin's evidence in relation to what happened at the meetings that you had with him and Mr Putin in 2000 concerning ORT.

A. Yes.

Q. Can I ask you just, please, to read to yourself what you said at lines 14 to 25 of page 149. (Pause)

A. Yes, I remember that.

Q. You see at line 16 you are referring to an open interview that you gave where you blamed him personally and you say:

"... why he decide deny today but not immediately after [your] open interview..."

A. Yes.

Q. Can I ask, please, that you be given bundle H(A)21 and go to page 162, please H(A)21/162.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, on this page you should see set out a report that appeared in Kommersant on 5 September 2000 in which appears to be set out an open letter from you to President Vladimir Putin dated 4 September 2000.

A. Do we have that in Russian?

Q. Do we have that in Russian? Page 167, thank you.

A. Yes, I got it.

Q. And at paragraph 1 of this letter you say:

"Last week a top official in your administration gave me an ultimatum: I should transfer the block of Russian Public Television [ORT] shares I control to the state within two weeks or I could go the same way as Gusinskiy -- clearly a reference to Butyrka Prison. The reason for this proposal was your dissatisfaction with the way in which ORT has covered the events relating to the Kursk submarine accident. 'The president wants to run ORT himself,' your representative told me."

Can you say who that representative was?

A. Sorry?

Q. Who is the representative you are referring to there?

A. No, it's Mr Voloshin and he accept that, as I understand, in his witness statement, that we met with him exactly this day and the day after I met with him and the president. I mean, Mr Voloshin himself who -- to whom I refer to this article -- to this interview --

Q. Can you say whether this is --

A. -- to this letter, I'm sorry.

Q. And is this what you had in mind when you referred to the "open interview" which Mr Voloshin never contradicted?

A. Correct. Absolutely correct. Absolutely correct.

Q. Thank you. You can put that away.

Can you go back to the transcript at tab 6, again for Day 6, and if you go to page 154, please.

A. Yes.

Q. You were still being asked by Mr Sumption here about ORT and the circumstances in which you decide to sell ORT and discussions between Mr Abramovich and Mr Patarkatsishvili about this.

A. Yes.

Q. Can I ask you just to read to yourself lines 13 to 19 on page 154, please.

A. Yes.

Q. So you're referring here to an interview with President Putin published in Le Figaro in which he said something like "State has cudgel in his hand and the State will hit at the head but once".

Can I ask you that you be given bundle H(A)22, page 260 H(A)22/260.

A. But I think I made mistake here. It's not 26 December; I think it was in October.

Q. In October. Thank you for that.

A. I think so. Yes, it was on October. Just a second. I don't remember. Just a second. Maybe December.

Q. Mr Berezovsky, perhaps if you look at the document that's being shown to you, that will help.

A. It's October, it's correct.

Q. Thank you. And as you see, this is a report from the Moscow Times.

A. Yes.

Q. "Putin Warns Oligarchs With 'Cudgel'":

"President Vladimir Putin warned Russia's powerful oligarchs that the state would beat them with 'a cudgel' if they stood in the way of reform.

"In an interview with Le Figaro newspaper ahead of a visit to France, the Kremlin leader said business bosses who amassed vast fortunes in the immediate post-Soviet era were trying to use the media to intimidate political institutions.

"The state has a cudgel in its hands that you use to hit just once, but on the head,' Putin told the newspaper, which published the interview Thursday.

"We haven't used this cudgel yet. We've just brandished it, which is enough to keep someone's attention. The day we get really angry we won't hesitate to use it,' he said.

"It is inadmissible to blackmail the state. If necessary, we will destroy those instruments that allow this blackmail.'.

"Putin was responding to a question about criticism of him by Boris Berezovsky, a business magnate with substantial media interests who quit parliament in July after accusing Putin of trying to turn Russia into a Latin American-style regime."

Can you say whether this is the interview that you had in mind in your evidence?

A. Absolutely, absolutely correct. And moreover I just want to stress to Mr Sumption that it's not just abstract, "We give to any head"; even in translation in English it's correct, "the head", because he refer to -- answer to -- he gave his answer referring to me personally. It's the reason why I accept that as a personal as well.

Q. You can put away bundle H(A)22 now, Mr Berezovsky, and I want you, once that's been put away, to go to the next day's transcript: that's Day 7. I want you to go to page 94 of Day 7, please. Mr Berezovsky, tab 7.

A. Yes, 7.

Q. So Day 7, if you go to page 94.

A. Yes.

Q. Can I ask you, if you're at page 94, to read lines 21 to 25 to yourself, please.

A. Hmm. (Pause)

Q. Just tell me when you've read that, Mr Berezovsky.

A. Yes.

Q. So you're referring there to a statement given by Mr Abramovich's press secretary, Mr Mann --

A. Correct.

Q. -- in 2010. I wonder if I could ask that you be given bundle H(A)98 and go to page 245, please H(A)98/245. There's a Russian translation at 245R.

A. And this I don't need as well? No.

Q. You don't need that.

A. Yes. Yes, correct.

Q. Can I just ask you, please, to glance at the first two pages of that. (Pause)

Perhaps I can just ask you, you see on the second page Mr Mann has asked:

"-- You deny that then, in 2001, this transaction between Roman Abramovich and Boris Berezovsky was purely political?

"-- We confirm that it was a divorce between partners -- Berezovsky and Abramovich. And there was nothing political in it."

A. Yes. Between partners, correct.

Q. Then if you go further down, there is a question around halfway down the page --

A. Yes.

Q. -- where they're talking about the amounts.

A. Yes.

Q. And if you can just read to yourself what he says, beginning:

"No. But it was a complicated story."

(Pause)

A. Just about amount to read?

Q. Just read, "No. But it was a complicated story", down to, "Incidentally, two years ago Ernst repaid this loan".

A. Yes.

Q. It's talking about the figures.

A. Yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: You're not speaking into the microphone, Mr Rabinowitz, so I'm having a bit of a problem hearing you.

MR RABINOWITZ: Sorry.

A. Yes, I remember that well.

MR RABINOWITZ: Can you just say whether this is the statement given by Mr Mann in 2010 that you were referring to?

A. Absolutely correct.

MR RABINOWITZ: I don't know whether this mic is actually on. That may be the problem.

THE WITNESS: Try to touch like that.

MR RABINOWITZ: Thank you, Mr Berezovsky.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: It's working.

MR RABINOWITZ: Can I ask you next to go to the transcript -- you can put that away. I want you to go to the transcript for Day 8.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, on -- sorry, at Day 8, page 12, please.

A. Yes.

Q. So from Day 8, page 12, going on to page 13, you were being asked by Mr Sumption --

A. Page 13?

Q. From page 12 on to page 13.

A. I see.

Q. Don't worry about it yet, Mr Berezovsky. You were being asked by Mr Sumption about the date when you first had discussions with Mr Samuelson of Valmet.

A. Yes.

Q. And Mr Sumption showed you a document -- I'm not going to take you to it; it's the one at H(A)19, page 10 H(A)19/10 -- he said that the document was dated 5 September and there was then a discussion as to whether this was the first occasion on which you had met Mr Samuelson.

A. Yes.

Q. Can I ask, please, that you be given bundle H(A)20 and go to page 135, please H(A)20/135. So at page 135, you should see an email from Mr Samuelson to someone called Hans dated 22 July, it says 100 but presumably they meant 2000.

A. Just a second. Where is that? I don't see.

Q. At the top of the page.

A. Ah, yes. "Dear Hans", yes.

Q. You see the date is 22 July, probably 2000 rather than 100.

A. Yes.

Q. Can I ask you to just read the very short email to yourself. (Pause)

A. Yes.

Q. Then if I can just -- do keep a finger in that document -- ask you to go forward to page 239, please.

A. Just a second. Yes.

Q. Again, it's an email exchange between Hans de Kruijs to Christopher Samuelson dated 31 July 2000.

A. Yes.

Q. And after the apology in the first paragraph you see the second paragraph:

"As far as your query is concerned, I understand from our brief telephone conversation that the (Russian) client is looking for an intermediary company to hold Russian assets/shares in Russian companies. It is hereby assumed that the ultimate corporate owner will be an offshore entity/trust, because of non-disclosure aspects."

