A. That is not correct. Once again, Mr Sumption -- you see, my Lady, I'm not going to indulge into that very famous speech of Lord Cottenham who died, helpfully, 138 years ago, but definitely that's the basis of the whole thing. When you go to the bank you don't say that and you don't say that you are being paid out of your funds; you are being paid out of the bank's funds.

So to be on the legally correct terms, what you are saying is not correct, Mr Sumption.

Q. When Andava charged Aeroflot, it added, during the first part of the period covered by this judgment, interest at the rate of 65 per cent for late payment, didn't it?

A. Mr Sumption, it's not correct everything. Andava didn't add anything. Why do we discuss this? It has nothing to do with me apart from the fact that it accused me of something. I was -- it made me guilty of something I was never guilty before.

Q. And in the second part of the period Andava charged a flat rate penalty of 15 per cent on the total amount of every item settled by Aeroflot more than 150 days late; that's right too, isn't it?

A. And this is not right too.

Q. Now, the Swiss court held, did they not, that those were the transactions that occurred and that they had no rational purpose other than to divert money from Aeroflot's foreign currency treasury to Andava? That's what they found, isn't it?

A. My Lady, if we are going to discuss all the issues, I suggest, then I am prepared to deal with the substance of Aeroflot/Andava case. I then demand that we are not reciting the judgment of Swiss court but we go to the substance, and I'm prepared to answer to every single question of the substance of the matter. I was answering these questions for two months in Russian court.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Look, Mr Glushkov, I'm the one who decides at the end of the day what is relevant.

THE WITNESS: Sorry, my Lady.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: It may be that I decide that all these questions have no relevance to Mr Berezovsky's case. At the moment, though, I take the view that it is appropriate for you to answer the questions that Mr Sumption is putting, so please do your best to do that, even though you take the view -- which you clearly do -- that the Swiss decision is not reliable.

THE WITNESS: I'm sorry, my Lady.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: It doesn't matter. It's for me to decide at the end of the day whether this has any relevance to anything; what the status, if anything, is of the Swiss court judgment; what relevance it has. So don't worry about that; just answer the questions.

THE WITNESS: My Lady, I didn't want to intrude in your judgment.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, no, fine. Okay.

MR SUMPTION: Do you accept that the Swiss court found, rightly or wrongly, that these were artificial arrangements with no rational commercial purpose other than to divert money from Aeroflot's foreign currency treasury to Andava? Do you accept that is what they found?

A. That was decision of Swiss court.

Q. Right. Now, do you accept that that was, in the view of the Swiss court, because although Andava settled the suppliers' bills, Andava was never in fact out of pocket because they settled them with Aeroflot's own money? That was what they decided?

A. That's what they decided and to which I do not agree 100 per cent.

Q. Right.

And they also decided, did they not, that because Andava controlled the time at which Aeroflot was charged and delayed the charging of Aeroflot for long enough to ensure that the interest and penalties were always payable, that also was an uncommercial and unjustifiable transaction? That's what they decided, is it not?

A. That's what they decided and to which I do not agree at all.

Q. I understand.

Now, they also decided, did they not, that the result of these operations over the period in question was that Andava made a profit at the expense of Aeroflot of 53.4 million Swiss francs? Do you agree they decided that?

A. It could be, but I do not know this.

Q. They decided, did they not, that the profits made by Andava in this period were paid out to a number of companies? And I want to just confirm with you who owns these companies.

One of them was Anros. They decided, did they not, that the 53.4 million had in part been paid out to Anros, did they?

A. Could be. Cannot comment that.

Q. Was Anros a company whose owners included you with 32 per cent?

A. No, that's not true. In 1995 I transferred all my ownership in Anros to Boris Berezovsky.

Q. When do you say that was? In 1995, I see.

A. Yes, in June 1995. In November it was put on the document, signed, and I think that it's in the bundle of the court.

Q. You do say that in your witness statement at paragraph 70 D2/13/16. So is the position that Mr Berezovsky had 28 per cent before you gave him your shares and your share of 32 per cent was then added to that 28 per cent?

A. I don't know what happened then. I gave a gift to Boris Berezovsky of all my shares in Anros, Forus and other companies.

Q. Now, there was also a company called Forus. Do you say you gave your shares to Mr Berezovsky in that company at the same time?

A. Exactly.

Q. And what about Ruco Trading, which was another company which was the recipient: were you ever interested in that?

A. Yes. Ruco, I was the beneficial shareholder and the two amounts were indicated in the Ruco Trading, it's 3-point -- if we are speaking about Swiss decision -- 3.06, and Ruco paid out of this amount 3.246 to Laren Trading and that was recognised by the Swiss court as well, and that was a case because the -- due to -- according to the information of my Swiss lawyers, the judge was not satisfied with the fact that I was not shareholder of Laren Trading, because she accepted Laren Trading being the recipient of that amount but was not satisfied that I was not shareholder of that company. As it turned out later, shareholder of that company is Mr Abramovich.

Q. I think the correct figure for transfers from Ruco Trading may be 41.5 million Swiss francs.

A. That's to my account, yes. That's exactly -- that's the only amount that was ever accepted as the amount transferred to my account: 41,000 Swiss francs or US$32,000, yes.

Q. It's 41.5 million Swiss francs, wasn't it?

A. No, thousand.

Q. I see. Well, I'll check that figure.

A. You'll have to.

Q. Now, in another document we've looked at, which you won't have seen before and I won't take you to, Ruco Trading is said by Mr Berezovsky to be a company belonging to himself and Mr Patarkatsishvili. But I think your evidence is that you were the beneficial owner?

A. Also beneficial owner.

Q. Also, I see; not instead of them, as well as them?

A. No.

Q. I understand.

Now, you say, I think, that the treasury transactions that give rise to this judgment were honest transactions with a proper commercial justification?

A. Yes, exactly.

Q. Now, would you not agree with this: that they were at least transactions which it was right and proper to require you to explain?

A. To explain to whom?

Q. To a prosecutor, for example.

A. Definitely.

Q. And looking at the matter just before November 2000, you say that you were confident of being able to justify your conduct?

A. Yes, definitely.

Q. But you can't seriously suggest, can you, that there was nothing which needed justifying?

A. I can confirm the following thing: I was never questioned about this between the period -- by the prosecutors between the period I was arrested and the period the criminal -- the court started being heard in 2002; not a single question. The only thing that I was able to transfer to the prosecutors is my written submission that I transferred on 7 December 2000. That's it. Nothing -- I was not ever questioned about this after.

Q. But these transactions were, were they not, part of the basis on which you were ultimately convicted in Moscow?

A. Unfortunately, due to the political circumstances. But mind you, Mr Sumption, that during court hearing the first time I made -- I gave evidence, I was giving it during one month, full month, every day, eight hours, and I explained to the court the exact nature of this, including the Lord Cottenham rules of the game, and the result was that they drop -- the charge of fraud was dropped. There was something to be replaced.

Mr Sheremetev, the Judge Sheremetev found this ruling. We objected to this ruling. I was thinking and I was most definite that I was not guilty of the crime and we appealed this ruling.

Q. But you were convicted of it on the second occasion? It was the same transactions, I think you've confirmed that.

A. Yes, but it was completely unfair trial.

Q. I understand.

A. If my Lady will be interested, I can relay the details that make me being sure of that unfair conviction.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well -- just a second -- I would be interested but I don't think that it's appropriate for you because we're under quite tight time constraints.

THE WITNESS: Thank you, my Lady.

MR SUMPTION: I want to ask you about a different matter, Mr Glushkov, but, my Lady, I'm not going to be more than, I should think, about five or ten minutes at the most. Would it be sensible to --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, shall we continue, Mr Sumption, or do you wish for the break?

MR SUMPTION: No, I would suggest that we continue and take the break between my cross-examination and any re-examination.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well.

MR SUMPTION: Mr Glushkov, would you please take bundle R(E)7 at page 1 R(E)7/127/1, which will show you what this document is: it's your asylum witness statement.

A. Yes.

Q. If you turn on to page 27 R(E)7/127/27, paragraph 83, you say that:

"[You are] aware from Boris that, in January 2001, [Mr Berezovsky] had a meeting in France with Roman Abramovich, and it was put to Boris that if he were to sell his shares..."

This is the shares in ORT.

"... then I would be freed."

Mr Berezovsky told you that that meeting happened in January, did he?

A. No, he couldn't tell me. I'm aware from Mr Berezovsky, that's what I was retold by Mr Borovkov to me, because I couldn't be told by Mr Berezovsky because he was in England and I was in jail.

Q. No, I understand --

A. But Mr Borovkov -- let me explain to you. You asked me a question. Definitely I received this information and I was most aware about this and that's what I wrote here, what corresponded the fact, despite of the other fact which is also part of my asylum claim, my Lady: it's a statement of Mr Patarkatsishvili that he made in 2001 that they started negotiating my release on 7 December.

Q. I'm going to ask you about that episode in just a moment, Mr Glushkov.

What you were talking about here is not the knowledge that you had when you were in jail. You are saying:

"[You are] aware..."

That's at the time of preparing this witness statement.

"... from Boris..."

That's Mr Berezovsky.

"... that, in January 2001, Boris had a meeting in France with [Mr] Abramovich."

Now, all I'm asking you to confirm is that when you spoke to him about this, presumably after your arrival in England, he told you that the meeting with Mr Abramovich was in January 2001, didn't he?

A. Mr Sumption, I would relieve myself of your assumptions because they do not correspond to what I said before and I said to you before exactly what is written here. I am aware until now, Borovkov, I can tell you, I can repeat in this court, Borovkov relate to me the fact from Boris Berezovsky that this happened in January 2001, but this is not a direct knowledge.

Q. Mr Glushkov, why did you write in this statement that it was Boris who told you that? That's Mr Berezovsky, not Mr Borovkov.

A. No, that's -- I always understood that that -- Mr Borovkov can have no information of his own.

Q. I'm not asking you about Mr Borovkov. Why did you write in this witness statement --

A. I explain.

Q. -- that you were aware of that from Mr Berezovsky?

A. I explain.

Q. Yes.

A. I explain: because that was what was told to me by Mr Borovkov.

Q. Mr Glushkov, that simply cannot be right. You wrote this because Mr Berezovsky had said so when you discussed this matter with him after arriving in England, didn't you?

A. Mr Sumption, I don't remember you being present at our meeting with Mr Berezovsky and the statement that you are making does not correspond with the truth.

Q. I am simply reading your evidence, Mr Glushkov.

A. No.

Q. What has happened is that you have sat in this court during parts of Mr Berezovsky's evidence and you are seeking to avoid parts of your own evidence that do not appear to accord with his; that's right, isn't it?

A. No, that's not correct. Which is -- Mr Sumption, why are you just pulling one string and the other strings? Please refer then to the statement of Badri Patarkatsishvili that I supplied as the evidence to this December point, where 7 December is exactly the day that is indicated there. I have it -- if you find difficulty in finding it, I have it in my briefcase.

Q. I'm not interested in what Mr Borovkov said to you, Mr Glushkov because, as you rightly say --

A. What about Mr Patarkatsishvili?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just a second. Don't interrupt the question, please.

MR SUMPTION: -- as you rightly say, Mr Borovkov had no direct knowledge. I am interested in what Mr Berezovsky had told you and I have suggested to you that in fact he told you what you record in paragraph 83.

You deny that, do you?

A. Directly, no, he didn't.

Q. Could you please look at the next paragraph, paragraph 84.

A. In fact, answering your question, I don't even recollect discussing the date of these negotiations with him directly.

Q. Now, if you look at paragraph 84, you say at the end of that paragraph that:

"[You are] aware that... [Mr] Patarkatsishvili, tried to negotiate further and had discussions with, Ivanov, the Secretary of the Security Council with the aim of securing my release but to no ultimate avail."

Now, is that a reference to negotiations between Mr Ivanov and Mr Patarkatsishvili in Moscow between January and April 2001?

A. That is correct.

Q. Could you look back at Mr Borovkov's statement --

A. I have it here.

Q. -- at paragraph 66 R(E)7/132/222. He summarises, not from personal knowledge but from what he had been told, some of the facts about those negotiations.

Now, does that confirm the evidence that you've just given about the date at which this negotiation occurred, namely that it started in January and ended in April?

A. Of Mr Patarkatsishvili?

Q. Yes.

A. Yes. That's what he confirmed in his statement.

MR SUMPTION: Thank you. I have no further questions for you.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you. I'll take the break now, ten minutes. You mustn't talk about your evidence or the case with anybody.

THE WITNESS: Thank you, my Lady.

(11.38 am)

(A short break)

(11.50 am)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Malek?

MR MALEK: I have no questions, my Lady.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Adkin?

MR ADKIN: My Lady, no questions.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Mumford?

MR MUMFORD: No questions.

Re-examination by MR RABINOWITZ

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Glushkov, just a few questions for you.

Towards the end of your evidence in answer to questions from Mr Sumption, you referred to a statement by Mr Patarkatsishvili referring to the date of 7 December.

A. Indeed so.

Q. Can I ask that you be given, please, bundle H(A)97 at page 157, please H(A)97/157.

A. My Lady, as just a short remark of the consistency of everything that I say, this statement is also part of my asylum claim.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, fine. Thank you.

MR RABINOWITZ: Can I ask you just to read, if you would,
Mr Glushkov, the first part of this statement at least.

A. I'm doing my homework quite well: if I'm referencing something, I read it. I read it.

Q. Can I just ask this about the statement. Towards the bottom of page 157 there is a date which looks like 2008. Do you see that?

A. Yes. 17/7/2008: is that the one that you reference?

Q. That's right. But on the following page, there seems to be a date: December 2005.

Can you help us with when you think this --

A. Sir, I'm looking through the Russian.

Q. Are you able to help, Mr Glushkov, as to when --

A. I found. This is the date where the -- the interview of Mr Patarkatsishvili was given in 2001 but the notarised statement was made -- it's a notary stamp, it's a notary stamp, and the statement -- actually I have the original of this statement of Mr Patarkatsishvili. It was presented to the court in Moscow. It was -- it's in the materials of the court in Moscow. It's the notary stamp which is made by notary, public notary in Georgia, because Mr Patarkatsishvili couldn't leave Georgia at that time and he notarised his statement.

Q. Thank you for that.

Can I then just ask you this. Mr Sumption spent some time with you today --

A. Sorry, and 2008 is the date of translation, I'm afraid.

Q. Thank you very much.

Mr Sumption spent time with you this morning going through a series of court proceedings in foreign jurisdictions, including in Russia and in the Swiss courts. We obviously don't know what relevance he places on it. But given that, you mentioned when Mr Sumption brought up the second Russian proceedings that the trial was unfair.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, as I say, we don't know if this is relevant or how, we are pressed for time, but if you can give a short -- can I ask you, only if you can give a short explanation, can I ask you to explain why you say it was unfair?

A. My Lady, just in few sentences if possible.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, of course.

A. All parties appealed. Cassation court, which is Moscow City Court, ruled out -- and this is very important, that's where the unfairness started -- that the prosecutors didn't provide sufficient evidence of guilt of me whereas the defence didn't provide sufficient defence of my innocence, which is a ridiculous statement in a judgment of this sort by itself because if the prosecutors didn't provide the sufficient evidence of guilt, I should be acquitted of any guilt. That's by law.

And also it was said that the audit by minister of finance was done with the violations of the criminal procedural law. That's why it returned for a second hearing although by all means it should be dismissed and I should be ruled non-guilty.

The second hearing started with the fact that the judge started hearing the case in fair way and, naturally, hearing it in a fair way, dismissed the audit report on which all the accusations were based. Without this audit report -- and it was a very well-based ruling of a judge, based on the facts that it was really done with violation of legislation.

And then, by the end of the proceedings of the second court hearing, when she was pressed by the prosecutors and she was pressed, she complained openly in the court -- and this is witnessed by my lawyers here in UK -- that she was pressed and she complained in the court that they are pressing her, that they are threatening her. She was complaining to us, to all the audience that was sitting in the courtroom. And finally she readmitted this audit report without any grounds, just at the request of prosecutors, full stop. The whole ruling is a few sentences long.

And after that, the whole thing started quite in a funny way, everything started moving. And the ruling itself, if Mr Sumption was reading it, is ridiculous. In fact, in 90 per cent it is one-to-one copy of the prosecutor's document, one-to-one copy, even in typing, even in bold. It's just as if a computer copy was taken from one computer to the other and she just signed it. And the other thing, had no consequence to whatever, and then the ruling, full stop.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: But initially she refused to admit the audit report, did she?

A. Yes. Yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Did she give reasons for that refusal?

A. Yes, it was many pages reasons because it contained -- you see, before she refused we questioned all auditors and the main question that we asked the auditors, "What is debit and what is credit?" None of the auditors stood this question. My Lady, none of the auditors could answer this question. They couldn't answer why in the debit they were counting credit.

And we have submitted to asylum -- immigration, asylum court, all the notes, minutes of this cross-examination. And one of the auditors simply said that she never signed -- she never did this calculation; she just signed, at the request of prosecutor, the audit report.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I see.

A. So that was the reason why she dismissed this audit report. It is in the materials of asylum case, my Lady.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: And did the judge complain that she had been physically threatened?

A. You see, she even explained how: because she adopted a child, a daughter, and she started complaining to us that they started investigation on how she accepted the daughter, with the aim to take it away -- to take her away from her.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I see. Thank you. I need no more than that. Thank you.

MR RABINOWITZ: Now, Mr Glushkov, Mr Sumption spent a long time with you on the Swiss court proceedings and again you made clear that you regard this as unreliable. Again, one doesn't know why this was relevant. But only if you can do an explanation which is certainly no longer than the one that you have just given in relation to the Russian proceedings and why you say that was unfair, can you explain, please, why you say the Swiss court's decision was unreliable in your view?

A. The Swiss court decision was unfair on major three issues.

First, it ruled me guilty, guilty of abuse of authority, without me being tried, based on the fact that I didn't appeal the ruling of the first court. And it's written there; it's black and white.

Second, it didn't accept the expert report of the opponents of the prosecutors, of Mr Jenni, expert, which were different from the one produced by Mr -- by the expert report of prosecutors.

Third one, they refused to provide the big book, accounting book of Aeroflot that could prove that there was an exchange difference that was accounted for and that was giving benefit to Aeroflot.

And these three things made the whole thing ridiculous, my Lady.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, thank you.

MR RABINOWITZ: Now, one more question.

In the context of dealing with the Swiss proceedings you mentioned a company called Laren Trading. Can you explain what it is that Laren Trading did which created a problem, as it turned out, for you in these proceedings?

A. You see, I don't know exactly because everything is covered more or less in documents. I'm sure that Mr Abramovich might tell us, or Mr Shvidler, who knows everything about Laren Trading, or maybe they will tell untruth. But the truth is that Mr Abramovich accepted that Laren Trading is his company.

Laren Trading transferred certain amounts of money to Ruco that were used later to increase the capital of Andava Holding and Andava, and later this money was reimbursed to Laren Trading. That was the whole transaction. It's -- I can draw a picture how it was done.

I don't care what Mr Shvidler wrote in his witness statement because they're not true, but the thing -- because I have documents that support this. But the thing is that it shows either that -- either -- that was the first question that I asked Badri: was he a shareholder of Laren Trading? Because from my knowledge Badri was the shareholder of Andava Holding and I was wondering whether Laren Trading became a shareholder of Andava Holding. That was my first question. He couldn't answer; he said that he didn't know. But the instructions to transfer the funds were coming from Badri. And then -- the fact that Badri was the shareholder of Andava Holding creates no doubts.

And then when the money came -- it was 2,856,000 and then smaller amounts to Ruco -- they were transferred in turn to Laren Trading. So it was one-to-one transfer, amounts coming from Andava and from Andava to Ruco.

I showed this to Russian court so that, my Lady, you don't doubt that I can indicate the pages of the court hearing, the volumes where it is all relayed.

I gave my evidence to that and that's what made Judge Sheremetev dismiss the accusation of money-laundering of this transfer, but he was not convinced. He asked me whether I was a shareholder of Laren Trading. I definitely said that I was not, but he was not convinced because I couldn't prove anything otherwise. As far as all other companies were concerned, I could provide evidence; but this company was completely in darkness for me and I didn't know at that time who was the owner of this company.

That was the whole thing.

Q. Do you know now who was the owner of this company?

A. Yes, Abramovich.

Q. On what basis do you say that?

A. Because he provided this document and I was sent by lawyers a copy of statement concerning this. But this is also confirmed by Mr Shvidler in his statement.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you.

MR RABINOWITZ: No further questions. Thank you,

Mr Glushkov.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you very much indeed,

Mr Glushkov, for coming along.

THE WITNESS: Thank you.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Sumption, subject to the point about the registration, can this witness be released, or is it possible that you might wish to cross-examine him further about the registration document relating to the shares?

MR SUMPTION: I think it's almost inconceivable that I will because of his evidence as to when that came to an end. I think the right working assumption is that we will not require him anymore unless some surprise emerges.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right.

You may be released. There's a very small possibility that you may be recalled. But thank you very much for coming to give your evidence.

THE WITNESS: Thank you very much.

(The witness withdrew)

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, for the assistance of your Ladyship and for my learned friend, I should perhaps make it clear that it is not part of my case that the proceedings in Russia against Mr Glushkov were fair; I take no position on that one way or the other. Of course, we are as well aware as anyone else of the issues about the fairness of controversial Russian political proceedings. We do, however, contend that the Swiss proceedings were fair.

Secondly, it is not part of my case that Mr Glushkov was guilty as charged. It is, however, part of my case that there was what in English legal terms one would call a prima facie case against him and that that is a sufficient legal justification for his arrest.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, thank you.

Mr Rabinowitz.

MR RABINOWITZ: Can I call the next witness, my Lady, and that is Mr Jenni.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR HANS-PETER JENNI (sworn)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Do sit down if you would like to.

THE WITNESS: Thank you, my Lady.

Examination-in-chief by MR RABINOWITZ

MR RABINOWITZ: Good afternoon, Mr Jenni.

A. Good afternoon.

Q. Mr Jenni, again, before we begin, can you confirm you don't have any mobile phone or any other communication devices?

A. Yes.

Q. Thank you very much.

Can you be given, please, bundle D1 -- that will be brought to you -- and can that be open at tab 10, please D1/10/186.

Now, at tab 10 you, I hope, see a document entitled "Witness Statement of Hans-Peter Jenni"?

A. Correct, yes.

Q. Can I ask you to go to page 245 of the bundle; it's page 58 of your statement D1/10/245.

A. Yes.

Q. You should there see a signature. Can you confirm that that's your signature?

A. It's my signature, yes.

Q. And can you confirm that this is your first and only witness statement in these proceedings?

A. It appears so, yes.

Q. Can you confirm that the contents of this, your witness statement, are true to the best of your knowledge and belief?

A. It is so, yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: Thank you very much. Can you wait there, please, Mr Jenni.

Cross-examination by MS DAVIES

MS DAVIES: Mr Jenni, you have been a legal and business adviser to Mr Berezovsky since 1991; is that right?

A. I'm -- I know Mr Berezovsky since 1991 and I have been a legal adviser to him. However, in the last years it was not -- up to now I was not a legal adviser; I was just a friend.

Q. In fact you'd given up your legal practising certificate in 1998, when you moved to Cyprus?

A. Exactly, yes.

Q. You also acted as a legal and business adviser to Mr Patarkatsishvili between 1991 and 2008; is that right?

A. I -- occasionally, yes.

Q. And also as an adviser to Mr Glushkov?

A. Yes.

Q. And during that period it would appear you acted for the three of them in relation to a wide variety of matters.

A. Yes, correct.

Q. You identify some of them in your statement; in particular you refer to Anros, Andava and Forus.

A. Yes.

Q. Those were all Swiss and Luxembourg companies in which they each held interests; is that right?

A. Yes, adding some offshore companies.

Q. Anros from 1991 was the 50 per cent owner of Logovaz?

A. Yes.

Q. And Forus and Andava were financial service companies who provided initially services to Avtovaz?

A. Forus SA in Switzerland and Andava SA in Switzerland, yes.

Q. And after Mr Glushkov had moved to Aeroflot, Andava provided financial services to Aeroflot?

A. Correct.

Q. And in the mid-1990s your role was to manage those interests on Mr Berezovsky's, Mr Glushkov's and Mr Patarkatsishvili's behalf?

A. We should precise the term "manage".

Q. Well, you had a detailed involvement in the affairs of those companies?

A. I had involvement in it, but I was not a manager.

Q. You were a director of each of them?

A. I was one of the directors.

Q. And for Andava, for example, you had signing authorisations for the companies in the group?

A. All the directors had signing authorisations.

Q. And you were aware of the contracts between Andava and Aeroflot?

A. I was.

Q. And you monitored the activities of Andava?

A. The board of directors monitored the activities of Andava, yes.

Q. During the 1990s you also managed some other companies on their behalf which are not mentioned in your witness statement, didn't you, such as Ruco Trading?

A. Yes, I mentioned offshore companies, yes.

Q. Ruco Trading was a company registered in the Grand Cayman Islands; is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. And initially it was a company beneficially owned by Mr Glushkov and Mr Berezovsky; is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. And did Mr Patarkatsishvili subsequently obtain an interest in Ruco?

A. Yes.

Q. That company, Ruco, itself received payments from Andava from time to time; is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. Including payments of dividends from Andava?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, in 1996 --

A. From the Andava group, yes.

Q. The Andava group, yes.

In 1996 and 1997 you also assisted Mr Berezovsky in the acquisition of two properties in the south of France?

A. Correct.

Q. The Chateau de la Garoupe and the Clocher de la Garoupe?

A. Yes.

Q. You assisted thereafter in the arrangements for the maintenance of those properties?

A. My office and Christian Stiefel, who was my partner, yes.

Q. Is it fair to say that during the mid-to-late 1990s you were centrally involved in Mr Berezovsky's financial affairs outside of Russia?

A. I'm not sure about that.

Q. Could you be given bundle S2/1, please, at tab 12 S2/1.12/238. This is the transcript of the evidence that you gave in the North Shore proceedings.

A. Yes.

Q. You can see at page 105 you being sworn.

A. Yes.

Q. And you're being cross-examined by Mr Swainston.

A. Yes.

Q. At page 107, line 18 -- sorry, start at line 13.

A. Line 13, what -- page 107, line 13, yes?

Q. 107, yes. Mr Swainston is asking you:

"Question: It's right, isn't it, that you were at the centre of Mr Berezovsky's and Mr Glushkov's affairs in Switzerland?"

A. In Switzerland, yes.

Q.

"Answer: It's correct that I treated with affairs of Mr Berezovsky and Mr Glushkov in Switzerland, yes.

"Question: You were centrally involved in those affairs and Mr Fomichev was not. That's also true, isn't it?"

A. Yes.

Q.

"Answer: As far as Switzerland is concerned, that is true..."

A. Yes.

Q. Now, is the point that I put to you, you're suggesting, too broad because I said it was offshore?

A. Yes.

Q. But we know from Ruco it also covered other offshore companies, not just Swiss companies?

A. Yes, but this was all that it was centred around these companies in Switzerland. I do not know what was around other companies.

Q. I see. Now, in the mid-to-late 1990s, when you were managing the companies Forus, Anros, Andava and Ruco and the French properties on Mr Berezovsky's behalf, did that occupy most of your time?

A. No.

Q. No. What sort of percentage of your time?

A. About -- maybe 20 per cent.

Q. Now, you tell us in your statement that in 2000 you were appointed as super-protector of all the trusts within the Hotspur and Octopus structures --

A. Yes.

Q. -- those being trusts that were established by Valmet in 2000?

A. Yes.

Q. And you were subsequently appointed in December 2002 as the trustee of the Itchen Trust?

A. Yes.

Q. That was a trust established by Mr Berezovsky in 2001 by Dentons in Gibraltar; is that correct?

A. For me it was -- how is it called? -- Stephen Curtis.

Q. Stephen Curtis?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you recall what sort of size of fund the Itchen Trust was at the time you took over --

A. Well, I don't --

Q. -- as a trustee?

A. I don't remember how much funds there were when I took over. I know that this trust has been funded by monies that were received from the sale of participation in Sibneft.

Q. Would you agree it was a substantial fund?

A. It was substantial fund, yes.

Q. And would I be right in understanding that you must be someone who has or at least did have a close professional relationship with Mr Berezovsky?

A. Professional relationship, yes.

Q. And you'd describe him as a good friend?

A. I describe him as a good friend, yes.

Q. Now, given the extent of your involvement in Mr Berezovsky's affairs, you must have seen or spoken to him frequently over the 20-year period that you have acted on his behalf?

A. That's evident, yes.

Q. And also to Mr Patarkatsishvili?

A. Yes, of course; I would even say even more so.

Q. And you've also, in the past, been in regular contact with other advisers of Mr Berezovsky, such as Mr Fomichev?

A. I met Mr Fomichev from time to time when there were questions that we had to discuss together, following Mr Berezovsky asking me to take up things with Mr Fomichev.

Q. You said in the North Shore action that you met with him almost every two or three months. Is that correct?

A. Yes, when I went to Moscow I met him because -- well, at a certain period of time, not for the 20 years.

Q. No, but he was Mr Berezovsky's principal financial adviser from 2000 for several years, so during that period.

A. From 2000 I think it was already less.

Q. You also continue now to advise Mr Berezovsky on business and personal matters from time to time?

A. No. As a friend but not as a legal adviser.

Q. But as a friend you do?

A. Well, if he asks me something, I give him my opinion.

Q. And does that mean that you maintain regular contact with Mr Berezovsky to this day?

A. Yes.

Q. Do the matters on which you are advising him include this case?

A. No.

Q. But you have no doubt discussed this litigation with him since it was started?

A. No.

Q. Sorry?

A. No.

Q. Not at all?

A. No.

Q. What about --

A. I have discussed with him my Swiss -- my case in Switzerland, yes. These things I have discussed, but not this litigation.

Q. What about Mr Glushkov, who you describe as a close friend?

A. We didn't discuss this either.

Q. You tell us in your statement that you first met Mr Abramovich in the summer of 1995.

- A. Yes, I think so. It was 1995.
- Q. And that thereafter you regularly saw Mr Abramovich and Mr Berezovsky together when you visited Russia.
- A. Yes, correct.
- Q. Am I right in understanding that you did not yourself have any direct professional relationship with Mr Abramovich or his companies?
- A. Correct.
- Q. So is essentially what you're describing that you came across Mr Abramovich when you happened to be meeting Mr Berezovsky?
- A. Yes.
- Q. Through your involvement in Mr Berezovsky's offshore businesses you also had some involvement with some of the Russian companies in which he had an interest, didn't you?
- A. Yes.
- Q. In particular you tell us you became a director of Consolidated Bank for a time.
- A. I was sometime a director of Consolidated Bank, yes.
- Q. Now, you tell us in your statement that you think that that was for a short period in 1999. That's paragraph 62 D1/10/201 if you want to...
- A. It's, yes, possible.
- Q. In fact it seems from the documents that are now available that you might have been mistaken about that date.

A. It's possible.

Q. And I just want to establish the facts with you, Mr Jenni. So if you --

A. Yes, because I don't have any documents left with me and I couldn't really establish this.

Q. If you could be given bundle H(C)2, at page 4T, you should find some minutes of Consolidated Bank from 23 May 1995 H(C)2/4T.

A. Yes.

Q. You weren't present at this meeting but you can see on the first page that Mr Mayor was then representing Forus Holding SA.

A. Yes.

Q. And if you turn forward to page 5T --

A. 5T, yes.

Q. -- you see at the top of page 5T there's a decision to elect board members of Consolidated Bank --

A. Yes.

Q. -- and you see your name, Hans-Peter Jenni?

A. Yes.

Q. And that was adopted by the board.

A. Okay.

Q. And the next meeting that we have documents for is in October 1995, which, if you go forward to page 26T, you see at that meeting you were present -- 26T for translation H(C)2/26T.

A. It's further down.

Q. It's after the end of page 32.

A. I have to see which numbers are which.

Q. Yes, it's not quite obvious, but it is after page 32.

A. 26T, yes.

Q. You see on that occasion, in the third indent, you were present as the director on behalf of Forus?

A. Yes, yes, yes.

Q. And if you go forward to page 117T, which you will find after page 121 H(C)2/117T, that's some minutes of a meeting of Consolidated Bank on 29 May 1996.

If you go forward to page 118T, we can see the board is reorganised on that date and it appears --

A. 118T, yes.

Q. At the bottom, and it appears that you ceased to be a member of the board --

A. Yes, that's possible.

Q. -- in May 1996 and would you take it from me you were reappointed, it appears from the documents, by June 2001.

A. That's possible, yes.

Q. So it does, would you accept, looking at those documents --

A. Yes, I accept this because I -- my memory was...

Q. You were a member of the board of Consolidated Bank between the summer of 1995 and May 1996?

A. Yes, yes, yes, yes.

Q. You tell us in paragraph 67 of your statement D1/10/202 that:

"[You] recall being aware that Consolidated Bank did at one stage have an interest in Sibneft..."

A. Yes, by discussions, yes.

Q. And you refer in that connection to a company called NFK.

A. Yes, Neftyanaya Finansovya Kompaniya.

Q. Is that indicating that your recollection is that Consolidated Bank's interest in Sibneft was held via NFK?

A. Yes.

Q. And was your understanding that such interest as Mr Berezovsky had in Sibneft was also held through Consolidated Bank via NFK?

A. Well, that's possible, yes.

Q. Is that what you understood, Mr Jenni?

A. Yes, I understood that NFK was the vehicle by which Sibneft -- participation to Sibneft was held.

Q. And you fairly point out in your statement that you were never provided with details about the shareholding structure and were not personally involved in the acquisition of Sibneft.

A. Correct.

Q. Would you be prepared to take it from me that NFK never itself owned any Sibneft shares; rather it just obtained a right to manage 51 per cent of Sibneft shares in December 1995? You're not in a position to disagree?

A. No.

Q. As you were not directly involved in the acquisition of Sibneft, your understanding of what happened must be dependent on what you were told by others, mustn't it?

A. Correct, yes.

Q. And were those others principally Mr Berezovsky --

A. No.

Q. -- and Mr Patarkatsishvili?

A. Mr Berezovsky, Mr Patarkatsishvili, Mr Fomichev, Mrs Nosova; maybe others.

Q. From what you tell us in your statement, it doesn't sound like you were given many details about the acquisition of Sibneft.

A. That's correct.

Q. That wasn't a matter, would I be right in understanding, that really concerned you?

A. No, because I was concerned about the Swiss tranche of the activities and not of the activities taking place in Russia.

- Q. The point, would I be right in understanding, that really mattered to you was that Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili were going to receive money as a result of the creation of Sibneft?
- A. Well, that was their concern. My concern, my concern was the activities of the companies in Switzerland and if they took obligations, that they fulfilled these obligations.
- Q. That's what they conveyed to you, was it, that they were going to receive money?
- A. Yes, they told me that they should receive money from Sibneft.
- Q. Given how frequently you saw Mr Berezovsky and communicated with him over the years, it must now be difficult to differentiate any one conversation you had with him with any other?
- A. Of course.
- Q. It's not a criticism, Mr Jenni.
- A. Of course. Of course.
- Q. If you could turn to paragraph 114 of your witness statement --
- A. My witness statement?
- Q. -- at page D1/10/213.

A. Wait, wait. You said which page?

Q. D1/10/213.

A. 213, yes.

Q. You see you say there that:

"On one of my visits to Moscow to receive an update from Boris and Badri regarding business, in around 1996, they told me that they had entered into an agreement with Mr Abramovich whereby 50% of Sibneft was acquired for them and 50% of Sibneft was acquired for Mr Abramovich."

A. Mm-hm.

Q. Now, given what you've just said about how difficult it is to differentiate conversations, it must be possible, mustn't it, that you're remembering a conversation that took place later than 1996?

A. No, I don't think so, because starting with the meeting I had first when I got acquainted with Mr Abramovich in 1995, from there on there was always discussion about Sibneft. And, well, it was not only Sibneft; it was the oil businesses, let's say like this, because Sibneft in that form didn't exist in 1995 yet. And there was discussion also how to participate in this business.

And then we had the situation of the elections in 1996 and we had this situation with the auction. That was for seeing the money against sales of state property. We had with Mr Berezovsky, I remember, discussions where he tried to interest Mr Soros in participating in purchase of shares of oil company. And following this came the situation where they said, "Now we have purchased a stake in Sibneft".

Q. Mr Jenni, I'm not disputing that you had conversations in 1996 about --

A. No, I just want -- I just want to recall, when I say that I heard about this in 1996, I want to recall to you why I come to the conclusion that it was in 1996.

Q. I'm not disputing you may have had conversations in 1996 about Sibneft.

A. Yes.

Q. What I would like you to focus on is the suggestion that you were told in 1996 that Mr Berezovsky had acquired a 50% interest in Sibneft. What I would suggest to you is that, given how many conversations you've had with Mr Berezovsky over the years, it's quite possible --

A. Well, I cannot say it was on this date and on this conversation, okay.

Q. Were you told by Mr Berezovsky or Mr Patarkatsishvili in around 1996 that they had transferred any shares they owned in Sibneft to Mr Abramovich?

A. I don't remember that.

Q. Could you be given bundle J2/2, please, tab 9

J2/2.09/26. Tab 9, please, J2/2. This is a statement of Mr Marino that was served on behalf of Mr Berezovsky's behalf.

Have you seen this before, Mr Jenni?

A. No.

Q. Do you remember speaking to Mr Marino before April 2009 about Mr Berezovsky's case?

A. Before 2009, no.

Q. Could you turn to page 81 in this statement.

A. Page 81?

Q. Yes, of the bundle. So it's J2/2.09/81.

A. 81, yes.

Q. Paragraph 201:

"I also understand from Mr Jenni..."

Now, just stopping there, it does appear you must have spoken to Mr Marino?

A. It's possible, but I don't know what date. What was the date? I don't remember at what date I spoke to Mr Marino.

Q. The background was, just if that might assist you, Mr Abramovich was applying to strike out Mr Berezovsky's claims and evidence was being produced to seek to overcome the strike-out.

A. It's possible, because I have been discussing with Mr Marino in a large scale of questions.

Q. So you've had discussions with Mr Marino over some time, have you? Is that --

A. Yes.

Q. Yes. You see he says there:

"I also understand from Mr Jenni that, in 1996, he was told by Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili that they had 'transferred shares' in Sibneft to Mr Abramovich..."

Sorry, if you shake your head, it doesn't get on the transcript.

A. I do not remember that I said this.

Q. You don't remember you said that, right.

Did you yourself monitor or have any knowledge about Sibneft's financial performance?

A. I had no knowledge about Sibneft's financial performance.

Q. Did you know, for example, it didn't declare any dividends until 2000?

A. No, no.

Q. Do you have yourself any direct knowledge of the total amounts paid by Mr Abramovich to Mr Berezovsky over the period 1995 to 2000?

A. No.

Q. Or the total amount paid by companies controlled by Mr Abramovich to Mr Berezovsky during that period?

A. No, no.

Q. Given your relationship with Mr Berezovsky, you presumably were aware that from 1995 one of his main interests in Russia was ORT?

A. Yes.

Q. Although you tell us in your statement that you were never personally involved with ORT either as a director or as a legal adviser.

A. Yes.

Q. If you could turn to paragraph 69 of your statement --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Can we put Marino's statement away?

MS DAVIES: Yes, my Lady. Yes.

A. Which one?

Q. You can put J2/2 away, yes.

A. My statement?

Q. Paragraph 69 of your statement --

A. 69 of my statement, yes.

Q. -- at D1/10/203.

A. You are moving too fast for me. 69, yes.

Q. In the last sentence you say you:

"Understood from conversations that I had with Boris and Badri at the time that ORT ran at a substantial loss and so all of these oligarchs provided finance for the television station from their own financial-industrial groups of companies."

A. Yes.

Q. When you're talking about conversations you had at the time, do you mean 1995/1996?

A. Yes.

Q. You've told us about Ms Nosova a moment ago.

A. Yes.

Q. You presumably know her?

A. Yes.

Q. By 1994 she was the first deputy director general for finance of Logovaz --

A. Yes.

Q. -- and a member of the supervisory board of Consolidated Bank?

A. Yes.

Q. Those were the two companies who initially took shares in ORT on Mr Berezovsky's behalf?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, she says in her statement that the other private investors were willing to buy into ORT because they were not expected to pay much for their shares in ORT and as a favour to Mr Berezovsky.

A. If -- well, I don't know. Maybe.

Q. And she goes on to say that the other investors didn't want to fund ORT from their own resources.

You're not in a position to disagree with Ms Nosova, are you?

A. No, no.

Q. Did Mr Berezovsky or Mr Patarkatsishvili subsequently tell you that the other oligarchs had decided they didn't want to continue funding ORT?

A. Maybe it was more general, not funding, but they wanted to get out.

Q. They wanted to get out?

A. Yes.

Q. And he agreed to reimburse them the amounts they had funded in exchange for the shares that they had acquired.

A. Yes.

Q. Did you know that?

A. No, I don't know, but I know that these shares, they went over to him.

Q. That's what he tells us in his statement?

A. Yes, yes.

Q. And again you're not in a position to disagree?

A. No.

Q. You're not able to assist, are you, on how much Mr Berezovsky paid to those oligarchs for their shares?

A. No, no, no.

Q. Or how much he contributed to ORT in total over the period 1995 to 2000?

A. No, no.

Q. No.

You tell us you produced a written assignment of certain interest from Mr Glushkov to Mr Berezovsky in November 1995.

A. Wait, I didn't understand the question. Please repeat.

Q. You tell us in your statement that you produced a written assignment of certain interests from Mr Glushkov to Mr Berezovsky in November 1995.

A. Yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: What paragraph?

MS DAVIES: That's paragraph 88, my Lady, page D1/10/207.

Could you be given bundle H(A)03 at page 25

H(A)03/25.

A. Yes.

Q. Is this the written assignment that you're referring to?

A. Yes.

Q. And that covers, am I right in understanding, shares in Profor, Anros, Forus and, by reason of the written amendment at the bottom of the page on page 27, Logovaz?

A. Of Logovaz, yes.

Q. Was your perception that Mr Berezovsky and Mr Glushkov were close at the time that this written assignment was entered into?

A. What was your assumption that...?

- Q. Was your perception -- did you understand that Mr Berezovsky and Mr Glushkov were close at the time that this written assignment was --
- A. Yes, yes, yes.
- Q. And would you say from your observation of their relationship that they trusted each other totally at this time?
- A. Yes, yes.
- Q. In paragraphs 97 to 98 of your statement at page D1/10/209 you tell us that once Mr Berezovsky was appointed as the deputy secretary of the Security Council in 1996:
- "Under Russian legislation, [he] was no longer allowed to hold interests in commercial enterprises."
- That's the last sentence of paragraph --
- A. Yes, yes, yes.
- Q. You're not a Russian qualified lawyer yourself, are you, Mr Jenni?
- A. No.
- Q. So what is that sentence that, "Under Russian legislation, a person in such a position was no longer allowed to hold directorships or interests in commercial enterprises", what's that based on, Mr Jenni?
- A. On the independence of the person in the -- when it is -- he is holding an official in the -- let's say high official post, yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, I think you're missing the question.

A. Yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Ms Davies is saying: what is your knowledge of the statement? What knowledge on your own part are you basing your assertion on?

A. Ah. I had -- the knowledge I had from Russian lawyers. When Mr Berezovsky was appointed deputy secretary of the Security Council in Russia, I had contacts with lawyers and they all said that he had to get rid, in a sense, of all his participations and of all his duties he had in private enterprise.

MS DAVIES: He had to get rid of his management duties in relation to private enterprises, but are you saying you were also told that he had to get rid of his ownership of shares?

A. Yes.

Q. And do you know what Russian legislation was being referred to in that context?

A. No, I didn't.

Q. You see, Mr Rozenberg, who is the expert in Russian law being called by Mr Abramovich, says that there's no such prohibition on owning shares.

A. Mm-hm. That would be good, yes.

Q. That's not the advice you were given at the time?

A. No, it was not the advice I had at the time and I was trying to fulfil what I was told: that we had to separate Mr Berezovsky from his holdings.

Q. You go on to say that it was therefore necessary, as you say in your statement, for Mr Berezovsky to divest himself of his shareholdings --

A. Yes.

Q. -- and that your understanding was he decided to transfer ownership of all his shareholdings to Mr Patarkatsishvili?

A. Correct, yes.

Q. And did those shareholdings include Andava?

A. They included Andava.

Q. And how long was the transfer intended to remain effective for?

A. It was intended to remain as long as he was in a position that would prevent him from having these assets.

Q. So for at least as long as he remained in political office?

A. At least as long as he was in this office, yes.

Q. Do you recall -- and it's not intended to be a memory test -- but Mr Berezovsky was dismissed from his post on the Security Council on 5 November 1997?

A. Yes.

Q. And so until that time your evidence is you were holding all Mr Berezovsky's shares in the offshore companies in Badri's name, Mr Patarkatsishvili's name, not Mr Berezovsky's name?

A. Yes, but Mr Badri always confirmed to me that these shares were also Boris's shares.

Q. Could you be given bundle H(A)06 at page 95 H(A)06/95. Is that a document you prepared in May 1997?

A. Yes, that's correct.

Q. It's a power of attorney in relation to Mr Berezovsky's 937 shares of Andava.

A. Yes.

Q. And he's authorising you to represent him at the meeting of shareholders to be held on 29 May 1997.

A. Yes.

Q. If you could just turn forward to page 97 H(A)06/97.

A. Yes.

Q. Is that another agreement you prepared?

A. Wait, wait, wait, wait. Yes.

Q. And that's between you and Mr Berezovsky and he's transferring, according to this agreement, to you --

A. Yes.

Q. -- share certificates in Andava --

A. Yes.

Q. -- on your undertaking to hold them on trust --

A. Yes.

Q. -- and then to return them to him after the shareholding meeting?

A. It is not quite what happened there. This was the exchange of the shares of the SA to the shares of the holdings. So the shares of the SA were put into the holding company and from the holding company were received shares of the holding company.

Q. So you were transferring back to him shares in the holding company, not the shares you received?

A. Exactly, yes. Exactly.

Q. But these were shares, if I understood your evidence a moment ago, that had been transferred to Mr Patarkatsishvili in 1996? Because this is May 1997: it's while Mr Berezovsky is still a member of the Security Council.

A. So the shares in Andava were -- I don't know. I have to think now. No, the shares in Andava -- I can't remember. But as I -- as you see here, the shares have been of Boris and also of Nikolai, because it was the two persons that were holding the shares in Andava SA, and they gave me the power of attorney to put them into the holding and then to take the shares of the holding. So it's -- they were ownership of these two persons.

- Q. It looks, doesn't it, as if the Andava shares had not been transferred --
- A. No, no.
- Q. -- to Mr Patarkatsishvili?
- A. At that time at least, yes.
- Q. Now, your evidence, if I've understood it, is that in the period prior to 1997 Mr Berezovsky was keen to keep Mr Abramovich close to him as a business partner and a friend?
- A. I stated that they were -- they were close to each other and they were -- in my view they were friends, yes.
- Q. In late 1996 you'd been involved in the acquisition of a substantial property on Mr Berezovsky's behalf, Chateau de la Garoupe?
- A. Yes.
- Q. Soon after that property had been purchased in early 1997, a neighbouring property, the Clocher de la Garoupe came up for sale?
- A. Yes.
- Q. And you were told that Mr Berezovsky was also interested in purchasing that property; is that correct?
- A. Yes.
- Q. Were you also told not to tell anyone apart from Mr Bordes, the French property agent, and his associate Maitre Heinzen that Mr Berezovsky was interested in purchasing that property?

A. No, I don't remember that.

Q. Could you be given bundle H(C)3 at page 77T H(C)3/77T.

This is -- just to tell you what it is, Mr Jenni -- a translation of a fax that was sent to you on 6 May 1997 from Mr Bordes. The original French version starts on page 77 if you would rather look at that.

Do you see the first paragraph of that in the translation says:

"I met with our client this weekend. It seems that he is personally interested in the neighbouring villa but this course of action..."

Then in bold:

"... should only be known to you, [Maitre] Heinzen and myself, but not to Mr Ro... A... not even his partner."

"Mr Ro... A..." must be Mr Abramovich, mustn't it?

A. Yes, probably.

Q. So it does look, doesn't it, as if you were told --

A. No, I have not been told anything. I see this fax --

Q. It's a fax to you, Mr Jenni.

A. Yes, yes, yes.

Q. And Mr Stiefel was in your office, wasn't he?

A. Yes, yes, yes.

Q. And you were being instructed by Mr Bordes that the course of action of acquiring the property was not something you should communicate to Mr Abramovich?

A. He asks so, yes. It looks so, yes.

Q. If you turn forward to page 83T H(C)3/83T, it's a translation of a further fax from Mr Bordes to you, this time on 16 May.

A. Yes.

Q. The French original is at page 83. In the first paragraph in the translation:

"The client, to whom I spoke the day before yesterday, seems to want to go ahead at the level required by the vendor of 95 including furniture, and to keep this purchase confidential in relation to everybody."

So again you were being instructed to keep the purchase confidential, weren't you?

A. Well, confidentiality was always a question in deals.

Q. Is that a "yes", Mr Jenni?

A. To keep it confidential from somebody, from somebody concrete, I don't know. I had no contact to Roman Abramovich at any time so it was no -- there was no -- for me it was clear that it was -- everything was confidential.

Q. And then the next paragraph:

"We mentioned to the client that GII could grant a lease to Mr [Abramovich] for four months in return for a rent of around 2.5."

A. Mm-hm, yes.

Q. Now GII was a company owned by --

A. Of Mr Bordes.

Q. -- Mr Bordes, wasn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. But it was acting in relation to this rental on behalf of a company called Sifi?

A. Yes, yes.

Q. And Sifi was a company that you tell us in your statement which was set up originally to purchase the Chateau de la Garoupe?

A. Yes.

Q. And its shares were predominantly owned by OVACO --

A. Yes.

Q. -- another company that you managed?

A. Yes.

Q. And it was in turn owned by Comodo --

A. Yes.

Q. -- a company wholly owned by Mr Berezovsky?

A. He's the beneficial owner, yes.

Q. If you could turn on to page 114T H(C)3/114T. This is a translation of a letter at page 114 in the original French --

A. Mm-hm.

Q. -- again from Mr Bordes to you, this time 20 June 1997, and it's "Re: 'Number Ten'". Number Ten was the Clocher, wasn't it?

A. I don't know this...

Q. You don't remember --

A. Oh, okay, he speaks here:

"... d'accelerer le principe de l'acquisition du 'Number Ten'..."

He says here:

"... to speed up the principle of buying 'Number Ten'..."

Buying -- if it was buying Number Ten and it is '97, so it can't be the Clocher; it must be the -- it can't be the chateau; it must be the Clocher.

Q. It must be the Clocher. There was no other property being bought in 1997?

A. No, no, no.

Q. You see in the first paragraph:

"The owner, who nevertheless needs to remove a certain number of personal effects..."

Having asked you to speed up the purchase, it refers to the fact that:

"The owner, who nevertheless needs to remove a certain number of personal effects... as well as some period furniture not included in the sale, wants, for reasons of discretion which concern her and us too, since we want..."

And then in bold:

"... everybody, including the neighbours, to think that this is purely a rental, to have this move carried out by her personal removal man from Paris, who will come on site, stay at 'Number Ten' and leave again with his van."

So again you're being instructed that "everybody, including the neighbours", needs to think that this is a rental?

A. Yes, Mr Bordes send always quite a lot of correspondence, yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Sorry, you're talking rather softly, Mr Jenni. Can you speak up a bit?

A. Yes, okay. Mr Bordes, he was sending a lot of correspondence always, yes, it is true.

MS DAVIES: Would you have read the correspondence you received from Mr Bordes, Mr Jenni?

A. Yes, I looked at it. But you see, even if it was addressed at me, it was Mr Stiefel who was acting in the first place for this. I was not acting in the first place for the Sifi and for the purchase of the Clocher -- of -- yes, of the Clocher.

Q. If you stay on page 114T, or if you're on the original 114, you see in paragraph 2 Mr Bordes is telling you that he has:

"... arranged for Mr RA..."

That must be Mr Abramovich again, mustn't it?

A. Hmm.

Q. Is that a "yes", Mr --

A. Yes.

Q. Yes.

"... to be informed through Mr Eugene Shvidler, that I was in the process of persuading the owner of the neighbouring villa to allow a rental for the months of August and September for the price of USD 200,000 (I had proposed a higher price, but these gentlemen wanted to make an offer at this level, which I am now deemed to have had accepted. This is to keep these gentlemen informed). Shortly afterwards, Mr Shvidler called me back to inform me of his agreement and to thank me, but he told me that in fact, it is very important for him to have the villa sooner, if possible from 21 July..."

Then he says:

"I am therefore initially going to enter into commitments with him for August and September, telling him that I am endeavouring to get the villa for 21 or 22 July in return for USD 25,000 or 30,000 extra, so that it seems plausible."

So Mr Bordes is clearly telling you, isn't he, that Mr Abramovich has been informed that he's renting the Clocher de la Garoupe although in fact it was Mr Berezovsky who was acquiring the Clocher de la Garoupe before the rental started?

A. It's possible, yes.

Q. It's possible. That's what Mr Bordes was telling you, isn't it?

A. Yes. Yes.

Q. And that's in due course what happened, isn't it?

A. I don't know.

Q. You don't know?

A. Well, he purchased -- Mr Berezovsky purchased the Clocher, yes; but what he was telling or not telling, I don't know.

Q. Are you saying you don't know that Sifi received rental in relation to the Clocher de la Garoupe?

A. No, I don't know this. It was Mr Stiefel who took care of this. I didn't look at these details, no.

Q. But if I were -- we could go through the documents if you want to, but would you accept from me that the documents show that Sifi did receive rental --

A. Yes, okay. I accept it.

Q. You say in your statement that you "recall noticing in 1997 that Mr Abramovich was distancing himself from [Mr Berezovsky]", and that you noticed that he wanted "to make his own separate business and leisure arrangements". That's paragraph 146 D1/10/219.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, we've already established that you did not have any direct professional relationship with Mr Abramovich or his companies?

A. Yes.

Q. So what is that based on, Mr Jenni?

A. It's based on the fact that Mr Bordes -- Mr Abramovich and Mr Bordes were in contact and it looked as though Mr Abramovich wanted also to buy some property in Antibes and Mr Bordes tried to propose to him the services of his company and Mr Abramovich refused and said that he would like to completely independently proceed to buy this property.

Q. In fact Mr Abramovich did use Mr Bordes for the purchase of his property in Cap d'Antibes in 2000; did you know that?

A. No.

Q. And in fact, also, Mr Abramovich stayed at Clocher de la Garoupe throughout the summers of 1997 and 1998.

A. This is correct, yes.

Q. So it's not right, is it, that he was making separate leisure arrangements in 1997?

A. I was told so that he did but... 1997? Maybe not 1997, maybe 1999 -- 98.

Q. Well, he stayed there in 1998 as well.

A. Okay, I don't -- you see, I don't remember the dates exactly when these things -- it's quite a long time ago. So when I recall that there was a proposition to go through John Heinzen, to use Bordes for the whole arrangement of the things, I was told that he didn't want to and that he wanted to do the separate arrangements for him. This is the information I had and from this information I took to say that, okay, if he doesn't want to go together with Mr Bordes and with the structures and facilities we have, then it is not together but it is separate.

Q. So you put two and two together and made that conclusion?

A. Pardon me?

Q. You put together what you had been told and made that conclusion?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, you explain in paragraphs 147 to 150 D1/10/220 of your statement that the monies that were used to purchase Clocher de la Garoupe on Mr Berezovsky's behalf came from Runicom.

A. Yes.

Q. Did you understand at the time that Runicom was a company ultimately owned by Mr Abramovich?

A. The whole transaction with Runicom was done with Mr Stiefel and I understood from him that the company Runicom was a company that belonged to Sibneft, that it was a trading arm of Sibneft. This is what I understood.

Q. You understood that from Mr Stiefel?

A. Yes.

Q. You didn't investigate that yourself?

A. No.

Q. And did you know anymore about Runicom?

A. No, I don't know anything. Well, I heard -- later on I heard in our proceedings that, first of all, this is in 2008, 2009, I had this information that there was a problem with Runicom, that there is proceedings because it seems that there was a mixture between Runicom SA in Switzerland and Runicom Limited in Gibraltar and all these things, of course, I heard it and knew but not at that time --

Q. I was asking about 1997.

A. No.

Q. Now, if you could turn to paragraph 199 of your statement, you're here addressing certain meetings you had with Valmet, at page D1/10/230.

A. Wait, wait, 199. Yes.

Q. You say you were first asked by Mr Berezovsky to attend a presentation at Valmet's offices in Geneva in the spring of 2000. You go on to say that you were there as a friend and adviser to Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili but not in any official legal capacity.

A. Yes.

Q. But you must have been there to represent Mr Berezovsky's and Mr Patarkatsishvili's interests, mustn't you?

A. No. This first meeting was something like a presentation so Mr Samuelson gave a presentation of what he is able to do. I do not know, up to now, who brought Mr Samuelson into the game. As I was in Switzerland at that time and the meeting should take place in Geneva, I was just asked, "Could you drop in, could you sit there and look what is happening and then tell us what you think about it?"

Q. So you were asked to report back to them about it?

A. Yes.

Q. And you subsequently went to a number of other meetings with Valmet?

A. But very much later on, not in the...

Q. So this meeting you're describing in 1999 is a very initial presentation?

A. This was a very initial presentation because we had the problems in 1999, we had the sequestration of funds, blocking of accounts and everything. And then we had the situation that Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili, they came to the conclusion that they should also, how do you call this, put their relationship into more a formal way and to see what is -- who is who and what is what. And so they were looking for a solution for this and one who could provide such a solution, it seems, was Mr Samuelson. So it was Valmet.

Q. So you obviously gave a positive report back about --

A. Yes, I gave a report that it looks that this company is worth...

Q. And then later in 2000, you attended certain further meetings with Mr Samuelson?

A. I don't remember.

MS DAVIES: My Lady, I wonder if that's a convenient moment.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, certainly.

Mr Jenni, you're not to talk to anybody about your evidence or about the case over the lunch hour, all right?

THE WITNESS: Yes, okay.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well. 2 o'clock.

(1.00 pm)

(The short adjournment)

(2.00 pm)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, Ms Davies.

MS DAVIES: Mr Jenni, just before lunch you told us that the background to your first meeting with Valmet was that there had been problems experienced in 1999 involving the sequestration of funds and the blocking of accounts. Could you tell us briefly what that was about?

A. This was the so-called Aeroflot case and it was -- as far as Switzerland is concerned, it was blocking of accounts due to a request for legal assistance by the Russian prosecutors in Switzerland.

Q. So one of the reasons Mr Berezovsky was interested in Samuelson was that they were looking for a solution for having funds that they could have available which wouldn't be frozen?

A. Well, I wouldn't say it was this because in the -- the basic idea was that they wanted to get structured their relationship and they wanted to get structured their holdings in a way that it was clear who was holding what shares in what -- to what extent. This was the objective. So there were put up two structures that were more or less like a mirror, they mirrored the situation, and in this structure they would put in their shares 50/50, as they decided to do the business together.

And the question of -- well, I would rather say it was a question of confidentiality because before this happened with the sequestration, with blocking of accounts and so on, we had cases where people tried to get into accounts and to get information from accounts that we do not know who they were, what they were. But from banks I received calls telling me, for instance, that somebody was trying to get into the account and to get the information.

Q. Mr Samuelson certainly gave the impression, did he, that he could set up very complex structures that would help prevent funds from being blocked?

A. That is correct -- no, for me it was never a question that it would prevent funds from being blocked because if there is legal insistence somewhere, there is legal insistence somewhere, you have to declare the beneficial owner and so on, so the funds will be blocked if they have to be blocked. But it is also question of confidentiality and you know the Swiss banking secrecy deals with questions of confidentiality. We are used to that not everybody is putting his nose into all the details of other people.

- Q. You told us this morning that after your initial attendance at this presentation in the spring of 2000, you did attend some further meetings with Valmet --
- A. Yes.
- Q. -- later in 2000.
- A. Yes. Later on, yes.
- Q. And presumably at those meetings Valmet were, amongst other things, interested in obtaining details as to the source of the funds that they were going to be managing on Mr Berezovsky's behalf?
- A. The source of the funds? Well, they were -- first of all, they were interested in what businesses were behind it and what businesses should be structured, yes.
- Q. And that was because that was the source of the funds they were obtaining and of course they had --
- A. Yes, of course, it was the businesses that were generating funds, yes.
- Q. And they had their own due diligence requirements they no doubt had to satisfy?
- A. Yes, yes, yes.
- Q. You tell us in your statement at paragraph 200 D1/10/230 that at the meetings that you attended at least, you very much left the explanation of the source of the funds to Mr Fomichev?
- A. Yes, that's correct. Yes.

Q. He, by late 2000, being closely involved in the management of Mr Berezovsky's finances?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, you refer at paragraph 203 D1/10/231 to a meeting that you attended on 5 August 2000 and there's a short note of that meeting at H(A)21/12, if you could be given that.

A. Yes.

Q. And you confirm in paragraph 203 that this is an accurate record of the meeting you attended.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, at page 12 we have the English translation of the meeting note; the original meeting note is actually at page 11. It appears to be in Dutch.

A. Mm-hm.

Q. You can see that that includes a photocopy of your business card and Mr Fomichev's business card.

A. Yes.

Q. Could you just remind yourself -- it's up to you whether you prefer to look at the Dutch or the English but just remind yourself of the -- just read the note. (Pause)

A. Yes.

Q. Just looking at the note, it looks as if this might have been one of the early substantive meetings you attended with Valmet?

A. Yes.

Q. In particular from the fact they're referring at the end to "possibly some... new business". That suggests that the business yet hadn't been placed with them, doesn't it?

A. Yes, yes. The business was not yet placed, no.

Q. Now, if you look at the first paragraph of this note and the last two sentences, would I be right in understanding that at this stage what was being discussed with Valmet was relatively small participations in Russian companies being transferred into the Valmet structure?

A. This is not correct because this was rather the idea that into different vessels should not be put more than these small parts.

Q. The last sentence says:

"The participations shall all be between 5 and 15% of the share capital."

A. Yes, of each -- of each vessel.

Q. The vessel being the underlying --

A. Of the structure, yes.

Q. I see.

A. So that it was not vulnerable, there was not the bulk risk with one vessel.

Q. Now, subsequently to this meeting you provided some references to Valmet for Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili; that was on 2 September 2000. If you turn forward in this bundle, we find them at page 137 H(A)21/137.

A. Yes.

Q. This is the reference for Mr Patarkatsishvili --

A. Yes.

Q. -- but did you provide a similar reference for Mr Berezovsky?

A. Yes.

Q. The next meeting the documents record you as attending was a meeting on around 5 September 2000. If you could take up bundle H(A)19 at page 10 H(A)19/10.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, you don't refer to this meeting note in your statement. Have you seen it before?

A. I just have to look at it first.

Q. Of course.

A. No. No.

Q. Just to set the context, although this has a date "9/5/00", that's in fact US dating. You can see that from the bottom of page 11, where the last paragraph refers to "Hans-Peter as a Swiss lawyer", who must be you --

A. Yes.

Q. -- having provided reference letters.

A. Yes.

Q. And we've just looked at one of those reference letters and it's 2 September.

A. Yes.

Q. So this must be produced after that?

A. Probably, yes. I don't know this note but, as it refers to this, it must be after that.

Q. Now, the third paragraph on page 11 of this note --

A. Which, sorry?

Q. The third paragraph on page 11, the paragraph starting, "I have met with BB and AP..."

A. I made a mistake, I put the -- I have to find it first.

Q. Sorry, page 11.

A. Page 11. Yes.

Q. About halfway through that paragraph you see it says:

"Ruslan is assisted by Hans-Peter Jenni, a Swiss lawyer now resident in Cyprus, [Mr] Kay... and [Ms] Nosova... I have had numerous meetings with Ruslan, sometimes attended by Hans-Peter, some by Natalia and one by Joseph... Today, Peter joined me at a meeting held in London with Ruslan and Hans-Peter."

So it looks as if you had been at a meeting in London on around 5 September.

A. That's possible, yes.

Q. And if you go up to the top of page 11, you can -- sorry, page 10 --

A. Page 10, mm-hm.

Q. -- first of all, you see there's a note in the second and third paragraphs of what Valmet had been told about what interests Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili held at the time:

"They bought 49% with the Government retaining 51% of ORT."

Then:

"They... added Kommersant..."

Then:

"... [they] were able to buy control of Sibneft... and subsequently have acquired 70% of Russia's aluminium smelters and have created a new holding company called Russian Aluminium..."

A. Yes.

Q. Did you know at the time what percentage interest in Rusal Mr Berezovsky claimed to own?

A. No.

Q. You weren't responsible for telling Valmet that it was 70 per cent then?

A. No, not me.

Q. And over the page, at the top of page 11, you see a reference to the Hotspur and Octopus Trusts and then a reference to:

"We will start by moving the Sibneft holdings into the funds in about ten days."

Now, as at September 2000 was your understanding that Mr Berezovsky directly held any Sibneft shares that could be moved into funds in about ten days?

A. I must say I was probably present at the meeting but it was not my suggestion or my -- the information didn't come from me. So whether it was the case or it was not the case, it was up to the people who gave this information to judge it, not me.

Q. And you didn't understand Mr Berezovsky to have shares in Sibneft?

A. I always understood that he has the participation in Sibneft but I didn't know the details: where he had it, how he would transfer it and so on. This I didn't know.

Q. Is this likely to come from Mr Fomichev?

A. Well, probably, yes.

Q. Or Ms Nosova?

A. Or Ms Nosova? I don't -- I cannot answer this question because I don't know.

Q. Was anyone else present at meetings that you held with Valmet?

A. Sometimes it was Boris Berezovsky who was present, Mr Fomichev was present, Mrs Nosova was present,

I remember Mr Curtis was present sometimes.

Q. Do you remember then describing to Valmet the interest --

A. No, no.

Q. None of them?

A. Well, I don't recall it.

Q. You don't recall.

The next paragraph:

"BB and AP also own a large stake in Aeroflot..."

A. Yes.

Q. Was it your understanding as at 2000 that Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili owned a large stake in Aeroflot?

A. No.

Q. But Mr Berezovsky was receiving funds as a result of Andava's dealings with Aeroflot, wasn't he?

A. There were dividends paid out to the shareholders, yes.

Q. Andava dividends paid out?

A. Yes.

Q. To Mr Berezovsky?

A. I don't remember where they were paid out, but the companies, yes.

Q. Could you be given bundle H(A)18 at page 221.001T H(A)18/221.001T. Now, this is also not a document that you refer to in your statement, no doubt because it only came to light after your statement was signed. Do you recall seeing this document before?

This is the translation, sorry, I should say, of a Russian document --

A. May I see the original?

Q. It starts at page 221.001.

A. Yes. May I see the original?

Q. That is the original, 221.001.

A. This is the original. I don't know, I don't remember this document. (Pause)

No, I don't know who produced this document.

Q. Before I ask a question --

A. At least in the French text my name is wrongly spelt -- in the Russian text my name is wrongly spelt.

Q. Before I ask you a question about it, are you fluent in Russian, Mr Jenni?

A. Pardon me?

Q. Are you fluent in Russian?

A. Yes.

Q. And when you communicated with Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili, did you communicate in Russian or --

A. Yes.

Q. -- English? Russian?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, if you look at the bottom of the second page of this document, in the English translation we're told at page 002T that:

"The materials set forth in this list were received by me on 21 April 2000.

"Hans-Peter Jenni."

A. No.

Q. You don't have any recollection of receiving this?

A. No. No, I see this -- I never saw this document.

I don't know these companies. I never heard about these companies.

Q. Could you just be given bundle H(E)1 --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Is this the original document, the one on the screen?

THE WITNESS: No, this is the translation.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Is there one in Russian with a signature on it?

MS DAVIES: Not that I've seen, my Lady.

THE WITNESS: There is no signature on it and my name is -- in the Russian original it is spelt wrongly.

MR RABINOWITZ: My Lady, in answer to your question, I don't think we have. This obviously comes from the family defendants' disclosure. But we haven't seen one with a signature on it.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I see. Thank you.

So you don't have any recollection of seeing this document before?

A. No, I never...

MS DAVIES: Could you just be given for completeness bundle
H(E)1/01.

Sorry, it's not in my hard copy, my Lady, as it's a new...

A. I don't...

Q. It's on the screen, Mr Jenni.

A. On the screen, yes.

Q. Yes. This is a cover sheet that was found, as we understand it, on the front of this file and you see that says:

"For Mr Hans-Peter Jenni

"CONFIDENTIALLY

"PERSONALLY IN HANDS"

I just wanted to check you have no recollection of seeing that either?

A. No.

Q. Thank you.

Now, you told us a bit this morning about a company called Ruco. Do you recall that in 1996 Ruco received a loan from a company called Laren Trading --

A. Yes.

Q. -- of US$5 million?

A. It might -- it's possible, yes.

Q. And is it correct that Ruco then used the funds that it had received to increase the capital of Andava Holding SA?

A. Yes, yes.

Q. And it was Ruco that became the shareholder in Andava Holding SA, not Laren?

A. Yes.

Q. And Ruco subsequently repaid Laren 2.8 million of the loan that it had received?

A. Yes.

Q. In your statement, starting at paragraph 248 on page 240 D1/10/240, you give some evidence about the sale by Mr Abramovich of 25 per cent of Rusal Holding to Mr Deripaska.

A. Yes.

Q. And you say there that Mr Patarkatsishvili -- that's paragraph 251 -- told you that he was unhappy about the sale because he felt that he, Mr Berezovsky and Mr Abramovich should have sold together?

A. This is correct, yes.

Q. Are you suggesting that Mr Patarkatsishvili told you about his happiness in this respect at the time -- that's in late 2004 -- or was it subsequently?

A. No, it was -- rather 2004, I guess.

Q. Presumably you had a number of discussions with both

Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili --

A. Yes.

Q. -- about the Rusal sale?

A. Yes.

Q. And it must again be possible, mustn't it, Mr Jenni, that you're attributing a conversation that you've had more recently to a conversation you actually --

A. Normally --

Q. -- and suggesting it happened in 2004?

A. This is always possible because time has passed and my memory passes also. But what I can say is normally when things happened I have been informed by them through the communication we had normally, that we're sitting together and discussing all that was happening around, shortly after it happened and not some time later.

Q. But you've discussed it on more than one occasion?

A. Yes.

Q. And it must be very difficult to distinguish one conversation from any one other?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you have any arrangement whereby you stand to benefit financially should Mr Berezovsky succeed in any of his claims?

A. No.

MS DAVIES: Thank you very much, Mr Jenni.

MR MALEK: I have no questions.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Any questions from anyone else?

MR ADKIN: No.

MR MUMFORD: No.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, Mr Rabinowitz.

Re-examination by MR RABINOWITZ

MR RABINOWITZ: Just one question, Mr Jenni.

In the course of your answers to Ms Davies today you were asked about the relationship between Mr Abramovich and Mr Berezovsky and you said that you'd seen them together and you'd said that in your view they were friends.

Can I ask you just to describe what it was about their interrelationship which made you form the view that they were friends?

- A. I saw Mr Abramovich the first time, that was in 1995, in a private house outside Moscow with Mr Boris Berezovsky and it was in a familiar surrounding. I saw Mr Abramovich again, and with family, if I remember well, with family in 1997, 1997 at Clocher, at La Garoupe, in Antibes, and that was where the two families were together. So I had the impression that they were quite familiar and quite friends.
- Q. Did they relate to each other in any way which made you form the view about whether they were friends?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: What does that mean, Mr Rabinowitz?

MR RABINOWITZ: Did they interact with each other? Or was it just that you -- the answer that you've given?

A. Well, in fact the feeling was that -- I now also try to recall other meetings where I saw them together and... In the end it was rather formal.

MR RABINOWITZ: Thank you very much.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: When both families were staying at Antibes, did you get the impression they were, as it were, spending some time on their holidays together?

A. Maybe not that they were spending holidays together but they were just near each other.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I see.

Thank you. I have no further questions. Thank you very much indeed for coming along, Mr Jenni.

THE WITNESS: Thank you.

(The witness withdrew)

MR RABINOWITZ: My Lady, our next witness is Ms Gorbunova.

Can I just ask: does your Ladyship have -- before she is sworn -- a document identifying a correction to be made to her statement?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Can you hand me up another one.

(Handed)

Thank you very much.

MS ELENA GORBUNOVA (sworn)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Do sit down if you would like to.

THE WITNESS: Thank you.

Examination-in-chief by MR RABINOWITZ

Q. Good afternoon, Ms Gorbunova. Can I just check that you don't have with you any mobile phone or any other electronic communication device?

A. No.

Q. Thank you very much.

Can I ask that you please be given bundle D4 open at tab 8 D4/08/56. Ms Gorbunova, at D4, tab 8, you should, I hope, see a document titled "First Witness Statement of Elena Alexandrovna Gorbunova".

A. Yes.

Q. Do you have that? If you can go, please, to page 67 of the bundle, the numbers on the right bottom corner D4/08/67.

A. Yes.

Q. And do you see a signature there?

A. Yes.

Q. And can you confirm that that's your signature?

A. Yes, that's mine.

Q. Thank you.

Now, there is, I know, a correction that you want to make to your witness statement. Can I ask you to go to page 64 of the bundle D4/08/64. It's paragraph 28.

It really begins at the bottom of the previous page and goes over the page. Do you see that paragraph?

A. Yes.

Q. Right. Then do you have with you there, in front of you, a page headed "Correction to Elena Gorbunova's First Witness Statement"?

A. No, I don't.

Q. You don't. Can I just hand up... (Handed) Thank you very much.

Now, I understand this is a correction you want to make to that paragraph. Is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, subject to that correction, can you confirm that the contents of this, your first witness statement, are true to the best of your knowledge and belief?

A. Yes.

Q. Thank you.

Now, can I ask you next to go to tab 11 of the same bundle D4/11/120. You should see another witness statement: it should be headed "Second Witness Statement of Elena Gorbunova".

A. Yes.

Q. Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. Can I ask you to go, please, to page 122 of the bundle D4/11/122. It's the third page of the witness statement. Again, do you see a signature there?

A. Yes.

Q. Can you confirm that it's your signature?

A. Yes, it's mine.

Q. And can you confirm that the contents of this, your second witness statement, are true to the best of your knowledge and belief?

A. Yes.

Q. Ms Gorbunova, as I understand it, the position in terms of the translator is this. You understand English?

A. Yes.

Q. And so the questions will be asked in English.

A. Yes.

Q. But the position is, is it not, that when it comes to answering, for more complex answers you would like to give them to the translator in Russian because you're not comfortable speaking English?

A. Yes, if it's possible.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. Well, see how you go. It's easier in a way -- well, it's easier for me, put it this way -- if you give your answers in English, but I don't want to inconvenience you in any way. So just how you feel easiest.

THE WITNESS: Thank you, my Lady.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Can you try and speak up a bit because your voice is quite soft. Can you pull the microphone towards you. Thank you.

MR RABINOWITZ: Can we just have a temporary interruption or commercial so that the translator can go and get her pad and glasses.

Ms Gorbunova, can you wait there, please.

Mr Sumption will have some questions for you.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, Mr Sumption.

Cross-examination by MR SUMPTION

(All answers interpreted unless otherwise indicated)

MR SUMPTION: Ms Gorbunova, when did you last meet

Mr Smolensky?

A. On 5 September 2011.

Q. And what did you discuss with him?

A. We discussed the evidence he gave in favour of Boris for the purposes of the strike-out application and the evidence he was trying to give via Skype to our lawyers.

Q. And what did you say about that?

A. (Not interpreted) Me or him?

(Interpreted) I didn't say anything about that.

I just received information.

Q. Well, you say that you discussed these matters. Tell us what was discussed, what was said?

A. I was asking him how it was happening, how the procedure was actually taking place. I also asked him if he was willing once again to give evidence and to sign it.

Q. And what was his answer?

A. He said that he was willing to meet with our lawyers the following day.

Q. Did you say to Mr Smolensky that you would like him to avoid helping Mr Abramovich in this action?

A. No, that's impossible.

Q. Did you say to Mr Smolensky --

A. I didn't know he was helping him.

Q. No, but you wanted to discourage him from doing so, did you not?

A. No.

Q. And did you say to Mr Smolensky that you would be adversely affected financially if Mr Berezovsky lost, which was why you would prefer him not to assist Mr Abramovich's --

A. I didn't say that.

Q. Because that is what we understand from Mr Smolensky that you said: both of those things.

A. That is not true.

Q. Well, I suggest to you that it is.

A. This is your assumption. I'm telling you what happened.

Q. Do you have a financial interest in the outcome of this case, Ms Gorbunova?

A. What do you mean?

Q. Well, if Mr Berezovsky wins, do you stand to be better off financially?

A. Naturally.

Q. Explain how that is.

A. Well, because we're a family.

Q. Have you lent your own money to Mr Berezovsky, Ms Gorbunova?

A. No.

Q. You haven't lent any money to Mr Berezovsky; is that your evidence?

A. At some point back in time he put some money on my account and later, when he needed some financial assistance, I just returned this money to him. I didn't consider this money to be my personal funds; I considered it to be the money of our family.

Q. Did you lend him that money when you passed it back to him?

A. No, I didn't. I just gave it back to him.

Q. Was it agreed between you that he would repay it to you if he succeeded in this action? Perhaps the translator could assist.

A. We did not agree that, but I think it's natural to assume so.

Q. You are, I assume, familiar with the main issues in this lawsuit. Is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. Am I right in thinking that Mr Berezovsky has often spoken to you about them, about the issues?

A. About this as well.

Q. And over the past few years no doubt Mr Berezovsky has often said to you that he believes that Mr Abramovich blackmailed him?

A. I was present myself and therefore I didn't need any confirmation from Mr Berezovsky to know that.

Q. You did not hear, according to your evidence, the detailed exchanges which you claim to have been present at; is that correct?

A. No, I didn't hear the detailed exchanges but the first 15 minutes were sufficient for me to understand that it was blackmail.

Q. Could you look at your first witness statement, please. You tell us in paragraph 39 that the men sat in one corner of the terrace by the dining table and you sat in another one. You then say you went inside after 10 or 15 minutes as it was cold. Do you see that?

A. (Not interpreted) Yes.

Q. The next paragraph:

"From what [you] observed, Roman behaved very differently at this meeting from how I had seen him behave previously. He used to be respectful towards Boris, almost humble. However, on this visit Roman seemed to be looking down on Boris... My impression was that Roman was trying to demonstrate that he was doing Boris a huge favour. I heard the men talking about Boris and Badri's interests in ORT. I recall Roman saying that the government wanted to pay significantly less for the ORT shares than he was going to pay, and that it was only thanks to Roman that they would pay more. I think Roman also said that he was personally paying some of the sale price as he was fed up with the story with Boris and Badri."

You then say at paragraph 41:

"I remember that after the meeting, Boris was outraged."

Now, what did you hear of the conversation between these three men that led you to think that it was blackmail?

- A. Well, first of all I knew what the conversation would be about and the most important issue that was being discussed was that Nikolai Glushkov was arrested and put in prison. All the rest was a consequence of that situation.
- Q. Reading your witness statement, could you please point to what it was in this conversation, as you describe it, which suggested that it was blackmail?

- A. I was not actually recording all the words that were being uttered there. I was trying to describe the situation that was at hand, that was there, and the situation was blackmail. This was just a day; the situation was developing over the course of several months.
- Q. What you say in paragraph 41 was that it was Mr Berezovsky who told you that Mr Abramovich had used Mr Glushkov to blackmail him.
- A. Mr Berezovsky simply voiced exactly what I've heard and exactly the conclusions that I have come to.
- Q. You do not say that in your witness statement and it didn't happen, did it?
- A. This is exactly what did happen; it's just that our opinions on the meeting coincided.
- Q. Then why didn't you say that in your witness statement, Ms Gorbunova? You've made two of them.
- A. I was not being asked about the opinion I formed about that meeting.
- Q. If you had heard yourself --
- A. Once again, I was describing a situation, not an opinion.
- Q. If you had actually heard the exchanges between these three men which amounted in your opinion to blackmail, you would have said that in your witness statement, wouldn't you?

- A. Not necessarily. For me this was a totally natural understanding of the situation but at that time I thought about a different thing altogether: I thought that apart from Nikolai having become a hostage, we were becoming financial hostages to Mr Abramovich.
- Q. Now, you met Mr Abramovich, did you not, many times between 1995 and 2000?
- A. Yes.
- Q. He must have come quite often in that period to your house in southern France?
- A. Yes.
- Q. It cannot be easy to remember even approximately, years after the event, the dates on which you saw him?
- A. The date is indeed difficult to recall but I remember very well the sequence of events.
- Q. Would you look at paragraph 34, please, of your witness statement; paragraphs 34 and 35 D4/08/65.
- A. (Not interpreted) yes.
- Q. You say here that Mr Abramovich was present at Mr Patarkatsishvili's birthday party at the George V Hotel in Paris on 31 October.
- A. No, no, no, I'm saying in fact that we were celebrating the birthday and Mr Abramovich came along.

Q. Yes. So you say --

A. He did not join in with the celebrations.

Q. You say that he arrived at the hotel around lunchtime and that you spoke to him.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, are you sure about that?

A. Absolutely.

Q. You have a mental picture, do you, of that occasion?

A. (Not interpreted) Yes.

Q. Mr Abramovich had in fact been in Paris ten days earlier but his travel records show that he returned to Russia on 24 October and did not leave Russia again until 6 November. He was not present at the George V Hotel on the 31st.

A. We know everything we need to know about the stamps in Mr Abramovich's passport.

Q. What do you need to know about the stamps in Mr Abramovich's passport, Ms Gorbunova?

THE INTERPRETER: Okay, this must have been my mistranslation.

A. We already know everything about the stamps in Mr Abramovich's passport.

MR SUMPTION: What do you know --

A. Strange metamorphoses are happening to these stamps.

Q. What do you know about the stamps in Mr Abramovich's passport that helps you to give evidence about his presence in Paris on 31 October?

A. Nothing at that time. But if he changed one stamp, nothing can guarantee that he hadn't changed all others as well.

Q. He didn't change any stamps as far as you're aware, did he?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, I'm not sure that's a question she can answer, Mr Sumption.

MR SUMPTION: Well, she claims to have some knowledge of this.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: You think, do you, that he's changed the stamps or he's obtained a change to the stamps in his passport?

A. I saw how they were being changed.

MR SUMPTION: What do you mean, you "saw how they were being changed"?

A. I mean that he sent us one stamp in a copy of a document and it was different from the stamp that he eventually disclosed in the original document. I think this is a question to the experts.

Q. Are you talking, Ms Gorbunova, about an occasion on which a photocopy of a passport stamp at a later date was replaced by a better copy of the same page of the passport? Is that the occasion you're talking about?

A. I can't say that it was a better copy. I can say that it was different, the stamp.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, Mr Sumption, I don't think you need to go over this.

MR SUMPTION: I'm not going to -- no. I only asked the question because the witness claimed to have some knowledge of it.

Now, Ms Gorbunova, you say that you were at Cap d'Antibes on 6 November 2000; you say that in paragraph 36 of your witness statement.

A. (Not interpreted) Yes.

Q. Would you please tell us what you did on 6 November 2000? Tell us how you occupied your day, who you saw and so on.

A. If I had seen someone, I would have remembered it. Most probably I haven't seen anyone unusual. It was an ordinary, routine day in our house.

Q. Are you saying that you saw nobody on that day or you saw nobody unusual?

A. (Not interpreted) Nobody unusual.

Q. How do you know that, Ms Gorbunova, after 11 years?

A. I just remember that period of time rather well because rather extraordinary events were happening in our lives and I remembered them because they were not very ordinary.

- Q. Tell us what was the next time after 6 November 2000 when you saw someone unusual and who it was?
- A. By "unusual" I mean all the guests that were coming to visit us.
- Q. Tell us what was the next day after 6 November when you saw someone unusual?
- A. For example, on 7 December.
- Q. On 7 December. You saw nobody unusual between 6 November and 7 December; is that your evidence?
- A. I travelled a lot at that time and very seldom was in the house.
- Q. Ms Gorbunova, you say in paragraph 36 that you are sure that Mr Abramovich did not come to Cap d'Antibes on 6 November. I suggest to you that you cannot possibly remember the specific date on which Mr Abramovich came to Cap d'Antibes.
- A. Everybody's memory works differently. If you assume something, you are basing your assumption on how your memory works. My memory works differently.
- Q. And in particular you cannot possibly remember not seeing somebody on a particular date when you know that he has been on a number of occasions to Cap d'Antibes. What do you say?
- A. If a person hadn't visited us for four months then of course it's easy to remember.