Can you help us with this, Mr Berezovsky: can you say whether you think that the two Russian families referred to -- two prominent families referred to in the first email --

A. I think so.

Q. -- and the Russian client -- I haven't asked you a question yet.

A. Sorry.

Q. Can you help us identify who you think they may have been? Who was being referred to?

A. I think it's referred to Badri and to me.

Q. Right. And does this help you in terms of trying to identify more accurately when you first met Mr Samuelson or when Mr Samuelson was --

A. Again, my impression, because there were -- we discuss about what is date: it is American way or European way? It's 09/05. I don't... It's -- again, it's -- this written in July, yes?

Q. Yes.

A. 31 July. And it looks like that he already met us or not? I don't understand that.

Q. Well, does this help you in terms of saying whether or not September was around the time you first met or do you think it would have been earlier, having seen this?

A. My impression that it was earlier. It does not help me to understand better.

Q. Thank you very much. You can put away bundle H(A)20 and can I ask you, once you've put that away, to go to the transcript for Day 9 of the trial, page 83.

A. Yes.

Q. Mr Sumption, at this part of the transcript, was asking you about your case that there was an oral agreement between you, Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Abramovich and Mr Deripaska that none of you would sell your shareholding without the consent of the others.

A. Yes.

Q. Can you just read from line 25 --

A. But what is the page?

Q. You should be on page 83.

A. 83, yes.

Q. And if I can ask you to read from line 25 on page 83 to line 4 on page 86.

A. To the point -- which point? Which line?

Q. Just read to the top of 86, if you would.

A. Top of page 86, yes?

Q. That's right. (Pause)

A. Just a second. I just reading 85, I finish.

Q. Perhaps if you just read 85 and then let me know when you've done that.

A. Yes, I read just 85. I don't need to read --

Q. All right, that's fine.

A. Yes, fine.

Q. Can I just direct your attention to the fact that at page 84, between lines 5 and 6, the point is made to you by Mr Sumption that no mention was made of any oral agreement --

A. Yes.

Q. -- to the effect that no one would be able to sell their shareholding without the consent of the others in your original claim form. Do you see that at lines 5 to 6?

A. Yes, yes, yes.

Q. And then Mr Sumption goes on to ask you about whether you told your lawyers this and then it leads up to Mr Sumption saying at around page 85, lines 5 to 6, that you've really made this up.

Now, on the question of whether anything was said to your lawyers, please could you be given bundle H(A)89 at page 220 H(A)89/220.

A. Yes.

Q. You'll remember these. These are notes of a meeting with Mr Patarkatsishvili on 30 June 2005 and they were made by Mr Stephenson. This is the typed-up transcript of that.

A. 2005?

Q. 30 June 2005.

A. I don't remember -- where is that?

Q. Top right-hand corner, you can see the date.

A. No, the date is fine, but where is that?

Q. This was, I believe, in Georgia, Tbilisi.

A. In Georgia. Okay, thank you. And who was there?

Q. I'm not sure that matters for the moment. You were there.

A. Yes, sorry.

Q. Mr Stephenson and Mr Lankshear were there.

A. Okay.

Q. And Dr Nosova was there.

A. Okay.

Q. If you can then glance forward to page 224 H(A)89/224.

I just want to show you this.

A. Yes.

Q. You'll see that below the line, the bold line in the middle of the page, there's a discussion about Rusal.

Do you see that?

A. Yes. Rusal, yes.

Q. Then that goes on for a while. But if you then glance at page 229 H(A)89/229, please, there is a further discussion about Rusal and the whole of this page is what is being said to your lawyers.

Can you look, please, at the third paragraph under the heading "Rusal":

"Roman breached usual principles -- in Russia -- if go into project together shares jointly -- can't dispose at time -- in breach of oral contracts [and] normal principles in nothing written -- oral."

A. Yes.

Q. Does that assist you about whether there was an oral agreement that no one should be able to sell --

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, with great respect, (1) to ask a question relating to what Mr Berezovsky has told his lawyers by reference to something that Mr Patarkatsishvili said in Mr Berezovsky's absence can't possibly be appropriate; secondly, one of the most unacceptable forms of leading question is to say, "Here's a document that gives the desired answer, now what's the desired answer, please?"

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Rabinowitz, the document is there; you can make the point.

MR RABINOWITZ: I can make the point.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Again, it's all a long time ago; one has to look at the documents.

THE WITNESS: Yes, absolutely.

MR RABINOWITZ: Let's move on.

You can put that away now, Mr Berezovsky. Can you be given bundle H(A)84, please, page 4 H(A)84/4. Now, you were taken to this document this morning, if you start of page 2.

A. Page?

Q. It's H(A)84. If you start at page 2, you'll see what the document is: it's a deed of release.

A. Just a second. What is that? Just explain there.

Q. This is one of the agreements that was made by Mr -- it was one of a suite -- a group of agreements which was made by Mr Abramovich and his companies, Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Deripaska whereby the second tranche of the Rusal shares were sold.

A. I see.

Q. This is one of the agreements that was made and one of the parties to this was Mr Patarkatsishvili.

A. Yes. July 2004, it's correct.

Q. Exactly. Mr Malek took you to this this morning: he took you to paragraph 3.1 at page 4.

A. Yes.

Q. At paragraph 3.1 he showed you a provision which has two parts to it. The first part is Mr Patarkatsishvili representing to the other parties to this contract that during the period -- and the period was one that began at, I think, 15 March 2000 -- he, that's Mr Patarkatsishvili, was the sole and ultimate beneficial owner of the business interests.

A. Yes.

Q. So it was a representation he was making that he, Mr Patarkatsishvili, was the only person who had the beneficial ownership of the Rusal shares.

A. Yes.

Q. It goes on to say that those shares were not held for the benefit of any other person.

A. Yes.

Q. And then it goes on to provide an indemnity.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, you were asked a variety of questions by Mr Malek about this: first, the statement, the representation about who did and didn't have a beneficial interest, Mr Patarkatsishvili saying he and he alone had a beneficial interest; and then, following this, there was a reference to an indemnity.

A. Yes.

Q. Do you understand what an indemnity is?

A. My understanding is that it's -- it means that no -- that the person who sold that is not able to go to the court to fight that he did something wrong. It means that he is responsible what he is doing.

Q. Do you recall that when Mr Sumption was cross-examining you, he showed you a provision -- well, when Mr Sumption was cross-examining you, he didn't show you this provision. You were talking to him about a release whereby if someone had done something wrong, you couldn't go to court?

A. Yes, I mean exactly that it's releasing from the responsibility.

Q. Now, I want to ask you what it was that you were told about by Mr Patarkatsishvili and what it was that you were not told about by Mr Patarkatsishvili.

A. I don't remember at all that Mr Patarkatsishvili discuss with me that -- the point that I will not able to go to the court against of Mr Abramovich because, as I explained before, from the very beginning when we decide finally to sell Sibneft, I already never changed my position. And my point is that to do maximum what is possible to do: on the one hand to sell our -- somehow to sell our interests; on the other hand to have opportunity to go to the court.

And it's correct that it's just -- as I understand, in any case it is responsibility of Mr Patarkatsishvili. But again, I don't remember that ever Mr Patarkatsishvili discuss with me that.

Q. All right. So that's what you were not told about.

Now, what I want to ask you again, because your evidence in this was not entirely clear, can you say whether or not you were told by Mr Patarkatsishvili that you were being required to say that he was the only beneficial owner and that you had no --

A. Yes, this is correct. He was required to say that he was just only beneficial owner. It means that he was required that -- no, not in these terms. It was said that I would not be mentioned at all in any papers.

Q. My question to you was whether you were told about that by Mr Patarkatsishvili.

A. I was told that I will not be mentioned in any papers by Mr Patarkatsishvili. It's definitely correct.

Q. Thank you for that.

Now, can I then turn to the very last line of questioning that Mr Sumption put to you. This is at Day 9. If you can go to Day 9 at page 147 --

A. Just a second. I don't need that more, yes?

Q. You don't need that anymore.

A. Page?

Q. Page 147, please.

A. I don't have -- I have 10 something here.

Q. You don't have anything behind tab 9?

A. I don't have 10 day, 10th day.

Q. So do you have Day 9 though?

A. Yes, I have just --

Q. It doesn't matter that you don't have Day 10 because we're not going to look at Day 10. We're going to just look at Day 9, page 147.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, at Day 9, page 147, between lines 5 to 15, can I just ask you to look at that very quickly.

A. Yes. Ah, I already read that on the weekend.

Q. Right. So, as you can see, the questions relate to whether any of your witnesses stand to gain financially if you win this action.

A. Yes, correct. Correct.

Q. And the majority of your evidence in the paragraphs that follow, the pages that follow --

A. I remember that well.

Q. Let me put the question to you first.

A. Sorry.

Q. The majority of your evidence was directed to the position of Mr Cherney and you can see that at pages 148 and 149.

A. Yes.

Q. I just want to come back, if I may, to page 147 between lines 8 and 12 because there you say that none of your witnesses stand to gain financially if you win the action. Do you see that?

A. Yes, I see that.

Q. My question is this: is Mr Lindley one of your witnesses?

A. Yes. My Lady, I have read this transcript on the weekend and I am not correct here because my reflection was that did I give somebody -- Mr Sumption put correct question, no problem with that at all, but my reflection was that: did I pay money for witness, yes? Not witnesses. But it's not my English, my English is okay. My reflection was wrong. And when I read that, I just -- and if you wouldn't put me this question, I in any case arise this question. My -- now -- and I return to this point and try to recollect what's happened.

I have agreement with four people more as a beneficiary if I win against of not only Abramovich, against of anyone: Abramovich or Anisimov or Salford or family, yes? And, as I -- as we discussed now, that I have obligations to pay 5 per cent of this tape, for this recording. But additionally to that I have obligations in front of two witnesses and two who are not witnesses, the same obligation. And the reason why I have this obligation because those people participate in all my events which we're discussing here.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Okay. I think I need to know who the witnesses are.

A. Yes. The witnesses are Mr Lindley, the lawyer, and Mrs Nosova or Mrs Lindley, his wife, and they're witnesses. And there are two who are not witnesses:

it's Mr Cotlick and Mr Motkin. Those people, each of them have 1 per cent and --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: When you say "each of them", each of the four people you've mentioned?

A. Yes, correct: Mrs Nosova 1 per cent; Mr Lindley
1 per cent; Mr Cotlick 1 per cent; and Mr Motkin
1 per cent.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: 1 per cent of what?

A. Of any benefit which I'll get as a result of the hearing -- as a result of the judgment.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Gross or net of legal fees?

A. We just discuss that it will be 1 per cent from everything what I will get.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right.

A. We even didn't discuss to deduct, for example, my expenses for litigations, yes? We just discuss about 1 per cent of everything what will happen.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Can the court be quiet, please.

Yes, thank you.

MR RABINOWITZ: Can I just ask you these questions as well about what you've just said.

When did you make the arrangement first with Mr Lindley?

A. I don't remember well. I think it's 2008 or 2009, when we just -- when we spent mainly -- as I understand, Mrs Nosova, Mr Lindley and Mr Cotlick mainly spent time to prepare litigation. As far as Mr Motkin is concerned, it's different story because I didn't have time more to continue any my business and I ask Motkin to take power to control everything and I promise him 1 per cent if I win.

Q. Can you just explain to the court -- and I'm dealing at the moment just with Mr Lindley. I'm interested only in the witnesses rather than the other people --

A. Okay.

Q. -- unless you think that telling us about the other people helps to make clear what your answer is.

Can you just please explain to the court why you entered into this agreement, first, with Mr Lindley?

A. I think I came together with Mr Lindley and Mrs Lindley as well, both of them.

Q. When you say "Mrs Lindley", you mean Dr Nosova?

A. Mrs Nosova, his wife. Because it was my proposal, I proposed them that, that way, and it's because they start to pay almost all their time for preparation of my trial. And moreover we have very small team for prepare all litigations and as far as each of them is very complicated, I think that Lindley, Nosova, they spent 100 per cent time to help me.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Do they get other fees, time fees, or just a percentage?

A. As far as Mr Lindley is concerned, I think he has; I don't know exactly. As far as Nosova is concerned, no.

MR RABINOWITZ: Can you just say, Mr Berezovsky: was your agreement to pay the money in any way connected to the fact that Mr Lindley might be a witness?

A. Not at all, and it's the reason why I didn't think about that and maybe it's the reason why I didn't react correctly. And I'm sorry, Mr Sumption: that question was correct; the answer was not correct.

Q. Can I just ask you the same question about Dr Nosova. Was the fact that you agreed to --

A. Not at all. And it's --

Q. Just for the transcript, let's just be clear what the question is.

A. Sorry.

Q. We know what your answer is, but let's see what the question is. Was, in relation to Dr Nosova, what you were agreeing to pay her in any way connected to the fact that she might be a witness?

A. Absolutely not and my reflection is exactly that I calculate -- again, the question was correct, but I calculate that the question is: do I pay because they make this witness statement? And this was my reaction; it was wrong. And -- but the question was correct.

MR RABINOWITZ: Thank you, Mr Berezovsky. I don't have any more questions.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you very much.

Thank you, Mr Berezovsky.

THE WITNESS: Thank you, my Lady.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I have no questions for you.

THE WITNESS: Thank you, my Lady.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: You are now released from the witness box and you can talk to your team or anyone else about the case or your evidence.

THE WITNESS: Thank you very much, my Lady.

I may leave, yes?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. You may leave.

THE WITNESS: Thank you.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: You don't have to but you may.

Mr Rabinowitz, are you going to call another witness this afternoon? I'm happy to sit to 4.30 if you wish but it's up to you.

MR RABINOWITZ: It may be better just to begin tomorrow morning with a fresh witness. Everyone may be a little bit fresher.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Sumption, I think that's a sensible course. I'm happy to sit to 4.30 if you all wish --

MR SUMPTION: Absolutely. I am quite happy that we should start tomorrow, not least as we have only just -- literally about three quarters of an hour ago -- been given another substantial document concerning Mr Glushkov which I would like an opportunity to study.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well. Do you want me to start at 10.00 tomorrow or are you content with 10.15?

MR RABINOWITZ: As far as we're concerned we're very content 10.15.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Sumption, are you happy with 10.15?

MR SUMPTION: I'm perfectly happy with 10.15.

Before your Ladyship rises, may I just mention two points of concern. The first is that we are still, as the example I mentioned a moment ago indicates, receiving significant documents at a very late stage by way of disclosure. Now, formally speaking, Mr Berezovsky has been released but one of the problems about late disclosure of documents is that it may necessitate the recall of particular witnesses. We regard it as a matter of really considerable regret that we should be put in that sort of position.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I endorse that, Mr Sumption, but we all know it's one of the things that happens in litigation of this sort.

MR SUMPTION: I quite understand that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I'm not sure there's anything I can do about it --

MR SUMPTION: No, there is not.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: -- other than express my concern that it's happening.

MR RABINOWITZ: My Lady, I can only say that it's not deliberate and we will obviously try to ensure that the document -- we have an ongoing obligation in relation to disclosure and, if a document comes along, it's our responsibility to give it to my learned friend and I can also only apologise when it comes late.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Well, if Mr Berezovsky needs to be cross-examined on any additional documents, he'll have to go back into the witness box.

MR RABINOWITZ: Indeed. I entirely accept that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I'm sure he understands that.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, the second source of concern arises out of the last question that was asked in re-examination. I understand -- I have not actually been able to locate the actual document -- that we have written to Addleshaws on two occasions to ask them to tell us whether any, so to speak, contingency fees were being paid to witnesses and that we have received the answer that they had not. We were concerned about that because we had in fact heard that payments had been made to a number of witnesses and that is why we wrote that letter. No doubt Addleshaws will in due course -- provided I can lay hands on this document -- explain to us why that was not supplied. I would also ask that my learned friend arrange to have disclosed to us any written documents recording the agreement with Mr Lindley and Ms Nosova.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. I mean, I'd like to have references, Mr Sumption, to the correspondence that's relevant to this issue before --

MR SUMPTION: As soon as I have that, I will give it. If it turns out that I'm wrongly informed about those letters, I will make sure that your Ladyship is told that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well.