Q. When you made your first witness statement did you know that Mr Berezovsky was saying that Mr Abramovich's visit to Cap d'Antibes happened a few days before Christmas and a couple of weeks after the arrest of Nikolai Glushkov?

A. No, I didn't know about it.

Q. You didn't know that that's what he was saying?

A. I didn't know which dates he was giving.

Q. You seem to be very familiar with the issues in this action. Are you really saying that you did not know at the time of your first witness statement that your partner was alleging that this meeting occurred a few days before Christmas?

A. Mr Sumption, the important thing is the essence of what is going on and not the time when it was taking place.

Q. Well, the timing is important to some issues on this action and I'm therefore going to ask you about them.

A. Fine, fine. I'll try and remember, if I have time.

Q. At paragraph 38 D4/08/65 you say that:

"Although [you] do not remember the precise date of the meeting... [it] took place before 24 December 2000."

Was that evidence not given in order to corroborate Mr Berezovsky's evidence that it was a few days before Christmas?

- A. No, this evidence was given on the basis of what I was remembering, recollecting -- remembering.
- Q. You said in your first witness statement, paragraph 42, that you went away with Mr Berezovsky after Roman Abramovich's visit and came back after Christmas. Paragraph 42 D4/08/66. Would you just remind yourself of that.
- A. (Not interpreted) Yes.
- Q. Now, in your second witness statement you say that you left with Mr Berezovsky for the United States and came back alone to Cap d'Antibes for Christmas. Do you remember saying that? It's paragraph 6(g) of your second witness statement if you want to have a look at it D4/11/122.
- A. (Not interpreted) Just a second. Which one?
- THE INTERPRETER: Could you give us the tab, please?
- MR SUMPTION: It's in tab 11. I'm just looking at tab 11, paragraph 6, in conjunction with paragraph 42 of your first witness statement.
- A. (Not interpreted) Yes.
- Q. Now, where did you go with Boris after Roman's visit to the chateau? I'm looking at paragraph 42 of your first witness statement.
- A. Most likely to Germany.
- Q. If you look at paragraph 6(c) of your second witness statement, you say that:

"[You] understand that Boris arrived in the US on 17 December 2000, as is shown by his passport stamps. I was with Boris for some of this trip to the US, and I think that we flew together from the London to the US."

A. (Not interpreted) Yes.

Q. Do you see that?

A. (Not interpreted) Yes.

Q. Now, is it right that the visit that you made after Roman's visit to the chateau, are you saying that that was a visit to the United States?

A. No, I wrote that either we went to Germany or to the US and it is in my witness statement.

Q. Are you referring to your second witness statement when you say that?

A. I don't remember in which.

Q. Well, have a look at paragraph 6 of your second witness statement. Is that the witness statement that you have just referred to?

A. (Not interpreted) Yes. Yes.

Q. Right. You answered "yes", but possibly so faintly that it may not have got on to the transcript.

A. (Not interpreted) I can see it.

Q. It has, fine.

You say in your second witness statement, paragraph 6(c), that you left with Mr Berezovsky for the United States from London --

A. (Not interpreted) Yes.

Q. -- and came back, you say, in time for Christmas.

A. (Not interpreted) Yes.

Q. You describe a number of things that you did in his company in the United States: paragraphs 6(c), (d) and following.

A. (Not interpreted) Yes.

Q. Now, are you aware that your passport stamps show no record of your entering the United States in December?

A. Possibly, but I was there.

Q. Mr Berezovsky's passport stamps do record his entry into the United States, but yours do not.

A. I don't know, but I was there.

Q. You were not there, were you, Ms Gorbunova?

A. I was there.

Q. If you say that you went to the United States with Mr Berezovsky, presumably that is something that you say on the basis of your recollection rather than because you have been assisted by any documents?

A. No, no, I remember I went to Washington and we were at a presentation of a civil liberties society or something, I can't remember exactly what it was called, but together with Alexander Goldfarb.

- Q. Did you remember going to the United States with Mr Berezovsky before Christmas at the time when you wrote your first witness statement?
- A. I don't know, but I think at that time the question of where we were did not arise.
- Q. If you remembered going with Mr Berezovsky to the United States before Christmas at the time you made your second witness statement, presumably you would have remembered it at the time when you made your first witness statement just a few months earlier?
- A. It's just that when I was giving my second witness statement I had to remember December date by date, very specifically what was happening.
- Q. If you had mentioned the American visit in your first witness statement, that would have undermined Mr Berezovsky's then case that his meeting with Mr Abramovich occurred shortly before Christmas, wouldn't it?
- A. I did not coordinate my statement with Mr Berezovsky.
- Q. And for that reason you didn't mention it, did you?
- A. At that time I was not asked about our movements throughout the month of December.
- Q. If you look at paragraph 38 of your witness statement,
- Ms Gorbunova D4/08/65 --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: The first one?

MR SUMPTION: The first witness statement, yes.

A. What is the tab, please?

Q. Tab 8.

What you say in paragraph 38 is that you are sure that Mr Abramovich's denial that he met Boris in December is wrong. You say:

"The meeting took place before 24 December..."

Then at paragraph 42 you say that after that meeting you and Boris went away for a few days and came back after Christmas.

What you're saying in that witness statement is that after the meeting with Mr Abramovich you went away with Mr Berezovsky for Christmas and didn't come back until afterwards; that's right, isn't it?

A. I'm not saying that we left for Christmas, for actual Christmas.

Q. You are at paragraph 42, aren't you? Because what you say is that you went away with him for a few days and came back after Christmas.

A. (Not interpreted) After a few days.

Q. Look at paragraph 42.

A. I suppose what happened is that the two trips merged in my mind into one. What I remember is the sequence of events and I remember that soon after that, we left.

Q. Soon after the meeting you left, you mean?

A. (Not interpreted) Yes.

Q. The meeting with Mr Abramovich?

A. (Not interpreted) Yes.

Q. And you left for Christmas soon after the meeting?

A. No, I didn't say that we left for Christmas, ie to spend Christmas elsewhere. I was saying that I remember that we came back after Christmas.

Q. Now, you were at Cap d'Antibes on 7 December, when the news arrived of Mr Glushkov's arrest in Moscow, were you not?

A. (Not interpreted) Yes.

Q. Mr Glushkov was a friend, was he not?

A. Yes, he was a friend and he is a godfather to our daughter.

Q. Yes. So the news of his arrest was no doubt distressing for you as well as for Mr Berezovsky?

A. Yes, for me it was also unexpected and traumatic.

Q. If Mr Abramovich had arrived at Cap d'Antibes on 7 December, the very day that the news broke of the arrest of Mr Glushkov, you would have remembered that, wouldn't you?

A. No, not necessarily.

Q. And you would have said it in your first witness statement, wouldn't you?

A. (Not interpreted) What? (Consults interpreter)

(Interpreted) If I remembered it, I would have said it.

Q. You do not remember Mr Abramovich arriving at Cap d'Antibes on 7 December itself, do you?

A. I repeat once again: it's difficult for me to remember all the dates exactly but I remember the sequence of events very clearly.

Q. You do not remember either, do you, Mr Abramovich arriving at Cap d'Antibes in the two or three days after 7 December? Do you agree? You don't remember that either?

A. In two/three days we left for Germany.

Q. This meeting in December never happened, did it?

A. That is not true. It did happen.

Q. You may be confusing Mr Abramovich's arrival on 6 November with his arrival at some stage in December?

A. I cannot be confusing that because on 9 November I went to Moscow; I came back on the 11th and that was my last visit.

Q. Why does that mean that you can't be confusing that, if Mr Abramovich's travel records show that he was in the south of France on 6 November?

A. When I saw Mr Abramovich I already had no possibility to re-enter Russia.

Q. And you are confusing what Mr Berezovsky told you about his exchanges with Mr Abramovich with things that Mr Berezovsky has told you much later many times, are you not?

A. No, I'm not confusing.

MR SUMPTION: Thank you.

MR MALEK: I have no questions.

MR ADKIN: My Lady, no.

MR MUMFORD: No questions.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, Mr Rabinowitz.

Re-examination by MR RABINOWITZ

MR RABINOWITZ: Ms Gorbunova, you were asked by Mr Sumption about a trip that you made to see Mr Smolensky in September of this year.

A. (Not interpreted) Yes.

Q. Mr Sumption suggested to you that you had had a conversation with Mr Smolensky in which I think it was suggested that you were seeking to persuade Mr Smolensky not to help Mr Abramovich, and you denied that.

Can you just assist us with this: did Mr Abramovich's name come up in the conversation with Mr Smolensky?

A. Yes.

Q. And can you tell us the context in which Mr Abramovich's name came up and what it was that you were told by Mr Smolensky about Mr Abramovich?

A. Mr Smolensky told me that he got a call from Mr Abramovich, who organised a meeting with Mr Putin to discuss some kind of business interests of Mr Smolensky.

Q. Was there anything else that he said?

A. (Not interpreted) About Abramovich?

(Interpreted) He said that Smolensky was interested in some -- had an interest in a project near Vladivostok and that he was going to build or undertake a large project there and that Putin had promised him help. He also said that Smolensky owned some land there and Putin wanted to confiscate it from him to build his own residence, a villa there for himself, and that Roman was just an intermediary in that.

Q. An intermediary in what? Can you just explain what you mean by "[he] was just an intermediary in that"?

A. As far as I understood, Roman was a person, an intermediary between Putin and Smolensky, somebody who would talk Smolensky into giving up that land.

Q. Are you suggesting that was on behalf of President Putin?

A. (Not interpreted) Yes.

Q. Now, can I just ask you this. You were also asked by Mr Sumption about the circumstances in which it came to be that your second witness statement had more information about your movements in December than your first witness statement.

A. (Not interpreted) Yes.

Q. Can I ask you to look at paragraph 3, please, of your second witness statement: that's at D4, tab 11, page 120 D4/11/120. You see you say:

"[You] make this statement... following the provision on 4 August 2011 by Global Jet [of information relating to] the private jet [that] Boris [and you] used at that time."

A. (Not interpreted) Yes.

Q. Can you just assist as to whether that was something that you took into account in producing the further details of your movements in December 2000?

A. I didn't take it into account in my first witness statement but I did for my second witness statement.

MR RABINOWITZ: Thank you very much. I've got no further questions.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you very much indeed.

THE WITNESS: (Not interpreted) Thank you.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you for coming along and helping the court.

(The witness withdrew)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I'll take the break now. Have you got another witness for this afternoon?

MR RABINOWITZ: I think we have got another witness here.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. I'll take ten minutes.

Just before I do that, I was promised an agreed chronology, or at least one that is agreed so far as you can get -- obviously you're not going to agree all the dates -- and also an agreed list of issues. I could really do with the agreed chronology.

MR RABINOWITZ: As I understand it, the agreed chronology has been sent to your Ladyship today.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Excellent. Very well. Thank you very much. Ten minutes.

(3.15 pm)

(A short break)

(3.30 pm)

MR RABINOWITZ: My Lady, our next witness is Mr Dubov.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR YULI DUBOV (sworn)

Examination-in-chief by MR RABINOWITZ

MR RABINOWITZ: Good afternoon, Mr Dubov.

A. Good afternoon.

Q. I wonder if you -- well, can we just start again and can I ask you to confirm that you don't have any mobile phone or electronic device?

A. No, I left everything at my seat back there.

Q. Well done. Can I ask then that you be given bundle D1, please, open at tab number 12 D1/12/258.

Do you have in front of you, Mr Dubov, a document headed "Witness Statement of Yuli Dubov"?

A. I do indeed.

Q. Thank you very much. And can I ask you to go to page 295 D1/12/295; it's the second last page of the tab in the bundle. You seem to have it there. It's 295, bottom-right corner.

A. Yes.

Q. Thank you. You see a signature there: can you confirm that's your signature?

A. This is my signature.

Q. And can you confirm that this is your first statement in these proceedings?

A. Yes, I believe this is my first statement.

Q. Thank you.

Can you confirm that the contents of this witness statement are true to the best of your knowledge and belief?

A. I do.

Q. Thank you.

Can you then be given bundle D4 opened at tab 2, please D4/02/5. You should see a document, "Second Witness Statement of Yuli Dubov".

A. That's right.

Q. Thank you. If you go to page 11, again you should see a signature D4/02/11.

A. Yes.

Q. Can you confirm that that's your signature?

A. It's my signature.

Q. And this is your second statement?

A. This is my second statement.

Q. And can you confirm that the contents of this, your second statement, are true to the best of your knowledge and belief?

A. I do.

MR RABINOWITZ: Thank you. Can you wait there, please.

Mr Sumption will have some questions for you.

Cross-examination by MR SUMPTION

MR SUMPTION: Mr Dubov, I think you describe yourself as a close personal friend of Boris Berezovsky. Is that right?

A. It's the shortest description of our relations, yes.

Q. Right. Well, it's probably sufficient for present purposes. And of Mr Glushkov also?

A. And of Mr Glushkov also.

Q. You tell us in your witness statement that you work from an office in Mr Berezovsky's building in Down Street. Is that correct?

A. That's correct.

Q. What do you do in that office?

A. Well, most of the time I'm working on my book and in the time that's left I'm also trying to earn some money, more or less successfully.

Q. Now, is it right that since 2004 you have been involved in the preparation of this case?

A. In the beginning, yes.

Q. Only in the beginning?

A. Only the beginning.

Q. During what period were you involved with it?

A. I believe that until February 2008, until Badri died.

Q. Yes, I see. So between 2004 and 2008; would that be fair?

A. Yes.

Q. And have you, during that period, regularly discussed Mr Boris Berezovsky's case with him?

A. No, I don't think that we had any regular discussions about this case.

Q. Well --

A. From time to time Boris came to me with the request to try and find some kind of information that could assist him and his lawyers in preparation to this trial and I was always glad to assist him in this.

Q. And were you present, for example, at interviews with Mr Patarkatsishvili by Mr Berezovsky's solicitors in 2007?

A. Yes, I was indeed. It was two days in July or in June;
I don't remember when exactly.

Q. Yes.

Now, during the period when you were working on this case, on what basis were you working on it? Was he paying you for it?

A. No.

Q. Do you have any arrangement with anybody under which you stand to benefit financially if he wins this action?

A. No.

Q. Now, I'd like to ask you about the ORT sale, please.

A. All right.

Q. In 2000 you were the deputy general director -- or rather at the end of 2000 you were the deputy director general of Logovaz?

A. That's right.

Q. And that company itself was a shareholder in ORT, with a holding of 11 per cent?

A. Absolutely right.

Q. Was your position as deputy general director a board position, ie were you a director also?

A. I was on board as well.

Q. Yes. And were you, in addition, a director of ORT?

A. I was on board of ORT.

Q. Sorry?

A. I was on board of ORT.

Q. Right. As well as Logovaz?

A. As well as Logovaz.

Q. Now, in early September Mr Berezovsky announced his intention of transferring the 49 per cent stake which he controlled in ORT to what has been called a teletrust of distinguished journalists and cultural figures. Do you know what I'm talking about?

A. Yes, I do know what you are talking about. I never discussed with Boris these arrangements but I knew about this from the press mainly.

Q. Well, were you consulted about these arrangements?

A. No.

Q. You weren't? Were you consulted about the names of the people who would be on this teletrust?

A. No. It was completely Boris's choice and his decision.

Q. Could you please be given bundle H(A)21/178. You should have open in front of you an English translation of a press conference with Mr Berezovsky which was shown on TV6, which I think was another of Mr Berezovsky's television interests --

A. That's right.

Q. -- on 7 September 2000. This is a press conference about the teletrust.

A. Mm-hm.

Q. I'd like you to turn to the third page, page 180 of the bundle H(A)21/180, of this press conference.

Mr Berezovsky is being asked questions, Q, and at the top of the page you will see that he was asked:

"Did you consult with anyone regarding this list or is it your own decision? And could you name people whom you approached and who turned down the offer?"

Mr Berezovsky says:

"I did not make this decision alone. I made it together with other shareholders. And there are two main shareholders. They are the joint commercial bank, I don't know its exact name, where part of the shares are, and the company LogoVAZ. I am not the only shareholder there. There are other shareholders. And I took counsel on this issue with Mr Dubov, with Mr Patarkatsishvili [and] also... the former ORT General Director [Mr] Shabdurasulov."

Now, Mr Berezovsky seems to have said at the time that he took your advice on the subject of the teletrust. Is that wrong?

A. I think that this is wrong.

Q. I see. You don't think that you might have forgotten?

A. Well -- no, I don't think so.

Q. Surely you were being consulted because if the shares which Mr Berezovsky controlled in ORT were passed to this teletrust, that would include the 11 per cent that was held by Logovaz, wouldn't it?

A. Certainly.

Q. And you at that time were the deputy general director of Logovaz?

A. That's right.

Q. So it would be logical to consult you as a fellow shareholder in ORT, would it not?

A. No. I think that it will be -- this is not the case because I was only the deputy general director. All kind of formal arrangements that had to be done in relation to teletrust had to be done by the general director himself. He was the only person who could act on behalf of Logovaz without any power of attorney.

Q. Well, I understand that. But taking advice about the teletrust wasn't a formal act of Logovaz, was it?

A. Mr Sumption, Boris didn't need any advice in regard of ORT shares from me. I think that the only person from whom he actually needed advice was Badri.

Q. Well, I suggest to you that Mr Berezovsky must have consulted you or he would not, immediately afterwards, have said on TV6 that he did.

A. Mr Sumption, it's already 11 years ago but if he did consult with me, maybe I would remember about this.

I just don't remember. I don't think that it happened this way.

Q. There's no criticism; you might well have forgotten after 11 years.

A. Yes, certainly.

Q. Now, Mr Gorodilov will give evidence that in November 2000 he participated in detailed discussions with Mr Berezovsky's financial manager, Mr Fomichev, about the sale of the 49 per cent share in ORT to Mr Abramovich.

A. Mm-hm.

Q. Now, I'm telling you that just as part of the background to the next document I want to show you.

A. All right.

Q. In the course of those discussions a document called a reference sheet or a summary was prepared by Mr Gorodilov which outlined the way in which the transaction was expected to go through.

A. Okay.

Q. I'd like to ask you to look at that document: it's in H(A)23/71T.

A. I can close this one?

Q. No, you haven't got it. You can put away bundle H(A)21.

A. Right.

Q. Right. Could you please turn to page 71 in this document, which is the Russian original, but I will be working from 71T, which is the document immediately before it, which is the English translation. Use the English or the Russian version according to your preference.

A. Okay.

Q. Now, Mr Gorodilov says that this document was drawn up on 13 November 2000 and that date is confirmed by the metadata on the word processing file which shows that the file was created on that date and last modified on that date with an editing time of 31 minutes.

Now, I want you to look at this document, which appears fairly clearly to have been created on 13 November. It was prepared at a stage when it was understood that the price would be 100 million, before it was increased by agreement to 150 million.

What I want to draw your attention to is "Stage III" as described in the document. I'm looking at the English version but you can look at the Russian. "Stage III":

"LogoVAZ... sells its 11% of shares in ORT... at the nominal value (10,000 roubles per share) to a legal entity resident of the Republic of Russian Federation... which is established by one legal entity and is not an affiliate of Sibneft... The total amount of transaction is [1.1 million] roubles."

Okay? This suggests, does it not, that a price of 1.1 million rubles for the 11 per cent shareholding had been agreed by 13 November 2000?

A. Between whom, Mr Sumption?

Q. It had been agreed in the course of discussions about how the transaction was going to go through between Mr Gorodilov and Mr Fomichev.

A. Mr Sumption, I can't say that I haven't seen this summary before; I've seen it in the disclosure. But I have never seen it in the year 2000. I was never party to any discussions which Mr Gorodilov had with Mr Fomichev.

Q. I understand that you were not party to those discussions and that you would not have seen this document at the time. My reason for putting it to you is that you say something about the price of 1.1 million rubles at paragraph 115 of your witness statement D1/12/285.

A. The first one?

Q. Yes. Paragraph 115 of your witness statement: would you like just to remind yourself what you wrote.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, what you say is that there was a discussion between you and Mr Frolov -- who was the director general of Logovaz; is that right?

A. That's right.

Q. -- about what should be charged for the Logovaz
11 per cent shareholding.

A. That's right.

Q. There was a discussion about the tax implications and to overcome that, the legal department recommended that you should sell the shares for a nominal consideration of 1.1 million rubles and that was the price duly inserted in the contract.

A. That's right.

Q. Now, what I am suggesting to you is that in fact the price of 1.1 million rubles had been fixed at least six weeks before this, in mid-November.

A. Mr Sumption, as I already said before, I was not party to any discussions that Mr Fomichev could or couldn't have with Mr Gorodilov. As far as I understand, Mr Abramovich was -- also was not a party to these discussions.

Q. That is correct.

A. What prompted my exchange with Mr Frolov on 24 December 2000 was that I got a phone call from Mr Abramovich saying that he wants me to sell ORT shares to Sibneft and when I asked how much he is prepared to pay for it, he said, "I'm paying nothing". This is why

I had to discuss it with Mr Frolov, who was absolutely outraged at this, and then we had to call the head of our legal department to ask what could happen if the deal will go on as Mr Abramovich suggested.

Q. The point is that it had always been agreed between the respective financial managers of Mr Abramovich and Mr Berezovsky that a nominal price of 1.1 million rubles would be paid for the Logovaz 11 per cent.

A. Mr Sumption, let's agree on something: I don't know what was discussed or agreed between financial managers. I know that Mr Fomichev was -- had no authority to decide anything on behalf of Logovaz. At that time we have been very friendly with Mr Fomichev and actually I loved him at that time very much, I considered him as being my friend, but he had no authority for Logovaz at all. Logovaz had its own general director and even myself, being his deputy, never interfered with his responsibilities.

What actually happened, if what you are suggesting is right and if these discussions have been under way for some time, is that neither Roman nor myself have been informed that there is some agreed price on these shares. What I know is that Roman called me on 24 December and said that he is buying ORT shares from Logovaz and he's paying nothing, and that was it.

Q. Mr Dubov, Mr Fomichev clearly did not have authority but Mr Berezovsky had a decisive voice in the affairs of Logovaz, did he not?

A. Up to a certain degree, yes.

Q. And Mr Berezovsky was Mr Fomichev's boss, wasn't he?

A. Mr Sumption, Mr Berezovsky was also my friend, and still is. It was very easy for Boris just to take a phone, to call me and say, "This is what we agreed on, this is what we disagreed and this is what I want you to do". It was absolutely unnecessary to introduce an intermediary, however respected Mr Fomichev is, between Boris and me; no reason at all. The only person who could act as intermediary between Boris and me was Badri.

Q. I'm not suggesting that Mr Fomichev acted as an intermediary between Mr Berezovsky and you; what I am suggesting is that Mr Berezovsky, once the agreement had been made between his subordinates and those of Mr Abramovich, then took the step of giving you instructions to act accordingly.

A. Excuse me? Maybe I missed something. I have to answer this?

Q. I am not suggesting to you that Mr Fomichev acted as an intermediary between Mr Berezovsky and you; I am simply suggesting that Mr Berezovsky contacted you directly when Mr Fomichev had agreed on his behalf something with Mr Abramovich's staff.

A. Well, Mr Berezovsky didn't contact me directly.

Q. What I suggest, Mr Dubov, is that the 1.1 million rubles price did not originate with the legal department of Logovaz and was not devised at the end of December, as you suggest.

A. Well, Mr Sumption, this is my story. I have great respect for you, you can suggest whatever you like, but this is my story: this is what happened on 24 December 2000.

And may I add something? Because I've been looking through the disclosure provided by your client. As far as I recall, on 27 December there was a letter from Mr Gorenichy to Mr Frolov.

Q. I'm going to come to that.

A. Okay. Right.

Q. Now, was it the practice at Logovaz, as in many other companies, that sometimes board decisions were reached by telephone, without of an actual face-to-face meeting, and then minuted? Did that happen sometimes?

A. I know that -- it's a long time ago, Mr Sumption. I'm afraid that I cannot remember the exact articles of Logovaz charter. I think that we have some provision that shareholders' meeting could be done just by telephone.

Q. And what about directors' meetings?

A. I think that the directors' meetings should be done in person.

Q. Could you please --

A. I could be mistaken about this, but this is my recollection.

Q. Could you please be given bundle H(A)23/193. Just give me a moment. (Pause)

On that last point, was there a face-to-face meeting of the directors at the end of December, immediately before the agreement to sell the 11 per cent was actually signed?

A. No, there was not.

Q. Was it a board matter whether those things should be sold?

A. Well, maybe I have to explain something about the way in which the decisions have been made in Logovaz. It was agreed, and I think it was before my time, that all important decisions made by the management of Logovaz have to be approved by the shareholders, just because if you look, for example, at the list of the directors here, you will see that out of seven board members, five obviously represent Boris's and Badri's interests.

So it was decided, before my time, as I said, that the most -- that the important decisions of the management have to be approved by the shareholders. And usually when we had in mind some kind of a business deal in which we were going to enter, it all started with at first myself and then with Mr Frolov calling the shareholders and asking their opinion on this point.

If it was necessary according to the -- to Logovaz charter to have the formal approval of the board, then there was a board meeting which made the -- which approved or disapproved the deal. Well, actually, if the deal was to be disapproved, there was no need to collect the directors together.

Q. Could you please look at page 193R, which is the Russian version of the document that you probably have open in the English translation H(A)23/193R.

A. Mm-hm.

Q. Now, this is a document disclosed by Mr Berezovsky and it's a board minute of Logovaz dated November 2000 and it records a board decision to sell, on your proposal, the company's holding in ORT at 1.1 million rubles. Do you see that?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. Now, what you say about this document in your second witness statement, paragraph 20, is that, as I understand it, it does record the decision of the board but has been backdated.

A. That's right.

Q. Now, when do you say that this document was actually prepared?

A. I think it was prepared in late December or maybe the first days of January, but I think it was late December.

Q. Why do you say that it was backdated?

A. Because it couldn't happen in November.

Q. So it's because you don't remember it happening in November that you think it must have been backdated?

A. No, Mr Sumption, this is not what I'm saying.

Q. No?

A. I'm saying that it couldn't have happened in November.

Q. What reason could there have been to backdate a Logovaz board minute recording this sale to the previous month?

A. Well, it's rather difficult for me to answer this question --

Q. Yes.

A. -- just because I think that the negotiations about the paper trail to -- the paper trail to the deal had been discussed with Mr Frolov, not with me. After the first and the second phone discussions with Mr Abramovich, I distanced myself from this deal. But I think that this is what was requested from Mr Frolov and we've been trying to understand at what time in November Badri was still in Moscow. This could explain the reason why no date is put in here.

Q. What is the stamp that we see on the Russian text of this document at page 193R?

A. There are two stamps.

Q. Right.

A. One is Logovaz --

Q. The one on the right side of the page.

A. It's the General Prosecutor Office.

Q. Right. And what is the other stamp?

A. And the first stamp, to the left, is stamp of Logovaz; and stamp to the right is the stamp from the General Prosecutor Office.

Q. Right.

Well now, the stamp from Logovaz, does that indicate that this document came from the records of Logovaz?

A. Yes, certainly.

Q. Now, I ask the question again: why should a board minute prepared at the end of December, recording a decision made at the end of December, have been backdated to November?

A. Well, I have, unfortunately, two answers to one question. The first answer is that there was no board meeting either in November or in December at all.

Why it was backdated? I think that I already explained. We've been trying -- Badri was not in Russia in December at all. We've been trying to establish some date in which Badri was in Russia in November but obviously we were not successful with this.

Mr Sumption, try and understand: all this is completely against the rules which are given in Logovaz charter. I don't mean to say that Logovaz has been backdating its documents on every occasion but this was not an ordinary business transaction; in fact it was not an business transaction at all. By selling ORT shares we've been paying a ransom for Nikolai, and there are no rules about paying ransom in anyone's charter.

- Q. That doesn't explain why it's necessary to say that the transaction has been approved in November if it's actually been approved in December, does it?
- A. Mr Sumption, I have a very simple answer to this question: Badri was not in Russia in December. There was no opportunity for Badri to sign this document in December at all.
- Q. And that may be one of the reasons why it was actually signed in November.
- A. It was not signed in November. It couldn't happen before Roman called me.
- Q. Do you have any reason for saying that this document was backdated other than that otherwise it would be inconsistent with your evidence?

A. It's inconsistent -- it's absolutely inconsistent not just with my evidence but with what I remember about the events of December 2000.

Q. In other words, it's inconsistent with your evidence.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, that's comment.

A. Okay, then we put it this way.

MR SUMPTION: And you have no other reason, do you -- do you have any other reason apart from that for saying it must have been backdated?

A. No, I have only one reason.

Q. Now, at paragraph 113 of your first witness statement D1/12/285 you give evidence -- and you've referred to this already -- about telephone conversations that you say occurred on 24 December.

A. That's right.

Q. Do you claim to remember that date or are you relying on some document to tell you that these conversations occurred on 24 December?

A. No. I remember this date.

Q. How do you remember the date all these years later?

A. It's very simple: because on 24 December it was Nikolai's birthday. And call from Roman and subsequent discussion with Boris, who said me -- who told me that this is payment for Nikolai's freedom, coming on Nikolai's birthday, couldn't be unnoticed.

Q. Where did you understand Mr Berezovsky to be ringing you from when he had the telephone conversation that you describe at paragraph 114?

A. This is not a simple question, Mr Sumption, because I was trying to remember how actually this telephone exchange happened. I know that Boris called me but I also have recollection of trying to get him on phone. Obviously I wasn't successful because I remember that Boris called me. I don't know where he was.

Q. Well, he was actually in the United States.

A. Quite possible.

Q. And Mr Abramovich was in Chukotka on 24 December.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, in fact Mr Abramovich did ring you, but it was on 27 December and not on the 24th, wasn't it?

A. Mr Sumption, Mr Abramovich called me on 24 December shortly after 9 o'clock Moscow time, because I was in my office at 9 o'clock.

Q. Mr Abramovich rang you on the 27th and asked you to arrange the transfer of the Logovaz shares in ORT and he told you, did he not, that Mr Gorodilov would be contacting you with the details and with documents for signature? That is what happened, isn't it?

A. No, this is not what happened because if you have a look at the sale agreement, it is dated on 25 December.

Q. But it wasn't executed until several days after that, was it?

A. "Executed", what do you mean?

Q. Signed.

A. It was signed by Mr Frolov on 25 December -- no, Mr Sumption, I'm sorry, you are quite right about this. It was signed several days later.

Q. Indeed.

A. But on 25 December this sale agreement was already with Mr Frolov and he was already studying it.

Q. Mr Dubov, the reason why you put 24 December as the date of these telephone conversations is that when you wrote your first witness statement you thought that the sale agreement for the 11 per cent had been signed on 25 December, which is the date that is on it; that's why you appointed 24 December as the date --

A. Mr Sumption, you are suggesting an alternative version to the events that happened. You have your version; I have my own.

I am explaining why I put 24 December: because it was Nikolai's birthday. Of course, I can tell you quite a story of what I thought at that time, why it happened on exactly the same day when it was Nikolai's birthday, why it couldn't happen before, but I don't think that it's of much interest for this court. But I remember this day because it was Nikolai's birthday.

Q. Now, in fact -- and I think you mentioned this a moment ago -- it was Mr Gorenichy, was it not, who contacted Mr Frolov directly with the details and documents relating to the sale of the 11 per cent? Do you agree?

A. Mr Sumption, I have great respect for Mr Frolov: he is my very good friend and he is my comrade of old standing. But when we actually changed our positions in Logovaz in autumn 1999, nobody knew about it. For a very long time, even in the year 2000 and 2001, people still kept thinking that I was the general director of Logovaz. I don't know why. But anyway, that was the kind of wrong common knowledge.

Mr Gorenichy could call Mr Frolov only after I told Roman that I'm not the general director anymore. Even Roman didn't know that at that time, on 24 December. He thought that I was in charge.

Q. Now, Mr Gorenichy, was he the head of the Sibneft legal department? You don't know?

A. Possibly. I never met him.

Q. Okay. Would you please have a look at H(A)26/118T, which somebody will bring to you.

A. And 23 can be taken back?

Q. Yes, it can.

You will find the Russian version of this on page 118 and the English translation is on the coloured sheet immediately before it.

A. Mm-hm.

Q. This is a letter from Mr Gorenichy and it's addressed, isn't it, to Mr Frolov?

A. That's right.

Q. He is "Yevgeny Patrikeyevich" at the top?

A. Absolutely.

Q. What he says is that:

"On the instructions of [Mr] Gorodilov and with the approval of [Mr] Fomichev I ask that you sign the share sales and purchase agreements and the transfer orders.

"Since the execution of the transaction is scheduled for 28 [December], please sign the power of attorney...

"Please send one copy of the sales and purchase agreement, the transfer order and the power of attorney for A Tuzhilin immediately to... Sibneft..."

And the address is then given and he gives Mr Frolov a telephone number in case there's any difficulty.

Now, did you see this letter when it reached Mr Frolov?

A. No.

Q. You did not.

Now, what I suggest is that you were telephoned by Mr Abramovich on the 27th; he told you to expect Mr Gorodilov to be in contact with the details; Mr Gorodilov then arranged for Mr Gorenichy to do it, and he contacted Mr Frolov directly because you had said he was the man to contact.

Do you agree or not?

A. Well, I agree with most of what you have said, but let's start with the 24 December. The call from Roman came on 24 December.

Q. Have you finished?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, on paragraph 117 of your witness statement D1/12/286 you say that on 28 December you took the documents to Sibneft and presented them to Mr Abramovich in person.

A. That's right.

Q. Now, what were you, the deputy general director of Logovaz, doing performing in person the menial function of acting as a delivery boy of these documents to Sibneft?

A. Mr Sumption, you can't be serious about this. It was not a menial of function of delivery boy. I wanted to see Roman and I wanted to ask him when Nikolai is going to be released. Do you recall it the menial function of a delivery boy? I was the only one who could put these questions to Mr Abramovich.

Q. You never saw Abramovich on 28 December, nor did he say to you, as you allege, that Mr Glushkov would be released as soon as the transfers were delivered.

A. Mr Sumption, are you suggesting that I'm lying in my witness statement?

Q. I'm telling you that you are mistaken.

A. No, I am not mistaken. I called Roman on the morning, 28th maybe -- I don't remember was it 28th or 29th -- I called Roman and I told him that I want to see him and he asked me to take with me a copy of my book to sign it for Mr Shvidler. And I came to Sibneft, I gave the signed copy to Mr Shvidler and then I saw Roman. I showed him -- I gave him the share transfer instruction and I asked him when Nikolai is going to be released.

Q. Now, were you aware when you made your witness statement that Mr Berezovsky was alleging that he had had a meeting at Cap d'Antibes shortly before Christmas with Mr Abramovich?

A. No.

Q. You were not aware of that?

A. Absolutely.

Q. Because I've given you one reason why I suggest that the date appointed was the 24th in your witness statement:

namely you thought that was the date of the agreement. The other reason was that this particular date had to fit in with Mr Berezovsky's evidence about the date of the meeting at Cap d'Antibes, didn't it?

A. Mr Sumption, believe it or not, but the first time I heard about the meeting at Cap d'Antibes was maybe -- was not earlier than 2004; maybe even later.

Q. And you have also, have you not, sought to fit in your evidence with that of Mr -- sorry, you say you learnt about it in 2004?

A. Yes.

Q. So you did know about it at the time you prepared your witness statement?

A. Of course I did.

Q. I see. I'm sorry, I misunderstood your earlier answer.

At the time you prepared your witness statement you realised that Mr Berezovsky was saying that he'd had a meeting with Mr Abramovich shortly before Christmas?

A. I knew that they met at Cap d'Antibes at that time, certainly I did, but I didn't tie up my witness statement with what Mr Berezovsky was going to say in his witness statements or in his pleadings or wherever.

Q. I see.

A. Are you suggesting that I was just fitting in my evidence with what Mr Berezovsky was going to say?

Q. Indeed I am.

A. That's -- I'm afraid that this is not completely correct, Mr Sumption.

Q. You had been working on this case for a period of four years after your arrival in England and there was no way that you were going to say in your witness statement something that was inconsistent with what Mr Berezovsky was saying in his, was there?

A. I don't know; I never went into any comparison of what I am saying in my witness statement and what Boris is saying in his witness statement. I think that we just put these witness statements together and try to analyse it. There may be some inconsistencies. Where we are saying about the same events, I think that on most occasions we coincide.

Q. And the same applies, does it not, to the evidence that you give at paragraph 129 of your witness statement D1/12/189, when you say that Mr Berezovsky told you in 2004 that it was necessary to wait until Mr Glushkov was out of Russia before suing?

A. Yes.

Q. That's another statement that you have made in order to corroborate what you know to be Mr Berezovsky's case, isn't it?

A. This is what Mr Berezovsky told me. I am not corroborating anything; I am just repeating his words.

This what I was told by Boris.

Mr Sumption, I'm not lying here. I'm giving this evidence to the best of my recollection. It's not my task to whitewash Boris or whoever else.

Q. I understand that, Mr Dubov.

A. That's right. Thank you very much.

Q. But when you drew your own witness statement up, you allowed yourself to be guided by what other people recalled about the chronology, in particular by what Mr Berezovsky recalled about the chronology. When remembering, in other words, what the dates were, you were influenced by what other people had said about the timing. That's right, isn't it?

A. Mr --

Q. It's perfectly natural.

A. Mr Sumption, first of all it's completely wrong. And the second point that I would like to make: this is the first time we met. I am not the person who is easily guided by anyone.

Q. Mr Dubov, are you trying to suggest that you drew up your witness statement and Mr Berezovsky drew up his in completely independent compartments, each of you ignorant of what the other had said about the timing of events?

A. Well, I know that Boris drew his witness statement without even reading mine. I'm not sure that he read my witness statement before. I certainly have seen drafts of his witness statement.

Q. When you drew up your own?

A. Before I drew my own.

Q. Yes.

A. That's true. I also seen drafts of Badri's witness statement.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, I have, I suspect, about 10 or 15 minutes more. Would your Ladyship prefer me to deal with that now or tomorrow?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I think tomorrow. Only I've got a telephone meeting at 4.30.

THE WITNESS: My Lady, may I just take 30 seconds?

Mr Sumption, just about this correspondence with Mr Gorenichy, just to be sure that we're not cherry-picking here, there was another letter from Mr Gorenichy to Mr Frolov. Do you have it? I think it came around this date.

MR SUMPTION: Are you pointing to a document in the bundle or are you remembering another?

A. I'm remembering.

Q. Right.

A. Because I've seen it in disclosure. It's dated around 27th or maybe 26th, in which Mr Gorenichy is saying, "I'm sorry, Mr Frolov, we're sending you the sale agreement with the right amount of money we are going to pay for ORT shares". If everything was agreed in November and if there were a board meeting of Logovaz, and on both occasions the sum of 1,100,000 rubles have been approved, what kind of wrong amount for Logovaz shares -- for ORT shares could be in the first draft of the sale agreement?

MR SUMPTION: We will look and see if we can find such a letter overnight.

THE WITNESS: Yes, please. I've seen it.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right.

Now, Mr Dubov, you mustn't talk about your evidence or the case with anybody overnight. You understand?

THE WITNESS: Absolutely.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, can I just mention that we have not yet received the agreements relating to the 1 per cent in relation to either Ms Nosova or Mr Lindley, and Ms Nosova is due to give evidence tomorrow. Can I assume that we will receive it promptly?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Rabinowitz, what's the position on that?

MR RABINOWITZ: I'm told that we have just got them and we will send them as soon as possible.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, that better be before close of business this evening.

MR RABINOWITZ: I can tell your Ladyship that we're moving as fast as we can on this. It's not entirely within our control. But as soon as we are able, we will send them to Mr Sumption, and I hope that is very soon. I'm not sure I can take it any further.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Otherwise there may have to be a delay in the cross-examination.

I've got a point to raise and it's this:

Mr Rabinowitz, the application that you made -- or Mr Gillis actually made -- in relation to cross-examining the border control officers, where have we got to on that?

MR RABINOWITZ: Can I leave that to Mr Gillis, please?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, certainly. Mr Gillis.

MR GILLIS: My Lady, we've received a reply from the border control officials indicating that they're not in a position to provide us information as to the mechanism for gathering information or providing information in relation to the stamps. There are one or two enquiries which we're still in the process of making which we hope we'll be able to resolve in the next day or so and then be able to report back on whether we are continuing with our application.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Pursuing your application. Well, I've read the House of Lords case: it puts a slightly different perspective on it, I think.

MR GILLIS: Well, if we need to address that, we can. We think that in actual fact the House of Lords didn't disagree with what Lord Justice Thomas was saying, but we can debate that if necessary.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, I'll need to have submissions on that because what will obviously affect my discretion is what are the consequences if I were to make such an order. That's what I'm interested in.

MR GILLIS: Indeed so.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: If it's a question of weight, it's a question of weight; but if it has some impact on the consequences then I need to know precisely what the position is before I exercise my discretion. Right.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, we're not entirely happy with that summary of the letter. The position is that the letter that has been received --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Sorry, the summary of the --

MR SUMPTION: The letter in response to the enquiries made of the Border Guard Service.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right.

MR SUMPTION: The position appears to be that the records of the Border Guard Service about entry and departure from Russia are automatically generated by the process of swiping the passport through an automatic reader. So it's not an exercise that involves a human agency. The passport is stamped and on the occasion when it is stamped it is put through a reader which automatically records the entry and departure, as the case may be, and that is the record which the border guard uses to answer questions like the ones which my learned friends are concerned with.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, maybe I'll have to look at what information you have been provided with.

Very well. Is everybody happy with a 10.15 start?

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I assume that if anybody wants an earlier or a later start, they will let me know.

Who, apart from this witness, do we have tomorrow then?

MR RABINOWITZ: We have Dr Nosova, my Lady.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. And she'll be all day?

MR RABINOWITZ: I understand she'll be all day.

MR SUMPTION: Just Dr Nosova? What about Mr Voronoff and Mr Goldfarb?

MR RABINOWITZ: I thought that my learned friend was going to be most of the day with Dr Nosova. If he wants another witness --

MR SUMPTION: No, I'm not. I shall be relatively brief with Dr Nosova: I think I shall probably be about an hour to an hour and a half.

MR RABINOWITZ: We have Mr Voronoff who will be here tomorrow.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Can you just, Mr Rabinowitz --

MR SUMPTION: We can sort this out between ourselves.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, I think I'd like to know so I can refresh my memory of the witness statements.

MR RABINOWITZ: If my learned friend can take them, we have Dr Nosova, then we will have Mr Voronoff and then we will have Mr Goldfarb.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr...?

MR RABINOWITZ: Goldfarb.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, thank you.

MR SUMPTION: I understand that if we go short, after those three there are no other witnesses that are currently available to give evidence tomorrow. Is that correct?

MR RABINOWITZ: That's my understanding.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right, very well. 10.15 then.

(Proceedings delayed)

(10.21 am)

MR YULI DUBOV

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I'm sorry I kept you waiting, I had another matter to attend to.

Yes, you're still on your oath.

THE WITNESS: Yes, I am.

Cross-examination by MR SUMPTION (continued)

MR SUMPTION: Mr Dubov, towards the end of your evidence yesterday you referred to another letter from Mr Gorenichy about which you had a point to make and I think you were referring, if somebody could give you bundle H(A)26, to page 149 H(A)26/149.

Have you got that?

A. Yes.

Q. Is this the letter you were referring to?

A. This exactly the letter that I was referring to.

Q. And what was the point you wanted to make about it?

A. Well, this letter is dated 28 December --

Q. Yes.

A. -- year 2000.

Q. Yes.

A. And here Mr Gorenichy obviously saying that he is:

"... sending... the share sales and purchase agreement, in which the amount of the transaction has been corrected..."

Q. Yes.

A. If the amount of the transaction has been agreed between all parties in November, as obviously is alleged in the evidence produced by your client, what this correction to the amount actually means?

Q. Are you suggesting that the decision within Logovaz to make it 1.1 million rubles was taken between the arrival of the original documents and the 28th, the following day?

A. Yes. The agreement in Logovaz that the price for the shares will be 1,100,000 rubles was made on 24 December, not before.

Q. Right. So since the first version, the uncorrected version of these documents arrived on the 27th, there's no reason to suppose that this correction was in fact attributable to a decision within Logovaz about the price, is there?

A. Mr Sumption, after so many years, nobody knows exactly what happened. But my belief is that there have been some drafts of the agreements -- of the agreement which have been travelling between Sibneft offices and Logovaz, starting from 24 December at the earliest, and 28 December when everything was signed by Mr Frolov. Unfortunately I don't have the earlier drafts of the agreement.

Q. You don't even know whether there were any before the 27th, do you?

A. What I actually do know is that on 24 December I was told that the shares will be given to Mr Abramovich for free.

Q. Well, I'm asking you about earlier drafts. You don't know whether there were any earlier drafts before the one received on the 27th, do you?

A. I don't. This is my conclusion from what I see in this letter.

Q. The correction referred to in that letter was simply a correction of a typographical error. What had happened was that in the original version on the 27th, the figure of 1.1 million rubles, the third digit, which should have been a zero, had been erroneously expressed as a 1, which I understand represented a difference of about $450 at the then exchange rate. That's all that there was to it.

A. I don't know anything about this.

Q. No, you don't.

My Lady, that document is not in the bundle yet but we will be adding it to the bundle and giving your Ladyship a reference as soon as we can.

Now, I'd like to turn to another aspect of your evidence, please, Mr Dubov. You say at paragraph 94 of your witness statement D1/12/281 that --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Is that the first one?

MR SUMPTION: I think at paragraph 94 you're talking about --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Is that the first witness statement?

MR SUMPTION: Yes, it is. In your first witness statement I think you need to start at 93.

Am I right in assuming that 93 and 94 are both concerned with a conversation that you had with Mr Patarkatsishvili in September 1999? Is that correct?

A. Could be, but I don't have my witness statement before me unfortunately.

Q. I'm sorry. Can you please be given your witness statement.

A. Can I take this away?

Q. Yes, you can. Bundle D1.

A. Yes.

Q. In paragraph 94 are you talking about a conversation that you had with Mr Patarkatsishvili in September 1999, see the beginning of the previous paragraph?

A. I do.

Q. So, as I understand it, you say that Mr Patarkatsishvili told you in September 1999 that he and Mr Berezovsky already had investments in the aluminium industry.

A. Or the words to this effect.

Q. Yes, I see. Mr Berezovsky's own evidence is that he and Mr Patarkatsishvili had never considered investing in the aluminium industry until Mr Bosov approached them in late 1999 with a proposal to buy the Bratsk and Krasnoyarsk plants. Are you aware of that?

A. Yes, I heard Boris's evidence.

Q. Well, he didn't actually say that in his oral evidence; he said it in his witness statement. The reference for the transcript is fourth witness statement, paragraph 254 D2/17/249.

A. Could be.

Q. Well now, if Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili had never considered investing in the aluminium industry until Mr Bosov approached them at the end of 1994, Mr Patarkatsishvili cannot have said this to you in September 1999, can he, unless he was for some reason trying to mislead you?

A. I know nothing about this. This is what I was told by Badri.

Q. Yes. What I would suggest to you is that this is one of a number of occasions in your witness statement when you say that you learnt something at a particular date and you can't actually remember when it was.

A. Yes. This is true. Sometimes I remember the date, sometimes I don't.

Q. And you don't remember the date on this occasion, I would suggest.

A. There is nothing to tie me to a specific date.

Q. Now, you give evidence at a number of points in the latter part of your witness statement about Mr Abramovich's political influence.

A. Mm-hm.

Q. Between paragraphs 87 and 90 D1/12/279 you say that Mr Abramovich asked you in February 1999 -- he telephoned you, you say, and asked you to come to his office in Sibneft and then he took you to the Kremlin so that you could be shown a search warrant to search the offices of Logovaz.

That's in summary what you're saying, isn't it?

A. No, it is not.

Q. Right. What do you --

A. I was never shown a search warrant. What Mr Sechin actually showed me was a handwritten note, I --

Q. Saying that there would be a search warrant?

A. -- I think that it was pencilled, not pen, to read and then he took it away.

Q. Right. What you say he showed you was a piece of paper which said that the Prosecutor General's Office had issued a warrant to search the office of Logovaz?

A. That's right.

Q. Now, that would have been, would it not, during the presidency of President Yeltsin?

A. That's right.

Q. Now, can you think of any reason why if Mr Abramovich had advance notice of this raid, which seems to be the suggestion, he should have taken you to the Kremlin to learn about it instead of telling you directly?

A. I never had any direct knowledge of what Mr Abramovich knew at that time.

Q. Are you aware that you cannot just turn up at the Kremlin and speak to senior members of the presidential administration; you need passes which have to be arranged some time in advance?

A. Mr Sumption, when you are saying "some time in advance", what actually do you mean? Is 15 minutes enough?

Q. Enough for what?

A. For issuing a pass.

Q. No.

A. Ah. You're sure about this?

Q. Mr Abramovich would have no way of knowing whether you were available on this day or not, would he, if he just rang you up before the journey?

- A. Well, first of all, it was common knowledge that most of my time I spent in Moscow. And he didn't call me on the landline; he called me on my mobile.
- Q. His evidence is that this incident never happened.
- A. Mr Sumption, I am very much adverse to saying that Mr Abramovich is not telling truth, but since you actually are making me to do it: yes, he is not telling the truth here.
- Q. What did you understand to be the purpose of this visit to the Kremlin?
- A. The purpose, as I understood at that time, is that the purpose of this visit to the Kremlin was that this information should go to me directly from Mr Putin, through Mr Sechin.
- Q. Now, you say at a later point in your witness statement that Mr Aminov had told you in around 2001 that Mr Abramovich had assisted in the selection of members of Mr Putin's government, including the public prosecutor, Mr Ustinov, the minister of nuclear energy, Mr Adamov, and the minister of transport, Mr Aksonyenko. That's, I think, a fair summary of your evidence.
- A. Could you please refer me to the paragraph?
- Q. 131 to 133 D1/12/289.
- A. 131?
- Q. Yes. The names that I've just referred you to are in paragraph 133.

A. Mm-hm.

Q. Can you not remember it without reminding yourself from your witness statement, Mr Dubov?

A. I'm just checking whether Mr Aminov told me anything about Mr Adamov and Mr Aksonyenko.

Q. Right.

A. And I hear from the paragraph 133 that Mr Aminov never told me anything like this.

Q. I see. This is simply your belief; is that right?

A. No, it's not my belief; it was common knowledge in Russia at that time.

Q. So --

A. Most of this information I received from mass media and also from people who were well informed about what was going on in and around Kremlin.

Q. I see.

A. Mr Sumption, let me say something. I would like just to explain the situation here, maybe it will help.

I understand, if we are to be objective, that all my evidence on this point is hearsay because I couldn't have any direct knowledge of this.

Q. No.

A. I got this information mainly from the mass media, from my sources in the governmental structures and from

Mr Aminov.

Q. I see.

A. But all this is hearsay because --

Q. But --

A. Just one second, if I may.

Q. Yes.

A. It's very difficult to obtain any direct proof of Mr Abramovich's influence during the time of President Putin and before. There are no signed papers saying, "I, Roman I, hereby appoint the below-mentioned to be my faithful and loyal general prosecutor". There are no such documents and they cannot exist. But I think that certain implications and certain conclusions about Roman's role in the Putin's government could be obtained from your client's evidence and it's much more convincing than what I am saying here.

Q. Well, let's wait until he gives that evidence. What I'm concerned with, Mr Dubov, is exactly which part of these paragraphs you attribute to Mr Aminov and which parts are due to gossip. I'm not going to question you on what you may have deduced from newspaper reports and chats around Moscow.

Am I right in thinking, from your last answers, that what you understood from Mr Aminov was simply what we see in the first sentence of paragraph 133; the rest of it is your inference from press reports and the like?

A. No, I think that it starts with the second sentence in the paragraph 132:

"I heard about Mr Aminov's and Roman's roles in the appointment of governmental officials from Mr Aminov himself. I recall him telling me about it in around 2001."

Q. But what appears after the first sentence in paragraph 133 is not something that you heard from Mr Aminov; is that right?

A. If you mean Mr Ustinov, Mr Adamov and Mr Aksonyenko, then you are right, Mr Sumption.

Q. Yes.

A. It's not something that I heard from Mr Aminov. To be precise, I heard from Mr Aminov another names, but I wouldn't like to put him -- to put these names into my witness statement.

Q. The two ministers whom you refer to, Mr Adamov and Mr Aksonyenko, had in fact already been appointed by Boris Yeltsin before that, hadn't they?

A. That's right.

Q. And they were simply left in place?

A. They had been simply left in place. This is the point, Mr Sumption.

Q. Now, one last question, Mr Dubov.

We understand that you have declined to produce a copy of the statement which you served in support of Mr Glushkov's asylum application. Is that correct?

A. Well, I don't have it.

Q. You don't have it?

A. I don't have it.

Q. Right. Well, I will check that. I'm told that what we have been told by Addleshaws is that you were not willing to provide it. But you say that you couldn't provide it anyway?

A. Just one second. First of all, I don't have it; I cannot provide it even if I wanted to.

Q. Right.

A. And, yes, I'm very reluctant to provide this witness statement.

Q. Why is that?

A. Just because it contains -- first of all, when I was giving this witness statement I was told that the hearings on Mr Glushkov's asylum case will be held in camera and that whatever is said will never be made public. This is why I put into my witness statement a number of my personal details which I would be very, very reluctant to made public -- to be made public. I don't remember what these details were or where they were in my witness statement, but I thought and I still think that it's important for my personal security.

Q. The solicitors, Ghersons, who acted in Mr Glushkov's asylum application, they would have a copy of your statement?

A. I don't know.

Q. Are you willing to allow them to disclose your statement on a basis which redacted personal details relating to you?

A. If this redaction will not -- first of all I would like to have a look at this. If -- I think that if the redaction is satisfactory for me, then why not?

MR SUMPTION: Right. Well, we will pursue that with Addleshaws and Gherson.

Thank you very much, Mr Dubov.

MR MALEK: No questions.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Anyone else?

MR ADKIN: My Lady, I just have one.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right.

MR ADKIN: Other than formally adopting the lines of cross-examination taken by my learned friend.

Cross-examination by MR ADKIN

MR ADKIN: Mr Dubov, could you take up, please, your witness statement and turn to paragraph 160 of it D1/12/295.

Do you have that?

A. 160?

Q. 160 on page 295.

A. Yes.

Q. Here you're talking about a car journey that you say you took in January 2008. You say that:

"... Nikolay..."

That's Mr Glushkov, isn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. "... explained to Michelle..."

That's Michelle Duncan, isn't it?

"... that Badri had decided that he wanted to sue [Mr] Deripaska in relation to Rusal [and] also said that Badri was thinking about joining Boris in his claim against Roman."

Yes?

A. That's right.

Q. Can you take up bundle D2 and turn to tab 13, please. If you would turn, please, to page 52 of that document, you'll see that this is Mr Glushkov's own statement in these proceedings D2/13/52.

A. 52?

Q. Page 52, please, at paragraph 252, and I wonder if you would read, please, that paragraph.

A. I've read it.

MR ADKIN: Just hold on for a moment.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Your microphone is not connected so it's difficult to hear.

MR ADKIN: Right. I will finish this if I may, my Lady, and speak as loudly as I can manage.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you.

MR ADKIN: I only have one further thing to say, which is:

in light of that paragraph, Mr Dubov, I suggest that the evidence that I've referred you to in your own witness statement is mistaken.

A. Mr Adkin, I don't see why. Could you please explain?

Q. Well, because Mr Glushkov, you see, in his statement says that as far as he was concerned, "Badri continued to attempt to negotiate the position"; and indeed, on the day before Badri died, he said that he was arranging a meeting with Mr Abramovich to discuss the issues.

That's not consistent, is it, with Badri having decided to sue Mr Abramovich?

A. I think that is absolutely consistent. What Badri decided three weeks before is absolutely consistent with what he was thinking in February. I was not party to this lunch at a Spanish restaurant. But if he decided in January to sue Mr Deripaska and to join Boris in his claim against Roman Abramovich, I don't think that it could seriously influence his decision to have one last meeting with Roman.

MR ADKIN: My Lady, I have no further questions.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you very much. Yes?

MR RABINOWITZ: I have no questions for Mr Dubov.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you very much indeed for coming along.

THE WITNESS: Thank you.

(The witness withdrew)

MR RABINOWITZ: Up next we have Dr Nosova, my Lady.

DR NATALIA NOSOVA (sworn)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Please sit down if you would like to.

THE WITNESS: Thank you.

Examination-in-chief by MR RABINOWITZ

MR RABINOWITZ: Good morning, Dr Nosova.

Dr Nosova, before we begin, can I ask you to confirm that you don't have any mobile phone or any other electronic means of communication?

A. I don't have it.

Q. You don't have to stand.

Dr Nosova, your statements, as I understand it, have been reprinted in large A3 type in order to assist you to read them. Is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. My Lady, I've mentioned this to my learned friends.

They have just been printed; they are unmarked.

Can Dr Nosova be shown her statements.

The position is, is it, that in relation to any other documents that you're asked to look at, you will look at them on the screen enlarged --

A. Yes.

Q. -- so that you can see them.

Now, Dr Nosova, can I ask that you first take up the document entitled "Witness Statement of Natalia Nosova". My Lady, for the transcript, the trial bundle reference to that is bundle D1, tab 9 D1/09/112.

A. This one (indicates)?

Q. That's the one, thank you.

A. Mm-hm.

Q. Dr Nosova, can you go to page 72, please, of that statement? It's bundle reference page 184 D1/09/184.

A. Mm-hm.

Q. Can you confirm that that is your signature?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. Can I now ask you to go to page 1 of that statement.

You see in the right-hand corner it's marked your first witness statement, top right-hand corner? Right at the top.

A. First, yes.

Q. Now, in fact it's your second witness statement in these proceedings, isn't it --

A. Yes, it is.

Q. -- because you made one in the context of the strike-out application?

A. Mm-hm.

Q. So can you please confirm that this is your second witness statement in these proceedings?

A. Yes, it is. It is my second witness statement.

Q. Thank you.

I understand there are two corrections that you want to make to this statement. You may not have this: it's an enlarged copy of the note. (Handed)

Does your Ladyship have a copy of the corrections Dr Nosova wishes to make?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, I don't.

MR RABINOWITZ: Can I just hand this up. (Handed)

THE WITNESS: If we need to look at some document, can we find it here? (Consults interpreter)

MR RABINOWITZ: Dr Nosova, can I ask you to go to paragraph 228; it's page 43 of this statement D1/09/155.

A. Yes.

Q. And do have a look at paragraph 228 but is it right that the correction you want to make to paragraph 228 is shown at point 1 of the document showing the corrections?

A. Yes.

Q. The replacement of the word "happened" with "what was happening" in the first sentence?

A. Yes, I am correcting the grammar here.

Q. Thank you very much for that.

Can I ask you now to turn to paragraph 308, which is at page 56 of the statement D1/09/168.

A. Mm-hm.

Q. And again looking at the list of corrections to your witness statement, is it right that the correction you want to make to paragraph 308 is shown at point 2 on this document?

A. Yes.

Q. Thank you. The insertion of the words "through Badri" in the second sentence?

A. Yes, I just wanted to clarify.

Q. Subject to the two corrections we have just identified, can you confirm that the contents of this, your second witness statement, are true to the best of your knowledge and belief?

A. Yes, they are.

Q. Now, can I ask you next to go to the document entitled "Third Witness Statement of Natalie Nosova". My Lady, this witness statement for Ms Nosova was served last night. It's on Magnum, as I understand it, at D4, tab 12 D4/12/124. I do have a hard copy here --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, I would like to have a hard copy because I have the statements in hard copy.

MR RABINOWITZ: -- and it has even been hole-punched.

(Handed)

Dr Nosova, can you turn to page 2 of that statement, please, and can you confirm that that is your signature?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. Can you confirm that this is your third witness statement in these proceedings?

A. This is correct.

Q. And can you confirm that the contents of this, your third witness statement, are true to the best of your knowledge and belief?

A. Yes, they are.

MR RABINOWITZ: Thank you very much. Can you wait there, please.

Cross-examination by MR SUMPTION

MR SUMPTION: Dr Nosova, have you worked for Mr Berezovsky since 1991?

A. Yes, that's correct. In 1991, in the end of 1991 I joined him at Logovaz becoming his deputy for finance. He was general manager at the time and I was invited to Logovaz to become deputy general manager.

Q. And have you worked for him continuously since then?

A. That's correct.

Q. Does that mean that when he left Russia in 2000 you followed him to France and then to England?

A. I was not continuously at his side at the time because he was in France, then he moved to England, but I was able to come to England only in -- actually I came in July but then I went for a holiday --

Q. Which year?

A. In July 2002. Then I went for a family holiday and actually I joined Mr Berezovsky again in September 2002.

Q. And when you came to England, did Mr Berezovsky buy a house, Heath Lodge in Iver, for you to live in?

A. That's correct.

Q. And do you still live in it?

A. Yes.

Q. What is the work that you have done for Mr Berezovsky since he left Russia?

A. I have been advising him on financial aspects of his new investments and on his business in general.

Q. What functions have you performed in relation to this litigation?

A. I'm assisting Mr Berezovsky in this litigation because I know the background and I actually really want the truth to come out in these proceedings.

Q. You say you are assisting him in this litigation: can you tell us what form that assistance takes?

A. As I have just mentioned, I know the background and there are not very many people around now who know the background. And I also know -- I was -- don't forget I was also close to Badri, so -- and Badri is not with us anymore and I also know quite a big part of that story. So -- and that's my all.

- Q. Well, Dr Nosova, that explains why you have been assisting Mr Berezovsky with this litigation perhaps; what I am actually asking you is what sort of assistance -- what do you do in relation to the litigation?
- A. It's managerial role in a way. It's explaining information that becomes available to Mr Berezovsky, (inaudible), things like that.
- Q. So have you participated in the collection of evidence?
- A. Yes, of course, because we -- you know the problem that Mr Berezovsky has that a lot of documents were lost during different raids and during movements from Russia to France to England. There were numerous seizures and searches, seizures of documents. So many documents were taken from him in this way, but still documents remain.
- Q. So you have been concerned, have you, with finding relevant documents concerned with this dispute? Is that correct?
- A. It was not me who was going around searching for documents. There were big legal teams working on this, right? And when a document, an old document is found, sometimes it's, for people who are just involved, difficult to understand the significance of this document.

Q. So do I understand from that answer and another that you gave just a minute or two ago that when new documents appear, you will discuss and explain those to Mr Berezovsky? Is that right?

A. No, not exactly.

Q. What do you do by way of explanation to Mr Berezovsky?

A. You kind of little bit exaggerate that it goes immediately to Mr Berezovsky, right?

Q. I haven't said "immediately".

A. Because if there is some documents then is found, then sometimes people read it, they don't even understand what it is, you know, or what it refers to. It needs some recollection and reconstruction also to understand what it is: who were the people who were involved at that time in this particular project and so on.

Q. In your answer a few moments ago, [draft] page 21, lines 17 to 19, you say that you "explain information that becomes available to Mr Berezovsky [and] things like that". What sort of information that becomes available do you explain to Mr Berezovsky?

A. This is a very general question, Mr Sumption. And also not only to Mr Berezovsky but sometimes his lawyers were asking me, right? Sometimes we discussed in our inner circle what it is all about because it was necessary to reconstruct at least to what project it referred from in that whole time, who were the people who were involved on this project who could give further clarification and so on.

Besides, there is also some financial things involved, you know, what -- because sometimes payments were made, for what payments they're made. That was also important to reconstruct.

Q. Now, by way of example, when a large number of documents became available to show the movements and whereabouts of different people, including Mr Berezovsky, in December 2000, were you involved in explaining those to Mr Berezovsky?

A. No, I was not. It was not my role.

Q. I see.

Now, you attended a number of interviews with Mr Patarkatsishvili, didn't you --

A. Yes.

Q. -- both in 2005 and 2007?

A. Yes, exactly.

Q. Why were you at those interviews?

A. Because Mr Berezovsky asked me to go with the lawyers.

- Q. Was that because your familiarity with the background made you a good person to obtain Mr Patarkatsishvili's evidence about these matters?
- A. I don't really think so. I think first of all it was because of my close connection to Mr Patarkatsishvili and when the lawyers, Andrew Stephenson and Jim Lankshear, went to Georgia, it was a little bit unfair to send them without anyone who has close relationship with Badri. And I think that's the reason why Mr Berezovsky asked me to go.
- Q. Yes. It wasn't just the meetings in Georgia, was it; it was also the ones at Downside Manor, for instance?
- A. Downside Manor is different. Let's then separate, please.
- Q. Now, did you review draft witness statements that were served in this action, not just your own but other people's?
- A. Some of them were shown to me.
- Q. And did they include Mr Berezovsky's draft witness statements?
- A. I think some passages from this were also shown to me.
- Q. Now, when Mr Abramovich applied for summary judgment, the main witness statement put in on behalf of Mr Berezovsky was that of his solicitor, Mr Marino. Do you remember that?

- A. Yes, I do.
- Q. And did you give Mr Marino the benefit of your recollection of the matters that were relevant to Mr Berezovsky's claim?
- A. To the extent that Mr Marino was asking me.
- Q. Well, you had what you described as a "managerial role" in this litigation. If you thought that there was something that it was important for Mr Marino to know, you would have told him, wouldn't you, rather than just wait for him to ask you?
- A. Mr Sumption, I am not a lawyer. I am not in a very good position to advise such a distinguished solicitor as Mr Marino what to do.
- Q. But you say that you do know the facts and that's why you were involved?
- A. The factual -- the factual -- the facts that they were verifying with me, I confirm to them if they were within my knowledge.
- Q. If there was a fact within your knowledge which you thought it was important for Mr Marino to know, however distinguished he was, you would have told him, wouldn't you?
- A. Not necessarily, because it was dependent also on the questions that Mr Marino and his team from Addleshaw Goddard were asking me --

- Q. Well, we know from Mr --
- A. -- by way of interview.
- Q. We know from Mr Marino's statement in the striking-out proceedings that you told him about your recollections of your period as a deputy director of Logovaz in the mid-1990s. You told him about that, didn't you?
- A. He was asking about that, yes.
- Q. You told him about the interests that Mr Berezovsky had taken in the oil sector in 1993 and 1994, didn't you?
- A. Yes, I presume so. I should have told him, yes.
- Q. You gave him an account of meetings at the Logovaz Club in 1995 which were attended by Mr Abramovich, didn't you?
- A. That's correct.
- Q. You told him about the control which Mr Berezovsky was able to exercise over Consolidated Bank, didn't you?
- A. Yes.
- Q. And about the role of Consolidated Bank in the loans for shares auction?
- A. Yes, I did.
- Q. You told him, did you not, about what you knew at the time about Mr Berezovsky's arrangements with Mr Abramovich in 1995?
- A. Well, to the extent that he was asking about it. The questions he was asking about it, I was giving him the answers.

Q. Now --

A. Whether he asked complete questions, I don't know. And I couldn't judge that, what they need for the case.

Q. You told him, didn't you, about the role of Mr Berezovsky in the preparations of that were made for NFK to participate in the loans for shares auction?

That's right, isn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. And you told him, did you not, about the creation of the offshore holding structure for assets that was being developed in 2000, did you not?

A. Pardon?

Q. In 2000, plans were made to transfer assets of Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili to an offshore holding structure?

A. Do you mean "H" and "O" structures?

Q. That among other things. There was also Pennand and Tiberius and other structures?

A. Pennand and Tiberius were dealt with by Ruslan Fomichev.

Q. Yes, but you gave Mr Marino information about Pennand and Tiberius, didn't you?

A. The only thing I could tell him about it, I think, was I noticed some inconsistency that Pennand was said to be set up for I think Boris or maybe Badri, maybe for Boris, which is not correct, because I know that MTM were actually using Pennand for their other clients before they started to use it for this transaction.

- Q. You told him, didn't you, about the involvement of Valmet and Mr Samuelson in the creation of offshore structures?
- A. I told him about our work with Mr Samuelson and Valmet, which later became MTM, to establish big offshore structures: one of them was called Hotspur and we were abbreviating it, call it "H", for simplicity, and the other Octopus, which we call "O". These two offshore structures -- they were quite big, complex -- they were set up by Samuelson and his different offices, because Samuelson had many offices.
- Q. Dr Nosova, Mr Marino's statement is dated April 2009.
- A. Mm-hm.
- Q. In July 2009 you put in a witness statement of your own in the summary judgment proceedings, didn't you?
- A. Yes.
- Q. And that deals mainly with the status and role of Consolidated Bank?
- A. I thought I made it very clear, my Lady, in this witness statement that I put in in July, the purpose of this witness statement is to set out my firsthand knowledge of Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili's joint control of Logovaz and Consolidated Bank from 1995 onwards and Mr Abramovich's knowledge of Mr Berezovsky control of Obedinyonniy Bank, which is Consolidated Bank.

So my witness statement for the strike-out application, it was actually dedicated to these two points, and I outlined it in the beginning of my witness statement.

Q. Now, you told us a few minutes ago that there were many aspects of the background and the facts which you were the only person still around who could speak to them. Do you remember saying that?

A. I'm not -- I didn't say that I was the only person. I said there were not many persons -- many people left around. Can we look at the transcript?

Q. Well, we're just scrolling back to that. I don't think the exact words matter but we'll just have a look.

Yes, you're quite right. What you said is:

"... there are not... many people around now who know the background."

A. Not many people around. It's not what you say now: that I was the only person. I never said that I was the only person.

Q. You're quite right. What other people are around who know the background?

A. The background of what exactly?

- Q. Well, the background to the facts which are in dispute in this case. You say that there were not many people who knew the background that was relevant to this case and you were one of them; I'm just asking you who the others were.
- A. As far as I understand, the other people are mainly witnesses in this case from both sides. But some people didn't come as a witness, especially -- maybe having their reasons.
- Q. Now, if you were one of the people -- one of the few people -- who knew the background facts, it must have been obvious to you when you were discussing these matters with Mr Marino that you were likely to be a witness at the trial of the action. Do you agree?
- A. Yes, I agree.
- Q. Now, is your husband Michael Lindley, the head of the private client department at Streathers?
- A. That's correct.
- Q. And what has his role been in the preparation of this action?
- A. I think he'll better describe himself, but he was also involved in what you described as managerial role of this litigation.
- Q. Right. And he also attended, didn't he, the meetings with Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Berezovsky at Downside Manor in June 2007, along with yourself?

A. He was there, but I'm not -- I don't know in what capacity.

Q. You don't know in what capacity?

A. I don't know.

Q. So you bumped into him there and said, "What a surprise to see you"?

A. No, I didn't bump into him there. I knew that he will also be there.

Q. Yes. You must have had some knowledge of why he was there, Dr Nosova?

A. I think you'd better ask him why he was there. But as far as I remember, Boris actually quite valued his opinion on many things.

Q. Do you know whether he has been acting in this managerial role in the litigation in his capacity as a partner of Streathers?

A. I don't know.

Q. Now, you and Mr Lindley each entered into agreements under which you stand to receive 1 per cent of the recoveries in this and other litigation; that's correct?

A. That's correct.

Q. And we've been given copies recently of those agreements. Were both of those agreements made in October 2009? Can you confirm that?

A. Yes.

Q. At a time when you knew you were likely to be a witness?

A. Nobody thought a link to these two things because the agreements are about not giving evidence and being paid for evidence, as Mr Sumption is trying to present now. My Lady, the agreements were for -- to my agreement, for me to provide Mr Berezovsky and, in case he dies, what is very important, to his family assistance to recover his assets. That's the main point. And Mr Berezovsky volunteered this agreement, not only to me but these agreements also, because he was concerned -- he was very much concerned that the litigation should continue in case he dies.

Q. Dr Nosova, the agreement in fact says -- the reference is H(A)98/43.007; perhaps we could get it up.

A. Where is it?

Q. You, I think, prefer to look at this on screen, so it will, I think, appear on your screen shortly.

A. But I need large.

Q. Do you want a hard copy as well?

A. I need to enlarge it.

Q. Sorry?

A. I need to enlarge it --

Q. Well, I'm sure you will be assisted in that.

A. -- because my eyesight is dead. Yes, that's it, okay.

MR RABINOWITZ: Can I generally try to be helpful and suggest that a paralegal sits up with Dr Nosova if you're going to be mentioning documents so she can expand it on the screen. It doesn't sound as if she's going to need a translator, so perhaps the paralegal can sit up and do the expanding.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, very well. Madam Translator, if you'd like to sit at the back just in case you are needed. Thank you. Just perhaps in the row behind and have the paralegal go where you were. That might be easier.

MR SUMPTION: Have you got that agreement up on your screen, Dr Nosova?

A. Yes. How can I move it if I need it?

Q. Can you see it?

A. How can I move it if I need it? I have half of the first page on the screen.

Q. Right. Well, if you've got that, you will see that recital D says that you have agreed to assist Mr Berezovsky -- this is his alias, Platon Elenin -- and agreed with him that you will assist his estate in the event of his death.

A. Yes.

Q. So it's both, isn't it?

A. Yes, but that's what I'm explaining. That's actually the key word. Because Boris was very much concerned at the time that the litigation should continue in case something happens to him.

- Q. Now, the agreement and the 1 per cent covers not only this litigation but a large number of other actions which are listed on the second page together with various assets which Mr Berezovsky is claiming?
- A. Of course, because a huge part of his assets is blocked now with all the litigations and it's impossible to recover them without the litigations being solved, being considered by the English courts.
- Q. Now, one of the actions in respect of which you are getting 1 per cent of the proceeds was the North Shore action, wasn't it?
- A. Yes.
- Q. The North Shore action, was that an action in which Mr Berezovsky was claiming $50 million from Mr Fomichev?
- A. Yes.
- Q. And did you give evidence in the North Shore action?
- A. Yes, I did.
- Q. Now, did you disclose before giving that evidence in the North Shore action that you and your husband stood to gain between you $1 million if Mr Berezovsky won in full?
- A. Nobody asked me, neither Mr Fomichev's barrister nor the judge. Apparently it was not an issue for them.

Q. Well, how could it be an issue if they didn't know about it because you hadn't told them?

A. But they didn't ask me.

Q. You're saying that you would have expected them to say, "Oh, Dr Nosova, have you by any chance got a percentage agreement with Mr Berezovsky?" You thought that it was up to them to ask you that, did you?

A. Mr Sumption, I was giving evidence in North Shore action for the first time in my life. I was explained that I have to give truthful, sincere answers to all the questions that will be put to me. That's exactly what I was doing.

Q. You and your husband stand to gain up to $140 million between you if Mr Berezovsky wins this action; is that correct?

A. That's correct. That's exactly like this and I very much hope he win.

Q. I'm sure, Dr Nosova, that that consideration will enormously improve the quality of your memory.

You were involved in some of the preparations, I think, for the loans for shares auction of 28 December 1995.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Are you moving on from this agreement?

MR SUMPTION: Yes, I am.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Is it on Magnum yet? Because I haven't -- I know it has a reference number.

MR SUMPTION: I thought it was. We have it on our screens.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. I don't have it on mine.

I don't know why that is, but I don't.

Second question: are you getting paid anything as you go along -- I'm not able to scroll down the rest of the agreement. Are you being paid, as it were, time fees or anything of that sort? Your only remuneration is the percentage of any recoveries?

A. Yes.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, I've just noticed the time. Since I am moving to another subject, would your Ladyship like to take the break?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR SUMPTION: That would enable us to see whether we can do something about your Ladyship's screen.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Perhaps Mr Fleming can do something about it. It may be that I'm not operating on the web server, I'm just on the local server; I'm not sure what the position is. But if he can do it for me, I'd be grateful.

Very well, ten minutes.

(11.16 am)

(A short break)

(11.30 am)

MR SUMPTION: Dr Nosova, one other question about the agreement that I was asking you about before the break.

You say that in the North Shore litigation no one asked you about the agreement. In this litigation my client's solicitors did ask Addleshaws whether there were any witnesses who were being paid a contingency fee. Did anyone from Addleshaws approach you or your husband and ask them what the answer to that question was after they'd been asked it?

A. As to myself, I say that nobody from Addleshaws approached me about it. And whether they approached or not my husband, I think you have to ask my husband.

Q. Now, you were involved in some of the preparations for the loans for shares auction of 28 December 1995, weren't you?

A. Yes.

Q. And you were also involved -- is this right -- in the early stages of the plan in 2000 to move the assets of Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili into offshore trusts?

A. Yes, which became known as "H" and "O" trusts. We are talking about this, right?

Q. Right.

Now, you were not personally involved, were you, in the discussions between Mr Berezovsky and Mr Abramovich about the terms of their cooperation on Sibneft? You only heard about that, you say, afterwards from one of Mr Patarkatsishvili or Mr Berezovsky. Is that right?

A. Not -- not exactly. I was not involved in the discussions that they had between the three of them --

Q. That's all I'm asking.

A. -- on this. No, no, your question -- can I -- it was wider. That's why I --

Q. Let me narrow it then.

A. Please.

Q. Were you personally involved in those discussions?

I understand the answer is "no".

A. The answer is "no".

Q. Right. And is it right that you were not personally involved in the three cash auctions in 1996 at which 49 per cent of Sibneft was sold off by the State?

A. In the privatisation, 49?

Q. Yes.

A. No.

Q. So you were not involved?

A. I was not involved.

Q. And you were not involved, were you, in the auction of the State's 51 per cent holding which was sold in May 1997, after the default?

A. I was not.

Q. Or in the negotiations for the acquisition of the aluminium assets in early 2000: not personally involved in that?

A. Not personally involved.

Q. And not personally involved in the negotiations for the merger of the aluminium assets with those of Mr Deripaska, were you?

A. Personally, no.

Q. No. Or in the establishment of Rusal?

A. Personally, no.

Q. And, as I understand it, you weren't personally involved with the sale of Mr Berezovsky's stake in ORT. You weren't personally involved in that?

A. Personally -- you mean creation of documents? No.

Q. Well, did you yourself have any involvement in it, as opposed to hearing about it from other people?

A. Look, Mr Sumption, first of all, I was with Boris and Badri all the time at that time, right? All the time.

Q. At which time?

A. 1995/1996.

Q. I'm talking about --

A. No, no --

Q. -- the sale of ORT in 2000.

A. In 2000 I was talking to Badri all the time about it, especially when Nikolai was arrested, because after Nikolai was arrested I communicated to Badri every day. Every day he was calling me because we very much concerned about Nikolai. We wanted to pass clothes to him, food, medicine, because when he was arrested he had nothing: he was dressed very lightly, he didn't have any hygienic items, he didn't have any medicine, and this was a very ill man. And I was crying all the time and I was talking to Badri all the time.

And Badri assured me that Nikolai would soon be released and when Badri was assuring me that Nikolai would be released soon, he was always referring to Roman. He was always referring to Roman Abramovich because he was saying that Roman Abramovich assured him that Nikolai would be set free.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I see. Thank you.

A. And moreover --

MR SUMPTION: Dr Nosova, I will ask you about this in due course.

A. And moreover -- sorry, there is -- could I say something?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, no, just answer the questions, please.

THE WITNESS: Okay.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: We'll get on much more quickly. And anything Mr Sumption doesn't ask you about and Mr Rabinowitz thinks is important, he will elicit from you in re-examination.

THE WITNESS: Yes, okay.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you.

THE WITNESS: And then he also asked --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, no, just a second. Let Mr Sumption ask the next question, please.

MR SUMPTION: You were not personally involved in the Devonia transaction, were you?

A. I was not.

Q. And you were not personally involved in the sale of the second tranche of Rusal shares in 2004?

A. I was not involved in the contractual documentation negotiations that led to the sale of this tranche but I was involved with Boris and John Deuss and Badri discussing alternative ways how to sell this 25 per cent and I am dealing with it in my witness statement.

Q. The evidence of these matters that you give in your written statement is entirely based on what you say Mr Berezovsky or sometimes Mr Patarkatsishvili told you from time to time; that's true, isn't it?

A. Mr Sumption, I'll not only -- you see, you are creating a picture as if it was existed -- everything existed in vacuum. There was no vacuum because we are all together, Boris was always very open about his discussions with Abramovich. He'll talk to Abramovich; he'll come to the next room, where I will be maybe with other people, he'll tell us what they were discussing.

Then I was watching dealings with them, I was watching the people's behaviour after that. Badri told me a lot. I was very close to Badri also. I heard -- then there were things happening: money were coming in, dividends, for example, from Rusal, dividends from Sibneft.

You can't say that if you were not present in Dorchester Hotel or in some meetings, that you don't know anything about it. My position is I know quite a lot about it, so you can ask me.

For example --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Okay, that's enough.

MR SUMPTION: Dr Nosova, I haven't yet suggested anything.

I'm simply trying to distinguish between what you know from your own knowledge and what you have been told by Mr Berezovsky or Mr Patarkatsishvili. I understand that the effect of that last answer was that what you know, you have learnt because Mr Berezovsky or Mr Patarkatsishvili has told you at some stage.

A. I disagree with what you are saying. I have just tried to explain to my Lady. Let's take an example, 1995, because you mentioned it. You kind of put it all together; let's separate.

1995, this first auction, December 1995, for the right to manage 51 per cent of Sibneft, it was the most important auction. It was much more important than all the other auctions, 49 per cent, and even the auction of '97 when this 50 per cent was auctioned to be owned. I'll explain why: because first of all, according to the agreement between Boris, Badri and Abramovich, Abramovich and his team got access to the management and they got access to assets and cashflows of Sibneft.

So all the other auctions, acquiring of the shares 49 per cent through auction, as my Lady already knows, and the 51 per cent auction that took place in 1997, they were not bought by Mr Abramovich with his own monies or with the own funds of his companies.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right, just a second.

A. This is very important.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, no, please be quiet. I control this court.

THE WITNESS: Okay, sorry.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No one else does, I do. That must be absolutely clear.

You've had an opportunity to answer the question. As I've said, if Mr Rabinowitz thinks there's anything you need to ask add to this answer, he will elicit it from you in re-examination.

THE WITNESS: Okay.

MR SUMPTION: Now, we had served on us last night very late your third witness statement in which you say that Mr Patarkatsishvili told you over breakfast at the George V Hotel in Paris, seven to ten days after Mr Glushkov's arrest, that there had been a meeting at Cap d'Antibes between him, Mr Berezovsky and Mr Abramovich. I haven't asked a question yet.

Now, you are aware, are you not, that the George V Hotel in Paris records show that Mr Patarkatsishvili was staying there between 13 and 16 December? You know that, don't you?

A. I am not aware.

Q. Are you suggesting that you made your sixth witness statement, Dr Nosova, without being aware of what the travel records in the bundles showed about the whereabouts of Mr Patarkatsishvili?

A. Travel records is not my thing.

Q. You must have been aware, Dr Nosova, that the travel records showed that Mr Patarkatsishvili was in Paris at that time?

A. I was not aware. But I was aware that he was because I met him there.

- Q. You were aware that he was because his movements in December have been traced from day to day in the documents in this case: that's why you were aware.
- A. I disagree with you.
- Q. As the manager of this litigation did you read the openings, the written openings?
- A. Don't please call me "manager" in singular.
- Q. All right. As one of the managers did you read the written openings?
- A. The written submissions?
- Q. Yes.
- A. Yes.
- Q. Right. Those submissions made it perfectly clear, didn't they, that there was a major issue about the whereabouts of Mr Patarkatsishvili, Mr Berezovsky and Mr Abramovich in December 2000?
- A. That's exactly the reason, my Lady, when I started to prepare for today I revisited, of course, my witness statements and I realised that the meetings I refer to in my old witness statement for asylum application for Glushkov and also I refer to a meeting in my main witness statement for this trial, they're actually the same meeting. And I realised that's the meeting that Badri told me about when I met him, when I met him in France, and I remembered it was George V Hotel and the meeting was over breakfast. And I started to --

Q. Dr Nosova, I'm going to ask you about this.

A. No, I am explaining why this was served last night. It was served last night because when I was getting ready for today and I revisited my witness statement, I put these two things together and I realised that's exactly the meeting which is very much in dispute.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I see. So it was only when you were preparing for giving evidence today --

A. Yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: -- that you realised that you hadn't mentioned your bit of evidence about this?

A. Yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I see. Thank you.

MR SUMPTION: Dr Nosova, you say that you read the written submissions. It must have been obvious to you from those written submissions that there was a big issue about the whereabouts of Mr Abramovich, Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili in December 2000. You realised that, didn't you?

A. I realised, but I am not very good for organisational things: who goes where, plane flies where. I just am not interested in this. My speciality is different: I am a finance manager. I'm not interested in politics, I am not interested in forensics. That's it.

- Q. And you realised, didn't you, that in those written submissions there was a good deal of information about where Mr Patarkatsishvili was in December?
- A. No. I didn't concentrate on that.
- Q. Are you trying to tell the court that you decided what the date of your discussion with Mr Patarkatsishvili was without even checking whether he was in Paris at the time?
- A. Yes.
- Q. That is untrue, isn't it, Dr Nosova?
- A. No, it's true. I didn't check when Mr Patarkatsishvili was in Paris at the time.
- Q. Did you get someone else to check?
- A. No.
- Q. Now, you met Mr Patarkatsishvili on many occasions, didn't you, after the arrest of Mr Glushkov?
- A. I met him.
- Q. On many occasions?
- A. I can't say "many occasions" because the first days when he was arrested, Badri and me, we communicated on the phone.
- Q. I'm not talking about --
- A. But then I also went to France, and I went to France and we met there, in France.
- Q. Dr Nosova, in the years that have passed since December 2000 you have had many exchanges with Mr Patarkatsishvili, have you not?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, no doubt you have often discussed with him the circumstances in which ORT was sold; is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, when you say that it was on this occasion in mid-December 2000, rather than on some other occasion, that Mr Patarkatsishvili told you this, you are relying, are you, on your memory, your recollection?

A. That it was on this occasion that he told me?

Q. Rather than another occasion. You're relying on your memory rather than a document?

A. But -- but it was after Nikolai's arrest and it was related to Nikolai's release. So if I met Badri and discussed with him in previous months of 2000, Nikolai wasn't in jail yet. I don't understand the question.

Q. No, Dr Nosova, I'm talking about the period after Mr Glushkov's arrest.

Now, when you say in your third witness statement that it was on this occasion in December 2000, rather than on some later occasion, that Mr Patarkatsishvili told you about this meeting, you are relying purely, as I understand it, on your memory rather than on a document. Is that correct?

- A. I was relying on my --
- Q. Memory?
- A. -- memory because it was the first time I met him abroad after Nikolai's arrest. And I wanted to check my memory so I checked my passport and indeed it confirmed to me that I was in Paris at the time.
- Q. You were in Paris between 12 and 20 December, I think your evidence is. Is that right?
- A. No. My evidence is different. My evidence is --
- Q. The 12th and the 22nd?
- A. -- that I arrived in Paris on the 12th and I came back to Moscow on the 22nd.
- Q. Yes. So you were in Paris for ten days --
- A. I was not in Paris for ten days. I am not saying that.
- Q. I see. You were not in Paris for all of that time; is that right?
- A. My recollection is that in the end of this period I think I went to London for several days.
- Q. Now, you have worked, Dr Nosova, for years on this litigation in a capacity as a manager.
- A. First of all, again you are using the singular "manager" and it creates impression --
- Q. I said "a manager".
- A. -- I am the main person over this litigation, which is not.

- Q. Dr Nosova, there's no point in trying to think of what you think the implications behind my questions are.
- A. No, I'm just trying to be precise.
- Q. You have worked for years on this litigation, have you not?
- A. In a different way, yes.
- Q. You have been sitting in court for much of this hearing, haven't you?
- A. I was sitting in court for much of this hearing, yes; not for all of it, but for much of it.
- Q. Including almost all of Mr Berezovsky's evidence?
- A. Yes.
- Q. You have never previously suggested, have you, that Mr Patarkatsishvili told you, between the 14th -- seven to ten days after Mr Glushkov's arrest, about a meeting at Cap d'Antibes with Mr Abramovich? You've never previously suggested that, have you?
- A. My Lady, I just explained why I put in my statement only yesterday. I can repeat again because it will be the answer to the question that I am getting.

I never previously suggested because only yesterday, when I was getting ready for today, I revisited my witness statements -- and I draw your attention: one of them is August 2008, for Glushkov asylum application, and the other is the main witness statement for this trial -- and realised that the meeting that Badri was talking about when I met him in Paris, between him, Boris, Abramovich, when he said this, that they have to give up or (inaudible) for exchange of release of Glushkov, that it's actually the same meeting everybody are disputing about now.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Well, I've got your evidence on that.

A. That's it. So I can't add anything to it.

MR SUMPTION: Dr Nosova, would you please look at your witness statement at paragraph 289 and 290 D1/09/165. This is your second witness statement, the big one. Have you got that?

A. Yes.

Q. In paragraph 289 you say:

"At this time, that is following Nikolai's arrest, Badri told me whenever we spoke that he and Boris were doing everything they possibly could to help Nikolai, and he assured me that they would obtain his release. When we had these conversations, he several times referred to Mr Abramovich -- he said that Mr Abramovich had promised that Nikolai would be released."

Now, that's a reference, isn't it, to discussions with Mr Patarkatsishvili during December and possibly after December as well?

A. No. This is -- the reference to discussions that I had with Mr Patarkatsishvili the very first days after Nikolai was arrested, when we were just trying -- it was not only about his release; we were trying to get warm clothes to him because when he was arrested, as I said, he was dressed very lightly, and we found out that the temperature in his cell was 12 and it was December, and it was -- we wanted to get at least a jumper to him, a warm jumper.

And Badri held negotiations with the offices in Lefortovo to get him this jumper: also, by the way, what triggered my recollection, because he explained me on the phone that they refuse because they were told that Nikolai should be kept in harsh conditions. But when I met him in Paris -- now I remembered, after already memory: when you remember, you remember more -- that he mentioned me it was $50,000 that he offered for -- to give this -- to pass on this jumper to Nikolai and it was refused. I think I mentioned that somewhere.

And also I said he called me and told me and I started to think he couldn't tell me on the phone, and now I remember he told me also at this meeting in Paris. And he was always referring to Mr Abramovich, on whom this release depends.

And moreover --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, no, that's fine.

THE WITNESS: Okay, sorry, because I get...

MR SUMPTION: Dr Nosova, now would you look at paragraph 290 of your witness statement D1/09/165. After describing the discussions which you had with Mr Patarkatsishvili at paragraph 289, you say:

"I subsequently found out from [Mr Patarkatsishvili] that there had been a meeting between Mr Abramovich, [Mr Berezovsky] and [Mr Patarkatsishvili]."

In your main witness statement you are saying that you found that out after the various exchanges described in paragraph 289, are you not?

A. I have just explained that the first days we were all talking on the phone and then I went to Paris. So going to Paris, and it was maybe this meeting with Badri happened approximately one week, ten days after Nikolai's arrest, it's already in my mind subsequently because it was not in the same phone conversations that I had with Badri.

Q. The discussions that you had with Mr Patarkatsishvili about getting warm clothes and better conditions organised for Mr Glushkov in fact occurred in January 2001, did they not, after Mr Patarkatsishvili had returned to Moscow and so had you?

A. No.

- Q. Now, until Mr Berezovsky made his sixth witness statement on 14 September 2011, his case was that the meeting at Cap d'Antibes happened shortly before Christmas. You're aware of that, aren't you?
- A. I heard that, yes.
- Q. Now, the evidence that you have just given in your third witness statement would not have been consistent, would it, with Mr Berezovsky's original story that this happened shortly before Christmas?
- A. I didn't have any purpose to make anything consistent; I'm just telling what I remember and what I was able also to recollect.
- Q. Have you read his sixth witness statement?
- A. I don't remember, maybe I did. But again, it's about things that I am not really involved. It's not my thing. It's kind of forensic thing: who flies everywhere and so on, dates. I get dizzy with dates.
- Q. Would you take Mr Berezovsky's sixth witness statement, which is in bundle D4. Somebody will give it to you.
- A. Okay, that's fine.
- Q. It's behind flag 9 of bundle D4 D4/09/75. Have you got that? Now, in this witness statement Mr Berezovsky, having previously said that the meeting occurred shortly before Christmas, says -- and it's paragraph 33 -- that, "In [the] light of the above", and he's referring to the travel records, he thinks that the meeting with Mr Abramovich occurred on or shortly after 7 December but he could not exclude the possibility that he made two separate visits to the United States between 16 and 26 December and that the meeting happened sometime between the two.

Do you see what he says? Paragraph 33.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, you were aware that that was the way that Mr Berezovsky had expressed his evidence at the time of his sixth witness statement, weren't you?

A. I was aware that there is a dispute whether this meeting took place at all or not and whether it took place end of December or after Nikolai's arrest. I was aware about it, yes.

Q. This witness statement, the sixth witness statement of Mr Berezovsky, was served in the middle of September and you read it, did you not?

A. To tell the truth --

Q. Yes?

A. -- I didn't because I explain: I am not interested in these parts.

Q. You never said at any time that the meeting could not have occurred shortly before Christmas or in the interval between two visits to the United States because you had been told about it by Mr Patarkatsishvili seven to ten days after Mr Glushkov's arrest?

A. No, but it only shows that we didn't discuss it in this way as you are trying to present now.

Q. The reason why you never mentioned it was that you had no recollection even as recently as the middle of September of this year that it was in mid-December that Mr Patarkatsishvili had told you that; that's right, isn't it?

A. Till -- could I see the question?

Q. I'll repeat my question.

You had no recollection, even as recently as September of this year, that it was in mid-December 2000 that Mr Patarkatsishvili had first told you about the Cap d'Antibes meeting?

A. You are completely wrong. I gave a witness statement in Nikolai's asylum application in August 2008 and if you want, we can cite from there about this meeting. Just a moment.

Where is asylum application? It's not here. My witness statement in Glushkov's asylum application, it's not here.

Q. If you want to look at your asylum statement, Dr Nosova, you'll find it in R(E)7/130/98.

A. Thank you.

Q. Now, what are you referring to here?

A. Okay:

"In December 2000, following Nikolay's detention, I was very worried about him, and Badri kept telling me that they were doing everything they possibly could to help Nikolay's and he assured me that they would soon obtain his release. I was aware from Badri at the time that there was a meeting between Abramovich, Boris and Badri. I wasn't at the meeting but Badri reported it back to me that Abramovich stated that they had to give up their stake in ORT as a condition of Nikolay's release. Badri also told me that Abramovich was acting on instructions from Voloshin and I knew generally from other conversations with Badri that the president wanted the shares in ORT to be returned to the control of the state."

So in my witness statement in Nikolai Glushkov asylum application already in August 2008, I am mentioning this meeting. So you are not right, you are not correct.

Q. Dr Nosova, I am well aware that you understand there to have been a meeting; the question is whether you were first told about that meeting by Mr Patarkatsishvili in the middle of December 2000, seven to ten days after the arrest of Mr Glushkov. That was something that you had never remembered before serving your third witness statement; isn't that right?

- A. I explained already several times here that when I started to get ready for today I revisited all my witness statements, I paid attention that I mentioning this meeting, that meeting, and then I was also thinking about this sweater, this $50,000, because he told me about the sweater and that they refused to take it because Nikolai was supposed to be kept in harsh conditions. But I started to remind he would tell me on the phone the amount and then I remembered, and then I remembered that I met him in Paris after Nikolai was arrested.
- Q. Dr Nosova, as a result of sitting through most of this trial you are well aware that there is a serious difficulty about Mr Berezovsky's case on this meeting because it does not appear that any of the three participants were in the same place at any stage. You are well aware of that from having sat through the hearings, are you not?
- A. I'm aware that there is an issue but I'm not -- I don't know whose case -- you said Berezovsky case; I think it's Abramovich case also. The reason I decided to put in this statement because I understood that it's an issue in dispute and I thought it would be helpful to court if I can explain something which is relevant to the issue in dispute. That's it.

Q. What you did in response to that difficulty was to go through your travel records and the information in the submissions about your movements and Mr Patarkatsishvili's movements and to find out the earliest date on which you could say that Mr Patarkatsishvili had told you about this; that's what you did, isn't it?

A. Mr Sumption, I can assure you I didn't go through these movements in submissions because this I never do. These things that are boring for me and I prefer not to do things that are boring for me. That's it.

Q. Your claim to have suddenly remembered the precise date on which he told you, and that it was on that occasion rather than on some later occasion, is, I suggest to you, a deliberate untruth which you are telling in the hope of bolstering up this part of Mr Berezovsky's case.

A. It's not so. I completely disagree with what you are saying.

Q. Now, you attended interviews with Mr Patarkatsishvili in June 2005, did you not?

A. Yes.

Q. In your witness statement, your main witness statement, at paragraph 377 D1/09/180, you say that you have looked at the notes of those meetings at which you were present. You say that:

"... [you] cannot now recall the exact words used... [but you] have no reason to believe that the notes and the proof of evidence do not broadly reflect what was discussed during the meeting."

Do you remember giving that evidence in your witness statement?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, the document that you refer to as "the proof of evidence" in the second line of that paragraph is a draft proof prepared by Mr Lankshear which is at bundle R(D)1/06/68. Could that please be brought up on screen.

Now, have you got that document open on screen or in hard copy?

A. At 377? I have hard copy.

Q. No, it's not 377. I'm referring you to a document which is at R(D)1/06/68. Do you have that document open?

A. Mm-hm.

Q. Right. Now, is it true that you acted as translator at this meeting when Mr Patarkatsishvili needed assistance with the language?

A. This is not correct because Mr Patarkatsishvili, he spoke English. It would be incorrect to say that he didn't speak English at all. But at that stage in time his English, of course, was not perfect and it was necessary sometimes, even maybe quite often, to translate the questions. He then would sometimes try to word his answer in English. If we felt -- because Ina was also translating, right? But when -- if we felt that he had difficulty in expressing himself, then we would translate his answer.

- Q. Now, would you please turn to page 77 of the bundle numbering. It will be brought up on screen. I would like you to look at R(D)1/06/77 and in a few moments 78 I will turn to, but let's start at 77. Have you got that?
- A. Which one? This? Mm-hm.
- Q. Now, this is Mr Lankshear's draft proof, which you say you have no reason to regard as incorrect. I would like you to read to yourself, please, from line 320 on page 77 to line 357 on page 78.
- A. Mm-hm. (Pause) Yes.
- Q. Now, I can show you the actual notes on which this is based if you like, but this is an easier version to read because it's not in note form.
- A. It's here also.
- Q. Now, Mr Patarkatsishvili did not say at this meeting, did he, that Mr Abramovich had promised that Mr Glushkov would be released?

- A. You know, you should look at my witness statement also because I'm explaining why he didn't say that and -- because Mr Patarkatsishvili explained to me in Russian, informally, that he was very, very careful, very, very cautious when he was giving his answers because he was worried that what he will say will leak out to Mr Abramovich. And that would have been a disaster for him because for the time being he was negotiating with Mr Abramovich and he didn't want his negotiating position to be destroyed.

He was pretending that he believed Roman's explanations about ORT, about everything, Sibneft, because he had to -- he wanted to keep this channel of communication open to negotiate. That's why he was giving a very guarded account and that's why he didn't say many things.

And besides, the lawyers were not asking much and also Patarkatsishvili expressed to me his surprise that lawyers were not asking more probing questions. But for the lawyers, it was initial stage: it was just finding -- fact-finding exercise. They ask him to tell the story and he told them that part of the story that he thought was safe to tell, keeping into account that he was negotiating with Abramovich and he didn't want his negotiating position to be damaged.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right, thank you.

MR SUMPTION: Dr Nosova, this was a meeting between Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Berezovsky's own closest assistants and lawyers, wasn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. He had absolutely no reason, did he, to believe that the material was going to be handed over to Mr Abramovich?

A. Did Mr Abramovich have reason to believe that Patarkatsishvili would be recording their conversation in Le Bourget?

Q. Kindly answer my question.

A. No, I'm just giving you an example. There is always a risk.

Q. I would like you to answer my question, please, Dr Nosova.

A. I think he had reason to believe that there was a risk that information could leak out. It's a big house with big staff. Who knows? Nobody knows. It could be bugged, telephones could be bugged. That's the reality.

Q. Now, if you look at the draft proof again, it wasn't simply that he didn't mention Mr Abramovich --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Which line are you looking at please, Mr Sumption?

MR SUMPTION: Line 343 on page 78 R(D)1/06/78.

It wasn't just that he didn't mention Mr Abramovich had promised the release of Mr Glushkov. What he says at line 344 is:

"Evidently it was not within [Mr Abramovich's] power to release [Mr Glushkov]. [Mr] Voloshin himself had promised this to me in a personal conversation I had with him later."

Now, Mr Patarkatsishvili was saying: it wasn't in Mr Abramovich's power, it was in Mr Voloshin's, and it was Mr Voloshin who made me that promise. That's what he was saying, wasn't it?

- A. Okay, as to ORT, of course the main people who wanted ORT, it was Putin and Voloshin; but Abramovich was helping them, he was helping them to do it. And he was not an intermediary because he was trying to help Boris or Badri to get the shares sold. Boris didn't want to sell; he wouldn't want to sell. If not -- if Nikolai wasn't put in jail, he would never sell ORT. It was one of his babies, you know, and he understood the real value of ORT.

So Voloshin -- and that's why, by the way, when I referred to this meeting that Badri, Abramovich and Boris had in France, about which we've had a dispute now, I added there my recollection that Badri said that Abramovich was acting on instructions from Voloshin. So they were all acting together.

Q. Dr Nosova, just have a look, would you, at the draft proof. What I asked you was this.

You've accepted, although you give an explanation, that Mr Patarkatsishvili did not say that Mr Abramovich had promised to have Mr Glushkov released. What I'm suggesting to you is this: Mr Patarkatsishvili actually positively said that there was nothing that Mr Abramovich could do about it and it was Mr Voloshin who had promised that Mr Glushkov would be released. That's what he said, isn't it?

A. Mr Sumption, Mr Patarkatsishvili had to play a game with Abramovich pretending that he believed his explanations. That's one of the rules when you are negotiating, and especially --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Sorry, can I just interrupt you again.

What I'm not understanding at the moment is that this is a meeting between Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Berezovsky's lawyers and associates, friends, at which a proof is being taken or notes are being taken for the purposes of a proof to assist Mr Berezovsky and perhaps also Mr Patarkatsishvili in litigation that's being brought against Mr Abramovich.

So what I want to understand from you is why you say Mr Patarkatsishvili would be being guarded during the course of these conversations when he should be, one would have thought, trying to help Mr Berezovsky?

- A. Okay, I explain to my Lady. The position was Mr Berezovsky wanted to bring a claim and Mr Patarkatsishvili didn't want to bring a claim, not because he thought that what Abramovich did to them was right, he knew that he was wronged by Mr Abramovich, but he hoped to negotiate with Mr Abramovich and he hoped that by way of negotiation he would deal with Mr --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I've got that.

- A. Yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: What I don't quite understand is the basis of Mr Patarkatsishvili's fear that what he's saying to Mr Berezovsky's lawyers and associates will leak out to Mr Abramovich. That's what I don't quite understand.

- A. He was worried about security all the time and he didn't want to have a slightest chance that what he says never to hear about Abramovich could leak out to Mr Abramovich. So -- and he explained it to me informally, to myself at the time.

MR SUMPTION: Dr Nosova, are you also suggesting that in addition to being guarded, Mr Patarkatsishvili actually told lies to Mr Berezovsky's solicitor when he said it was evidently not within Mr Abramovich's power to release NG and it was Voloshin who had promised him that in a personal conversation which occurred later? Are you saying that was actually untrue?

A. I am saying that Mr Patarkatsishvili was playing a game. I am saying that Mr Patarkatsishvili pretended that the explanations that Roman gave, "Oh, it's not in my power", that he believed these explanations when in reality he did not.

Q. You see, Dr Nosova, a great troupe of witnesses, including yourself, is coming along to this court to say, "Mr Patarkatsishvili told me at the outset that he had been bullied by Mr Abramovich into selling his stake in ORT", and yet you say that Mr Patarkatsishvili was so guarded about that that he wouldn't even admit it to Mr Berezovsky's own solicitors. That's what you're saying, isn't it?

A. Because he was worried this information could leak because the house could be bugged -- we had so many examples of this -- the house could be bugged, there's staff around, somebody brought the coffee and heard something, something put on some recording device. Who knows?

Q. And yet you say he told you this in the breakfast room of the George V in Paris?

A. This?

- Q. About this meeting.
- A. About what meeting?
- Q. About the Cap d'Antibes meeting?
- A. About Cap d'Antibes meeting, yes.
- Q. Yes.
- A. But this -- so we're finished with this part?
- Q. No.
- A. No?
- Q. We're talking about the circumstances in which the ORT shares were sold.
- A. Mm-hm.
- Q. Now, you say that Mr Patarkatsishvili was so frightened of a leak happening that he wouldn't even say that Mr Abramovich had made threats or promises about Mr Glushkov to Mr Berezovsky's solicitors; yet on your evidence he was perfectly happy to tell you that in the breakfast room of the George V Hotel in Paris. Is that right?
- A. You forget one more thing. You forget that the notes that the lawyers -- my Lady, I want to also stress this point. Badri knew that the lawyers are taking notes. He understood that the notes would be typed in London, be in the computer. There is always a risk with the computers that the computers also can be hacked and so on. So when information was put on papers, a document, the risk is even more.

In George V Hotel there was no risk that it would be put on paper, right? We didn't know that it will be here right now, right? So that may be the difference. And there is maybe less probability that the table in George V Hotel breakfast table -- you don't know at which table you will sit -- will be bugged.

Q. Now --

A. Big difference.

Q. Can we look back at what Mr Patarkatsishvili said at this meeting which you attended:

"Evidently it was not within RA's power to release NG. Voloshin himself had promised this to me in a personal conversation I had with him later."

Now, are you suggesting that Mr Patarkatsishvili was not only guarded about information he disclosed but actually told untruths to Mr Berezovsky's solicitors? Is that what you're suggesting?

A. It's not true or untrue about the fact. It's a guess.

Can I tell you something about Roman's --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, just answer the question, please.

A. Yes. It's a guess. And it all changed because after Roman Abramovich bought the ORT shares and held them, he kept them. It meant that Putin trusted him and considered him to be one of his own camp because he allowed Abramovich to keep the ORT shares. You know that Putin was very concerned that the ORT shares finish in very safe hands. So for --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I'm going to interrupt you because I would like you to answer the question please. I think you've answered the question "yes". The question was: are you suggesting that Mr Patarkatsishvili actually told untruths to Mr Berezovsky's solicitors?

A. On this point I think he was not sincere.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you.

MR SUMPTION: And is that what you describe as "a guess"?

A. Can I continue then? My Lady, can I continue? Because you wanted me to answer this question. Now Mr Sumption wants me not to guess --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, I think you've answered the question I wished you to answer --

A. Okay.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: -- and you've said that you thought that Mr Patarkatsishvili was not sincere when he answered in this way.

A. In this very question, on this very point.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, thank you.

A. It doesn't mean that everything that he was saying was not --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, of course not.

Mr Sumption, ask the next question, please.

MR SUMPTION: Dr Nosova, I suggest that your evidence that Mr Patarkatsishvili told you privately that he was just playing a game or anything of that kind is not in fact true. He never said that to you, did he?

A. He said it to me and what you are saying now, it's not correct.

Q. At paragraph 294 of your witness statement D1/09/166 you say -- and you are talking now about the very end of December, when I think both you and Mr Patarkatsishvili were in Moscow; is that right?

A. The very end of December.

Q. Yes, New Year's Eve.

A. Where is it?

Q. Paragraph 294.

A. 294?

Q. Yes. You say that:

"... Badri kept repeating that Nikolai would be released because Mr Abramovich promised that he would be released before the New Year."

Now, in fact Mr Patarkatsishvili did not say that, did he? What he said was that he was confident that Mr Glushkov would be released because he had been given a personal assurance to that effect by Mr Voloshin. That's what he said, isn't it?

A. Badri called me at 11 o'clock in the evening on 31 December 2000 and asked me if someone could go to Lefortovo prison in case Nikolai was released and, if it happens, to meet him and pick him up. And he kept repeating to me, my Lady, that Nikolai would be released because Roman Abramovich promised that Nikolai would be released till the 31st -- till the New Year, and it was actually one hour left till the New Year. So he was actually waiting for Roman Abramovich to deliver on his promise. That's what it is.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. You said that in paragraph 294 of your witness statement.

A. Yes. Mr Voloshin was not mentioned here. Here he was not mentioned. Here only Roman Abramovich was mentioned.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Okay, you've given the answer. Thank you.

MR SUMPTION: Now, after the ORT sale had gone through at the end -- the ORT sale went through at the end of December, didn't it?

A. It was completed in January I think, but this -- if you're referring to Akmos Trade contracts and the transfer of shares of Logovaz to Betas.

Q. That all happened at the end of December?

A. It was all signed end of December. That's why, by the way -- Badri told me we did everything that they wanted us to do, so that's why Nikolai should also be released.

Q. After the ORT sale had gone through there were negotiations, were there not, in the first three months of 2001 between Mr Patarkatsishvili and various emissaries of the presidential administration? That's correct, isn't it?

A. Continue -- you mean continuing attempts of Badri to release Nikolai?

Q. Yes, that was one of the matters discussed; another was the future of the TV6 television station.

A. Mm-hm.

Q. You agree that there were negotiations directly between Mr Patarkatsishvili and various emissaries of the presidential administration in the first three months of 2001; is that right?

A. Patarkatsishvili was also negotiating with the Kremlin and the officials.

Q. Yes. Now, could you please take -- you've probably still got -- hang on, you're not using bundles. Can we have up R(D)2/22/8. For those using hard copies, it's behind flag 22 of the bundle.

Now, have you got this, Dr Nosova?

A. Mm-hm.

Q. If you look halfway down --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just a second. Have you got it blown up all right?

A. Yes, thank you.

MR SUMPTION: If you look halfway down page 8 in the bundle numbering, you will see a heading between two horizontal lines which says "TV6 -- RA + N Glushkov???" . Do you see that?

A. Can you remind me what it is?

Q. Well, do you see the heading first?

A. No.

Q. I just want to make sure you're in the right part of the document.

A. I don't see the heading. Can I see the heading?

MR SUMPTION: Can the witness have pointed out to her --

A. No, but what kind of document it is?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, just a second. The question is, Dr Nosova: can you see on the screen "TV6 -- RA + N Glushkov???"?

A. Yes, I see.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right.

MR SUMPTION: I am interested in the text that follows that heading. You will see that your name then appears, "Natalia -- Nosova", okay?

A. Mm-hm.

Q. This, as I understand it, is information which in the course of this meeting in June 2007 you were giving to Mr Berezovsky's solicitors. Is that right?

A. Is it some -- is it some note of some meeting?

Q. Yes. This is Mr Stephenson's note of a meeting with Mr Patarkatsishvili on 13 June 2007 --

A. Mm-hm.

Q. -- at which you were present.

A. Yes, I was present.

Q. You agree you were present?

A. Yes, I was, yes.

Q. And as I understand it, the bit that appears underneath your name is information which is being supplied by you.

A. No.

Q. Who is it being supplied by then?

A. Don't know.

Q. What?

A. I don't know.

Q. Well, why is your name there?

A. Because maybe I said something about TV6, maybe I said something about RA and Nikolai Glushkov. I doubt that it was I who said something about Pugachev. Because you see here it is written "Pugachev -- in presence of Ruslan": it means the source of information was maybe Ruslan, if it was in his presence, and Ruslan told somebody about it, apparently. That's how I can guess it.

Q. Mr Fomichev was not at this meeting.

A. Huh?

Q. Mr Fomichev wasn't at this meeting.

A. No, but he told somebody maybe who was at this meeting about it because there is a reference that Pugachev said it in the presence of Ruslan. That's how I can understand it. You're asking me to guess: I'm guessing.

Q. Who is Mr Pugachev?

A. Pugachev was not only senator; he had business interests, he had Bank Mejprom.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: He was a senator, was he?

A. He was a senator but I don't remember whether he was a senator at this time or not. I am not very much interested in politics. But I remember he had a bank and then I think the bank lost the licence, but before it lost licence it was quite a big bank.

MR SUMPTION: Mr Pugachev was a close friend and emissary of President Putin, wasn't he, or Acting President Putin at this stage?

A. He was quite close to the authorities.

Q. Yes. And he opened negotiations, didn't he, at the beginning of January with Mr Patarkatsishvili about the future of Mr Berezovsky's other television station, TV6?

A. You see, it only shows that --

Q. First of all, is that true or not?

A. I don't know. I can tell you what I know about TV6.

I can't tell you what other people were discussing when I was not present and when I wasn't actually briefed on it, on the...

This was said at this meeting but for me it was not the information that I knew before, before it was said in this meeting. But I know about TV6 that we were being pressed also about TV6 because we had another TV channel, less important than ORT but still, and of course the authorities wanted us out of this TV channel.

But in the end, Roman Abramovich by the end also helped the authorities out: he approached Badri and said, "Badri, I can pay you $20 million for TV6". And Badri said -- he came and said, "Why taking $20 million from him?" Because it's such huge undervalue, it's ridiculous. "If we take money from him, he will think that he has got a fair deal, a deal, and it's not a deal, it's robbery, so let's just give it to him". And he said, "Roman, we'll just give it to him".

That's --

Q. Were you present on that occasion?

A. Badri told me about that.

Q. Right. Just have a look at the next line --

A. And about TV6 I know a little bit because I was a member of the board of TV6.

Q. Dr Nosova, have a look at the next line. Under the line it says:

"31 Dec[ember] Badri rang to say promised he would be released -- N Nosova."

A. Yes.

Q. Now, that's you, isn't it, giving this information?

A. Yes.

Q. Right. Just as the previous text is you giving information?

A. No. I disagree about Pugachev, I don't think it was me.

Q. Now, further down the page you will see:

"TV6 -- Second asset -- talks with RA, Voloshin, Sergei Ivanov... talked about TV6 & NG."

Mr Ivanov was the secretary of the Russian Federation Security Council, wasn't he?

A. Yes, maybe. Yes, I remember something like this. He had big position, yes.

Q. Yes. After Mr Pugachev's approach, there were direct negotiations between him and Mr Patarkatsishvili also, weren't there?

A. Yes.

Q. And over the page, if the screen could move to the next page, you are describing visits --

A. Where? I don't see it? Where I am describing? I think you went too far, no?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Which line are you referring to? Can it be highlighted on the screen, please?

MR SUMPTION: If you look at the very top of page 9:

"34 Kosygin Street -- official gov[ernment] building -- Sergei Ivanov -- Sec[retary] of Sec[urity] Council of Russia. Part of the group -- he says if we do everything correctly about TV6 -- NG will be freed."

A. Mm-hm.

Q. Now, the promises for Mr Glushkov's release which had originally come from Mr Voloshin were now being made, were they not, by Mr Pugachev and by Mr Ivanov?

A. Just a small correction, I didn't understand: you said that I was describing?

Q. Yes, because the --

A. It was not me who was describing.

Q. The whole --

A. It was Badri, I think.

Q. The whole of the section at the bottom of page 8 and above the line on page 9 is information supplied by you, is it not?

A. No. No. This information I am sure was supplied by Badri. And the previous -- can you go back?

Q. If you look at the bottom of the previous page, page 8 --

- A. "... talks with RA, Voloshin, Sergei Ivanov", I think it was also supplied by Badri.

So your assumption that everything which is under this section is what I said is completely incorrect.

- Q. Do you see at the bottom of the previous page, the last block of text on page 8:

"Natalia Nosova -- Steve Curtis -- doc[ument] escrow -- absolutely sure will be released -- TV6 Badri exchange of all negotiations -- Sergei Ivanov -- Putin asked him to be in [the] middle of [the] deal..."

Now, what I suggest is being said here -- and I suggest it's being said by you -- is that in early 2001 Mr Ivanov had been asked to act as an intermediary by Putin and had offered Mr Glushkov's freedom in return for TV6.

- A. It was not said by me. I can -- actually you need to separate. I can explain you where what I said ends. "Natalie Nosova -- Steve Curtis -- doc[ument] escrow -- absolutely sure will be released", tochka, dot. Everything else is not me.

And I'll explain why I said it. I remembered that at some point in Down Street I met Stephen Curtis, and who was -- who told me, and I also knew it from some other people, that we were considering to sell Kommersant. This is what was going to call the, I don't know, aborted sale of Kommersant.

And the concern was that if we sell -- that we maybe will sell Kommersant, you know, it's also very important, my Lady. Kommersant was very important independent newspaper in Russia. Everybody read it, all the -- not only all the business people; everybody read it. It was our newspaper and it also had magazines and so on.

In 2003 at some point we were starting to experience pressure to sell Kommersant and then Stephen Curtis was working on creating some kind of escrow arrangement, that was the idea: that if we sell Kommersant then Nikolai Glushkov will certainly be released. And this didn't materialise, I don't know the reasons; maybe because it was very difficult to put on paper. It's -- if you sell them this, then Nikolai Glushkov can walk out of jail, maybe people from the other side were not prepared after what happened with Lesin, protocol 6, to take such a risk.

And that's what it refers to. And the big -- "TV6 Badri", I am sure it's all Badri after that.

- Q. Your name appears seven times in this section and I suggest all of that information came from you.
- A. You're absolutely wrong. I already explained what information could be attributed to me, which could come for me and came from me, and what information didn't come from me and even couldn't come from me.

Q. Now, the negotiations with the presidential administration, through various intermediaries, came to an end, didn't they, on 11 April 2001, when the incident occurred which it was later alleged showed that Mr Glushkov was trying to escape? That's when they came to an end, isn't it?

A. The pressure -- to increase the pressure on us this so-called escape attempt was orchestrated.

Q. I'm not asking you about the escape; I'm just trying to establish the date.

A. Yes. What, 11 April, so-called escape attempt? Yes.

Q. All right, let's call it a so-called escape attempt. That was when these negotiations came to an end, right?

A. About Nikolai?

Q. Yes.

A. About Nikolai?

Q. The negotiations with the government.

A. Then, okay, Abramovich stepped into the shoes of the government and now -- and after that, after this alleged escape attempt, we had another situation from Abramovich: "If you don't sell Sibneft to me at the price that I want, Nikolai will stay in jail forever". That's it.

Q. Well now, you refer to that, I believe, in paragraph 308 and following of your witness statement D1/09/168.

Would you like to turn to that? It starts at 306.

Could you open your witness statement on the screen at page 168. At the top of the page is paragraph 306.

A. Yes.

Q. Right. Now, what you say here is that:

"In April 2001, [you] went to see [Mr Berezovsky] in Cap d'Antibes."

A. Yes.

Q. And:

"The purpose of this [meeting] was to discuss the positions of Nikolai and [two of] his associates... who [had been] arrested on 11 April in connection with the alleged escape attempt. When I went there and met Boris, he asked me to estimate how much... Sibneft was worth."

And you discussed that.

A. Mm-hm.

Q. You then say you were not able to give him an exact estimate. And then in paragraph 308:

"At that meeting..."

And I think that must be the April meeting; yes?

A. Yes.

Q. "... we also talked about Nikolai, Vladimir and Igor; about the chances for their release, and the costs of the lawyers and supporting their families while they were in prison, and how they were to be provided for. It was in this context that Boris said to me that Mr Abramovich had told Badri and him that Nikolai would only be released if they sold him their interest in Sibneft, and that otherwise he would stay in prison for a very long time."

Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, one point on which Mr Berezovsky's case has been consistent ever since the letter before action of 2007 is that the only occasion on which Mr Abramovich uttered a threat relating to Mr Glushkov in connection with the sale of Sibneft was at a meeting with Mr Patarkatsishvili in Munich in May 2001. That's his evidence.

Now, you can't, I suggest, have been told by Mr Berezovsky in April that that was what Mr Abramovich was doing.

A. That's my recollection, that I was told about it in April.

Q. Yes. Your recollection cannot be correct if that was a threat that was only made in Munich, a month later?

A. I'm not sure that it wasn't actually formulated by Roman to Badri before that because they were talking and because Abramovich was putting pressure all the time and he was using the position of Nikolai.

Q. Now, this meeting that you had with Mr Berezovsky must have been just after the breakdown of negotiations with the various Russian government representatives, Mr Ivanov and so on, about TV6?

A. I don't think Mr Berezovsky would mix the government negotiations with Abramovich. I would very be much surprised because if I'm not interested in politics, he is.

Q. Well, what I suggest to you is that you are mixing them up.

A. My recollection is that it was like this because Badri was talking to Abramovich, Abramovich now had much more power, and we understood now that he had much more power because -- sorry, my Lady, but this is very important -- when he bought ORT shares from us, he didn't pass them on to the government; he kept them, and it means that Mr Putin allowed him to keep them. It means Mr Putin considered him to be his own man.

And for us it was very significant because we understood how powerful -- it gave us exactly the understanding of his relationship with Mr Putin.

Q. Dr Nosova, you were a director of TV6; you confirmed that a few minutes ago.

A. I was on the board of TV6.

Q. Exactly.

A. Yes.

Q. And you were therefore critically involved with the suggestion that TV6 should be sold in return for Mr Glushkov's release, weren't you?

A. You know, TV -- it was -- TV6 is a more complicated situation because first of all --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just a second.

A. Yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Could you answer the question which is: were you critically involved with the suggestion that TV6 should be sold in return for Mr Glushkov's release? Were you involved in the decision?

A. I was not involved and I'll explain to my Lady why: because it's not a question that we put on the agenda of the board of directors. Can you --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: It's for shareholders, is it?

A. Yes. Can you imagine on the agenda of the meeting of the board of directors a point, "TV6 to exchange for freedom of Glushkov"? Even in Russia at that time it wasn't possible.

MR SUMPTION: Dr Nosova, I am not suggesting that this was ever formally put to any meeting of TV6. What I'm suggesting is that you were involved with considering this proposal because you were a director. I'm not suggesting it was discussed at board level. That explains why you were involved in these discussions with Mr Ivanov.

- A. Directors -- I don't know directors being involved in such discussions. The owners were involved in such discussions, and the owners were Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili.
- Q. Now, it is not possible that Mr Abramovich made statements in relation to the proposed sale of Sibneft about Mr Glushkov's position because that is said to have happened in Munich. What Mr Berezovsky might have been talking to you about in April was the breakdown of negotiations with Mr Ivanov on TV6. Do you follow me?
- A. Mr Sumption, even I couldn't mix up Abramovich with Mr Ivanov, sorry to say that, no matter how uninterested in politics I was. That's my recollection. If the recollection of Mr Berezovsky is different, okay, it's different.
- Q. Now, you say at paragraph 321 of your witness statement --
- A. Which one?
- Q. Paragraph 321. It's on page 170, right at the bottom of the page D1/09/170.

A. Just a moment, I need to find it. 321?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Paragraph 321.

A. And which one? Re Munich, ah, okay.

MR SUMPTION: You say at paragraph 321 that:

"[You] heard from both Boris and Badri about a meeting between Badri and Mr Abramovich at Munich Airport at the beginning of May 2001..."

A. Mm-hm.

Q. "... although neither told me at the time exactly what had been said there. After the meeting, however, it was clear that Boris and Badri were still of the view that they had to sell Sibneft to Mr Abramovich because if they did not he could and would encourage raids which would make their position untenable or the confiscation of their interests."

Now, when you say that there was a concern that Mr Abramovich would encourage raids, what sort of raids and on whom?

A. This concern actually appeared much, much earlier. It started, I think, somewhere autumn 2000, when Abramovich started to say that Boris has still association with the company, his conflict with Putin, it could lead to either confiscation, it could destroy the company, he was saying, it could lead to confiscation of assets and -- no, with Nikolai I think we covered already.

- Q. Which company are you talking about: Sibneft?
- A. Sibneft.
- Q. Are you seriously suggesting that Mr Abramovich was threatening to have his own company raided in order to put pressure on Mr Berezovsky? Is that what you're suggesting?
- A. Mr Sumption, I think you missed a very important point, I'm sorry to say. I several times stressed that when we sold ORT shares to Mr Abramovich, he was allowed by Putin to keep him as his most trusted man. So it shows the relationship between Putin and Abramovich.
- Q. You're not focusing on my question, Dr Nosova.
- A. So -- no, I am focusing on your question. So when you are saying Munich -- it was May, right? May 2001 -- it already happened.
- So Abramovich was quite capable of orchestrating something and then stopping it at an appropriate moment, which could be tax investigations, it could be a threat to the shares, it could be anything. But I am certainly convinced that he wouldn't have left it to go too far and he would have stopped it when it started damaging his own interests. That's the reality that we had at the time.
- Q. I would suggest to you, Dr Nosova, that the idea that Mr Abramovich would encourage raids on his own company in order to bring pressure to bear on Mr Berezovsky in France is absurd and you know that.

- A. It is not absurd. For anyone who knows Russia at the time, it is not absurd at all.
- Q. Would you please look again at bundle R(D)1/06/79.
- A. Which one?
- Q. This is a later point in the draft proof which I was asking you about earlier.
- A. Badri? Is it Badri's proof?
- Q. Yes.
- A. Mm-hm. What the date?
- Q. This is Mr Stephenson's note and the date is June 2007.
- A. Thank you.
- Q. 5, sorry. 2005.
- A. So is it June 2005 or is it December?
- Q. Yes, it's in fact the combined proof based on both notes, so it's June 2005.
- A. Okay.
- Q. Now, do you see what is said about the Munich meeting here?
- A. Can I --
- Q. The section on the Munich meeting actually starts -- I'm trying to help you, Dr Nosova, to find it. If you start at the bottom of the previous page, page 78, there's a heading, "Sale of Sibneft", and I'd like you to read from line 361 on page 78 to line 379 on page 79.

A. Mm-hm. (Pause)

Q. Have you done that?

A. Yes.

Q. If you look between 377 and 379, Mr Patarkatsishvili says that:

"When negotiating this deal there was no specific mention made of [Mr Glushkov] but this was not necessary as it was clear that his release was one of the reasons we were prepared to sell."

A. Mm-hm.

Q. Now, that is what Mr Patarkatsishvili said at this meeting: that there was no specific mention of Mr Glushkov. That's right, isn't it?

A. That's what it says.

Q. And you have no reason, as you say in your witness statement, to believe that that is wrong?

A. Well, I have no reason to believe that what he said was put in wrong way but I have to tell you that there was -- it was not necessary to discuss it because it was discussed before on many, many occasions. So people knew what they were talking about. They discussed it before on many, many occasions.

Q. Though, according to Mr Berezovsky's case, it was only in Munich that there was a threat to Mr Glushkov's position designed to produce a sale of Sibneft.

A. The release of Nikolai was discussed as a condition, was discussed between Badri and Roman many, many, many times before that. That was -- it was not necessary to discuss. And that's why Badri said, "But you know, remember our main condition", and Roman confirms: yes, he remembers, because the main condition that Nikolai shouldn't be kept in jail discussed many, many times before that.

Q. Could you please turn to paragraph 196 of your witness statement D1/09/149. I want to ask you about a completely different topic.

A. 100...?

Q. Yes, would you remind yourself of what you wrote at paragraphs 196 and 197 of your main witness statement about the Eurobond offering circular of 1997. (Pause)

Have you read that, Dr Nosova?

A. 196?

Q. 196 and 197.

A. Oh, okay, sorry. I didn't realise I have to read it. (Pause) Yes.

Q. Leave that open, would you, and could we have up on screen H(A)07/34, which is the relevant part of that circular. What I would like you to read is the paragraph underneath the table of shareholders which begins --

A. I don't see anything.

Q. Do you see a table of shareholders?

A. Here, uh-huh.

Q. Underneath it there's a paragraph that begins:

"FNK, SINS, Refine Oil and Runicom..."

I would like you to read to yourself the whole of that paragraph, please. (Pause)

A. Mm-hm. I've read it.

Q. Now, what that paragraph says, among other things, is that:

"Mr Berezovsky..."

I'm reading from three lines up from the end of the paragraph:

"... does not own or control, or have any other interest in, any shares in Sibneft, directly or indirectly."

A. Mm-hm.

Q. Was that statement true?

A. No.

Q. Now, in your witness statement you say it was technically correct. Why was it technically correct in your view?

A. "Technically correct" referred not to this statement.

"Technically correct" referred to the statement that was supposed to be here, that was agreed could be here, and not to this one. This one, nobody showed this to us. As far as I know, Mr Berezovsky haven't seen it, I haven't seen it. It's some other statement.

- Q. The only statement that was ever shown to you or Mr Berezovsky was the one that we have just read here, wasn't it?
- A. It wasn't shown to us before the circular was published.
- Q. You say at paragraph 195 of your witness statement D1/09/149 that you weren't involved in the preparation of the offering circular.
- A. I wasn't.
- Q. "... but Boris told me that Mr Abramovich had consulted [him] and [Mr Patarkatsishvili] about it before it was published."
- A. He told them about this attempt to raise finance on the international capital markets and he said that again they will distance Boris from it as the public position. That's what he said, as far as I know. Nobody showed Boris what they managed to stick into this circular.
- Q. Well, let's just look at how you describe the document in paragraph 196.
- A. Okay.
- Q. "In the preparation of this Offering Circular, I was aware of the fact that Mr Abramovich had agreed with Boris that there should be a statement in the document confirming the agreed public position which they were adopting: ie that Boris did not have an interest in the company."

A. Mm-hm.

Q. Now, that is precisely the statement that the circular makes, is it not?

A. Not at all. Could I read it myself?

"... I was aware of the fact that Mr Abramovich had agreed" --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, you don't need to read it out aloud. We've all got it on the screen.

A. Okay. My Lady, I need to explain. It's not the statement that is in the circular; it is statement that was supposed to be in the circular and that was supposed to cover only legal interest. That's why I am saying that technically correct, because Sibneft was held by Mr Abramovich, and that's because I refer everywhere in these paragraphs to 1996 agreement.

And then I say that it was Mr Abramovich and Mr Shvidler who were instructing the lawyers and the investment advisers on this circular and they were supposed to explain the real position to them and get their advice whether or not it's possible to include a statement that they agreed to the fact that it would cover only legal interest.

They didn't do that, obviously; they put in something else, something completely different. It was never approved by Mr Berezovsky, it was never approved by myself. We haven't even seen it.

Q. Dr Nosova, you weren't even involved in the preparation of this circular and you have no knowledge --

A. I was not --

Q. Let me finish -- you have no knowledge of the matters which you have covered in your last answer.

A. Why?

Q. There was no other statement, was there?

A. No, no, I have knowledge. Because who is instructing lawyers and investment advisers? The chief financial officer of the company, who was Mr Shvidler.

Q. Then why do you say that you weren't involved in the preparation of the offering circular?

A. I was not involved, but it's common knowledge. You asked whether I am familiar to such documents. Who instructs the lawyers and investment advisers? The chief financial officer of the company. At that time it was Mr Shvidler.

Q. You yourself, in paragraph 196, do not refer to a legal interest; you refer to just "an interest". Your gloss that you were told that it would refer to a legal interest is simply something that you have invented in the course of your oral evidence?

A. You are absolutely wrong. I'm saying "interest" in the 1997 -- in 197. I explain: technically correct, since Sibneft was held by Mr Abramovich. It's obvious it covers only legal interest. It also refers several times to 1996 agreement and the public position which they were adopting.

And by the way, I was shown Mr Abramovich's fourth witness statement and Mr Abramovich himself says that he never showed this circular --

MR SUMPTION: Well, I'm not asking you to comment on other people's evidence.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just a second. Can I just interrupt you. It's not appropriate --

THE WITNESS: Ah, okay, sorry.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: -- for you to comment upon other people's witness statements --

THE WITNESS: Ah, okay, sorry.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: -- unless, again, in re-examination Mr Rabinowitz wishes you, in connection with an answer you've given to Mr Sumption --

THE WITNESS: I'm sorry, my Lady.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: It's all right, don't worry. It's difficult to know the rules of the game sometimes.

THE WITNESS: Yes, we are learning.

MR SUMPTION: Dr Nosova -- just one more question if I may,
my Lady.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well.

MR SUMPTION: Could you look back at paragraph 195
D1/09/149.

These paragraphs which I've been asking you questions about, the evidence that you give in your witness statement at 195 to 197 is not about some earlier or different version of this statement because you start out by referring to the very document that you've got open on your screen. H(A)08/90 is the same document -- that is the circular and participation certificates; that's simply another reference to it.

A. Mr Sumption, it is not about any versions of this circular because we have never seen any versions. We have never seen a single version. The only thing that was discussed, that Roman asked Boris that they will again distance him from the company as usual, meaning legal interest, that's it. And they were supposed to take advice from people who were advising them whether it's possible in such a document to cover only legal interest. Apparently they couldn't do that. And instead of just dropping it, they went all the way, made this blatant denial, which is completely wrong.

- Q. This document was disclosed by Mr Berezovsky, wasn't it?
Look at the bottom of the page on the left.
- A. Maybe, but it doesn't mean that Mr Berezovsky saw it before it was published.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, I think we --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well. 2.05, please, we'll resume for your cross-examination. Can you make sure that during the lunch hour you don't discuss your evidence or the case with anybody.

THE WITNESS: Mm-hm. Thank you.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well. 2.05.

(1.05 pm)

(The short adjournment)

(2.05 pm)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, Mr Sumption.

MR SUMPTION: Dr Nosova, there are a large number of points in your witness statement when you say that this or that statement was made to you at particular times by either Mr Patarkatsishvili or Mr Berezovsky. What I am going to put to you generally is that what you did when preparing your witness statement was to go through all the points in Mr Berezovsky's evidence which you thought were likely to be challenged and simply to stick into your witness statement that he had told you those things at the time, regardless of whether he had or not.

A. Is this a question?

Q. I'm giving you an opportunity to comment on that.

A. This is completely wrong. Absolutely wrong.

Q. Now, one different aspect if I may. Could I ask you to look at bundle H(A)19/10, which is a note of a meeting with Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili prepared in September 2000 by Mr Samuelson of Valmet.

Have you seen this document before?

A. It was shown to me.

Q. Were you present at this meeting?

A. No, I was not.

Q. You did, however, have other meetings with Mr Samuelson of Valmet, did you not?

A. I did; not only with him but also with people who were working in different Valmet offices.

Q. Yes.

A. MTM.

Q. Now, do you see on the second page, page 11 of the bundle H(A)19/11, a statement saying -- this is about five/six lines from the top of the page:

"We will start by moving the Sibneft holdings into the funds in about ten days. These holdings are owned through Cypriot companies mainly today."

Did you at any stage tell Valmet that?

A. About ten days?

- Q. No. Did you at any stage tell Valmet that Sibneft was held through Cypriot companies?
- A. It could be, yes.
- Q. Are they?
- A. Were they at the time?
- Q. Yes.
- A. My recollection, yes, they were.
- Q. You're talking therefore, are you, about Cypriot companies of Mr Abramovich?
- A. Yes.
- Q. Which companies are they?
- A. Now I don't remember their names. But they were -- it was not Cypriot companies of Mr Berezovsky or Mr Patarkatsishvili; they were Cypriot companies of Mr Abramovich.
- Q. Right, I see. So you think you may have been the source of that information?
- A. As well Ruslan could be the source of this information.
- Q. What about the statement that appears in the next paragraph, which consists of just one line:
- "BB and AP also own a large stake in Aeroflot..."
- Did you tell Valmet at any stage that?
- A. No, I didn't, because we didn't own shares in Aeroflot. Maybe we had a very small stake which was just bought on the market, but it was not -- obviously it's not the stake that Samuelson is describing here.

Q. So do you have any knowledge of how Mr Samuelson could have obtained that information?

A. It could -- maybe he just misunderstood what Boris was telling him because Boris obviously was telling him about future project because for some time it was considered to -- there was some synergy in combining Aeroflot and Transaero activities.

We already owned Transaero, we owned a big stake in Transaero, which was actually controlling stake, but we didn't have the same in Aeroflot. So I can only presume he was maybe talking a future project to get a stake, a big stake, in Aeroflot and then do -- maybe a merger, maybe not a merger -- cooperation between two airlines. And I think that Samuelson just didn't understand him.

Q. Dr Nosova --

A. But it's my guess. Sorry, I need to say.

Q. There's just one other thing I want to ask you. It's about a document which has just been brought to my attention, although it involves dealing with a matter that I asked you about at the outset of your cross-examination.

Could we please have onscreen L(2001)1/207.

MR MALEK: 2011?

MR SUMPTION: Yes, L(2011)1/207. Have you got that? You should have in front of you a letter of 18 February from Addleshaws to Skadden Arps.

A. Mm-hm.

Q. Right. Now, this letter is about documents in your possession of which disclosure was sought.

A. Mm-hm.

Q. And if you look on the second page of the letter, you will see that it was copied to Charles Fussell & Co.

A. Mm-hm.

Q. Now, Charles Fussell & Co, were they your personal solicitors?

A. Yes.

Q. And did they draw up the disclosure statement which was made on your behalf about documents in your possession?

A. Yes --

Q. Now --

A. -- and I of course approved it.

Q. Sorry?

A. Yes, yes.

Q. Who approved what?

A. I approved the statement.

Q. You approved it, yes.

Well now, in the last paragraph on the first page of this letter reasons are given why your documents are not at the disposal of Mr Berezovsky.

A. Mm-hm.

Q. What this says is:

"... we understand that any attempt to determine which documents held by Dr Nosova are BB Documents and which are not BB Documents... would be highly complex. Mr Berezovsky does not have, has no right to, and has no proper basis for requesting, a complete list of Dr Nosova's documents. Dr Nosova has never been Mr Berezovsky's employee, and we are informed that there is not (and never has been) any formal contractual arrangements between our client and Dr Nosova."

Now, I think you acknowledge that that statement is not correct?

A. In what respect?

Q. There was a formal contractual arrangement between you --

A. In what respect?

Q. Sorry?

A. In what respect?

Q. There was a formal contractual arrangement between Mr Berezovsky and you, wasn't there?

A. Which one?

Q. The contract under which you receive 1 per cent.

A. Something different completely. Because what is being said here that I wasn't his employee, which is correct, and there is a reference to Logovaz times. At Logovaz I was not employee of Mr Berezovsky; I was his deputy.

Q. Did you see this document? Were you consulted about this document, Dr Nosova, and your position?

A. The dis -- this document prepared by Charles Fussell?

Q. No. This letter was copied to Charles Fussell --

A. I need to look at it again.

Q. Okay. Copied to your solicitors.

A. From Addleshaw Goddard. I don't -- to Skadden Arps, okay. (Pause)

As far as I remember, Addleshaw Goddard were dealing with my lawyer, Charles Fussell, about this letter.

Q. Yes. Now, this letter, as you can see after the signature of Addleshaw Goddard, was copied to your lawyers, Charles Fussell.

A. Yes.

Q. And what I want you to tell us is: did you see it?

A. I think I saw it when Charles Fussell received it.

Q. Yes, and you must have noticed that Addleshaw Goddard were saying that there was no formal contractual arrangement between Mr Berezovsky and yourself?

A. Yes.

Q. And you must have realised that there was a formal contractual arrangement between Mr Berezovsky and yourself: the contract that we were talking about this morning?

A. No, because what is meant here, it's other contractual arrangements.

Q. What contractual arrangements?

A. Here the point is I was equally close to Boris and Badri, I was advising them on the affairs of the joint venture and I held documents for both of them. I had documents for Badri, I had documents for Boris, I had documents for their joint venture, and it was sometimes very difficult to identify for whom I have these documents.

So I'm not a lawyer myself but, as I was explained, it was very difficult to distinguish which documents I hold for the joint venture which is disputed, which documents I hold in some other capacity. So to avoid these disputes on whose behalf I am holding a certain document -- there were many, right? -- so the parties came to an agreement that I will be doing a disclosure as a third party. That's what it's all about.

Q. Yes, I understand what it's all about, Dr Nosova, but it's not the aspect of this letter which I wish to draw your attention to.

This letter says that there is no formal contractual arrangement between Mr Berezovsky and you, and that statement was untrue, wasn't it?

- A. It was true because I didn't work for Boris Berezovsky on a contract basis.
- Q. But you had a formal contract with him, didn't you?
- A. But it doesn't mean that I worked for him under a contract.
- Q. No. I'm not suggesting that you worked for him in the sense of being an employee. You had a formal contract with him, didn't you?
- A. Mr Sumption, I am not a lawyer and especially I am not a labour lawyer. So I still disagree with you. My opinion is different.
- Q. Is the 1 per cent agreement a contract or is it not?
- A. Many things are contracts, agreements; it doesn't mean that they cover the contractual relationship which is meant here. Here it's obvious that this is not meant here, this kind of contractual arrangement. What is meant here was: was I under control of Mr Berezovsky as, for example, somebody who was working in his office for salary or under contract? I was not; that's true.
- Q. The recital of the 1 per cent agreement records that you had agreed to assist Mr Berezovsky with his litigation, and you had, hadn't you?
- A. Yes.
- Q. You were perfectly content that this kind of statement should be made in a letter by Addleshaw Goddard to Skadden Arps because you never wanted the 1 per cent arrangement to see the light of day, did you?

A. This is completely untrue. Completely untrue. When I was looking at it, I never linked it with that because in my opinion what is meant here completely different.

Q. And when your disclosure statement was prepared by Charles Fussell, it did not include any reference to the 1 per cent contract, did it?

A. No.

MR SUMPTION: Thank you.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Sumption, could you give me, please, for the record, the page reference to the agreement that you took Dr Nosova to earlier this morning?

MR SUMPTION: Yes: it is H(A)98/43.007.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you.

Yes, Mr Malek.

Cross-examination by MR MALEK

MR MALEK: Dr Nosova, can you please turn to your statement, which is at D1/09/155. Do you have that in front of you? This is a section of your statement under the heading "The Aluminium Assets" which starts at the previous page, at 225. What I would like to do is look at paragraph 231.

A. Could I ask you to refer to paragraphs because my pages are different because it's blown in another format.

Q. Yes, paragraph 231. What you tell us is that:

"By early 2000, Boris in particular had developed a close affinity with England. He was particularly impressed with its democratic society and its fair system of law, and he respected the English judicial system, which he very often referred to as the 'British system'."

At paragraph 232 you say this:

"It was standard practice by this time for Boris and Badri to hold their assets through overseas, including offshore, vehicles and to use a western system of law as the governing law of acquisition agreements and other contracts. In the early and mid-1990s, Swiss structures and Swiss law as the governing law were widely used by them. However, by the end of 1999/early 2000, an obvious shift had already occurred to use common law offshore structures and English law as the governing law."

What is the basis of your knowledge? Were you involved in these structures that you're referring here as the financial adviser for Mr Berezovsky?

A. First of all, early and mid-'90s, it's still Logovaz.

I was deputy general manager of Logovaz and some time later first deputy general manager of Logovaz: my responsibility was finance. I was involved in it.

I knew which structures were created and I knew we had a number of contracts, agreements, and we often used Swiss law.

Q. Is this a reference to Logovaz or is this a reference to Badri and Mr Berezovsky personally?

A. It is early and mid-'90s, Badri and Boris were at the time at Logovaz, so it's very difficult to distinguish. They owned Logovaz, Logovaz was a separate entity. So it was used by Logovaz and they know their affairs. But with -- it wasn't only Swiss; we were using other offshore structures also.

Q. So how should paragraph 232 read? Where it says, "In the early and mid-1990s Swiss structures and Swiss law as the governing law were widely used by them", should that read "widely used by Logovaz"? Or can you help us --

A. Not only Logovaz, by Boris and Badri also, because it was used by companies, offshore companies, not Russian companies but other companies: companies that we had abroad and we used for our business.

Q. You refer at paragraph --

A. And they were owners of these companies.

Q. In paragraph 232, you say:

"It was standard practice by this time..."

Do we take "by this time" to mean early 2000? Is that the period of time that you're referring to by the use of the phrase "by this time"?

A. In this paragraph I made a distinction because I was talking "By early 2000" in the previous paragraph and then I explain that it was not always like this, it changed over the time, because in the early period we were more inclined to use Swiss structures and Swiss law but with the passage of time we more and more started to use common law offshore structures and English law.

Q. If we look at the last sentence of paragraph 232:

"By the end of 1999/early 2000, an obvious shift had already occurred to use common law offshore structures..."

Can we look at the position at the end of 1999: what common law structures are you referring to there?

A. We were using, for example, British Virgin Islands.

Q. For what purpose?

A. For our offshore companies.

Q. And what were those offshore companies doing?

A. The offshore companies we had, we used them for different business: we used them for cars business that we still had, we used them for subsidiaries of our Swiss companies, for many purposes.

Q. If we look at paragraph 232, the first sentence:

"It was standard practice by this time for Boris and Badri to hold their assets through overseas, including offshore, vehicles..."

Can you explain to us why Mr Berezovsky was holding assets in offshore vehicles? What was the reason for that, according to your understanding?

- A. It started very early in the day. I explained in my witness statement: when I was invited to work at Logovaz, the initial meeting I had, it was with Boris and Badri -- with Boris and Nikolai Glushkov, and Nikolai Glushkov specifically, he explained the strategy to develop the business and a very important element of this strategy was creating offshore companies. And it was 1991/1992: not many people in Russia at that time used offshore companies and at least not efficiently. It all happened later.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Sorry, not efficiently or not officiously?

- A. Not efficiently.

So Logovaz was one of the first big companies that started to use not just shell offshore companies but offshore companies that were doing real business. You know the history, it was described how Forus was created, Anros, Forus, Andava, but there were also other offshore companies and they were satellite companies around the subsidiaries.

MR MALEK: Would it be right to say that Mr Berezovsky's assets were invariably held through offshore companies, for example like properties, his property in England and in the south of France?

A. In the time he didn't have these properties in England or south of France so...

Q. But in the end of 1999?

A. In the end of 1999, not necessarily, because both offshore structures were used and sometimes assets were owned in the name of Mr Berezovsky or members of his family. I can't say that invariably all the interests were held through offshore companies.

Besides, we know that, for example, Sibneft was held by Mr Abramovich on oral agreement. So it was not held through offshore companies belonging to Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili.

Q. At the end of 1999 what assets did Mr Berezovsky hold in his own name of a substantial nature?

A. There were some shares in his own name, both in Russia and abroad.

Q. Yes.

A. But he actually -- the shares he -- in 1996, almost everything he transferred to Badri because with Badri he also had an agreement for his protection.

- Q. That's not my question. My question is: in 1999 can you give us an example of substantial assets held in Mr Berezovsky's personal name, rather than in a trust or offshore company? Can you think of anything?
- A. He had just a shareholding in Logovaz, part of it, in his personal name because it was frozen by the Russian authorities; it could not be transferred to Badri.
- Q. And any other asset that you are aware of?
- A. There was some real estate. There was some real estate.
- Q. Where?
- A. Real estate in England. But it was not in his name, maybe it was in the name of his wife.
- Q. No, I'm asking about assets in his own name.
- A. I think TV6, while we still had that, part of it was in his own name.
- Q. And how much?
- A. This is difficult for me to remember now. But part of this stake in TV6, I think it was a significant part, it was in his own name.
- Q. Can you turn to paragraph 228 D1/09/155, where there's a section dealing with the acquisition of the aluminium assets.
- A. Mm-hm.
- Q. You've been listening to the evidence and have heard about the KrAZ assets which were acquired in early 2000.

Do you recall the press statement where Mr Berezovsky told the media that Logovaz had acquired the aluminium interest? Was that something that you were in court to listen or would you like to see the document referring to that?

A. No, I don't need to see the document because for Logo -- you know, don't forget that in Russia Yukos was very often called Menatep Group, though Yukos is Yukos. Same, assets of Logovaz, they can -- people could refer to them as Logovaz. The assets via Logovaz or shareholders of Logovaz, owners of Logovaz held interest. So till today we consider ourselves to be Logovaz Group; this is true.

Q. So the statement to the media that Logovaz had acquired the aluminium assets, do you think that was a correct statement?

A. Shareholders of Logovaz, owners of Logovaz acquired aluminium assets.

Q. Now, at 230 you explain that:

"The ['H' and 'O'] structure was put in place to offer asset protection for Boris's and Badri's oil and aluminium assets."

Do you see that in front of you?

A. Which?

Q. Paragraph 230 of your statement.

A. 230, yes. (Pause)

Yes.

Q. I'm not going to ask you questions about Mr Berezovsky's case as to whether or not he acquired the KrAZ assets in early 2000, but can you confirm this: that, as far as you are aware, no offshore vehicle of Mr Berezovsky ever held those assets?

A. Assets that were put in "H" and "O" structure?

Q. No, the assets that -- you refer at paragraph 230 about the "asset protection for Boris's and Badri's oil and aluminium assets".

A. No, I need to explain here to my Lady that the main purpose for creating "H" and "O" structure was to put there their oil and aluminium interests, but it was not the only purpose because we also put there TV6, Kommersant, some other -- and then newly acquired assets also, but it happened later, because it was not used for its primary purpose. The main purpose was to put assets which were oil and aluminium interests.

Q. Let me try and ask the question once again. As far as you're aware, no offshore vehicle of Mr Berezovsky ever acquired those oil and aluminium assets; that's correct, isn't it?

A. Before putting oil and aluminium assets into these structures, Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili had to use the right that they had according to agreements with Mr Abramovich, so that when they call for their shares, Mr Abramovich was obliged to transfer them to them.

So the structures needed to be created. It took time to create these structures because they're very complicated, very, very complex, because they were supposed to be very well protected.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Protected from what?

A. From Russian authorities. So... but after the structures had been created, the idea was to transfer -- to call for the shares of Sibneft and Rusal that were held by Mr Abramovich and transfer them into the structure. That was the idea.

MR MALEK: Let me try and make it even more simple.

Think about the KrAZ assets that were acquired in 2000. You know what I'm talking about?

A. Mm-hm.

Q. It's right to say that those KrAZ assets never found their way into an offshore company belonging to Mr Berezovsky, did they?

A. Because apparently Mr Abramovich didn't keep his obligation, didn't transfer them.

MR MALEK: I've no further questions.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you.

MR ADKIN: My Lady, I do have some questions.

Cross-examination by MR ADKIN

MR ADKIN: Dr Nosova, my first question is: can you hear me properly from here?

A. Not as well as the others, but I still can hear something.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, speak up, Mr Adkin, that's all.

MR ADKIN: Did your husband draft the 1 per cent agreement that we've been talking about this morning?

A. Yes, he did.

Q. You said that you worked for Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Berezovsky --

A. Yes.

Q. -- and you looked after financial matters for them?

A. Yes, exactly.

Q. And presumably you had a reasonably good awareness of their investments?

A. Yes.

Q. And that remained the position, did it, when Mr Patarkatsishvili died?

A. Yes.

Q. Was your husband also aware of their investments?

A. Not of all of them; of part of them. Here I need to explain to my Lady, if I may, that the investments were managed actually by four groups of people and entities: it was MTM and which -- and later LMC corporate service providers, who were managing part of the assets; it was Salford investment management who were managing Rainbow Fund --

Q. Dr Nosova, I hesitate to interrupt but this isn't the question that I asked.

A. No, no, it's very relevant to your question.

Q. Well --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Let her finish, please, the explanation. But keep it short, please, Dr Nosova.

A. Yes. They were managing Rainbow Fund and some other assets. There was Mr Anisimov, Mr Anisimov who also managed a very, very big group of assets. And there was also Joseph Kay, who managed a group of assets.

So that's the question -- the answer to your question, Mr Adkin.

MR ADKIN: And one of the assets that Mr Anisimov, you say, managed on behalf of Mr Berezovsky was Metalloinvest, wasn't it?

A. Yes, it was.

Q. Yes. Could you please take up bundle H(A)95, and turn to page 56 H(A)95/56. Do you have that?

A. Yes.

Q. This is the last in a number of draft deeds between Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Berezovsky.

A. Mm-hm.

- Q. And it was disclosed, along with five others, by Streathers, which is your husband's firm.
- A. Mm-hm.
- Q. We are told that the date upon which the deeds were produced -- and this one, one can see from page 56 -- is the handwritten date at the top. Do you see that? "4.9.2007".
- A. Is it one of the versions?
- Q. This is the last version in time.
- A. The last version?
- Q. This is the last version.
- A. Because there were several versions.
- Q. There were indeed several versions. Do you remember these documents?
- A. Yes, I do.
- Q. And do you remember being involved in having produced these documents?
- A. Yes, I remember. Yes.
- Q. Now, these deeds purport to record an agreement between Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili to separate their various business affairs. Do you recall that? Do you recall what they purport to say?
- A. Not exactly.
- Q. Well, you can take it from me that that is what they purport to say but, as we understand it, Mr Berezovsky says that these deeds are in fact false and that they purport to record an agreement which was never in fact made between him and Mr Patarkatsishvili.

Do you agree with that analysis?

A. I think the most important thing to say here is these deeds were never signed. Moreover, Mr Berezovsky never seen these deeds. It never come to that, right? It was idea of Badri and he was thinking of whether it is possible for asset protection to create some document, without distorting reality, legal document that could distance Boris again from the assets.

Q. Can I go back to my question, please, Dr Nosova.

Do you agree that these deeds purport to record something that did not actually happen?

A. When these deeds were being created, it wasn't clear whether something will happen or not because it would depend on the principals because these, when -- if they were progressed to the point when they became more or less complete documents, would have been given for consideration to the principals. It was never given to Badri -- to Boris. Badri was looking at them several times.

And with this very last deed, on 4 September -- if it is the last deed; I just take your word for it -- Badri came up with something that was impossible to do.

Can I tell my Lady what it was?

MR ADKIN: Dr Nosova, I don't want to --

MR RABINOWITZ: My Lady, before this conversation carries on much further, Mr Adkin of course is here just to deal with the overlap issues. I don't know where he's going with these questions. This is an issue, the effect and status of this document -- your Ladyship will have heard it referred to, I think, as the economic divorce -- which is one for the Chancery trial, not for this trial.

Now, again, I don't know where my learned friend is going with these questions but I do need to put down that marker because I think he has been, or at least on the verge, going over a line and I just want to make that clear both to your Ladyship and to my learned friend.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. Mr Adkin, I am very conscious that I am not going to be deciding Chancery issues that are not overlap issues.

MR ADKIN: My Lady, I am very conscious of that too and I want to say to your Ladyship and to the witness that for the purposes of this cross-examination I'm perfectly happy to accept, for these purposes only, Mr Berezovsky's case that these are false documents and that they do not record something that actually happened. That doesn't matter for my --

MR RABINOWITZ: With respect to my learned friend, that sort of pejorative way of putting it I think really doesn't help anyone. If he wants to say these documents were never agreed and never signed, that's fine. If he wants to say that Mr Berezovsky says that he didn't actually finally agree to what's here, that's fine. It was never put to Mr Berezovsky. But if he's going to go further and put it in a pejorative way, in my respectful submission --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I don't know that he was putting it in a pejorative way.

MR RABINOWITZ: I think he was suggesting they were false documents.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: That's Mr Berezovsky's case.

MR RABINOWITZ: No, that's the way my learned friend is characterising Mr Berezovsky and it's that that I object to.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Okay. Well, what is clear is that they're draft documents and the witness has told us that they were never signed up and that is common ground.

MR RABINOWITZ: Indeed.

MR ADKIN: Indeed.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: And we don't need, I think, to go into whether there was or was not any sort of agreement between the parties which these documents, if signed, might have reflected.

MR ADKIN: My Lady, absolutely, and I don't intend to do that in any way because I'm very conscious that there is a line over which I must not tread.

What I want to ask is this: presumably, Dr Nosova, whatever status these documents have, the purpose of your input into these documents was to make them look as genuine as they could do by accurately recording the status of the investments between Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili?

- A. That was not the purpose and that was not my role, to make something good -- look good or real when it was not. My role was always different. And when I told Badri that it's impossible to write in these documents what he thought was possible, the whole project was abandoned.
- Q. Can I ask you, please, to take up page 59 of the bundle that you're in H(A)95/59. Now, as we understand the documents, you will see on page 59 and page 60 two schedules and they set out various investments. As we understand the documents, these schedules purport to set out the investments which were made between Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Berezovsky.
- A. These schedules do not purport to set out anything because it's only part of the investments and it is only a small part of the investments. The schedules were never complete.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: What, Mr Adkin, I need to know before I let this cross-examination go further is why these draft documents are of relevance to the overlap issues.

MR ADKIN: My Lady, they are of relevance because I am going to put to the witness what is in these schedules and what is not in these schedules. I'm going to suggest to the witness that there are certain significant investments missing from these schedules which would otherwise be in them if Mr Berezovsky had an interest in Rusal or the proceeds of sale of Rusal or the investments purchased with those proceeds of sale.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, the value of a draft document is questionable, isn't it?

MR ADKIN: Well, my Lady, there are three documents which have schedules, all of them are the same --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Well, I'm going to let you put the question.

MR ADKIN: Dr Nosova, you can take it from me that in three of the six draft deeds that have been produced the schedules are exactly the same, save that one investment has moved from the second schedule to the first schedule.

A. Okay.

Q. What I want to ask you is this: nowhere, I suggest to you, in either the first schedule or the second schedule is Metalloinvest mentioned as an asset that was held as part of the joint venture between Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili, is it?

A. My Lady, could --

Q. Do you agree with that?

A. I agree that it's not mentioned. There is a reason.

Q. Well, we'll come on to the reason.

A. I need to tell --

Q. Nowhere in either of the schedules --

MR RABINOWITZ: With respect to my learned friend, he asks a question: the witness is trying to answer it and explain the position and he won't let her do it.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, well, I'm going to allow the witness, once the alleged admitted assets have been identified, to give her reasons why she says those assets were omitted from this draft document.

THE WITNESS: Okay, thank you.

MR ADKIN: My Lady, absolutely.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So just identify which assets you say were missed from these schedules, Mr Adkin, please.

MR ADKIN: Nowhere in either of these schedules is any other asset which was acquired with the $585 million paid out from the second Rusal sale in July 2004 identified, is it?

A. No, this is not true because here is identified Rainbow Fund and part of the investments in Rainbow Fund were made with the Rusal monies.

But it's not the main answer to your question. I'll answer you when your Lady allow me.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, just identify the assets you say were not in these schedules.

MR ADKIN: Well, the assets that Mr Berezovsky says in his main Chancery action were acquired with the proceeds of that $585 million include Metalloinvest, Kulevi Port, a Mosselprom poultry factory; none of those is mentioned in any of these schedules, is it, Dr Nosova?

A. Is it time to give full answer or should I --

Q. Do you agree with that?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just agree whether they're mentioned or not, will you?

A. They're not mentioned.

MR ADKIN: Now, you've been wanting to give your explanation as to why; would you do so, please.

A. Yes. In the very beginning, my Lady, do you remember I insisted to explain that there were four groups of people and entities who were managing assets: Valmet, which became MTM and then LMC took over; Mr Anisimov with his people; Mr Joseph Kay; and Salford.

So this, as I mentioned here, it was the knowledge of LMC. Had these drafts ever come to completion, then Mr Anisimov, Mr Joseph Kay and Mr Salford would have been requested to complete the schedules and then there will be Metalloinvest, Kulevi Port, this poultry factory, all the assets managed by Salford, Fisher Island and the other assets managed by Joseph Kay; everything.

That's the answer.

- Q. Well, none of the assets in the first schedule was managed by LMC at all, was it?
- A. What?
- Q. None of the assets in the first schedule was managed by LMC at all, was it?
- A. These are the assets that we had in Russia and that we have sold. Transaero, the companies that received the proceeds of transfer were managed by LMC. KPH was all managed by LMC. Spartak Moscow, there was a kind of promissory -- it was commercial paper, it was also received by a company managed by LMC. Forus, there was a role of LMC in this transaction. Latvia TV too. Avtoconsortium also. So all these were within the knowledge of LMC.

And the same assets -- where is this other schedule? Could I have a look at that?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: The second schedule, you mean, in this document?

MR ADKIN: Page 60 H(A)95/60.

A. These were projects either managed by LMC or projects into which LMC made payments, they were on records, they knew about this project. For example, TG Project, B Media, these were projects managed by Salford, but LMC, formerly MTM, before them. They have made so many payments into these projects that they knew about it.

Q. Well, Project Embassy, that was a Salford project, was it not?

A. It was Salford, that's what I'm saying, but LMC --

Q. And B Media was also a Salford project, wasn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. So when you said a few moments ago that these were all LMC projects and that the reason why the Metalloinvest and Kulevi weren't mentioned is because this was just limited to LMC, that was not correct, was it, Dr Nosova?

A. No, you are distorting my words or maybe you just, sorry, didn't hear what I said, because I have the problem with the sound.

I said that LMC were aware of some of these projects that were actually managed by Salford because LMC were either paying money or their predecessors paid money to this project, quite big amounts, and it was in LMC's databases; that's why LMC knew about it. But there were other projects managed by Salford where cashflow didn't go through LMC. They're not here. Kulevi Port, Metalloinvest, the cashflow never went through LMC. They're not here.

So the idea was if this document ever came to completion then all these four groups of people who were managing investments, including Mr Anisimov, Joseph Kay, Salford and LMC, just to check whether they didn't miss anything, it would have been completed. This is not full schedules at all; it's just a hint.

Q. I suggest, Dr Nosova, that the reason why the assets -- Metalloinvest, Kulevi, Mosselprom -- that were derived from the second Rusal sale are not in this document is because those were not assets that Mr Berezovsky or Mr Patarkatsishvili ever regarded as being Mr Berezovsky's or that Mr Berezovsky had an interest in.

A. Completely wrong.

MR ADKIN: My Lady, I have no further questions, other than formally to adopt the lines of cross-examination.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right, thank you. Mr Mumford?

MR MUMFORD: My Lady, I have no questions.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you. Yes, Mr Rabinowitz.

Re-examination by MR RABINOWITZ

MR RABINOWITZ: Just one question, Dr Nosova.

You were asked earlier today whether you were personally involved in making the agreements of 1995 and 1996, whether you were involved personally in the auctions in 1997 or indeed personally involved in the acquisition of the aluminium assets, February 2000, or indeed in Rusal, and you explained that you were not personally involved in this.

It was then suggested to you that the information in your witness statement that you give about these transactions is all knowledge that would have come to you simply by being told about these things by Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili, and you made clear that that was not right and you had knowledge about these matters outside of the fact that they were mentioned to you by Mr Berezovsky and Badri.

Can you just explain the basis for that answer, please?

A. It was -- first of all, Boris and Badri, they were quite open with me about these meetings. They told me a lot. Second, I witnessed dealings between these people in these assets and also I participated in events.

Can I make an example?

Q. Please.

A. We had a meeting in Israel in 2004 where Badri invited me to go with him and Dmitry Bosov to the house of Lev Chernoi and what the agenda for Mr Bosov was, he claimed that Badri, Boris and Mr Abramovich owed him commission for the acquisition of aluminium assets in 2000 and he wanted this discussion to be in the presence of Lev Chernoi because Lev Chernoi was also one of the sellers. And they discussed in front of me, people who were party to this transaction, who were sellers of these aluminium assets, because you know Lev Chernoi was a seller, Dmitry Bosov was a seller, and they discussed in front of me how they sold these assets to Badri, Boris and Mr Abramovich.

So I think it's also knowledge. This is just one of the examples. I may continue; I have many.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I see. Thank you.

MR RABINOWITZ: Thank you, Dr Nosova.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I have one question for you.

The commission agreement that you have entered into with Mr Berezovsky, have you received any payment under it already in respect of any of the litigation recoveries?

A. No.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Nothing in respect of the North Shore litigation?

A. Nothing.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well. Thank you very much indeed for coming to assist the court.

THE WITNESS: Thank you. Thank you very much.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, on that last point, we understand that actual recoveries on the North Shore litigation have been minimal.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Thank you.

Right, next witness I think, please.

MR RABINOWITZ: Thank you, Dr Nosova.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you very much.

(The witness withdrew)

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Voronoff.

MR VLADIMIR VORONOFF (affirmed)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Please sit down if you would like to.

Examination-in-chief by MR RABINOWITZ

MR RABINOWITZ: Good afternoon, Mr Voronoff.

A. Good afternoon.

Q. Mr Voronoff, just to confirm, you don't have a mobile phone or any other electronic device with you?

A. No, no, it's not even with me.

Q. Can I ask that you be given bundle D2, please, opened at tab 15 D2/15/73. You should, I hope, see a document titled "Witness Statement of Vladimir Voronoff" there.

A. I do.

Q. And can you go to page 88 of the bundle D2/15/188.

You should be looking at the numbers on the bottom right-hand corner.

A. I'm here.

Q. Can you confirm that that's your signature?

A. It is.

Q. And that this is your only witness statement in these proceedings?

A. That's right.

Q. Can you confirm that the contents of your witness statement are true to the best of your knowledge and belief?

A. Yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: Thank you. Can you wait there, please.

Cross-examination by MS DAVIES

MS DAVIES: Mr Voronoff, you first met Mr Berezovsky in 1994?

A. Correct.

Q. And after meeting him, you relatively quickly started assisting him in various ventures; is that right?

A. Generally, yes.

Q. Mr Goldfarb, do you know him?

A. Yes.

Q. He describes you as being "Mr Berezovsky's point man in Europe by late 1995", by which I understand him to mean a point of contact in Europe for Mr Berezovsky. Would you agree?

A. To a large extent, yes. Not fully, though, because Europe is large.

Q. So parts of Europe, including the UK?

A. Definitely. Definitely including the UK, yes.

Q. And as a result did you see Mr Berezovsky and communicate regularly with him over the years that followed?

A. That's right.

Q. And you travelled extensively together?

A. We did, especially in the '90s.

Q. And you quickly became very good friends?

A. Well, let's not define "quickly" but, yes, over a certain period of time we became very good friends, very close.

Q. In your statement at paragraph 13 D2/15/76 you say:

"... we quickly became... close."

A. Yes, but I mean, we can go into discussion how quickly it was.

Q. Okay. And you remain --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, I don't think that's relevant.

MS DAVIES: Sorry, my Lady.

You remain close friends now?

A. We do.

Q. And you were also a close friend of Mr Patarkatsishvili from 1997?

A. Probably even before then. But very close, yes.

Q. And so presumably you also saw and communicated regularly with Mr Patarkatsishvili between 1997 at least and his death?

A. That's right.

Q. Now, you've been based in London since 1991; is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. Is one of the companies you're associated with a company called Stargate Management Limited?

A. Yes.

Q. And did that company share offices with Mr Berezovsky or Mr Fomichev in Savile Row for a time in 2000?

A. It did for a short time, yes. But not with Mr Fomichev; Mr Berezovsky, yes.

Q. Mr Berezovsky.

Did Mr Berezovsky purchase a property for your use in 2002?

A. In -- you mean an apartment?

Q. A property.

A. Yes.

Q. Is that the flat in Holland Park Avenue in which you state you currently live?

A. That's right.

- Q. And does Mr Berezovsky still own that property?
- A. For all my knowledge, yes.
- Q. Would it be fair to say you have strong feelings of loyalty to Mr Berezovsky?
- A. Well, we are very close friends.
- Q. Do you have any arrangement whereby you stand to benefit financially in the event that Mr Berezovsky succeeds in his claim?
- A. No.
- Q. Given your close friendship with Mr Berezovsky, you have no doubt discussed his claims against Mr Abramovich with him on several occasions?
- A. Yes.
- Q. Many times?
- A. No, not really, you know. Actually few times, very few times.
- Q. And have you been present in court?
- A. From -- as apart from today?
- Q. Apart from today?
- A. One day.
- Q. Which day was that, Mr Voronoff?
- A. Well, it was when Mr Berezovsky was giving evidence, it was last week, but I can't remember. But I can check, if you want me to check.
- Q. Can you remember what subjects were being covered?

A. It was already Rusal, it was not -- it was not Sibneft anymore, it was already Rusal.

Q. Okay, thank you. We can locate it.

Now, when did you first meet Mr Abramovich?

A. I think it was '95. I'm pretty sure it was '95.

Something is wrong with the glass. The glass is broken. Sorry. It's a mess here with the water.

Q. Do you need to clear that up?

A. Well, I'm being helped by somebody. The plastic is not really... is not very enduring. I'm okay.

Q. I don't want you to get all wet, Mr Voronoff.

A. Yes. Well, I am already so...

Pray continue.