Mr Rabinowitz, obviously, if there are any written agreements relating to contingency fees or even just ordinary pay-as-you-go fees, I think it's right that they should be disclosed. They normally are in this sort of case.

MR RABINOWITZ: I follow, my Lady.

Can I just say this about the witnesses tomorrow. It's not intended to suggest that Mr Glushkov will not be giving his evidence first. We also have Mr Jenni coming to give his evidence. Now, I don't know how long my learned friend is going to be with Mr Glushkov but

Mr Jenni, I think, has to be on a plane back to Switzerland on Wednesday. This is as much for your Ladyship as for my learned friend. What we would propose to do, subject again to my learned friend being ready to deal with Mr Jenni, is to interpose Mr Jenni after Mr Glushkov tomorrow.

MR SUMPTION: We're perfectly happy with that, my Lady.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Good.

MR SUMPTION: Ms Davies will in fact be cross-examining

Mr Jenni, I will be cross-examining Mr Glushkov.

I expect, with all the reticence that one employs when predicting the length of any cross-examination, to be about an hour with Mr Glushkov.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Very well. So we'll have

Mr Glushkov, followed by Mr Jenni tomorrow.

Very well. 10.15 then tomorrow.

Discussion re housekeeping

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, can I just take up the last words of your Ladyship yesterday evening.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR SUMPTION: Can I hand up the documents I was referring to when I spoke about assurances that we have sought.

(Handed)

Just to take your Ladyship very quickly to this, we originally made enquiries about the position as a result of the disclosure of the agreement relating to the Le Bourget tape. In the first letter your Ladyship will see that at paragraph 1.6 on page 2 we asked for confirmation:

"... whether or not Mr Berezovsky had paid for any further evidence. If so, please identify what the evidence is and the nature of the payment promised, including whether it is contingent on his success."

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. I suppose the words "paid for any further evidence" might be construed as ambiguous but there we go.

MR SUMPTION: That is right, but your Ladyship will see that further up we referred to 11.07 of the Solicitors Code of Conduct and that, which is one of the last documents in the clip, provides:

"You must not make or offer to make payments to a witness dependent upon the nature of the evidence given or upon the outcome of the case."

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. So the second limb, you would say, is engaged or might be.

MR SUMPTION: Indeed. There was subsequently an application supported by a witness statement of Mr Larizadeh which refers to 11.07 of the Solicitors Code of Conduct and the application was for an order in the terms of 2.5 of the draft that follows:

"... full details of any payments made by the claimant for evidence and/or to potential witnesses."

That application we did not press as a result of a witness statement from Mr Hastings which follows in which, on the last page -- much of this is concerned with the tape supplier, but on the last page Mr Hastings says at (e):

"I can confirm that no other payments have been made by Mr Berezovsky for evidence in these proceedings."

And at (f):

"Finally, Mr Berezovsky has agreed, in line with the rules set out in the CPR, to compensate certain witnesses for their time lost in assisting him with the preparation of witness statements to be served in due course to support his case and the provision of conduct money in the event that they are called to give evidence."

On 13 July, just before the extract from the Code of Conduct, in response to an enquiry from us, we were told by Addleshaws:

"We confirm that the position set out in paragraphs 39(e) and (f) of the fifth witness statement of Mark Hastings remains correct."

We have no doubt that in the light of the rule of the Code of Conduct, Addleshaws themselves have not been involved in the payment of these witnesses. We have, however, written to them in order to enquire, first of all, how these statements came to be made and what steps were taken, particularly with Mr Berezovsky, to verify that the statements made by Addleshaws were accurate; and secondly, how it has proved possible for Mr Lindley, who is a practising solicitor, actually to take a contingency payment himself.

We will obviously report further on the outcome of that correspondence.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. Thank you.

Mr Rabinowitz, as and when Addleshaws respond to the letter, this may be something I'll need to be referred to --

MR RABINOWITZ: I understand, my Lady.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: -- at a later date.

MR RABINOWITZ: Indeed.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you.

Yes, Mr Rabinowitz.

MR RABINOWITZ: My Lady, we call the next witness, who is Mr Nikolai Glushkov, please.

MR NIKOLAI GLUSHKOV (sworn)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Glushkov, please sit down if you would like to but if at any time you want to stand up, please feel free to stand.

THE WITNESS: Thank you, my Lady.

Examination-in-chief by MR RABINOWITZ

MR RABINOWITZ: Good morning, Mr Glushkov.

A. Good morning.

Q. Before we begin, can you confirm that you don't have with you a mobile phone or any other electronic communication device?

A. I confirm.

Q. You have in front of you bundle D2. Can you open that at tab 13, please D2/13/1. It's the first tab. Do you have in front of you a document entitled "Witness Statement of Nikolai Alexeevich Glushkov"?

A. Yes, "Amended Witness Statement".

Q. That's right. If you go to page 53 of the bundle, so in the bottom right-hand corner there's a number 53 --

A. Yes.

Q. -- you see, if you come back a page, do you see a signature there?

A. That's my signature and I put it on exactly the same piece of paper but not yellow but white.

Q. All right, thank you for that.

I understand that there are some corrections that you wish to make to this statement. Can I ask you first, please, to go to page 53 of the bundle D2/13/53. It's page 52 of the statement itself. It's the page we were looking at with your signature.

A. Yes.

Q. Come back a page, please. Now, paragraph 255, as I understand it, is a paragraph that you want to make a correction to.

My Lady, I think the position is this has been changed on the Magnum version but not on the hard copy.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right.

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Glushkov, you should have in front of you a piece of paper, just to your right, "Correction to Nikolai Glushkov's First Witness Statement". Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. And is it right that the correction you have made to paragraph 255 is shown in this document?

A. Yes, it is correct.

Q. Now, Mr Glushkov, I understand that there is another correction that you wanted to make. Can you go, please, to page 25 of the bundle D2/13/25. Now, at paragraph 121 you say:

"Boris was not involved in Aeroflot (either as a director, shareholder" --

A. It's 24, page 24.

Q. Okay. It's 25 of the bundle, page 24 of the witness statement. Do you see at paragraph 121 you say:

"Boris was not involved in Aeroflot (either as a director, shareholder, employee or otherwise)."

Is that a sentence that you wish to correct in any way?

A. Yes. My Lady, may I give you some explanations to that effect?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, please.

A. Actually after Boris Berezovsky provide -- that was my recollection and after Boris Berezovsky gave evidence here, I was requested by my solicitors whether I have any trace of the registry of Aeroflot. I said that I don't know but I will try to find out and I found it only last Sunday -- actually I have the bundle of files much greater than you have here in this courtroom at my place, and I found extract. It was located in volume 93 of the materials of the case -- of the criminal case against me in Russia.

Unfortunately it's just the only extract that I have and definitely they confirm that I was wrong in this statement that Mr Berezovsky was a shareholder of Aeroflot.

MR RABINOWITZ: Can you explain in which years?

A. In 1996 this register shows that Mr Berezovsky was, through Consolidated Bank, 1996 through -- he was a shareholder of 0.109 per cent of Aeroflot. Mind you, my Lady, this is not a small share; at that time it was number ten shareholder in Aeroflot.

Later on -- and I think that's where Mr Shvidler was telling false statement -- it was acquired together with other shares by Laren Trading, a company of Roman Abramovich. But he acquired not only this share but also additional shares of Aeroflot, thus increasing the shareholding in Aeroflot to 2 per cent, which disappeared somehow in 1999.

Q. That's 1996. Can you say whether that shareholding was still there in any other year?

A. I couldn't say that. I couldn't say that. That's what I saw on Sunday and I sent these documents to Addleshaws because I found them.

MR RABINOWITZ: I can tell my learned friend we have a Russian version only of the share register --

THE WITNESS: But I can give comments to that version.

MR RABINOWITZ: -- which we got late yesterday afternoon.
I'm happy to show my learned friend.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Perhaps you could take that -- Mr Sumption, if there's any disagreement about access to that...

MR SUMPTION: Yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Presumably you would like a copy right
now?

MR SUMPTION: Certainly I shall not be able to make much use of the Russian version, I'm afraid. We had absolutely no notice of a correction to 121 and that is not the normal practice in dealing with witness statements; the normal practice is to give notice when a change is to be made.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, I don't know why you weren't told yesterday.

MR SUMPTION: I was not. We will look at that document.
It's unlikely to be material because, as I understand it, the shareholding had gone by 1999.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I see.

MR SUMPTION: In those circumstances it probably isn't going to be pursued, but we better have a copy of it.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, Mr Glushkov has been here; if he has to come back, he has to come back.

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Glushkov, subject to that correction, can you confirm that your witness statement is true to the best of your knowledge and belief?

A. Subject to this correction, my statement is true to the best of my knowledge and belief.

MR RABINOWITZ: Can you wait there, please.

THE WITNESS: Thank you.

Cross-examination by MR SUMPTION

MR SUMPTION: Mr Glushkov, you have, I think, been a close personal friend and business colleague of Mr Berezovsky for many years. Is that true?

A. That was true. I was his first partner in his life and, as I consider, first his true partner, honest partner and trusted partner, and I can prove that with documents that I supplied to the Addleshaw Goddard.

Q. You are also -- is this right -- a strong supporter of Mr Berezovsky's political opposition to the present government in Russia; is that right?

A. Yes, that's true.

Q. When you left Russia for England in 2006, did you for a time live in Mr Berezovsky's house?

A. No. I lived in his house only for one night, the first night, and then I lived in apartment at -- near Knightsbridge.

Q. Yes, I see. Did you, after your arrival in England, work for Mr Berezovsky?

A. Never in my life I worked for Mr Berezovsky or for anyone else apart from the state enterprises. I work only for myself.

Q. Right.

A. And I didn't work for Mr Berezovsky ever in my life.

Q. You worked, however, for companies which Mr Berezovsky controlled, did you not?

A. These were the companies where I was the shareholder as well.

Q. Yes. Did you have an office in Down Street after your arrival in England?

A. No. For time of my preparation of asylum I had a table allocated to me in one of the rooms in the office of Down Street due to convenience, because it's very close to the Ghersons office. But after the death of my other dear friend Badri, I stopped visiting this office and I don't even remember when I was there last time.

Q. Could I ask you to be given, please, bundle D2. It's the same bundle as your own witness statement is in, so you've probably got it. It's after flag 14, where you'll see a witness statement from a gentleman called Ian Patrick McKim D2/14/55.

A. Mm-hm.

Q. Now, you probably haven't seen this before --

A. No, I haven't seen it.

Q. -- but just to explain, Mr McKim was a solicitor who was engaged at certain stages on the preparation of Mr Berezovsky's case and in particular in certain meetings with Mr Patarkatsishvili.

If you look at paragraph 10 of this statement D2/14/57, he describes the process by which he looked into the facts and he said that:

"... [he] had access to Mr Stephenson at Carter Ruck, and to others including [Mr] Dubov, [Ms] Nosova and [yourself] who were assisting Mr Berezovsky with the claim."

Were you assisting Mr Berezovsky with the claim at any rate in 2007?

A. Yes, I was helping Mr Berezovsky in many things here in UK, but I never worked for him.

Q. Yes.

A. And I was never paid by Mr Berezovsky for this help.

Q. I see. So you had, you say, a table in Down Street?

A. Yes.

Q. The work that you did in relation to the present claim, was that done in Down Street?

A. I must definitely say, my Lady, that I don't even remember when last time I was in Down Street.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

A. I would say that the last time that I remember, it was a few meetings after the death of Badri on 12 February where I visited this office with -- in -- and maybe on a couple of occasions on the birthdays of some of the employees there. But I never worked on this claim on the -- in the Down Street.

MR SUMPTION: You worked on it elsewhere; is that right?

A. No, this claim I was not involved at all; I was giving only evidence.

Q. Well, I understand that you accepted Mr McKim's statement that you were assisting Mr Berezovsky with his claim. What form did that assistance take?

A. At the beginning I was helping him to gather the facts and data.

Q. And when was that?

A. In 2007/2008 maybe, beginning. 2006 -- sorry, it started in 2006.

Q. And continued to 2008?

A. Yes, at the beginning, yes.

Q. Understood.

Did you also help him on other legal problems, for example his negotiations with the United Kingdom Inland Revenue?

A. No, not in negotiations, but I helped him definitely with -- in provision of two documents: one was provided by Ruslan Fomichev and the other from Joseph Kay, and only as a technical person, as a person who has relationship -- good relationship, as I understood at that time -- with both of them, with Ruslan and Joseph, and who were in agreeance to communicate with me and not with Boris.

Q. Did you help Mr Berezovsky in relation to the money-laundering enquiries of the Dutch public prosecutor?

A. No, I don't remember that.

Q. I see.

Have you received sums of money from Mr Berezovsky since your arrival in England?

A. I will tell you, I arrived here in England and my friends both Badri and Boris helped me, which is more -- it's legally confirmed and I have documents, it's the gift -- deed of gift. Officially it was provided by Badri but in fact I understood totally that it was the help from both of my friends.

Q. Now, do you have any arrangement with anybody under which you will stand to gain financially if Mr Berezovsky wins this action?

A. No.

Q. Mr Anatoly Motkin, is he a counsellor to Mr Berezovsky so far as you know?

A. No, I cannot comment that.

Q. You do not know anything about him?

A. No. No.

Q. Mr Motkin --

A. No, I know about Mr Motkin but I do not know whether he's helping Boris in this issue.

Q. I see. Mr Motkin we understand to be participating in the management of this litigation. Is that your understanding or do you not know anything about that?

A. No, I cannot say.

Q. I see.

Have you recently borrowed a large sum of money from Mr Motkin?

A. Yes.

Q. And is the terms of that loan in any way dependent on the outcome of this litigation?

A. No. I can provide the court, in case of need, both with the loan agreement and with the mortgage, because it was done against the mortgage of property.

Q. Understood.

Now, I would like to turn, please, to the circumstances of your arrest on 7 December 2000. You were represented, I think, in the criminal proceedings in Moscow at that stage by Mr Borovkov. Is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. Could I ask you, please, to be given R(E)7/132/195 which I hope has by now been loaded up on to the Magnum system, but you'll be given a hard copy. What you are, I hope, looking at is the first page of Mr Borovkov's statement in your asylum proceedings in England.

A. Yes.

Q. I would like you just to confirm one or two points that he makes.

Could you turn to paragraph 31, please, which in the bundle numbering is R(E)7/132/209 --

A. I have it.

Q. You have it, thank you. Mr Borovkov is here providing some background information to your arrest and at paragraph 31 he says:

"I was due to attend the GPO..."

That's the Prosecutor's Office.

"... with Mr Glushkov on 7 December. Although it was not official, Mr Glushkov knew in advance that he was going to be detained on that occasion."

Now, that's correct, is it?

A. That's the opinion of Mr Borovkov.

Q. Is it correct?

A. The probability of me being arrest was high but even higher was the probability that I would be killed on the way to the General Prosecutor's Office. That's why I had -- my Lady, may I give some details here? Because it's very important.

In fact I received the notification from two of my friends that there was a threat to my life on my visit to the General Prosecutor's Office on the day of 7th. That's why I had to rent a separate apartment -- in fact I was even told the way it would happen: I would be run over by a truck. And I had to rent an apartment through an intermediary and it's well known, I can provide even the exact address: it was in the Kutuzovsky Prospekt in the same house where the Puglachev's theatre is located. Mind you, Mr Sumption, I have fantastic memory: that's what I am famous for. In this house I spent the last night before I was arrested.

But I would like to make a difference between the -- being definite and being in the field of high probability. That's very essential. The probability was high, since it was announced on 13 November, but at the same time when I was giving interview to Kommersant I pointed out that I am sure that I will be some day arrested but it didn't happen until that time, and it happened -- I gave interview in November. So the probability was high, that's why I had to call my lawyers, and I would have -- and I had to say that.

As it turned out, on 7 December I moved through a different route in a different car, arrived separately from my lawyer to the General Prosecutor's Office and that's how I reached there unnoticed. I entered the building without anyone even expecting me there.

Mr Borovkov joined me there, we entered the General Prosecutor's Office and then there was a turmoil. The turmoil insisted of the fact that they didn't know what to do with me.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Glushkov, I'm going to stop you there because you're going to have a lot more answers to give, please.

MR SUMPTION: Mr Glushkov, could you please turn to 202 of your witness statement.