Q. So we were just on when you first met Mr Abramovich.

A. I think it was in 1995.

Q. And was that through Mr Berezovsky at the Logovaz Club?

A. It was specifically through Mr Berezovsky who introduced us.

Q. And you did not have a business relationship with Mr Abramovich thereafter yourself?

A. Business relationship, no.

Q. In 1995 -- and I'm focusing on 1995 for the moment and the period prior to Sibneft's creation -- is essentially what happened that you would bump into Mr Abramovich sometimes when you were at the Logovaz Club wanting to see Mr Berezovsky?

A. Yes, now I will be true: and I think also abroad sometimes when we travelled together, we travelled with Roman or, you know, see him abroad from time to time. But, yes, essentially it's true.

Q. But you did not actively participate in any meetings between Mr Abramovich and Mr Berezovsky, did you?

A. Not specifically, I mean, unless it was a special need for me to do so. What happened was, like in the case of Dr Nosova, you know, when I was in a group of people, things were discussed, you know, which did not necessarily have anything to do with me but, you know, I guess for a reason of being trusted I was never asked to leave the room, I was just there, you know, and then we would discuss other things.

And once or twice it was specific meetings, you know, with Boris and Roman and myself, specifically called, but that was rare.

Q. You were not yourself participating -- as in being directly involved in the discussions rather than just being in a room when they were going on -- in any detailed discussions between Mr Berezovsky and Mr Abramovich about the Sibneft project, were you?

A. No. I was not a participant, active participant.

Q. Now, you do tell us in your statement, and it's paragraph 25 which is at page 79 D2/15/79 --

A. Just one second.

Q. -- that you had a small role in the project to create Sibneft; in particular you approached some contacts in the west to try and find funding.

A. That's correct.

Q. That was at Mr Berezovsky's request, was it?

A. Well, we had a couple of meetings before then with Roman as well, but it was essentially with Mr Berezovsky, you know.

Q. You see, Mr Abramovich's evidence will be that he wasn't aware of the steps you were taking in relation to western investors and indeed he doesn't recall meeting with you in 1995.

A. Well, that's -- I don't think his memory serves him well but I do remember very well.

Q. Now, you say that, as part of the steps you took, you organised and attended a meeting between Mr Berezovsky and Mr George Soros.

A. Not with George Soros, no.

Q. Well, if you could look at paragraph 25.

A. Yes.

Q. The third sentence:

"I approached a number of investment banks, including Morgan Grenfell, Rothchild's, George Soros and some others, and organised meetings that Boris and I attended."

You weren't intending to indicate by that that you were at the meetings between Boris and any of those parties; is that right?

A. Yes, I was; not with George Soros but everybody else mentioned here and some others which are not.

Q. In the event, the efforts you made to attract western investment proved unsuccessful?

A. Totally.

Q. No western investor was prepared to take the risk?

A. That's -- unfortunately that statement is entirely correct.

Q. Now, apart from that, you were not involved yourself in a project that led to the creation or acquisition of Sibneft, were you?

A. No.

Q. And you didn't have any knowledge of which companies or which persons had acquired shares or by which auction, or anything like that?

A. Well, I mean, I knew about the auctions, I knew about the proceedings as were told me in passing by Boris and Badri mostly, and some other people like Alexander Mamut, for example, who is not mentioned here but we discussed it with him. But I was not directly involved,

I was not a participant to those. It was all sort of secondhand information, if you will.

Q. Your principal source of information in this respect was presumably Mr Berezovsky or Mr Patarkatsishvili?

A. Correct.

Q. Now, you tell us in paragraph 29 of your statement, over two pages, on page 81 D2/15/81, that your understanding was that Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili owned 50 per cent of Sibneft.

A. Yes.

Q. Do you mean to indicate by that that you understood that at some point they directly owned 50 per cent of Sibneft, in the sense of either owning it themselves or through corporate entities that they owned?

A. Neither really. You know, I didn't really think of how exactly. I mean, I was pretty sure -- if I was questioned at that time, I would be pretty sure to say that not directly, but in actual fact, so de facto rather than de jure.

Q. And are you saying that that is the conclusion you drew from behaviour and meetings you witnessed or are you saying it's something you recall specifically being told by Mr Berezovsky or Mr Patarkatsishvili?

A. I recall specifically being told by Boris and Badri on many occasions but not like, "Look, I want you to sit down and listen to this, I'm going to tell you now". It was really pretty much common knowledge. It was a fairly close circle of people and certain things were just taken entirely for granted and this one was -- was one of them.

Q. You were taking it for granted that they had an interest in Sibneft?

A. Well, no, no, not for granted. I mean, we were told but it's not -- like I said, it was mentioned many times in various contexts, in many conversations, you know, so obviously I took it like that.

Q. It must now, in 2011, be very difficult to distinguish any one conversation you had with Mr Berezovsky or Mr Patarkatsishvili with any other?

A. Well, it's hard. But, you know, it was mentioned on numerous occasions because I spent a lot of time with them, you know, and -- with Boris and Badri and we'd talk about a lot of different things. Sibneft was definitely one of them, many times, and the general nature of the relationship with Roman was discussed many times. And so it was really something that was mentioned numerous times.

Q. Now --

A. This partnership, and the word "partnership" was always used.

- Q. The word "partnership" was used?
- A. Yes.
- Q. You don't tell us that in your witness statement, Mr Voronoff.
- A. Well, I mean -- okay, I don't tell you this in the witness statement.
- Q. And nor, in fact, do you say in your witness statement that you were told by Mr Berezovsky or Mr Patarkatsishvili that they had a 50 per cent interest in Sibneft; what you say is that it was never suggested that they didn't.
- A. No, it was -- they said specifically many times that they owned 50 per cent of Sibneft and their relationship with Roman was, you know, 50/50 and they were partners.
- Q. Now, your evidence is that you continued to meet Mr Abramovich from time to time after 1995, in particular in France and sometimes in London.
- A. France, London, Moscow, you know, yes.
- Q. Over what period do you say you had such meetings with Mr Abramovich?
- A. Well, they pretty much stopped, I think, in the fall of 2000.
- Q. And you tell us in paragraph 33 of your statement D2/15/82 that you recall Mr Abramovich saying:
- "... he did not like Mr Berezovsky's political activity... and wanted [him] to quieten down..."

A. That's right.

Q. When are you saying you had such conversations with Mr Abramovich?

A. Well, it was obviously in the late '90s. I think it was in Moscow he mentioned -- again, we'd talk about different things and he was -- Roman was concerned about that.

Q. You say it's obviously in the late 1990s. You've just told us that you continued meeting Mr Abramovich until the fall of 2000. Isn't it more likely it was in the fall of 2000, when Mr Berezovsky's difficulties with Mr Putin had surfaced?

A. No, no. That's -- surely not, because I don't remember meeting Roman anytime in the summer of 2000. You know, it may have been. But, I mean, those conversations were way before, when Boris was actually very much -- how shall I put it? -- well, you know, he's a visible figure, he was a political figure in Russia, he was giving a lot of interviews, and that's his nature and that's his political, you know, MO, but Roman didn't like it one single bit.

Q. You see, Mr Abramovich's evidence is that he didn't have any such discussions with you.

A. Well, I don't know what we've done to accept that Mr Abramovich was always a very busy man and he had, you know, zillions of discussions with different people and he would never remember them all.

Q. Well, he wasn't concerned about Mr Berezovsky's political activity until 2000.

A. Yes, he was.

Q. Now, you also tell us in your statement that you attended Mr Berezovsky's birthday party in Cap d'Antibes in January 2001.

A. Yes.

Q. Is that the only birthday party of Mr Berezovsky held in Cap d'Antibes that you've attended over the years or have there been others?

A. Well, that one actually I remember very well. I think there were no others, no. I mean, I think his -- after that he was really confined to this country and all the birthday parties, you know, whether I attend them or not, were held here.

Q. Do you attend other birthday parties here?

A. Oh yes.

Q. Was --

A. Whenever I was in town, of course.

Q. Was the birthday party in January 2001 the first time you'd seen Mr Berezovsky since he fled Russia or had you seen him on other occasions between --

A. I saw him -- I see him actually quite frequently. So in the fall of 2000 I saw him quite a few times, you know, and it's just -- we do see each other often.

Q. How many people were present at the party in January 2001?

A. I would say, as a guess, about 50.

Q. Now, you tell us in paragraph 45 of your statement D2/15/85 that at this party in 2001 Mr Berezovsky told you about a meeting that he had had with Mr Abramovich in the south of France:

"... in which Mr Abramovich [had] claimed to be acting as a messenger for President Putin, and had used [Mr Glushkov's] release from prison as a bargaining chip, along with [making] threats [about] ORT..."

Did Mr Berezovsky tell you when that meeting had taken place?

A. Yes. He said "a few weeks ago" -- well, see -- yes, "a few weeks ago", something like this. December, I think it was.

Q. Before or after Christmas?

A. It had to be after Christmas, I think, or during Christmas time, because just before Christmas time we were together in another country.

Q. Which country were you in together with Mr Berezovsky?

A. US.

Q. Sorry?

A. US.

Q. In the US. You travelled to the US with him?

A. Yes.

Q. And he didn't tell you about this meeting then?

A. Not at that time, no.

Q. When did you travel with Mr Berezovsky to the US? Was that for the launch of the International Foundation of Civil Liberties in --

A. No, it was not that. I think that was the -- that was the only time we actually skied together, I think was December 2000.

Q. You went to Aspen with him?

A. Yes.

Q. And how long were you in Aspen with Mr Berezovsky?

A. About a week. I can check my diary.

Q. And that covered the Christmas period, didn't it? It was the week before Christmas --

A. No, just -- I think it just ran up to the Christmas period.

Q. Just running up to Christmas?

A. Yes.

Q. And you were skiing with him and therefore spent a lot of time with him every day, did you?

A. Well, spent a lot of time, yes. Talked a lot, probably no, because we mostly skied. But we were together, yes.

And I stayed in a different residence.

Q. But you met him for lunch --

A. Yes.

Q. -- and you generally socialised with him during that period?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, coming back to the birthday party in January 2001, when you say that at that meeting Mr Berezovsky told you about Mr Abramovich's visit to the south of France, what are you relying upon to pinpoint it as being at that meeting as opposed to any other conversation you had with Mr Berezovsky?

A. Well, that really sticks out in my mind because I didn't see Roman there and that was a surprise because Boris was close to Roman, they saw each other a lot, and obviously there were huge business interests together, partnerships, as I said. So when I didn't see Roman there, it kind of was strange. So I initiated the conversation.

Q. But you're not relying on a document, are you, a record you made or anything like that?

A. No. I make records of my comings and goings but not any conversations I have.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Ms Davies, will you choose your moment for the break, please.

MS DAVIES: Of course. Just now, my Lady.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well. Ten minutes.

Don't talk about the case or your evidence to anyone.

THE WITNESS: Of course.

(3.18 pm)

(A short break)

(3.35 pm)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, Ms Davies.

MS DAVIES: Mr Voronoff, just before the break you told me you could check your diary in relation to the dates of your ski trip. Have you previously been asked to check your diaries for December 2000?

A. Yes.

Q. And did that not reveal the date of your ski trip?

A. Yes.

Q. And are those diaries available to Addleshaws?

A. Yes.

Q. Who else was in Aspen with Mr Berezovsky during your ski trip?

A. With Mr Berezovsky or with me or in our group?

Q. Who else did you meet when you met with Mr Berezovsky? Who else did you come across?

A. Boris was with his wife and his -- I think his friend came for a couple of days from New York, but that's all, and I was accompanied by a girlfriend.

- Q. Which friend was that, Mr Voronoff?
- A. A gentleman called Ruslan -- not Ruslan Fomichev -- who lived in New York. He came for two/three days, didn't ski very well, but he left.
- Q. Coming back to January 2001, presumably you've spoken to Mr Berezovsky about Mr Abramovich's visit to Cap d'Antibes on more than one occasion?
- A. No, not really. I was -- that was a major specific question and then I got the answer I did not expect. But after that we referred to -- generally to Roman's turnaround and his role in the whole affair many times, but not -- I was not given an account of Cap d'Antibes for any -- in any more detailed fashion.
- Q. I wasn't suggesting that it was in any more detail but it must have come up again in the many conversations you've had with Mr Berezovsky?
- A. It did, a few times, yes.
- Q. Given that you've spoken to him so regularly, it must be possible, mustn't it, that what you're recalling in your witness statement is a conversation you had with Mr Berezovsky after 2001?
- A. I didn't get that at all.
- Q. Now, you're aware that Mr Abramovich's case in this action is that the meeting you say Mr Berezovsky told you about did not take place and indeed couldn't have taken place as he was in Russia at all relevant times after Mr Glushkov's arrest?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, if that's right, that the meeting didn't take place, that leaves one of two possibilities about your evidence and I just want to identify them and give you an opportunity to comment, if I may.

A. Please.

Q. The first is that Mr Berezovsky never told you about any such meeting at his birthday party in January 2001, as the event you're describing never happened; or the second is that Mr Berezovsky made it up and did tell you. What would your comment be?

A. I would say neither is true.

Q. Now, you also say that in the summer of 2001 you were told by Mr Patarkatsishvili about a meeting he had had with Mr Abramovich in Munich in the summer of 2001. Do you recall that? It's paragraph 49 of your statement D2/15/87.

A. Yes, I recall that.

Q. And you suggest that at this meeting Mr Patarkatsishvili told you that Mr Abramovich had suggested that if they didn't sell Sibneft, it would be taken away from them, whereas if they did sell Sibneft, Mr Glushkov would be released?

A. Yes, and they would get at least some money.

Q. And you say that before then you'd also been told by Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili that they were being put under pressure coming from Mr Abramovich to sell their shares in Sibneft?

A. That's right.

Q. Now, those events are events that you've no doubt discussed with Mr Patarkatsishvili on a number of occasions before his death in 2008?

A. Yes.

Q. And also with Mr Berezovsky?

A. Not too many times. But they were referred to, you know, a number of times during our meetings after that.

Q. And, again, it must be impossible, mustn't it, Mr Voronoff, now to distinguish between what you've been told over the years by Mr Berezovsky from what you've been told over the years by Mr Patarkatsishvili?

A. No, it's not impossible at all. I happen to have a very bad memory for faces but a pretty good memory for dates and events.

Q. But conversations with friends, when you were told in one year rather than another?

A. No, I remember very well. I mean, the conversation with friends, very often I can pinpoint them actually to pretty much the time of year, you know, and very often to months, years afterwards.

Q. You were here this morning when Dr Nosova was giving her evidence?

A. I was.

Q. And you recall that she confirmed when Mr Patarkatsishvili was interviewed in June 2005 by solicitors acting for Mr Berezovsky he said that there had been no specific mention of Mr Glushkov at the Munich meeting. Do you recall that evidence?

A. Not really. But --

Q. Well, Dr Nosova accepted this morning that that's what Mr Patarkatsishvili had said at the meetings in June 2005.

A. That there was no connection to --

Q. No specific mention of Mr Glushkov at the Munich meeting.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, she accepted that that's what the note said and that's what he had said at the meeting.

A. No, I recall very, very well that Badri specifically referred to Nikolai's fate in conversations with me. And I saw him and talked to him a number of times during the -- well, I talked to him regularly until his untimely death but, I mean, at that time as well.

Q. You recall that Mr Patarkatsishvili mentioned Mr Glushkov's fate but what I'm suggesting to you Mr Patarkatsishvili didn't mention to you in the summer of 2001 is that at the Munich meeting Mr Abramovich had expressly mentioned Mr Glushkov and made a threat about him.

A. No, no, absolutely. He expressly mentioned it. He specifically told me he was very angry about this because already Boris and Badri and we all, in a way, who were friends of Nikolai, and I am one as well, we were let down severely in fact, you know, deceived.

Q. You feel deceived, do you?

A. Yes, absolutely, because the -- well, yes, the answer is yes, because the promise was that Nikolai would be out by Christmas 2000, he wasn't, and then the Nikolai card was dangled -- character was dangled again.

MS DAVIES: Thank you very much, Mr Voronoff.

MR MALEK: I have no questions, my Lady.

MR ADKIN: My Lady, no.

MR MUMFORD: No, my Lady.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right, Mr Rabinowitz.

Re-examination by MR RABINOWITZ

MR RABINOWITZ: Just one question, Mr Voronoff.

It was suggested to you by Ms Davies when she was asking you questions -- this is at [draft] page 140 -- that you do not say in your witness statement that you were told by Mr Berezovsky or Mr Patarkatsishvili that they had 50 per cent and she said:

"... what you say is that it was never suggested that they didn't."

Can I just ask you to go to your witness statement, paragraph 29 on page 81 D2/15/81.

A. Yes.

Q. Do you see the sentence:

"... it was my understanding from the conversations for which I was present and which I had with Boris, Badri and Mr Abramovich, that Sibneft was owned 50% by Boris/Badri and 50% by Mr Abramovich."

Does this assist you as to whether the suggestion that was made to you about what is and isn't in your witness statement was an accurate one?

A. Well, what was accurate was that Boris told me many numerous times, and Badri did, that "we", meaning Boris and Badri, owned 50 per cent of Sibneft, in so many words.

MR RABINOWITZ: Thank you very much.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I have no further questions. Thank you very much indeed for coming along and giving your evidence.

THE WITNESS: My Lady.

(The witness withdrew)

MR RABINOWITZ: My Lady, we have one more witness. I don't know how long he will be but given that we're going to break until next week --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, I don't want to waste half an hour or three-quarters of an hour that we have today.

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Goldfarb.

MR ALEXANDER GOLDFARB (affirmed)

Examination-in-chief by MR RABINOWITZ

MR RABINOWITZ: Good afternoon, Mr Goldfarb.

A. Hello.

Q. Again, Mr Goldfarb, can you confirm that you don't have any mobile phones with you or electronic devices?

A. No.

Q. Can I ask that you be given bundle D1 open at tab 3, please.

A. Yes.

Q. And if you turn, please, Mr Goldfarb, to page 56 of the bundle, page 19 of your statement D1/03/56.

A. Yes.

Q. You should see a signature there. Can you confirm that that's your signature?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. Thank you very much.

Can I just ask you to go back to the first page of your witness statement D1/03/38.

A. Yes.

Q. As I understand it, there is an issue both with your current address and indeed with the age that you give there at the time you made the statement.

A. Yes.

Q. Can you just explain?

A. Well, I've moved from this address since, actually it was before my last statement, third statement, so the current address is different. It's 71 Knapps Road, with K, Stephentown, New York, 12168 zip code.

And with regard to my age, the statement was given on my birthday. So I, by mistake, said that I'm 63 where I -- whereas I should have been 64 on that day.

Q. All right. Subject to those two corrections, can you confirm that the contents of your first witness statement are true to the best of your knowledge and belief?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. Thank you. Can you then be given bundle D4, please, open at tab 5.

A. Yes, I have it.

Q. And if you go in this tab to page 27 of the bundle, page 5, I think, of your statement D4/05/27.

A. Yes.

Q. Again, you see a signature: can you confirm that that's your signature?

A. It's mine.

Q. And can you confirm that subject to, again, the change of address, that the content of this statement are also true to the best of your knowledge and belief?

A. I do.

Q. Thank you. And then you have a third witness statement which, if you go to tab 10, hopefully you will see.

A. 10, yes.

Q. Can I ask you to go to page 98 of the bundle D4/10/98. It's the seventh page of your statement.

A. Seventh page.

Q. You're not on the right page there.

A. Yes, I have it.

Q. Do you have it?

A. Yes.

Q. Again, you should see a signature.

A. Yes, it's mine.

Q. Can you confirm that that's your signature?

A. Yes.

Q. And again, subject to the point about your address, can you confirm that the contents of this statement is also true to the best of your knowledge and belief?

A. Yes, it is.

MR RABINOWITZ: Thank you very much. Can you wait there, please.

Cross-examination by MS DAVIES

MS DAVIES: Mr Goldfarb, I understand you've known Mr Berezovsky since 1995?

A. Correct.

Q. And you regard him as a good friend?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. And you've been in his employment for various periods since then?

A. Yes, mostly since 2000, late 2000, and for a brief period in 1997/98.

Q. The brief period in '97 to '98 was when you provided political consultancy services to Mr Berezovsky from New York?

A. That is correct.

Q. And your fees for those services were the expenses that were paid by Runicom?

A. It was -- I never paid attention at that time who was the entity -- which was the entity that transferred the money. It was Runicom. But my invoices were given to Sibneft.

Q. Your invoices were addressed to Mr Shvidler at Sibneft's offices and they were paid by Runicom?

- A. Correct.
- Q. And your understanding was that Runicom was a company owned and controlled by Mr Abramovich?
- A. At the time, as I said, I didn't know what Runicom was. I learned about it years later and then I discovered in my records that it was actually Runicom. But when I learned about it, I thought that Runicom was some sort of a subsidiary of Sibneft.
- Q. You didn't investigate?
- A. I didn't, no.
- Q. You were just happy to have your bills paid, presumably?
- A. Yes. That's correct.
- Q. Then from late 2000, as you've just told us, you became directly involved again with Mr Berezovsky. Was that principally in connection with the foundation, Mr Berezovsky's Foundation for Civil Liberties?
- A. Yes, we set up a foundation in December 2000 in New York and I was the -- essentially the chief operating officer of this foundation and Mr Berezovsky was the sole funder.
- Q. And you remained active in that foundation until 2006?
- A. Well, technically it's active still now. I mean, it's there, it has some operations, it files tax reports. But since 2006 it was essentially toned down; it's much less activities than it was before.

- Q. But you continue to provide consultancy services to Mr Berezovsky?
- A. On and off, yes, on an on-and-off basis.
- Q. So is it right that over the last ten years you've largely been working for Mr Berezovsky?
- A. I would say that up until 2006 from 2000, for those six years, yes; and since 2006 I probably spent on Mr Berezovsky's related effort probably 40 per cent to 50 per cent of my time.
- Q. And do you continue to receive consultancy fees from Mr Berezovsky now?
- A. Yes, to a much lesser extent. I'm now running another non-profit entity funded by several Russian exiled, so to say, oligarchs and Mr Berezovsky is one of the sponsors.
- Q. Do you have any arrangement whereby you stand to gain financially if Mr Berezovsky wins this litigation?
- A. No.
- Q. Turning to the various meetings you had with Mr Berezovsky in the second half of 2000 --
- MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Sorry, just before we leave this point, you say you still receive consultancy fees but to a lesser extent?
- A. Yes.
- MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: What percentage of your overall fees are your consultancy fees from Mr Berezovsky?

A. I mean, from 2006 until now?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, from 2006.

A. I would say that -- just ballpark -- maybe 20 per cent of my income that comes from Mr Berezovsky's side is structured as consultancy fees and the balance is my salary in different entities, like the one I've just mentioned.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. Where Mr Berezovsky is one of the founders?

A. Yes, one of the founders. So altogether I would say 40 per cent, as I said, of my income comes from there. But I also have income from the book, for example, that I wrote and that sort of...

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MS DAVIES: Now, you had a number of meetings with Mr Berezovsky in the last few months of 2000. If we can start with your visit to see Mr Berezovsky in Moscow in late August 2000, in the immediate aftermath of the Kursk tragedy --

A. Yes.

Q. -- but before Mr Berezovsky had fled Russia.

A. Yes.

Q. You tell us you went to stay with Mr Berezovsky at his house in Moscow, arriving on 20 August?

- A. No, I never stayed at his house in Moscow, I usually stayed at a hotel, but I came to Mr Berezovsky's house to see him. I might have occasionally spent the night there, but basically it's not where I was staying.
- Q. But you did go and see Mr Berezovsky at his house?
- A. That's correct.
- Q. And do you recall how long you were in Moscow for this period?
- A. Well, I could give you exact dates because I keep a record of my comings and goings but at the moment I wouldn't be able to tell you. But I never spent there more than two/three days at a time.
- Q. Now, it seems as if you were still in Moscow on 23 or 24 August because you tell us in paragraph 50 of your statement D1/03/51 that after a meeting Mr Berezovsky attended with Mr Voloshin that day, he told you about it upon his return within an hour?
- A. That's about so. Maybe within two hours but...
- Q. How good a recollection would you say you have today of that conversation with Mr Berezovsky?
- A. Well, that was a very, I would say, seminal event in modern history of Russia and I would say that I have repeated that conversation so many times on different occasions to different people, including in writing, that I would say that the recollection is good.

- Q. You must have had numerous conversations with Mr Berezovsky about the events on this date over the years, mustn't you?
- A. I had some, yes.
- Q. Now, in paragraph 50 of your statement D1/03/51 you say that Mr Berezovsky told you that Mr Voloshin made two separate demands during the meeting he'd had with Mr Berezovsky, the first being that Mr Berezovsky surrender control of ORT --
- A. Yes.
- Q. -- and the second being that Mr Berezovsky surrender his 49 per cent stake in ORT to a friendly entity?
- A. Yes.
- Q. Are you sure that Mr Berezovsky told you on his return from the meeting that Mr Voloshin had made both of those demands?
- A. Well, I wouldn't say that it was structure -- put as structured as you've just said because it was kind of a package situation. He did own 49 per cent and the control came not only from this 49 per cent but from the structure of ORT and from the arrangements and influence he had on the ORT management. He didn't tell me all that; it was common knowledge. And so the gist of this conversation was that he should surrender the -- his stake and with it his control.

- Q. Are you saying that's your understanding of the conversation or are you saying that Mr Berezovsky told you that that's what Mr Voloshin said?
- A. He told me that Mr Voloshin said that, "You have to surrender your stake".
- Q. Now, have you read Mr Voloshin's statement in these proceedings?
- A. I did look through it briefly yesterday, yes.
- Q. And you're aware, are you, that he says that he did explain to Mr Berezovsky that the government wanted Mr Berezovsky to stop using ORT for his own political and financial benefit and to stop influencing ORT, but that he is certain that he did not discuss with Mr Berezovsky whether he should sell or give up his shares in ORT?
- A. Yes, I've seen that.
- Q. And he also says that he doesn't believe that President Putin wanted to run ORT himself or that he mentioned Mr Gusinsky.
- A. Yes.
- Q. Do you think it's possible, Mr Goldfarb, that you might be misremembering when you say that Mr Berezovsky told you that Mr Voloshin had said those things?
- A. No, I don't think I could say that. I'm absolutely positive that this is what Mr Berezovsky told me about what's being said because we did discuss specifically what was and what was not being said a couple of months later, when I was in Cap d'Antibes and helped him draft his letter where he announced the creation of teletrust and actually revealed the fact of this conversation, which I remember very well starts with, "a high member of your administration threatened me", or told me something to that effect, "in the Kremlin".

Q. Could you be given bundle R(E)1 at tab 4, please R(E)1/04/356.

A. Yes.

Q. This is a statement that you made in support of Mr Berezovsky's application for asylum in the United Kingdom.

A. Correct.

Q. And if you turn forward to the last page, page 361 R(E)1/04/361, you see you made it in August 2003.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, you address what Mr Berezovsky told you about his meeting with Mr Voloshin in paragraph 8 of this statement at page 359 R(E)1/04/359.

A. Yes.

Q. If you just want to remind yourself of what you said in that paragraph. (Pause)

A. Yes.

Q. You say there that:

"Mr Berezovsky said that he had been told by Mr Voloshin that [President] Putin wanted him to surrender control of ORT because 'the President wants to run the station himself'. Mr Berezovsky at that time had 49% of ORT... But he had an effective veto on top management appointments... Mr Voloshin told Mr Berezovsky that he would have to change the management..."

But you don't make any reference to a statement by Mr Voloshin that Mr Berezovsky should surrender his ORT shares to a friendly entity.

A. I think it's quite obvious from the context because right after I'm talking about control, I talk about the equity split between the State and Mr Berezovsky.

Q. You talk about the equity split and go on to explain that nonetheless Mr Berezovsky had "an effective veto on top management appointments".

A. Yes.

Q. But you don't say in this paragraph, as you do if you look back at paragraph 50 and compare the two, that "[Mr] Voloshin told [Mr Berezovsky] that he would have to surrender his 49% stake in ORT to a friendly entity", do you?

A. That depends on the -- how you read this. My understanding when I made this statement that what was demanded from Mr Berezovsky is to surrender both his 49 per cent stake and the control, which was essentially the provision that a majority -- that 70 per cent, as I understood then, was important for control. And I don't see how you could surrender control without surrendering 49 per cent if you need 70 for control.

Q. Now, it would obviously have been relevant to Mr Berezovsky's asylum application for you to have said, if you recalled it at the time, what you now say at paragraph 50: that Mr Voloshin specifically told Mr Berezovsky he would have to surrender his 49 per cent stake? That would have been a relevant thing for you to put in this statement in support of Mr Berezovsky's asylum application?

A. What would be the relevance? I think there is no essential difference between the two statements. Here I say that he has to surrender 49 per cent stake; here I say that he was supposed to surrender control, with clarification that the control consisted of two components: one is 49 per cent stake and another, because 49 per cent by itself would not be a control without the provision of larger -- of this requirement for the majority vote.

So I don't think you could come to any -- there is any real discrepancy here.

- Q. Well, Mr Berezovsky could have surrendered control of ORT by simply allowing the State, who was the 51 per cent shareholder, to appoint the manager, couldn't he?
- A. I think we're in guesswork here. What I remember exactly, that the conversation was about surrendering 49 per cent stake and control because what Mr Putin wanted, as far as I could guess, was to run ORT by himself, as far as he told me.
- Q. Would you at least agree this, Mr Goldfarb: your recollection in 2003 about the conversation you had with Mr Berezovsky, as set out in your asylum statement, is much more likely to be accurate than your recollection now, in 2011?
- A. Well, obviously it was, and my recollection on the day he told me was probably better. But in this specific case I would stand by what I said in both statements. I don't see any difference in substance.
- Q. You tell us in your statement that you made three visits to Cap d'Antibes in late 2000. I just want to identify them and then I'm going to ask you about them, but let's just set the framework if that's possible.
- A. Well, it depends how you call late 2000. I made two visits in December and at least two in November.

- Q. The visits you tell us about in your statement are a visit between 11 and 14 November 2000?
- A. Yes.
- Q. A second visit between 7 and 10 December 2000?
- A. Oh yes, that's right.
- Q. And a third on 28 December 2000?
- A. Yes. Then it was one in November, sorry. There was one in October too.
- Q. There was one in October, but those are the three visits in November/December?
- A. Yes.
- Q. Those are the three visits after Mr Berezovsky has fled Russia?
- A. Well, for me it was a different milestone: it was the three visits after I brought Mr Litvinenko to this country and that was the watershed for me. That's my point of reference.
- Q. Now, starting with the visit in November, you address that in paragraphs 57 to 60 of your statement --
- A. Yes.
- Q. -- at page 53 of D1/03 D1/03/53.
- A. It's page...?
- Q. D1/03, page 53.

At paragraph 57 you say that you went to stay with Mr Berezovsky on 11 November and that whilst you were there he received a summons to appear as a witness in the Aeroflot investigation.

A. That's correct.

Q. Well, in fact Mr Berezovsky had known since the end of October that the State intended to prosecute him in relation to the Aeroflot matter, hadn't he?

A. I think the formal summons was much later and I remember it quite correctly, although I may be mistaken. There were two summonses issued at about the same time: one for Mr Berezovsky, one for Mr Gusinsky. And Mr Gusinsky immediately, he was by that time in Spain already, that he's not going to go on this summons. So I think my recollection, without checking the sources, would be that it was -- the actual summons was much closer to that date.

Q. Well, Mr Berezovsky tells us in his witness statement -- we don't need to turn it up; you can take it from me -- at paragraph 331 D2/17/267 that:

"On the same day that I left Russia..."

Which was the end of October.

"... Deputy Prosecutor Vasiliy Kolmogorov announced on television an intention to prosecute me."

A. Yes.

Q. And:

"On the following day... I was summoned... to face charges on 13 November 2000."

And we have press reports that show that at the end of October there was an announcement that he'd be prosecuted.

A. My recollection that there was an announcement about intention of him being prosecuted maybe, but at the same time I clearly remember that his legal status in this investigation at the time was that of a witness and that the possibility of him being arrested, for example, or even charged with something was discounted by himself and it took quite an effort to talk him out of going to Moscow on that day.

Q. Have you been here during the course of this trial, Mr Goldfarb?

A. Most of the time, yes.

Q. Were you here when Mr Berezovsky was giving evidence?

A. I think I missed a day.

Q. Do you recall which day that was?

A. I can't tell you right now. One of the days.

Q. You see his oral evidence -- and for the transcript it's at Day 7, page 22 -- was that he definitely knew by this time that he and Mr Glushkov were going to be charged.

A. I can't comment on that. My understanding from that time, as I said, I was with Mr Berezovsky in Moscow on his last visit in October and then I saw him next on November 13, when I came to Cap d'Antibes, and on the morning of that day he had the plane ready to go to Moscow and a big discussion that morning was whether he should or should not go and his inclination was to go.

One of the reasons was that he didn't want to make it look that he runs and by doing that he admits some guilt, he never thought. And so in the -- and another was of course, as I learned later that day maybe, that his concern was that if he doesn't go, he puts Mr Glushkov in jeopardy. So it was clear to me at least, and I would confirm it now, that on that day Mr Berezovsky was not 100 per cent sure that he would be arrested or anybody who lives in Russia can be arrested any day.

So it's all a matter of probability. But he thought that there is a chance that he would go and come back.

- Q. You knew when you went to visit Mr Berezovsky on 11 November that he'd fled Russia, didn't you?
- A. No, he hadn't fled Russia because his intention was initially to go to Moscow and to talk to the prosecutor. And we collectively, myself and his wife Elena and a friend of mine, the widow of Nobel Laureate Andrei Sakharov, on the phone took a lot of effort to persuade him not to go.
- Q. Could you be given Mr Berezovsky's fourth witness statement, which is in bundle D2, tab 17, at page 267

D2/17/267.

A. Yes.

Q. Paragraph 330, under the heading "ORT: my departure from Russia", Mr Berezovsky tells us:

"I understood very well that when President Putin made the threat to deliver 'a crushing blow'..."

And he's referring to the interview with President Putin published in Le Figaro on 26 October, which is quoted in paragraph 328.

"... it meant that I was in imminent danger of arrest or worse. As a result, on 30 October... I left Russia and travelled to France."

A. Yes, what can I tell you? That interview by Mr Putin about the cudgel in Figaro was one of the major arguments that helped us persuade Mr Berezovsky not to go to Moscow on 13 November. So I would say that we're now discussing a very vague issue of the probability of being arrested. Mr Berezovsky is rather a careless person and he takes risks. And I can tell you that my understanding of what was happening then, and it is still now, is that he was willing -- he knew about the dangers, he was willing to take this risk, for the reasons I've mentioned, and it took some effort to persuade him that this risk was not worth taking.

- Q. Your fear was that if he returned to Moscow, he would indeed be arrested once he got back there?
- A. Oh yes.
- Q. Now, you also knew, didn't you, at this time that Deputy Prosecutor Kolmogorov had announced an intention to charge Mr Glushkov?
- A. No, I didn't know that at the time. I mostly was worried about Boris. I simply didn't know about Glushkov. I learned about Glushkov's problem more -- in more detail when I read the interview in Kommersant.
- Q. But when you visited Mr Berezovsky in November in Cap d'Antibes, he expressed his concerns to you about Mr Glushkov, didn't he?
- A. No, he expressed his concerns to me about Mr Glushkov after we persuaded him. So it was at that visit but probably after he took the decision not to go. He was --
- Q. But during your visit between 11 and 14 November Mr Berezovsky explained to you that he was concerned about Mr Glushkov's position, didn't he?
- A. He was -- that was one of the reasons why he wanted to go. He thought that by not going there he put Mr Glushkov in graver danger than he was.

I mean, the thing is that I remember that discussion very well. It was -- I was trying to persuade him that this is the MO of the Russian State when they are out to get somebody and they took hostages. That was the case with Mr Gusinsky earlier, when they held one of his financial persons in prison trying to get something out of him, and that was the case later with Mr Khodorkovsky and that's their MO.

So obviously it was clear that Mr Glushkov is in jeopardy in Russia and, as I said already, that was a real consideration of whether or not Mr Berezovsky should or should not go.

MS DAVIES: My Lady, I'm about to move on to another meeting and I just wonder whether that might be a convenient moment.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well.

Mr Goldfarb, you mustn't talk about this case or your evidence over the break. Do you understand?

THE WITNESS: I understand that, yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well.

Monday, 10.15; does that suit the parties?

MR SUMPTION: Yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Does that suit you --

MR RABINOWITZ: Yes, my Lady.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well. 10.15 on Monday. Thank you very much.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, Ms Davies.

MR ALEXANDER GOLDFARB (continued)

Cross-examination by MS DAVIES (continued)

MS DAVIES: Mr Goldfarb, when we broke on Wednesday --

THE WITNESS: Excuse me. My Lady, I wish to correct something that I said on Wednesday.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Have you been reading the transcript?

THE WITNESS: Yes, and I looked at my witness statement and there is a discrepancy and what I said in the witness statement is right and what I mentioned on Wednesday is wrong. And that relates to the period between 2001 and 2006: I said that I worked full-time for Mr Berezovsky, which is not correct. I of course held a faculty position in New York all this time and so I never had more than 50 per cent income from Mr Berezovsky's side.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right, thank you.

MS DAVIES: When we broke, we had just been discussing your visit to Cap d'Antibes in November 2000.

A. That's correct.

Q. And I now want to move on to your next visit to Cap d'Antibes, which was between 7 and 10 December 2000; is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, you do not suggest that you saw Mr Abramovich at Mr Berezovsky's property at any point during that visit, do you?

A. No. I should explain that I went there primarily for the purpose of seeing my son, who came from London, and it was kind of an emotionally important moment for me because I was banned from entry into United Kingdom a few weeks before that for bringing the Litvinenko family, someone who brought asylum seekers to this country. So they didn't allow me to come to London, where my son was in school.

So that was our rendezvous in Cap d'Antibes. And I arrived on the morning --

Q. Yes, I don't want to interrupt you but we're going to come on to deal with your son's arrival and in fact your movements through --

A. So what I meant is that I spent most of the time with him.

Q. Okay. Now, you travelled to Nice from New York overnight on 6 December, arriving at Nice Airport at 9.50 am on 7 December?

A. Judging by the plane schedule, yes.

Q. And from Nice Airport you travelled immediately to Cap d'Antibes?

A. That is correct.

Q. So you would have arrived at Mr Berezovsky's property at around lunchtime on 7 December?

A. Yes, around noon or so, maybe later.

Q. Can you recall whether or not you immediately went to Mr Berezovsky's house, the chateau?

A. No, of course not. I would probably be taken straight to the Clocher and most likely I would just go sleep because it was an overnight flight and I was jet lagged.

Q. But once you arrived at the Clocher and after you changed and rested, you must have been keen to go and see Mr Berezovsky, mustn't you?

A. Not necessarily. As I said, I was looking forward to seeing my son and that was my first purpose -- main purpose.

Q. Let's take in this stages, Mr Goldfarb. First of all, your son was not due to arrive until the next day, 8 December?

A. Correct. Correct.

Q. And at the moment I'm just focusing on 7 December, okay?

A. Yes.

Q. So let's just stay with 7 December for a moment.

A. Okay.

Q. So you had travelled from New York all the way to Cap d'Antibes to see Mr Berezovsky, who was your host.

Isn't it the most natural thing to do, once you've freshened up from the journey, to actually go and say hello to your host?

- A. Well, as I said, I travelled to Nice primarily to see my son and not Mr Berezovsky. That was my second, obviously, priority on that visit. That's number one.

Number two, I could tell you straightaway that I do not remember on which of these three days that I was there I saw Mr Berezovsky. What -- the way memory works is that there are certain highlights kind of, milestones of the visit, and on that visit the dinner and the meeting with Mr Berezovsky and Badri was obviously such a highlight but I do not recall whether it was on the first evening or the second evening or the third evening.

- Q. Okay. Well, what we're going to try and do, if we can, Mr Goldfarb, is explore what you can and can't remember.

Now, what you tell us in your witness statement is that you had found out about the arrest of Mr Glushkov on your way from the airport to Mr Berezovsky's property?

- A. What I think I said in the witness statement is that as I was driving or I was driven rather to the property, probably closer to the end of the trip, I got a phone call from a journalist in Moscow, most likely it was

Mr Korsunsky, who told me about the rumour that is making rounds in Moscow that Mr Berezovsky has dumped the idea of setting a teletrust for holding the share in ORT. That was essentially the major point. He may have mentioned about Mr Glushkov's arrest, he may have not, but I can tell you that what was really hot issue is that the teletrust was dead. And at the time, for me at least, it was the main point of concern because so much effort was -- has been put into this teletrust that I may have noted that Glushkov was arrested but I didn't kind of link it to teletrust immediately; it might have come some minutes later.

Q. You say in your second witness statement at paragraph 12 -- this is D4/05/25, if you want to look at it:

"I also learned in that phone call..."

And this is the phone call about the teletrust.

"... of the arrest of Nikolay Glushkov."

A. Well, that is true. I could -- it is likely that he could have mentioned that in that context. But the reason for the call, for the phone call and the urgency of the matter was about teletrust, not about Glushkov.

Q. And the individual who called you on your journey also mentioned, didn't he, that Mr Berezovsky's announcements in relation to the teletrust had caused some controversy?

- A. Oh, yes. I'm not -- I am not 100 per cent sure whether by that time Mr Berezovsky has already announced his decision to drop teletrust; it might have come right after that. But the man I spoke to, who called me, is kind of part of the journalistic milieu in Moscow and the rumour was out that the teletrust is finished, yes.
- Q. So you believe that the conversation that your journalist friend had was before Mr Berezovsky had made his public announcement?
- A. It might have been before, I cannot say.
- Q. But what was clear to you from this telephone conversation was that he had decided to abandon the teletrust proposal --
- A. What was clear to me is that my friends, the journalists in Moscow who essentially stuck their neck out for Mr Berezovsky by agreeing to go into teletrust in spite of the obvious danger such a decision would have vis-a-vis Mr Putin, felt kind of abandoned and, if I may use the word that has been coined here, kinut: they were kind of misled by Mr Berezovsky because he abandoned this idea.
- Q. Now, having had that conversation on the way to Mr Berezovsky's house and knowing, as you did know also, that Mr Glushkov was an individual who Mr Berezovsky was very concerned about, you must have been interested, mustn't you, to find out what was actually going on?

A. I was very much interested, of course.

Q. So indeed the first opportunity you got to go and see Mr Berezovsky, you would have taken, wouldn't you?

A. Absolutely correct, yes.

Q. And doesn't that make it more likely that you went to see him at some point on the afternoon of 7 December?

A. Well, first of all, if he was there. Again, as I said, I don't remember the particular details of that visit: it could have happened on the 7th, it could have happened on the 8th. The fact is that the moment I saw him, I asked him that question. But I really do not remember when -- on which day it was.

Q. When you were staying at the Clocher, where did you take your meals, Mr Goldfarb?

A. Well, sometimes they serve it in the Clocher, sometimes they would invite you to join the hosts in the chateau. But, as I said, when Tim, my son, arrived that morning, I would have probably gone to the airport to meet him because he was 12.

Q. I'm going to come on to -- I'm still on the 7th, Mr Goldfarb.

A. We could have eaten out because most of the time we spent out of the property with him.

Q. Now, you told us a moment ago that the main purpose of your visit was to go and see your son.

A. Yes.

Q. But in fact in your witness statement you say that the purpose of your visit was to discuss the set-up of Mr Berezovsky's new foundation, the International Foundation for Civil Liberties?

A. That is true and there is some confusion between my first, second and third witness statement. Initially, when I made my first witness statement, I was under the impression that I had two visits in December, one on the 7th, 8th and 9th and the next one after Christmas. I had the initial recollection in my mind that my son came during the second visit, after Christmas. So in my first witness statement I wrote that the purpose -- obviously it was more reconstruction than recollection -- was to see Boris about the foundation.

However, when I went back to New York and checked the travel records and the tickets and the boarding passes and invoices and all that, I realised that my meeting with my son was during the first visit. Then everything kind of fell into place. And the truth is that my primary purpose was to -- on that visit, was to see my son and my secondary purpose is, of course, to discuss with Boris the foundation that we've been launching at the time.

Q. The foundation was a non-profit-making foundation based in the US --

A. That's correct.

Q. -- which was founded and funded by Mr Berezovsky?

A. Correct.

Q. You were to become its executive vice president?

A. Yes.

Q. And does that mean you were essentially in charge of its day-to-day management?

A. That is correct.

Q. It was formally to be launched in Washington on 18 December 2000?

A. Right, yes.

Q. A week or so after your visit to Cap d'Antibes?

A. Yes, and a week or so after we have incorporated it.

So...

Q. And it was just about to be incorporated?

A. Yes.

Q. And your professional relationship with Mr Soros had only come to an end at the beginning of November 2000?

A. Yes, in connection with the Litvinenko.

Q. So your involvement in this foundation was a new matter so far as you were concerned?

A. Yes, and we started working right away in November, even before the foundation was formally incorporated.

Q. And there must at this time -- and I'm focusing here again on 7 and 8 December --

A. Yes.

Q. -- have been much to discuss with Mr Berezovsky about the foundation and the details of its launch, mustn't there?

A. That is correct, but it was not the first opportunity, obviously.

Q. But that's presumably why you felt it was appropriate to charge your travel expenses for your trip to France to the foundation?

A. That's correct.

Q. You must therefore, Mr Goldfarb, mustn't you, have seen Mr Berezovsky a fair bit during your visit?

A. Can you repeat the question?

Q. You must have seen Mr Berezovsky a fair bit during your visit?

A. No. As I said, I recall one dinner which kind of was impressed in my memory for three reasons. If you want, I can go into this. One of them was the teletrust conversation. But I don't think that I saw much of him because usually my relationship with him about this foundation was like I was chasing him and he was always busy. So it does not necessarily mean that he was so eager to talk to me. And now, as we know, he had many other things on his mind.

Q. Now, you told us a moment ago that as soon as you saw Mr Berezovsky --

A. Yes.

Q. -- you raised with him the teletrust issue.

A. Yes, and that was before dinner.

Q. That was before dinner?

A. Yes.

Q. That was on a separate occasion?

A. No, it was not a separate occasion. Before dinner, when kind of I came to the building, to the chateau for dinner, I saw him and I told him what's going on as such.

Q. Can you actually recall that, Mr Goldfarb?

A. I recall asking him about that, yes.

Q. Can you recall that it was just before your dinner?

A. I would think so, yes.

Q. Well, aren't you reconstructing?

A. Well, no, I think it was before my -- before the dinner, yes.

Q. Now, you mentioned your son Timothy was due to arrive on 8 December from London.

A. Yes, in the morning.

Q. And you've explained again this morning that your earlier recollection that he was at Cap d'Antibes on your second trip in December is incorrect?

A. Yes.

Q. And your son was 12, I think you just told us?

A. Yes, about that.

Q. So he was still at school in England when he made this visit?

A. Yes.

Q. And presumably his school week was a Monday to Friday?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, you tell us in fact in your statement that 8 December was a Friday --

A. Yes.

Q. -- and 10 December was a Sunday.

A. Presumably. I don't remember now.

Q. So it looks like he came to see you for the weekend?

A. Yes.

Q. Rather than taking time off school, isn't it likely that he travelled out to see you after school on the evening of 8 December?

A. Not necessarily. He could have easily asked for a day off.

Q. You've mentioned several times today that he arrived in the morning of 8 December.

A. Yes.

Q. Do you suggest you recall that?

A. No, I think that is my reconstruction from his plane ticket, unless --

Q. Well, his plane ticket --

A. It should be in the case.

Q. His plane ticket, are you referring to the document you've exhibited?

A. Yes.

Q. That tells us that the flight number was BA352 --

A. Yes.

Q. -- and for the transcript that's at D4, tab 10, 110 D4/10/110 -- but it doesn't actually reveal the time of the flight, Mr Goldfarb.

A. Well, I think it could be easily checked.

Q. Well, we have checked it --

A. Okay.

Q. -- and we've managed to obtain some records. It's not perhaps as easy as one might think. But that indicates that the flight was not scheduled to depart London until 18.50 pm --

A. Uh-huh.

Q. -- and to arrive in Nice at 21.45 pm.

A. I'll take your word for it.

MS DAVIES: My Lady, we do have the records and we can circulate them, but --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, if there's any dispute, no doubt the matter can be raised with Mr Rabinowitz.

MS DAVIES: So it looks, doesn't it, as if your son did not in fact arrive in Nice until late on 8 December 2000?

A. Possible.

Q. Presumably you were hoping to spend some time with your son once he arrived at Cap d'Antibes, as well as seeing Mr Berezovsky?

A. Yes.

Q. And as you just explained you weren't able to travel to England to see him, so you no doubt wanted to get as much of your work out of the way as you could before your son arrived?

A. Possible, yes.

Q. And given that he was not arriving until late on 8 December, doesn't that again make it likely that you spent time with Mr Berezovsky on 7 and 8 December 2000?

A. Well, as I said, I do not recall now, after all these years, on what day I had this dinner and on what day we spoke with him.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Did you just have dinner with Mr Berezovsky on one occasion?

A. Yes, there was one dinner, there was a kind of large dinner. There were definitely Badri and him and me and maybe somebody else which I do not recall. Maybe Elena was there. Maybe my son was there. I really do not recall that. But the three of us I remember because I remember the issues that were raised.

MS DAVIES: You told us a moment ago you went to airport to collect your son.

A. I would certainly do that unless there were some circumstances against it. I didn't say I went there; I said that it would be normal for me to go and meet him.

Q. This dinner that you're describing, do you recall going to the airport after the dinner to collect your son?

A. No, I don't recall anything like that.

Q. In fact, Mr Goldfarb, you did spend a good deal of your time prior to the evening of 8 December with Mr Berezovsky, didn't you?

A. No, I don't think so, not necessarily. I don't remember but not necessarily, given that he is a busy guy.

Q. You travelled all this way to see Mr Berezovsky, to discuss his new foundation with him, and your son was not yet there. So you must have, mustn't you, Mr Goldfarb?

A. Well, the first day was probably spent mostly relaxing because -- after the jet lag. It is possible that I bumped into him, if he was around on the 8th, but I don't really remember.

- Q. You've been sitting in court through much of this trial --
- A. Yes.
- Q. -- and appreciate, don't you, that the events on 7 and 8 December are important to Mr Berezovsky?
- A. Yes.
- Q. The only reason, Mr Goldfarb, I would suggest to you, that you're seeking to down play the extent to which you were at the chateau on those dates is that you know it does not suit Mr Berezovsky's case that he had a visitor at the chateau at the time who did not see Mr Abramovich.
- A. Not at all.
- Q. Well, once your son arrived in Nice, you presumably took him to see Mr Berezovsky at the chateau?
- A. Not necessarily, no.
- Q. You didn't take your son to visit your host?
- A. Well, he's seen him many times before that, so it's -- if he was there, I would -- first of all, the host, the setting of the whole thing was that the host would really be not Boris but Elena. I could have bring him over to see Elena but not necessarily to see Boris. But again, it's all guesswork. I do not really remember those things.
- Q. And presumably you would have made sure you said goodbye to your host before you left on 10 December?

A. If he was around, yes.

Q. Now, you told us in your first statement, and it's paragraph 62 on page D1/03/55, that when you first saw Mr Berezovsky during this visit to Cap d'Antibes, he did not tell you about any visit by Mr Abramovich.

A. No, he didn't.

Q. But your evidence is that he did subsequently tell you --

A. That's correct.

Q. -- he'd been visited in France by Mr Abramovich and that Mr Abramovich had promised that Mr Glushkov would be released from prison if they sold ORT and that if they didn't sell ORT, the Kremlin would take it away.

A. Yes.

Q. When do you believe that Mr Berezovsky told you that?

A. It could be on my -- one of my next visits shortly after that. I was there in the end after Christmas, as I said, for half a day and then there was this big birthday party.

And the context of it is that right after the New Year, sometime in January, we were much involved in trying to save another TV network in Moscow, that is NTV, by Mr Gusinsky. And we discussed a lot an opportunity -- a possibility of Mr Berezovsky and Badri giving Gusinsky a loan to repay his debt to Gazprom, which was the basis for expropriation of his network at the time. And that was, I think, was to be channelled through the Foundation for Civil Liberty, that loan.

And in the context of these conversations, which happened essentially in mid-January, the issue of Mr Putin's drive to take control of all electronic media in Russia was discussed and it's quite possible that it was sometime in January that I learned about the details of it.

Q. You can't recall, can you, Mr Goldfarb?

A. Can't recall what?

Q. You can't recall when you were told about --

A. I can't recall it. As I said, it should be at one of my next meetings with Mr Berezovsky within late December because it was 27 December or his birthday party in the end of January. I have to look in my diary when actually I saw him. But that conversation, when he essentially told me kind of in their roles who said what at the meeting, which I kind of recreated in my book, probably was in the context of all this heated situation with media being taken under control by the government.

Q. Now, we've seen from your own statements, Mr Goldfarb -- and this is not a criticism -- that it's very possible to confuse dates and events, given how long ago all of this was.

A. Well, I should perhaps quote another witness saying that what you remember is the sequence of events and the context, the logic of them. So I would not, obviously, remember on which day this or that happened unless I have, you know, a documentary proof of my presence, but I do remember what came after what. And, as I said, I learned about Mr Abramovich's kind of explicit warnings or threats, if you will, in the context of the whole media takeover, which happened in January actually.

Q. You just said you remember what comes after what.

A. Yes.

Q. But, for example, in your second witness statement, you remembered -- and I use your words -- that your son came to stay at the chateau in Cap d'Antibes in late December 2000.

A. Yes, that was my initial recollection until I was able to check it by documents and it turned out that it was a wrong recollection. So I --

Q. So the sequence was incorrect?

A. Yes.

Q. Could you be given bundle R(E)1, tab 4, please R(E)1/04/356.

A. Yes.

Q. This is your witness statement in support of Mr Berezovsky's asylum application --

A. Mm-hm.

Q. -- which we looked at on Wednesday, sworn on August 10, 2003.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, you don't make any reference in this statement to the meeting between Mr Abramovich and Mr Berezovsky in Cap d'Antibes, do you?

A. Well, if you say so, I don't, then I don't.

Q. But it would clearly have been relevant to mention it, wouldn't it?

A. No, I wouldn't think so, because Mr Abramovich, in my view, then and now, in this particular case of ORT expropriation was not principal party. He came as a messenger from Mr Putin and presidential administration and he just conveyed information that was given to him and that's -- at least that's how I understand the ORT situation.

Q. But what you were addressing in your witness statement in support of Mr Berezovsky's asylum application was the pressure that you understood had been placed on Mr Berezovsky to part with his shares in ORT.

A. Yes.

Q. That pressure, according to your evidence today, includes pressure that came via Mr Abramovich at the meeting in France.

A. This includes it, but it was by no means the first moment of pressure. The pressure started right in front of my eyes in August, during the Kursk submarine treaty (sic), and it came personally from Mr Putin and Mr Voloshin. So Mr Abramovich was, I would say, the third in this line of pressure people.

Q. But the evidence you're giving about the meeting with Mr Abramovich in France is the first occasion on which Mr Glushkov had been mentioned in connection with this pressure, isn't it?

A. That is correct.

Q. So, again, I put to you, it would have been relevant to mention in your statement in support of Mr Berezovsky if at the time you'd made this statement you recalled having been told about that meeting?

A. Perhaps in retrospect it would, but at the time it didn't seem that important to me.

Q. Well, the real reason you didn't mention it in this statement is that you hadn't been told about the meeting by August 2003, had you?

A. No, of course I'd been told about it, as I just told you a minute ago.

Q. In between your visits to Cap d'Antibes in December

2000 --

A. I should add -- one sec -- to this question.

The taking of hostages is not an unusual method in these situations. It happened with expropriation of NTV from Mr Gusinsky before the situation with Glushkov; it happened later with Khodorkovsky, who was lured back to Russia by taking one of his associates.

So I remember very distinctly my impression of January 2001 that Mr Glushkov was clearly taken hostage and that was clear even before the visit of Mr Abramovich, and that is in October, when we persuaded Mr Berezovsky not to go to Moscow to answer this witness summons.

So Glushkov was a clear situation, we discussed that.

Q. Your understanding before you'd even heard about the meeting that Mr Berezovsky suggests took place with Mr Abramovich in the south of France was that Mr Glushkov was being taken as a hostage and that the ORT shares were being delivered in order to secure his release; is that what you're suggesting?

A. No. Mr Glushkov was not taken as a hostage until 7 December, obviously. He was arrested on 7 December. But his vulnerability from the -- and his -- as a potential hostage was obvious from the moment Boris refused to go to Moscow for this prosecutor's questioning. It was obvious it was mentioned.

Q. And that was on 13 or 14 November?

A. Yes. Yes.

Q. Now, in between your visits in December 2000 to Cap d'Antibes, you had also been to Washington with Mr Berezovsky for the launch of the foundation.

A. Correct.

Q. Was that the only occasion on which Mr Berezovsky came to Washington for an event associated with the foundation or were there others?

A. Well, he was in Washington several times and after the foundation was launched he was kind of presented to the Washington scene as the chairman of our foundation. At the moment I couldn't tell you whether it was -- it was definitely the only occasion in December 2000, but after that he came several times.

Q. And on some of those other occasions he came after December 2000 --

A. Yes.

Q. -- was he accompanied by Ms Gorbunova?

A. Not always. For example, he came after September 11, right after the terrorist attacks, and I took him around Washington. I don't remember Elena around.

Q. Sometimes was he accompanied by Ms --

A. Sometimes, yes.

Q. You say in your third statement that you believe that Ms Gorbunova attended the launch and that you may have gone to New York with Mr Berezovsky and Ms Gorbunova the next day, 19 December, to view an apartment and some proposed offices.

A. Well, she was obviously around. I don't remember whether she was sitting at the National Press Club in the audience, after all this years, when it was announced, but she was in Washington and she was during that trip. And I didn't return to New York with them because I took a flight and their tickets in the case back from Washington to New York with my secretary, Julia. So I most probably flew to Washington on their plane from New York but I came back to New York on my own.

Q. Isn't it possible, Mr Goldfarb, that you're mistaking this trip with another trip that occurred subsequently?

A. No, I cannot mistake. I have tickets.

Q. Sorry, not your trip, but Ms Gorbunova being in Washington or New York. You're mistaking that with another trip that took place subsequently?

A. I don't think I'm mistaking because I have this recollection, subject of course to all these years that passed, and I checked with my secretary, Julia, who is no longer working for me, and she definitely remembers Elena, whom she says is hard to forget.

Q. Well, you suggest you went to view an apartment and offices on 19 December but Mr Berezovsky's travel records suggest he flew to Aspen on 18 December.

A. Yes, it could be on the 17th. I wouldn't give you 100 per cent for that. It all actually puzzled me: why did I come back from Washington to New York not on their plane? I asked Julia and she said: no, they definitely flew to Aspen on the 19th. And now that you tell me that his records are different, so it must have been that we went to see those offices before we went to Washington; maybe in the morning, I don't remember.

Q. Ms Gorbunova's passport does not have an entry stamp for America at this time of year.

A. It's not surprising. When you go to -- in those years, before September 11, when you entered America on a private plane, quite often they wouldn't stamp your passport and I know a couple of other cases like this. People had then problems with immigration because they couldn't prove how they entered the country.

Q. Well, Mr Berezovsky's passport is stamped on the same day.

Now, you tell us in your first statement -- it's paragraph 22 D1/03/44 -- that when you first met

Mr Abramovich, Mr Berezovsky introduced him to you as his partner.

A. Yes.

Q. Are you suggesting that Mr Berezovsky described Mr Abramovich as his partner in Mr Abramovich's presence or are you simply suggesting that Mr Berezovsky told you that you would be meeting his partner, Mr Abramovich?

A. Well, this I cannot remember. But the context of this introduction was my plan to set up a foundation in Moscow by what has later become known as oligarchs, Russian oligarchs, to replace the Soros fund, which were coming to an end. And in the context of this effort I met with all the -- or most of the people who were the oligarchs, such as Mr Fridman or Mr Smolensky or Mr Potanin, Gusinsky, all through Boris's introduction.

And in the context of these meetings he introduced me to Roman and I should say that I was quite surprised that a person who is totally unknown, of his age, would be suggested by Boris to sit on the board of this new foundation with all these billionaires. So he clearly -- what -- the impression that I had from that meeting is that Boris obviously introduced to me -- him to me as someone with substantial financial weight.

Q. In paragraphs 30 to 31 of your first statement, D1/03/46, you're describing certain conversations you say you had with Mr Shvidler in connection with some negotiations that you say were about a possible joint investment between Mr Berezovsky and Mr Soros in Gazprom in 1997.

A. Yes.

Q. And in particular you refer to a meeting with Mr Shvidler in Moscow at which you say you learnt:

"... that [Mr] Abramovich... was a major shareholder of Sibneft along with Boris."

A. Yes.

Q. Can you explain exactly what you recall Mr Shvidler saying about Sibneft's shareholders?

A. I cannot recall what he said explicitly. I remember that we met for a meal, or coffee maybe, at a hotel in Moscow which was right next to the headquarters of Sibneft and in that conversation I kind of -- it was -- I didn't learn; it was confirmed to me that Shvidler was in Sibneft, was second in command to Roman, and I knew that Roman was a shareholder. It was -- everybody knew that.

Q. Mr Shvidler didn't say, did he, that Mr Berezovsky was a shareholder in Sibneft?

A. Oh, it went without saying because he -- everybody knew that he is the principal there.

Q. You also refer in your first statement to two trips you made to Cap d'Antibes in May and June 1998, during one of which Mr Shvidler also came to Cap d'Antibes.

A. I didn't see Mr Shvidler on Boris's property, I should say, at that visit. I saw him, I think, on a boat, or maybe on the beach or maybe on a boat. There were several boats with Russian connection parked there and on one of them there was Mr Shvidler. So... and actually I didn't even spend the night during that visit, I'm not sure even that I stayed overnight there, but we stayed there several hours. It was right after our meeting with Soros in Budapest. We flew to Cap d'Antibes -- I mean, we flew to Nice and there was this yacht scene and I remember distinctly Mr Shvidler there and then we flew to New York.

Q. You saw Mr Shvidler meet Mr Berezovsky?

A. It was a social, more or less, setting and I think Boris was around and he was around, but I do not -- cannot say that there was a formal, you know, business setting meeting then.

Q. And you did not yourself participate directly in the discussions between Mr --

A. No.

Q. You were just witnessing them from a distance?

A. No, not from a distance. As I said, it was on board of a boat most likely.

Q. Now, finally, Mr Goldfarb, you mention in your first statement a meeting you had with Mr Berezovsky in London on or around 14 April 2000. It's paragraph 39 of your statement.

A. Yes. This I need to see.

Q. D1/03/49.

A. Can you repeat the date, please?

Q. You tell us it was a meeting on or about 14 April 2000.

A. April 2000, yes, it was right -- it was before inauguration, right. Mm-hm. So what do I say there? Which paragraph is that?

Q. It's paragraph 39.

The first question I have for you is: what is it about this date that sticks in your mind?

A. Well, the date comes from my travel records. I remember generally the time, it was spring, early April, so I placed the date simply from my -- because I keep precise travel records. And how precise it was, it depends on other visits to London, of course.

Q. You must have had many visits to London over the years where you've met Mr Berezovsky, mustn't you?

A. I had many -- well, at the time I was not working for Mr Berezovsky, I was working for Mr Soros and in my academic job, so my visits were mostly to Moscow and not to London. London started after Litvinenko because

I could no longer go to -- none of us could go back to Russia after 2000. But I cannot tell you right away, without looking at my diary, when was the visit before April 13 and when was the next visit. But most likely, if I put it there, it means that it's pretty precise.

Q. Since that time you have had many visits to London where you have met Mr Berezovsky, haven't you?

A. After he moved to London. He hadn't moved to London until I think 2001.

Q. Although you tell us in your statement that during the first half of 2000 Mr Berezovsky spent most of his time out of Russia?

A. That is correct, and I didn't see him much.

Q. He was travelling a lot, was he?

A. He was travelling a lot, I was travelling a lot and we lived in totally separate universes.

Q. Now, in your statement at paragraph 39 you say you believe that Mr Berezovsky mentioned having acquired interests in aluminium at the meeting in April 2000.

A. Absolutely. Yes, I remember this scene very well. We went to see the exhibition of Salvador Dali next to, you know, the bridge where the London Eye is. There was a... and we were walking across the bridge and he said that he essentially doesn't know what to do now because they've got all they wanted with Mr Putin's election.

Specifically he mentioned Sibneft and ORT and aluminium and he thought that, "I don't really -- I feel under-used now because maybe we should go into the dotcom thing. What is it all about? Tell me". So that's what was the conversation on that bridge.

Q. You have had so many conversations over the years with Mr Berezovsky, Mr Goldfarb --

A. Yes.

Q. -- it must be impossible to recollect that it was on this conversation on this date, 11 years ago --

A. No, this area, as I said, if you can put a conversation into a particular setting, both, you know, specifically where it happened -- and, as I said, it happened over the bridge near the Salvador Dali showroom -- and secondly that it was in the context of Mr Putin being successfully -- project Putin succeeding, and the inauguration was on May 1 or May 3, I think that's pretty easy to place.

Q. Do you recall Mr Berezovsky was happy about President Putin being elected?

A. Oh, yes. He considered it his -- one of his most successful projects.

Q. And he was happy with his position in life generally?

A. Yes.

MS DAVIES: Thank you very much, Mr Goldfarb.

MR MALEK: No questions, my Lady.

MR ADKIN: No questions, my Lady.

MR MUMFORD: No questions, my Lady.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, Mr Rabinowitz.

Re-examination by MR RABINOWITZ

MR RABINOWITZ: A few questions for you, Mr Goldfarb.

You mentioned very recently that after 2000 you could not go back to Russia. Why, in your case, could you not go back to Russia?

A. Because on November 1 2000 I facilitated the entry of a group of asylum seekers to this country and this got in the press, and the family was Mr Litvinenko. Before he came here I facilitated his interview with the CIA in the American embassy in Ankara and all of this was out and as a result of that, no sane person would go to Russia. And Mr Soros fired me for that and that was a big change in my life.

Q. Why was Mr Litvinenko seeking asylum?

A. Mr Litvinenko was a former, as we all know, officer of the FSB. He was associated with Boris back in Russia. He spent some months in prison and it's a long story --

Q. Don't give us the long story.

A. -- I won't go into that, but in a nutshell when Boris -- when it was clear that Boris is not going back to Russia, it was clear that -- and that he quarrelled with Putin, he would not be -- no longer would be able to protect him and it was a natural decision to flee. Otherwise he'll end up dead five years before he actually ended up dead.

Q. You referred -- you were asked a series of questions about events on 7 and 8 December. You mentioned the dinner being a memorable one --

A. Yes.

Q. -- with Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili.

A. Yes.

Q. And you said that it was memorable for three reasons.

A. Yes.

Q. I think your first reason that you identified was the discussion about teletrusts.

A. Yes. The second reason was the discussion about Glushkov, and that is when -- it happened actually very shortly after Glushkov has been arrested, it was right then, and it happened a week after I got in the news because of Litvinenko.

So Badri took me aside -- and Litvinenko spent time in the same prison where they took Glushkov, namely the Lefortovo prison of the federal security service. So Badri took me aside and asked me to talk to Litvinenko and to see whether he could find some ways of communication, maybe through prison guards or some other ways, with Nikolai, because he was an expert in that thing. That was the second thing.

The third thing that I remember very well is that Boris took me aside, probably after dinner, and asked me to arrange to have an American visa for Mr Andrei Lugovoi, who was at the time head of security for Badri and also helped with security for Cap d'Antibes, and he couldn't enter the United States. I told him that, "No, sorry, Boris, I won't do it. I don't understand your fascination with former KGB colonels, be it Mr Putin or Mr Lugovoi". But it turns out that I have been right.

Q. Can I just ask you this. On Wednesday of last week you were asked about whether or not on 13 November 2001 (sic) Mr Berezovsky had finally decided whether he would be returning to Russia.

A. Yes.

Q. And you explained that in fact Mr Berezovsky, as you recollected, had a plane ready to go to Moscow.

A. It was 2000.

Q. 2000.

A. 2000, yes.

Q. Sorry, you're quite right. I said 2001.

You explained that in fact Mr Berezovsky had a plane ready to go to Moscow and that there was a big discussion in the morning of 13 November about whether he should go or not.

A. Yes.

Q. And that Mr Berezovsky's inclination was in fact to go back.

A. Yes.

Q. That, for the transcript, was at Day 12, page 175.

A. Yes.

Q. And in the course of describing this discussion on 13 November at Mr Berezovsky's chateau at Cap d'Antibes, you refer to the fact that collectively you, Ms Gorbunova and the widow of Nobel Laureate Andrei Sakharov sought to persuade Mr Berezovsky not to return.

A. Yes.

Q. Can I just ask you, please, to go to Day 2 (sic), tab 17, page 268.

Sorry, I meant D2, not Day 2. I'm sorry.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Would you give the reference again, please.

MR RABINOWITZ: D2, tab 17, page 268 D2/17/268.

Do you see paragraph 333 at the top of the page?

A. Yes.

Q. There is a reference there to:

"... a discussion with the widow of Andrei Sakharov, who told me, 'Boris, you will achieve more with your freedom than from a jail'."

Can you tell me if that was the same conversation as the one that you're referring to?

A. Yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: Thank you very much, Mr Glushkov.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you very much indeed.

MS DAVIES: My Lady, I do apologise. We have just checked, in the time available to us, and discovered that the Dali exhibition did not open until 3 June 2000 and I felt I ought to raise that in case Mr Goldfarb should be given a --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, put a further question in relation to that if you wish.

Further cross-examination by MS DAVIES

MS DAVIES: Mr Goldfarb, you told us a moment ago that you particularly remember this meeting on the bridge on 14 April because you remember leaving the Dali exhibition.

A. Mm-hm.

Q. In fact the Dali exhibition did not open until 3 June. So that suggests your recollection is incorrect, doesn't it?

A. It might be incorrect about Dali exhibition.

MS DAVIES: Thank you very much, Mr Goldfarb.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, do you have any further questions arising out of that, Mr Rabinowitz? No. Very well.

Thank you, Mr Goldfarb, for coming along. You can be released.

(The witness withdrew)

MR RABINOWITZ: Our next witness is Mr Jacobson.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, would it be sensible for your Ladyship to take the break before Mr Jacobson rather than ten minutes in? I ask that question entirely neutrally.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Okay. Well, I'm easy. Are you content with that?

MR RABINOWITZ: I'm content with that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well. I'll take the break.

(11.09 am)

(A short break)

(11.19 am)

MR RABINOWITZ: I call Mr Jacobson.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR JAMES JACOBSON (sworn)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Please sit down.

Examination-in-chief by MR RABINOWITZ

MR RABINOWITZ: Good morning, Mr Jacobson.

Mr Jacobson, can you just confirm that you don't have with you any mobile phone or electronic device?

A. Yes, that's correct.

Q. Thank you very much.

Can I ask that you please be given bundle D2 open at tab 16, please D2/16/92. You should have a document there, "Witness Statement of James Edwin Jacobson". Do you have that?

A. I do.

Q. Can you go to page 191 of the bundle D2/16/191. It's page 99 of the statement.

A. Yes.

Q. Can you confirm that the signature on that page is your signature?

A. It is.

Q. Can you confirm that this is your first witness statement in these proceedings?

A. It is.

Q. Now, I understand that there are four corrections that you'd like to make to this witness statement. You should, I think, have in front of you a document, "Corrections to James Jacobson's Witness Statement". Do you have that?

A. I do.

Q. Can you first go to paragraph 38 at page 103 of the bundle, please D2/16/103. Now, you should have paragraph 38 at the bottom of the page.

A. Yes.

Q. Can you confirm that the correction that you have at the first point of your corrections document is in fact the correction that you want to make to paragraph 38 of the statement? Effectively you're clarifying your understanding --

A. Yes, that's correct.

Q. -- of whether Mr Abramovich or any of his companies were ever clients of Curtis & Co.

A. Mm-hm. That's correct.

Q. Can I ask you next to turn, please, to page 118, paragraph 105 D2/16/118. It's page 118 of the bundle, paragraph 105. Looking again at the document entitled "Corrections to [your] Statement", is it right that the correction you want to make to paragraph 105 is shown at point 2 of the document? It's a minor correction.

A. Yes, that's correct.

Q. Thank you.

Can I ask you next, please, to go to page 121 of the bundle and look at paragraph 123 D2/16/121. It's at the bottom of that page.

A. Yes.

Q. Do you have it?

A. Mm-hm.

Q. Again, looking at your corrections document, it's right, is it, that the correction you want to make to paragraph 123 is that shown at point 3 of the document?

A. That's correct.

Q. Thank you. And then can you turn next to paragraph 415 at page 182 of the bundle D2/16/182. It's page 90 of the statement. Do you see point 4 is where you make a correction to paragraph 415?

A. Yes.

Q. And I think the emails that you refer to in the correction, are they the ones which are in fact attached to the corrections document? They should be behind the second page. Are those the two emails?

A. I think they are, yes. Yes.

Q. Can you next, please, go to -- I think those are the only corrections you make to this statement. So, subject to those corrections, can you confirm that the contents of this, your first witness statement, is true to the best of your knowledge and belief?

A. I do.

Q. Thank you.

Now, can you then be given bundle D4, please, and if you open that at tab 7. Can you turn to page 53 of the bundle D4/07/53. It's page 5 of the statement. Do you see a signature there?

A. I do, yes.

Q. Can you confirm that this is your signature and this is your second statement in these proceedings?

A. It is.

Q. Now, I understand that there is a small correction you want to make to paragraph 15 of this statement, which is the signature page. Again, if you've got the corrections document, you'll see point 5 deals with a correction to paragraph 15, changing the dates.

A. Yes.

Q. Can you confirm that that's the correction you want to make to that?

A. It is, yes.

Q. And subject to that correction, can you confirm that the contents of this your second witness statement are true to the best of your knowledge and belief?

A. It is.

MR RABINOWITZ: Thank you. Can you wait there, please.

Mr Sumption will have some questions.

Cross-examination by MR SUMPTION

MR SUMPTION: Mr Jacobson, I don't know whether you've been following the course of the trial to any extent so far?

A. Only in the papers.

Q. Sorry, can you speak up a bit?

A. Only in the papers.

Q. Only through the papers, I follow.

Now, there's one point I would like to make clear to you at the outset. I shall be suggesting to you in the course of your cross-examination that in 2001 Mr Curtis devised sham transactions for Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili in order to deceive banks about the origin of their funds. The reason I'm telling you this is that I want to make it clear to you at the outset so that you appreciate this, but it's no part of my case that you personally had any intention of deceiving banks or assisting in money-laundering.

Now, can I ask you, please, when did Sheikh Sultan become a client of Curtis & Co?

A. I think it was late '99/2000.

Q. Late '99 or 2000?

A. Yes.

Q. Does that mean that he was a very recent client at the time when the firm was dealing with Mr Berezovsky?

A. Probably, I suppose, about 12 months maximum.

Q. About 12 months?

A. Mm-hm.

Q. Would you describe Sheikh Sultan as having been an important client of the firm in terms of the volume of fees that his work generated?

A. Well, I didn't do any work on any of his matters but I would say he was -- you said "work generated"?

Probably not a huge amount, no.

Q. I see.

Can you help us with the reintroduction of Mr Berezovsky to the firm. You talk about this in paragraph 31 of your first witness statement D2/16/102, where you say:

"[You] believe that Mr Berezovsky was re-introduced to Curtis & Co by Christopher Samuelson of Valmet in the summer of 2000."

Is that something that you remember?

A. No.

Q. Do you know anything about how that reintroduction came about?

A. No.

Q. Can you help us at all on what business the reintroduction was initiating?

A. No.

Q. Now, was it Mr Berezovsky who introduced the firm to Mr Patarkatsishvili?

A. I couldn't say. It might have been Valmet. I assume that they came as a package.

Q. Yes, but you have no knowledge about that?

A. No.

Q. Do you remember when it was that Mr Patarkatsishvili first started dealing with the firm?

A. I don't know.

Q. Now, I want to ask you first, please, about the ORT transaction.

Curtis & Co prepared two agreements relating to ORT initially in January 2001, didn't they?

A. They did, yes.

Q. Now, just for the record, the first was an option agreement, wasn't it, under which Spectrum General Trading bought options over shares in ORT from Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili for $70 million each?

A. I think so, yes. It might have been ORT-KB.

Q. Yes, you're quite right, ORT-KB.

The second document that was drafted was an assignment agreement under which Spectrum assigned the benefit of the option to a company called Akmos; is that correct?

A. It is.

Q. Now, Spectrum General Trading, as you confirm in your witness statement, was a company owned by Sheikh Sultan?

A. Correct.

Q. Now, when was the firm first instructed to prepare these documents?

A. Well, I don't know. It has to come from the documents that we've seen. Probably in January.

Q. Yes, I see. Can you help us on who the instructions to prepare these documents came from?

A. No.

Q. From whom did you first find out the background and purpose of these documents?

A. Stephen.

Q. And what did he tell you about their background and purpose?

A. Well, he didn't tell me anything; it was just reading the correspondence that was flowing.

Q. He didn't know anything?

A. No, he didn't tell me anything.

Q. He didn't tell you anything?

A. No.

Q. Right. At paragraph 61 of your first witness statement D2/16/108 you refer to a letter from Curtis & Co to Mr Sykes at Clydesdale Bank -- hold on a moment -- and you refer to Mr Curtis having been asked by Dr Jumean to assist in the establishment of accounts in the United Kingdom to receive the proceeds of the ORT transaction.

Now, I'm going to turn to that letter in due course. But so far as you're aware, was -- sorry, I'll start again. Do you have any knowledge of Dr Jumean having asked Mr Curtis to assist with the opening of those accounts, other than what can be inferred from that letter?

A. No.

Q. So far as you are aware, was Dr Jumean's request for assistance in opening the accounts the firm's first introduction to the ORT transaction?

A. Possibly. I wouldn't know.

Q. For whom were these accounts to be opened?

A. Boris and Badri.

Q. And were they the accounts that were opened for both of those gentlemen at Clydesdale Bank?

A. Yes, I think so.

Q. Was it Mr Curtis therefore who was instrumental in the opening of those two accounts?

A. Yes.

Q. Would that request from Dr Jumean have involved making contact, first of all, with Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili?

A. Possibly. I don't know.

Q. Do you know how Clydesdale was identified as a suitable bank for this purpose?

A. No.

Q. Had the firm had previous dealings involving Clydesdale Bank?

A. Yes.

Q. Were they dealings involving the sheikh also?

A. I don't think so, no.

Q. They were dealings for other clients?

A. Yes, I believe so.

Q. Now, presumably Mr Curtis would have had to make contact with Clydesdale Bank, get some forms, obtain evidence of account holders' identity and so on, before he could do much to open those accounts?

A. Yes, correct.

Q. And indeed he would also have had to ensure that he had the authority of the account holders?

A. Of course.

Q. So before the accounts were opened, there must have been a certain amount of communication between Mr Curtis, the bank and Messrs Berezovsky and Patarkatsishvili; would you agree?

A. Yes, I would agree with that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Excuse me, are you drinking coffee over there? You're not allowed to eat or drink in court.

Right. Continue, Mr Sumption.

MR SUMPTION: Now, are you aware of the dates on which the account application forms were presented or prepared?

A. I don't think so, no.

Q. Right. Have you ever seen them?

A. I don't think so.

Q. Right. Now, let me tell you then that the account application on behalf of Mr Patarkatsishvili was dated 28 December 2000 -- for the transcript, the reference is H(A)26/126 -- and the corresponding application by Mr Berezovsky was dated 6 January 2001. For the transcript the reference is H(A)27/248.

Now, does that suggest that the request from Dr Jumean referred to by Mr Curtis must have happened sometime before 28 December?

A. Yes, I would agree with that.

Q. You agree?

A. Yes.

Q. Indeed, given that 28 December was only three days after Christmas, it must have been quite a few days before 28 December, not much happening in the United Kingdom over the Christmas holiday; would you agree?

A. Mm-hm. I would agree.

Q. In his own application Mr Berezovsky describes himself or the form describes him as the chairman of Spectrum. Do you know whether Mr Berezovsky was in fact the chairman of Spectrum?

A. I wouldn't have thought he was.

Q. Sorry?

A. I wouldn't have thought he was the chairman of Spectrum.

Q. No. If he was the chairman of Spectrum, do you think you would have known?

A. No.

Q. Why do you say you wouldn't have thought that he was the chairman of Spectrum?

A. Because Spectrum is owned by the sheikh.

Q. Right.

Now, the first document that we have from Curtis & Co's files about this is at H(A)28/29 and I will, if I may, ask you to look at that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: You have the documents on the screen as well as in hard copy.

THE WITNESS: Oh, okay.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Suit yourself as to which you would prefer to look at.

MR SUMPTION: Now, this, I think, is your note of a conversation with Pavel, and that's Mr Ivlev, isn't it?

A. That's correct.

Q. Mr Ivlev was Mr Berezovsky's lawyer in Moscow; is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, you will see that the heading of this note, which was presumably put there by you, is "Fomichev -- Option Agreement". Do you see that?

A. I do.

Q. Why was it headed in that way?

A. I've no idea.

Q. Well, did your --

A. I must have assumed that Fomichev, representing Boris and Badri, had some involvement with the option agreement.

Q. Yes. Well, does it look as if Mr Fomichev had asked the firm to prepare an option agreement?

A. Possibly.

Q. Now, your instructions must have come, must they not, at least in part from either Mr Fomichev or someone else on behalf of Mr Berezovsky or Mr Patarkatsishvili? Would you agree?

A. They would have given us information. I don't know formally where the instructions would come from.

Q. Well, if you were contacting Mr Ivlev for details of the ORT holdings and Mr Ivlev was Mr Berezovsky's lawyer in Moscow, you must have satisfied yourself that you could talk directly to Mr Ivlev with Mr Berezovsky's consent; do you agree?

A. Me personally?

Q. Well, somebody in the firm, not necessarily you, must have done that; do you agree?

A. I assume so, yes.

Q. Now, you suggest at paragraph 59 of your first witness statement D2/16/107 that the firm was acting for Spectrum. May I suggest that if it was acting for Spectrum, it was also acting for Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili?

A. In relation to establishing the accounts?

Q. Yes -- well, and in relation to the transaction generally, surely?

A. Well, I wouldn't know at the time. I'm just looking now in hindsight, reviewing the documents.

Q. With the benefit of the documents, would you agree?

A. I think there was an overlap in some respect.

Q. Right. Were you aware that unconditional agreements for the sale of the shares in ORT-KB had been executed which were dated 25 December?

A. No.

Q. You were not?

A. No.

Q. You're aware now, presumably, or are you not?

A. I think I've read it in one of the letters.

Q. I see.

Now, I'd like to look at the information recorded in the note which you've got on screen. Where did you understand that Mr Ivlev had obtained this information?

A. I've no idea.

Q. Well, looking at it, at the sort of information it was, where would you have expected him to obtain it?

A. He must have checked with someone who knew about ORT.

Q. Well, when you say, "Pavel confirmed to me the following", does it suggest that you had at some earlier stage asked him to find out these facts and he was coming back to you with the answers?

A. Possibly.

Q. Presumably you would have asked him to check in the Moscow Companies Registry, wouldn't you?

A. I didn't.

Q. Sorry?

A. I didn't.

Q. You didn't?

A. No.

Q. Somebody must have done?

A. Well, I assumed it was literally, "Can you just confirm the ownership of this company".

Q. Do you see that under 1 and 2 it is said:

"... that ORT was owned 49% by ORT (KB)..."

And:

"... ORT (KB) was owned in turn by Mr Berezovsky and Bardrey."

I'm interested in the past tense. Did you understand that this information related to the shareholding position at some earlier stage?

A. No, that was how I'd have -- how it was at that date.

Q. I see.

Well now, the transfer of shares in ORT-KB to Akmos, which was an Abramovich company, had been registered at the Moscow Companies Registry by 29 December 2000; we know that from the document from the registry. Did Mr Ivlev tell you that in this conversation?

A. I don't think so, no.

Q. Were you aware of it at any stage during the course of the following weeks and months?

A. I wasn't.

Q. You weren't? Could we have a look, please, at bundle H(A)28/84. The same bundle if you're looking at the hard copy. It will come up on screen in a moment. Have you got that? If you want to wait for it to come up on screen, by all means do, but since this is a two-page document you might prefer to have the ability to flip over.