A. Of my...?

Q. Your witness statement.

A. My witness statement?

Q. Yes, your witness statement.

Paragraph 202, on page 43 of the bundle numbering D2/13/202.

A. I'll find it. Yes.

Q. Now, you've just referred to the Kommersant article and you refer to it here. In the second sentence on that paragraph you say:

"From then on, I knew I would be arrested and detained."

Is that true?

A. Yes.

Q. Could you look back --

A. But I never said that here or that on 7 December.

Q. Could you look back at Mr Borovkov's statement, please, and turn to paragraph 34 R(E)7/132/210.

A. Yes.

Q. "On 5 December..."

Mr Borovkov says:

"... (personally served on Mr Glushkov on [the 7th]), Investigator Filin issued a decree to select detention as the measure of restraint... The decision was taken on the same day as the decision to charge Mr Glushkov under Articles 159(2)(a), (b) and (c) and 159(3)."

So what Mr Borovkov is saying there is that on 5 December the decision was taken within the Prosecutor's Office to charge you and detain you. Do you accept that?

A. No. What is said here is completely different, legally different thing: that this decision was dated 5 December, which is completely different from the fact that it was signed on 5 December. The signing of this order took place two hours while I was smoking and I know from my experience with General Prosecutor Office that they can date any documents any date whatsoever.

In fact, the decision -- from my point of view, the decision was taken there and then during two hours that I was waiting in between the first meeting with Prosecutor Filin and this decision being produced to me. We were waiting in the corridor smoking: I smoked half a pack of cigarettes waiting for this decision.

Q. Mr Glushkov, Mr Borovkov is saying that the decree was issued on 5 December and that the decision was taken on 5 December to charge you. Do you have any information which enables you to say that that is wrong?

A. In fact on many occasions, at least on 50 occasions during the course of court proceedings, I indicated that the documents of the General Prosecutor's Office were falsified, even the signatures were falsified, and that was proved by the expert reports prepared by expertise, independent experts.

Q. You're talking about other cases?

A. I am talking about this particular case.

Q. Would you look back at paragraph 31, please

R(E)7/132/209:

"On 6 December..."

This is Mr Borovkov's statement:

"... I met Mr Glushkov, together with my colleague, the lawyer Semyon Aria. There were others present at the same time, including the Kommersant journalist, Renata Yambayeva. Mr Glushkov told me that he knew that he would be arrested the following day."

Now, is that true?

A. That was my supposition, yes.

Q. Well, it's not supposition as expressed here; it's a recollection of what you said to him.

A. No, the recollection is wrong because I went to the General Prosecutor's Office even without the simplest necessary things that I would have taken if I knew that for sure. I went there in one suit, without anything that was of necessity. I was dressed like that -- I'm sorry, my Lady, without bowtie but with an ordinary tie. Bowties I am wearing here at this particular occasion because I like being present in this audience and I want to be in good state to hear other people's lie in front of this court.

Q. Mr Glushkov, you did tell Mr Borovkov on 6 December, didn't you, that you knew that you would be arrested on the following day?

A. No matter how many times you will repeat this question, Mr Sumption, my answer will be still the same. I will never give you the answer that you will require from me.

I will give you only truthful answer because I gave a vow to say truth and nothing but the truth.

Q. Would you please be given bundle R(E)7, flag 1

R(E)7/127/1. This is your own account of the position as at 6 December. It appears in your witness statement in support of your application for asylum.

Now, did you regard it as important to give truthful statements --

A. Definitely.

Q. -- in this document? Would you turn to paragraph 79, please, page 26 of the bundle R(E)7/127/26:

"Immediately after I left the hospital (before the required time to remove the stitches), I was summoned to the General Prosecutor's Office where I was arrested on 7 December. In order to avoid 'accidents' I stayed in separate rented apartments on 5 and 6 December. Knowing that I would be arrested on 7 December, I had a meeting with my lawyers the day before and I also met the correspondent Renata Yambayeva of Kommersant whom I told to cancel the press conference that we had planned for the following next week."

Is that statement true?

A. Yes, definitely, and it doesn't contradict my previous statement.

Q. So you did know that you were going to be arrested on

7 December?

A. I'll repeat once again: the probability was high.

Q. Mr Glushkov, you're simply fencing with the facts. You knew perfectly well you were going to be arrested?

A. Mr Sumption, I'm not fencing with -- I'm not being fenced with something. I am telling you my recollection of the facts and you cannot substitute probability with the fact. The fact is arrested. The probability of being arrested is a different thing.

Q. Now, you have undergone two trials in Moscow, the first between 2002 and 2004 and the second -- is this right -- between 2004 and 2006?

A. That is correct.

Q. Now, was the result of the first trial that you were convicted of abuse of your authority as deputy director general of Aeroflot?

A. That's it.

Q. And of failing to repatriate Aeroflot foreign currency to Russia?

A. That is correct.

Q. And of attempting to escape from custody?

A. That is also true.

Q. You were acquitted at that trial of money-laundering?

A. Yes.

Q. Was the result of the second trial that you were reconvicted of failing to repatriate foreign currency and also convicted of theft from Aeroflot?

A. No.

Q. What do you say the result of the second trial was?

A. You see, Mr Sumption, I'm not going to indulge with you in the legal argument on the correct statement but the accusation and conviction never had relate -- was related to theft, which is Article Number 158 of the Criminal Code of Russian Federation, but of the Article 159, which is fraud, of the Criminal Code of Russian Federation. If the Criminal Code of Russian Federation makes a difference between these two things,
I make the difference as well.

Q. I'm perfectly happy with the word "fraud" if you would prefer that.

A. Yes.

Q. Understood. So were you convicted at the end of the second trial of fraud against Aeroflot?

A. Exactly.

Q. Right. And also -- is this right -- of failing to repatriate foreign currency?

A. That's correct.

Q. Now, is it right that a number of other persons have been convicted in Russia of offences concerning the same transactions involving Aeroflot?

A. That's correct.

Q. Can you tell us who they are?

A. They were Mrs Kryzhevskaya, Mr Krasnenker and Mr Sheinin.

Q. What about Ms Dubanskaya: was she convicted of offences as well?

A. No.

Q. She was not. Okay, three other people then were convicted of offences relating to these transactions. Can you confirm that those three persons were people of no political significance: they weren't politicians or engaged in politics?

A. No.

Q. That's correct, is it?

A. Yes.

Q. And --

A. And they were never in jail.

Q. And they also -- is this right -- had no connection with Mr Berezovsky?

A. No.

Q. Sorry, when you say "no", are you confirming that they had no connection with Mr Berezovsky?

A. To the best of my knowledge.

Q. Understood.

A. Apart from Mr Krasnenker, who worked in Logovaz.

- Q. Now, I fully understand that you say you were wrongly convicted on all of these charges and that your two trials in Russia were unfair.
- A. That's correct.
- Q. I'm not going to go into that aspect of matters. What I would like to ask you is this: do you go so far as to say that there wasn't even a case worthy of investigation by the public prosecutor into the transactions involving Aeroflot?
- A. Which public prosecution?
- Q. The one in Russia. Do you say that there was not even a case which was worthy of investigation by the prosecutor?
- A. I think that it was instigated and I know exactly who instigated it and when, and I exactly relate this in my asylum claim statements and in all documents related to that. I was not hiding anything, not anything related -- actually all the materials of the case, my Lady, were provided to asylum tribunal, to the High Court here and to all the other instances that requested it, and I faced a fair trial in asylum court and I was giving evidence for quite a number of days in this respect.
- Q. Mr Glushkov, I think you have missed the point of my question. I understand that you say -- and I'm not going to challenge you on this -- that your trial was unfair and that you should not have been convicted.

A. My Lady, may, before I answer this question, I can answer this --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Let him put the question first.

MR SUMPTION: I haven't asked you the question yet.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just a second, Mr Sumption.

It's important, Mr Glushkov, that you listen to the question. If you then have an objection to it, or Mr Rabinowitz does, then Mr Rabinowitz can get up.

Put the question, Mr Sumption, please.

MR SUMPTION: Now, what I would like you to tell us is this:

do you say that there wasn't even anything suspicious enough to warrant being investigated by the public prosecutor?

A. Once again, my Lady, to answer to this question I have to give you explanations. If you look at my witness statements, there are quite a number of pages crossed out: that was done at the request of the other side that said that these events have nothing to do with this particular case. I did that at this request because my lawyers said that that side is correct.

Now Mr Sumption is asking me a question that deals exactly with those crossed-out parts and if he insists on those questions, I will have to ask your Ladyship to reinstate those crossed-out pages.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Okay. Well, just answer the question first.

A. I think that they have nothing to do -- this prosecution had nothing to do with the necessity to prosecute me, which is more -- as was recognised by the High Court here, it was not prosecution but persecution.

MR SUMPTION: Mr Glushkov, the parts that you have deleted related to the question who was responsible for having you arrested, and that is not the question that I am asking you about. I am interested in the transactions about which you were subsequently tried in Moscow. That's what I'm interested in.

A. The transactions were --

Q. I haven't asked the question yet.

A. Okay.

Q. What I want you to tell us is: do you say that there was not even something sufficiently suspicious about those transactions to be worth investigating by a prosecutor? Do you understand the point that I am making?

A. Yes, I understand the point --

Q. I'm not asking you who got you arrested. I'm just asking you: do you accept that there were sufficiently suspicious circumstances to warrant being investigated?

A. And the investigation took place -- there were, and the investigation took place in 1997 and 1998 and all the accusations were dropped out in 1998, in June 1998, by the general prosecutors.

My Lady, what Mr Sumption is saying is the new renewal of those accusations that started in 1999 and that has direct relationship to who caused those renewals.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Okay. So can I just summarise, Mr Glushkov, and if I've got it wrong, tell me.

You accept that there were circumstances of such a nature that justified the initial investigation?

A. Yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Once that investigation was dropped, you say there were no circumstances justifying the repeated investigation or the continued investigation?

A. Exactly. Exactly, my Lady.

MR SUMPTION: I understand.

The matters investigated on the second occasion, in December 2000, were they the same matters as the matters in respect of which the investigation had previously been dropped?

A. No, but those matters were never dropped as well.

Q. I think you may have misunderstood my question, Mr Glushkov. What you've just confirmed is that you accept that there were matters that were worthy of investigation on the earlier occasion but there was no justification for reopening the investigation later.

All that I asked you is this: were the matters that were being investigated the same on the two occasions?

A. No.

Q. What was the difference?

A. The difference that fraud appeared.

Q. Sorry, the difference...?

A. Fraud appeared.

Q. Fraud appeared --

A. The accusation in fraud.

Q. -- on the second occasion?

A. On the second occasion, yes.

Q. And what had appeared on the first occasion?

A. Illegal commercial activity and money-laundering.

Q. Right.

Now, if you would just turn to paragraph 78 of your witness statement D2/13/17, Mr Glushkov, you give some evidence here about a company called Andava.

A. Mm-hm.

Q. Now, Andava was a Swiss company, was it not?

A. Yes.

Q. And I think you tell us that it was originally established in 1994 as a joint venture between Andre and AVVA International and was connected with a project to manufacture a good-value popular car?

A. Exactly.

Q. Now, that venture had come to an end, hadn't it, by the end of 1995?

A. Didn't come to an end but it was slowly dying, let's put it this way.

Q. And is it right that at the end of 1995 Andava had effectively no business?

A. No, it had business.

Q. What was its business at the end of 1999?

A. It had some business with Avtovaz, with Transaero, with other companies.

Q. No, I'm not talking about afterwards; I'm asking you about the position at the end of 1995?

A. I'm saying about the end of 1995.

Q. I see. Well, now, in September 1996 I think you tell us that Andava became a wholly owned subsidiary of Andava Holdings SA, a Luxembourg company?

A. Yes.

Q. And before that transaction occurred, were you and Mr Berezovsky shareholders in Andava?

A. Yes.

Q. And did you and Mr Berezovsky then, in September 1996, exchange your shares in Andava for shares in Andava Holdings?

A. We transferred those shares to Andava Holdings.

Q. Yes, and you took shares in Andava Holdings?

A. That is the difficult situation that I'm not yet definite about that.

Q. Well --

A. Yes, but there is a statement like that. Actually the registry indicates that I was the shareholder of Andava Holding and that is correct.

Q. Yes. I mean, you appear to confirm that --

A. And I stopped being shareholder officially of Andava Holding in 1997, yes.

Q. Right.

Well, if you look at your witness statement at paragraph 83 D2/13/18, what you say is that:

"On 18 June 1997, Boris and I transferred our shares in Andava to Andava Holding SA, and obtained shares in that holding company."

I assume that that's true?

A. That's a formal registration that took place, yes.

Q. Right.

Now, were the directors of Andava in 1996 you, Mr Berezovsky and Mr Jenni?

A. Yes.

Q. And did you perform your duties as a director of Andava until June 1997?

A. Until June 1997, yes.

Q. And did you formally resign as a director of Andava in November 1997?

A. No, I submitted the -- I submitted my resignation in May but it was registered in November.

Q. I see.

Now, you became the first deputy director general of Aeroflot -- is this right -- in January 1996? I've taken that date from your witness statement.

A. Yes, that is correct.

Q. Is it right that one of the first things that you did was to cause Aeroflot to enter into a contract with Andava to manage its foreign currency holdings?

A. This is not correct because the first -- I've done many things that were first.

Q. One of the first things.

A. One of many things, Mr Sumption.

Q. Of course.

A. And one of them was this.

Q. Right. Now, did Andava begin to operate as Aeroflot's international treasury in April 1996?

A. No, it became operating as international treasury in May 1997 but it was -- it started holding the deposits for Aeroflot in -- at the end of May 1996.

Q. If you look at paragraph 132 of your witness statement

D2/13/29, you say that:

"Andava became Aeroflot's international treasury centre in April 1996."

Is that not right?

A. Yes, in a way, in a way, correct, but I give the correct definition.

Q. Yes, I see. Well, I'm not so much interested in the title or definitions. In substance that's what happened from April 1996 onwards, isn't it: it operated as Aeroflot's international treasury centre?

A. Not from -- yes, yes, let's put it this way.

Q. Now, Mr Jenni, in his witness statement, tells us that that was Andava's only business from that time onwards. Is that correct?

A. I think that if he says that, that's correct.

Q. Now, is this right: that as first deputy director general of Aeroflot you caused Aeroflot to contract with a company of which you were an active director and part-owner? Is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. Would you accept that at the very least you had a significant conflict of interest?

A. Of which I reported to the board of directors and to the general manager.

Q. Yes. You had a --

A. And Central Bank.

Q. Yes. You had a significant conflict of interest. You may have reported it, but you did have that conflict, didn't you?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, you're obviously aware, I take it, that Mr Jenni, who was one of your fellow directors at Andava, was convicted in Switzerland of assisting you to act in criminal breach of your duties to Aeroflot?

A. No, this is not correct definition because -- in this case I would like to have this conviction in front of me because I know it almost by heart and I would like to have -- to draw attention, my Lady, to the statement of facts A and 1.5.3, where it is indicated the reason why I was involved in this accusation.

Q. Could you please turn to bundle H(A)97, which somebody will find for you. You need to turn to page 192, where the document starts H(A)97/192.

Is this the document that you referred to a moment ago when you said that you knew it by heart? We're looking at an English translation of it, which may not be the one that you looked at.

A. I think either I was given a wrong --

Q. Page 192.

A. Oh, sorry, sorry. Oh, yes.

Q. This is the document you were referring to, is it?

A. Yes.

Q. Understood.

Now, is it right that the charges against Mr Jenni related to the period between April 1996 and June 1997?

A. Mm-hm.

Q. And did it also relate to the system by which Andava paid foreign currency bills on behalf of Aeroflot?

A. Mind you, you're asking me the questions: my Lady, I must definitely draw the attention of High Court that I was never a party to those hearings --

Q. I understand.

A. -- and I was not even the witness to those hearings; which is more, I was not even invited to participate in those hearings, no matter what is said here, because I received no official invitation. But what you say is correct, judging from this document.

Q. Right.

Now, in the proceedings against Mr Jenni, is it right that the facts were substantially undisputed; the argument was about whether they were dishonest or not?