A. Okay.

Q. It isn't so easy on the screen.

Now, this is a letter from Mr Curtis dated 17 December (sic) to Clydesdale Bank. Now, you tell us that you didn't draft this. When did you first see it?

A. You mean 17 January?

Q. Yes.

A. I couldn't tell you when I first saw it.

Q. It's a letter that presumably would have been on the transaction file within the firm, isn't it?

A. Possibly.

Q. So you must have seen it pretty shortly afterwards?

A. Yes, I mean, it wasn't -- the files weren't always --

Q. Sorry?

A. The files weren't always up to date.

Q. I see. But this document has to be typed out by somebody in the office --

A. Yes.

Q. -- and then signed?

A. Mm-hm.

Q. Presumably it would have appeared without too much delay in the files of the transaction; otherwise it would be impossible for anybody picking the file up, as you later did, to discover what was going on. Don't you agree?

A. Yes, but this was pretty much Stephen's transaction, so the involvement was quite limited.

Q. Well now, we see in this letter Mr Curtis is asking the bank to accept the $70 million from each of Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili on the basis that it represents the proceeds of an option that they have sold to Spectrum. Do you see that?

A. Mm-hm. Yes.

Q. Now, at this stage do you know whom Mr Curtis had discussed this proposal for an option with?

A. I don't believe so.

Q. You don't.

Now, the next document that we have chronologically on the file is a discussion draft prepared on 18 January which you emailed on that date to Mr Jumean, and you refer to that in your statement, don't you?

Paragraph 62 D2/16/108. I'm happy to turn this document up if it would help you, but I'm just taking it from your statement.

A. Okay.

Q. Now, perhaps you could turn in bundle H(A)28 to page 125 H(A)28/125. Page 125 is the email front page, so to speak, listing the attachments --

A. Mm-hm.

Q. -- which you were sending to Dr Jumean. That's Eyhab, isn't it?

A. That's right, yes.

Q. If you look at page 127 you'll see the first page of the draft agreement H(A)28/127. Over the page, on page 128, you'll see that among the definitions, "the Option Price" and there's a note:

"PAVEL -- I believe the aggregate price to be paid for all of the shares equates to $10 million. Can I impose on you to calculate value per share in Roubles."

Did you put that note into the draft?

A. No.

Q. You did not?

A. No.

Q. Can you help us on whether the $10 million was for the totality of the shares, ie both Mr Berezovsky's and Mr Patarkatsishvili's, or whether it was $10 million each?

A. I can't help you.

Q. I see. We just have to draw our own conclusions from the document?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, you, I think, were responsible for sending this letter of 17 January to Mr Sykes of the Clydesdale Bank. Do you agree? Do you remember that?

A. I think so, yes.

Q. You think you were? We can establish that if you would like to be shown -- I'm sorry to encumber your desk with paper, but if somebody could show you H(D)2 at page 2 H(D)2/2.

Now, at page 2 you will see an expurgated version of this letter and I think, if the bundle you have been given is up to date, it will have a 2U after it which has the unexpurgated version. It's on Magnum.

Does that suggest that you took the 17 January letter that I showed you at bundle H(A)28/84 and yourself sent it to Mr Sykes of Clydesdale Bank?

A. I pp-ed the letter, yes.

Q. Yes. So in fact that does establish, doesn't it, that you must have seen it on about that date?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, if we can go back to page 128 of the bundle which you've got open, H(A)28 H(A)28/128, on the footing that the $10 million related to the whole of the shares, ie $5 million for each of them, this was a draft agreement under which the sheikh or Spectrum was buying, for a total of $140 million between the two agreements, an option to acquire the shares in ORT-KB; that's right, isn't it?

A. Yes, that appears to be the case.

Q. And the option itself, once exercised, once the option was exercised, the shares were going to cost $10 million because that was the option price? If you look at clause 3.4.1, top of page 129:

"The consideration payable for each of the Option Shares shall be the Option Price."

And that's defined at the top of the previous page.

A. Yes, it says that.

Q. Now, do you think that there was anything rather odd about the notion of paying $140 million to buy an option to buy shares for $10 million?

A. I wouldn't have -- I wouldn't have thought about it.

Q. Well think about it now. Nobody would do that, would they, unless they'd already decided that the option was undoubtedly going to be exercised? Otherwise you'd be throwing $140 million away. Do you agree?

A. Possibly, yes.

Q. It looks a bit artificial, doesn't it?

A. It looks a bit strange, yes. It looks a bit unusual.

Q. Well now, could I ask you, please -- you can put away bundle H(A)28 and I'd like to ask you to turn to H(A)29/13.

This is a letter from Mr Ivlev to Mr Curtis and, since I know you're fairly familiar with the file, at least now, you probably are aware that this was originally received from Mr Ivlev in unsigned form and then on 13 February the same letter in signed form.

A. That's right.

Q. You're aware of that?

A. Mm-hm.

Q. Now, let's look at the -- what we've got in front of us is in fact the signed version but the unsigned one would have been received about 5 February, would it not?

A. That's right.

Q. Now, Mr Ivlev reports in this letter, in the bottom paragraph on page 13, what he says by way of explanation is:

"There are two Share Sale and Purchase Contracts both dated 25 December 2000, one between Boris BEREZOVSKY (the seller) and [Akmos]... and the second one between [Mr] PATARKATSISHVILI and the same Purchaser, in accordance with which on 29 December 2000 [Mr] BEREZOVSKY and [Mr] PATARKATSISHVILI transferred all of their shares in the Company to the Purchaser."

Now, does that suggest that the firm, at least by 5 February, was aware that agreements for the sale of these shares by Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili to Akmos had been made on 25 December? The firm was aware of that by 5 February, was it not?

A. Yes.

Q. Does it also suggest that by that date at the latest they were also aware that the shares had actually been transferred to Akmos, the purchaser, on 29 December 2000?

A. Yes. Yes.

Q. Now, would you agree that if Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili had already transferred their shares to the purchaser on 29 December, there was nothing over which they could grant a call option to Spectrum?

A. Yes, but the rest of the paragraph...

Q. Yes, but what that says is:

"I was advised by Mr Ruslan FOMYCHEV, a representative of Messrs BEREZOVSKY and PATARKATSISHVILI, that the consideration under the Share Sale and Purchase Contracts has not been paid as it was subjected by the execution of performance of the call option agreement between Messrs BEREZOVSKY and PATARKATSISHVILI... and the company named Spectrum..."

Now, what Mr Fomichev is recorded there as explaining is that the payment of the consideration was being held up until the option agreement was executed;
that's what he's explaining, isn't it?

A. It seemed to be some sort of conditional arrangement.

Q. But if the shares had already been transferred to Akmos on 29 December then whenever the consideration was paid, there was nothing over which an option could be exercised, was there?

A. Apparently not, no.

Q. Now, does it look therefore as if this option agreement was in fact a sham because one thing it could not achieve was a transfer of shares to Spectrum? That had already happened: the shares had gone to Akmos.

A. Are you asking me what I think now or what I thought at the time?

Q. What you think now.

A. Well, possibly it does look a bit like an agreement that may have been signed before, but I think Mr Curtis was relying on Mr Ivlev and Mr Fomichev.

Q. Well, Mr Curtis was aware that the registration of the shares to Akmos had already happened, wasn't he?

A. I don't think he was aware of the registration.

Q. Well, okay. He was aware that, in accordance with the agreement of the 25th, on 29 December they had transferred all of their shares to the purchaser? Those are his very words, aren't they, Mr Ivlev's very words?

A. That's true. But, you know, he does go on to say that the call option is not illegal under Russian law. So --

Q. Well, Mr Jacobson, if the shares had already been transferred to Akmos, it wasn't going to be possible, was it, to grant an option to Spectrum over them?

A. Theoretically not, yes.

Q. Because the two agreements that were drafted by Curtis & Co, one was an option in favour of Spectrum and the other was an assignment of that option back to Akmos, and all that was completely pointless if Akmos had already got the shares at the end of the previous month, wasn't it?

A. Seemingly so.

Q. Now, could I ask you, please, to turn to H(A)29/41, the same bundle. This is Clydesdale Bank telling Mr Curtis that their due diligence had been completed and they were in a position to accept the $140 million split equally between Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili. Do you see that?

A. I do.

Q. Now, was Mr Curtis aware, so far as you are aware, at the time this letter was received that funds were being paid by Mr Abramovich's companies into Spectrum's account?

A. I've no idea.

Q. Can you help us on whether Mr Curtis was aware that in fact the payment which included the $140 million had been made to Spectrum between 8 and 25 January 2001?

A. I've no idea.

Q. You weren't aware of that?

A. No.

Q. For the transcript, that appears, among other places, from H(A)41/128.

Now, you accept, I think, that Mr Curtis must have been aware that funds were paid by Spectrum to Mr Patarkatsishvili's and Mr Berezovsky's account at Clydesdale Bank --

A. Yes.

Q. -- on 13 February. You accept that, don't you?

A. Yes.

Q. He was aware at the time?

A. Yes.

Q. And as I understand it, that was because Curtis & Co had access to the Clydesdale Bank statements. Is that correct?

A. That's correct.

Q. Did they have access to Spectrum's account also?

A. No.

Q. They did not.

Now, if the money was being paid by Spectrum to the Clydesdale Bank accounts on 13 February, it was obvious, wasn't it, that corresponding sums must have been paid into Spectrum's account by Mr Abramovich's companies at some time before or possibly on 13 February? Do you agree?

A. Are you asking me now or --

Q. Yes.

A. Yes, I agree.

Q. Now, the execution copy of the option agreement executed on behalf of Spectrum was not in fact received until June, was it?

A. I think it was June.

Q. Yes. What happened, I think -- correct me if I'm wrong -- was that on 11 or 12 June Curtis & Co received from the sheikh's financial office executed copies of a number of agreements, including the Devonia agreements and the Spectrum agreements. Is that right?

A. That's right, yes.

Q. Right. Now, that was, of course, some four months after the receipt of the funds into the Clydesdale account, which, as we've seen, occurred on 13 February.

A. Correct.

Q. When you nod, it doesn't get into the transcript.

A. I know, sorry. Yes.

Q. Now, does it look as if this arrangement was also a sham for that reason, namely that at the time the agreement was executed, everything had already been done?

A. I mean, are you saying when we receive the agreements or --

Q. Well, the sheikh --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just a second, Mr Sumption. What is the date of the executed option agreement? You told us in your question that it was received by Curtis & Co on the 11th or 12th.

MR SUMPTION: Yes, let me take the witness to the document that establishes that. It isn't apparent from the agreement itself, which is undated. But if the witness could be shown H(A)39/105.

Have you got that either on screen or in hard copy,

Mr Jacobson?

A. Yes.

Q. Sorry?

A. I've got it here.

Q. At page 105 you will see a fax cover page, "Subject: devonia". This is addressed to Stephen Curtis and it sends the full deed of assignment.

Over the page one sees the signature page which has been signed -- there were a number of originals, I think this is right, and this is the original that was being signed on behalf of Devonia and by the sheikh as guarantor. Is that correct?

A. That's correct.

Q. That's correct. So this is effectively the sheikh's financial office sending to the firm the executed copy of the assignment agreement; is that right?

A. Yes, that's correct.

Q. Now, at page -- I'm sorry, that's the Devonia agreement. If you look at page 109, you'll see the deed of assignment H(A)39/109.

A. Is it 107?

Q. Sorry?

A. Are you -- the executed page?

Q. The executed copy of the deed of assignment starts at 107 and the signature page is at 109. This appears to be -- this is all an attachment to the fax which is at page 105. Can you confirm that?

A. Yes, that's correct.

Q. Now, the option agreement, I think we can also demonstrate, arrived at the same time; is that correct? Or about the same time, Mr Jacobson?

A. I believe so.

Q. Sorry?

A. I believe it was, yes.

Q. Yes, well, we'll just check, but I think you're right about that. I think you say so in your witness statement.

Now, looking at -- I'm told it's page 91 of the same bundle H(A)39/91, where we have another fax cover page, also from the same source, and that attaches on the same date, 11 June, the executed copy of the Spectrum option. Do you see that? 91 is the fax cover page, 92 is the first page of the agreement and 98 is the signature page which, I think, confirms what you've just told us.

A. Yes, that's correct.

Q. Now, at the time when this was received in your office, that's to say on 11 June, the money had already been paid in its entirety both by Mr Abramovich to Spectrum and by Spectrum to Clydesdale Bank and you were -- or the firm was clearly aware of the latter part of that payment system, ie between Spectrum and Clydesdale Bank, and had been for some four months.

A. That's correct.

Q. What did you understand to have been the point of the assignment of the option back to Akmos, given that payment had been made four months before?

A. I didn't have any thoughts of it at all.

Q. I see.

Now, what you received in June was the execution copy sent to the sheikh in February, which was then being sent back by the sheikh or his financial office to the firm in June, signed by the sheikh but not by Akmos. This is the assignment agreement. You make that point in your witness statement, don't you?

A. Yes, that's correct.

Q. Now, in August 2002 you -- and I mean you personally here -- sent the assignment to Mr Joseph Kay's office, did you not? You make that point in your second witness statement.

A. I think I did, yes.

Q. When you sent it in August 2002 to Mr Kay's office, the document which you sent was signed not only by the sheikh but apparently by Akmos as well? You're nodding and it's --

A. That appears to be right, yes.

Q. Right. Can we just have a look at that:

H(A)47/128.003.

Now, 128.003 is a letter signed by you enclosing a copy agreement with Spectrum and copy deed of assignment. Okay?

A. Mm-hm. Yes.

Q. And Ms Olga Lihou, to whom you're sending it -- see top left -- was someone who worked in Mr Joseph Kay's office; that's right, isn't it?

A. That's correct.

Q. Now, we can see from page 128.025 and following H(A)47/128.025 the assignment agreement and the signature page is at page 128.027 and by this stage a signature purportedly on behalf of Akmos has appeared. Do you see that?

A. I do.

Q. Now, our evidence is -- and I'm not expecting you to comment on this because you wouldn't know -- that that signature was a forgery. Can you help us on how the signature came to be on the copy of the document which your firm had held since June?

A. I've no idea.

Q. The document that you were sending to Mr Kay had been in the custody of your firm since June 2001, had it not?

A. What, the original?

Q. Sorry?

A. Which document? This --

Q. Well, the document that you are sending to Mr Kay is the document that you had received or the firm had received back in June 2001, isn't it, but with the addition of a signature on behalf of Akmos?

A. Yes, it looks like that, yes.

Q. Now, does it look therefore as if what you were sending Mr Kay was a document that had been on the files of your firm since June 2001? We don't know at what stage the signature was added, but the document must have been in your firm's files throughout that time. Do you agree?

A. What, without the Akmos signature?

Q. Well, without it at some stage and then, after a point of time which we can't identify, with it.

A. Yes.

Q. You agree?

A. I agree, yes.

Q. Now, for that signature to have been put on the document by an officer of Akmos, Mr Curtis's firm would have had to send it to them directly or indirectly for that purpose, would it not? Some arrangement would have had to have been made by Mr Curtis's firm --

A. Wouldn't Spectrum have --

Q. -- to get Akmos's signature there?

A. Wouldn't Spectrum have done that?

Q. Well, Spectrum could hardly sign on behalf of Akmos, could they?

A. No, but hang on --

Q. They may have done so, but it would be a forgery if they did?

A. But we received a fax copy without the Akmos signatures in June 2001.

Q. Yes.

A. And then --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: What paragraph of your witness statement are you looking at?

MR SUMPTION: It's in the second witness statement, my Lady, at D4, flag 7. It's dealt with between paragraphs 12 and 16 of that statement D4/07/52.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you.

MR SUMPTION: Now, we know that in August 2002 -- we've established this from your answers a few minutes ago -- there was this copy with an Akmos signature or a purported Akmos signature on it which you sent to Mr Kay's office.

A. Mm-hm. Correct.

Q. Now, for that document to have an Akmos signature on it by August 2002, some arrangement, some communication must have occurred with the firm under which the document was supplied with an Akmos signature: either somebody sent it to them saying, "Here's another copy with Akmos's signature", or the firm must have arranged to get Akmos's signature. One of those two things must have happened, must it not?

A. If we received the fax copy in June 2001 --

Q. Yes.

A. -- I don't know when the original would have come --

Q. Yes.

A. -- but Spectrum could have arranged for the original to be signed by Akmos from wherever Spectrum was in Abu Dhabi.

Q. Well, is there any documentary record on the firm's file of the firm having received any other copy of the agreement as executed by the sheikh apart from the copy that was faxed to you on 11 June? Do you have any record --

A. No.

Q. -- on the firm's file of that having happened?

A. I think it was just the fax copy.

Q. Yes. Likewise, is there any record on the firm's file of the firm having itself arranged for an Akmos signature to be applied to it?

A. No.

Q. Now, if either of those things had happened, it would have left a documentary record on the firm's archives, wouldn't it?

A. Yes, should do.

Q. Does it look as if the Akmos signature was applied to this document in Curtis & Co's office?

A. No.

Q. Why do you say that?

A. Because the original would have still been in Abu Dhabi with Spectrum.

Q. Yes, but you had a version signed by Akmos by August 2002.

A. Yes, a fax version.

Q. Well --

A. Oh, no, sorry. Yes, original then, yes.

Q. Yes.

Now, how did the signature get there without leaving any trace of its having come into Curtis & Co's office unless the signature was applied in the office?

A. I don't follow. I'm missing something. Because I'm assuming the signatories were done in Abu Dhabi or elsewhere.

Q. Well, if that had happened, as you've just confirmed, Mr Jacobson, there would be some documentary record of the version with Akmos's signature coming into the firm, and there isn't. Do you see?

A. No, I'm missing the point.

Q. What I put to you a moment ago was that if the firm had received the agreement from Spectrum at some stage after 11 June 2001 with Akmos's signature on it, there would have been a documentary record of that having been faxed in or emailed in, wouldn't there?

A. If it had been received -- well, if the original had come in by courier.

Q. If the original had come in by courier, you think that it would not necessarily have left any documentary evidence of receipt?

A. It would just be the document.

Q. Yes. Well, every other document that we have seen relating to this transaction came in either by email or by fax. Can you confirm that?

A. No, I don't think so, no. We obviously got original --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Can you speak up, please.

A. We obviously got original documents later on.

MR SUMPTION: Once you had received the faxed copy on 11 June, there would be no need for any haste and no need to courier the original to you, would there?

A. Are you talking about the assignment?

Q. Yes.

A. I assume not, no.

Q. Mr Curtis received a fee of $600,000, described as a 0.66 per cent of the sheikh's turn on the deal relating to Spectrum, did he not?

A. I don't know whether he received it.

Q. Well, he certainly had an agreement that he was to receive it, did he not?

A. That appears to be the case in the instructions to counsel.

Q. Yes. Well, if we just have a look at H(A)32/20 --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just before you leave the deed at page 128.027 H(A)47/128.027, is the document within Curtis & Co's firm the original or a copy, or is it not possible to say? The document that's on the screen at the moment.

A. That one would have been an original.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: And the original comes from your files; is that -- well, let me ask Mr Sumption that.

Mr Sumption, the document that's on the screen at the moment, is it an original that comes from Curtis & Co's file?

MR SUMPTION: Well, it's only -- it comes from Curtis's files, yes. We can only be sure that it's an original so far as concerns the signature applied to Akmos. It's not clear that it isn't actually a signature that was applied to the faxed copy that had previously been received. It's not clear one way or the other.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: But so far as the signature is concerned, it's your case anyway that that is an original signature applied to that particular document?

MR SUMPTION: Yes, and a forgery.

Now, Mr Jacobson, if the document had in fact come in by courier, there would still be a documentary record, wouldn't there? Because if you send a document by courier you have to identify what it's about. So there would be a covering letter saying, "Please find enclosed..." whatever it is. That would happen almost invariably, wouldn't it?

A. Sometimes not with the Russians, no.

Q. Well, except I think you're envisaging that it was the Arabs.

A. Well, they're just --

Q. But are they just as bad?

A. Yes.

Q. You don't send a document to a solicitor's office without any kind of explanation of what it is or what it relates to or who it's come from, do you?

A. I don't. But it is done quite a lot where you just get something -- an original document. Or it could have been handed by --

Q. That wasn't Dr Jumean's practice, was it? We've seen his practice from a number of other items of correspondence. He was quite meticulous about all this, wasn't he?

A. He was meticulous, yes.

Q. Now, if we can just return to the commission. If you would turn to H(A)32/20. This is a document that begins on page 19 and it's an attendance note of 29 May 2001 of your meeting, together with Mr Curtis, with Jonathan Fisher of counsel.

A. That's correct.

Q. And you refer to the commission on the second page, page 20 of the bundle, in the paragraph that begins just above halfway down the page. You refer to this in your witness statement. This is Mr Curtis discussing with counsel the $600,000 fee which Mr Curtis said that he would be receiving from the ORT transaction.

Mr Fisher was a bit troubled by this fee, wasn't he?

A. Yes, he thought it should be written down.

Q. It should be...?

A. Written down.

Q. Yes, but it wasn't just that it should be written down, was it? He was a bit troubled because, as he points out, if you look at the three points made in the end of that paragraph: first of all it was "a very large amount"; secondly, "it was not referable to any time expended which was unusual"; and thirdly, the point you've just made that "the basis had never been documented".

If you look two paragraphs further down:

"Counsel suggested... that the size of payment that was being given to SLC could in the worst light be interpreted as a payment for SLC to keep quiet about any... money laundering activities (this is obviously on the basis that the source of monies were proven to be illegal)."

That was his concern, wasn't it?

A. That's correct.

Q. Now, was the $600,000 in addition to the firm's professional fees?

A. I've no idea.

Q. Sorry?

A. I've no idea.

Q. You don't know?

A. No.

Q. In your experience is it usual or unusual for a solicitor to receive a large profit commission on a transaction?

A. Unusual, I would say.

Q. Now, can we turn to the Devonian transaction.

I understand that your first recorded involvement in this transaction was on 14 May, when you took a note of a telephone conversation between Mr Curtis and the Clydesdale Bank. Am I right about that? Or was there any other contact?

A. I think that's right.

Q. Yes.

Now, I wonder if you could turn to H(A)30/33.

This is the document in question and I think that you were listening in on this telephone -- was it a telephone conversation or a meeting? I understand it to have been a phone conversation. Is that right?

A. It's telephone.

Q. Right. And as I understand it, you were listening in on it and taking the note. Is that right?

A. That's right.

Q. Now, are you familiar with this document or would you like an opportunity just to remind yourself of its contents?

A. Yes, I'm okay with it.

Q. Right.

Now, did it become apparent in the course of this conversation that a receipt of very large sums originating from funds held by Mr Abramovich in a Latvian bank would cause difficulties for Clydesdale Bank?

A. Yes.

Q. And was that because they were likely to find it difficult to satisfy themselves about its origins?

A. That's correct, yes.

Q. Now, did the bank therefore say that because these problems would not apply to funds transmitted from Abu Dhabi by Sheikh Sultan, one possibility was that the funds should arrive from that source instead?

A. I think that's the gist of it, yes.

Q. Was that because the bank had already done due diligence in the past on Sheikh Sultan and his family and associates?

A. I think that's right.

Q. Now, three days after this telephone conversation, on 17 May, you tell us in your witness statement that Mr Curtis went to the south of France to see Mr Berezovsky, Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Fomichev. You remember that evidence?

A. I do, yes.

Q. Now, I'd like you, please, in bundle H(A)30 to turn to page 127 H(A)30/127. Now, you have described in your witness statement how this document was prepared at about the time that Mr Curtis went to France and a copy of it was in fact faxed by you to Mr Curtis in the south of France. You remember that evidence from your witness statement?

A. I do, yes. Yes.

Q. Now, the bold-type comments before the actual draft agreement, that appears to be notes of advice which Mr Curtis was to give to them. Is that right?

A. I think that's right, yes.

Q. And I think your evidence is -- your first witness statement, paragraph 90 is where I get this from D2/16/114 -- that these five bold points reflected points dictated by Mr Curtis to Mr Gilchrist. Is that right?

A. That's right, although I think NB(5) may have come later.

Q. I see.

Well now, did Mr Curtis, so far as you can tell us, take a copy of a discussion draft, with or without these notes, with him to the south of France?

A. I don't know.

Q. You don't know?

A. No.

Q. Now, point 2, if you -- now, your evidence is that you faxed this at about midday UK time, allowing for the two-hour difference between Curtis & Co's internal clock and Greenwich Mean Time. You faxed this at about midday on the 17th; that's what you recall, isn't it?

A. That's right, yes.

Q. Now, point 2, if you will just have a look at point 2 in the list of points, suggests that Mr Curtis was going to advise that there should be a direct agreement with Mr Abramovich in order to be able to enforce payment against him in England. Do you see that?

A. Yes. Yes, I do.

Q. So does it look as if at this stage it was intended that there should be a contract between Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili on the one hand and Mr Abramovich on the other, but that the money would be channelled through Sheikh Sultan? Does that seem to have been what was envisaged at this stage?

A. It's a possibility, yes.

Q. Can you think of any other possibility which is worth considering?

A. What, insofar as that the money couldn't come directly from Mr Abramovich?

Q. Yes.

A. No.

Q. So there was going to be a direct deal but a slightly roundabout route for the money?

A. That appears to be the case, yes.

Q. Yes.

Now, point 4 suggests that Mr Curtis thought that it was desirable to "create evidence of the trust scenario". I'm quoting from the document; you'll see it in front of you.

A. Yes.

Q. Can you help us on what was meant by "creat[ing] evidence of the trust scenario"?

A. I'm assuming it's the relationship between Boris and Badri and Mr Abramovich.

Q. Yes, but why was it necessary to create that evidence?

A. Well, I think he wanted to have some sort of written evidence of it.

Q. You think what?

A. I think he wanted to have some sort of written evidence of it.

Q. I see.

Now, you faxed this document, as you've told us, to France, together with a shorter form of agreement which we can find at H(A)30/142, about 15 pages further on.

Now, this is what you call the short-form agreement and this is the version that you faxed at 14.29 on Curtis machine time; about half past midday actually. That's right, isn't it?

A. Yes, there's two forms of this agreement.

Q. Yes. Well now, this version is not in fact -- the first document is the sale agreement. This document is actually a release, isn't it?

A. That's right. This -- the first version I think -- was it faxed afterwards?

Q. Well, it was faxed virtually simultaneously. If you look back at H(A)30/127 -- sorry I'm trying to find the version with your fax header sheet -- I think they were both faxed at about 2.30 on 17 May. I'll try and get chapter and verse for that.

If you look at -- 142 is the short-form, as you call it, and 145, which has a fax record going about a minute later --

A. Yes.

Q. -- is the -- no, that's the same document. 148 is the document we've just been looking at with the five bold advice points.

A. Yes, that's 14.47, isn't it?

Q. 14.47.

A. Okay.

Q. So it looks as if they've both been prepared at more or less the same time and were being faxed within a short time of each other to Mr Curtis in France; do you agree?

A. That's right, yes.

Q. Now, the document at 148 H(A)30/148 is the same as the one we've been looking at and that is a sale and purchase agreement directly between Mr Abramovich and Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili, isn't it?

A. That's correct.

Q. And the document at 142 H(A)30/142 is a release under which, in consideration of Mr Abramovich either paying to Mr Berezovsky or Mr Patarkatsishvili the sums of money set out below or procuring Sheikh Sultan to do so, Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili release Mr Abramovich from all or any claims of any nature they may have in connection with 44 per cent of the issued share capital of Sibneft. That was its purpose, wasn't it?

A. That's correct.

Q. And was that because Mr Curtis appreciated that it would be necessary, if there was going to be an arrangement under which the money went via the sheikh, to ensure that Mr Abramovich was released from any liability in respect of the equitable interest referred to in the sale agreement? Was that the reason for that?

A. I wouldn't know. I mean, are you asking me now or at the time?

Q. Well, I'm asking you now, but in the light of your examination of these documents.

A. Yes, it was to show an agreement between Boris and Mr Abramovich.

Q. Now, as you tell us in paragraph 105 of your main witness statement D2/16/118, that was sent for translation, but there is a note on one of the versions that it was abandoned on Saturday morning, ie the morning after it was sent for translation. Do you see that?

A. I do, yes.

Q. So can you help us on: what was it that was abandoned on the Saturday morning?

A. I'm assuming it was just that present format.

Q. Well, this was a note on a copy of the draft short-form agreement with Mr Abramovich, the release agreement, wasn't it? If you want to look at it, it's bundle H(A)45/8. Do you see? This is the release agreement and the note that you refer to in your witness statement is in manuscript at the top. Is that note in your handwriting?

A. It is, yes.

Q. Now, so it looks as if a decision had been made, very shortly after the discussions between Mr Curtis and Mr Fomichev, Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Berezovsky in France, to drop the idea of a release. Do you agree?

A. I do, although H(A)45/8 is different to H(A)30/142. One of them relates to -- specifically relates to transferring shares and the other one doesn't. There's quite a subtle difference there.

Q. You're quite right. But they are both releases, aren't they? They're successive drafts of a release?

A. I think so. I think -- yes, they are.

Q. The names have been blanked out because of confidentiality but they were intended to be Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili in line 1 and Mr Abramovich in line 2, weren't they?

A. That's right, yes.

Q. Now, can you help us at all on -- you must have been told at the time, for you to make this note that it was being abandoned -- were you not told why it was being abandoned?

A. I doubt it.

Q. I see.

Well now, on 21 May 2001 was there a conversation between Mr Curtis and Mr Keeling of Denton Wilde Sapte in which you again took an attendance note?

H(A)31/47.

A. I don't think I took the note.

Q. Sorry?

A. I don't think I took the note.

Q. Okay. Let's have a look at the document. H(A)31/47.

Were you party to this conversation? It records in the first line that you were.

A. I think so, yes.

Q. This note is Mr Keeling's note. Did you take a note of your own?

A. No.

Q. I see. But you do confirm that you were party to the conversation?

A. I think so, because I spoke -- did speak to him about Devonia.

Q. Yes. Well, that was shortly afterwards, wasn't it?

A. Mm-hm.

Q. Now, this note records a conversation between Mr Keeling and you and Mr Curtis. Now, just to establish who Mr Keeling was, had Mr Keeling been retained to set up any offshore vehicles that might be required in order to deal with this sum of $1.3 billion?

A. I don't know whether he was retained at that time.

Q. Well, it looks, doesn't it, as if there had been some previous contact with Mr Keeling because, if you look at the first paragraph:

"This follows on from the conversations of 27 April and 2 May and concerns the shares of Sibneft, apparently the second largest Russian oil company, after YUKOS.

"[Mr Keeling] was reminded [of certain things]."

Does it look as if there had been previous discussions with Mr Keeling?

A. It does.

Q. Now, Mr Keeling's function was in fact, whenever that was agreed, to set up any offshore vehicles that might be required, wasn't it?

A. I think so, yes.

Q. That's what he did?

A. Yes.

Q. So it looks as if he had received some kind of preliminary instruction at an earlier stage and this was a more detailed discussion of the background and what he was to do; do you agree?

A. Yes, I'm not -- yes, he would have been involved in some respect. I don't know if he was formally instructed on it.

Q. Right.

Now, Mr Curtis describes himself in this document, in this note -- see the third paragraph from the top -- as having been:

"... brokering a deal whereby Abramovich will buy out the shares of Beresovsky and Badre."

Now, was it your understanding that Mr Curtis was in fact in contact with Mr Abramovich on that subject?

A. I don't think so, no.

Q. No. At the time -- I mean, obviously you only saw this note much later. But at the time you were unaware of any contact, weren't you, between Mr Curtis and

Mr Abramovich?

A. I don't remember him speaking of any direct contact.

Q. Yes. And you don't remember Mr Curtis telling you that he'd been in contact with Mr Abramovich?

A. No.

Q. Now, there are some documents and you refer to them at paragraphs 136 and 137 of your witness statement D2/16/124 and 173 to 175 D2/16/132. I'm not going to ask you in detail about this but I'm just referring to it as background to the next question.

There are some documents recording the involvement of a Ms Khudyk, who was a member of Mr Abramovich's staff who was helping Mr Fomichev to set up an account for Devonia at the Latvian Trade Bank into which these sums to be paid by Mr Abramovich could be paid. She was dealing with some administrative arrangements for setting up that account, wasn't she?

A. I believe so. I don't know.

Q. Yes.

A. Was I involved in that?

Q. Well, your involvement was peripheral and is described in those passages of your witness statement. But you weren't involved and don't claim to have been involved in detail.

A. No.

Q. Now, is there any evidence in the firm's file of contact between Mr Curtis on the one hand and either Mr Abramovich or his staff on the other, apart from the dealings involving Ms Khudyk?

A. I don't think so.

Q. Now, Mr Curtis in this note H(A)31/47, as recorded by Mr Keeling, says that Mr Abramovich could not be seen to pay for the shares -- I'm looking at the fifth paragraph of the note -- because he had always publicly stated in Russia that he owned them. Do you see that?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. Now, can you help us on where Mr Curtis got that information from?

A. I can have a guess.

Q. What would your guess be?

A. Probably Mr Fomichev.

Q. Probably Mr Fomichev.

Now, the note goes on to describe a scheme under which there will be a direct contract between Mr Abramovich on the one hand and Messrs Berezovsky and Patarkatsishvili on the other which will serve as evidence of their beneficial interest in the shares. That's the fourth paragraph of the note. Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, the agreement which he then proposes is described in the sixth paragraph of the note and that is an agreement under which Mr Abramovich would pay $1.3 billion to the sheikh not, on the face of it, for shares in Sibneft but in return for an oil concession. Do you see that?

A. I do.

Q. Was the suggestion this: that the sheikh would grant Mr Abramovich or his companies an oil exploration concession over land in the Middle East which was known to have no oil in it?

A. It seemed to be -- yes, I think it's anticipated.

Q. Yes. That's the proposal that's being made?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, would you agree that to grant for $1.3 billion an oil concession on land known to have no oil in it was obviously a proposal for a sham agreement?

A. Yes, that doesn't look correct.

Q. It's simply designed to generate documents to explain the payment, isn't it?

A. Pretty much.

Q. Now, was Mr Curtis troubled by that?

A. Well, I don't know whether it was his plan.

Q. Well, he was explaining it to Mr Keeling.

A. Yes, he seemed quite open about it --

Q. Yes.

A. -- to Mr Keeling.

Q. So he was untroubled about it?

A. He didn't seem overtly troubled, no.

Q. Yes.

A. But obviously it never went anywhere.

Q. Well you tell us in a memorable understatement, Mr Jacobson, that you yourself would no doubt have raised your eyebrows at it. You would have been troubled about a transaction like that, wouldn't you?

A. I think the fact there was no oil, yes. Maybe there was oil.

Q. Now, in fact you had drafted two oil concession agreements on the previous day, hadn't you, the day before this note was made?

A. Two licence agreements, yes.

Q. Yes. So it looks as if Mr Curtis was quite serious about this, does it not?

A. It was a proposal, yes.

Q. Now, Mr Keeling subsequently acquired, shortly after this telephone conversation, did he not, on Mr Curtis's instructions, an off-the-shelf company, Devonia Investments?

A. That's right, yes.

Q. Is that right?

A. Mm-hm.

Q. And Mr Keeling also -- is this right -- set up the Itchen and Test Trusts, of which he in fact became a trustee; is that right?

A. That's correct.

Q. And they were trusts for Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili, were they not?

A. They were.

Q. Now, can you tell us: when was the plan for a direct contract between Mr Abramovich and Messrs Berezovsky and Patarkatsishvili abandoned? Because it was, you agree, at some stage dropped and replaced by a proposal for a sale of their interest to Devonian. Can you tell us when that change of plan occurred?

A. I can't, no.

Q. Are you aware of any documentary trace of the change of plan before 29 May?

A. I think there was -- was there a note, a telephone call on 25 May with Nick Keeling?

Q. I will check that. I'm not aware of it, but it's easy to overlook stuff in these enormous bundles and I will have it checked while I continue to ask you questions.

A. It was the first time he said that the transaction had become less complicated.

Q. Right. Well, we will see if we can lay our hands on that and I will show it to you if we succeed.

On about 29 May -- is this right -- Mr Curtis prepared two draft letters, one addressed to Mr Fomichev and Mr Kay jointly and one to Dr Jumean explaining a change of plan. Do you remember those documents?

A. I do remember the letters, yes.

Q. Yes. Can I ask you to look at them: bundle H(A)32/12. This is the draft letter to Dr Jumean. And if you look back at page 8 H(A)32/8 you will see the draft letter to Mr Fomichev and Mr Kay. Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, were you aware at the time that, in discussions with Mr Abramovich and his staff, Mr Fomichev had been trying to arrange for the $1.3 billion to be paid in securities rather than in cash?

A. No.

Q. You were not aware?

A. No.

Q. So I think it must follow that you weren't aware that it was on this day, 29 May, that at a meeting in Cologne that suggestion was rejected by Mr Abramovich so that it was going to be cash?

A. I wasn't aware of that.

Q. I understand.

Now, these two documents, these two letters, both explain that it has now been decided that there will be a sale to the sheikh rather than to Mr Abramovich directly. That's, in very bald summary, what they're both concerned with, isn't it? It's more obvious from the letter to Dr Jumean on page 12, where he summarises in the numbered paragraphs the deal as now envisaged.

A. That's right, yes.

Q. And he makes the point that now that the deal is going to involve the sheikh's company buying Mr Berezovsky's and Mr Patarkatsishvili's interests in Sibneft, he could no longer act for Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili. That's one of the points he's making, isn't it?

A. That's right.

Q. Now, presumably if the sale to the sheikh had been decided earlier than this, Mr Curtis would have ceased to act for Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili earlier than that, wouldn't he?

A. I believe so. I mean, there might have been a time delay, a little bit.

Q. The moment it became apparent that he had that conflict, he would inform his clients and withdraw from acting from them, wouldn't he?

A. I agree. But that attendance note of the 25th, I think it seems to suggest that the transaction had changed somewhat.

Q. Okay. Well, let's just have a look at that in case it assists: H(A)31/252. Now, I'm not sure this is correctly described as a "note" but it may be the document that you had in mind.

A. No. No, this isn't --

Q. That's not what you had in mind?

A. No. I think it's a fax from Nick Keeling on the 29th referring to a discussion --

Q. On the 29th?

A. Yes, it was -- referring to a discussion on the 25th --

Q. Right.

A. -- where Stephen confirmed that the transaction had --

Q. We will resume our searches, Mr Jacobson.

A. Yes -- had become less complicated and there would be a...

Q. Okay. Right.

Now, these two letters envisaged that there was now going to be a sale of part of the holding of Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili's interests and a grant to Devonia of an option over the rest. That, in broad summary, was the structure proposed, wasn't it?

A. That's right, yes.

Q. Now, we've seen that Mr Curtis was going to cease to act, in consequence, for Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili. In this letter to Dr Jumean...

Sorry, can I just break off and show you what we now think is the note: H(A)32/43. Is this the document that you had in mind?

A. That was it, yes.

Q. I see. What was it that you wanted to point out to us?

A. Well, just the -- obviously the conversation on the Friday afternoon, which was probably the 24th or 25th, where in the next paragraph he explains, probably for the first time, how the transaction is going to be detailed.

Q. Yes, I see. Well, it may be therefore, you think, that was what was explained on the Friday afternoon.

I entirely see that.

Now, if we can go back to the draft letters that we had open before, pages 8 and 12, in particular the one that starts at page 12 H(A)32/12. Do you see that on the second page of that letter to Dr Jumean, page 13 of the bundle, bottom of the page, he says:

"I am required to make yourself and His Highness aware of the potential dangers of acquiring a nebulous beneficial interest without any third party confirmations from Mr Abramovich as to ownership."

Do you see that?

A. I do.

Q. Now, why was it nebulous?

A. Because it was undocumented and unacknowledged.

Q. Well, it was undocumented; that was one point. It was also an interest which Mr Curtis knew, didn't he, Mr Abramovich was not going to acknowledge?

A. Well, he tried, obviously, to formulate agreements for him to be able to acknowledge it, but it seemed to be by that stage acknowledgement --

Q. By this stage at the latest he realised that Mr Abramovich was not going to acknowledge that there was any interest, and that is information I think you told us that you thought was probably derived from Mr Fomichev, or you hazarded a guess to that effect?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Can you say "yes" or "no" because nodding doesn't appear on the transcript.

A. Okay. My nodding -- yes to Mr Fomichev or I agree with what you said in relation to the -- to it being unacknowledged.

MR SUMPTION: Yes. But Mr Curtis also knew by this time, didn't he, that Mr Abramovich was not going to acknowledge that Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili had any interest in these shares?

A. I think that's right, yes.

Q. And that was the information that a few minutes ago, when you said you could hazard a guess, you said that he was liable to have obtained from Mr Fomichev.

A. This precise information?

Q. The information that Mr Abramovich was not going to acknowledge their interest.

A. Okay.

Q. Do you agree?

A. I don't -- I guess.

Q. Well now, it was also, of course, the case, was it not, that by this time any attempt on Mr Curtis's part to get any kind of direct agreement between Messrs Berezovsky and Patarkatsishvili on the one hand and Mr Abramovich on the other had been dropped in favour of this new structure? That was also the case, wasn't it?

A. Appeared to be the case, yes.

Q. Now, these new arrangements were communicated, weren't they, to Clydesdale Bank? They were sent copies of these draft letters?

A. Yes, that's right.

Q. And did these new arrangements give rise to concern on the part of the bank that the money that it was going to receive might be just Mr Abramovich's money passing into their accounts by a circular route via the sheikh?

A. Yes, they wanted some confirmation that the money originated from the sheikh's own funds.

Q. Yes. They were concerned, weren't they, that it might be Mr Abramovich's money just being recycled through the sheikh?

A. That's right.

Q. Now, can you help us on why this change of a sale to the sheikh was decided upon?

A. What, you mean the actual sale or...?

Q. Well, at some stage a decision was made that instead of selling to Mr Abramovich, they were going to sell to the sheikh. You may not be able to help on this, but can you help us on, first of all, who made that decision?

A. I don't know who made it.

Q. So I think it probably follows from that answer that you probably can't help us on why either?

A. No, probably not.

Q. Now, the first discussion draft of a sale to the sheikh's company was prepared, I think you tell us, on the following day, 30 May. The reference is H(A)32/82, same bundle. It's actually marked, I'm not sure in whose handwriting, at the top right:

"1st Discussion Draft 30/05/01."

A. Yes, that's Mark Gilchrist.

Q. That's Mr Gilchrist, is it?

A. Yes.

Q. Thank you.

Now, were you aware at the time that on the following day, 31 May, the first payment, namely $33 million, was made by Mr Abramovich's companies into Devonia's account with the Latvian Trade Bank?

A. No.

Q. You were not.

Could I ask you to turn to bundle H(A)34/23, please. This is a letter from Ms Khudyk, whose role I have mentioned in the context of an earlier question, sending to you various documents which need to be signed and sent back initially by fax and then by courier to an address in Moscow. Do you see that?

A. I do.

Q. Now, the documents that she attached were documents, were they not, relating to the first payment of $33 million out of the $1.3 billion?

A. I had no idea what they were.

Q. Well, they were addressed to you. If we just look at page 24, the first of them, this is a receipt for a share in Pex Trade Corporation. And the next page is a direction:

"... to transfer the dividends payable to our company..."

And that's Devonia.

"... as the shareholder of Pex Trade Corporation..."

Then there's an assignment of the subscription by Pex to Devonia and you will see that on page 29 the amount is specified.

There's a payment order, Pex Trade Corporation, $33.85 million to Devonia at Latvian Trade Bank in Riga.

Do you see that?

Now, the first payment of the $1.3 billion was made by transferring bearer shares of a company called Pex to Devonia and then procuring Pex to pay a dividend to Devonia in the amount of $33.85 million. It's the documents relating to that transaction that are being sent to you on this occasion on 31 May, isn't it?

A. Yes, that's right, although I didn't receive this payment order.

Q. Sorry?

A. I didn't receive the payment order.

Q. You didn't receive the payment order?

A. No. 34/29.

Q. I see. You think that that's part of a different document, do you?

A. Yes, that's not --

Q. I see. Okay.

A. That's not part of the... well, we can check, can't we?

Q. Right, I follow. But you did see the other documents, including the document at page 25 which asks you to transfer the dividend, but the amount is unspecified, to Devonia?

A. I did, but I had no idea what it related to.

Q. Yes, I see.

Well now, did you actually read these documents or not?

A. Probably not, no.

Q. Do you agree that even without the payment order they appear to show that payment was imminent even though the Devonia agreement had not even been drafted, let alone executed?

A. I had no idea what it related to in relation to the Devonia agreement.

Q. Can we look at page 33 in this bundle, please H(A)34/33, which is a copy of the same documents but with a note from I think Mr Curtis to you. Is that right?

A. Me to Mr Curtis and then Mr Curtis to me, yes.

Q. Sorry?

A. It's from --

Q. Yes.

A. Yes.

Q. The first bit immediately under the typed text:

"James -- I have told Ehab..."

That's Mr Curtis, isn't it?

A. That's right.

Q. So Mr Curtis is saying to you:

"I have told [Dr Jumean] we cannot act on this -- he is to refer to his [Abu Dhabi] lawyers -- he confirms that he has already received these direct from (Sibneft?) and is dealing with Sibneft... direct -- do not send."

Okay? Now, Mr Curtis didn't want to see this sort of documentation, did he?

A. I've no idea.

Q. Well, he had carefully arranged, hadn't he, that his firm would not be instructed on any dealings between Devonian and Mr Abramovich because he didn't want to be involved with that side of things?

A. I don't know whether he was careful; it was just he didn't want to be instructed.

Q. Yes. It was his decision that he should not be instructed --

A. I think so.

Q. -- on that side of the transaction, wasn't it?

A. I think so, yes.

Q. Now, can you help us on why that was, if it wasn't simply in order to ensure that he was not aware of what was going on, if anything, between Devonian and Mr Abramovich?

A. I'm assuming it was relating to the Clydesdale Bank. He wanted to stick with --

Q. Yes.

A. -- stick with them and also to -- I assume the fact that none of the parties were from the UK and the money wasn't coming into the UK felt --

Q. Well, he didn't -- sorry.

A. He felt it was probably something best dealt with by other lawyers.

Q. He didn't want to have to answer questions from Clydesdale Bank about the supposed onsale of these shares by Devonia to Mr Abramovich, did he?

A. I've no idea.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, would that be a convenient moment to break?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, certainly.

MR SUMPTION: I'm not going to be that much longer with this witness; probably half an hour.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, very well.

Mr Jacobson, you mustn't talk to anybody about the case or your evidence over the break. Do you understand?

THE WITNESS: Yes, my Lady. Yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well. 2.05.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, before your Ladyship rises can I just mention that there has been a minor change to the witness material. Mr Stephenson is going to be available if we get to him, which we may well do, this afternoon.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well.

MR SUMPTION: So if your Ladyship hasn't had an opportunity to read his statement --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you very much. I'll go and read it over the break.

(1.03 pm)

(The short adjournment)

(2.05 pm)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, Mr Sumption.

MR SUMPTION: Mr Jacobson, can I ask you, please, to turn to H(A)34/33, which you won't have in front of you.

I think it will be brought to you.

A. It's here.

Q. You have got it, I see. Thank you.

Now, this is a letter of 31 May 2001 addressed to Ms Hilton, who was the compliance officer of the Clydesdale Bank, was she not?

A. Sorry, did you say 34/33?

Q. Sorry, forgive me, I've given you a false reference.

It's a different document. 33 --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: That was the one we were looking at before lunch.

MR SUMPTION: Sorry, 34/2, forgive me. My mistake entirely.

This is indeed a letter to Ms Hilton from Mr Curtis dated 31 May; is that right?

A. That's right, yes.

Q. Ms Hilton was the compliance officer of Clydesdale Bank European Group, wasn't she?

A. That's right, yes.

Q. Now, if you look at this letter, do tell me if you want to take a moment just to remind yourself of its contents, but if you see the fourth paragraph, you will see -- well, in the first paragraph Mr Curtis thanks her for some diagrams that he's sent reflecting his understanding of the transaction and then there are discussions of possible further material. And in the fourth paragraph:

"As I explained over the telephone, the suggestion now is that the Sheikh will purchase the beneficial interest of Boris Berezovsky and Arkady Patarkatsishvili in installments."

Now, it looks, does it not, as if there had been a previous telephone conversation between Mr Curtis and Ms Hilton at which -- see the following paragraph -- Ms Hilton had expressed some concerns about the new form of the transaction? Would you agree with that?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, why -- you'll see that in the next paragraph:

"I have passed on to Eyhab your concerns with regard to the exposure of the Sheikh and we have similarly advised him of the potential dangers."

Now, can you help us on: why would a compliance officer like Ms Hilton have been concerned with the exposure of the sheikh?

A. I've no idea.

Q. Well, on the face of it -- would you agree -- this was an incredible transaction, wasn't it, because the sheikh was apparently going to buy for $1.3 billion an undocumented equitable interest in a Russian oil company in circumstances where the registered owner of the shares was not prepared to acknowledge the existence of their interest?

A. That's right.

Q. Now, would you agree that on the face of it that's an incredible transaction?

A. It does seem quite incredible.

Q. Now, even if Sheikh Sultan had a back-to-back deal with Mr Abramovich to sell this interest on to him, the sheikh was exposed, wasn't he, unless security was given by Mr Abramovich to ensure that Mr Abramovich did duly buy and pay for the shares as and when the sheikh exercised his options?

A. I think that's right, yes.

Q. Now, the bank's concern -- is this right -- was that the oddities of this transaction, as described, raised the possibility that the sheikh was not really buying the interest at all but recycling the money; that was the possibility that was concerning the bank, wasn't it?

A. They were interested in the source of the funds, yes.

Q. Yes. They were concerned that there wasn't a real sale, just a roundabout method of getting the money to them?

A. Well, they didn't want Mr Abramovich's funds.

Q. No.

Now, was it in order to allay these concerns that Mr Curtis said, in the fifth paragraph on this page, that Mr Abramovich was going to make advance deposits with the Abu Dhabi Commercial Bank which the sheikh would draw down on as and when he purchased each instalment? Do you see that statement is made in the last paragraph on page 2?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Did you know that at the time?

A. No.

MR SUMPTION: Did you not see this letter at the time that it was written?

A. No. I would have seen it afterwards but I didn't see it at the time.

Q. How long afterwards? Shortly afterwards or --

A. Pretty shortly afterwards.

Q. Sorry?

A. I think I sent it to counsel.

Q. Yes.

Well now, it must have struck you that that concern of the bank was the reason why Mr Curtis told the bank that Mr Abramovich would be making deposits with the Abu Dhabi Commercial Bank to be drawn down by the sheikh as and when he exercised options to buy more shares?

A. I think that's right, yes.

Q. Now, can you tell us what steps, so far as you know, Mr Curtis took to satisfy himself that Mr Abramovich would be making advance deposits with the Abu Dhabi Commercial Bank?

A. I don't know whether he did.

Q. You don't know whether he did. In fact he didn't, did he?

A. No.

Q. Now --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Did you know that at the time?

A. No.

MR SUMPTION: But it's obvious now, isn't it, looking at the file?

A. I -- there's nothing on the file that suggests that he did.

Q. No. There's nothing on the file that records any contact between the firm and Mr Abramovich or his staff that could have justified such a suggestion, is there?

A. No. He just says:

"... I am advised that Mr Abramovich will..."

So someone has told him.

Q. And equally I'm sure you can confirm that there's nothing on the file which records any contact between the firm and Sheikh Sultan or Dr Jumean which might have justified that statement?

A. Well, I'm assuming he got his instructions from Dr Jumean.

Q. Well, what makes you assume that?

A. Because that's where he got his instructions from.

Q. Well, he got his instructions partly from Dr Jumean but partly also from Mr Fomichev, didn't he?

A. Well, up until a certain date, yes.

Q. The sheikh was never asked, was he, for written confirmation of either the existence of a matching deal with Mr Abramovich or the security deposits? That's correct, isn't it?

A. I don't know.

Q. Well, I think I can help you with this. If you turn in bundle 34 to page 133 H(A)34/133, you'll find your own list of things which the sheikh was to be asked for or Dr Jumean, on behalf of the sheikh, was to be asked for.

This was a list you prepared, isn't it?

A. It is, yes.

Q. What you included in this list was confirmation that Mr Curtis was not instructed on any back-to-back deal with Mr Abramovich; is that right?

A. Yes, that's number 2.

Q. Yes. But you weren't asking him for a confirmation that such a matching deal was in place, were you?

A. No, I don't think so.

Q. And you intended to ask him, and indeed did ask him, for confirmation that he would be using his own funds to pay Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili but not that there would be any security deposits; that's correct, isn't it?

A. And that there would be no intermingling with Mr Abramovich's funds coming in.

Q. Yes. But you didn't ask for confirmation that there would be security deposits?

A. No, I don't think so.

Q. Now, the sheikh, as you point out, confirmed that he would be paying money into Clydesdale's accounts from his own funds. If you could turn backwards to H(A)34/62, you will see that at page 62 there are the versions as sent. You may remember I showed you the drafts this morning which were sent to Clydesdale Bank and these are the final versions, as signed and sent, at 62 and 64, both dated 1 June.

Do you agree?

A. These were the final letters sent, yes.

Q. Yes. And can you confirm that copies of these documents were sent to the Clydesdale Bank?

A. Yes, I believe they were.

Q. Now, the firm ceased to act for Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Berezovsky -- is this right -- on 1 June; was that the date?

A. That's the date of the letter, yes.

Q. And is it right that Reid Minty were appointed to act for Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili on 3 June?

A. I don't know the exact date.

Q. Right.

A. But it was afterwards, yes.

Q. Well, was Reid Minty introduced to Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili by Mr Curtis?

A. I imagine so, yes.

Q. When you say you imagine so, was that because Reid Minty was a firm that had an established association with Curtis & Co?

A. It did, yes.

Q. So that when you wanted to find someone else to advise a client, they were one of a number of obvious possibilities?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, you're aware, are you not, that the agreement was actually executed by Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili on 5 June?

A. I think that's right, yes.

Q. So Reid Minty didn't have much time to get into the transaction, did they?

A. A couple of days.

Q. No.

Now, would it be fair to say that Reid Minty were instructed to represent Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Berezovsky on a very limited basis, reflecting the shortage of time?

A. Well, I don't know really. I mean, they would have undertaken their responsibilities if they had to.

Q. Well, can I ask you to look at their retainer letter. You may not have seen it at the time, in which case do say.

Page 213 of this bundle H(A)34/213 is a letter dated 4 June, which is the retainer letter sent on that date by Mr Moss of Reid Minty to Mr Berezovsky and it refers to a meeting that had previously occurred between Mr Curtis and Mr Fomichev.

A. I didn't see this at the time.

Q. You didn't see this at the time. Were you aware of that meeting between Mr Curtis and Mr Fomichev at the time? Can you help us on when it happened, apart from the fact it was before this date?

A. I can't.

Q. Understood.

If you look at the next page of the letter, the second page, there's a description of the transaction and a heading in the side of the letter "Issues Involved" and the second paragraph under "Issues Involved" says:

"Advice so far as the ownership and interest of your shares in SIBNEFT has been given to you by your Russian lawyers, namely [Mr] Ivlev of ALM -- Feldmans and we are not providing any advice in relation to that interest or other applicable law to the actual ownership of the shares. Similarly, so far as any transactions is concerned that relates to the shares after the signing of this agreement in Abu Dhabi or elsewhere, you will seek separate advice should it be needed."

Now, that's why I suggested to you that they were instructed on a limited basis. But you may not have been involved; the letter may have to speak for itself.

A. I think so.

Q. Understood.

Were you aware that Reid Minty had no part in drafting the agreement? It was drafted entirely within Curtis & Co's office, was it not?

A. It was -- I think there was a few amendments we made on their suggestion.

Q. Yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Were you responsible for drafting the agreement?

A. I didn't draft the first one but thereafter I did, yes.

MR SUMPTION: Equally Reid Minty suggested, did they not, that Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili should not be asked to give warranties of their title because their title was a matter of some doubt? That was a point that Reid Minty made, did they not?

A. I think that's right, yes.

Q. And that suggestion was firmly rejected by Mr Curtis, was it not?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, is it also right that in recognition of the limited role that they had played, Reid Minty agreed to charge a significantly reduced fee?

A. I've no idea.

Q. You don't know?

A. No.

Q. Well, I'll tell you the basis on which I say that and if it's not something that you can help on, do say so.

H(A)35/240. I hope that that is Ms Minty's attendance note of 5 June. Is that what it is?

A. Yes, I do --

Q. Is this a document that you've seen before?

A. I've seen it before but obviously didn't see it at the time.

Q. But not at the time, okay. Well, in that case you may not be able to help us. But the basis on which I made the last suggestion was the last paragraph on page 240.

A. Okay. It's also been amended in the retainer letter.

Q. I'm sorry?

A. It's also been amended in the retainer letter.

Q. What has been amended in the retainer letter?

A. The fee. It looks like it was 100,000 reduced to 60.

Q. Yes, you're quite right.

Now, the Devonian agreement was executed by Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili on 5 June and by the sheikh on about 11 June. I think the latter date we have established this morning.

A. That's correct.

Q. Now, you say in your witness statement that:

"... the first payment... under the Devonian Agreement [was made] on 12 June..."

And I'm referring to paragraph 234 of your witness statement D2/16/147. I thought I was, but hang on.

A. That's right, yes.

Q. 234, yes.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, when you say you understand that that is so, is that something that you have extracted from the document that you then refer to, your fax to Mr Keeling on 22 November?

A. I think it was the first time -- well, it was when the first consideration payment was made.

Q. Yes. Well now, is that a reference to payments made from Devonia's account with the Abu Dhabi Commercial Bank to the accounts of the two trusts at Clydesdale Bank?

A. Yes, that's right.

Q. Right. Now, did you have any knowledge or did, so far as you know, Mr Curtis have any knowledge about the payments that were made into Devonia's Abu Dhabi account from the Latvian Trade Bank account?

A. No.

Q. Did you have any knowledge about the payments that were made into the Latvian Trade Bank account by Mr Abramovich's companies?

A. No.

Q. Right.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: When you say "no", you were asked not only in relation to your own knowledge but also in relation to --

A. To Mr Curtis.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: -- Mr Curtis's knowledge.

A. So far as I'm aware, yes, that was --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: That was the position?

A. Yes.

MR SUMPTION: So all you knew was that the payment had been made into the Clydesdale Bank accounts on 12 June and you knew that presumably because you had access to those accounts, as you told us this morning?

A. That's right.

Q. So you would have known that at some earlier stage, but how much earlier you wouldn't have known, money had arrived in the Abu Dhabi account from somewhere?

A. I probably -- well, I wouldn't have applied my mind to it at the time, but it sounds logical.

Q. Now, the Devonia agreement was, I suggest, simply produced for the consumption of the Clydesdale Bank, wasn't it?

A. In what sense?

Q. Well, if -- I don't want to try and use you as an expert witness, but if the payments had been made to Devonia by Mr Abramovich before the agreement was executed then it looks as if this agreement was simply a piece of paperwork to show the bank, doesn't it?

A. If that was the case, yes.

Q. Now, are you familiar with the terms of the Devonia agreement as executed?

A. Some of it, yes.

Q. Well, let me know if you want actually to see the agreement but I think this part of it is something you won't need to look at it for.

The proposal involved the sale of a one-thirteenth part of the Sibneft shares, or the interest in them, for 100 million and the grant of 12 options, each for a further thirteenth, exercisable over a period of a year. Do you recognise that as a description of the transaction?

A. That's right, yes.

Q. Now, would that mean that Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili were only assured of getting the first 100 million, because the sheikh didn't have any obligation to exercise the option in relation to the other 12 thirteenths?

A. I think that's right.

Q. Now --

A. I think that's -- sorry.

Q. -- did you think that was what Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili wanted, only 100 million being assured to them?

A. I've no idea.

Q. Could I ask you to take, please, bundle H -- you can put away the bundles you've got in front of you, apart from your witness statement. Could I ask you to be given bundle H(D)2/61.

Hold on, I've given you a mistaken reference.

I will give you the right one in a minute. Page 59, I'm told. (Pause)

I seem to have two different versions of H(D)2. Is your version at page 61 a fax from Mr Curtis to the National Australia Group, attention Leigh Hilton, on 1 August?

A. No.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Are we in H(D) or H(A)? There's a confusion.

MR SUMPTION: H(D)2, I'm sorry.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: The witness may have H(A). That was the earlier reference.

MR SUMPTION: I think the witness has got H(D) but the trouble is this bundle has been changed so often because of the arrival of new documents.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Perhaps the witness can look at it on the screen.

THE WITNESS: Yes, I've got it here.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: It's on the screen.

MR SUMPTION: So does that mean that H(D)2/61 is the reference recognised by Magnum? I see.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: It's H(D)2/29, page 147 H(D)2/29/147. Is that right?

MR SUMPTION: Yes.

Right. This is a letter from Mr Curtis to the Clydesdale Bank dated 1 August. Now, you may not have seen this letter before; it's not something that has been produced, I think, with your assistance. It comes from the files of the Clydesdale Bank.

Have you seen it before?

A. Well, it's from Curtis & Co so I assume I would have seen it.

Q. Well, the reason I say you may not have done is that it's a document we have not seen until the Clydesdale Bank produced it as a result of a summons about a week ago.

A. Okay.

Q. So you wouldn't necessarily have seen it. We haven't seen it among the documents that you prepared for disclosure in this action.

A. Okay.

Q. So would you just remind yourself of what it says.

(Pause)

A. Yes, I've read it.

Q. Do you think, having read it, that it's a document you've seen before?

A. I imagine I would have seen it before, yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: At the time of the transaction?

A. Well, yes, I was more involved so I couldn't discount that I hadn't seen it.

MR SUMPTION: Right.

Do you see that the subject of the letter is the fact that the flow of payments into the Clydesdale Bank account doesn't correspond to what's in the agreement?

A. Yes.

Q. That's what it's talking about, isn't it?

A. That's right, yes. Yes.

Q. And therefore what Mr Curtis is telling the bank is that:

"All parties have agreed that they will enter into a variation agreement in relation to the agreement effective on 12th June..."

Now, the agreement effective on 12 June is the Devonia agreement as executed by the sheikh, isn't it?

A. That's correct, yes.

Q. And were you aware, being somebody who was rather more involved at this stage, that all parties had agreed to enter into a variation agreement of that kind?

A. It doesn't ring any bells with me.

Q. No. We have found no other trace of the parties having agreed with that, but you can't help us on it?

A. I can't remember, no.

Q. Can you help us on why in fact no variation agreement of the kind suggested in this letter was in fact subsequently drawn up, so far as the documents we have show?

A. I think possibly because of the issues with the Clydesdale became a lot more important after --

Q. Was that because at the end of this very month the Clydesdale Bank refused to deal with the money any longer?

A. That's right, yes.

Q. Yes.

Now, at paragraph 272 of your witness statement D2/16/155 you deal with Mr Curtis's discovery in 2002 that the instalments in which money was being paid to Mr Berezovsky's and Mr Patarkatsishvili's various trusts bore no relation to those provided for in the Devonia agreement. That's the subject you're dealing with from paragraph 272 onwards, isn't it?

A. Well, he's talking about payments being made, not instalments, as in not the amount of the instalment, just payments being made.

Q. Well, there were two problems, weren't there? First of all, the payments were being made to an account other than the one specified in the Devonian agreement?

A. That was the only problem.

Q. Well, secondly, the amounts of the payments didn't correspond to the instalments in which the options were being exercised; isn't that right?

A. That's true, but I don't remember that being such an issue. It was more about that payments were being made without reference to a document.

Q. Mr Jacobson, so far as you can recall, with or without the aid of any documents, were these 12 options granted to Devonian ever exercised?

A. Well, the first three or four were, I think. I think we've got certificates for the -- if I remember, for the first ones relating to Clydesdale Bank.

Q. Well, you got certificates a long time afterwards for some of them, didn't you, but no evidence of any exercise of the option?

A. The option was exercised by virtue of the payment being made before.

Q. Well, are you talking about the first payment?

A. As soon as payments were made, the very fact there was a payment, then the next option would have been exercised.

Q. Are you saying that the price was paid before the option had been exercised?

A. I think how I remember it was that the payment would be made and on the payment the next option would be ready to go.

Q. That's the opposite of the order one would normally expect, isn't it?

A. I don't know.

Q. Well, normally --

A. I'd have to look at the agreement.

Q. -- you exercise the option, that means that you're entitled to buy the interest as to one thirteenth, and once you exercise the option, somebody pays you for it?

A. Yes, and then on -- when that payment has been received, the next option becomes exercisable maybe.

Q. The next option, exactly.

A. Yes.

Q. But it's slightly odd, isn't it, to -- the payment, as I understand your evidence, gave rise to the exercise of the option and not the other way round.

A. I think that's right, yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Sorry, I'm not understanding this.

Are you saying that there was no formal service of a notice exercising the option?

A. I never saw any notices for exercising options.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Not for any of the 12 tranches?

A. No.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So what you're saying is that the actual payment was in effect an exercise of the option?

A. I think that's -- that was right. I'd have to check the documents but I think that's my recollection of how it's supposed to work.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: And was that provided for in the agreement, that mere payment would constitute effective exercise of the option?

A. I don't know. I can't remember. I think we'd have to look at the letters to Leigh Hilton.

MR SUMPTION: Now, does it look therefore as if what happened was that a payment was made and somebody then produced the documentation to identify it as a contractual payment afterwards?

A. Insofar as, what, the certificate is being made?

Q. The certificate was produced after the payment was made but there was no receipt of any document exercising the option?

A. I don't remember any documents, no.

Q. Right. And the certificates of transfer had all been signed in advance on 5 June by Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili, hadn't they?

A. I don't think I was aware of that.

Q. Right.

Now, when, in 2002, Mr Curtis appreciated that there was a discrepancy between the payments as made and the payments as provided for by the agreement, he suggested, didn't he, that there should be a retrospect amending agreement which would bring the obligations of Devonian into line with what had already happened?

A. That's right, yes.

Q. And as I understand it, Mr Curtis told you -- I'm taking this from paragraph 307 of your witness statement D2/16/162 -- that Reid Minty, who had acted for Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili briefly on the original agreement, had declined to act for them on the amending agreement. Does that suggest that Mr Curtis had asked them to act for Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili on the amending agreement?

A. I think that's -- in paragraph 306 there were some conversations with Mr Curtis and Mr Moss at Reid Minty.

Q. Yes. Now, why did Reid Minty feel uncomfortable?

A. I've no idea.

Q. No idea?

A. No. They just didn't want to do it.

Q. They were beginning to feel that there was something fishy about this transaction, were they not?

A. Well, I don't know what "uncomfortable" really means.

They may not have been paid enough money.

Q. It's the word you use in describing what Mr Curtis told you.

Now, I think you also learnt in 2002, did you not, that Mr Curtis received, on top of the professional fees of his firm, a commission of $13.8 million from the Itchen Trust? And you refer to that at paragraph 335 of your witness statement D2/16/166.

A. This is for the fund.

Q. Sorry?

A. For the fund.

Q. When you say "for the fund", what do you mean?

A. In relation to his bonus for the fund.

Q. You mean the Rainbow Fund?

A. Yes.

Q. Well, have you seen the documents which record the agreements involving Mr Berezovsky and the sheikh to the payment of those sums?

A. The letters that they signed?

Q. The letters that they signed relating to separate sums of $13.8 million --

A. Yes.

Q. -- and $4.5 million.

A. Yes, I've seen those.

Q. Yes. Now, those indicate that the commission was being paid for Mr Curtis having introduced the Devonia transaction; that's right, isn't it?

A. I think so, yes.

Q. And they were only paid in respect of the Rainbow Fund because Mr Curtis in 2002 decided to move to Gibraltar and wanted them attributable to his work in Gibraltar because that would reduce his tax bill?

A. I think that's the -- that's probably the idea, yes.

Q. Right.

Now, were you aware at the time that, in addition to commissions being paid to Mr Curtis, commissions were also paid to Dr Jumean? Were you aware of that?

A. I wasn't, but I kind of guessed that there probably were.

Q. What made you guess that Dr Jumean was getting a cut?

A. I just assumed that him and Mr Fomichev would be receiving commissions.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: From whom?

MR SUMPTION: Well, why did you assume that?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Sorry, could you answer my question.

Who did you assume that they would be getting commissions from?

A. From the sheikh.

MR SUMPTION: Did you assume that the sheikh would be granting them those commissions or that they would simply be taking the commissions from the money as it went through? You didn't have any view on that?

A. I didn't have any idea. It was just a feeling.

Q. Now, something must have given you the impression that Mr Fomichev and Dr Jumeau were going to get, from whatever source, a commission out of this. What was it?

A. I don't know. It was just a feeling. I can't be precise, but there was -- I just got a feeling.

Q. You just got a feeling that there was -- part of the iceberg was under the sea?

A. Hmm.

Q. Right. What about Mr Joseph Kay: were you aware that he was getting a commission as well?

A. I don't think so, no.

Q. I see.

Now, just a couple of other minor matters, Mr Jacobson. Can you confirm that Mr Curtis did not speak Russian?

A. He didn't speak Russian, no.

Q. Secondly, on Curtis & Co's headed notepaper in 2001, we see that they had the legend "In association with Streathers". Do you remember that?

A. I do, yes.

Q. Can you tell us what the nature of the association between Curtis & Co and Streathers was?

A. Similar to the one with Reid Minty.

Q. Right. Which was what?

A. Just the referrals of work between the firms.

Q. Yes, I see.

Now, you subsequently went to work for Streathers after Curtis & Co closed down; isn't that right?

A. That's right, yes.

Q. And can you help us with the role played by Streathers: did they act at any stage as solicitors for Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili?

A. During what period? Ever?

Q. In the period when you were aware of these matters, ie before you moved to Gibraltar.

A. Yes, they did, yes.

Q. They did. In relation to this dispute?

A. I think Jim Lankshear was involved.

Q. Sorry?

A. Jim Lankshear from Streathers was involved.

Q. Yes, but was it in relation to the dispute which is now before this court?

A. I think they're instructed with Carter Ruck, yes.

MR SUMPTION: Yes, I see. Thank you very much, Mr Jacobson.

MR MALEK: No questions, my Lady.

MR ADKIN: My Lady, very briefly.

Cross-examination by MR ADKIN

MR ADKIN: Mr Jacobson, if you could take up your witness statement, please, and turn to paragraph 147.

A. Did you say 47?

Q. 147, which is at page 126 of the bundle D2/16/126.

You're talking here, as I understand it, about instructions which Mr Curtis gave to counsel, Jonathan Fisher, in May 2001 in relation to the Devonia transaction. That's right, isn't it?

A. That's right, yes.

Q. And you say in this paragraph that:

"Mr Curtis confirmed that he understood that Mr Abramovich was expecting to use profits from one of his aluminium operations in Russia to pay for [the Sibneft] shares."

That's right, isn't it?

A. That's right, yes.

Q. And that is in fact reflected in the note of the conference call with counsel which, for the transcript, is at H(A)32/19.

Now, you told us this morning that, so far as you were aware, at around this time, that is May 2001, Mr Curtis was not having direct contact with Mr Abramovich. Do you recall that?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. Is it therefore fair to assume that Mr Curtis's information as to where the purchase monies for Sibneft were to come from is information he derived from Mr Berezovsky, Mr Patarkatsishvili or one of their advisers?

A. That's correct, yes.

MR ADKIN: Thank you.

My Lady, I have no further questions.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you. Mr Mumford?

MR MUMFORD: No questions, my Lady.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, Mr Rabinowitz.

Re-examination by MR RABINOWITZ

MR RABINOWITZ: Just this, Mr Jacobson. You were asked earlier this morning, by reference to certain documents, to speculate as to why Mr Curtis did not want to be involved or see material in relation to the second part of the transaction. Just to explain what I mean, if the first part was the transaction between Mr Berezovsky and the sheikh, the second part would be the transaction between the sheikh and Mr Abramovich. Do you remember that?

A. I do.

Q. Can I ask you, please, to go to bundle H(A)38, page 91 H(A)38/91. You should have at H(A)38, page 91, a letter from Mr Curtis to Mr Keeling dated 13 September but sent on 26 September. If you go to the second page of that letter, about two-thirds of the way down, do you see a paragraph beginning, "With regard to your request in relation to the background of Sibneft...?"

A. Yes.

Q. Can I just ask you to read that to yourself, please.

(Pause)

A. I've read it.

Q. Does that assist you in terms of answering the question as to why Mr Curtis did not want to be involved in the second part of the transaction?

A. Well, he does state that he's not in a position to control it or check on the background of the transaction.

MR RABINOWITZ: Thank you very much. No more questions.

Thank you.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, thank you very much.

THE WITNESS: Thank you, my Lady.

MR GILLIS: My Lady, Mr Berezovsky calls his next witness, Mr Stephenson of Carter Ruck.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well.

MR GILLIS: My Lady, while he comes to the witness box, if I could just say this.

The court is aware that it's been held that there was a collateral waiver in relation to privilege in relation to various of the Badri proofing sessions and that is the subject matter fundamentally of Mr Stephenson's witness statement.

Mr Stephenson obviously owes obligations to his former clients to maintain privilege in relation to all other matters and he is conscious that, as he takes the oath, he is taking the oath subject to the obligation to maintain privilege in relation to matters affecting his former client and is concerned that that may have consequences that there are questions that he cannot answer.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, if an issue arises as to privilege, I will have to rule on it having heard argument from the parties.

MR GILLIS: Exactly so.

MR STEPHENSON: My Lady, can I just clarify on that in relation to the wording of the oath, where I must say, of course, that I give the oath to tell the truth and the whole truth. This is the concern that I have.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, you take the oath and if an issue arises where you feel you are in difficulty, raise it with the court and I will rule on it.

MR STEPHENSON: Certainly.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Silence, please.

MR ANDREW STEPHENSON (sworn)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Do sit down if you wish to.

Examination-in-chief by MR GILLIS

MR GILLIS: Mr Stephenson, can I just start by confirming that you don't have a telephone with you or any form of electronic device?

A. No, I don't.

Q. Could the witness please be provided with bundle D1 and if that could be opened at tab 11. Could I ask you to turn to page 256 of the bundle, so that's page 10 of the witness statement D1/11/256.

A. Mm-hm.

Q. And can you confirm that that is your signature?

A. That's my signature.

Q. And could you please confirm that this is your second witness statement in these proceedings? We can see that from the first page of the witness statement.

A. That's correct.

MR GILLIS: My Lady, just for the record, Mr Stephenson's first witness statement concerned service of the claim form on Mr Abramovich and we have that at bundle J1, tab 1, at page 2 J1/1.02/3.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you.

MR GILLIS: Could you confirm that the contents of this, your second witness statement, are true to the best of your knowledge and belief?

A. They are.

MR GILLIS: If you could wait there, please. I think Mr Jowell has some questions for you.

Cross-examination by MR JOWELL

MR JOWELL: Mr Stephenson, in your witness statement you mention five occasions when you met Mr Patarkatsishvili in connection with this litigation: twice in Georgia in 2005, once in England in April 2007 and then two more meetings in England in June 2007.

A. The one -- the middle one, I'm not clear that I discussed that Mr -- Badri was present on that occasion, when we had a discussion with Mr Berezovsky in April 2007.

Q. I see. But aside from those four or five occasions, there were no other meetings with Mr Patarkatsishvili in connection with this litigation?

A. I don't recall any discussion with him at all aside from those, concerning the matters in issue here, apart from the four meetings.

Q. Yes.

Now, can I take you back to your first meeting in Georgia that took place on 29 June 2005. Now, before that first meeting with Mr Patarkatsishvili, you had already acted for Mr Berezovsky previously; that's right?

A. Correct.

Q. You'd acted for him on the litigation against Forbes and in the extradition proceedings and in a number of other matters; that's right?

A. That's correct.

Q. So you must have been already reasonably familiar by that time with Mr Berezovsky's business affairs and his personal history?

A. Most of the other matters I dealt with were of a political nature, I would say, rather than his business affairs.

Q. But before this meeting with Mr Patarkatsishvili you had been told by Mr Berezovsky that Mr Berezovsky alleged that he and Mr Patarkatsishvili had once held a joint interest in Sibneft and Rusal; that's right?

A. Yes, I was aware of that.

Q. And you'd been instructed by Mr Berezovsky to investigate potential claims against Mr Abramovich in relation to, amongst other things, Rusal, Sibneft and ORT?

A. Correct.

Q. And you were accompanied on the visits in 2005 to Tbilisi in Georgia by Mr Lankshear, who is an experienced litigation partner at Streathers?

A. Yes.

Q. And he'd also acted for Mr Berezovsky in the past?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, on the occasion of that first meeting you met with Mr Patarkatsishvili first over lunch, and then after lunch you also interviewed him in a private room in his residence; that's right?

A. I think it's the office, I'm not sure it's the residence. I think he has a residence nearby. This is the Wedding Palace, we call it, which I think he uses as an office -- or used as an office rather than a residence.

Q. I see. But in a private office after lunch?

A. Yes.

Q. And for the lunch but not the interview his wife was present?

A. That's my recollection, yes.

Q. And Dr Nosova was present for both the lunch and the subsequent interview?

A. Most of the time. I can't recall she was present throughout.

Q. But Mr Berezovsky was not present at all?

A. Not at all.

Q. And as far as you're aware, Mr Patarkatsishvili didn't speak with Mr Berezovsky on the phone during the meeting?

A. Not as far as I know.

Q. And there was nobody else there who could interrupt or correct Mr Patarkatsishvili?

A. No.

Q. And at the meeting you asked him to give his account of his and Mr Berezovsky's dealings with Mr Abramovich, in particular those relating to ORT, Rusal and Sibneft; that's right?

A. Yes.

Q. And you encouraged Mr Patarkatsishvili to speak entirely freely about these transactions?

A. Correct.

Q. And as far as you're aware, he appeared to respond freely to your questions?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, you've said in your witness statement that the second half of the interview, after lunch in this private office, lasted about two hours. Is that right?

A. To the best of my recollection, yes.

Q. And you and Mr Lankshear took a careful note of the meeting?

A. Yes, we took notes.

Q. And presumably it would be your ordinary practice in a meeting like this, to interview a potential witness, to try and take a note of anything important they said?

A. Yes. I ought to make clear now, if not later, although this document is headed "Proof of Evidence", or words -- or "Draft Proof of Evidence", the purpose was much more exploratory than that. I really wanted to find out a narrative of the sequence of events from Badri's point of view.

Q. Yes, I see that. I was just asking you about your notes, though. In your notes that you were taking at the time, it would be your ordinary practice to try and take a note of anything important that the witness said?

A. Yes. Yes, of course.

Q. So if there had been a comment made at the meeting that was not something said by the witness, by the potential witness or the interviewee, but rather something said by one of the lawyers, by you or Mr Lankshear, and you'd made a note of that comment, then you would be likely to indicate in your note that it was said by you or Mr Lankshear rather than Mr Patarkatsishvili?

A. I'm not sure I followed the question entirely.

Q. Well, I'm asking you: when you take a note, would you attribute the comment to the person speaking? And if the comment was made by a lawyer rather than the person you're interviewing, would you make sure to record that the comment was by the lawyer rather than attributing it, confusingly, to the person you're interviewing?

A. I think in the circumstances where one is interviewing a witness, is the way you put it, you take a note of what the witness is telling you. So it may be that if a lawyer puts a question to say, "Do you agree with this?", then you don't put the question down, you put down the wording of the witness, if you follow me.

Q. Yes.

A. So it was prepared that way. I think both of us are -- both Mr Lankshear and I are experienced litigators and you tend to write down when you are speaking to a potential witness his words rather than yours. It's different when you are interviewing a client, where it's important that you get down the advice given to the client as well as what the client says in response.

Q. Yes, indeed.

So if it was the fact that, say, you yourself or Mr Lankshear had made a comment on a piece of factual information rather than a question, you would have made sure to attribute that to you or Mr Lankshear rather than to the person you were interviewing?

A. I'm sure we would have sought to do so if there was some issue about it. But the purpose of the meeting was to find out what Badri had to say.

Q. Yes.

Now, after the meeting in June you returned to England and you agreed with Mr Lankshear that he would prepare a first draft of a typed note of the meeting; that's right?

A. Correct.

Q. And you've explained in your witness statement that a few days later Mr Lankshear sent you a note in the form of a proof of evidence and you reviewed that and you made some amendments to it and those amendments, they were based on your own notes of the meeting and your own presumably fresh recollection of what had been said?

A. Yes, plus my familiarity with some of the names and places that Mr Lankshear may not have been familiar with.

Q. Yes.

Now, if I could ask you to take up the R(D) bundle, or be given the R(D) bundle, and to go to tab 6 of that. That's R(D)1/06/68. In your witness statement you state that, subject to two typographical corrections, that proof accurately reflects the substance of what Mr Patarkatsishvili told you at the meeting in June 2005. Do you recall giving that evidence in your witness statement?

A. Right.

- Q. If you turn to page 74 of this R(D)1/06/74, you will see a heading entitled "Sale of ORT".
- A. Yes.
- Q. I don't plan to read these, but if you then turn to page 78 R(D)1/06/78, you'll see a passage headed "Sale of Sibneft".
- A. Yes.
- Q. Now, after this meeting, the next meeting that you had with Mr Patarkatsishvili was in December 2005; that's right?
- A. Yes.
- Q. And that meeting was specifically concerned with Rusal, was it not?
- A. Correct, yes.
- Q. And as far as you recall, Sibneft was not discussed at that meeting?
- A. Not as far as I recall.
- Q. And ORT was not discussed either?
- A. Not as far as I recall.
- Q. So all of the information of importance that Badri conveyed to you in the two meetings in Georgia about Sibneft transaction and the ORT transaction is what we have in these passages of this first proof of evidence whose accuracy you've confirmed?
- A. From Badri, yes.

Q. Yes, thank you.

Could I ask you now to turn to paragraph 29 of your witness statement, which is in the D1 bundle at page 254 D1/11/254. Now, in this paragraph you make a number of comments about your view of the meaning of your note of the third meeting that you had with Mr Patarkatsishvili in England in April 2007.

A. Mm-hm.

Q. But I'd like to start, if I may, just with the fourth sentence of this paragraph, after the words "On the contrary". Do you see the words "On the contrary", about a third of the way down the page?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. "... at the time of preparing the draft letter of claim, I suggested that Mr Patarkatsishvili, who I had been told would know better than anyone else, the true market value of Sibneft at the relevant time, should be asked his opinion on the figure we proposed to include."

Now, just pausing there, the letter before action was sent on 14 May 2007 and this meeting was on 29 April 2007, so obviously this meeting occurred before the letter before action was sent. That's right?

A. Correct, yes.

Q. Now, I don't think we need to turn it up but there is a reference in the letter before action to Sibneft having a supposed value in 2001 in excess of $8 billion.

Do you recall that?

A. Yes.

Q. But you didn't show the letter before action to Mr Patarkatsishvili before it was sent, did you?

A. I didn't, no.

Q. So the figure of $8 billion in the letter before action was not provided to you by Mr Patarkatsishvili?

A. No.

Q. Now, in the next sentence of your paragraph 29 you say:

"Subsequently, at a later meeting (I believe on 11 June 2009) at Downside Manor, I was told by Dr Nosova, in Mr Patarkatsishvili's presence, that his view was that the sum in our letter if anything represented an undervalue, given Sibneft's known oil reserves."

A. Correct.

Q. Now, the main purpose of both of the meetings in June 2007 was to get information together to prepare the particulars of claim; that's right?

A. Correct.

Q. And the market value of Sibneft in 2001 was an important piece of information that you needed to know or ideally would like to know for the claim that you were putting together for Mr Berezovsky because it was relevant to the quantum of the claim on Sibneft.

A. Right.

Q. Do you agree with that?

A. Yes, it's one of the things we would look at. I'm not sure the market value would be -- what Badri is talking about here, through Natalia Nosova, is about, you know, the evaluation of the oil company. It's not necessarily to base it on the market price is what I'm saying. Perhaps it may be one indicator, more so probably in this country on a recognised stock exchange, where there is a market for it. It's a different situation to value an oil --

Q. But the valuation of Sibneft, the information that is referred to here, would have been important information for the particulars of claim?

A. Well, you can base the valuation, as I understand it, of an oil company in terms of its reserves.

Q. And in the particulars of claim you do mention an estimate of, I believe --

A. Yes.

Q. -- $8.5 billion, do you not?

A. I can't remember the figure. I don't have it in front of me.

Q. Now, Mr Stephenson, if you turn back to the R(D) bundle, to tab 17 of that, that's R(D)1/17/124, we find your notes of the meeting of 11 June 2007.

A. Yes.

Q. Or this is your typed-up version.

A. The transcript, yes.

Q. Your transcript.

Now, there are five pages of notes that you made and I've read through them myself and I have not found any mention at all of an $8 billion valuation of Sibneft, whether on the part of Dr Nosova or Badri or anyone else at that meeting.

A. Yes.

Q. Isn't it likely that if this important information had been provided at that meeting on 11 June, you would have made a note of it?

A. No. I explained that it was actually over the lunch that we had, was where I had the discussion with Natalia Nosova specifically about the valuation. As far as I was concerned -- I mean, I am in difficulty, I'm not sure whether this will be covered by -- I would be bound by privilege in this respect, but the figure -- we had that figure from other sources. All I was looking for was whether Badri would agree with that figure because I'd been told that he was the person that I needed to check it with.

Q. Yes. Then wouldn't you have taken a note of it?

A. So I wouldn't have made a note of it.

Q. Why wouldn't you have made a note of it?

A. Well, I didn't make a note of it. I mean, it's for my information. I would have been concerned if he'd come up with a different figure. But by then the letter had already gone.

Q. You see, Mr Stephenson, are you aware that Mr Lindley also took a manuscript note of the meeting of 11 June?

A. Yes. But to explain also, my Lady, there's a very different situation here at the meetings in Leatherhead than I'd been in Georgia, where I'd been sitting one to one -- with Jim Lankshear -- one to one with Badri to take a statement from him.

What we had at Leatherhead, from my point of view, in terms of taking information down, there were a lot of people present, there were a lot of different discussions going on in relation to different matters. I was working with my pad for a lot of the time on my knee and I was not taking notes. There were some discussions that were informal over lunch as well.

Q. I see. But Mr Lindley's note, Mr Lindley actually -- there are two notes: there is a manuscript note and a typed attendance note. And again, as far as I can see, there is nothing in either of those notes that refers to a $8 billion valuation of Sibneft.

A. Well, I don't know whether he would have heard my conversation with Natalia over the lunch.

Q. Well, Mr Stephenson, I would suggest that if this important information about an $8 billion valuation wasn't reflected in either of the notes of the meeting, it is unlikely that it was conveyed at that meeting.

A. Well, I assure you it was, over the lunch.

Q. Very well. We'll have to agree to differ on that.

There was only one other subsequent meeting that you attended, on 13 June 2011, and you don't suggest that it was conveyed at that meeting, do you?

A. Sorry, can you ask the question again.

Q. There was one other subsequent meeting, on 13 June 2007 --

A. Yes.

Q. -- and you don't suggest that the information is conveyed at that meeting, do you?

A. No, I believe it was on the 11th, which was the day that, as I recall, that Badri cooked the barbecue for lunch.

Q. I see. Is it not possible that it was made on some other occasion by Dr Nosova when Mr Patarkatsishvili was not present?

A. I don't know whether Badri would have heard it from where he was standing.

Q. I see.

A. But I believe he would have done.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Sorry, can I be clear about that. I'm looking at paragraph 29 of your witness statement, where you say:

"... I was told by Dr Nosova, in Mr Patarkatsishvili's presence..."

Are you saying that it's not necessarily the case that Mr Patarkatsishvili would have heard what Dr Nosova said?

A. It was within about five yards, I suppose, maximum.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: What, standing around at a barbecue, is this?

A. He was standing over the barbecue and moving from the barbecue to the table.

MR JOWELL: And it would have been said by Dr Nosova in English, would it?

A. Yes.

Q. You see, if we go back to the proof of evidence that you took in Georgia, I don't think we need to turn it up, but on that occasion Mr Patarkatsishvili gave you an estimate for the total value of Sibneft of $6-7 billion; do you recall that?

A. I don't recall it. It's in my notes.

Q. It's in your notes, but you have seen it. You see, it seems a bit surprising that his estimate would have gone up $1-2 billion so quickly.

A. All I can say is that this is what I was told. The figure was checked with him and I was told specifically -- and I recall this very specifically -- it was because of his understanding of the oil reserves.

Q. I see. But, as you've said, he may well not have heard what she had said?

A. I think it's most unlikely. I think it's very probable that he would have heard. And my point anyway is that it was being said in his presence; now, therefore it would have been open to challenge had he heard it.

Q. Had he heard it, yes.

Could we just now turn to the transcript you made of the meeting note on 29 April 2007, which is in tab 15. Your typed-up version is in tab 15 of the bundle. That's in R(D)1/15/117.

A. Yes.

Q. And you'll see there it says "Meeting BB..."

That's Boris Berezovsky.

"... /Badri. Downside.

"ORT/Sibneft/Rusal --

"Badri thinks deal fair on Sibneft.

"Badri not party -- witness."

Now, could I ask you to come back to the last sentence of paragraph 29 of your witness statement, where you advance your theory about what the meaning of this note was. What you say is:

"I believe that the note I made on 29 April 2007 related to questions Mr Berezovsky put to me as to the possible effect if Mr Patarkatsishvili did not agree to join in the proceedings as a co-claimant and as to whether he could join later if he so wished."

Now, from the fact that you start this sentence with the words "I believe" and not "I recall" --

A. Mm-hm.

Q. -- I take it that you are here presenting your reconstruction of what you think the conversation meant rather than your laying claim to an actual current recollection of it. Is that right?

A. Well, again, my Lady, this puts me in difficulty in terms of how that is reconstructed.

Q. But you accept it is a reconstruction?

A. It is not simply a matter of my imperfect memory this long after the event, my Lady.

Q. But you accept that you don't have an actual recollection of this actual conversation? It would be very surprising if you did, six and a half years later.

A. I remember where it was, the detail of it. It was extremely short. I can't even remember, and I think it unlikely but it's possible, that Badri himself was present. I can't recall him being there.

Q. Although the heading does indicate that he was present because it says "Meeting BB/Badri". Does that help?

A. No, that doesn't necessarily -- because it was in Badri's house before the meeting with the representatives from Georgia.

Q. I see.

A. This particular conversation was extremely short.

Q. Could I just ask you one other point of clarification about the line in the attendance notes that records:

"Badri thinks deal fair on Sibneft."

A. Mm-hm.

Q. Now, just to be clear, I'm not asking you yet about what is meant by "fair" in that note or even about the context in which the phrase was used. I just want to understand one very specific thing about your evidence about that.

The "deal" on Sibneft that is referred to in the note, is that on your approach, on your theory, a reference to the deal by which Mr Abramovich agreed to pay $1.3 billion or is it a reference to some other deal on Sibneft?

A. My recollection of the conversation was a discussion about what it would look like if Badri were not a party to the proceedings that Mr Berezovsky was contemplating bringing. So therefore would it look -- this is the question -- that he therefore thought the transaction on Sibneft, the $1.3 billion, was a fair price?

Q. Yes. So the answer to my question is that it was a reference to that transaction?

A. Yes.

Q. And could I ask you just about the last part of the last sentence on paragraph 29 D1/11/254:

"... and as to whether he could join later if he so wished."

That is a reference -- you're talking there about --

A. Sorry, which?

Q. This is the very last clause of paragraph 29.

A. Oh, sorry. Yes.

Q. You say:

"... and as to whether he could join later if he so wished."

A. Yes.

Q. It's referring there to whether Mr Patarkatsishvili could join the proceedings later if he so wished?

A. Yes.

Q. If we just go back to the note in the R(D) bundle, there is no reference in the note there that could be construed as a reference to whether Mr Patarkatsishvili could join the proceedings later if he so wished, is there?

A. I've got three lines crossed out; I don't know whether that helps.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, before we get into that, your statement, "I believe that the note I made", is your belief based on the redacted lines in that document or any part of your belief that that's what the earlier passages referred to? Is your belief based on the redacted parts of your note?

A. Not on that, but on other...

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: What you say is privileged information?

A. Yes, my Lady.

MR JOWELL: But it's not based on these other lines?

A. I don't know what these three lines are because they're redacted. I can't recall.

Q. But there's nothing in the lines that are unredacted that refers anywhere to whether he could join proceedings later if he so wished at all, is there? There's not even a hint of it, is there?

A. Well, there's an indication:

"Badri not party -- witness."

That can be ambiguous. But I agree with you then, there is nothing here that specifically records whether there was any discussion at that point -- there's nothing here that records that -- any discussion at that point about Badri being joined as a co-claimant.

Q. And again, if I could just try to understand your position, who are you suggesting you were recording when you wrote the words, "Badri thinks deal fair on Sibneft": was it you or Mr Berezovsky or Mr Patarkatsishvili or do you not know?

A. I believe it was a question put to me by Mr Berezovsky: what would it look like if Badri were not also a party?

Q. So you're recording your own advice?

A. No, I'm just -- it was what Mr Berezovsky was asking me: what impression would be conveyed?

Q. But the answer, "Badri thinks deal fair on Sibneft", you're saying those were words that you used?

A. I can't recall whether it's me. I think it's far more likely it is Mr Berezovsky saying to me, "Would it give the impression that Badri thinks the deal is fair on Sibneft if he is not also a party to these proceedings?"

Q. I see.

Now, the proceedings that Mr Berezovsky was at that stage, in April 2007, contemplating included not just a claim in respect of the Sibneft transaction, did it; it also included a claim in respect of Rusal and a claim in respect of ORT, didn't it?

A. Not in relation to ORT.

Q. Well, the letter before action includes a claim in respect of ORT?

A. That was included in effect as the background leading up to the claims in relation to Sibneft and to Rusal, to explain the context in which the discussions took place. As far as my recollection is -- again, this may be taking me into areas where I can't go -- but my recollection is that at the time that the letter of claim went, it was not contemplated bringing a claim in respect of ORT.

Q. But it did include also a claim in respect of Rusal?

A. Yes.

Q. And Mr Patarkatsishvili was a key participant in the events relating to Rusal as well, wasn't he?

A. Yes.

Q. So if Mr Patarkatsishvili had not agreed to join the proceedings, it would have had an effect not just on the Sibneft claim but also on the Rusal claim, wouldn't it?

A. Possibly. All I'm saying is that wasn't a conversation we had. I can't give a --

Q. You see, if you were discussing the effect of Mr Patarkatsishvili not joining proceedings, why would you have specified "deal fair on Sibneft" rather than on the other transactions?

A. I'm not sure I did. I was answering -- I can't recall at this distance, as I've explained, as to whether it is Mr Berezovsky making the point or me making the point in return. Either way, it is the discussion about what is the impression that is conveyed, both publicly and towards the court, if Badri is not a party to the proceedings.

I don't recall as to whether -- because I had my notes simply to rely on -- as to whether we also discussed a separate situation in relation to Rusal rather than simply a conversation about the effect generally using Sibneft as an example.

Q. Well, you see, Mr Stephenson, if you go back to the note, it says "ORT/Sibneft/Rusal".

A. Right.

Q. Now, if you were talking about the effect of him not joining the proceedings, you wouldn't have specified, "Badri thinks deal fair on Sibneft"; you would have said, "Badri thinks deal fair on Sibneft, Rusal and ORT".

A. No, I don't think you can draw that conclusion whatsoever. As I said, this particular conversation, I can assure you, would have been less than five minutes and we were not discussing it in any detail. All we were doing was talking about the effect if Badri was not to be a party to the proceedings.

Q. You see, Mr Stephenson, I suggest that there's a much more straightforward explanation: the reason that you recorded the words "Badri thinks deal fair on Sibneft" was because, quite simply, you all recognised that Badri thought that the deal in respect of Sibneft was a deal that was freely and fairly negotiated.

A. No, no, no, and you know that because you've also put to me earlier about what he was saying about the valuation when we were in Georgia. I mean, it was a different amount but you know from that, from the question that you put to me earlier, that he didn't think the deal was fair.

Q. Well, as I understand the first part of paragraph 29, the reason that you say the note can't mean what it on its face means is because you say that he didn't consider that he had received a fair price for his interest in Sibneft, by which I think you mean a price that reflected its full market value. That's what you say in the first two sentences of paragraph 29?

A. Well, I didn't say "market value", with respect, and I take issue with that. Do I say "market value"?

Q. Well, you say that he didn't --

A. Do I say "market value"?

Q. You say, "I suggested that Mr" -- you then talk about, in the third sentence, you talk about "the true market value of Sibneft at the relevant time".

A. Okay, yes.

Q. Do you see that?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. But the precise words in your note are that Mr Patarkatsishvili thinks that there's a fair deal on Sibneft, not that there is a fair price or a fair market price, isn't it?

A. All I can say is that you're putting a completely misconceived -- a misconception approach towards these words, out of context.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Jowell, I think we've been round this note now. I think I'm going to take the break. Ten minutes.

You're not to talk about your evidence, Mr Stephenson, to anyone, or the case.

(3.22 pm)

(A short break)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, Mr Jowell.

MR JOWELL: Mr Stephenson, before the break I asked you whether in April you were contemplating proceedings against ORT and you indicated that you were not. Could I ask you to take up or be given, please, bundle K2/01, page 1 K2/01/1. This is the letter before action. It was sent on 14 May 2007.

Do you see the first paragraph of that, it says:

"We act for Boris Berezovsky. We write in connection with transactions concerning the sale of his beneficial interests in three companies, [ORT, Sibneft and Rusal]... In each case he was forced to dispose of his interests at a very significant undervalue, in each case you unconscionably and improperly took advantage of the threats and persecution he suffered at the hands of the Russian authorities in order, directly in relation to Sibneft and RUSAL, to enrich yourself and your partners."

Then there's a long description of the ORT transaction and if you see over the page, I don't think it's necessary to read it all, but you'll see in the penultimate paragraph there is a description of the Spectrum arrangement. And then, in the last paragraph, above "Sibneft":

"Your assurance that Mr Glushkov would be released, without which our client would not have agreed to sell his interest, proved to be false. The price our client was forced to accept for the sale of the shares represents, we are advised, a substantial undervalue."

Then you'll see there's a reasonably long description of Sibneft and then Rusal. And then do you see on the final page, on page 3, the final paragraph, "Commencement of proceedings":

"Our client's intention is to commence proceedings against you in order to recover the losses identified above, if you do not intend to compensate him fully. Our client is prepared to agree..."

And so on.

That seems to me to indicate that at that stage you were certainly leaving open the possibility that you would be claiming in relation to ORT as well as Sibneft and Rusal, doesn't it?

A. I take your point. That was not the intention at that time. It was already understood on my instructions that the claim would be in relation to Sibneft and to Rusal.

Q. And you're sure that was understood even by April, by the meeting on 29 April?

A. That's my recollection, yes.

Q. Mr Stephenson, just two final questions.

Do you still continue to act for Mr Berezovsky on any other ongoing matters?

A. Yes, we do.

Q. You do. And I'm sure you appreciate that, in light of the revelations that have come to light, I have no choice but to ask this: could you please confirm that neither you nor your firm stand to gain financially if

Mr Berezovsky is successful in this litigation?

A. We have no commission arrangement at all with Mr Berezovsky.

Q. And you don't stand to gain financially if he's successful?

A. Well, indirectly, I suppose, if Mr Berezovsky were to lose the claim, as to whether, since we were involved in advising at the outset, whether there could be some indirect value to us in him winning it. You follow?

Q. But no direct financial value?

A. No, no. No.

MR JOWELL: I'm grateful. Thank you, Mr Stephenson.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, thank you very much. Is there any further cross-examination?

MR MALEK: I have no questions.

MR ADKIN: There is very briefly from me, my Lady.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well, Mr Adkin.

Cross-examination by MR ADKIN

MR ADKIN: Your Ladyship is already aware that we had obtained in the Chancery actions unredacted versions of a lot of these documents and I propose to take the witness to the unredacted version of the note of the meeting on 29 April 2007. We will, of course, make sure that this goes into the trial bundle.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Are they available for use in this action?

MR ADKIN: My Lady, yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: There's no dispute about that,

Mr Gillis, is there?

MR GILLIS: My Lady, no, so long as it is in relation to an overlap issue.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR ADKIN: My Lady, yes. If I could pass...

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Usher, could these be handed up, please. (Handed)

THE WITNESS: Shall I put this with the redacted one?

MR ADKIN: This is the unredacted version of the document that you were being --

THE WITNESS: Should I put it in the bundle after that?

MR ADKIN: Yes, we will insert it in -- this is for the transcript -- we'll insert it at bundle

R(D)1/15/117.001; in other words behind the document that has the redacted -- behind the redacted version.

Mr Stephenson, you'll see that the last four lines were redacted and they are unredacted in this. Can I firstly ask you this: as far as the last four lines that you now see in unredacted form are concerned, would you accept that they don't deal with the impression that Mr Patarkatsishvili's not being a party to the proceedings would give to the court or the public, do they?

A. No, it doesn't relate to that at all.

Q. No. And if one looks at the third line from the bottom, one sees:

"ORT/plus evidence of loss -- advertising revenue."

We understand therefore that you were still discussing a possible claim on 29 April 2007 in relation to ORT. Would you accept that now, having had your memory jogged from the unredacted note?

A. Yes, that is helpful. I think to put it at that -- obviously now that we have this note and it makes it easier for me to answer. There were, as I understood it, clear limitation issues regarding the position of Sibneft. It was something that we -- sorry, with ORT.

Q. With ORT?

A. Yes. There were wider issues as well which I am --

MR GILLIS: My Lady, if I could just --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, just a second. Yes, Mr Gillis.

MR GILLIS: The effect of the collateral waiver is that there has been a waiver of privilege in relation to what was said at this meeting in the presence of Badri because it was on that basis that the court held that there was a collateral waiver. So that is the extent of the collateral waiver: what was being discussed in Badri's presence at this meeting. It is not a waiver in relation to anything which is the subject matter of this note such that there has been a waiver in respect of any discussion there may have been in respect of limitation periods.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Okay. So the waiver is just in relation to what was discussed with Badri in his presence?

MR GILLIS: Exactly so.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, Mr Adkin, please be careful in your cross-examination.

MR ADKIN: My Lady, yes. I'm not sure that we would necessarily accept that analysis of the waiver but in any event I think it doesn't matter because, as we understand it from paragraph 28 of Mr Stephenson's statement, this was a meeting at which Mr Patarkatsishvili at least may well have been present, although you don't recall whether he was an active participant in the brief discussion.

Is that a fair summary?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, I don't think the unredacted four lines require any further cross-examination if they're going into disputed areas of privilege. We can all see what they say and those are issues that may or may not be around --

MR ADKIN: Well, I was going to ask a question on the last line.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: You ask the question and I'll rule on it.

MR ADKIN: Well, let me ask a prior question which may help.

Mr Stephenson, do you recall whether Badri was present when you were discussing the issues that are noted at the last four lines and in particular in the last line?

A. I don't recall Badri being present at all, specifically.

Q. You don't have any specific recollection of whether he was or whether he wasn't present for that; is that right?

A. That's correct.

MR ADKIN: That's correct.

Well, I'll ask my question, my Lady, if I --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right.

MR ADKIN: The question I have relates to the last line of this note, Mr Stephenson.

Is it right that at this meeting you were discussing with those present, whoever they may have been, the question of whether the Rusal claim would be time-barred?

A. Well, it's clear from the note. It speaks for itself.

Q. Yes. You agree? The transcript doesn't pick that up, Mr Stephenson, sorry.

A. Sorry, it is clear from the note. I mean, I have no particular recollection of discussing it, but it is clear from my note that it was something that was discussed.

Q. And it's also clear from your note that the reason why there was a concern over limitation in relation to the Rusal claim was because it was understood to be governed by Russian law?

MR GILLIS: I'm afraid I don't think that's a legitimate question because it's not in relation to what was being discussed at the meeting but is trespassing upon questions of what was understood, which must flow from discussions between the client and the solicitor.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, I don't think it's going to help me further. There obviously is an issue about the Russian law of limitation.

MR GILLIS: Yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I just don't think this is helpful.

MR ADKIN: My Lady, your Ladyship has the note and the witness can't recollect, so it probably is as far as I can sensibly take it.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you.

MR ADKIN: My Lady, no further questions.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Mumford?

MR MUMFORD: No questions.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Gillis, do you have any re-examination?

MR GILLIS: My Lady, I have no re-examination.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you very much indeed for coming along, Mr Stephenson.

(The witness withdrew)

Discussion re housekeeping

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, we understand there are no further witnesses available this afternoon. Can I raise with your Ladyship the position of three witnesses who are due to be heard in the following days.

First of all, Mr Chernoi. We have been informed that Mr Chernoi is, for various reasons, not willing to give evidence even by video-link.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Even by video-link?

MR SUMPTION: Even by video-link. I'm not sure it's necessary to go into the reasons that he has given for that, but that is his position.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR SUMPTION: In those circumstances we assume that it is common ground that his witness statement will be withdrawn from the bundle, no application having been made to put it in as hearsay evidence, and we would rather assume that it's accepted that it would not be appropriate since he's --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, that may be an optimistic assumption. I assume I'll have an application to have it received as hearsay evidence but I can't anticipate that.

MR SUMPTION: Well, if there's a difference about that, your Ladyship will have to hear argument on the subject. But I think that your Ladyship should be told that he will not be appearing and it may therefore be sensible not to study his witness statement pro tem.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Just a second. Mr Gillis, what's the position in relation to Mr Chernoi?

MR GILLIS: We're certainly content that your Ladyship should not look at the statement for the present time. We were just notified, I think it was on Friday, that Mr Chernoi --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, I've read it already.

MR GILLIS: I'm sure your Ladyship has. I'm happy that you do not refresh your memory then.

We were just told on Friday that he was not willing to give evidence. There is a letter from his solicitors. As your Ladyship will recall, it's a slightly complex situation in that Mr Chernoi is involved in litigation with Mr Deripaska.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Was the position that I made a video order in relation to him some time ago?

MR GILLIS: I think you did.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR GILLIS: My Lady, we'll consider the position, if we may, and whether we wish to make an application for that evidence to be admissible as hearsay evidence.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Okay.

MR GILLIS: But we'll deal with that at a later stage if that's convenient.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, I'll deal with that application as and when it's made and as and when objection is taken to it. But I think if you are going to apply for the evidence to be admissible as hearsay evidence, the sooner you do so, the better.

MR GILLIS: Certainly.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, the second witness that I wanted to mention was Mr Dubov.

We received late last night from Ghersons, who acted in the asylum proceedings, Mr Dubov's witness statement of 2009 in support of Mr Glushkov's asylum application. This is a statement that your Ladyship may recall I asked Mr Dubov whether he was prepared to release.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR SUMPTION: He has obviously consented to its release because otherwise we presume we would not have got it from Ghersons. It does raise an issue which I have mentioned to my learned friend Mr Rabinowitz we need to ask for Mr Dubov to be recalled to deal with. We would have dealt with it if we'd had that statement before. It's not going to take very long and I understand arrangements are being made for Mr Dubov to attend for that purpose on Thursday or Friday, when your Ladyship is next sitting.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right.

MR SUMPTION: Thirdly, there is the position of Mr Reuben. There is a witness summons extant in his case and we therefore assume that he is obliged to turn up at a time which is convenient for the general progress of the trial. We also assume that that will be either on Thursday or on Friday.

We are concerned that we should not be in the position either of having to defer the start of our own evidence or of having to interpose Mr Reuben's evidence after Mr Abramovich has given evidence. The position is that there are a number of other solicitors involved in the taking of the Badri notes who are due to give evidence on Monday morning because they can't give evidence any earlier. We would therefore assume that it will be possible to proceed to Mr Abramovich's evidence on Monday afternoon, but that very much does depend on there being no undue delay in hearing Mr Reuben's evidence.

MR GILLIS: My Lady --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just a second. I've got the timetable for witnesses in my room. Could either you or Mr Gillis give me an update on who we've still got to go before the defendant starts?

MR SUMPTION: Yes, we've got Mr Giroud and Mr Ivlev who are expected to give evidence on Thursday, along with Mr Lindley.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR SUMPTION: There is then Mr Nevzlin, who is expected to give evidence on Friday. It has to be the afternoon because he is giving evidence by video-link from New York and it is an unsocial hour of day in New York in the morning.

That leaves as witnesses Mr --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Dubov again?

MR SUMPTION: Well, Mr Dubov will give evidence, we think, in one of the vacant slots on Thursday or Friday.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR SUMPTION: That leaves as witnesses Mr Lankshear, Ms Duncan and Mr McKim. They are all short witnesses. We expect that their evidence would be completed -- they can't give evidence before Monday because they're away for the school half-term. We would expect their evidence to be completed by about the midday break on Monday.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR SUMPTION: Meaning that we would proceed to our own evidence on Monday afternoon. Our first witness would be Mr Abramovich.

My reason for raising this timetable now is that we would very much like to know when Mr Reuben is going to appear and we would very much hope that it will not be at a time which will either delay Mr Abramovich's evidence or involve interposing him after that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Gillis, can you help me?

MR SUMPTION: There's also, I should say, Mr Pompadur. He is going to have to be interposed anyway but it would not be inconvenient to interpose him after Mr Abramovich's evidence so that if that's necessary, we have no concerns about it. We are much less relaxed about the possibility of interposing Mr Reuben after Mr Abramovich has given evidence.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, very well. Mr Gillis, can you help on this?

MR GILLIS: My Lady, we're thankful for the confirmation in respect of Mr Pompadur.

In respect of Mr Reuben, the position, as I understand it, is that the witness summons has to be issued for a returnable date and that's 3 October (sic). That's obviously inconvenient because matters have moved more quickly.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: 3 November, you mean?

MR GILLIS: 3 November, I'm sorry.

The position is, as we understand it, that Mr Reuben is in France. We're trying to contact him in order to encourage him to come and give evidence on Thursday or Friday of this week, but at the present time we have not had a response from him.

Because the summons has been issued for --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: You can't issue a witness summons that is effective in France, can you?

MR GILLIS: No, I don't think we can. Exactly.

So we served him with the witness summons when he was in England for 3 November. That is the only date that he is presently compelled to come. We are seeking to prevail upon him to come on Thursday or Friday this week. If your Ladyship indicated that that would assist trial management, we would certainly pass that on to Mr Reuben.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, it certainly would be very helpful if he could come on Thursday and Friday and we can slot him in on one of those days.

MR GILLIS: Exactly so. So we are doing what we can do in order to have Mr Reuben here on Thursday or Friday.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, perhaps to speed things up a bit it might be helpful if I were to say I would like to be notified not later than 4.00 pm tomorrow afternoon as to what the position is in relation to Mr Reuben.

MR GILLIS: We will do that.

My Lady --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: With, obviously, copies to the other parties.

MR GILLIS: Yes, and we will notify our learned friends as soon as we can do.

My Lady, there is just one point in relation to the video conference link. Two of the witnesses, Mr Ivlev and Mr Nevzlin, are giving evidence from New York as you've heard by video-link on Thursday and Friday. It's probably not the most interesting point your Ladyship has had to consider so far, but paragraph 15 of annex 2 to the practice direction 32, dealing with video -- I wasn't going to ask your Ladyship to turn it up; it's on page 997 -- indicates that a video recording should be made of the evidence.

In circumstances where we have a LiveNote transcript being made of the evidence, we wonder whether your Ladyship requires a video recording also to be made or whether you're happy to dispense with that, given the fact that we're going to have the transcript of the evidence in any event.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Do I also have a sound recording automatically of the video recording? I think an email has been sent to me today raising the issue.

MR GILLIS: I think that comes through automatically with the --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: LiveNote?

MR GILLIS: -- LiveNote. Certainly there is an audio recording. I will check that. My question to your Ladyship is certainly put on the premise that there is an audio recording that is being made as part and parcel of the LiveNote transcript.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. I mean, one doesn't have normally a visual recording of a witness either for the assistance of the judge or the parties.

MR GILLIS: No. So provided there is an audio recording made, is your Ladyship content with that?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, I'll hear what the others say.

Mr Sumption, do you want a --

MR SUMPTION: We think that is a sensible suggestion. There is no reason why he should be singled out for having a video recording as well as an audio.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No. Does any other counsel want to mention anything? No.

Mr Gillis, I'm happy to dispense with the requirement that there should be a video recording of his evidence. If any questions do arise, we'll have it on the transcript and we'll have it on the audio recording.

MR GILLIS: I'm obliged.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: But perhaps somebody could check that it is all right for the audio recording. It should be.

MR GILLIS: We will do.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well.

Right. Now, do you want to start earlier on Thursday because of the two days we're missing?

MR GILLIS: My Lady, we're very much in my learned friend's hands.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, I don't believe that will be necessary. We are likely to go short on both Thursday and Friday anyway because of the availability of witnesses and the constraints on the time at which they can give evidence.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I see, because there is no possibility of getting the half-termers back for Friday.

MR SUMPTION: Exactly.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well. Then I'll sit again at 10.15 on Thursday morning. Thank you very much.

(10.15 am)

(Proceedings delayed)

(10.39 am)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I'm sorry I have kept the parties waiting but I was doing another case over in the main building.

MR GILLIS: Not at all, my Lady.

My Lady, Mr Berezovsky calls his next witness, Mr Reuben.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well.

MR GILLIS: Can Mr Reuben come to the witness box, please.

My Lady, I'm sorry he's not in court. I thought he was.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. This afternoon, everybody's got the headphones, have they?

MR GILLIS: Yes, I think the suggestion is that there should be a trial run over the lunch break and I think the technicians are fixing that up.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. I think someone is going to need to tell me at lunchtime how to use the headphones so we don't waste time.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, I told your Ladyship yesterday that there were 50 available; I understand that that number has been increased to 125.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. That's for Monday?

MR SUMPTION: Yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Presumably also for this afternoon.

MR SUMPTION: I imagine so, but I doubt whether there will be quite as many takers.

MR DAVID REUBEN (sworn)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Please sit down, Mr Reuben, if you would like.

THE WITNESS: Thank you.

Examination-in-chief by MR GILLIS

MR GILLIS: Good morning, Mr Reuben. My name is Richard Gillis and I represent Mr Berezovsky.

Could you please start by giving the court your full name?

A. My full name is Reuben David Reuben, but I'm known as David Reuben.

Q. Thank you. And could you please give the court your present main address?

A. At the moment I would say Millbank Towers, Millbank, London.

Q. Thank you. And please could you confirm that you do not have a mobile phone or an electronic device with you?

A. At this moment?

Q. Or if you do, that it's off.

A. I don't have one with me.

Q. Thank you.

Mr Reuben, I understand that you are a reluctant witness and that you attend under a witness summons. Is that correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. Well, in those circumstances, I particularly thank you for attending.

Mr Reuben, I understand you have a brother.

A. I do.

Q. And could I ask what your brother's name is?

A. I have two brothers: one is called Simon and another one called Ellis.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Excuse me, could you please face the court while you're giving your evidence.

A. I beg your pardon.

One called Simon and the other is Ellis.

MR GILLIS: And in late 1999 did you and your brother Simon have business interests in Russia?

A. Our company had business interests in Russia.

Q. And what was that company?

A. Trans-World -- it was the Trans-World Group.

Q. Thank you. Now, in what sector of the industry were those business interests?

A. In many sectors: they were in aluminium, in steel, in minerals and in trading.

- Q. I'd like to focus just on the aluminium industry.
- A. Okay.
- Q. And at this distance in time, could you give the court the name of the aluminium interests in which TWA was interested and which were sold in 2000?
- A. There was Bratsk, there was Krasnoyarsk, there was Sayanagorsk, there was Bogoslovsky, there was -- that's in Russia you're talking about, right?
- Q. In Russia.
- A. Okay. Those are in Russia.
- Q. It's not intended as a memory test. Could Mr Reuben be provided with bundle R(B)1, open at tab 22
R(B)1/22/211.
- Mr Reuben, as you can see from the top of the page, this is a contract that's dated 10 February 2000 and it refers to having been made in Moscow.
- A. Yes.
- Q. Now, my first question is: do you recognise this contract? A long time ago.
- A. It's a long time ago. I assume it is.
- Q. Could I just ask you to turn to the next tab, tab 23 --
- A. Okay.
- Q. -- and go to page 43 R(B)1/23/43. We have the numbers in the bottom right-hand corner.
- A. 43?

Q. Yes. So it's tab 23, page 43.

A. Okay.

Q. Now --

A. I see it.

Q. I don't know, do you read Russian at all?

A. No.

Q. No. If you can take it from me that against the number 3, I think it's party 3. Now, is that your signature?

A. No.

Q. That's not. All right. Could I take you back to tab 22.

A. Tab 22, sure.

Q. I should ask you: do you recognise who that signature is? It's just that the Russian version is signed but the English version isn't.

A. Yes.

Q. On page 43. Tab 23, page 43.

A. It seems like Dmitry Bosov equals party number 3.

Q. I see. Does your signature appear on that page?

A. No, it does not.

Q. All right. Could I take you back to tab 22 so that we can look at the English version.

A. Okay.

Q. Could you look at the fourth line of the text.

A. That is correct.

Q. And are you described as being --

A. Correct.

Q. -- party 3?

A. Yes.

Q. Then can I ask you to look at paragraphs 1 and 2.

A. Yes.

Q. In particular the wording after "Party 3", which you've indicated is yourself.

A. Yes.

Q. Does this contract describe the interests in the aluminium assets that you and the companies that you are associated with, which is the terminology we see opposite your name, it's the aluminium assets that you and those companies controlled?

A. Roughly speaking, yes, if I'm not reading everything. But then generally, yes.

Q. So I think --

A. You're talking about "Party 3 controls"; is that where you mean?

Q. Yes, that's right.

A. "... about 14.5% of [the] shares... of [Kraznoyarsk], including, without limitation..."

That is correct. That is correct.

Q. I think you mentioned KrAZ and Bratsk --

A. Right.

Q. -- as we refer to it.

A. Right.

Q. And then I think if one looks at paragraph 2, we see a reference to Achinsk. Now, is that the Achinsk aluminium refinery?

A. Alumina. Alumina refinery.

Q. Alumina refinery?

A. That is correct.

Q. I should know better. The alumina refinery.

A. Right.

Q. And that was also an aluminium asset --

A. That's right, part of the aluminium assets.

Q. -- that you controlled?

A. That is correct.

Q. Now, despite the fact that you are described as being party 3 here, you've indicated on the signed version --

A. Yes.

Q. -- which we have at tab 24 at page 43 R(B)1/24/43 that your name does not appear?

A. Did you say tab 23, 43?

Q. Yes.

A. Let me look at it again. Yes, my signature doesn't appear. That's not my signature.

Q. All right. Are there any signatures there that you recognise who may have been signing on your behalf?

A. No.

Q. All right.

So far as you understand, is this the operative contract under which the interests that you controlled were sold?

A. Yes.

Q. Despite the fact that your signature does not appear?

A. That's right.

Q. Your brother Simon, did he have an interest in TWA as well?

A. Yes, he did.

Q. Your brother Simon does not appear to be mentioned in this contract.

A. My brother Simon did not participate in any part of the metal business in -- so he would not be involved. I was representing this part of the business.

Q. So your brother Simon had no interest in the aluminium assets?

A. He had equal interest to me in the aluminium assets but did not participate in this side of the business at all, or very little, if any.

Q. He had an equal interest in the aluminium assets?

A. Equal interest with me.

Q. With you?

A. Yes.

Q. In general terms, what was the nature of your business relationship with your brother in relation to the aluminium assets?

A. He allowed me to run that -- I ran that segment while he ran a different segment of investments in which I very rarely participated, except in discussions or at the board meetings.

Q. Did you -- I think you've indicated you shared the interests?

A. Yes, we are. But it just so happens he had not very much knowledge of the metal business at all and I had very little knowledge of his investment business. We stuck to two businesses although we were partners in that -- in those businesses.

Q. You were partners in those businesses, okay.

A. Right.

Q. Coming back to the contract, could I ask about the other parties, 2 to 5 --

A. Yes.

Q. -- who are identified in the contract. Now, party 2.

A. Yes.

Q. Who is party 2?

A. Party 2 is Lev Chernoi, who was also a shareholder equal to me in many of these assets. We were --

Q. That's what I was wanting to look at.

A. Right.

Q. So --

A. We were like partners in the assets.

Q. So you were partners in the assets?

A. Right.

Q. So can I just clarify exactly, if one looks at paragraphs 1 and 2, I think you have indicated, again if one looks against party 2, one can see that there are shared interests that are controlled in KrAZ and Bratsk and Achinsk.

A. I think they are mirror, mirror with me.

Q. Thank you. And can we just quickly identify parties 4 and 5 and --

A. Yes.

Q. Who is party 4?

A. Party 4 is Dmitry Bosov, somebody who was associated with us and had some shares in some of the businesses.

Q. And did he have a position within TWA -- sorry, Trans-World?

A. He had no position in TWA but there was a -- he had a company, he ran a company in which TWA was a partner.

Q. So that is Mr Bosov.

A. Yes.

Q. And then party 5?

- A. Party 5 is Mr Vasiliiy Anisimov and we had common interests in two plants: one of them is he had shares in Krasnoyarsk and the other was in another company called Bogoslovsky.
- Q. Does paragraph 2 also indicate that he had an interest in the Achinsk alumina refinery?
- A. At this moment I can't remember if he did. It indicates it here, and if it indicates it here, he probably did have.
- Q. If I can ask you in paragraph 2 where it says:
- "Parties 2, 3, 4 and 5 together control about 10% of AGK shares."
- A. Yes.
- Q. And then if you look at the line above, is "AGK" the Achinsk alumina refinery?
- A. Yes, it is.
- Q. And then, just before we leave the contract, could I ask you to go back to the top of this page.
- A. Yes.
- Q. And can you see that we have a definition of party 1?
- A. Yes.
- Q. And party 1 is described as Mr Abramovich, Mr Shvidler and Mr Patarkatsishvili; is that correct?
- A. Yes, that is correct.
- Q. Now, if I could ask you to look at paragraphs 4 and 5 of the contract.

A. Yes.

Q. If I could just ask you to read those paragraphs.

A. Yes.

Q. I'm not going to be asking you a detailed question.

A. Which one, the fourth?

Q. Paragraphs 4 and 5.

A. "Party 4 controls... 25%" --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, just read it to yourself I think.

THE WITNESS: Oh, I beg your pardon.

MR GILLIS: No, paragraph 4 and paragraph 5, which just starts, "Party 1 shall..."

A. Okay, I've done that.

Q. And having read those paragraphs, could you very briefly explain to the court the nature of this contract? What is happening under this contract?

A. Under this contract our aluminium positions in total was being sold.

Q. Thank you. So it's a contract of sale and purchase?

A. A contract for sale.

Q. And going back to the definition of party 1, is Mr Patarkatsishvili identified as being one of the purchasers?

A. That is correct.

Q. Is Mr Patarkatsishvili someone who was known to you in 1999, before this contract was concluded?

A. Yes.

Q. So, Mr Reuben, I'd now like to move backwards in time from 10 February contract to the negotiation of the contract and to ask a few questions about the negotiation and the ultimate conclusion of that contract. Do you follow?

A. I follow.

Q. Do you remember when the negotiations started which led to the ultimate sale of these aluminium assets?

A. I would say a few months prior. Exactly I can't remember, but maybe three/four months prior to that.

Q. So the back end of 1999?

A. Yes, the back end.

Q. Do you recall who was involved in those first negotiations?

A. Negotiate -- there were two negotiations: I was negotiating personally to find a buyer myself; and this group of people, which is, well, shareholders common with me, were looking -- were talking to other people at the time and one of them was Badri, Mr Patarkatsishvili.

Q. So who was undertaking the negotiations with Badri?

A. These negotiations weren't being taken where we coordinated -- we were not -- it was not what you would call -- I was not -- they kept it away from me, their part of the negotiation, and I kept my part of the negotiation away from them, trying to find a solution to present to them.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Could I be clear. When you say "they kept... their part of the" --

A. My own parties. This is not the -- I'm not talking about Mr Abramovich or -- I'm talking about my own partners.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

A. There were -- these three were together negotiating to find a buyer on their own accord. I had no involvement in it except by general lip service. No details were given, just --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: But Mr Chernoi, Mr Bosov and Mr Anisimov?

A. They were in discussions.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: When you say the three of them --

A. That's it. They were -- MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: -- you're talking about them?

A. That's right.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So the three of them were in discussions with --

A. Discussions with that group, that's right.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: -- certain parties and you were in discussions --

A. I was with somebody else.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

A. In other words, we both had different preferences where we would like to have seen the sale. And --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. And were you negotiating with Mr Patarkatsishvili?

A. No, I was not.

MR GILLIS: So if I understand it, it's as if there were two parallel sets of negotiations?

A. That is correct.

Q. So can we just take it in stages. The negotiations that you were involved with, could I ask just very briefly who you were negotiating with?

A. With another group which had nothing to do with any of this case or action.

Q. All right. And the three that you have identified of Mr Chernoi, Mr Reuben (sic) and Mr Anisimov --

A. Not Mr Reuben, Mr Bosov.

Q. Mr Bosov, I'm sorry. Mr Chernoi, Mr Bosov and Mr Anisimov, I think you indicated that they were negotiating with Badri?

A. Right.

Q. How did you know that to be the case?

A. Excuse me. When I say they were negotiating with Badri, they weren't negotiating with Badri; they were having their own negotiations. The fact that I met Badri and I saw them, we were discussing things, I can't swear who exactly they were negotiating with when I'm not there.

Q. No, all right.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So the position is you knew Mr Patarkatsishvili?

A. I knew them. I never met Mr Abramovich at this time; I never even heard of Mr Shvidler at this time.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. But although you knew Mr Patarkatsishvili you were not yourself involved --

A. Negotiating --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: -- with him?

A. No, not negotiating with him. No, I wasn't.

MR GILLIS: Can I now move on just a little bit.

A. Yes.

Q. Was there a time, once these negotiations that the three were conducting with Mr Patarkatsishvili, was there a time after that when you met Mr Patarkatsishvili?

A. No, I met him before, some months before. I was on a plane going to Moscow with him and I believe Mr Anisimov and during this trip the discussions were taking place in general between them, mostly in Russian, talking about how they would go about selling this or how he would -- they were trying to get him to buy the product and he was -- they were talking about tactics of how they would go about it. From time to time Mr Badri would translate to me part of the conversations that was of interest to me.

- Q. Can you identify to the best of your ability when this discussion took place, this flight?
- A. I would say it was about a few months prior to the actual sale of this contract, before the signatures were signed.
- Q. And is this right: that they were discussing the possible purchase of aluminium assets?
- A. That is correct.
- Q. And who did you understand the prospective purchasers to be?
- A. I understood it to be like this. You see, I didn't know at that time the names, I never met Mr Shvidler, so therefore I would say I understood this to be like the Sibneft people, you know, who were buying it.
- Q. When you say "the Sibneft people", what did that --
- A. I would assume it was Mr Berezovsky, Mr Badri and, I assume -- funny enough, it was during this conversation I asked Mr Patarkatsishvili, "Is a Mr Deripaska behind you in this aluminium?" And he said, "No", and he said, "No, we would only do it if Mr Abramovich was in it". "Roman", he used the word "Roman", because I asked somebody, "Who is Roman?" and they explained to me.

Q. And did you know who Mr Berezovsky was?

A. I knew Mr Berezovsky. He was -- he was known in Russia at the time.

Q. And in your conversations with Mr Patarkatsishvili about the purchasers and the purchaser not being Mr Deripaska, was mention made of Mr Berezovsky?

A. No, just -- and even if it is, I can't remember.

Q. You said earlier that reference was made to Sibneft.

A. Yes.

Q. Is that something that Mr Patarkatsishvili himself said?

A. No, my own partners were talking as well, they were discussing this. You see, we never specifically mentioned who one person is or one company is. So when we talk about the sale, we are talking about Badri and his partners. It was common knowledge Mr Badri was a partner of Mr Berezovsky; he said so, it was a known factor, so I assumed it to be that way. I have never seen any documents or papers. I was not a friend of either of them to say. I was not the enemy either. But I really had no idea what or where or how. That was how we assumed it to be.

Q. Thank you.

Can I now move on from the plane journey and can you recall how the negotiations for the sale of the aluminium assets was progressed?

A. I had an offer from the party that I was discussing and I .phoned up Mr Lev Chernoi and Dima Bosov and I tried to explain to them that I'm talking to these people and they -- I had a call and they said they were going to come to London to meet with me. And when they came to London, they told me that they now have a fixed offer and that was the price. I refused the price. Then they came back and they increased it to -- a bit, where we all agreed to sell it, and that was in London. And we shook hands and they left and then I was called to come and sign that agreement.

Q. All right. We'll come to that in a moment.

A. Okay.

Q. You have explained previously that you were concerned to establish that Mr Deripaska was not behind the purchase?

A. I was not concerned, I just asked that question: is Deripaska behind? In other words, I was afraid that Mr Patarkatsishvili is going to partner this deal, buy it and sell it to -- or combine with Deripaska. And he said: no, he was not going to do it, that they were going to do it with Roman. They were going to do it with Roman and if he didn't do it, they wouldn't do the deal.

Q. So he indicated that it was to be done with Roman?

A. That is right.

Q. So Mr Patarkatsishvili was not acting just for himself, he was acting on behalf of others as well; is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. And who were the others, so far as you were aware, that he was acting on behalf of?

A. I can identify a name because Mr Abramovich is a big name today, but at that time I had not known of him too much. I never -- so I would say in my mind I thought it is the people who owned Sibneft and Sibneft was the -- whoever owned Sibneft was the same party that was buying this.

Q. And what was your understanding of who owned Sibneft at the time?

A. At that time?

Q. Yes.

A. I knew Mr -- I knew Badri was involved, I knew Mr Patarkatsishvili (sic) was involved, I knew Mr Abramovich was involved, and those are the only three names that I ...

Q. Sorry, I think you said you knew Mr Badri was involved and you knew Mr Patarkatsishvili was involved and you say --

A. No, Badri is Patarkatsishvili.

- Q. Well, exactly. That's why I wanted to come back.
- A. Yes.
- Q. You said you knew these three names, but two of the names you gave were actually for Badri.
- A. Sorry, I beg your pardon.
- Q. So who was the first?
- A. I said Mr Abramovich probably was in -- Roman was inside.
- Q. I think if you look at the transcript, you've indicated you were referring to three names?
- A. Yes: Badri, Berezovsky and Mr Abramovich.
- Q. Thank you. Can we then move to the conclusion of the 10 February contract.
- A. Yes.
- Q. I think maybe you still have that open at tab 22 R(B)1/22/211.
- A. Yes.
- Q. Is it right that we can see that it refers to Moscow, 10 February 2000?
- A. It does.
- Q. Did you attend in Moscow for the signing?
- A. I did.
- Q. Can you recall the approximate date of the meeting?
- A. Approximate date?
- Q. Yes.

- A. No, I can't. I assume it was on 10 February 2000.
- Q. But that is simply because of the date that appears on the contract?
- A. Absolutely.
- Q. Do you recall where in Moscow the signing took place?
- A. It took place which I believe the offices of Mr Abramovich.
- Q. And was that his private office or was it a company?
- A. I have no idea. I've never been there before. I never asked. I just went there and we were around a table, a few people talking, and it was there. I didn't know whose office it was; I just assumed because I was told it was Mr Abramovich's office.
- Q. All right. And can you recall who attended the meeting?
- A. The ones I can remember that attended the meeting was a Mr Shvidler, because I was introduced to him, Mr Patarkatsishvili, myself, Dima Bosov, Mr Anisimov, Lev Chernoi, and there may have been others, I just can't remember. But they were the main people that I can recollect.
- Q. Was that the first time you'd met Mr Shvidler?
- A. First time I was introduced to Mr Shvidler.
- Q. And was Mr Abramovich at the meeting?
- A. No, he was not at the meeting.
- Q. Did you subsequently meet him?

A. Yes.

Q. At this stage, was your understanding as to who the purchasers were the same as you have already described to the court?

A. Yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: You say you subsequently met Mr Berezovsky; had you met him --

MR GILLIS: No, Mr Abramovich.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I'm so sorry, Mr Abramovich. You had not met him before?

A. No.

Q. Do you know who Mr Anisimov regarded the purchasers to be?

A. No, I don't know. In other words, I would be speculating if I answered that question.

Q. You described the discussion that you had on the aeroplane. Was Mr Anisimov a party to that discussion?

A. Yes, he was.

Q. Then a few final questions.

Can I take you back to the contract that we have at R(B)1 at tab 22 R(B)1/22/211.

A. R(B)1, tab -- yes.

Q. Tab 22. We see that party 1, that is the purchaser, is described as being Mr Abramovich, Mr Shvidler and Mr Patarkatsishvili.

A. Right.

Q. Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, did you regard Mr Patarkatsishvili as being one of the purchasers?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you attach any significance to the fact that Mr Berezovsky was not made as one of --

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, with great respect, there are limits beyond which one should not be suggesting the answer to the witness.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I think you've got to formulate it a bit more carefully, Mr Gillis, please.

MR GILLIS: Well, I'm content to leave it.

Did you subsequently meet Mr Berezovsky?

A. What do you mean "subsequently"?

Q. Subsequent to the conclusion of the 10 February contract did you meet Mr Berezovsky?

A. I met Mr Berezovsky after that contract, yes.

Q. Yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Had you met him before the contract?

A. Yes, I did.

MR GILLIS: When you met him, was there on any subsequent occasion any discussion about this aluminium transaction?

A. I met him once, I believe, and I congratulated him on the deal because it was all -- if I'm not mistaken, I think it was in the press that he was -- or something quoted him and one time I just congratulated him on a good buy.

Q. And can you recall when that meeting was approximately?

A. No, I can't recall.

Q. Can you recall where that meeting was?

A. I can't recall. I think it was either in London or in Moscow. But I can't recall because this is very significant to you in this case; to me it's just another man that I met. It's not something that I would remember or was not of any importance to me.

MR GILLIS: I understand.

Mr Reuben, thank you very much. I think Mr Sumption may have some questions for you.

MR SUMPTION: I have no cross-examination.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you.

MR ADKIN: My Lady, neither do I.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Malek?

Cross-examination by MR MALEK

MR MALEK: Yes, just one question. Mr Reuben, I act on behalf of Mr Anisimov.

Can you confirm Mr Anisimov and you do not speak a common language, do you?

A. That is not -- we do not.

MR MALEK: I've no questions.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Any re-examination?

MR GILLIS: My Lady, no.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Reuben, thank you very much indeed for coming to the court.

THE WITNESS: Thank you very much.

(The witness withdrew)

MR GILLIS: My Lady, I think with that we can resume with Mr Lindley.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Shall I take the break now?

MR GILLIS: That might be convenient.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well. Ten minutes.

(11.15 am)

(A short break)

(11.28 am)

MR MICHAEL LINDLEY (continued)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Lindley, you're still on your oath, you understand.

Cross-examination by MR ADKIN (continued)

MR ADKIN: Mr Lindley, yesterday you will recall I was asking you about the work you had done with Mr Patarkatsishvili and I took you to paragraph 9 of your statement D1/07/94, in which you said that you were first instructed by Mr Patarkatsishvili in relation to a personal matter in the spring of 2006 and had periodic dealings with him, including professional dealings, up until his death in February 2008. Do you remember that?

A. Correct.

Q. Yes. And it's clear, isn't it, from the 1 per cent commission agreement you entered into with Mr Berezovsky that you're now assisting him, Mr Berezovsky, in his actions against Mr Patarkatsishvili's estate?

A. I think I made it clear yesterday that I'm assisting Mr Berezovsky in the management of his litigation.

Q. Did you at any time inform Mr Patarkatsishvili's estate that you were acting for Mr Berezovsky in his claims against the estate?

A. What do you mean by "claims against the estate" and "acting for Mr Berezovsky in his claims against the estate"?

Q. You've confirmed that you are assisting Mr Berezovsky in his claims against the estate?

A. That's correct, in a management --

Q. Have you at any time informed --

A. -- in a management role.

Q. Have you at any time informed Mr Patarkatsishvili's estate that that is what you are doing?

A. I haven't, no.

- Q. To your knowledge, did Mr Berezovsky or anyone else acting for him inform Mr Patarkatsishvili's estate of what you are doing?
- A. Not to my knowledge.
- Q. Have you taken any steps to ensure that knowledge which you have obtained from Mr Patarkatsishvili whilst acting for him is not passed on to those acting against his estate?
- A. I think this goes back to correspondence. There's been correspondence in relation to this which goes back to 2010 with the interim administrators. Do you recall?
- MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, don't ask the questions, please, just answer the question.
- A. I think that it's been dealt with to a certain extent in the correspondence that I engaged in with the interim administrators.
- MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Why is this relevant to the overlap issues, Mr Adkin?
- MR ADKIN: My Lady, that's the last question I have on that topic.
- Mr Lindley, you said yesterday that one of the functions you perform for Mr Berezovsky is financial management in relation to the litigation.
- A. Correct.
- Q. Were you involved in negotiating, producing or recording any agreement between Mr Cherney and Mr Berezovsky?

A. I've got no knowledge of any dealings between Mr Berezovsky and Mr Cherney, so the answer to that is no.

Q. Could you go, please, to bundle R(D), tab 24 R(D)2/24/30. This is your note or the typed-up version of your handwritten note of a meeting with Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Berezovsky on 13 July 2007.

Could you go, please, to page 41.001 of this tab R(D)2/24/41.001. Do you have that?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just for the record, this is bundle R(D)2, tab 24.

MR ADKIN: I'm so sorry, my Lady. Bundle R -- on Magnum, I'm so sorry, there seems to be a disconnect between the hard copies and the Magnum.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, otherwise it doesn't get hyperlinked. That's why I'm bothering to do it.

MR ADKIN: My Lady, yes.

Do you have that page, Mr Lindley?

A. No.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, can you look at it on the screen, please.

A. Okay, I've got it.

MR ADKIN: This is still in the same document. Six lines down from the top you will see the word "Contract". Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. Then:

"Sibneft contracts governed by English law."

A. Yes, I see that.

Q. And so is it a fair assumption from that note that you were discussing the law governing the Sibneft contracts?

A. I think I explained yesterday but if I didn't make myself clear, I'll explain myself now.

Q. Could you just answer that question, Mr Lindley, please.

A. I think I just need to explain this to be able to answer the question. I wasn't involved in any of the discussions and I think by the time this note was taken on the 13th, I was a passive observer. So I don't think it's right to say that I was in a position to be taking part in discussions and negotiations. I just want to make that clear.

Q. I understand that, Mr Lindley, and you made that clear yesterday but I'm grateful for your having repeated it. What I want to understand is what you understand your note to mean.

Do you understand your note which says, "Sibneft contracts governed by English law", to mean that you were discussing at that time the governing law of the Sibneft contract? (Pause)

A. I think the comments obviously that were in the notes is a reflection of something that was said during the course of the meeting. Beyond that, I can't really comment.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Do you have any independent recollection apart from what's in the note?

A. No, my Lady.

MR ADKIN: You may not be able to recollect this but I'll ask you to see if you can help. The next line down:

"Rusal -- important -- BB -- place where the deal was done."

Are you able to help us with what that means and are you able to help us with what discussions it reflects?

A. Again, I'm in the same position as I was a minute ago in relation to "Sibneft contracts". I can see what's written there; beyond that, I don't have any independent recollection.

Q. Thank you.

I want to ask you briefly about Mr Patarkatsishvili's grasp of English. You said in your witness statement -- and for the transcript this is D1/07/94 at paragraph 12 -- that "Mr Patarkatsishvili had a reasonable grasp of English", but during your meetings in June 2007 he occasionally needed the assistance of others to interpret what he said.

Now, as I understand that, you are talking there only about what was spoken, so Mr Patarkatsishvili's understanding of spoken English. You're not talking about his ability to read English?

A. I think that's a fair comment.

Q. So far as you are aware, the position with Mr Patarkatsishvili's written English was different, wasn't it? Or do you just not know?

A. I don't know.

Q. Thank you.

Could you please go to bundle H(A)95 at page 56 H(A)95/56. Do you recognise this document?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. And you can take it from me that this is the last in time of a number of draft deeds and we understand, having been told this by Mr Berezovsky's solicitors, that you produced these draft deeds. That's correct, isn't it?

A. That's correct.

Q. Would you please go to page 59 H(A)95/59, and that records the first -- on that page at the bottom, you'll see "The First Schedule". Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. And over the page is a second schedule. Yes? I'm sorry, Mr Lindley --

A. Yes I -- yes, I see it.

Q. -- unfortunately the nod doesn't make its way on to the transcript.

And you can take it from me as well that the schedules are set out in three of the draft deeds and are the same save that one asset moves from the second schedule to the first schedule because it appears to have been sold.

Now, as we understand the draft deeds, these schedules are intended to set out joint investments held by Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Berezovsky. Is that your understanding?

A. These were provisional schedules and they were by no means a comprehensive list of assets which form part of the joint venture.

Q. Were you ever instructed by Mr Berezovsky, Mr Patarkatsishvili, Dr Nosova or any other person to place into these schedules any of the assets I'm about to name: Metalloinvest or MGOK?

A. Can you repeat the question, please.

Q. Were you ever instructed by Mr Berezovsky, Mr Patarkatsishvili, Dr Nosova or any other person to place into these schedules any of the assets that I'm about to name, and I'm going to list three assets and you can take it from me that none of them appears in the schedule.

    Metalloinvest or MGOK? If you simply can't remember, Mr Lindley, just --

A. Sorry, I'm just reading your question so I can answer it properly.

Q. Of course. (Pause)

A. Okay, what's your question?

Q. Well, you've just read it, I assume.

A. I've read that. I thought you said something else afterwards.

Q. Metalloinvest?

A. I didn't know about that asset at the time.

Q. Kulevi Port?

A. I wasn't aware of that asset at the time.

Q. The Mosselprom factory?

A. I wasn't aware of that asset at the time.

MR ADKIN: Mr Lindley, thank you.

    My Lady, I have no further questions for this witness.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you.

MR MUMFORD: My Lady, I have no questions either.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you, Mr Mumford.

    Yes, Mr Gillis.

MR GILLIS: My Lady, just a few short questions.

    Re-examination by MR GILLIS

MR GILLIS: Mr Lindley, you were asked about the circumstances giving rise to the conclusion of your commission agreement and we have that agreement at H(A)98/43.004. You've explained that Mr Berezovsky wished to ensure that the litigation could continue in the event of his death.

Could I ask you to look at recital D of the agreement.

A. Mm-hm, yes.

Q. Does that reflect your understanding of that aspect of the agreement?

A. Yes, Mr Berezovsky was very concerned that the litigation should continue in the event of his death and at the time that this agreement was prepared Mr Berezovsky was very worried that there were threats to his life. So it was something that was, you know, an important part of this agreement.

Q. You were asked about your attendance at the Badri proofing sessions on 11 and 13 June. Could I just ask you to elaborate on how much you understood about the Abramovich action at the time you attended those meetings?

A. Absolutely -- well, virtually nothing.

Q. For example, do you think you had read the claim form at that stage?

A. I think that I might have read the letter before action and I may have seen the claim form if it had been issued. But in terms of knowledge of that case, I couldn't profess to have any real knowledge of that case whatsoever. It's just something that I wasn't involved in.

Q. Do you think you had done any other pre-reading, as it were, before the meeting?

A. No, because I attended the meeting expecting to discuss other issues and I wasn't even aware that the Roman Abramovich case was going to be a major item for discussion during the course of these meetings.

Q. Can I take you to bundle R(D), which you may have before you. I'm wanting to look at tabs 19 and 25.

Now, can we start at tab 19 at page 150

R(D)1/19/150. Do you have that?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Again, for the transcript, it's R(D)1, tab 19.

MR GILLIS: My Lady, I'm obliged. I'm sorry, mine is labelled just R(D).

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, it doesn't matter. I'm just reading it so it gets hyperlinked.

MR GILLIS: Do you see the passage that starts in the middle of the hole-punch:

"- verbal agreement 50-50 of all business.

"- when buy Rusal..."

Do you see that section?

A. I do.

Q. You were asked some questions about that and you were then asked to look at tab 25 at page 45.001, R(D)2, tab 25 at page 45.001 R(D)2/25/45.001 --

A. I've got it.

Q. -- and you were asked some questions about the first three paragraphs.

A. Right.

Q. And it was put to you that that was referring to the same 50/50 partnership as was referred to in the earlier note. Do you recall that?

A. I do.

Q. Now, Mr Lindley, I would just like to clarify. Going back to tab 19 in R(D)1 R(D)1/19/141, are those your notes of the 11 June meeting? If I could ask you to look at page 141.

A. Mm-hm. Yes, they are the notes of my meeting of 11 June.

Q. And the note of the meeting that we have at R(D)2 at tab 25 R(D)2/25/45, is that the attendance note of the meeting on 13 June?

A. I think it is because there's a reference to the discussion of a potential criminal case being brought against Roman Abramovich in relation to Nikolai Glushkov being placed in prison and I can see the reference in this note to that discussion:

"The discussion... turned to the potential criminal case."

And I think if you look at my notes, my handwritten notes of the 13th, a substantial part of the discussion is taken up in connection with Nikolai Glushkov and a criminal case. So I think that this note probably relates to something that was discussed on the 13th.

Q. Can I ask you to turn back to R(D)1, tab 20

R(D)1/20/151.

A. Yes.

Q. Is that your attendance note in relation to the 11 June meeting?

A. That's correct.

Q. One final question. This morning you were asked some questions by Mr Adkin about the economic divorce deeds and you were asked if Mr Berezovsky or Mr Patarkatsishvili had ever asked you to paste into the economic divorce deeds references to Metalloinvest, Kulevi Port or Mosselprom.

So far as you are aware, did Mr Berezovsky or Mr Patarkatsishvili ever see the economic divorce deeds?

A. The schedules were prepared by myself in conjunction with LMC. I don't think that -- well, I'm sure that Mr Berezovsky never even -- never saw these deeds. I think that the deed of 4 September was shown to Mr Patarkatsishvili but he rejected that document in quite forceful terms.

But in relation to the preparation of those schedules, neither Mr Berezovsky nor Mr Patarkatsishvili had any involvement in that and those schedules were provisional and they were produced in conjunction with discussions with LMC. I mean, ultimately that document was rejected by Mr Patarkatsishvili.

MR GILLIS: Thank you.

My Lady, I have no further questions.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right.

Very well, you may be released.

THE WITNESS: Thank you.

(The witness withdrew)

Discussion re housekeeping

MR GILLIS: My Lady, we next have Mr Nevzlin --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: On the video?

MR GILLIS: -- on the video at 2 o'clock.

If the Chancery defendants are content, there is one matter of housekeeping that we could get out of the way and that is in relation to the definition of the overlap issues.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Are there any other witnesses today apart from Mr Nevzlin?

MR GILLIS: My Lady, no.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So on Monday we've got...?

MR GILLIS: On Monday we've got Mr Lankshear, Ms Duncan and then Mr McKim.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. And what about --

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, can I tell my learned friend and your Ladyship that we will not require Mr Lankshear to attend.

MR GILLIS: I'm obliged.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: And that will conclude the witnesses for Mr Berezovsky, will it?

MR GILLIS: Subject to interposing at a later stage Mr Pompadur.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right.

MR GILLIS: Yes, that would then be the close of Mr Berezovsky's evidence.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, apart from Mr Pompadur.

So the housekeeping issues are?

MR GILLIS: Yes. This, I think, is agreed. Your Ladyship may recall that at the beginning of the trial Mr Berezovsky sought permission to amend paragraphs C64 and C59B of his particulars of claim in the Commercial Court action.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR GILLIS: The purpose of that amendment was to plead a resulting trust or a constructive trust as --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: That was ultimately agreed, was it?

MR GILLIS: That was ultimately agreed as between Mr Berezovsky and Mr Abramovich in the Commercial Court proceedings.

My Lady, that then just left the question of whether those additional claims, which are obviously Rusal-related claims, should also be determined as against the Chancery defendants as overlap issues. My Lady, the position is that that has now also been agreed, subject to your Ladyship's consent.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR GILLIS: So it's been agreed that your Ladyship should determine those resulting trust/constructive trust issues as against the Chancery defendants as well as overlap issues.

That's subject to one proviso, which I'll show you in a draft order that I'll be handing up, but it's a proviso which I don't think will affect your Ladyship's determination of those issues. The proviso is this: that the Chancery defendants wish to reserve their right to argue in the Chancery actions that no such claims have been pleaded against them and that if permission to amend were to be sought, it should be refused on grounds including that those claims would be time-barred against them.

So, my Lady, in essence, in order to avoid disrupting this trial while those applications are made to the Chancery Division and determined --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So I'm sort of deciding them

de bene esse in relation to the Chancery defendants, without deciding the limitation issue.

MR GILLIS: My Lady, exactly so.

So, my Lady, might I hand up a copy of the draft order which has been agreed between Mr Berezovsky and the Chancery defendants. (Handed)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you. So whether they arise out of the same cause of action is basically an issue that's being parked?

MR GILLIS: Exactly.

My Lady, if I could just start by taking you to the annex because --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR GILLIS: -- as your Ladyship will recall, we have the overlap issues defined in your Ladyship's order of 16 August 2010, which we have at bundle I2, at tab 6 I2/06/24.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR GILLIS: We have some amendments to that.

Fundamentally, the main amendment is subparagraph 4, which is to bring in as the alternative to 3(c), which is the express English law trust claim:

"Did the claimant acquire an interest in Rusal under an English law resulting trust or constructive trust, other than as a result of the joint venture agreement alleged by the claimant in the main Chancery action?"

So, my Lady, essentially that mirrors the claim that we see in paragraphs C64(2) and (3) in the Commercial Court proceedings. So that is the issue that your Ladyship is being invited to determine as against the Chancery defendants as well.

Then we have the formulation of the proviso in paragraph 2 of the order. So paragraph 1 is indicating that the overlap issues to be tried and determined, as set out in paragraph 1 of the 16 August order, be amended in the way I've shown you.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR GILLIS: Then your Ladyship is to decide that issue without prejudice to the Chancery defendants' right to contend in the Chancery action that those claims have not been pleaded against them and that if an application to amend were to be made, it should be refused inter alia on grounds of time bar.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I see. So this is effectively saying that Mr Berezovsky can't rely on this order as the grounds for an argument that there has been an agreement to an amendment in the Chancery action?

MR GILLIS: Exactly so.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Adkin, is that agreed?

MR ADKIN: My Lady, it is, and your Ladyship has it exactly right.

MR GILLIS: My Lady, I understand the Salford defendants, Mr Mumford is content with that order and it has also been approved by Ms Tolaney on behalf of the Anisimov defendants.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. That's the position, is it Mr Mumford?

MR MUMFORD: My Lady, that's absolutely right.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: And Mr Malek, that's the position?

MR MALEK: That's correct.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well. I make an order in those terms.

What's the position in relation to the Customs officials, the border officials?

MR GILLIS: My Lady, we are in the process of writing to Skaddens to indicate that we will not be pursuing that application and maybe I could update your Ladyship on that. It may be that I should do that after Skaddens have actually received the letter.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Okay. It's just I have got the application, as it were, on my table to deal with and if I'm not going to be asked to deal with it, that's fine.

MR GILLIS: We're not going to be pursuing it, but I would like to show your Ladyship the correspondence which has been received.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Presumably there will still be an argument, will there, as to the weight of the evidence?

MR GILLIS: Absolutely so.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Or there may still be an argument.

MR GILLIS: As your Ladyship will recall, we weren't trying to suggest that the consequence of the Polanski decision was that if you made the order and there was a non-attendance, the evidence would be shut out, because --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So I'm going to have to hear argument, am I, about what the consequences are?

MR GILLIS: No, because I'm not going to be pursuing the application.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I see.

MR GILLIS: We accept that even if your Ladyship made the order and there was noncompliance with it --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: They could still use the evidence?

MR GILLIS: -- the evidence would still be admissible; it's just another factor that goes to weight.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right.

MR GILLIS: But your Ladyship is going to have to determine what weight to attach to the hearsay evidence in any event and we can make our submissions in relation to that in consequence of the responses that we have received, which is basically -- and I can take your Ladyship to it later. Mr Sumption was not happy, I think is how he put it, with how I had summarised it previously.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Okay. Well, I'll wait until you get the response from Skaddens. There's no point doing it until then.

MR GILLIS: Essentially we're being told that no further information can be provided above and beyond the information provided in the last letter, which I'll show your Ladyship in due course.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well. Mr Sumption, you're content with that course?

MR SUMPTION: Yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Are there any other housekeeping matters I should deal with?

MR GILLIS: Not at the moment.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Where is the list of issues?
Am I getting that?

MR SUMPTION: I understand that this was supplied to your Ladyship's clerk a week ago.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I have the dramatis personae. It may be --

MR SUMPTION: It was supplied by Addleshaws two weeks ago.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, then he's just overlooked it. I'll chase it up with him.

MR SUMPTION: The fault may well be ours, but that's what I'm told.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, no, no, I'm sure it's on this side. I will track it down.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, on this apparatus, all one does is plug it in to the thing that looks like a mobile phone but I hasten to say is not --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Shall we just -- since we've got five minutes.

MR SUMPTION: -- and switch to channel 1.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So we're all happy to use it.

MR SUMPTION: Well, I don't know about that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Before I put them on, we switch to channel 1?

MR SUMPTION: We switch to channel 1, having simply plugged the socket into the hole at the top. Then there's an on/off button halfway up the front of it. On the side your Ladyship will see there's a channel thing which will enable you to get from zero to channel 1 and that's the English-language version.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. And if we want it in some other language, you go to another channel?

MR SUMPTION: If your Ladyship wants to listen to it in Russian, I think it's channel 2.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well. Have members of the press been provided with them or will they be available this afternoon?

MR SUMPTION: I presume that they will be available somewhere --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, I will just check they are.

Can I say to members of the press or indeed members of the public, none of these headsets are to leave the building or to leave this room because they're very valuable. So can you make sure -- because I don't want you all to be searched as you leave the building -- that you do leave them on your seats.

Very well.

MR GILLIS: My Lady, could I just raise I think two other points.

Firstly, Mr Sumption has indicated that Mr Abramovich does not require Mr Lankshear to attend for cross-examination. Is that the same for the other Chancery defendants as well, that they do not require him to attend?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. What's the position?

MR MALEK: Yes, that's correct.

MR MUMFORD: So far as we're concerned, yes.

MR ADKIN: My Lady, I think the answer is likely to be yes but I had better take instructions and I will let Mr Gillis know as soon as I've done that, which will be later today.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, very well.

MR GILLIS: My Lady, the second thing is just to note this: my learned friend Mr Sumption indicated that there was a further witness statement from Mr Abramovich which he indicates he hopes to be able to serve today. My Lady, depending upon the length of that and the issues that it deals with, it may impact the timing of the start of cross-examination on Monday.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, it's a short witness statement which deals with a small number of issues that have arisen in the course of the evidence that has been called to date.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well. Well, if there is going to be an argument about that, I'll hear that tomorrow afternoon, when you've seen the statements.

MR GILLIS: On Monday?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Oh, you're quite right. I lost track of time. Have you seen it yet?

MR GILLIS: No. My Lady, that's the difficulty.

MR SUMPTION: We expect to serve it in the course of today.

MR GILLIS: My Lady, it may not be an issue but I thought I would just raise it.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. Since I presume you're working over the weekend anyway, Mr Gillis, it will have to be quite a long statement for you not to be able to take it on board, for your team not to be able to take that on board.

MR GILLIS: I will pass that on to Mr Rabinowitz. I'm sure he will thank you for your Ladyship's observation.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well. There's no point in sitting earlier? If you wish me to sit earlier for the video, I can do so, but --

MR GILLIS: No, I think because of the time difference, 2 o'clock is the earliest we can start.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well. Then I'll adjourn until 2 o'clock.

(12.05 pm)

(The short adjournment)

(2.00 pm)

MR GILLIS: My Lady, as I think you know, English is on channel 1. It has been pointed out if people could keep receivers away from microphones that would help, because otherwise there tends to be a problem with feedback.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, okay.

Right, shall we swear the interpreter first, please.

MADAM INTERPRETER (sworn)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, Mr Gillis.

MR GILLIS: Thank you. Could the translator in New York be sworn as well.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. Could the translator in New York be sworn as well, please.

MADAM INTERPRETER (sworn)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you very much, madam interpreter.

Right, may the witness be sworn now.

MR LEONID NEVZLIN (sworn)

(All answers interpreted unless otherwise indicated)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you very much. Please sit down.

THE WITNESS: (Not interpreted) Thank you.

THE INTERPRETER: Just explaining to the witness that he will hear Russian, he won't hear English.

MR GILLIS: Good morning, Mr Nevzlin. My name is Richard Gillis and I represent Mr Berezovsky. Can you hear me?

A. (Not interpreted) Good morning.

(Interpreted) Yes, I hear you.

Q. Before we begin, could you just confirm that you have no mobile telephone or no electronic device or, if you do, that they have been switched off?

A. I do not have any electronic device.

Q. Thank you.

Could Mr Nevzlin be provided with bundle D1 open at tab 4 D1/04/58.

A. Yes.

Q. That should be the first page of your witness statement and could I ask you to turn to page 72 in the bundle D1/04/72. We have the numbers in the bottom right-hand corner.

A. Okay, I have it.

Q. Is that your signature?

A. It is my signature.

Q. And can you please confirm that this is your first and only witness statement in these proceedings?

A. It is my first and only witness statement in the course of these proceedings.

Q. And can you confirm that the contents of this, your witness statement, are true to the best of your knowledge and belief?

A. This witness statement is the truth, to the best of my knowledge, information and belief.

MR GILLIS: Thank you. Could you just wait there.

Ms Davies has some questions for you on behalf of Mr Abramovich.

Cross-examination by MS DAVIES

MS DAVIES: Mr Nevzlin, you first met Mr Berezovsky in the late 1980s or early 1990s; is that correct?

A. Beginning of the '90s would be most correct.

Q. And you subsequently became friends; is that right?

A. Yes, you could call our relationship a friendship.

Q. And you remain friends today; is that right?

A. Yes, you could indeed say that.

Q. And over the years since the early 1990s, you have been in regular contact with Mr Berezovsky; is that correct?

A. Yes, that is.

Q. And you remain in regular contact with Mr Berezovsky today, 2011?

A. We meet fairly often, as far as we can, Mr Berezovsky and I.

Q. Have you seen Mr Berezovsky in Israel recently?

A. Yes.

Q. When was that exactly?

A. It was literally a few days ago, a week ago I'd say.

Q. And during that meeting did you discuss any matters relevant to this case?

A. Yes, we did.

Q. What did you discuss that was relevant to this case?

A. Only the overall information for Mr Berezovsky that I was going to be a witness and that on all the questions that I was asked, I would speak the truth and nothing but the truth.

Q. When did you first meet Mr Patarkatsishvili?

A. I think that too was at the beginning of the '90s, later than I met Mr Berezovsky but not significantly later.

Q. And did you also become friendly with him?

A. We had a good relationship but I wouldn't call it as close as a friendship.

Q. Did you keep in regular contact with him until his death in 2008?

A. Yes, I was in regular contact with him, as much as the way we both moved around a lot permitted, but more I was in contact with Mr Berezovsky.

Q. Mr Nevzlin, I presume, but please correct me if I'm wrong, that you have a broad understanding of the nature of the claims that Mr Berezovsky makes against Mr Abramovich in these proceedings?

A. I think I do understand what is it about.

Q. And over the years you must have spoken to Mr Berezovsky or Mr Patarkatsishvili about the events that give rise to those claims on a number of occasions; is that right?

A. We certainly very often discussed the events which led to the situation that we all find ourselves in.

I couldn't say that we discussed it in terms of the actual court case that the claimant has brought, but certainly we discussed it in general terms, without doubt.

Q. Now, when you saw Mr Berezovsky last week in Israel, did you discuss the evidence that he had given to the English court? Did he tell you anything about that evidence?

A. I don't remember us discussing that.

Q. Does Mr Berezovsky or any entity associated with him owe you any money?

A. No. Neither Berezovsky, neither he himself nor anyone connected to him owes me any money.

Q. You have not loaned Mr Berezovsky or an entity associated with him $5 million then?

A. No, I haven't loaned anything to Mr Berezovsky or to anyone connected with him.

Q. Mr Nevzlin, is it fair to say that you are a critic of the current political administration of Russia?

A. It would be fair to say that I am not a supporter or an admirer of that regime.

Q. And in particular you're not an admirer of Prime Minister Putin?

A. Not a supporter of Mr Putin, prime minister.

Q. But you are a supporter of Mr Berezovsky's opposition to that administration; is that right?

A. I don't really understand your question.

- Q. You agree with Mr Berezovsky's opposition to the political administration in Russia; is that right?
- A. I know that Boris Berezovsky is also in opposition to that government and I consider that there are issues on which we would agree but issues on which we would not agree. We -- Mr Berezovsky and I can be both in opposition but have different views on various things.
- Q. Is it also fair to say, Mr Nevzlin, that you do not like Mr Abramovich?
- A. Yes, I think rather -- I find him rather anti -- not very sympathetic, rather antipathetic. I have reasons for that which are in my witness statement.
- Q. Now, you tell us in your witness statement that you did not meet Mr Abramovich until 1996. Would I be right in understanding that prior to your meeting in 1996 you had not previously heard of Mr Abramovich?
- A. No. Many years have now passed, at least 15, because it was the end of 1995/the beginning of 1996. That was then and certainly I had not heard of Mr Abramovich before I actually met him; that I can say without any doubt.
- Q. And is it right also that you had not had any dealings with any of the companies that he owned before you met him?
- A. As far as I know, none.

- Q. And again putting ourselves back in the position you were in in 1996, is it right that you did not know at that time what Mr Abramovich's commercial background was?
- A. I found out various things after I met him from people who knew him, but not from him personally.
- Q. What did you know in 1995/6 about the financial situation of the trading companies that Mr Abramovich owned?
- A. No, I can put it like this: the fact that then I knew nothing about his business affairs means that he was not a very significant figure in the Russian Federation.
- Q. You see, you say in your statement, for example at paragraph 16, which is on page D1/04/62 for the transcript, that in 1995 Mr Abramovich had no money. Do you see that?
- A. I said that very specifically about the situation with Sibneft.
- Q. You did not know in 1995 or 1996 how much money Mr Abramovich actually had, did you?
- A. At that time I knew the main information about the various elements in Russia who would be capable of participating in the privatisation and Mr Abramovich did not have that kind of fortune. Even if he had enough money to live on, to run his business, he didn't have the kind of fortune on the scale that would be necessary to participate in the privatisation. That's what I knew about him.

Q. Now, you were not personally involved in the events that led to the creation of Sibneft; is that right?

A. I was not part of the Sibneft project.

Q. You tell us in paragraph 21 of your statement, at bundle D1/04/64, that you had "a high-level role" in relation to Bank Menatep's support for the bid made by SBS and NFK in the Sibneft loans for shares auction. What do you mean by --

A. What I meant was that, as a shareholder in the bank and then later in Yukos at the high level, in fact I was number two after Khodorkovsky, that I was working on the overarching aspects but I wasn't dealing with the specifically business and documentary aspects.

Q. What involvement did you actually have in the provision by Bank Menatep of a guarantee to support the bid?

A. As a shareholder in the bank, a large-scale shareholder in the bank, I would, as a minimum, have been aware of the situation and not objected to it.

Q. Now, Bank Menatep provided a guarantee in relation to the loan that was provided by SBS in support of the bid; were you aware of that?

A. I think that is the case. I did know.

- Q. Bank Menatep did not itself provide any funding to support the bid; its role was solely that of guarantor. That's correct, isn't it?
- A. I don't quite understand the question. Be it a guarantee or be it provision of funds, both are money for a bank. So for a bank, SBS-Agro or Menatep, these banks, if they provide a guarantee, that means they're taking on part of the risk in this transaction.
- Q. Well, the loan that SBS Bank provided to support the bid was in the amount of US$97 million. Would you have been aware of that?
- A. I remember it was around US$100 million.
- Q. That amount, we know from other evidence in this case, was fully secured by funds that had been deposited in a bank account with SBS Bank on behalf of Mr Abramovich. Were you aware of that?
- A. Firstly, I didn't know anything about that; and secondly, I don't think that there could have been a deposit on behalf of Mr Abramovich.
- Q. Why don't you think there could have been a deposit on behalf of Mr Abramovich?
- A. Because I'm absolutely sure that Mr Abramovich at that time did not have $100 million in his assets.
- Q. The truth is, Mr Nevzlin, that you don't know the details of the deposits that were made with the SBS Bank, do you, and where they came from?

- A. It would be strange if I did know the details of all deposits going into SBS Bank, on the one hand. On the other hand, as a participant in some of the meetings, I can say that Mr Smolensky, the head of the SBS Bank, had two requirements: the first was a Menatep Bank guarantee and the other was the personal guarantee because the money was being advanced to Mr Berezovsky and not to Mr Abramovich.
- Q. The money was in fact being advanced to the Russian State, wasn't it, Mr Nevzlin, as part of the loans for shares auction?
- A. So now you're asking about Abramovich's money in the SBS Bank deposit or about something different?
- Q. I'm asking about the SBS loan. That was in fact advanced to the Russian State?
- A. If you are asking me about the conditions for the loans for shares auctions at that time, the point of those loans for shares auctions was to provide loans to the Russian government's budget.
- Q. And Bank Menatep provided a guarantee in relation to the SBS loan but, given that the SBS Bank was fully secured by deposits, Bank Menatep had no financial exposure as a result of the guarantee, did it, Mr Nevzlin?
- A. No, it is not the case. The point of giving a guarantee is that you take on the risk if that guarantee is called upon. Naturally, I don't know anything about the deposits you were talking about, but if SBS didn't require a Menatep Bank guarantee it would not have asked for one; and Menatep Bank, by providing the guarantee, took on the exact same degree of risk as the amount that their guarantee provided.

- Q. Well, the guarantee was necessary as a result of the rules of the Central Bank, which limited a bank's commitments to a proportion of its capital. Presumably you're aware of those rules?
- A. You know, I worked in the bank for long enough and certainly sometimes situations arose to do with liquidity and capital when banks were limited in the amount of their own capital they could provide. I don't know if this is about that; I think not.

And in general I would like to say that over these 15 years the banking rules and regulations in Russia have changed so much that now the rules and the law in place for that particular case, I cannot say that I remember or that anybody else does.

- Q. You were not involved, were you, in the negotiations that took place between Mr Abramovich and Mr Kagalovsky in relation to Bank Menatep's involvement in the bid?
- A. I did not participate in the negotiations between Mr Kagalovsky and Mr Abramovich, obviously.

- Q. Now, you refer in the last sentence of paragraph 21 of your statement D1/04/64 to the fact that the detail of the arrangements was a matter for "others, in conjunction with Mr Abramovich's managers". Do you see that at the end of paragraph 21?
- A. Yes, I do.
- Q. And you identify various people there including Mr Davidovich, Ms Oiff and Ms Panchenko. Were you intending to suggest -- sorry.
- A. Given the names of those people who worked very closely with Abramovich and who I remember in various situations as being close to Abramovich, I can say for sure that I was just listing the people who normally drew up documents for Abramovich. But certainly the key person here was Evgeny Shvidler.
- Q. Were you intending to suggest that Mr Davidovich, Ms Oiff or Ms Panchenko were individuals working on the loans for shares auction on Mr Abramovich's behalf?
- A. No, I would not say that exactly. I listed the people who normally were the ones who drew up documents at Mr Abramovich's request.
- Q. Are you suggesting that those people normally drew up documents on Mr Abramovich's request back in 1995 or 1996?

- A. I cannot say that about them all for sure; I just listed the people who often appeared on behalf of Mr Abramovich when this or that document was being drafted. If any of these people was not participating in the negotiations in 1995/1996 preparing for the auction, I may be mistaken by giving somebody's name along with the others in that long list; and if I am mistaken then I apologise. But I've given the names of the people who I remember as being there always when there was a negotiation, a transaction that Mr Abramovich was engaged in.
- Q. Would you agree, Mr Nevzlin, that you do not know who was involved in the loan for shares auction on Mr Abramovich's behalf?
- A. You know, if you are asking me can I give you 100 per cent answer about who, 15 or 16 years ago, was there on behalf of Menatep or Khodorkovsky, my bank, I would find that quite difficult to do.
- Q. I understand, Mr Nevzlin. It wasn't a criticism. I was just trying to establish what you knew. The answer, I think, is: no, you don't know?
- A. Yes. I can assume, knowing the people who always worked with him, but I cannot give you an exact, truthful guarantee that I know.
- Q. Now, save for your involvement with Bank Menatep, you did not have any other personal involvement in the Sibneft loans for shares auction, did you?