A. No, it is not correct statement and, my Lady, I must definitely say that Mr Jenni was finally accused as an assistant, accomplice, to the person -- that is myself -- that is convicted guilty of abuse of authority, and that is exactly what he is convicted of. And the reason -- but mind you, I was never convicted of abuse of authority. And the reason why I was found guilty by the court, not being a party to this court, guilty of abuse of authority, is if you look at paragraph A of the facts of case. It's page 197 H(A)97/197. (Pause)

Q. Yes?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. (Pause)

A. Here it's indicated the reason, the initial reason what was used by the Swiss court. It's four pages -- four lines above the end of the last page. It says:

"This verdict was also not appealed" --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just a second. Are we on page 197, 198?

A. It's H(A)97/197. It's statement of facts of case, A.

MR SUMPTION: Right.

A. If you look at the line number four from the end, it starts with the in absentia:

"This verdict was also not appealed by the sentenced individuals."

And above that is written:

"The prosecutor's office appealed against this verdict; Nikolai Glushkov did not appeal."

Which is intentional untruth. I will tell you all the parties appealed the decision of the court and judging based on this later -- and if Mr Sumption allows me, I will turn to the other page and we'll show that based on this assumption, the court made a judgment that as soon as Nikolai Glushkov didn't appeal against the first ruling of the court that made me guilty of the abuse of authority, I agreed with my guilt, of being guilty of abuse of authority. It's 1.5.3 here in the same decision of the court. And this is not true.

Which is more, by my information -- and I provided Mr Jenni with the copies of my appeal and appeals of all the parties -- these appeals were submitted to the court -- to the Swiss court and they had it at its disposal.

So this assumption is taken as an untrue assumption for basing me -- for sentencing me as an accused of a guilt that I was not accused of.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR SUMPTION: Mr Glushkov, what I'm concerned with is the facts which were found by the Swiss court, which I'm going to take you to.

Now, first of all, could you look, please, at page 224 H(A)97/224.

A. Mr Sumption, once again, I must definitely draw a fact that they are based on the wrong assumption.

Q. Mr Glushkov, let's just have a look at the facts and you can discuss the facts when we look at them.

First of all, I would like to establish with your assistance exactly what Mr Jenni was convicted of that related to you.

A. Mm-hm.

Q. At page 224, you will see a heading, 4.2.3:

"Aiding and abetting Nikolai Glushkov's neglect of duty by the accused."

And if you look two pages further on, you'll find the conclusion at 4.2.4, page 226 H(A)97/226:

"The accused..."

That's Mr Jenni.

"...is therefore to be found guilty of aiding and abetting unfaithful management."

Now, do you accept that Mr Jenni was convicted of aiding and abetting unfaithful management by you?

I know you don't agree, but do you accept that that's what the Swiss court convicted him of?

A. Yes, but I think that this conviction is wrong. You cannot accuse person of being guilty of aiding and abetting unfaithful management if the person who he is abetting and aiding was not accused and guilty of this crime.

Q. Would you please turn back to page 209 H(A)97/209, where you'll find the basis on which I suggested to you a few minutes ago that the facts were not contested; it was only the implications.

A. Were not contested by whom?

Q. By Mr Jenni.

A. I'm afraid that I didn't have the chance to contest those facts.

Q. If you have a look at paragraph 2.1, the judgment says, second line of 2.1 -- well, start at the first line:

"The objective facts of the case, as described in the bill of indictment in relation to the documented contracts and business transactions, the firms and individuals involved and the movement of funds, are uncontested in respect of the essential points. The accused confirms that the relevant elements relating to the facts of the case are of fundamental importance and that the payments, especially those mentioned in Addendum 2 to the bill of indictment, are roughly correct."

If you then look at the next paragraph, that begins by saying:

"However, the assessment of the business transactions as making no business sense and thereby detrimental -- since incurring only costs for the civil claimant..."

That was Aeroflot.

"... which forms the basis of the indictment, is contested in full."

Now, what I suggest to you is that Mr Jenni did not contest the actual transactions; he simply disputed the suggestion that those transactions were artificial and unfaithful. Do you agree?

A. I can neither agree nor disagree with this because Mr Jenni is here and you have every possible chance to cross-examine him on this effect. I cannot be answerable for what Mr Jenni said or assumably said in court.

Q. Well, I'm not going to seek to make you answerable for what Mr Jenni said. That appears to have been the position, what the issues were, according to the Swiss court.

A. I do not agree with this decision of Swiss court.

Q. Well, now --

A. And no court can accuse a person that is not tried in this court and rule it guilty.

Q. Let's have a look at what the transactions were and I'm going to ask you whether you accept that such transactions occurred.

The terms -- correct me if I'm wrong -- on which Andava settled foreign currency bills were that it paid to the supplier and then charged Aeroflot taking payments out of the foreign currency balances under its control; is that correct?

A. No, that is not correct.

Q. Right. In what --

A. Which is more, what is correct is described in the -- in 1848 in the very famous hearing here in London in House of Lords by Lord Cottenham when he described what sort of relationship becomes -- and it's valid since then in every financial institution between the client and the financial institution. It's the famous case of Foley v Hill. So I was teaching this in the university. So what do you want to tell me?

Q. Mr Glushkov, I'm not trying to debate law with you. Lord Cottenham unfortunately died about 130 years before the facts of this case and I'm asking you about the facts of this case. What I want to explore with you is the transactions which led to Mr Jenni's conviction and your involvement in them.

Now, do you accept that Andava settled foreign currency bills on behalf of Aeroflot?

A. The whole statement is wrong because it describes the whole of the transaction wrongly. Which is more, the court didn't accept the expert report of independent expert provided by Mr Jenni and you will have a chance to question him about that. But I do not agree with anything that is said in this report.

Which is more, I do not agree with the report of expert Bardola who prepared the report for this because it was not based on the Russian accounting system and whereas it made the conclusions on Russian accounting system.

Q. Well, Mr Glushkov, the way I'm going to deal with this is as follows: I am going to summarise what I say the Swiss judge found. Now --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just before you do that, Mr Sumption, could you just explain to me, if you don't agree with how Mr Sumption summarised the transactions, what were the terms on which Andava settled foreign currency bills, if it did so at all? Just explain to me the system, very shortly, please.

A. Then -- no, no, it cannot be done very shortly. I can spend a day on that and I am prepared, my Lady, to do that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well then don't answer the question.

Mr Sumption, you continue please.

A. But I can -- my Lady --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, I don't want to have a day on it. All I wanted was a headline answer summary. If that's not possible --

A. You see, we had the relationship in rubles, Aeroflot had relationship in rubles, and that's the currency that was to be devalued and it devalued in 1998, and we had the deposits in hard currency. But that's how the whole thing -- the payments were done via the agreements and the promissory notes in rubles and that took the account of the exchange rate difference.

And that's why I say that the Russian accounting accounts, the grand livre, the big book of accounting book, was to be delivered to Bardola. Russian Prosecutor's Office refuse to offer this book to the expert, Swiss expert, and that's why --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just stop there, Mr Glushkov, please.

Scroll back, if you can, to [draft] page 39 on the LiveNote screen and see Mr Sumption's summary. I'll read it to you again. It's [draft] page 39, line 1. I just want to understand why you say Mr Sumption's summary of the terms on which Andava settled foreign currency bills is a wrong summary.

A. Because it's wrong in everything.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Okay. Well, you just say in six lines what were the terms on which Andava settled foreign currency bills.

A. My Lady, then I will say the following.

Andava settled the debts that Aeroflot had in front of United Financial Corporation. The debts of Aeroflot before United Financial Corporation were made in rubles and there were promissory notes issued in rubles for this debt. Andava then paid these promissory notes at the exchange rate of that time -- that's the essence of this transaction -- but it paid it in hard currency. And that's why the exchange difference was playing the trick -- you understand what I mean? It was the sort of exchange rate -- it was insurance against the exchange rate drop of ruble. That's how it was projected.

Whatever is said in the Bardola report, whatever is said now in the statement of Mr Sumption, does not correspond the truth.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you.

Go on, Mr Sumption, please.

MR SUMPTION: Now, the result of the transactions was that the supplier of services, the hard currency supplier of services, got paid out of the Aeroflot foreign currency treasury; wasn't that right?