A. My participation, as I said, I didn't participate in the Sibneft loans for shares auction; I only know about it as a shareholder in the Menatep Group, the Yukos bank, and Yukos later, only because I was one of the large shareholders and was well informed.

Q. You also did not have any involvement in any of the auctions by which the shares in Sibneft were sold to private investors, did you?

A. Of course not.

Q. Nor did you subsequently have any direct involvement in the business or management of Sibneft, did you?

A. I hope that that is the case. I certainly did not take any part in managing Sibneft, nor could I.

Q. So your information about the management of Sibneft must be derived from what other people have told you; that must be right, must it not?

A. Certainly, as in all such cases, information always comes from people. There is no other way to get information.

Q. And your principal sources in that respect no doubt included Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili?

A. Yes, and Mr Abramovich and Mr Shvidler, if we're talking about Sibneft.

- Q. If you turn to paragraph 18 of your statement at page D1/04/63, you say there that Mr Patarkatsishvili explained to you that the arrangement was that Mr Abramovich's people would become the managers of the company in return for getting a share of the company. Do you see that?
- A. Yes. I do, yes.
- Q. When are you suggesting that Mr Patarkatsishvili told you that?
- A. That was immediately after the Sibneft loans for shares auction. I, like many others, was interested in the shareholder structure of Sibneft and I received the information, which I have both from Patarkatsishvili and from Berezovsky and from Abramovich and later Shvidler. And as it says rightly here, Mr Abramovich and his team would be managing the company but the partners would be Berezovsky and Patarkatsishvili and Abramovich.
- Q. Taking it in stages, Mr Nevzlin, at that time, immediately after the loans for shares auction, no one owned any Sibneft shares, did they? All they'd obtained was a right to manage Sibneft.
- A. You know, when people acquire or invest in any business and agree on the partnership relationship within the business, they're, as it were, on the shore. And as we know from the process itself, all the companies which participated in these loans for share auctions, all, further down the line, became the owners of these privatised countries (sic). And the question of ownership structure was discussed and decided by them before they entered the auction, before they made their investment.

- Q. You see, you also refer in paragraph 18 to Mr Patarkatsishvili having said that Mr Abramovich's people who would be managing Sibneft included Mr Davidovich. Do you see that?
- A. I get the feeling that Davidovich actually joined Sibneft somewhat later and that that's what you're asking me about and I bring his name in at an earlier stage. If that's what you're asking about, I have to admit that I don't know the exact date on which any specific manager appeared in Mr Abramovich's team, but I do know that this person played an active part in the management of Sibneft.
- Q. You're right, Mr Nevzlin: Mr Davidovich did not join Sibneft until 1997. So if Mr Patarkatsishvili mentioned Mr Davidovich, this conversation must have been after 1997?
- A. It all is possible, you know, but that doesn't affect the sense of this conversation, especially as Patarkatsishvili was not the only source of information about the shareholder structure of the Sibneft company. So if I made a mistake in naming Davidovich before he actually joined the company, then I apologise, but I can assure you that in subsequent years he was either the right hand or the left hand of Mr Abramovich or Mr Shvidler.

Q. Mr Nevzlin, I understand the difficulty because it must now be impossible, must it not, for you to distinguish any one conversation you have had with Mr Patarkatsishvili over the years about Sibneft from any other?

A. That is not the case. I basically remember all conversations on important subjects from my past and I could say that conversation with Badri Patarkatsishvili was not the most important conversations I had on this subject but in my memory I have several other discussions about the ownership structure of Sibneft.

Q. In paragraph 18 you also say that Mr Patarkatsishvili also told you that he and Mr Berezovsky "would always have the final say in any major decisions affecting the company", that is Sibneft.

A. Yes, that is the case; and more than that, Mr Abramovich and Shvidler confirmed that to me later.

Q. Well, taking it in stages, Mr Nevzlin, firstly,

Mr Patarkatsishvili didn't say that, did he?

- A. Let me read my statement again. What I've written here is the truth: that is what he said to me.
- Q. Well, you see, in his oral evidence to this court Mr Berezovsky repeatedly said that Mr Abramovich was responsible for managing Sibneft and was responsible for everything so far as Sibneft was concerned; and if that evidence is correct, Mr Patarkatsishvili cannot have told you what you say here about decision-making at Sibneft.
- A. I insist that the management of the company was carried out by Abramovich and his team but the partnership relationship was that they were equal partners and the final say was Berezovsky's and Patarkatsishvili's. But I'm not talking about the day-to-day running of the company; I'm talking about the taking of major decisions by shareholders.
- Q. You said a moment ago that both Mr Abramovich and Mr Shvidler told you the same thing. But neither of them actually did, did they, Mr Nevzlin?
- A. No, that is not the case. Mr Abramovich and Mr Shvidler, at the first attempt to combine Yukos and Sibneft, told me several times that the final say would be Boris Berezovsky's and we found ourselves in a situation when Berezovsky did actually have to use that right to have the final say on Sibneft.

Q. What situation are you referring to?

A. I mean the situation in 1998 when we'd almost completed the merger and almost set up a new company called Yuksi, which was announced by Mr Chernomyrdin, the prime minister of Russia, as a done deal, and at the last meeting Mr Abramovich said they are not going to participate, they're going to leave.

Q. Exactly. That was Mr Abramovich's decision, wasn't it?

A. No, because Abramovich said this was the decision agreed with Mr Berezovsky but if we wanted to change that decision and complete the merger then we would have to talk to Berezovsky.

Q. Could you look at paragraph 32 of your witness statement, halfway through it, at the top of page D1/04/67, at the end of paragraph 32, where you're dealing with the first Yuksi deal and where you say that:

"During that time, I also recall that Mr Berezovsky said in conversations with me that Mr Abramovich and Mr Shvidler opposed the deal, and on this basis the deal would not go ahead."

That's correct, isn't it: it was because Mr Abramovich and Mr Shvidler opposed the deal?

A. I say that Abramovich and Shvidler opposed the deal which they had said and that Berezovsky had to take a decision; in other words, he had to side with his shareholders or side with the Yukos shareholders to complete the deal. So what happened is in tune with what it says here in writing.

Q. Well, Mr Nevzlin, Mr Berezovsky in his own evidence does not suggest he was the person who decided to halt the first Yuksi deal. That's not what happened, is it, Mr Nevzlin?

A. He said the same thing to me and to Khodorkovsky. Moreover, after Abramovich and Shvidler said, "No, we won't complete the deal", and they recommended that we talk to Berezovsky, the decision was halted for a certain degree of time until Mr Berezovsky took his final decision; it was a period of something like two or three weeks. And later he said to both me and to Khodorkovsky that he really wanted that deal, but he had discussed it with his junior partners and decided with them because it was more important for him to be in tune and to be living in harmony with his partners.

Q. Mr Nevzlin, if any of that had happened, it would have appeared in your witness statement; the truth is it didn't.

A. I haven't understood. Could you clarify? What didn't happen?

- Q. The conversations you've just told us about with Mr Berezovsky.
- A. Firstly, they certainly did happen and I came to this court to tell the truth and I swore that I would tell the truth. You keep trying to accuse me of lying but neither in my written statement nor in my current testament have I said a single word in lie. I could forget something, I could forget names on a list or I could add somebody who wasn't there, but on all the factual issues I am giving honest factual witness.
- Q. After Sibneft's creation did you personally monitor Sibneft's financial performance?
- A. Inasfar as any business person or any investor monitors the activities of the biggest companies in their country, I was aware of what was happening in Sibneft, mostly from the media.
- Q. You knew then, did you, that Sibneft did not declare any dividends until the year 2000?
- A. I don't remember.
- Q. Now, in relation to the first Sibneft-Yukos proposed merger that you've just been telling us about, at that time you were the first deputy general director of Itar-Tass, a State-owned media company; is that right?
- A. Yes, and it still is. It's still the State media company to this day.

- Q. So at that time you did not have any day-to-day involvement in Yukos; is that correct?
- A. I had a pretty active participation in Yukos's affairs as a large-scale shareholder in Yukos but I didn't have anything to do with the operations of the company.
- Q. You were not personally involved in any of the negotiations that led to the first proposed merger between Yukos and Sibneft?
- A. It's not exactly the case. I didn't participate in the negotiations on the specific legal and practical steps to be taken; but on the overall decision to merge and on the meetings about that merger decision between the shareholders, those I did participate in.
- Q. Well, you tell us in paragraph 20 of your witness statement, if you could look at the top of page D1/04/64, that you were not personally involved during the merger negotiations.
- A. Yes, but -- now I'll clarify this. Yes, but of course I was in constant contact with Khodorkovsky and other shareholders and managers and the Yukos company, but I didn't participate at the signing process. I wasn't part of the technical and legal procedures, part of those negotiations, and I could not have participated.
- Q. Now, you also suggest in this paragraph that Mr Khodorkovsky told you:

"... that he had been shown [some] papers by Mr Abramovich which made it clear that Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili had a fifty per cent stake in Sibneft."

Do you see that?

A. Yes, I did say that.

Q. Do you recall --

A. Because Khodorkovsky, when he met Dubov and me, other Yukos shareholders, told us that he had seen with his own eyes the partnership agreement, the partnership documents signed between Abramovich and Berezovsky -- Patarkatsishvili, Abramovich and Berezovsky. And, as I wrote in my statement -- and I don't think I'm wrong -- they were Runicom papers, I think.

But I have not seen those papers myself, I don't know any of the details; all I know is that there was no point in Mr Khodorkovsky saying that to me and Mr Dubov if that was not the case.

Q. So you recall Mr Khodorkovsky telling you that he had seen a signed partnership agreement between Mr Abramovich and Mr Berezovsky; is that right?

A. No, to be exact, he said that he saw documents which illustrated, which showed that they had a 50 per cent partnership. I didn't ask him anything and he didn't tell me anything about whether these were signed or not signed; I just heard that word, "Runicom", and that is all I know. I don't know or remember anything more.

Q. Do you have a transcript in front of you?

A. Yes.

Q. If so, could someone please stop it and could we scroll back to [draft] lines 14 to 15 on page 70, where you said that:

"... [Mr] Khodorkovsky... told us that he had seen with his own eyes the partnership agreement" --

A. Yes.

Q. -- "the partnership documents signed between [Mr] Abramovich and [Mr] Berezovsky..."

A. In paragraph 20 of my written statement you will find exactly what I saw. This is what I remember as reality.

Q. So you didn't see a partnership -- no, Mr Khodorkovsky didn't say he'd seen a partnership agreement or signed documents relating to the partnership between Mr Abramovich and Mr Berezovsky; is that correct? What you said a moment ago was wrong?

A. Let me say it again so that there should be no difference between the written and the oral and no translation mistakes. I said that Mr Khodorkovsky told Mr Dubov and me that he saw papers that showed that Abramovich, Berezovsky and Patarkatsishvili were 50 per cent partners in Sibneft. That is what I said and I'm looking at the transcript and I see that this time it's been translated correctly.

Q. Did Mr Khodorkovsky tell you what those papers comprised?

A. No, he didn't. As I said earlier, all I remember from the conversation was that he mentioned the Runicom company but he didn't give any details.

Q. You see, Mr Abramovich's evidence is that there were never any Runicom papers showing Mr Berezovsky as a shareholder; and if that's right, Mr Khodorkovsky cannot have told you this, can he?

A. Yes, certainly if Khodorkovsky had not seen anything then this situation would not have arisen. If he told us he'd seen something, then that would be what had happened.

Q. Now, at the time of the merger Mr Khodorkovsky gave some public interviews and I just wanted to look at one of them with you. It's in bundle H(A)10, page 29 H(A)10/29, and 29R is the Russian version. You should have been handed an interview with Mr Khodorkovsky given to the Kommersant newspaper on 20 January 1998. Do you have that? It's at H(A)10/29 in English and H(A)10/29R in the Russian.

A. (Untranslated)

Q. Now, if you look at the Russian version -- and you'll have to bear with me a little bit, Mr Nevzlin, because I don't speak or read Russian, so we might just have to try and find the right paragraph together. Page 30R, the second page of the Russian version. Are you looking at page 30R, the second page of the Russian version?

A. Mm-hm.

Q. The fourth bullet down, do you see a bullet starting with the word "Yes"?

A. Yes.

Q. If you could read that. For those following in English, it's the last bullet on page 29:

"Yes. We have discussed this deal. And with Mr Berezovsky also, though he is not a direct Sibneft shareholder."

A. Yes, I've read it.

Q. So you can see that Mr Khodorkovsky is there publicly confirming that Mr Berezovsky is not a Sibneft shareholder, although he will become a shareholder in the new company. Do you see that?

A. You know, yes, I do see it. Unfortunately, though, I have to disagree with you.

Q. Well, my question --

A. What Khodorkovsky meant was that Mr Berezovsky is not a Sibneft shareholder but he is part of the group as one of the co-owners and for that reason he will be a shareholder in the new company. He is not in the list.

Q. Well, what I suggest --

A. So I can fully confirm that factually Mr Berezovsky was a shareholder in Sibneft.

Q. Well, what I suggest to you, Mr Nevzlin, is that Mr Khodorkovsky did not tell you that he had seen papers showing Mr Berezovsky had a 50 per cent stake in Sibneft.

A. You're wrong. As I said, I came here to tell the truth and the interview which you're showing me, which obviously he gave before he saw those partnership documents, is just confirmation of the fact that Berezovsky was a partner in the group which owned Sibneft. That's what I state.

Q. You just said obviously Mr Khodorkovsky gave this interview before he saw the partnership documents. On what basis do you say that?

A. Firstly, the meaning. And secondly, logically, this interview was from 20 January, the very beginning of 1998, but as I remember it wasn't January, it wasn't -- it was later; not much later, February maybe. But in any case, we can see from this interview that Khodorkovsky had an interest, had a stake in knowing who were the real shareholders in Sibneft and, as

I understand, as you know from my written testimony, he learnt that, he understood that during the course of the merger.

Q. You can't possibly recall now, in 2011, can you,

Mr Nevzlin, whether your discussions with Mr Khodorkovsky about this topic were before or after this press interview?

A. You know, that isn't significant, firstly. Secondly, what Khodorkovsky said in the interview and what he later said to me are fully in tune with reality and the truth because one confirms the other. Perhaps there was a mistranslation from Russian into English and that threw you. But these words saying that Berezovsky is part of the group who own it explains the situation of how things stood with the ownership of Sibneft at that time.

Q. Now, in paragraph 42 of your statement, at page

D1/04/68 --

A. Yes.

Q. -- you refer to a dinner you had with

Mr Patarkatsishvili in Jaffa in Israel.

A. Yes. I can even tell you why I remember that dinner so well, if it's of interest.

Q. Well, can we start by trying to place the dinner in time because you tell us that Mr Glushkov was still in prison but it was a few years later. Does that mean it was a few years after Mr Glushkov had been arrested?

A. I think -- I think, yes, he was still in prison.

Q. And you also tell us that you moved to Israel in August 2003 and this dinner took place in Israel.

A. That's absolutely correct. But this does not have anything to do with 2003; this was much later.

Q. Well, Mr Glushkov was released in March 2004. So did this dinner --

A. So that means this was at the very beginning of 2004.

Q. What exactly is it that you recall Mr Patarkatsishvili told you about Mr Abramovich during this dinner?

A. Just what I put in my witness statement: he said that they were counting on, after the sale of their share in Sibneft to Mr Abramovich, that Glushkov would be released, but they were tricked and that didn't in fact happen.

Q. And was that the first occasion on which Mr Patarkatsishvili told you that about Mr Abramovich?

A. I think, yes. I don't remember. The reason why I remember this meeting is because both Patarkatsishvili and Berezovsky arrived in Tel Aviv at the same time. As I understood it, Patarkatsishvili had a period when he couldn't travel to Israel because of his legal business going on with Russia and this was quite a significant event, that they both had come to Israel and they invited me to dinner to talk.

- Q. Now, in paragraphs 43 to 50 of your statement you provide some evidence relating to the second proposed merger between Yukos and Sibneft in 2003, starting at page D1/04/69.
- A. (Untranslated)
- Q. By this time, 2003, you were a member of the upper house of the Russian Parliament, so you were not directly involved in the management of Yukos; is that right?
- A. Yes. It's not very different from the situation of '97, when I was second in the list of shareholders in terms of size of shareholding. And therefore all the policy and investment decisions were agreed and discussed by the owners, so I was very much a part of what was happening as a shareholder in Yukos.
- Q. But you were not directly involved in the negotiations that led to the merger being documented and agreed in 2003?
- A. This is absolutely in line with the first attempt at merger; the same is true. I didn't take part in any of the political or legal negotiations or the drafting of any documents.
- Q. And nor were you involved in the negotiations which were also ongoing in relation to the further merger of the new Yuksi company with a western oil company; is that correct?

- A. Naturally I didn't participate in those kind of negotiations, although I did participate in some of the meetings at the top level and I was informed about what was happening with the merger, the merger between Yukos and Sibneft and the negotiations with Chevron and ExxonMobil.
- Q. Presumably you discussed those matters with Mr Khodorkovsky?
- A. As far as was of interest or as far as he considered it necessary to tell me, we discussed them.
- Q. And prior to his arrest in October 2003, Mr Khodorkovsky was the chief executive of Yukos; is that right?
- A. Yes, you could put it that way. I think his actual job title was president.
- Q. And he was also the major shareholder?
- A. That's absolutely right.
- Q. Now, you did attend two meetings with Mr Abramovich and Mr Shvidler in Israel which took place after Mr Khodorkovsky's arrest?
- A. Yes, that is so.
- Q. Those took place also after the merger had started to be implemented; is that correct?
- A. Could you clarify the question?

- Q. The merger between Yukos and Sibneft had started to be implemented before Mr Khodorkovsky was arrested and before your meetings; is that correct?
- A. Without any doubt, that is so.
- Q. Would you agree that the period immediately after Mr Khodorkovsky's arrest was a very difficult time for Yukos?
- A. Not only for Yukos. That period after the arrest of Khodorkovsky, it was a difficult time for all his friends and partners, including those who were in Israel.
- Q. But Yukos had lost its president and there was no obvious person to fill Mr Khodorkovsky's shoes, was there?
- A. That is not the case.
- Q. Now, have you read the account given by Mr Abramovich and the account given by Mr Shvidler in their statements of the meetings with you in Israel?
- A. No, I haven't read them.
- Q. Could you be given Mr Abramovich's fourth witness statement, which is in bundle E5, tab 11. The Russian version, which I assume you will want to look at, Mr Nevzlin, starts at page 143 E5/11/143. It's paragraphs 163 and onwards that I'm interested in, which start at page 66 in the English version E5/11/66. So 143 in the Russian version; 66 in the English version.

A. Mm-hm.

Q. Could you just read paragraphs 163 to 167, please,
Mr Nevzlin. (Pause)

A. How many paragraphs should I read?

Q. Through to 167, please, Mr Nevzlin. (Pause)

A. I've read them.

Q. Just for the record, my Lady, there's a very similar account given by Mr Shvidler in his fourth witness statement, but it's in English so I wasn't going to take Mr Nevzlin to it. But it's paragraphs 107 to 115 of Mr Shvidler's witness statement at bundle E4, tab 10
E4/10/195.

Mr Nevzlin, Mr Abramovich's account of events at the two meetings with you in those paragraphs you have just read is what actually happened at those meetings, is it not?

A. Not entirely. I've read here a description of the situation as told by Roman Abramovich so as to make himself look positive, in a positive light.

Q. There was no attempt by Mr Abramovich to take advantage of Mr Khodorkovsky's arrest, was there?

A. That's not true, there was.

MS DAVIES: Thank you very much, Mr Nevzlin.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, Mr Malek.

MR MALEK: I've no questions, my Lady.

MR ADKIN: No questions.

MR MUMFORD: No questions from me.

Re-examination by MR GILLIS

MR GILLIS: Mr Nevzlin, if I could ask a few questions in re-examination.

You were asked about your recent meeting with Mr Berezovsky in Israel; do you recall that?

A. Yes.

Q. Would many people have been aware of that meeting taking place?

A. Nobody at any point, including this last meeting, tried to make these meetings secret. They were perfectly open. We spoke in public places, at a cafe table by the seaside in Tel Aviv and so on. So I can say that since we're people who are easy to recognise, people see us in Israel and recognise us, then I think anyone could know about those meetings; but I didn't tell anyone specifically that I was going to these meetings. I can't speak for Boris.

Q. Thank you.

You were asked about SBS's funding of the loans for shares scheme and you said that Mr Smolensky had two requirements: firstly a guarantee from Bank Menatep; and then secondly a personal guarantee.

Now, I'm not sure that you said who the personal guarantee was going to be from. So can you explain who --

- A. I said the personal guarantee of Berezovsky, in the context that Smolensky insisted that he was giving the money under Berezovsky's personal guarantee, it was his authority, his high profile, the fact that he was known in the business community, the fact that he had those contacts, and what was important for Smolensky was that it was Berezovsky who asked him for the money. That is how things stood at that time.

- Q. Thank you.

You said that after the loans for shares auction you were interested to understand the ownership structure. Do you recall saying that?

- A. Yes, I said that it would be interesting to know the ownership structure because it was such a big oil company in the Russian oil sector.

- Q. And you said that you heard about the ownership structure from Mr Abramovich and Mr Shvidler as well as from Mr Patarkatsishvili.

Now, can you recall what Mr Abramovich said to you about the ownership structure?

- A. Yes, and Mr Berezovsky too, of course. Now, even -- now that so many years have passed, I can just remember the overall, the overall meaning. He said -- and he said this several times -- that they were equal partners, him and Berezovsky, but that Berezovsky had the final say. So he was like the primus inter pares, the senior among equal shareholders.

Q. Can I be clear: is that what Mr Abramovich was saying?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you have conversations with Mr Shvidler about the ownership structure?

A. Yes. As I said earlier and in my statement, this issue arose and became significant for us during the first merger, during that period. That was when we discussed that subject together and nobody had any doubt that Shvidler, Abramovich and Berezovsky all knew that they were equal partners in the Sibneft company, with a slightly senior position with the right of final say in Mr Berezovsky's hands.

Q. And can I just ask one final question about the proposed Yuksi merger.

Would Mr Khodorkovsky have had an interest in knowing the identity of the major shareholders in the company he was proposing to merge with?

A. Without doubt, that was necessary to know during the merger process. In any case, that information would become public, but of course it was desirable for Khodorkovsky to find out before it was published.

Q. And would Mr Khodorkovsky have permitted the merger to proceed to the point where it was practically completed without knowing this information?

A. No, he was absolutely convinced that we know the ownership structure and nothing further would have happened because for Khodorkovsky it was very important that there was transparency and honesty; that the business that he was doing should be to international standards on transparency and honesty.

MR GILLIS: Thank you. I have no further questions. Does your Ladyship?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No. Thank you very much indeed for coming along, Mr Nevzlin, to give your evidence over the video-link. You may be released.

THE WITNESS: Thank you, my Lady.

(The witness withdrew)

Discussion re housekeeping

MR GILLIS: My Lady, looking forward to Monday, the family defendants have confirmed that they do not require Mr Lankshear to attend for cross-examination so there is no need for your Ladyship to read that statement before Monday.

So on Monday it will be Ms Duncan --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, it's still part of your evidence?

MR GILLIS: It's still part of the evidence, of course, but there's no need for your Ladyship to refresh your memory.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR GILLIS: Then it will be Ms Duncan and Mr McKim.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, very well.

MS DAVIES: My Lady, there's one further matter of housekeeping that's arisen during the course of today that I wonder if I may raise.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, please do.

MS DAVIES: It relates to the evidence from various witnesses who say they saw Mr Abramovich in Chukotka after the date of 10 December.

In light of the evidence given by Mr Berezovsky, we had written to Addleshaw Goddard asking for their confirmation that they accepted that the alleged Cap d'Antibes meeting did not take place in the period 10 to 26 December 2000 and we received a letter to that effect today. So they've now conceded that it did not take place after 10 December.

My Lady will recall that Mr Abramovich flew to Chukotka on 10 December and on that basis one would have thought that the evidence of his movements in Chukotka and all the Chukotka witnesses are therefore irrelevant to the issues my Lady has to decide. However, in their letter Addleshaw Goddard also indicated that it was for Mr Abramovich and his legal team to decide which witnesses he wants to call and asked us to confirm whether or not we proposed to continue to call the Chukotka witnesses.

My Lady may recall that a number of those Chukotka witnesses are witnesses in relation to which my Lady made an order at the PTR on the claimant's application, giving the claimant permission to call them to give evidence and be cross-examined on their statements, we having put in letters from them which we intended to rely on on a hearsay basis. The basis on which that application was made -- and it was not opposed -- was set out in Mr Hastings's ninth witness statement, which is at bundle J10/1, tab 2, page 8 J10/1.02/8, in which it was suggested that it was proportionate to require cross-examination of these individuals because they supported the contention that Mr Abramovich remained in the territory of Chukotka for the very substantial part of December 2000.

Of course, at the stage that my Lady made this order, which was the PTR, Mr Berezovsky was still saying that the meeting at Cap d'Antibes took place at the very end of December 2000, a day or two before Christmas, and we did not oppose the application in those circumstances.

However, in light of the letter that we've received today, matters have obviously changed. Mr Abramovich's movements in the period after 10 December have no relevance to the issues my Lady has to decide and we therefore ask my learned friend whether, given that he had obtained this order and obtained permission to call these individuals, he still wanted them to be called; to which we understand that they do, but only because of issues of credit.

Now, in those circumstances we would in fact invite my Lady to rescind the order that she has made because we would submit that had my Lady been asked in July, at the PTR, for these individuals to be cross-examined on their statement solely on the grounds of credit, the order would not have been made and the changed circumstances therefore require the order to be revisited.

Now, I raise this today because there are practical implications, obviously, about sorting out --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Sorry, whose credit? The credit of?

MS DAVIES: My learned friend Mr Gillis may have to explain that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right.

MS DAVIES: There are practical implications about the Chukotka witnesses and the video-link and so on, so we really need to know what's happening about these witnesses. But we do submit it's not an appropriate use of the procedure, or indeed in fact now the court's time at this trial, to require video-link evidence from Chukotka of six individuals solely on the grounds of something to do with credit.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Can you just take me back -- I was closing off some documents. Can you just take me back to what you've said in the transcript about the dates?

MS DAVIES: Yes, of course, my Lady.

In terms of the events in December 2000, Mr Abramovich flew, on our evidence, to Chukotka on 10 December, arriving on 11 December, and he remained there until 26 December. There are six individuals, whose names I'm afraid I will mispronounce --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, never mind about that. Yes.

MS DAVIES: -- who gave evidence that they had seen him in Chukotka on various dates in that period and in relation to whom my Lady made an order at the PTR --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I remember that. I remember that. I just want to get the dates.

MS DAVIES: Those are the dates that, in the letter that we received over the short adjournment, have now become irrelevant. I'm afraid I don't have copies of it but I can read the relevant sentence:

"Our client accepts that the Cap d'Antibes meeting did not take place in the period 10 to 26 December 2000."

None of these individuals give any evidence about Mr Abramovich's movements outside those dates because -- MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Do they give evidence about anything else?

MS DAVIES: It's all about his movements in Chukotka.

(Pause)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right, I've got the dates.

MS DAVIES: And that was the sole ground on which it was sought to cross-examine them.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Can you just take me to the order I made?

MS DAVIES: Yes, it's in bundle L(2011)12 at page 239 L(2011)12/239. I hope it will come up on the screen because we don't have hard copies of the L series. It's paragraph 1.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just a second. (Pause)

Not including Deripaska?

MS DAVIES: No, it's solely individuals who -- I'm afraid I don't have it. I think it's the first six, certainly the first four, but I can't see the second page at the moment.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I see. Thank you. So you're saying that --

MS DAVIES: Yes, five and six.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: What do they say in the letter about their intentions in relation to cross-examination?

MS DAVIES: My Lady, they say:

"Nevertheless, it is for Mr Abramovich and his legal team to decide which witnesses he wants to call. If the witnesses to which you refer are not called, we reserve the right to make adverse comments during closing submissions. Accordingly, please now confirm before your client commences his evidence which witnesses are intended to be called in the time period presently allocated in the timetable for Chukotka, including which of Ms Rudchenko..." et cetera.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Hang on a moment, Ms Davies. Are there hearsay statements? Are there notices from your client stating his intention to rely on the contents of the following statements as hearsay statements?

MS DAVIES: Yes, they were served at the time that these statements were served, yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So you don't have to call them?

MS DAVIES: We don't have to call them.

My learned friend then made an application for permission to call them to cross-examine them on their statements --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, and that was agreed to.

MS DAVIES: -- which is the order that my Lady then made.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MS DAVIES: So once we received this letter telling us it was actually for us to decide whether to call them --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: But you're not proposing to call them?

MS DAVIES: We're not proposing --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: You're just relying on the hearsay statement in the notice?

MS DAVIES: We are, because it's irrelevant. But my learned friend said to us over the short adjournment that he still would like them to be called because there are issues going to credit. So he's --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, I'll hear from Mr Gillis.

Mr Gillis, why do you need to call -- I don't understand where we're at on these.

MR GILLIS: My Lady, the position I think is this: the main factual question which is going to be before your Ladyship is Mr Abramovich's whereabouts between 7 and 10 December but there are issues which we wish to raise with Mr Abramovich as to the credibility of the evidence that he has adduced as to his whereabouts during that period.

Now, prior to cross-examination I obviously don't want to say too much about that, but we will be questioning the credibility of the evidence that has been adduced in relation to that and in that context we also want to look at the credibility of the evidence that he has adduced in relation to his whereabouts in Chukotka in the period of the 11th to the 26th.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Okay. So you want to say, although it's no longer a main issue in the proceeding, you want to say, "You lied when you said you were in such-and-such a town because you can't have been for the following reasons", or whatever, to take an example.

MR GILLIS: Exactly so.

So, my Lady, that is why, although the concession has been made in respect of the period after 11 December, in our view there are relevant issues which will be before your Ladyship --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Do you want these people to be cross-examined by you or not?

MR GILLIS: My Lady, yes, we do. We want the opportunity to cross-examine certain of them and the nature of that cross-examination will be more apparent --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: To demonstrate, for example, if it were to suit your book in relation to cross-examining

Mr Abramovich as to credit, that when they said they saw him post a letter in the postbox or whatever, they were lying; that sort of example?

MR GILLIS: My Lady, yes. Obviously I don't want to say too much, but that would be an example.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Okay. Well, then you had better give me some learning, hadn't you, on whether or not it's legitimate?

So you're maintaining your wish to cross-examine these people solely as to credit --

MR GILLIS: Yes, we are.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: -- where the purpose for which they were called, namely to demonstrate where Mr Abramovich was, is now no longer in contention in the proceedings.

MR GILLIS: Yes. If it were the case, to take an example, that we were able to demonstrate that evidence had been fabricated in relation to that latter period, your Ladyship may regard that as being relevant in the assessment of the evidence that had been adduced in relation to the earlier period.

So, my Lady, that is why we maintain the position that we wish to cross-examine these individuals.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So it goes to Mr Abramovich's credit?

MR GILLIS: Yes. My Lady, these issues are likely to become clearer in consequence of cross-examination of Mr Abramovich.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: When are witnesses 1 to 6 due to appear by way of video-link? They're all video-link, are they?

MR GILLIS: My Lady, they are.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So it's not too much of a hassle; it's just a question of --

MR GILLIS: In our submission the appropriate way to proceed is that the order for permission of cross-examination should remain. It is hoped that the parties can continue to cooperate in terms of organising these individuals to give their video-link evidence. If, in the light of the cross-examination of Mr Abramovich, it becomes apparent that it's not necessary, then that can be discontinued.

But at the present time our position is that we wish to cross-examine these people and I don't have the letter in front of me but the point we make is that if those individuals are not available for cross-examination, we reserve the right to make adverse comment.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: There is actually some learning, isn't there, on the law relating to the ability to cross-examine witnesses as to credit?

MR GILLIS: My Lady, yes, there is.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I don't know whether there's a point there or not. But you're saying I don't need to visit that at this stage, until we've heard what Mr Abramovich says in cross-examination?

MR GILLIS: My Lady, that is our position.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: When are they going to turn up in front of the video camera?

MR GILLIS: I think they're not due for about two and a -- I don't have the detail to hand, but I think it's about two and a half weeks' time.

MS DAVIES: No, my Lady, it would be the end of the week after next, so the 11th.

The reality is we do actually need to know because these are six separate individuals who need to make arrangements and Mr Abramovich, on the current timetable, is not due to finish his evidence until the beginning of that week and that just won't give us enough time. It's also fair to say that we've previously indicated -- and it's also correct -- that if they are to come, it needs to be earlier rather than later because the weather deteriorates in Chukotka and so getting people there is very dangerous.

But I would say, my Lady, we would submit that it's not appropriate to subpoena people, effectively, or make this sort of order where it goes solely to credit. That is an issue that, if my Lady would like to see some learning on, we ought to --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I think I would because I can see there might be a point there, but I haven't got the principle at my fingertips.

MS DAVIES: My Lady, perhaps we can then raise it first thing on Monday morning. What I would be very concerned about is leaving this over until whenever Mr Abramovich finishes his evidence which will not be until the 7th.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, I'm not going to cut down on court time; we'll just have to do it around court time, if you see what I mean.

MS DAVIES: Of course, my Lady.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Perhaps you could see, if there are any cases or if there is a principle that guides me, perhaps you could fish it out.

MS DAVIES: I'm sure there are, Mr Sumption also tells me there are, both on the principle of whether it is appropriate to require witnesses to be called solely as to credit and secondly whether it's possible to cross-examine solely as to credit another witness.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: That's the bell that's ringing.

MS DAVIES: Both of those we would say are engaged here and they create a problem with what is now proposed.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, okay.

I don't know what my schedule is on Monday but what I suggest is that at 4.15 on Monday you can let me know what the legal principles are and perhaps also somebody could identify where the letters are.

MS DAVIES: Of course, my Lady.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: But I'm not proposing to do anything on this particular issue over the weekend. But I think, Mr Gillis -- I do see the points of both sides, but I do think I need to look at the law a bit on this.

MR GILLIS: Yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well. What time would the parties like to start on Monday?

MR GILLIS: We're content with 10.15.

MS DAVIES: Yes.

MR GILLIS: I'm sorry, could I suggest 10.30 because I think Mr Rabinowitz is wanting to bring all of his papers into court before Mr Abramovich gives his evidence.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR GILLIS: I think probably McKim and Duncan are likely to be relatively short. So could I suggest we start at 10.30.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Are you content with that, Mr Sumption?

MR SUMPTION: I don't want to quarrel about a quarter of an hour but the rest of us have all had the experience of humping our things over to court; it's just a question of leaving chambers in time. 10.15 seems a perfectly acceptable --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Is Mr Rabinowitz going to be here for the first two witnesses or is he coming over at the break?

MR GILLIS: My Lady, I don't know. All of Mr Rabinowitz's H files have gone, so that's 100 and whatever it was. I don't know how many of the other files have --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I think what I'll do is I'll start as normal at 10.15 and if we need a bit more of a break to set everything up when the witnesses come in, we can just have a longer shorthand --

MR GILLIS: I'm content with that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: If you need any more time. I'm sure the clerks at 1 Essex Court can manage, Mr Gillis.

Very well. 10.15.

Discussion re housekeeping

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Two things. I have a law student sitting with me as a marshal this week.

Secondly, can I reiterate, please, that no headphones are to leave the court. If anybody is seen leaving the court with a headphone, they will not be allowed back into this court. Is that clear? Thank you.

Just a second, Mr Gillis. (Pause)

Yes, Mr Gillis.

MR GILLIS: My Lady, before Mr Berezovsky calls his next witness, could I just deal with one matter arising from Mr Nevzlin's evidence on Friday and that's a note that the interpreter has provided correcting two mistakes in the translation. My Lady, could I hand that up.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, please do. (Handed)

MR GILLIS: As my Lady will see, it's a note from Natasha Ward, who was the translator, and she has listened to the Russian audio tape and, having done so, has corrected two errors in the English translation. We ourselves had some concerns about some other errors which we thought we had picked up.

But the two errors that she has picked up is, first of all, in the context of the discussion about whether Mr Khodorkovsky had seen copies of the partnership documentation, Ms Ward indicates that she interpreted the word "signed" when in actual fact, having listened to the audio tape, she now believes that was just electronic distortion.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR GILLIS: Then the second mistake that she has identified is that she missed out the word "list" in the description of whether Mr Berezovsky figured in the list of shareholders.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, that's extremely helpful. Is this a routine that's being done with all translations and all translators? Somebody is checking from the --

MR GILLIS: I think Ms Bayliss is saying no.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, I think this arises because there are two of them in the booth: the one who is not actually translating listens out while the other is and picks up things that need to be checked with the tape later, and they have access to the tape for the purpose of doing that. I don't believe it's systematic but it is a system which is likely to pick up the more obvious errors.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, it's a very good system, if I may say so, and it's one that ought to be used so that everybody is comfortable with the integrity of the final transcript at the end of the day.

MR SUMPTION: May I suggest, since these changes have not actually been made on the transcript, that notes like this should simply be filed with the relevant transcript.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: What, the hard copy and the electronic copy?

MR SUMPTION: Yes. The alternative would be issuing a new transcript, which --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. Well, perhaps those sitting behind you and behind Mr Gillis can make arrangements so that this note is reproduced at the back of the electronic transcript and at the back of any hard-copy versions of the transcript.

MR SUMPTION: I imagine that can be done.

MR GILLIS: My Lady, yes. If I can say, from our part, we did in fact check the Russian audio tape against the translation over the weekend.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. That's a matter for you, obviously. Anybody can raise points that arise.

MR GILLIS: Exactly so. I don't know whether there are any points that arise out of that that we may wish to raise but if we do, we'll do that at a convenient point.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well. I'm also reminded that it's important to leave the headphones away from the microphones. Very well.

Yes, Mr Gillis.

MR GILLIS: My Lady, Mr Berezovsky calls his next witness, Ms Duncan.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you.

MS MICHELLE DUNCAN (affirmed)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Do sit down, Ms Duncan, if you would like to.

THE WITNESS: Thank you.

Examination-in-chief by MR GILLIS

MR GILLIS: Ms Duncan, could you just start by confirming that you don't have a telephone or electronic device with you?

A. No.

Q. Thank you very much indeed.

Could the witness be provided with D1, open at tab 6. Could I ask you to turn to page 7 of that document D1/06/90. Is that your signature?

A. Yes.

Q. And can you please confirm that this is your first and your only witness statement in these proceedings?

A. Yes.

Q. And can you confirm that the contents of this, your statement, are true to the best of your knowledge and belief?

A. Yes.

MR GILLIS: Thank you. Can you wait there. Mr Jowell has some questions for you.

Cross-examination by MR JOWELL

MR JOWELL: Ms Duncan, Cadwalader was retained on this case at the end of October 2007; that's right?

A. Yes.

Q. And you received the papers from Carter Ruck in the course of the last full week of that month?

A. Yes.

Q. And am I right in assuming that at that time you were instructed, you had not previously acted for Mr Berezovsky; he was new to you?

A. No.

Q. So you cannot have had great knowledge of his business dealings or his history other than what you got from the papers or what was in the public domain?

A. None whatsoever.

Q. Now, you say in your witness statement that Mr Berezovsky himself was unavailable to meet you at the end of October and early November. Do you recall that?

A. Yes.

Q. And in November Mr Dubov, of Mr Berezovsky's office, organised a meeting for you with Mr Patarkatsishvili in Tel Aviv that took place on 29 and 30 November 2007?

A. Yes.

Q. You recall. So at the time you attended those meetings, you had been on the case for just a little over a month?

A. Yes.

Q. And in that month, between the time that you were officially instructed on the case at the end of October and your meeting in Tel Aviv, had you attended any previous meetings about the case with Mr Berezovsky himself? I'm not asking you about the content of the communications but simply whether such meetings took place.

A. No.

Q. So you had not attended any meetings with Mr Berezovsky other than your original --

A. Only the initial meeting we had in mid-October where we were beauty-parading.

Q. Yes, where you were pitching for the case?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you know in advance that Mr Berezovsky was going to attend the Tel Aviv meeting with Mr Patarkatsishvili?

A. No.

Q. So when you saw that Mr Berezovsky was there, you must have seen that this was an important opportunity to get information from Mr Berezovsky as well as from Mr Patarkatsishvili, since this was your first meeting with your client?

A. Yes, although I think we understood that the primary purpose of the meeting was to meet with Badri. Sorry, it's easier for me to call him Badri.

Q. Yes. No, please do.

A. But, yes, it was obviously an important opportunity for us to get some evidence or to have a discussion with Mr Berezovsky.

Q. Obviously, yes.

Now, in advance of the Tel Aviv meetings Mr McKim had prepared a draft witness statement in Mr Patarkatsishvili's name; that's correct?

A. Yes.

Q. But that was never, as far as you know, sent to him?

A. I don't believe so. I think it was just for our internal purposes.

Q. And at the meeting you didn't show the witness statement to him?

A. No.

Q. And you didn't refer to it?

A. No.

Q. Now, you've said that there were two meetings in Tel Aviv: a roughly four-hour meeting on 29 November and a much shorter meeting early on 30 November. Is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. At the much longer meeting you allowed Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili to talk so that you could get a feel from them for their account of the events relevant to the case?

A. Yes.

Q. And it was Mr Berezovsky who did most of the talking, wasn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, ms Duncan, could I ask you to be given bundle R(D) at tab 29, page 91. This is your manuscript note of the meeting. This is R(D)2/29/91.

A. Yes. Sorry, I've got the original manuscript notes here with me and if you want to ask me about these, I'm happy for you to look at them, but I'd rather look at the original original rather than the photocopy, just because it's clearer.

Q. It's difficult because your original original is probably not paginated in the same way that this is. So you may have to look from --

A. The original original is, but not the transcript, obviously. But it's fine, I can look at this, but --

Q. It's just that the pagination we have for the bundles I assume won't be on your original, so it's difficult for me to --

A. Okay, I understand. That's fine.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, if you need to look at your own original notes, you can do so if the need arises.

THE WITNESS: Thank you.

MR JOWELL: In any event, for present purposes right now, I don't think we're going to need to look at the precise detail just yet. Page 91 is the beginning of the note and if you turn forward to page 113, so that's R -- you'll see the pagination is confusingly on the left-hand side. So it's R(D)2/29/113.

A. Headed "Day 2"?

Q. We get to "Day 2".

So it appears that your notes of the meeting on day 1 start at page 91 and go through to page 112, so 21 pages in all; is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. You've confirmed that the first meeting was a four-hour meeting?

A. About four hours.

Q. About four hours. So with 21 pages of notes, you were taking notes at a rate of a little over five pages an hour; is that about right?

A. Maths isn't my strong point. But yes, I'm sure that's right.

- Q. And your notes on the second day start on page 113, as we've seen, and they go through to page 119?
- A. Yes.
- Q. And that's a little over five pages of notes and that meeting was about an hour long?
- A. Yes.
- Q. So that also tallies with a rate of note-taking of about five pages an hour?
- A. Yes.
- Q. Now, I'm sure that if anything important had been said by either Mr Berezovsky or Mr Patarkatsishvili of clear relevance to one of the main issues in the claim, you would have expected that to be reflected in your notes, wouldn't you?
- A. I would have hoped so.
- Q. Now, if we turn to the next tab in this bundle, to tab 30, so that's R(D)2/30/120. Do you see that?
- A. Yes.
- Q. This is your typed version of the same meeting?
- A. Yes.
- Q. And in the left-hand column you've tried to attribute who said what at the meeting either to Mr Berezovsky, which is a "BB", or to Mr Patarkatsishvili as an "AP"; that's right?
- A. Yes.

- Q. And each horizontal grey-shaded stripe across the page, that indicates a new page of your manuscript notes, doesn't it?
- A. Yes.
- Q. So if we just turn the pages of your typed notes, we see that on the first page that corresponds to about two and a half pages of your manuscript note, doesn't it?
- A. Yes.
- Q. And along the left-hand column that's all attributed to BB?
- A. Yes.
- Q. And if we turn over the page to the next page, again it's about two and a half pages and that is all attributed to BB?
- A. Yes.
- Q. And if we go over to the next page, 122, about the top third of the page, one manuscript page roughly is attributed -- or two-thirds of a manuscript page are attributed to BB?
- A. Yes.
- Q. So we can see that the first six pages of your manuscript notes effectively are attributed to Mr Berezovsky?
- A. Yes.
- Q. So, judging by your note-taking rate of about five pages an hour, Mr Berezovsky probably spoke for about an hour before Mr Patarkatsishvili got a word in edgeways?

A. It wasn't quite like that. Mr Berezovsky did a lot of the talking but occasionally they would chat between themselves in Russian. But yes, broadly, in terms of going through the background -- and I think you see the first few paragraphs are largely historical -- pages, rather, are largely historical -- Mr Berezovsky did most of the talking.

Q. Yes. And it would be fair to say, wouldn't it, that this became a meeting as much with Mr Berezovsky as with Mr Patarkatsishvili?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, neither you nor Mr McKim speak Russian, do you?

A. No.

Q. Could I ask you to be given bundle D2 and to turn up Mr McKim's evidence, which is at tab 14 at paragraph 23 D2/14/61. Do you have that?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you have paragraph 23? It's at D2/14/61.

A. Yes.

Q. The first sentence says:

"During the meeting, Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili frequently discussed matters between themselves in a foreign language, which I presume was Russian."

And I think you've indicated the same --

A. Yes.

Q. -- so I would assume you agree with that?

A. Yes.

Q. And obviously you had no way of knowing what they were saying on those occasions?

A. No.

Q. So if they had been disagreeing between themselves privately, unless it was obvious from their tone of voice, you would not have known about that?

A. No.

Q. And Mr Berezovsky's English was much better than Mr Patarkatsishvili's English; that's right?

A. Yes.

Q. And there was no independent translator present for Mr Patarkatsishvili, was there?

A. No.

Q. Could I take you to another part of Mr McKim's statement, which is at paragraph 22, and the last two sentences of that. Do you see it there in D2/14/61?

He says:

"If the question from us was fairly simple and Mr Patarkatsishvili understood our English, he would often attempt to reply in English. However, if either the question or the answer started to get in any way complicated Mr Berezovsky would act as a quasi-translator."

Do you agree that's essentially a fair description?

- A. I think -- the first sentence I think is fine, that -- I would agree with, in that if the question was simple, then Badri would answer it directly. I think right at the outset of the meeting Mr Berezovsky said that he wasn't there to speak for Badri but he was there to help with the translation because he also accepted, as did Badri, that his English wasn't as good as Mr Berezovsky's. And so if the question was complicated or it didn't appear that Badri had understood it, then Mr Berezovsky would translate it for him in Russian; but for the most part Badri attempted to answer in English.
- Q. Right. But the way the meeting went, it wasn't a formal question-and-answer session? So that you didn't pose a specific question to Mr Berezovsky or to Mr Patarkatsishvili and then one or other of them would answer independently? It wasn't --
- A. The first day, no, very rarely.
- Q. They would -- rather they would discuss a particular subject matter with each of them interjecting on occasion; is that right?
- A. Well, they were sort of -- we asked them to tell their story, you know, from the beginning and to -- you know, some history about ORT, then Sibneft, going through to Rusal sort of chronologically, and that's the way they told the story. And occasionally we would interject with questions --

Q. Yes, and they would each chip in at times?

A. And they would each chip in from time to time.

Q. Now, again, going back to Mr McKim's statement, the second sentence of paragraph 23, he says:

"When Mr Berezovsky was explaining matters to us it was sometimes difficult to know whether he was explaining his personal knowledge of events, whether he was explaining his and Mr Patarkatsishvili's joint recollection or whether he was translating Mr Patarkatsishvili's answers directly."

Presumably you agree with that?

A. Well, not entirely because I think, as I've said, on the whole Badri attempted to answer the questions that -- or Badri spoke in English to us directly as regards his recollection. So there are certain bits of my notes that I quite clearly just remember Badri telling us directly in English; there are other parts where, yes, Mr Berezovsky appeared to be translating for him.

Q. But since -- and when Mr Berezovsky was translating, you weren't in a position to know whether the translation was accurate or not?

A. No.

Q. Could I ask you next to turn to paragraph 40 of Mr McKim's statement which is at D2/14/67, and in this paragraph Mr McKim is talking about his notes of the meeting, which he says have been lost or destroyed. And if I could just ask you to look at the penultimate sentence, it says:

"I do not believe that my notes would have specified who was speaking at any given point; as mentioned above, the vast majority of the answers or explanations being given were coming jointly from Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili, with Mr Berezovsky doing most of the talking."

Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, with a few exceptions, your own manuscript note also generally doesn't specify whether it is Mr Berezovsky or Mr Patarkatsishvili who is speaking? The manuscript note.

A. Yes.

Q. They don't, do they?

A. No.

Q. But in your typed-up notes which you've kindly provided, you have sought to attribute statements to one or other of them?

A. To the extent that I can recall.

Q. Yes.

Now, you've said in your statement that you created your typed note at the time you were preparing your witness statement. I wonder if you could tell us --

A. No, I created the typed notes when I was preparing this witness -- when I was preparing this witness statement, yes, sorry. I misheard you.

Q. Could you tell us approximately at what point in time -- since we don't know exactly when you prepared your witness statement -- you created the transcription with the attributions?

A. It would have been in May of this year.

Q. May of this year. So the meeting was in November 2007, so it was three and a half years afterwards?

A. Yes.

Q. So you must have had very little actual recollection of who said what, or who said precisely what at the meeting, three and a half years afterwards?

A. Some things I can distinctly recall. But on the whole, yes, a lot of it I can't recall accurately to the extent -- but I think when I went through the notes and the transcript, what I sought to do there was where I could actually recall who was speaking at the time, that's where I've put the sort of "AP"/"BB" notations.

Q. I see. But after a while it becomes uncertain, does it?

A. Yes.

Q. I see. So the initial -- so in fact the attributions may be a bit misleading then. The initial bit of the attribution you're confident of, but after that, as it were, there's a long section that is attributed to an "AP" or a "BB"; one can't be sure that later in that long section it's not one or the other one?

A. Sometimes -- some of it I could recall from the way the notes are written because they spoke very different forms of English, so -- and some of those notes are literal sort of -- some of my manuscript notes are sort of literally writing down what they said and they both spoke in a particular way. Some of them I can recall because, for example, the meetings at Munich Airport, they were something that only Badri could have told me about.

Q. I see. But apart from those occasions where it's clear that only one or other of them could have been speaking because only they attended the particular meetings or where you've actually made the attribution in your note, it must be a very uncertain business now making these attributions?

A. Yes. It's not exact.

Q. And indeed Mr McKim has said that he couldn't have made the attributions even at the time. So that's rather indicative, isn't it, that it must be very difficult to do it three and a half years after?

A. It's not as easy as it would have been at the time.

Q. And your manuscript notes -- well, could I ask you first to go back to your witness statement, something that you said, at, in the D1 bundle, 06 at page 87, at paragraph 21 D1/06/87. Do you see -- it's the very last sentence of the paragraph; it just starts with the word "Mr" at the bottom of the page. If we turn over the page to D1/06/88, it says:

"Mr Patarkatsishvili would often start his answers in English, but would switch to Russian if he struggled to explain himself properly."

Now, your manuscript notes obviously don't distinguish which sentences of Mr Patarkatsishvili were said entirely in English and which were partly in English and partly in Russian, and which were entirely in Russian, do they?

A. No.

Q. And obviously it's impossible for you to now know, looking back at your manuscript note, which bits of information seemed to come from Mr Patarkatsishvili, were delivered by him in English or by him partly in English and partly in Russian, or by him in Russian and translated by Mr Berezovsky?

A. With very few exceptions, yes.

Q. Yes.

Now, could I ask you just to confirm a few passages in your notes which are in shorthand. And I should say in advance, I'm not asking you to comment on these sentences; I just want you to make sure that I've not --

A. To translate them.

Q. Yes, exactly -- mistranslated them.

A. Sure.

Q. I think we can do this from the typed-up notes, which are in the R(D) bundle at tab 30.

A. Yes.

Q. So if we start at R(D)2/30/123 and do you see the last box at the beginning of the -- at the bottom of the page?

A. Yes.

Q. "BB..."

That's Boris Berezovsky.

"... [and] I decided 2.5 [billion]."

A. Yes.

Q. "We started to disc[uss] with him. I [understood] his pressure -- I had no choice but to take what he offered -- not poss[ible] to negot[iate because] if we didn't agree w[ith] his price, he [could] walk away & give us nothing.

"[Mr Berezovsky] felt differently."

Is that a correct transcription of your --

A. Yes.

Q. And if we just go forward to the next page, 124 R(D)2/30/124, and again the top box with the "AP" against it.

A. Yes.

Q. The first full sentence, it says:

"We were outside [the] co[mpany], no other income -- [Mr Berezovsky] needed [dollars] to fund political career.

"So accepted 1.35 [billion]. Also agreed he needed to pay 500 [million] in three [months] and balance in 12-15 months.

"Agreed this, shook hands -- that is all.

"[Meeting] only took 1 hour."

That's a correct reading?

A. Yes.

Q. Just two more. Then at page 125, R(D)2/30/125, do you see in the middle of the page, just below the horizontal grey shaded area there's an "AP"?

A. Yes.

Q. And it says:

"[Nikolai Glushkov] not ment[ioned] directly at [the meeting] in Munich [because] others there -- oblique ref[erence] '[you] rem[ember] our main [point]'."

A. Yes.

Q. Correct?

And finally if I could ask you to go to 129, R(D)2/30/129, and I just want to make sure that I've read the last two lines correctly of this page:

"[Roman Abramovich] never threatened to walk away -- just an impression... BP [Mr Patarkatsishvili] had.

"V[ery] careful ab[ou]t negot[iating] strategy."

A. Yes.

Q. Thank you very much.

Ms Duncan, one final thing. Could I remind you of the last sentence of paragraph 29 of your witness statement, which is back in the D1 bundle, D1/06/89.

A. Sorry, which paragraph?

Q. It is paragraph 29.

A. Yes.

Q. You say there:

"Nor did Mr Patarkatsishvili contradict Mr Berezovsky when Mr Berezovsky said that Mr Patarkatsishvili might join the action later."

A. Yes.

Q. So are you suggesting there that Mr Berezovsky, at the meeting in Tel Aviv, said that Mr Patarkatsishvili might join the action later?

A. I believe he said that at the outset of the meeting, when he explained why Badri wasn't party to the action now but was willing to cooperate.

Q. I haven't seen any reference to that in your notes. Is that because you didn't regard this as something important enough to note down?

A. Well, it was obviously important but in the context of what we were there for, which was to sort of really speak to Badri and, as we found out, Mr Berezovsky about their recollection of events, wasn't something that obviously I recorded; it was something that -- and as you'll see the notes, the notes really talk about the story they told us, not other matters that we might have discussed outside of that.

Q. I see.

Then in the next paragraph, in paragraph 30, you mention a car journey with Mr Glushkov and Mr Dubov --

A. Yes.

Q. -- where Mr Glushkov again told you that Mr Patarkatsishvili was thinking of joining the claim.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, could I ask you to look at Mr Dubov's statement about this, which is in D1, tab 12 in the same bundle, at page 258. So D1/12/258. If you could go to page 294 of that D1/12/194 and could I just ask you to read to yourself paragraph 159 and over the page to 160.

(Pause)

A. Yes.

Q. I just draw your attention to the last sentence at paragraph 160 at D1/12/295. He says:

"I recall that Michelle..."

That's you.

"... was very pleased by the news as she had not previously been told that Badri might join the claim."

Now, are you saying that Mr Dubov's impression was wrong because you actually had previously been told that Badri might join the claim?

A. I think what we'd previously been told by Mr Berezovsky -- and Mr Dubov wasn't present when Mr Berezovsky said this -- is that, you know, Badri might join the claim later but that he didn't want to at that point because he still had a relationship with Mr Abramovich and was hoping for an amicable settlement. Sort of thinking about it, I think what Mr Berezovsky meant was he was -- he hoped that Badri might join the claim later.

But apart from that, I can't comment on this.

I think this was probably the first time where we sort of got a more positive indication that Badri might join the proceedings, although at that point I think in fairness the conversation I had with Mr Glushkov was about Badri deciding that he wanted to sue Mr Deripaska.

Q. I see. And in the four weeks after that car journey and Mr Patarkatsishvili's death, you never heard once back from Mr Patarkatsishvili to indicate that he was going to join the claim, did you?

A. No. Mr Glushkov said on that Friday that he was going to arrange a meeting with Badri early in the following week that, you know, he didn't. I think I might have followed up with him a couple of times but it never happened.

Q. It never happened?

A. No.

MR JOWELL: Ms Duncan, I have no further questions. Thank you.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR MALEK: I have no questions, my Lady.

MR ADKIN: No questions.

MR MUMFORD: No questions.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, Mr Gillis.

Re-examination by MR GILLIS

MR GILLIS: Ms Duncan, two questions.

You were asked if you had met Mr Berezovsky before the Tel Aviv meeting at the end of November and you indicated that you hadn't. Could I ask you to look at Mr McKim's statement, which we have at bundle D2 at tab 14, and if I could ask you to turn to page 57 and it's paragraph 10 that I would ask you to look at D2/14/57.

A. Yes.

Q. Before the Tel Aviv meeting with Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Berezovsky, had you had access to those people who are named in paragraph 10?

A. Yes.

Q. The other matter I was wanting to ask you about was that you were taken to the notes of your meeting. We have the typed version at R(D)2, tab 30, at page 120 R(D)2/30/120.

A. Sorry, what's the reference again -- oh, tab 30.

Q. R(D)2, tab 30.

A. Yes.

Q. Page 120. And it was suggested to you that Mr Berezovsky spoke for about the first hour.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, given your appreciation of Mr Patarkatsishvili's understanding of English, I would like to ask you: did Mr Patarkatsishvili appear to understand what Mr Berezovsky was saying to you?

A. Yes.

Q. And did Mr Patarkatsishvili ever indicate to you that he disagreed with what Mr Berezovsky was saying?

A. No. He seemed quite content to simply sit back and listen.

Q. And when Mr Berezovsky was translating for Mr Patarkatsishvili, did Mr Patarkatsishvili give any impression of disagreeing with what Mr Berezovsky was saying on his behalf?

A. Not that I can recall.

MR GILLIS: Thank you. I have no further questions. Does your Ladyship?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No. Thank you very much indeed, Ms Duncan, for coming along.

THE WITNESS: Thank you.

(The witness withdrew)

MR GILLIS: My Lady, could I call Mr Berezovsky's next witness, Mr McKim.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR IAN MCKIM (sworn)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Please sit down if you would like to.

THE WITNESS: Thank you.

Examination-in-chief by MR GILLIS

MR GILLIS: Mr McKim, good morning.

A. Good morning.

Q. Again, could I start by asking you to confirm that you do not have a telephone or an electronic device?

A. Not up here, no.

Q. Thank you.

Could Mr McKim be given bundle D2 at tab 14 D2/14/55. Is that the front page of your witness statement?

A. It is.

Q. And could I then ask you to turn to page 71 D2/14/71.

A. Yes.

Q. And is that your signature?

A. It is.

Q. Could you please confirm that this is your second witness statement in this action?

A. Yes. I believe I gave a very short procedural statement very early on, to introduce a document in an earlier hearing, but this is the -- my second statement in the action and the only statement of any substance I believe I gave.

MR GILLIS: So, my Lady, although it's described as being his first statement at page 55, it's his second statement. The first statement, for the record, is at bundle J1, tab 1 at page 10 J1/1.01/89. It's dated 15 April 2008 and is simply in relation to an application to amend the claim form.

Subject to that, can you confirm that the contents of this, your second witness statement, are true to the best of your knowledge, information and belief?

A. Yes, they are.

MR GILLIS: Thank you. If you could wait there, Mr Jowell has some questions for you.

Cross-examination by MR JOWELL

MR JOWELL: Mr McKim, you're a qualified barrister and until recently you worked at Cadwalader solicitors; is that right?

A. That's right.

Q. You were brought into this case by Ms Duncan, who was then a partner at Cadwalader, at the end of October 2007?

A. Yes.

Q. And at around that time you were provided with a copy of the particulars of claim dated 6 September 2000 (sic) that had been prepared by Carter Ruck; that's right?

A. Yes.

Q. And those particulars of claim had already been signed by Mr Berezovsky, hadn't they?

A. I believe so, yes.

Q. Excuse me, I said 2000; I meant to say 2007.

A. Yes, I assumed that's what you meant.

Q. And there was a dispute at that time over whether those signed particulars of claim had been validly served on Mr Abramovich at the Hermes store; you're aware of that?

A. So I understand, yes.

Q. And Ms Duncan informed you in early November 2007 that she had agreed with Skadden that Cadwalader would serve a new version of the particulars of claim by 8 January 2008?

A. Yes.

Q. And she told you that one of the main tasks that you and she had was therefore to try and do all the preparatory work necessary to amend the particulars before Christmas?

A. Yes.

Q. And for that purpose you and Ms Duncan were no doubt keen to meet Mr Berezovsky?

A. Yes.

Q. And you were also keen to meet with Mr Patarkatsishvili, who was potentially an important witness?

A. Yes.

Q. And you had been provided with the final versions of proofs of evidence that had been taken by Mr Stephenson and Mr Lankshear following their interviews with Mr Patarkatsishvili in Georgia in 2005; that's right?

A. Yes.

Q. And in the course of November you took the initiative to put together a further document, something you called a witness statement for Mr Patarkatsishvili; that's right?

A. Yes, the witness statement was solely my idea. It was clearly something that had to be done. It may have been discussed between ourselves and counsel that we needed to get this document up and running, but I certainly was the one that kick-started the drafting of it in that form.

Q. Yes. And near the end of November you learnt that Ms Duncan had arranged for you and her to meet Mr Patarkatsishvili in Tel Aviv?

A. Yes.

Q. But before you'd even gone to Tel Aviv, you had already created a first draft of Mr Patarkatsishvili's witness statement, hadn't you?

A. Yes, to save time afterwards, after we got back.

Q. Yes. And in preparing that you'd had no input from Mr Patarkatsishvili himself directly?

A. Not directly. It was based on documents that I'd seen.

Q. Yes.

Now, in order to produce that draft witness statement, you included the account of events contained in the two proofs of evidence that had previously been prepared, but you also made various additions to those two proofs; that's right?

A. Yes.

Q. Could we just go to the first draft of the witness statement you prepared, which is in the R(D) bundle. Could I ask you to be given the R(D) bundle, R(D)2 at tab 28, page 62 R(D)2/28/62. You'll see this is the first draft of the witness statement that you prepared, isn't it?

A. I'd have to flip through it, but I'll take your word for it.

Q. It's the one dated 19 November at the bottom.

A. Yes, okay.

Q. And you see in the top right, it says:

"1. Claimant.

"2. Boris Berezovsky.

"3. First Statement."

And so on?

A. Yes.

Q. That's what one would normally put in the top right-hand corner of a witness statement by Mr Berezovsky, isn't it?

A. It is. I probably pasted that entire top table from another statement or asked a secretarial trainee to do that.

Q. Yes, indeed. And at paragraph 4 of the statement you actually state:

"The contents of this..."

Quite properly, you state that:

"The contents of this witness statement are largely drawn from the draft proofs taken from Badri in 2005 and the prior witness statements given by Boris in other actions, supplemented by press coverage and other research."

Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. So you also included material in this document that had come from Mr Berezovsky and from other sources?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, before you went to Tel Aviv neither you nor, as far as you're aware, Ms Duncan had sent to Mr Patarkatsishvili a copy of this witness statement, did you?

A. Not directly.

Q. No. And he didn't receive a copy of it from other sources as far as you're aware?

A. Not as far as I'm aware.

Q. As we've already discussed with Ms Duncan, there were two meetings in Tel Aviv: one on the 29th and one on 30 November. And you confirm that, as Ms Duncan said, you didn't make any reference to this witness statement during those meetings, did you?

A. No.

Q. But after the meeting you did create a second draft of Mr Patarkatsishvili's witness statement dated 7 December; that's right? Do you recall that?

A. Yes, I would have started work on that as soon as we got back and the date that you've just mentioned is probably a date it was circulated to somebody. But certainly there was a further drafting effort taking place after that.

Q. Yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Can I be clear. Did you take this statement with you to the meeting with Mr Patarkatsishvili?

A. I probably had it in my bag and on my person and there at the meeting, but there were no documents passed back and forth between myself and Ms Duncan on the one hand and Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili on the other.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So there was no question of you going through the draft with Mr Patarkatsishvili at the meeting?

A. No. That didn't happen.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I see. Thank you.

MR JOWELL: Your notes of the meeting in Tel Aviv have unfortunately been lost or destroyed; that's right?

A. Yes, unfortunately that's right.

Q. But in order to prepare the second draft of the witness statement, you used those notes, presumably, as well as your understanding or impression you had gained from the meeting; that's right?

A. Yes.

Q. And in paragraph 34 of your witness statement D2/14/65 you explain that the way you prepared the second statement of Mr Patarkatsishvili, you sought to include everything relevant that was said at the meeting, whether it came from Mr Berezovsky or Mr Patarkatsishvili, and you didn't try to distinguish the information that specifically came from Mr Patarkatsishvili rather than from Mr Berezovsky. Do you recall that evidence?

A. Yes, I recall that.

Q. And you also explained in your witness statement at paragraph 40 D2/14/67 that your manuscript notes would not have specified who was speaking at any given point for the most part, whether Mr Berezovsky or Mr Patarkatsishvili? You will recall I took Ms Duncan to that passage earlier.

A. Yes.

Q. Yes. And the reason you didn't specify in your notes who was speaking at any given point was because, with Mr Berezovsky acting as a quasi-translator, as you put it, for Mr Patarkatsishvili, you generally just assumed that the answers were given on his behalf; is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. And it was all too much of a muddle to really distinguish who was saying what precisely?

A. Well, that might be going a bit far. I mean, there were certain elements of the story that it was obvious had to be coming from Badri and it would have appeared from Mr Berezovsky's translation that he wasn't embellishing it or muddling his own recollection because he couldn't have had a direct recollection to muddle in. But I think it's fair to say that there were other aspects of the meeting where it wasn't crystal-clear whether there was an embellishment from Mr Berezovsky or whether Mr Patarkatsishvili's words were coming unfiltered.

Q. But, just to go back to what you said earlier, as you don't speak Russian, you weren't in a position to judge the accuracy of Mr Berezovsky's translation of anything?

A. No, I wasn't in a position to judge the word-for-word translation. It's an impression based on --

Q. You just assumed that it was correct?

A. Well, I just assumed the translation was correct. What I'm saying is that there were different spells during which there was clearly a discussion going on between them and there were spells when the answer was coming very quickly from Mr Berezovsky.

- Q. But you had no way of verifying whether Mr Berezovsky, even when he was translating something that could only have originated from Mr Patarkatsishvili, you had no way of knowing whether he was translating it accurately?
- A. No, no way of knowing whether the translation was accurate, no.
- Q. And it was often difficult, wasn't it, to know if Mr Berezovsky was speaking for himself or on Mr Patarkatsishvili's behalf?
- A. Yes, that was often the case.
- Q. And, as Ms Duncan says in her witness statement, Mr Patarkatsishvili would often start a sentence in English and then revert to Russian, wouldn't he?
- A. Yes.
- Q. And Mr Berezovsky would then take over and act as quasi-translator?
- A. Yes.
- Q. So, except where you specifically now recollect Mr Patarkatsishvili having said something in particular at the meeting, it would be fair to say that the understanding or impression that you came away with from the meeting as to Mr Patarkatsishvili's position on the various factual issues in this case, that could have come from what Mr Berezovsky said or from what Mr Patarkatsishvili said, or from something that Mr Berezovsky said translating what Mr Patarkatsishvili had said?

A. Yes. My -- my understanding of Mr Patarkatsishvili's position would have been based on a combination of --

Q. Of all of those sources, yes.

A. -- those factors.

Q. I'm sorry.

A. Yes.

Q. Yes.

And after the Tel Aviv meetings you had no further contact with Mr Patarkatsishvili himself; is that correct?

A. That's correct.

Q. And then after that, the second draft of the witness statement dated -- you produced a second draft of the witness statement dated 7 December and then you produced further drafts of the witness statement?

A. Yes.

Q. And further amendments were made in those further drafts?

A. Yes.

Q. But, as you say in your witness statement, none of those further amendments made to the draft were as a result of comments from Mr Patarkatsishvili because you had no comments from Mr Patarkatsishvili?

A. Not after Tel Aviv, no.

Q. No.

Now, if I could, I'd like, if I may, just to trace through with you two specific aspects of the account attributed to Mr Patarkatsishvili in the various documents. Could I start --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Could I have a reference, please, to the next version of the draft witness statement?

MR JOWELL: My Lady, the next version of the draft witness statement is the one of 14 November and that is in R(D)3/33/54.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you. Is that where you're going next?

MR JOWELL: No, my Lady, I'm going to... And then there's a final version which is at R(D)3/34/76 which is undated, but it must have been either in late December or in January, or possibly February.

I'd like, if I may, just to trace through what was said first about the position of Mr Glushkov at the meeting in Munich --

A. Okay.

Q. -- in May 2001. Could I ask you to start with the Lankshear Stephenson proof of evidence of June, which is in the R(D) bundle at tab 6. So that is R(D)1/06/79.

A. Yes, I think I've got that.

Q. Are you on that page?

A. You're taking me to a page in the body of the document?

Q. Yes, indeed.

A. Yes, I think I've got that.

Q. And do you see starting at line 377 on the left-hand side it says:

"When negotiating this deal there was no specific mention made of [Nikolai Glushkov] but this was not necessary as it was clear that his release was one of the reasons we were prepared to sell."

A. Yes, I see that.

Q. Could I next ask you to go to the original particulars of claim, the Carter Ruck particulars of claim that had been signed by Mr Berezovsky by the time you came into the case. Those are in the K2 volume. If I could ask you to be provided with K2. If you could go to K2/03, page 8 K2/03/8.

A. Yes.

Q. So you'll see that these say -- picking it up at paragraph 14, these say that:

"In or around May 2001, a meeting took place between the Defendant and Mr Patarkatsishvili (representing himself and the Claimant) at Munich Airport..."

Then if you go over to the next page, K2/03/9, paragraph 15, and you see it says:

"At the... meeting, the Defendant [Mr Abramovich] told Mr Patarkatsishvili..."

And do you see subparagraph (4):

"... that, notwithstanding that the assurances given by him in December 2000 had not been honoured, if the Claimant were to sell his beneficial interest in Sibneft, Mr Glushkov would be released from prison and, by implication, that if the interest were not sold, Mr Glushkov would remain in prison."

And then at 16 it says:

"In making the statements identified above to Mr Patarkatsishvili, it was the Defendant's intention that Mr Patarkatsishvili should pass them on to the Claimant..."

And then 17 again refers to "Each of the... statements".

So the particulars of claim allege that at the Munich meeting Mr Abramovich had made an express statement that Mr Glushkov would be released if he sold the Sibneft shares, whereas what was in the proof of evidence from Mr Patarkatsishvili was that it wasn't specifically mentioned at the Munich meeting. Do you see that?

A. Yes, I see that.

Q. Now, in order to assist, what we've done is to create a version of the very first witness statement that you created in November 2007, the one that you created before the meeting in Tel Aviv, and we have marked it up against the 2005 proofs of evidence --

A. Yes.

Q. -- to see what it was that you added to those proofs. I think a -- I understand that a copy of this was provided to Addleshaw Goddard on Friday and they were asked to supply it to you. I don't know if you had a chance to look at it?

A. I got that document Friday night and I looked at it on Saturday. I don't have a copy on my person now. So I'm sure I'll get one.

Q. It's in the bundle at R(D)3/35/100. It should hopefully have made it into your R(D) bundle.

A. Is that a bundle I should have here?

Q. Have you got the R(D) bundle in front of you?

A. R(D), yes.

Q. Yes. At the very back, it should be at tab 35. Have you got that? We've got copies if --

A. What tab number, sorry?

Q. 35.

A. No, this one stops at 34. I'll see what's there.

Q. Yours stops at 34?

A. It stops at 34.

Q. Can we provide you the document.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I'd like a hard copy of this document, please. (Handed)

MR JOWELL: If I could ask you to turn to page 120 in this document --

A. Yes.

Q. -- and to look at paragraph 92 R(D)3/35/120. You set out in 92 the text from the proofs of evidence:

"We agreed a price... When negotiating this deal there was no specific mention made of [Nikolai Glushkov]..."

And then, quite properly in square brackets and in italics, you note:

"NB -- Particulars of Claim state that release of Glushkov was discussed -- confirm position."

You've quite properly highlighted the inconsistency between the proofs of evidence and what was in the particulars of claim and you raised the need to confirm the position; that's right?

A. Yes, I'm pleased to see that it's there at the first opportunity.

Q. Yes. Could I ask you next to go to Ms Duncan's note of the meeting with Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Berezovsky, which is in the R(D) bundle, R(D)2/30/125. This is her typed-up version.

Do you see just around the middle of the page, I asked Ms Duncan to confirm the reading of this earlier this morning:

"[Nikolai]..."

Just below the horizontal break.

A. Yes, I see the point.

Q. "[Nikolai Glushkov] not ment[ioned] directly at [the meeting] in Munich [because] others there -- oblique ref[erence] '[you] rem[ember] our main [point]'."

After the meeting with Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili you produced your second draft of the witness statement, as we've said. Could I ask you to turn to that now, which is at tab 32 of the R(D) bundle, to see how you dealt with this point. R(D)3/32, page 46 R(D)3/32/46.

A. Yes.

Q. And you'll see you leave in the sentence from the proof about there being no specific mention and then you say -- and then you've added in:

"We did not mention Glushkov by name, due to the presence of Irina and Ruslan Fomichev but I asked Roman whether he was aware of 'our main issue' and he confirmed that he knew what I meant."

So you've added something similar to what is recorded in Ms Duncan's note, namely that Mr Patarkatsishvili raised the question of Mr Glushkov not by name, due to the presence of others, but obliquely referred to it as their main, his main or "our main issue". Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. And you've also added something that is not recorded in Ms Duncan's note, namely that Mr Abramovich confirmed that he knew what Mr Patarkatsishvili meant.

Now, given that that reference to a confirmation is not in Ms Duncan's note, is it possible that that was something that you just assumed took place?

A. I don't think so. I think it would have been either in my note or something I specifically recall.

Q. But you can't now be sure?

A. I can't now be certain. But I'd say it's more probable than not that I wouldn't have just put that in without hearing something about it.

Q. But you wouldn't have been told precisely -- if you were told that he confirmed it, you wouldn't have been told precisely how he confirmed it, whether it was a nod or a wink or a "yes" or in some other way?

A. No. The best of my recollection is that there was some form of confirmation; but, as you say, the precise form of that, I don't recall that being pressed.

Q. And it's unlikely that you would have been told; otherwise you would have put it in the statement?

A. If there -- that extra detail had been given, I'm sure I would have put it in.

Q. Now, could I now ask you to go to the particulars of claim that was served by your firm on 8 January, which are in the K2 bundle, K2/04, at page -- they start at page 16 but I'm interested in page 29. So it's K2/04/29. So these are now the amended particulars of claim, if you like, that...

A. Yes.

Q. And could I ask you to look at paragraph 46 at the bottom of the page:

"The meeting took place at Munich Airport in early May 2001. It was attended by Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Abramovich. Also in attendance for some parts of the meeting were Ruslan Fomichev... who was acting for Mr Patarkatsishvili and/or Mr Berezovsky, and Irina Panchenko... an executive of Sibneft and financial adviser to and acting for Mr Abramovich. Mr Abramovich knew and intended that any statements made by him would be passed on to Mr Berezovsky; and understood that Mr Patarkatsishvili was acting for himself and for Mr Berezovsky at this meeting."

And then subparagraph 1:

"At the meeting:

"(1) In the absence of Mr Fomichev and Ms Panchenko, who had left the room,

"(a) Mr Patarkatsishvili raised the issue of releasing Mr Glushkov from jail. Mr Abramovich told Mr Patarkatsishvili that, although Mr Glushkov had not been released in December 2000, if Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili were to sell their interest in Sibneft to him, Mr Glushkov would now be released..."

Do you see that?

A. Yes, I see that.

Q. So that is an allegation that there was a direct -- prior direct conversation about Mr Glushkov, not in the presence of the others at the meeting and not one that was oblique. Do you agree?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, I'm not asking you what the source for that allegation was, but it clearly cannot have been what Mr Patarkatsishvili told you at the Tel Aviv meeting.

Do you agree?

A. Well --

Q. Because it's in contradiction to what he told you at the meeting, isn't it?

- A. Well, only if I'd finished putting things from my notes into the draft witness statement on the date you mentioned. But I can't clearly recall now what the source of that additional information was.
- Q. No, and I'm not asking you to recall what it was. But it can't have been Mr Patarkatsishvili because Mr Patarkatsishvili said that it was because of the presence of Mr Fomichev and Ms Panchenko it was mentioned obliquely, whereas what is said here is that in the absence of Mr Fomichev and Ms Panchenko the issue was -- there's a clear statement.
- A. I do have a recollection that at some point along the way the issue was fleshed out that there was a spell in Munich when the four of them were in the room and there was a spell in Munich when the two of them were in the room. And, as I say, it may be that there was something in my notes that hadn't made it into the draft witness statement by the time I prepared the drafts on 7 and 14 December, but I can't now recall what the situation is.
- Q. Well, it doesn't -- there was no other meeting with Mr Patarkatsishvili?
- A. There was no other meeting, no.
- Q. And the meeting notes of Ms Duncan say that it was not directly mentioned, don't they?

A. Ms Duncan's notes do say that, yes.

Q. Thank you.

Could I finally ask you to go to tab 34 of the R(D) bundle, which is the final version: R(D)3, tab 34, page 92 R(D)3/34/92. If you could go to paragraph 65 of that.

A. Yes, I've got that.

Q. Just incidentally, do you know what -- this is the last version of the witness statement of Mr Patarkatsishvili. Do you happen to know when this was prepared? Clearly it would have been after 14 December, but do you know when?

A. I don't know when.

Q. And at paragraph 65 this inserts some new text which says that -- which mentions that -- you'll see:

"A meeting was set up in Munich in April/early May 2001 to finalise a deal and agree a price. Roman came to the airport with his financial manager Irina Panchenko. Ruslan Fomichev also came with me, although neither he nor Ms Panchenko were present for the bulk of the discussions between me and Roman."

This is now an insertion of the allegation that they were not present for a large part of the meeting.

And then in paragraph 69 at the bottom of the page, it then states:

"Roman also indicated that, although Glushkov had not been released from prison after the sale of ORT, if we sold our interests in Sibneft then Glushkov would be released. There was no mention of Glushkov in the presence of Mr Fomichev and Ms Panchenko, but after they had returned I asked whether he was aware of 'our main issue' and he confirmed that he knew what I meant."

Do you see that?

A. Yes, I see that.

Q. Now, that rather suggests that there were two conversations about Mr Glushkov between Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Abramovich: first, a conversation like the one in the particulars of claim between Mr Abramovich and Mr Patarkatsishvili when they were alone in which Mr Abramovich indicated that Mr Glushkov would be released; and then a second conversation in the presence of Mr Fomichev and Ms Panchenko where they asked -- where it was asked if he -- where Mr Patarkatsishvili asked Mr Abramovich if he was aware of his main issue and he confirms that, "he knew what I meant".

Do you agree that that's the natural reading of that?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. Now, again, that version of events wasn't what

Mr Patarkatsishvili had told you in Tel Aviv, was it?

- A. As I say, I do recall at some point that additional information was clarified but I can't recall whether it happened at the Tel Aviv meeting or --
- Q. From somewhere. But presumably that was something that you hoped Mr Patarkatsishvili would be saying in evidence?
- A. Well, it's probably something we expected he would say. Like I say, I can't recall precisely the source, but I'm sure we wouldn't have gone that far in the particulars of claim unless we were reasonably confident that it would be substantiated.
- Q. But, as you said, these later amendments didn't come from Mr Patarkatsishvili, did they?
- A. Not directly, no.
- Q. Could I move on to how another point was developed through the documents. Could we go back to the proofs of evidence of Mr Lankshear and Mr Stephenson, again at tab 6 --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just before you move on, you say, Mr McKim:

"... I can't recall precisely the source, but I'm sure we wouldn't have gone that far in the particulars... unless we were reasonably confident... it [could] be substantiated."

Who was your source providing you with information?

A. It would have been various sources. We -- after Tel Aviv we still had regular meetings with Mr Berezovsky's assistants and I believe did meet Mr Berezovsky between Tel Aviv and the service of the particulars of claim, but I can't now recall specific incidents which would have led to that additional wording being put in the draft.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I see. Thank you.

MR JOWELL: Could we go back to R(D) tab 6, Mr McKim, at page 78, R(D)1/06/78.

A. Yes.

Q. You'll see there's a passage here in the proof of evidence relating to the sale of Sibneft.

A. Yes.

Q. And if you just cast your eye -- could I ask you to cast your eye over that, from 361 and over the page.

A. I've read down to 375. Is that what you --

Q. Yes.

A. Yes.

Q. If I could just -- could I then particularly draw your attention over the page at 381, which says:

"Following the Munich meeting, I kept in contact with [Mr Abramovich]. He was always complaining that he was experiencing political pressure from the Kremlin.

I initiated the sale against the background of complaints from [Mr Abramovich]. I thought that it was a better option to sell and to relieve the pressure on [Mr Abramovich]. I believed from what [Mr Abramovich] said at the time that had we stayed in the company then there was a risk that the company would have become a target."

So you'll see there that that records Mr Patarkatsishvili saying that he believed, from what Mr Abramovich said, that "there was a risk that the company", meaning Sibneft, "would have become a target". Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. Could I ask you then to go back to the Carter Ruck particulars of claim, the ones you were provided with in November, at K2, tab 3, page 9 K2/03/9. Could I just draw your attention to paragraph 15, subparagraph (3).

A. Yes.

Q. That says that at the meeting the defendant told Mr Patarkatsishvili:

"... that if the Claimant did not relinquish his interest in Sibneft it would simply be seized by the Russian State without compensation. Accordingly, he had no alternative but to dispose of it to the Defendant."

Now, that seems to be alleging something rather different from what is in the proof of evidence that we've just seen, namely that there was a statement not, or not just, that the Russian State might target Sibneft the company but rather or also that the Russian State would expropriate Mr Patarkatsishvili's and Mr Berezovsky's supposed specific interest in Sibneft.

Do you see that distinction?

- A. Yes, if you accept that the phrase "the company [becoming] a target" refers to the company itself and not shares in it, then yes, that is a construction.
- Q. Yes. There's clearly a distinction there, isn't there?
- A. Yes, there could be. Yes.
- Q. And if -- can we go now to the mark-up of the witness statement that you prepared before the meeting in Tel Aviv, the one with the compare version, which is at page 119 of that. This is how you've dealt with the sale of Sibneft.

Have you got that at page --

- A. Yes, I've got that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: This is R(D)3/35/119.

MR JOWELL: Yes, my Lady.

You'll see that in paragraph 87 you quite properly put in some questions about the proof, what's in the proof, and then at paragraph 89 you've added new material in square brackets, again quite properly. And you say:

"[Mr Abramovich] made it clear that if [we/the Claimant] retained our shares, then Sibneft, its management and its owners would be faced with persecution from the Russian Prosecutor and tax authorities. He also said that if [we/the Claimant] retained our shareholdings Sibneft would come under attack in the same manner as companies owned by [Mr] Gusinsky had done."

Then in paragraph 90:

"Further, [Mr Abramovich] said that if we did not sell soon, the Russian State would seize our shares without compensation. We therefore had no alternative but to sell to him."

Now, those were all paragraphs which you added in; that's right?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, could I ask you to go back to K2 which are the original particulars of claim again, at K2/03, page 9 K2/03/9.

A. Yes.

Q. If we look at paragraph 15, 15(1) says the defendant told Mr Patarkatsishvili:

"... that so long as the Claimant continued to hold any beneficial interest in Sibneft, Sibneft, its management and its owners would face continued persecution from the Russian Prosecutor's office and tax authorities..."

That is identical, pretty much, isn't it, to the first sentence of paragraph 89?

A. Yes, I probably drew from that language in the original particulars when I was drafting --

Q. Yes.

A. -- that additional paragraph in the statement.

Q. And 15(2):

"... that if the Claimant did not relinquish his interest in Sibneft, it would come under attack by those in power in Russia in a manner similar to companies controlled by Mr Gusinsky."

That's really the same as the second sentence of paragraph 89, isn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. And then (3):

"... that if the Claimant did not relinquish his interest in Sibneft it would simply be seized by the Russian State without compensation. Accordingly, he had no alternative but to dispose of it to the Defendant."

That's really identical to paragraph 90, isn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. So those subparagraphs presumably are what you hoped

Mr Patarkatsishvili would say in order to make his witness statement compatible with the particulars of claim?

A. Yes, there's an open square bracket at the beginning of paragraph 89 which, to me, suggests that I had that in as something of a confirmation rather than something that I was more confident that he was going to say.

Q. Yes. Now, if we go on to paragraph 91 of the comparison document R(D)3/35/120, we see that you've added the second sentence:

"Any sale to a third party would have required his cooperation..."

And then the last sentence of paragraph 91, you've added:

"I was also well aware of [Mr Abramovich]'s... relationship with Putin, and had absolutely no doubt that the state persecution and... seizure of our interests he referred to would happen if he wanted it to."

Now -- and you then add in additional material also in 93 and 94. Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, could I ask you to be given bundle J2, J2/2. Could I ask you to go to tab 23 in that. So it's J2/2.23/275.

A. Yes.

Q. This is Mr Berezovsky's second witness statement, dated 17 July 2009. Do you see that?

A. Yes, I've got that.

Q. Could I ask you to go to page 296 of that. So that's J2/2.23/296.

A. Yes.

Q. Do you see in paragraph 117(b) he says:

"I was also well aware of Mr Abramovich's close relationship with President Putin... and had no doubt that the state persecution and the seizure of our interest that Mr Abramovich threatened would happen if he wanted it to."

A. Yes.

Q. And that's identical to what you had in paragraph 91 of Mr Patarkatsishvili's statement?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, all of those square-bracketed paragraphs presumably represented the evidence that you hoped you would get from Mr Patarkatsishvili. Is that correct?

A. It was evidence we anticipated we would get rather than evidence we were crossing our fingers and imagining he might not give. But, yes, as I've said, the fact that I've square-bracketed it meant it was something that we'd not seen being attributed to him before but it was something that it looked like, from the context, should have been or was going to be attributed to him and something that needed to be asked of him.

Q. I see. You were very confident, were you, that he would give that -- he would be giving that evidence?

A. Less confident in the square-bracketed stuff.

Q. I see. Well, because that had not come from him, had it?

A. Well, not before I'd spoken to him, no. But it was something that looked like it should have been coming from him and therefore it was something we needed to put to him.

Q. Now, can we turn up the next version of the witness statement --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: How much longer are you going to be with this witness? Just because of the break.

MR JOWELL: My Lady, I think probably about 20 minutes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right, well then I'll take the break now. Ten minutes, please.

You're not to talk to anybody about your evidence.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, before your Ladyship rises, can I give your Ladyship the seventh witness statement of Mr Abramovich. It's quite short, but your Ladyship might find it useful to glance through it before he starts his evidence.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. I'll hear any objections later,
Mr Rabinowitz. Thank you very much.

(11.30 am)

(A short break)

(11.45 am)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, Mr Jowell.

MR JOWELL: Mr McKim, can I ask you to turn next to the R(D) bundle, tab 32, R(D)3/32/46. This is your witness statement that you produced after the meeting in Tel Aviv.

If we look at paragraph 69, the last sentence is:

"I was also well aware of Roman's close relationship with Putin, and had absolutely no doubt that the state persecution and the seizure of our interests he had referred to in the preceding weeks would happen if he wanted it to."

Now, that is identical to what was in the previous draft, isn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. Likewise, over the page at page 47 R(D)3/32/47, in paragraph 71, the second sentence:

"I told him that the Kremlin definitely wanted us out of Sibneft, and that selling to Roman was the only option that would avoid the dire consequences threatened by the Kremlin."

That was also identical to what was in the previous draft?

A. Yes.

Q. Both of those you had inserted yourself, as compared to the proofs? I'm not suggesting there's anything wrong with that, I'm just --

A. Well, no, it was under my supervision. I may not have done it myself.

Q. Now, you've already told us that at the meeting in Tel Aviv you didn't refer to the witness statement that you'd prepared. So I take it that you obviously didn't then put these precise propositions to Mr Patarkatsishvili from the witness statement and ask him whether he agreed with them or not?

A. Not straight out of the witness statements; although, as I've said before, or said in my witness statements, at any rate there were certain areas we'd identified as being things we needed to cover with Mr Patarkatsishvili.

Q. But you didn't, for example, say to him -- read out the last sentence of paragraph 69 and say, "Do you agree with that?"

A. We didn't do that, no.

Q. No. You just came away from the meeting with the overall impression or understanding that he would subscribe to those sentences, perhaps also from other information you had?

- A. Somewhere between those two extremes, perhaps. The -- I can't now recall precisely what words were used by myself or Michelle in questions to Mr Patarkatsishvili and precisely what words over and beyond what I've already set out in the witness statement were used in response. But there were areas that were put to him where we needed explanation and they would have resulted somewhere along the line in these statements.
- Q. Now, you said in your witness statement that if a question or answer got in any way complicated then Mr Berezovsky would act as quasi-translator. Do you remember that?
- A. Yes.
- Q. So if you had posed a question to the effect of, "Did you have absolutely no doubt that the State persecution and seizure of your interests you had referred to in the preceding weeks would happen if you wanted it to?", that would have presumably been something complicated that would have been translated by Mr Berezovsky?
- A. As I say, I don't recall what precise wording was used. It's entirely possible that the concept was got over in a more simple way, but I can't now recall.
- Q. But it's likely that if you spoke about a phrase like "State persecution" or "seizure of interests", those would have been translated, surely?

A. I couldn't say.

Q. You couldn't say.

Now, in your witness statement you also say that you recall Mr Patarkatsishvili at the Tel Aviv meeting using the expression "playing a game" in relation to the alleged statements of Mr Abramovich referring to pressure from the Kremlin.

A. Yes.

Q. Do you recall that?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: What paragraph?

MR JOWELL: It's in paragraph 31(c) D1/14/63, my Lady, and in paragraph 48(d) D2/14/70.

I just wanted to ask you: you can't now, I assume, at this distance of, time, state whether, when he used the expression "playing a game", that was an expression he used in English or it was something he said in Russian which was translated by Mr Berezovsky.

A. That I'm fairly confident is something he said to us in English.

Q. You see, I find that quite surprising because when Mr Berezovsky gave evidence, the expression "playing a game" seemed to be one of his favourite expressions. Are you sure about that?

- A. It may have been something that Badri repeated in English. But I'm -- as I say, I'm fairly confident that it was wording that Badri used.
- Q. But you can't be sure whether that was translated by Mr Berezovsky or not, can you?
- A. Well, if Badri had said it in English, it wouldn't have needed translation. And, as I say, I'm fairly sure that that was a word that Mr -- a phrase that Mr Patarkatsishvili used in English.
- Q. And you -- there was no way of knowing precisely the context in which he used that expression in English is there, now? You can't say precisely?
- A. Well, the context was the issue that was put to him about, "What precisely was Mr Abramovich saying to you? Was it" -- again, without -- I don't want to stray into privileged areas, but we were discussing the difference between what is a warning and what is a threat and so on with him, and we did put to him, "What precisely was Mr Abramovich saying and what impression were you getting from him?", and that's the context in which it came about.
- Q. But precisely what he meant by "playing a game", you couldn't -- you can't recall clearly what he meant by that?
- A. Well, my recollection is that Mr Patarkatsishvili said that Mr Abramovich was trying to phrase his discussions between the two of them in the context of claiming to be on Mr Patarkatsishvili's side and potentially also a victim rather than being the instrument, and Mr Patarkatsishvili's characterisation of that was: "Yes, that's what he was saying, but he was playing a game. I knew all along that" -- again, this is what he -- I recall him saying -- "I knew all along that he was really the instrument and that by claiming to be a potential victim alongside us he was playing a game".

- Q. But that explanation of what was meant by "playing a game", that would surely have been something translated by Mr Berezovsky?
- A. Again, because it's something that we wanted to hear directly from Mr Patarkatsishvili and because it's something that evidently came out in more simple English than other parts of the eventual statement that you've identified, that's something that would have been a greater proportion coming directly from Mr Patarkatsishvili; but again it's something that, as we've discussed --
- Q. But some of --
- A. -- Mr Berezovsky may have interjected on.
- Q. Mr Berezovsky may have interjected, I'm grateful.

Could I ask you to go back to the proof of evidence at tab 6 of this bundle, page 78. R(D)1/06/78. Could I just remind you again of lines 361 to 364 which state that:

"In early 2001 I proposed to [Mr Berezovsky] that we sell our shares in Sibneft. At this time it was clear that I would not be able to return to Moscow and would be forced to live as a political emigre. To live in such circumstances without money is difficult.

[Mr Berezovsky] resisted my proposal at first but finally agreed to sell. I spoke with [Mr Abramovich]".

Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. Could I next ask you to go to Ms Duncan's note, which is at tab 30 of this bundle, R(D)2/30, at page 124

R(D)2/30/124. You may recall -- the top box against "AP", you may recall that Ms Duncan transcribed this for us earlier this morning. Mr Patarkatsishvili says:

"We were outside [the] co[mpany], no other income -- [Mr Berezovsky] needed [income] to fund political career."

Do you see that?

A. Yes, I see that.

Q. So it is clear that Mr Patarkatsishvili's position, both in the proof of evidence and at the meeting in Tel Aviv, was that both he and Mr Berezovsky were in need of money in early 2001 and that was at least one of the reasons why he wanted, as he put it, to sell his interests in Sibneft. That's what those notes record, isn't it?

A. Well, we can't rule out the possibility that they would have been quite happy to have peace restored between themselves and Mr Abramovich and the flow of dividends restored. So I'm not sure we can jump to that conclusion.

Q. Well, they do record that they were in need of money, do they not, those notes?

A. Yes, they do.

Q. And they do record that that was one of the reasons why they decided to sell? That's what they say.

A. Yes, that was possibly one of the reasons.

Q. Yes.

Could I next ask you to turn to your witness statement at paragraph 24, which is in D2, tab 14 D2/14/61. Do you see the second sentence? You say there:

"The one fact I recall being disagreed was the precise location of a meeting that they both had with Mr Abramovich somewhere in France, which I believe was in relation to the sale of Sibneft."

A. Yes, I see that.

Q. So can I take it from that that you do believe that you were told at the Tel Aviv meeting that Mr Patarkatsishvili, Mr Berezovsky and Mr Abramovich did have a meeting in France with Mr Abramovich in relation to what they called the sale of Sibneft, but they disagreed on the possible location of where that meeting was in France? Is that correct?

A. I think that's fair.

Q. So, for example, the meeting could have been in Paris or it could have been in Megeve or it could have been somewhere else, but it was in France?

A. The two locations they were talking about was the Le Fouquet restaurant and Cap d'Antibes.

Q. Was that not in relation to the sale of the ORT shares?

A. Possibly. I can't recall now exactly what the detail of the meeting was, but I recall that factual disagreement between those two locations.

Q. I see. It must be very difficult to recall the detail of this meeting at this distance of time, Mr McKim?

A. Well, yes. That's my best recollection now, today.

MR JOWELL: Mr McKim, I have no further questions. Thank you very much.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you. Mr Malek?

MR MALEK: No questions, my Lady.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Adkin?

MR ADKIN: My Lady, no.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Mumford?

MR MUMFORD: My Lady, no.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Gillis.

Re-examination by MR GILLIS

MR GILLIS: Mr McKim, just a few questions.

You were asked about occasions when Mr Berezovsky translated for Mr Patarkatsishvili. Given Mr Patarkatsishvili's English abilities, did he appear to understand, so far as you were concerned, what Mr Berezovsky was saying on his behalf?

- A. He seemed to understand, yes. He seemed to remain engaged.
- Q. And apart from the location of the meetings you were just being asked about, did he ever give any indication of disagreeing with what Mr Berezovsky was saying?
- A. Not that I can recall.
- Q. You were asked a series of questions about the comparite(?) document which we have at R(D)3 at tab 35 R(D)3/35/100, and could I just start by clarifying: is it your understanding that this is a comparison to the 19 November draft before the Tel Aviv meeting?
- A. My understanding is that this document is intended to show what I added to the previous proofs prepared by the previous law firms before I went to Tel Aviv.
- Q. Before you went to Tel Aviv?

A. Yes.

Q. Could I ask you to look at your witness statement, which we have at bundle D2, at tab 14, and if I could ask you to turn to paragraph 41, which we have at page 67 D2/14/67, and you explain there that:

"... within a few days of our return from Tel Aviv, I used my notes of the meetings to update Mr Patarkatsishvili's witness statement. Once that process had been completed, in accordance with my usual practice, I would have treated the draft witness statement of Mr Patarkatsishvili as [being] the best record of our meetings with him."

Can I just clarify: is the draft that you prepared in consequence of that process, is that the draft that we have at R(D)3 at tab 33 R(D)3/33/54?

A. There would have been various iterations. But yes, that's a more advanced, post-Tel Aviv draft of the documents I had up and running.

Q. And can I ask you this: did you regard that draft as having been substantiated by what you had been told at the meeting and the prior work that you had done?

MR JOWELL: My Lady, I hesitate to interrupt --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I think that's a leading question, Mr Gillis, isn't it?

MR GILLIS: All right.

Can I then just get you to confirm that this is the draft that you produced in consequence of the work that had been undertaken at the Tel Aviv meeting?

A. Yes.

Q. You were asked about the phrase "playing games" and whether this was a phrase used by Mr Patarkatsishvili.

A. Yes.

Q. Do you recall that?

A. Yes.

Q. Could I ask you to look at R(D)2 at tab 30, at page 129 R(D)2/30/129, and looking -- do you have page 129?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. Looking between the hole-punches, can you see --

A. Yes, I think I can see what you're going to look at.

Q. -- "start to play his game"?

A. Yes.

Q. Could you identify who that phrase has been attributed to?

A. That's been attributed to Mr Patarkatsishvili.

Q. You were asked about R(D)1, tab 6, at page 78 R(D)1/06/78, where Mr Patarkatsishvili talked about living as an emigre. Do you remember that?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. Could I ask you to look at R(D)3 at tab 30, at page 128.

A. Is that R(D)2? I've got R(D)2/128.

Q. I'm sorry, R(D)2, tab 30 at page 128 R(D)2/30/128.

A. Yes, I've got that.

Q. And could I ask you to look at the very bottom of the page and over to the top of the next page.

A. Yes.

Q. Does that conform with your understanding of what Mr Patarkatsishvili was saying as regards his attitude to selling the Sibneft shares?

MR JOWELL: My Lady, I'm afraid that is a --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I think that's another one, isn't it, Mr Gillis?

MR GILLIS: Sorry?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: It's another leading question. If you ask it in a leading form, it doesn't have much weight at the end of the day.

MR GILLIS: No, well -- no, I'm obliged.

Can I ask you whether that conforms with your recollection of what Mr Patarkatsishvili was saying?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Answer the question.

A. Yes, it does, to the best of my present recollection.

MR GILLIS: Thank you. I have no further questions.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you very much.

Thank you very much, Mr McKim, for coming along.

(The witness withdrew)

MR RABINOWITZ: My Lady, that is the last of our witnesses,

so...

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Subject to one more who is being interposed: Mr Pompadur is coming.

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Pompadur, yes.

I think we now move on to Mr Abramovich.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well.

MR RABINOWITZ: Can I ask this, my Lady: that we have ten minutes just to rearrange ourselves, just so I can get my files in place and so on.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, certainly. I'll rise.

(12.05 pm)

(A short break)

(12.15 pm)

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, unless your Ladyship wishes me to, I don't intend to ask each witness about electronic instruments but I do undertake that my solicitors will check with each witness before they take the stand that they have not got any.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Fine.

MR SUMPTION: Is that acceptable?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Okay. It's not just having it turned off; they mustn't have any electronic equipment.

MR SUMPTION: They shouldn't have it in their possession at all.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, very well.

MR SUMPTION: We will make sure that that is something that they are told straightaway before being called.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, I call Mr Abramovich.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well.

MR ROMAN ABRAMOVICH (affirmed)

(All answers interpreted unless otherwise indicated)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Sit down, Mr Abramovich, if you would like to.

Examination-in-chief by MR SUMPTION

MR SUMPTION: Mr Abramovich, I wonder if somebody would pass you bundles E1, E5 and E8. I'm going to start by identifying your various witness statements and I'm then, when I've done that, going to ask you whether they represent your evidence.

Could you please start by turning in bundle E1 to tab 3 E1/03/34. The Russian text of this statement comes at the back of the tab and the English translation at the beginning. Is this your third witness statement?

A. Yes.

Q. And is it signed by you on the final page, at page 234 of the bundle E1/03/234?

A. Yes.

Q. Leaving that open, could you please take bundle E8 at flag 18 E8/18/220 and could you please turn to paragraph 16 in the Russian version of this statement.

Now, if you would look at paragraph 16 and then turn to page 162 of your third witness statement, the big one, paragraph 162 E1/03/83. Is that a modification that you wish to make to paragraph 162 of your main witness statement?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, if you look at the previous paragraph of the seventh witness statement E8/18/220, the second one I referred you to, there is a correction that you wish to make, I think, to paragraph 232.

Would you like to turn to paragraph 232 in your main witness statement E1/03/104. Do you wish to modify paragraph 232 in the way suggested at paragraph 15 of the shorter one that you've got open?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, could you please now take bundle E5 at flag 11 and turn to paragraph 7. Sorry, give me a moment. (Pause)

Sorry, in E5 you should be looking, forgive me, at tab 14.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right, well, I'm lost.

MR SUMPTION: Yes, so am I. It's the fifth witness statement that I want to ask the witness to refer to: it's at flag E8, tab 3 E8/03/26. My apologies.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Now, before you go any further, Mr Sumption, the corrective affidavit --

MR SUMPTION: That was the seventh. I haven't formally proofed it yet, but I intend to do so.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Okay. The document which I have at E8, flag 18, is not a corrective affidavit --

MR SUMPTION: No, it --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: -- and therefore I am confused when you've been referring the witness to that affidavit as a corrective affidavit. It didn't seem to me to have any corrections in it.

MR SUMPTION: Well, parts of it are, because if your Ladyship looks at page 7 --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Oh, I see. Paras 14 to 16 --

MR SUMPTION: Paras 14 to 16 are corrections.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, right. So that is what you have been taking the witness --

MR SUMPTION: That is what I've been taking him to.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. I don't have, for those sitting behind you, tabs 16 and 17.

MR SUMPTION: You will by 2 o'clock.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well.

So now we are in tab 3, are we, of E8?

MR SUMPTION: We are now still in bundle E8 and we should be looking at the fifth witness statement behind tab 3
E8/03/26.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. I'm with you. Thank you.

MR SUMPTION: Mr Abramovich, have you got bundle E8, tab 3?

And if you would like to turn to paragraph 7 on page 29 of that bundle E8/03/29. This is a paragraph that contains some corrections and clarifications to previous evidence.

Paragraph 7.1 is a correction to a reference given in your main witness statement at paragraph 262. Could you turn to paragraph 262 of your main statement E1/03/115, and just confirm that that's a correction that you wish to make?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, I would now like you to please close those bundles and take bundle E5, flag 11 E5/11/2. Is this your fourth witness statement?

A. Yes.

Q. And is it signed by you on page 148 in the Russian text?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, there is, I think, one correction that you wish to make to that, if you would leave it open and take in bundle E8 your fifth witness statement and turn to paragraph 8 on page 30 E8/03/30. There's some rather confusing duplicate numbering here. But if you look at page 30 and paragraph 8 on that page and the subparagraphs that follow, these are various corrections made to your fourth witness statement. Are they corrections that you wish to make?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, your fourth witness statement has an annex, an appendix which you will find at bundles E6 and E7. Bundle E6 E6/01/1 contains the first part of an English and Russian text of the Le Bourget transcript. If you look at the extreme right-hand column, you'll see that there is a commentary attributed to you.

A. Yes.

Q. And is that a commentary that you have prepared as part of your evidence on the relevant parts of the Le Bourget transcript?

A. Yes.

Q. Could you please now turn in bundle E8 to flag 3 E8/03/26. Is this your fifth witness statement?

A. Yes.

Q. And is it signed by you on page 39 E8/03/39? Page 39 of the bundle numbering. Is that your signature?

A. Yes.

Q. And in the same bundle, perhaps you could turn to flag 8 E8/08/101. Is this your sixth witness statement?

A. Yes.

Q. And is it signed by you on page 126 of the bundle numbering E8/08/126?

A. Yes.

Q. Then in flag 18 of the same bundle E8/18/213, is this your seventh witness statement served very recently?

A. Yes.

Q. And is that signed by you on the second-last page of the bundle?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, subject to the corrections which are referred to in the later witness statements, are all of these five statements and your commentary on the Le Bourget meeting true to the best of your knowledge and belief?

A. Yes.

MR SUMPTION: Thank you, Mr Abramovich.

MR MALEK: My Lady, just to explain to your Ladyship what we're proposing by way of a procedure going forward as far as the Chancery defendants are concerned, it's agreed that we will go next and ask any questions that we have by way of cross-examination. As it is, we do not have any questions for Mr Abramovich and that's likely to be the case with all of his other witnesses. But what we have agreed, subject to your Ladyship's agreement, is that if any point emerges out of Mr Rabinowitz's cross-examination which affects us and which is new, with your Ladyship's permission, we may want to ask some questions before Mr Abramovich's re-examination takes place.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Does that go for Mr Adkin and Mr Mumford as well?

MR ADKIN: My Lady, it does.

MR MUMFORD: Yes, it does.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you very much.

Yes, Mr Rabinowitz.

Cross-examination by MR RABINOWITZ

MR RABINOWITZ: Good afternoon, Mr Abramovich.

Mr Abramovich, I think even the translator will need you to speak into the mic so that they can hear what you're saying, so it's something that will go on to the transcript. Do you understand?

A. Yes, I understand, but I don't hear myself.

Q. But we can hear you. So as long as we can hear you, that's okay.

I think also, just to explain, Mr Abramovich -- and perhaps to everyone else -- there's a delay between my asking you a question and you hearing it in Russian and that I think it's always worth waiting for me to finish before you start answering or you won't have the translation and I promise to try and do the same when you answer the question to me. Do you follow?

A. Yes, I agree.

Q. All right, thank you.

Now, can we just begin then by dealing fairly briefly with your personal history. You were born on 24 October 1996 (sic); that is right, I think?

A. '66. '66.

Q. That's wrong. 1966, I'm sorry. That is a good start. We can agree about that.

Do you recall in what year you graduated from high school?

A. I don't really remember. '82 or '83?

Q. If you were 18 when you graduated, that would be 1985.

A. I graduated at the age of 16 and then I went to uni, university.

Q. All right. So you graduated in 1983 or 1984, you think?

A. In 1984 I was already called up for my military service.

Q. So -- well, I'm not sure about that. Didn't you, after high school, be admitted to the Industrial Institute of Ukhta?

A. I -- I really -- I did go to Ukhta Industrial Institute.

Q. That was before you were drafted in the army, according to your witness statement.

A. Yes, it was before.

Q. But you didn't graduate at that stage; you left Ukhta and you were then drafted into the army. Is that right?

A. No, that's not so.

Q. Do you want to tell us what is so then, please?

- A. After leaving school, I entered Ukhta Industrial Institute. I studied there for a year and a half and then I was called up to the armed forces.
- Q. Right. And how long did you spend in the armed forces then?
- A. Two years.
- Q. So you would have finished the armed forces then, would you, in 1986?
- A. Yes, that's so.
- Q. And then do you say that after that you went to Ukhta?
- A. After that I went back to Ukhta, indeed.
- Q. And then when you graduated from the army you were still a private, not an officer; is that right?
- A. Yes, I was a private when I left the armed service, yes.
- Q. And even though you returned to the Institute of Ukhta, you didn't graduate; is that right?
- A. That is so.
- Q. In fact, rather than graduating from the Industrial Institute of Ukhta, you went into business in 1987?
- A. Partly so.
- Q. Do you want to tell me about the part which wasn't so then, please?
- A. I was working and I was studying in the Moscow Road Construction and Automobile Institute.
- Q. So you say that after 1987, when you went into business, you were both working in business and, you say now, studying in the Moscow Road Institute?

A. Yes.

Q. You don't mention this in your witness statement, do you, Mr Abramovich?

A. Well, I describe my biography in general.

Q. Well, in fact, Mr Abramovich, you describe your biography in a way which is not in general; it's in quite detail. You never mention in your witness statement going to what you refer to as the Moscow Road Institute, do you?

A. Because I didn't graduate; I studied for four years and I left it. I didn't graduate it. I didn't have a degree.

Q. Can I then ask you, please, to go to bundle H(A)07 and go to page 41, if you would, please H(A)07/41. If you have that, can you go to page 83 in the bundle H(A)07/83.

Do you see that on page 83 of the bundle, Mr Abramovich, it lists the name of the management of Sibneft? And you can see that you are identified second in the list, "Head of the Moscow office of Sibneft". Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. If we then look at what it says about you, your brief biography, "Roman Abramovich", it says:

"Mr Abramovich graduated in 1987 from the Moscow Road Engineering Institute."

Now, you've just told us that that is not true, Mr Abramovich, haven't you?

- A. I did not write the final diploma work but I did everything else.
- Q. But you did not graduate, did you?
- A. In the English language there isn't an analogous expression of unfinished higher education. But it is true: I didn't actually graduate, I did not finish it.
- Q. And didn't you tell us when you were answering the last question that after you finished the army and went into work, it took you four years, you said, while you were studying to finish at the Moscow Road Institute? Isn't that an answer you gave earlier?
- A. I didn't get the question, please.
- Q. Mr Abramovich, when I first asked you about your history and, as I suspect you anticipated, I was going to ask you about the Moscow Road Institute, I said to you, "What did you do after 1987? You went into work?" And your answer to me was: no, in 1987 you began work, but you also studied for four years at the Moscow Road Institute. Do you remember that?
- A. Yes.

- Q. Can you then explain to me, Mr Abramovich, why in this brief biography it says that you graduated in 1987 from this institute?
- A. It's a mistake.
- Q. Did you read the circular before it was distributed in 1987, Mr Abramovich?
- A. I don't remember. Most likely, yes, but I'm sure I didn't pay much attention to this part. It is obvious that in 1987 I couldn't have graduated from anywhere.
- Q. Well, it is obvious, Mr Abramovich, but I suggest to you this is the only part in this whole circular which relates specifically to your own personal situation and I suggest to you you must have read this. (Pause)
- Do you want to answer that?
- A. I don't remember, but it's a mistake of a technical arithmetical nature. In 1987 I couldn't have graduated from any university, even if I hadn't served in the army.
- Q. No, indeed you couldn't, Mr Abramovich. But you were willing to allow this statement to go out, a statement about which much has been made in other parts of this, where you must have recognised that what it was saying about you was untrue?
- A. I didn't understand it. The circular was prepared in English only.

Q. Can we then just go, please, to bundle H(A)97, page 2 H(A)97/2. Just so you know what this is, Mr Abramovich, this is a witness statement which you made in earlier litigation with which you were involved: it's the Yugraneft litigation. You can see that if you go back to page 2 of this bundle. Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. And go to page 20 H(A)97/20. You'll see that this appears to have been signed -- we don't have a signed version here; it was presumably signed in the Russian version -- on 28 February 2008. Do you see that?

A. I don't see it yet. I think it's only an English version here in this bundle.

Q. That is right. That's fine. Do you see that -- the only point I want to make to you is that it was produced on 28 February 2008. Do you see that?

A. Yes, I can see.

Q. Right. Now, can I ask you, please, to go to page 4 of the bundle H(A)97/4. At paragraph 8 on page 4 --

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, there is a Russian version of this which begins at page 21 in the same flag.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. Mr Abramovich, you might prefer to read it in the Russian.

MR RABINOWITZ: And the relevant paragraph will be on page 23 H(A)97/23. We're looking at paragraph 8.

What this says, Mr Abramovich, in paragraph 8, where you are here describing what you say is your background:

"I attended the Industrial Institute in the city of Ukhta and I completed mandatory service in the Soviet Army. I then studied briefly at the Moscow... Transport Institute before I entered private business."

This seems to suggest, Mr Abramovich, that it was -- that you studied at the Moscow Auto Transport Institute before you went into business, whereas I think what you've previously said in answer today is that you were doing these things at the same time, over a period of four years.

- A. I was studying and I was doing business at the same time. I was studying -- I was studying in the evenings and then by correspondence. I don't know if the -- if in England people can do the same, but I was studying in evenings and then by correspondence.
- Q. The difficulty about that, Mr Abramovich -- and I don't want to spend too much more time on this -- is that this isn't what you say at paragraph 8. In paragraph 8 you say, in effect, that you studied briefly at the Moscow Auto Transport Institute before you entered into private business, and that suggests that your evidence in the Yugraneft proceedings was that the business followed a period of study at the Moscow institute. (Pause)

Do you want to comment on that or shall we move on?

A. Yes, I would like to comment. In my witness statement it says that at the time when I was studying in the Moscow Road Institute, I was working in a state organisation. I didn't mean I was in business. But later I also went into business.

Q. All right.

Can we just go back to what you say you did in 1987, when you tell us in your witness statement that you went into business. It's right, isn't it, that what you mean by this was that in 1987 you were head of a welding unit in a construction and installation directorate? Is that right?

A. And also that. And that as well.

Q. And how long was that for?

A. I don't remember now anymore.

Q. You say "that as well" and I now just want to be clear about what "as well" you say you were doing in 1987. Because you were working at -- you were studying for the Moscow institute, you were involved with this construction and installation directorate. Was there something else that you say you were doing in 1987?

A. And I was also involved in business.

Q. All right. After I think you finished with the construction and installation directorate, is this right: you organised a cooperative called Uyut which made plastic toys?

A. Yes.

Q. And it was at Uyut, wasn't it, where you were making these toys, that you first worked with Mr Shvidler? Or had you worked with him before this?

A. I don't remember Mr Shvidler working in Uyut in particular, but it looks like it must be so.

Q. And is this also where you worked for the first time with people called first Valery Oiff -- and I apologise if I've mispronounced that -- and Andrey Bloch?

A. I think so.

Q. Now, next can we come to the question of your law qualification. At paragraph 3 of your third witness statement you told us that you had:

"... completed [your] higher education in May 2001, having graduated from the correspondence department of the Moscow State Law Academy."

Do you remember saying that?

A. Yes.

Q. And would it be fair to say that this paragraph gives the impression that you in fact have a law degree?

A. I don't understand very well what "a law degree" means. But to some extent, yes, I graduated from Moscow Legal Academy and I have a diploma certifying that I graduated. That's what I mean.

Q. Now, is the position in relation to this law qualification that you have now further explained at paragraph 35 of your sixth witness statement? Can we just have a look at that, please: it's at bundle E8, tab 8, page 111 E8/08/111. In the Russian it's page 125, I'm sorry E8/08/125. Do you have that?

Just looking at what you said, paragraph 35, this is about halfway down, about five lines down, you say:

"In 2000, I entered the distance learning department of the law faculty and decided to major in state and legal sciences where focus is made on such disciplines as the theory of state and law and administrative law. In 2001, I graduated from this course..."

Now, can I ask you next, please, to go to H(A)97 at tab 2, which is where -- you may have it in front of you -- it's where you made your Yugraneft statement. Sorry, page 2. H(A)97, page 2 H(A)97/2. Someone will take you -- I think the Russian one starts at page 22 H(A)97/22.

You see, at paragraph 8 H(A)97/4, if you're there again, in the paragraph we were looking at earlier, after the reference to your studying at the Moscow Auto Transport Institute and entering private business, you said:

"I later received a law degree from the Moscow State Law Academy."

Perhaps you can clarify: do you or do you not have a law degree?

A. Yes, I do have a degree of a lawyer.

Q. A law degree; yes?

A. It's difficult for me to interpret what you mean by "a law degree". I have a diploma of a lawyer.

Q. All right. Would it be fair to say that the position you've taken is to wish to stress that there is nothing in your legal training that will have provided you with any knowledge or insight in relation to commercial or business legal matters?

A. Well, I'm giving the facts.

Q. I'm just trying to understand your position in terms of how much law you understand. What I asked you is: would it be fair to say that the position you have taken is to wish to stress that there is nothing in your legal training that will have provided you with any knowledge or insight in relation to commercial or business legal matters?

A. Once again, I just give you the facts: I have a diploma of a Moscow legal academy, I studied there for a year, and that's it. I don't quite understand what I should answer to your question.

Q. The answer that I'm asking you for, Mr Abramovich, in fact comes out of your own witness statement. You have bundle E8 there in front of you. In the English it's at paragraph 35 at page 111 E8/08/111. Someone will find it for you in the Russian: page 125 E8/08/125.

You see, the point I was making to you is the point that you yourself had been making in your witness statement:

"Nothing in that course provided me with any knowledge or insight in relation to commercial or business legal matters..."

I don't understand why you wouldn't agree with that.

A. I agree. I never insisted that I was a good student, that I knew everything about law.

Q. Can we just move on then from your early years and I'd like to understand your evidence about the team of people who have been around with you over the years.

In paragraph 14 of your third witness statement -- that's at E1, tab 3, page 38; in Russian at page 138. I'm not sure it's worth turning it up; I was just referring to it because you refer there to your "close friend and business colleague" Mr Shvidler, who has, you say, provided invaluable assistance in business in a number of industries. Do you recollect saying that?

A. Yes.

- Q. Mr Shvidler and you are very close, are you not?
- A. Yes, it's true.
- Q. You've worked together since about 1987?
- A. With a small break, yes.
- Q. And Mr Shvidler says that when you're in the same city you typically have both lunch and dinner together every day, is that correct?
- A. Yes, that is correct.
- Q. Can you explain what financial arrangements you have or have had with Mr Shvidler over the years?
- A. At present we are partners. In the past he was an employee, now if we talk about it formally, but I always considered him my partner.
- Q. You always considered him your partner. But are you saying that you've never actually been partners until very recently?
- A. It depends on what you mean by this word. Whether we invested money together in '87? Absolutely not.
- Q. Well, you tell me what you mean by this word. You can tell me how you're distinguishing what you identify and perhaps describe as being a partnership from what you think I mean by that.

What was your relationship from 1987?

MR SUMPTION: Well, my Lady, how can he possibly answer a question like that?

MR RABINOWITZ: I'll put it again.

What was your relationship from 1987?

A. It's difficult for me to say how you would interpret something.

Q. What was your relationship with Mr Shvidler from 1987?

A. We were friends.

Q. And you say he was your employee?

A. Yes, he was my employee.

Q. So you would have had a financial arrangement with him which, what, involved you paying him a salary?

A. Yes, I paid him a salary. That is true.

Q. And do you say that Mr Shvidler had no ownership interest in Runicom SA or Runicom Limited?

A. Runicom SA and Runicom Limited belonged to me.

Q. So it follows that Mr Shvidler had no ownership interest in either of those companies, does it?

A. As far as I know, none.

Q. Mr Abramovich, if you didn't know whether he had an ownership interest, who possibly could?

A. He didn't have any.

Q. What about in --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just a second. Did he get performance-related remuneration?

A. It really depends on which year we're talking about.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I see. Thank you.

MR RABINOWITZ: Can I just follow up --

A. Mainly he received a salary.

Q. When you say, "It... depends on which year we're talking about", can you identify which year you say he would have received performance-related payments?

A. Most likely when he worked in Sibneft he received bonuses that were performance-related.

Q. And that would have been from when, 1995?

A. Much later. In '95 Sibneft did not belong to us.

Q. You tell me which year you say he would have received performance-related bonuses then?

A. I don't know exactly, but I think probably starting from '97 or so.

MR RABINOWITZ: My Lady, this is as convenient a time as any. We've got a few more questions on this.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Oh, right. I hadn't noticed the time. Very well. 2.05.

Mr Abramovich, you mustn't talk to anybody about the case or your evidence during the break or in the evenings; you understand that, do you?

Very well. 2.05, please.

(1.05 pm)

(The short adjournment)

(2.05 pm)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, Mr Rabinowitz.

MR RABINOWITZ: My Lady, just so you know, I've been asked to slow down. So if you I think I'm going inordinately slowly, that is because I've been asked to, so that the simultaneous translation can keep up.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: And it's right I should be on channel 1, is it?

MR RABINOWITZ: Yes, I believe so.

Mr Abramovich, I was asking you about your financial arrangements with Mr Shvidler. Do you say Mr Shvidler never had any interest in any Sibneft shares?

A. Mr Shvidler never had, so far as I know, any interest in Sibneft shares.

Q. And it was Mr Shvidler who effectively ran Runicom SA; is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. And the documents show that Mr Shvidler effectively ran Sibneft from 1996. Would that be right as well?

A. I believe that prior to '97 maybe Mr Shvidler worked in Sibneft but the company was actually run and managed by Viktor Andreyevich Gorodilov.

Q. So Mr Shvidler was involved, you say, with Sibneft from 1996 but you think it was being managed by Mr Viktor Gorodilov?

A. Prior to the privatisation of the company, so far as I can recall, Mr Shvidler had never worked in Sibneft before it was privatised.

- Q. Well, he was the chief financial officer and vice president from 1996 until July 1998, wasn't he?
- A. Could you ask that question again, please? I'm not sure I understood you.
- Q. He was the chief financial officer and vice president of Sibneft from 1996 until 1998, wasn't he?
- A. I think so.
- Q. Well, that's his own evidence, Mr Abramovich.
- A. I simply do not recollect. When I was writing the evidence I was working with documents, so that must be more correct.
- Q. And then Mr Shvidler became president of Sibneft and also president of the management board from 1998 until October 2005; is that right?
- A. Yes, that is correct.
- Q. Yet, Mr Abramovich, Mr Shvidler seems to have received, relative to the value he was generating for you, a minimal salary at Sibneft. Is that right?
- A. Unfortunately I'm not aware of this, I have no recollection of this.
- Q. Do you have any recollection of what his salary was?
- A. No, I do not recall what his salary was.
- Q. There's an offering circular of 2002 which I'd like to show you, if I may, for your comment. Can you please be given bundle H(A)44 and go to page 79 H(A)44/79.

Just so you can see what this is, if you go back to page 41 of that file H(A)44/41, you'll see the beginning of the document. Do you see that at the bottom of the page -- you can see it's a Sibneft offer for a loan participation note, but at the bottom of that page it shows the date of the document, or at least the date of the offering circular, as being 1 March 2002?

A. Unfortunately it's all in English. I would love to be able to assist the court but the problem here is that it's all in English here. I can see the date here but I'm not sure I understand what it's all about, unfortunately.

Q. All right. So take it from me that the date of the circular is March 2002, okay?

A. I will take it from you. I trust you.

Q. Thank you, Mr Abramovich.

Can you go, please, back to page 79 H(A)44/79.

Now, at page 79 there is a heading, "Compensation and Share Ownership", and I will read that so that it can be translated for you, if I may:

"In 2000 Sibneft did not pay any of its Board of Directors any base salary bonuses and benefits in kind for acting as Directors of Sibneft. The total aggregate remuneration, including base salary, bonuses and benefits in kind, paid or granted by Sibneft to certain Directors and members of the management board for management services in 2000 was approximately US$200,000."

Okay? So the suggestion in the circular is that the aggregate amount of all payments made to directors, including bonuses, was $200,000. Does that give you some assistance as to what Mr Shvidler's salary would have been, certainly in the year 2000?

A. Unfortunately it is of no help to me.

Q. Well, you'll have to explain why it's of no help because in a public document Sibneft has made clear that the total amount that it is paying all the directors -- and one would include Mr Shvidler in that -- was an aggregate amount of $200,000. That suggests that his salary from Sibneft would have been fairly small, doesn't it?

A. Well, obviously the salary that was being paid to him was less than $200,000; that much I can agree with.

Q. And that suggests that any wealth that Mr Shvidler will have accumulated was certainly not from a salary that he was paid by Sibneft, wouldn't it?

A. I really don't know what to say. What kind of assets are you talking about which were not a part of the salary? I'm not sure I understand the question.

Q. Well, the question is clear -- well, let me put it this way.

We've seen reports that suggests Mr Shvidler is worth many billions of dollars, with a chateau in France and property in England and elsewhere. Are you aware of the fact that Mr Shvidler is a very wealthy man?

A. Well, if you ask me, from my point of view this is a slight exaggeration on the part of the newspapers.

Q. Do you say that Mr Shvidler is not a very wealthy man?

A. Well, it's a rather bizarre description. It's really hard for me to say what is a wealthy person, what is not a wealthy person. Well, he's a rich person but I do not know to what extent he is satisfied with the income that he makes; that I don't know.

Q. Well, whatever his income, Mr Abramovich, what is clear is that he wouldn't have become wealthy on any basis from the salary that he was receiving from Sibneft; that is right, isn't it?

A. This is absolutely correct. In the year 2000 he simply did not have any of those assets or properties that you have just listed.

Q. So if he didn't make whatever money he has made from a salary in Sibneft and he did not have any stake in your businesses, can you explain how he came to make the substantial wealth that he has now made?

A. I have already mentioned that we had become partners, from a certain point of time we started investing money together, but also at the time when he was working in Sibneft he did not have that wealth that you are now referring to. Now, if you're asking whether or not he was my partner in Sibneft, the answer is: no, he was not my partner in Sibneft.

Q. It's right --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just a second. Mr Abramovich, please could you tell me when Mr Shvidler became your business partner, roughly, the year?

A. I believe that it was in '03, maybe '04, maybe even later. I think Pharmstandard was the very first transaction that we did together but I wouldn't dare be very specific about this. I think it was when we were doing the Pharmstandard transaction.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: And what is the percentage of your partnership or does it change depending on the transaction, the respective percentage interests of your partnership?

A. It changed depending on the company into which we were making our investments and depending on the transactions. We never had any ongoing partnership relationship. There were some projects into which we invested together, then there were other projects into which we invested separately.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: And was it as much as a 50/50 split in your business interests in some transactions, so far as he was concerned?

A. From what I recall, we never had a 50/50 split. Most probably not.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right, thank you.

MR RABINOWITZ: What was the split then, Mr Abramovich?

Let's take Pharmstandard. You mentioned a company called, I think, Pharmstandard. Can you just explain what that is?

A. It was a company that produced medication, medicines, for the Russian market.

Q. And what about a company called Chusovoy Metals Company: were you partners in that?

A. To be honest, I do not recall what the situation was with respect to Chusovoy. We only owned it for a very brief period of time. I think I was there alone actually. And also I think that our ownership interest there was really insignificant.

Q. And is it right that Mr Shvidler is the chairman of the board of directors of Millhouse LLC?

A. Yes.

Q. And this is right, isn't it: that Millhouse LLC is a company that you established in Russia in April 2006 which you use as an investment adviser?

A. Yes.

Q. You've mentioned so far, I think, just Pharmstandard. What other partnership interests do you say you either have or had with Mr Shvidler?

A. We have invested together into some real estate in Russia, if I recall correctly. Evraz as well, we also invested together into Evraz. I cannot recall anything apart from that off the cuff.

Q. Mr Shvidler has been assisting you in the conduct of this litigation; that's right, isn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. Can you explain in what way Mr Shvidler has been assisting you in the conduct of this litigation?

A. He is not assisting me; he's assisting the court by providing witness evidence.

Q. He's doing more than that, Mr Abramovich. He's assisting your team in the conduct of this litigation beyond just providing evidence; that's true, isn't it?

A. Well, maybe I misunderstood the term that you're using. So far as I understand, he is only providing witness evidence. So far as assistance in the litigation is concerned, I think Andrey De Cort is in charge of that.

Q. Let me show you a document which is at J4, tab 1.11, page 105 J4/1.11/105. If you look at paragraph 48

there, please. I'll just tell you what this document is: it's a skeleton argument that your counsel produced for a conjoined CMC -- that's a case management conference -- fairly recently. And if you look at the last sentence of paragraph 48 -- I'll just read this for you, then it can be translated:

"The final individual present..."

And he's referring to a note of a meeting where Mr Shvidler was present.

"The final individual present, Mr Shvidler, is an associate of Mr Abramovich and has been assisting in the Commercial Court Action."

Now, it's obvious from what is there said, Mr Abramovich, that they don't just mean that he's giving witness evidence. Do you follow?

- A. I'm trying -- I'm trying, I'm doing my best to understand what you're saying, but I'm not sure that I understand this exactly and fully.
- Q. Tell me this: have you discussed your evidence with Mr Shvidler?
- A. Yes.
- Q. And has he discussed the evidence that he is giving in this litigation with you?
- A. Could you kindly repeat the question?
- Q. Has he discussed the evidence that he is giving in this litigation with you?

A. I have read his evidence.

Q. Mr Abramovich, that is not the question I asked you.

You told us that you had discussed the evidence that you are giving with him and my question to you was whether he had discussed the evidence that he's giving in this litigation with you.

A. I believe that this was a mutual discussion, possibly, if -- to the extent that I understand your question correctly. If you're asking me whether or not we agreed on our evidence, no, we did not agree on that. He has his evidence and I have my own evidence and there may be particular specific items on which I may disagree.

Q. But the two of you discussed the evidence that you were going to give; is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, apart from Mr Shvidler, you have made clear in your evidence that you have, for a long time, had the same small team of people with you; correct?

A. Yes, that is correct.

Q. And these are people you say you know and trust and rely upon?

A. Yes, that is true.

Q. Can you tell us who are the individuals who make up the small team of people, please?

- A. I'm not sure I understand what you mean. Do you mean what kind of people they are, are they good people or bad people, or who they are by name?
- Q. Just -- if you could just identify them by name, please.
- A. Shvidler, Panchenko, Gorodilov, Tenenbaum. The majority of those people take part in these proceedings, but not all of them.
- Q. In fact I think all of those do take part in these proceedings, Mr Abramovich, the ones that you've listed.
- A. Yes, I listed those people who do take part in these proceedings. But whether or not these are all the people who are my friends and my partners, no, this is not an exhaustive list of my friends and partners.
- Q. Well, you say "friends and partners". Which of those people are your partners?
- A. Now, if I understand your question correctly, you're asking me who are the people who I invest together with. That includes Mr Shvidler and I think that Mr Gorodilov as well, but I'm not sure about the others.
- Q. My question to you, Mr Abramovich, was about the same small team of people that had been with you for a while, people who you say you know and trust and rely upon.

You've identified Ms Panchenko, Mr Tenenbaum, Mr Shvidler and Mr Gorodilov, all of whom are witnesses in this litigation. Is there no one else who you would say is a part of your small team of people that you trust and rely upon?

- A. Well, the group of associates whom I trust and rely upon is larger than just those four or five people who are present here and those who are providing witness statements.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Rabinowitz, I think you've got to be a bit more specific as to the business context at which this question is directed.

MR RABINOWITZ: Let me ask it in this way: is Ms Khudyk not a person who has been with you for a long time and who you know and trust and rely upon?

- A. I know Ms Khudyk but, to be honest, prior to these proceedings I had seen her probably on six or maybe eight occasions. But I definitely do trust her.

Q. And there have been a number of names of witnesses from Chukotka who you may or may not be calling. Are any of those family members?

- A. Ruchina Ida is my cousin. She is my cousin.

Q. What about Mr Voloshin: is he someone you have known for a long time and trust?

- A. It is true. I've known him for a long time and I believe that he is a friend.

Q. And when preparing your pleaded case in these proceedings -- do you know what I mean by a "pleaded case", your pleading? A defence? I'm just asking whether you know what I mean when I say "your pleaded case", "your defence": the document that you produced. Do you know what I'm referring to?

A. I'm not sure I understand your question fully. You've been referring to those papers. So what was the question: what papers I know?

Q. All I want to understand from you is this: do you know -- I was going to ask you a question about the position as it was when you prepared your pleaded case, your defence. Now, what I want to first ascertain is that you know what I'm referring to.

Do you know what I'm referring to when I talk about "your defence", your amended -- the defence in these proceedings?

A. Sorry, you mean the document that Paul Mitchard was preparing?

Q. Well, let me make sure that we're referring to the same document. Can you be given bundle A1 and go to tab 3, please A1/03/35.

This is what we refer to as the defence. This is the most recent version, but this is the document we refer to as your defence. Do you understand now what I'm referring to?

A. Yes, I understand. But unfortunately, because it's only in English, from what I can see now, I cannot read it.

Q. That's not a problem at the moment, Mr Abramovich.

My question is this: when you were preparing your defence, your pleading in this action, were you assisted in your recollection by any of the members of your team? And I have in mind Ms Panchenko, Mr Tenenbaum, Mr Shvidler in particular.

A. The problem is that I cannot recognise this document.

I cannot answer your question. I cannot confirm this nor can I deny this. I simply do not know what this is.

Q. Well, Mr Abramovich, we have a problem that the only document that we have in this case, which is your defence, is the one in English. Now, it's one that, as I believe, you actually have signed. If you go to page 84 A1/03/84, you'll see that you have signed this document.

A. Yes, I can see that I have signed this document.

Q. So you have plainly seen this before?

A. I have seen this document, but I believe that it was in Russian and therefore at that time I felt more comfortable; or maybe it was a translation that I was happy with. But the way this document is shown to me now, I cannot recollect it.

Q. For the purposes of my question it doesn't matter whether you saw one in Russian or one in English because my question to you was this: when you were preparing your defence in these proceedings, were you assisted in your recollection by any of the people who you've identified as being those closest to you, whom you trust?

A. Not so far as I can say, to the extent that I understand the substance of this document properly, but I cannot confirm this.

Q. Right. That's a rather convoluted answer to really what was a very simple question, Mr Abramovich.

The question is simply this: when you produced your defence, the written pleading, were you assisted by discussing the matter with the people who you say were closest to you and whom you trusted? I'm not asking you about any particular paragraph.

A. Most probably I have discussed this document with them. I'm trying to be of assistance but unfortunately I cannot tell you anything. Most probably we did discuss that. The question is: when was this document prepared?

Q. Well, whenever it was prepared, would you have been discussing it with your close team of advisers in their preparation?

A. With a -- yes, with a very high extent of probability, I would say.

- Q. And who do you say, with a very high extent of probability, you would have been discussing it with?
- A. I'm sure I discussed it with Shvidler and Tenenbaum but this is the way I feel about this: my problem really is that I don't know how to answer your question because I don't know what this document is about, what it says.
- Q. You've told us that you discussed your evidence in your witness statement with Mr Shvidler. Can you identify --
- A. (Untranslated)
- Q. Sorry, Mr Abramovich?
- MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: What's the problem? Is there a problem with the loudspeaker?
- THE WITNESS: Unfortunately I did not hear that.
- MR RABINOWITZ: Let's start again. I thought you were trying to say something, but...
- MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Put the question again, Mr Rabinowitz.
- MR RABINOWITZ: You have explained to us that before producing your witness statement, you discussed your evidence with Mr Shvidler. Did you discuss your evidence also with Mr Tenenbaum?
- A. What I meant was my third witness statement and that I did discuss both with Mr Shvidler and with Mr Tenenbaum.
- Q. Did you, before producing that witness statement, discuss it with someone -- with people other than Mr Shvidler and Mr Tenenbaum? Did you discuss it with Mr Gorodilov?

A. If you mean the third witness statement, then there is a high probability that I did.

Q. And did you discuss it -- and I do mean the third witness statement -- also with Ms Panchenko?

A. I don't think so.

Q. And you tell us you discussed what you were putting in your witness statement with those, I think, three individuals. Did they discuss with you what they were going to be saying in their witness statements as well?

A. What they were going to put into their evidence statement is not something that they discussed with me, but I did read their witness statements.

Q. So you say you discussed with them what you were going to put into theirs (sic), but they didn't discuss with you what they were going to put into their own statements?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, it's the other way round, I think, Mr Rabinowitz.

MR RABINOWITZ: Sorry. They discussed with you what you were going to put into your statement, but they didn't discuss with you what they were going to put into their statements?

A. Could you kindly repeat your question, please?

- Q. They discussed with you what you were going to put into your statement, but they didn't discuss with you what they were going to put into their statements?
- A. We discussed the situation on the whole, in general. I cannot say that we went into the details of the witness statements or anything. I don't really know what to say in response to your question.
- Q. Just give us a straight answer, if you would, Mr Abramovich. You've told us that they discussed with you what you were going to put into your statement. I'm asking whether you also discussed with them what they were going to be putting into their statements, and the answer to that is either, "Yes, we did discuss that", or, "No, we didn't".
- A. We have never discussed who will say what in his or her witness statement. This is my answer.
- Q. Now, presumably you have spent some time preparing to come and give evidence in court today; is that right?
- A. Yes, that is right.
- Q. And have you been assisted by anyone in preparing the evidence that you're going to be giving today?
- A. Yes. I have been assisted, yes.
- Q. I'm not asking you about the lawyers from Skadden who are involved in this, but would you identify for us who else has assisted you in terms of preparing to give evidence today?

A. There is a specialised company, Bond Solo or something like that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: What do they do?

MR RABINOWITZ: What do they do, Mr Abramovich? I think they're called Bond Solon.

A. They told us that you need to breathe slowly, that you have to look at the judge, there is a certain etiquette that you have to comply with. That's -- on the whole that's what they taught us.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Apart from that, I think the question that Mr Rabinowitz is putting to you is: amongst your own team, did someone help you prepare for giving evidence in court?

A. No.

MR RABINOWITZ: Are you sure about that, Mr Abramovich?

A. If I understood your question correctly, then yes, I am sure.

Q. But just so we're sure that you did understand the question correctly, in terms of preparing to come and be giving evidence today -- leave aside Bond Solon, who don't deal with the substance -- the question is: did anyone else, part of your team, assist you in preparing to come and give evidence today?

A. No.

Q. Very well. I want to turn next to deal with the substance of the Sibneft claim with you.

Our case, as you know, is that discussions leading to the 1995 agreement between you and Mr Berezovsky, and then between you, Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili, began in 1994 and continued until shortly before the decree creating Sibneft in 1995.

Now, I know we will disagree on the substance of what was agreed between the three of you, but do you agree with the timing?

A. Could I ask you to repeat that question? It's a very long question and I'm not sure that I understood everything.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Rabinowitz, you're going to have to put specific timings or at least ballpark timings to the witness if you want him to agree with "the timing".

MR RABINOWITZ: Very well.

There were discussions between you, Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili beginning in December 1994; is that correct?

A. No, this is not correct.

Q. Let me just put the other part of the question to you: and those discussions continued until shortly before the decree creating Sibneft in August 1995; is that correct?

A. This is not correct.

- Q. When do you say the agreement was reached between you and Mr Berezovsky in relation to the plan with respect to Sibneft?
- A. If the name Patarkatsishvili does not appear in your question, then the answer is that the agreement was reached I believe in February 1995.
- Q. Now, just so you know what we say, we say the agreement reached over the period, finally arrived at in August 1995, was to the effect that the three of you, as partners, would work together to bring about the creation of and then to acquire ownership and control of Sibneft, and you dispute that, I think.
- A. What you're saying is wrong.
- Q. I just want to tell you what our case is and to get your response to it. Okay?
- Now, our case is that you would each have certain roles. You were going to coordinate contacts in the oil industry and would manage Sibneft following the acquisition of control. Do you agree that that was to be your role?
- A. No, I do not agree with that.
- Q. And we say that Mr Berezovsky would be responsible for lobbying and he and Mr Patarkatsishvili would secure access to necessary funds as well as leading commercial negotiations with key business counterparties, such as Omsk Oil Refinery and Noyabrskneftegas. Do you agree with that or do you disagree with that?

A. I do not agree with that.

Q. Do you also not agree that you all concluded a legally binding agreement under which Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili would receive 50 per cent of the benefit of acquiring Sibneft, both 50 per cent of the ownership interest and 50 per cent of any profits generated as a result of acquiring ownership and control of the company?

A. I -- forgive me, could you please split your question up into smaller parts? I'm not sure I understood everything.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: There's a double negative: that may be the problem, Mr Rabinowitz.

MR RABINOWITZ: Do you agree that you concluded a legally binding agreement with Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili under which Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili would receive 50 per cent of the benefit of acquiring Sibneft?

A. No, I do not agree with that.

Q. And I'll explain that "50 per cent of the benefit of acquiring Sibneft" would include both 50 per cent of the ownership interest and 50 per cent of any profits generated as a result of acquiring ownership and control of the company. Do you agree with that?

A. I disagree with that.

Q. Am I right that you also disagree that there was an agreement that you would offer Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili, and they would offer you, the opportunity to participate in any future businesses on the same terms?

A. I disagree with that as well.

Q. We say there was such an agreement. But you say that the 1995 agreement, whatever it was, was entirely limited to Sibneft; is that right?

A. The '95 agreement was limited only to Sibneft and to the money that we had discussed. We did not take -- discuss any ownership interests or participatory interests, much less with Mr Patarkatsishvili because he did not attend, he was not around.

Q. Now, what I would like to do next, Mr Abramovich, is to try and understand how much of the two cases -- that's to say Mr Berezovsky's case and your case -- are common ground. I'm going to put a series of points to you and then ask you to comment. Okay?

Now, Mr Sumption in opening said this, these were his words:

"Mr Berezovsky says repeatedly in his witness statement that without particular influence over President Yeltsin, Mr Abramovich would have got nowhere in the world of Russian business and would certainly not have acquired control of Sibneft. We accept [said Mr Sumption] that that was so."

Now, Mr Sumption was speaking as your advocate and so I imagine that you will agree that without Mr Berezovsky you would not have acquired control of Sibneft?

A. I agree with this statement.

Q. And is it also your case, as Mr Sumption suggested in opening, that without access to someone who is politically influential, like Mr Berezovsky, "nobody could acquire or build up a... business in Russia in the 1990s"? That is what he said. Do you agree with that?

A. Well, this is a slight exaggeration but I would agree with this in part only.

Q. What part do you agree with, first?

A. Let me say what I disagree with. You said that, "Only Mr Berezovsky" -- or at least the interpreter said that, "Only Mr Berezovsky could", and so on and so forth. So this is the part with which I disagree.

Q. In fact that may have been a slight mistranslation.

The point that Mr Sumption had made in opening was that without access to someone who was politically influential, like Mr Berezovsky, "nobody could acquire or build up a... business in Russia in the 1990s"?

Do you agree with that?

- A. On the whole I would agree with that. But I did not need Mr Berezovsky to gain access to the business, in order to build up a large piece of business. Yes, he was very useful for that.
- Q. It's your case, isn't it, that Mr Berezovsky did help you with Sibneft? I think we've established that.
- A. I absolutely agree with that, yes.
- Q. But not, I think you say, with any other businesses?
- A. I do not agree with other businesses, so far as other businesses are concerned.
- Q. When you say -- well, the translation is that you "do not agree with other businesses". The point is that Mr Berezovsky, you say, wasn't helping you with other businesses; is that right?
- A. He only helped me with Sibneft.
- Q. Do you say you paid for access to someone like Mr Berezovsky to assist you with any other business that you were conducting in the 1990s?
- A. No, I'm not saying this.
- Q. So it follows then that it's your evidence also that you could not and did not build up any other substantial businesses in Russia in the 1990s; that's right, isn't it?

A. This is a very relative thing, serious, large business. Our business was a serious business. Compared with Sibneft it was not very significant, but it was a significant piece of business.

Q. Mr Sumption also described as common ground that you agreed in 1995 that Mr Berezovsky would lobby to enable you to gain control of Sibneft and that once you had control of Sibneft, you would be responsible for managing Sibneft.

A. Forgive me. Could you repeat your question, please?

Q. Well, Mr Sumption described it as common ground that you agreed in 1995 that Mr Berezovsky would lobby to enable you to gain control of Sibneft and that once you had control, you would be responsible for managing Sibneft. That's what Mr Sumption said was common ground and I take it you agree with what Mr Sumption says there?

A. Yes, I agree.

Q. Mr Sumption also told the court that -- and these are his words:

"As Sibneft prospered and Mr Abramovich was in a position to pay more, Mr Berezovsky demanded more."

Is that your evidence?

A. Yes, this is my evidence.

Q. Mr Sumption also referred in this regard -- that is to say in regard to your paying Mr Berezovsky as a result of what you say were his increasing demands -- to ongoing discussions leading to periodic agreements as to how much you would pay.

Again, is that your evidence as well?

A. I'm sorry, could you split it up into smaller questions?

It's very difficult for me to follow your train of thought.

Q. Well, let's see if I can. This is what Mr Sumption said to the court, okay? I'm trying to understand whether you agree with what he told the court your case was.

What Mr Sumption said was that as a result of -- that the way in which one arrived at you paying Mr Berezovsky ever greater amounts, as you say, because of his ever greater demands, was following ongoing discussions leading to periodic payments. Is that what you say happened?

A. Yes, that is true.

Q. Mr Sumption also told the court that in 1995 Mr Berezovsky did give a personal assurance to Mr Smolensky that SBS would be repaid. Mr Sumption said that he accepted that that is what happened and I just want you to say whether you agree with what Mr Sumption said about that.

A. I agree with that.

Q. Mr Sumption also told the court -- and these were his words -- that:

"... there are legitimate issues about the fairness of Russian criminal proceedings in cases involving high-profile political figures."

Do you accept that that is accurate?

- A. I honestly do not have any view on that, but that is possible.
- Q. Do you accept that Mr Berezovsky could not expect to get a fair trial in Russia and that that has been the position since, at the latest, 2000? Sorry, at the latest, late 2000.
- A. I disagree with that.
- Q. You say that Mr Berezovsky could have got a fair trial in Russia, do you?
- A. The way I see it, Mr Berezovsky could have got a fair trial in the Russian Federation, in the Russian court.
- Q. Very well.

Now, just moving on from those points, Mr Sumption also identified in his written opening three "compelling reasons", he said, why the 1995 agreement "[could] not have involved an interest in Sibneft or its profits". Do you recall Mr Sumption identifying three compelling reasons why he said the 1995 agreement could not have involved an interest in Sibneft or its profits?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, it's not a memory test,

Mr Rabinowitz. Put them to him, please.

MR RABINOWITZ: Well, let me identify the first of those reasons.

The first reason identified by Mr Sumption was that he said Mr Berezovsky's case was:

"... not consistent with the way in which, between 1995 and 1997, the shares in Sibneft were actually acquired."

Do you recall that?

A. Yes, I recall that.

Q. And in particular Mr Sumption suggested to the court that -- and this is what he said:

"... Mr Abramovich acquired Sibneft with his own funds..."

Is that your evidence?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. Mr Sumption also contended that:

"The critical point about the loans for shares auction [was] that the successful [bid]..."

And these were his words:

"... would not acquire any Sibneft shares at all either immediately or in the event of a default."

In fact, he went so far as to tell the court that success in the loans for shares auction was "completely irrelevant to the question of title of the company shares". Do you remember that?

A. Once again, could you repeat your last question, please?

Q. I just want to know -- I'll tell you what Mr Sumption said. Mr Sumption said that success in the loan for shares auction was "completely irrelevant to the question of title to the company shares". Okay?

A. I agree with that.

Q. And Mr Sumption also said that your only interest -- your only interest -- in the creation of Sibneft and in winning the loan for shares auction was so that -- and these were his words:

"... any shares that [you] might buy in [Sibneft] at stages two and three would greatly increase in value."

Is that your evidence as well?

A. Unfortunately, what is it that is increasing in value? Please could you clarify?

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, it may be that stage two and stage three need to be explained to the witness, unless he has a complete recall of my every word. Let me see if I can help --

MR RABINOWITZ: Stage one was acquiring control of management in the December 1995 auction. Okay? Stage two was acquiring shares in Sibneft as the state sold off that part of the company which was not the subject of the December 1995 auction. And stage three was acquiring the shares which were auctioned following the State's default in not paying back the loan.

MR SUMPTION: I'm sorry to intervene but describing shares as "the subject of the... 1995 auction" is begging a substantial question. It may be more intelligible if my learned friend spoke in terms of 49 per cent or 51 per cent, which would at least identify the shares he's asking about.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, what I'm going to do, Mr Rabinowitz, is I'm going to take the break for ten minutes and perhaps you could come back to the question after the break.

Mr Abramovich, please don't discuss your evidence with anybody. I won't say this every time now, but you mustn't discuss the evidence or the case with any of your team or anyone else.

Okay. Ten minutes.

(3.08 pm)

(A short break)

(3.22 pm)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, Mr Rabinowitz.

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Abramovich, I asked you a question which involved reference to various stages and I've been asked to clarify what I meant by those stages. What I'm going to do is identify by reference to what Mr Sumption said in his written opening what stage one and stage two and stage three were and then I'll ask the question again.

Do you follow?

A. Yes. Yes, I do.

Q. Very good.

"The first stage was..."

And I'm using Mr Sumption's word. This is in the transcript, N1, tab 2, at page 16:

"The first stage was the loans for shares auction in December 1995."

Okay?

A. Yes, there was such a stage.

Q. "Stage two was the sale..."

And these again are Mr Sumption's words:

"... again by auction, of the remaining 49 per cent, the minority holding which the State sold off to private investors."

A. Yes, I would in fact split the second stage into three.

There were three auctions: one was a special cash auction and two investment auctions.

Q. Very well. "Stage three", said Mr Sumption:

"... was after the State defaulted at... the end of 1996, that event triggered the right of sale of the 51 per cent."

And, as Mr Sumption explained:

"The auction of those shares occurred in May 1997."

So that is stage three.

A. Yes.

Q. What Mr Sumption told the court in opening, what he said was this: that your only interest in the creation of Sibneft and in winning the loan for shares auction was, and these were his words, so that:

"... any shares that [you] might buy in [Sibneft] at stages two and three would greatly increase in value."

Is that your evidence as well?

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, that was not, with great respect, what I said and it may well be sensible for my learned friend to put his question without reference to quoting me.

MR RABINOWITZ: Day 2, page 28, line 8.

MR SUMPTION: What I said was that that was the result.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, I'm going to look at the transcript, Mr Sumption.

MR RABINOWITZ: "He wanted [to buy them] because he wanted to" --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No let me look at the transcript, please, Mr Rabinowitz. Day 2, page...?

MR RABINOWITZ: Page 28, lines 6 to 8.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Well, put the question by reference is to what Mr Sumption said in the transcript.

MR SUMPTION: Mr Sumption said that you wanted to buy -- you wanted Sibneft to be created because:

"... [you] wanted to amalgamate the two businesses and build up the company, with the result that any shares that [you] might buy in it at stages two and three would greatly increase in value."

Is that your evidence or not?

A. No, if the question is whether on the first stage I knew that the shares would be much more valuable later, no, I didn't know that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Can I put the question, please. The question I think that you're being asked is: do you agree with the following statement of your case by Mr Sumption? Mr Sumption said:

"What Mr Abramovich wanted was management control. He wanted that because he wanted to amalgamate the two businesses and build up the company, with the result that any shares that he [Mr Abramovich] might buy in it at stages two and three would greatly increase in value."

Is that your case and your evidence?

A. This reflects my case. The point is that we have sort of compressed the time. If we talk about '95 and '96, then we didn't discuss the value and the price of shares at that time; it was pointless. We talked only about management control.

If we are now discussing later years, the year 2000 et cetera, then one can talk about the value of shares or price of shares. Prior to that, Sibneft was not being traded, therefore the shares were valueless.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Okay. Answer my question, please: why did you want management control of Sibneft?

A. That gave me access to oil flows, crude oil flows and oil product flows that Sibneft produced. If I may, I'll explain. My business was trading and logistics of crude oil and oil products. The volumes that Sibneft provided for me once Sibneft was set up increased greatly. This was not the only business for me but was a very significant business for me and I needed management control over it.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you. Yes, Mr Rabinowitz.

MR RABINOWITZ: Now, you accept -- I want to go back to when you first met with Mr Berezovsky, if I may.

You accept, I think, that you met Mr Berezovsky for the first time at the end of 1994; is that right?

A. We met at the end of '94; yes, you're right.

Q. And it's also correct, is it not, that at the time you met Mr Berezovsky you had had a number of businesses in various industries in various countries?

A. Yes, that is correct.

- Q. But you were not at that stage, were you, a well-established business figure in Russia?
- A. I was not a well-established, well-known business figure at that stage. That doesn't reflect whether I had a big business or a small business; it's just that I created little noise around myself.
- Q. And I think it's your evidence, is it not, that you founded your first petroleum trading companies between 1991 and 1996?
- A. Yes, that is so, but I think closer to '91 than to '96.
- Q. Can we just look at paragraph 6 of your third witness statement. E1, tab 3, page 36 E1/03/36. Sorry, in the Russian you should go to page 136 E1/03/136.
- At paragraph 6 of your witness statement, Mr Abramovich, you refer to a small business, it's a Russian MP, called AVK. Do you see that?
- A. Yes, I can see that.
- Q. What you don't mention about this business, AVK, is that you had some difficulties with the law in relation to AVK, didn't you?
- A. No, you are mistaken.
- Q. Right. Can I hand up, please, a document to you in Russian, together with an English translation of that document. (Handed)
- MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Is this on the website?

MR RABINOWITZ: No, it's not. It will be put on to the website. Your Ladyship will be given a hole-punched hard copy.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Could I have a hard copy, please. Excuse me. Could I have a hard copy of this document, please. (Handed)

MR RABINOWITZ: You should, I hope, have, Mr Abramovich, a document in Russian -- everyone else is seeing a translation -- headed "Order". You can see it's dated 9 June 1992. Do you see that it is an order for the instigation of criminal proceedings? Do you see that? "Order for the Instigation of Criminal Proceedings and Completion of Processing"; do you see that?

A. Yes, I can see that.

Q. And it is signed by, at the bottom, Senior Investigator Gorbik SV. That's a senior investigator for particularly serious offences. Do you see that at the bottom?

A. Yes, I can see that.

Q. Do read, please, if you would, what Senior Investigator Gorbik says, having considered the file. He has ruled as follows, that:

"Abramovich RA, working as director of the small company ABK... for the purpose of procuring a financial gain on a particularly large scale by means of fraud through concerted agreements with unidentified officials of Ukhta Oil Refinery... and the external trading company AVEKS-Komi... under fake certificate 5 of 28 February 1992 and other deliberately forged documents of ABK, received at the station Podmoskovnaya Moscow Commercial Station... [3 million kilograms] of diesel fuel for a total value of 3,799,388... roubles in five railway cisterns, coming from Ukhta Oil Refinery, under fake agreement... of 14 February 1992, which he emptied and appropriated."

And he says:

"In light of the availing evidence indicating the perpetration of the offence and on the basis of [certain] articles... of the Criminal Code... [he orders the following]:

"1. To instigate criminal proceedings under Article 93-1 of the Russian Criminal Code."

And it appears against you, Mr Abramovich. Do you see that?

Now, can I now hand up a further document, again in Russian and English, this time dated 19 June 1992.

(Handed)

This time this is a remand order made against you, Mr Abramovich, an order for "detention and remand measures to be taken against the suspect", and you are the suspect in question. Do you see that?

Mr Abramovich, you need to say "da" or "yes" because a nod doesn't come up on the transcript.

A. Yes.

Q. And this is issued not by an investigator but by Senior State Judicial Officer Second Class GS Ponomarev. Do you see that?

And at the bottom of the page you will see that this order for your detention, and I'm reading here, is:

"... in view of the seriousness of the offence of which he..."

That's you Mr Abramovich.

"... is suspected and also the fact that [you] may attempt to escape and prevent the instigation of the indictment of the proceedings."

Now, you said you didn't have any trouble with the law in relation to AVK. Would you like to comment on these two documents?

A. If you may, I will comment -- if I may, I will comment.

Yes, indeed. Indeed the investigator thought that something had disappeared. Indeed, at that time, in '92, there were problems with the banking system. The consignment was not mine; my company was dealing with logistics. At the time when the refinery discovered it, that they haven't got the money yet, and whilst I was under arrest, they received the money. I was released and there were no problems. This was an incident -- a coincidence. The only person in Moscow who got caught in this was myself.

Q. Mr Abramovich --

A. There was no hearing. The criminal case was dropped because of no crime.

Q. Mr Abramovich, do you see that one of the things that it appears you have been accused of at this stage, certainly at the stage of these documents, was involvement with the creation of fake documents, fake certificates and other deliberately forged documents?

Can I ask you this: would you accept that the production of fake documents is a wrong thing to do?

A. I agree that it is a very bad thing to do. The thing is that I have not falsified any documents. By the time the money had arrived, the problem disappeared all by itself. And then there was an expert analysis undertaken and it turned out that the power of attorney was not false; it was true.

Q. I just want to be clear about that. Are you saying that neither you nor anyone within your close and trusted group working at Sibneft and Runicom has ever created a fake document?

A. None of my people close to me has ever faked a document.

- Q. Right. Can we just go back to your witness statement. You mentioned, going back to paragraph 6, a company called Unicom in Romania. It's actually in a footnote, footnote 3. Do you see that, Unicom in Romania?
- A. May I -- may I make a little correction? If backdating documents is something that's not very ethical, then perhaps we can be accused of that.
- Q. So you're now qualifying your previous answer: you now are saying it may be that backdating documents is something you do or have done; is that right?
- A. This practice existed in Russia and for sure we must have done it.
- Q. I just want to be even clearer about this, Mr Abramovich. Are you accepting that this is something you have done in the context of the documents that we're going to be looking at in this case?
- A. In the course of this case we say that certain documents have been signed two days earlier or not. So this answers your question and I confirm it.
- Q. And you were aware of this?
- A. Yes, I was.
- Q. We'll come on to those in due course, Mr Abramovich.

Now, we were looking at your witness statement and we were looking at paragraph 6 and footnote 3 to paragraph 6. You mention there a company called Unicom (Romania). Do you see footnote 3?

A. Yes.

Q. Can you tell the court, please, the industry in which this company was active?

A. To be honest, I don't remember. Perhaps petrochemicals.

Q. You managed to remember it enough to put it in your witness statement, but you say you have no idea what it did?

A. I remember the name of the company but I don't remember what specifically it was involved in. I seem to remember it was dealing with petrochemical industry.

Q. Can you tell us whether this was the only company you were involved with in Romania?

A. I think there were two companies but I don't remember what the second one was called.

Q. Now, we've just been looking at a company called Unicom in Romania. What about a company called Unicom Transit Limited: where was that based? Do you remember?

A. I think Unicom Transit Limited did not belong to me. I don't recall this name.

Q. What about a company called Unicom Management Services in Cyprus: is that one of yours?

A. I don't think so.

Q. Is there a company called Unicem in Switzerland? Do you remember that? I should tell you that's in your witness statement.

A. It was called Unicem and it was involved in cement.

Q. Thank you very much. A company called Unicon Consulting: was that one of yours? With a N rather than a M.

A. No.

Q. Can I just ask you, please, if you could go to bundle H(F)1 at page 27 H(F)1/27. Just so you know what this is, Mr Abramovich, it's part of a file that was disclosed by you of documents you had received from Mr Jacobson, previously of Curtis & Co, this weekend. So he disclosed it this weekend and it's part of the Curtis & Co file.

At H(F)1, page 27, we have a record that Mr Curtis made of a meeting which it appears that you and Mr Shvidler had with Mr Curtis in Moscow in May or June 1995.

Let me just stop there so that the translator can catch up.

A. What is the question, please?

Q. I haven't yet asked a question. I'm just trying to explain to you what the document is.

We can see that this is a meeting with you, Mr Abramovich: if you look at the top left-hand corner of the document, you will see "Roman" and "Eugene". Do you see that?

A. Yes, I can see that.

Q. And if you go to, in the same file, page 14 H(F)1/14, at page 14 there is a letter to Mr Shvidler from Stephen Curtis dated 7 June, and these are all 1995 documents. He refers to a meeting he had with -- so this is Mr Curtis referring to a meeting that he'd had with Mr Shvidler and you in Moscow. Do you see that? That helps us date the document that we have at page 27.

Can you go back to the document at page 27, please H(F)1/27. Can I read, if you're there, so that you can have it translated, what this appears to say:

"Meeting -- Moscow Tuesday.

"Roman.

"Eugene.

"Matters for discussion/action.

"Lockheed -- discussion with Charles Lloyd [and] Larry Whitfield re owners of Channel 1 Russia."

There's a reference to Mr Berezovsky. And then it says:

"Mig spare parts/tanks -- discuss Sheikh Mohammed."

And then I can't make out the words immediately below that. There's a reference to someone called Khalid. "Spare parts" and then it says:

"Possible interest.

"UAE.

"Fujerah (?)"

Which, as I understand, is in the UAE:

"Angola."

And then on the left-hand side do you see:

"Tank prices -- $4 [million] -- get [something] less."

Then below that:

"Weapons generally.

"Brazilians -- wanted to buy tanks."

Were you engaged in weapons trading in 1995,

Mr Abramovich?

A. I was never involved in arms trading. In the Russian Federation, arms trade is the prerogative of the State and the State alone. If I understand -- if I remember the meeting correctly, Mr Curtis said that he had clients that were interested in that, whereas we traded petrochemicals and other products.

Q. Well, why would he have raised this with you unless he thought that this would have been of interest to you, Mr Abramovich?

A. It's difficult for me to guess. The tank plant is in Omsk, close or nearby our refinery; perhaps we discussed it because of this vicinity. Perhaps there's also an aviation plant there, so perhaps we were discussing engines as well.

- Q. Now, can I just check this: you were, at the time you met Mr Berezovsky, obviously not yet a politician, were you? That came later?
- A. Is this a question? You're asking me whether I was a politician? I was not a politician.
- Q. And it's also right -- I think it follows from answers you gave earlier -- you weren't an academic; you didn't have any higher education qualifications? That's right?
- A. When I met Mr Berezovsky it is true that I did not have a higher education diploma nor was I an academic.
- Q. It's also right, isn't it, that at the time you met Mr Berezovsky at the end of 1994, you didn't then have control of State assets, for example the Noyabrskneftegas plant or the Omsk Oil Refinery?
- A. The State was in control of Omsk Oil Refinery and Noyabrskneftegas plant. Of course I could not have been in control of that.
- Q. In fact, towards the end of 1994 you were predominantly an oil trader, albeit a moderately -- a successful one; is that right?
- A. Our principal business was not crude oil but oil products beside that: timber, sugar, foodstuffs, all kinds of products. But our main business was petrochemicals and oil products.

- Q. And what you had been successful in doing -- this is right, is it not -- is that you had bought these oil products in Russia and sold them on the world market, benefiting from the price differential between the Russian price of the oil product and the world market levels?
- A. This is a simplified reflection. In fact we were refining these products in other countries, we were generating power, we're selling power, getting other products and selling those. But if you simplify them, yes, you're right.
- Q. Do you say that you conducted this business in this way without any krysha, whatever that means?
- A. I insist that we conducted this business without any krysha, whatever that word may mean.
- Q. At this time, in 1994, you realised, of course, that if you could get more oil products, perhaps an exclusive contract with a company like Omsk Refinery or Noyabrskneftegas, then you could make even more money for yourself in this way?
- A. If you could, could you repeat the question, please? What do you mean by "exclusive contract"? I didn't quite get that.
- Q. An exclusive contract means that the only person to whom they would supply the oil products would be you; they wouldn't supply them to anyone else.

Do you want me to repeat the question?

A. If I got an exclusive contract, would I earn more money?

Of course I would earn more money. There's no question about that.

Q. And even if you didn't get an exclusive contract, as long as you had more oil products from, for example, oil refinery or Noyabrskneftegas, you would make more money?

A. At that time the products we got from Omsk Refinery amounted to 15 per cent of our turnover. But if I got an exclusive contract, of course I'd earn more.

Q. Now, I want to ask you about the idea to create a vertically integrated oil company such as that which Sibneft became, involving both a production company and an oil refinery. Okay?

A. Okay.

Q. Mr Abramovich, you don't claim, do you, to have been the first person to have thought about this idea to have a vertically integrated oil company; that is to say a company where the entity that produces the oil is integrated with an entity that refines the oil produced by the oil production company?

A. No, I do not say that. I think Rockefeller was the first to come up with that idea.

Q. And again, correct me if I'm wrong, but you don't even claim, do you, that the idea of combining Noyabrskneftegas and Omsk refinery into a vertically integrated company, really this Sibneft idea, was yours either?

A. I think it was my idea.

Q. You think it was your idea.

Mr Abramovich, the truth of this is, isn't it, that the idea of creating a vertically integrated oil company was not yours at all? Do you dispute that?

A. Yes, I dispute that.

Q. This was an idea that was brought to your attention after you'd attended a meeting in October 1994 with an assistant to the general director of Noyabrskneftegas, I think the director general there was Mr Viktor Gorodilov, and that person told you about a disagreement between the management of Noyabrskneftegas and the management of Omsk Oil Refinery concerning the creation of a new oil company. Do you dispute that?

A. To be honest, again, I didn't quite catch the question.

Q. The point is this. You say it was your idea to have a vertically integrated oil company, correct, between Omsk and Noyabrskneftegas?

A. It was my idea to integrate Noyabrskneftegas and Omsk, yes.

Q. And I'm suggesting it wasn't your idea at all; it was an idea that was brought to you at a meeting that you attended in October 1994 with an assistant who had been sent by the general director of Noyabrskneftegas, who told you about a disagreement between the management of Noyabrskneftegas and the management of Omsk Oil Refinery concerning the creation of a new oil company. Do you dispute that?

A. Yes, I do dispute it. I don't think you quite understand what you're talking about. The idea -- the thing is that the idea to create vertically integrated oil companies of course was not mine. And I did know that Omsk and Noyabrskneftegas were at loggerheads; I'd been working with Omsk for a while and I had visited Noyabrsk. The idea to join these two companies was my idea because the initial idea of director general of Noyabrskneftegas, Viktor Gorodilov, was to create a vertically integrated company together with Surgut and we agreed to create it together with Omsk.

Q. Let's have a look at your witness statement together, if we can. Can you go to paragraph 48 of your third witness statement. It's at page E1, tab 3, page 47 in English E1/03/47 and page 147 E1/03/147 of the Russian. You say:

"By mid 1994, Petroltrans had already been the main oil products supplier to the Republic of Moldova, therefore, I became very interested when in October 1994 Mr... Cherniy, a Minister of the Republic of Moldova and the head of the State Committee for Oil Products, contacted me, asking to meet with Mr... Poltorak, who was then an assistant to the General Director of Noyabrskneftegas. At the end of October 1994, we had a meeting in the Moscow office of Petroltrans which was also attended by Ms... Polyakova, head of the Representative Office of the Republic of Moldova and Mr E Ya Poltorak. I understood that there was disagreement between the management of Noyabrskneftegaz and the management of the Omks Oil Refinery as to the creation of a new company and that generally these companies were not managed in a sufficiently efficient [way]."

And what is clear from that, Mr Abramovich, is that what you're saying is that there had been discussion and disagreement between the management of Noyabrskneftegas and the management of Omsk Oil Refinery about the creation of a new oil company, and that is what you claim to be your own idea: the creation of a new company involving these two entities.

- A. With the participation of these two entities there has not been a discussion about creating a vertically integrated companies before we met there. Once again,

I repeat: Noyabrskneftegas wanted to join forces with Surgut and they did discuss it.

- Q. You see, the difficulty about that answer, Mr Abramovich, is what you say in the last sentence of paragraph 48. Because what you say, following reference to this discussion, is to say:

"... I agreed to deal with the issue of creating a new oil company formed from Omsk Oil Refinery and Noyabrskneftegaz."

Which is precisely the idea that is referred to at this meeting in October 1994. It's plain that you are talking about the same company being created from the same two entities.

- A. At this meeting I proposed this idea. This is what I'm trying to explain to you.

- Q. The problem about that, Mr Abramovich, is that's not what you say in your witness statement. It's clear from your witness statement that they had been discussing the creation of a new oil company, the management of these two companies, from Noyabrskneftegas and Omsk Oil Refinery, and what you are saying in your witness statement -- which is completely different from what you're telling the court now -- is that they asked you to help with this and that you agreed to do it. That is what you say at the end of the paragraph.

A. My feeling is that I'm saying exactly the same. Maybe I'm not -- I can't sense the problem because it's all being translated and interpreted, but I think I am actually stating exactly the same thing.

Q. With respect, Mr Abramovich, you're plainly not.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, that's a matter for comment.

MR RABINOWITZ: Can we look at another document. Can you please go to H(C)8, page 111T in translation, page 111 in the Russian H(C)8/111T.

Again, Mr Abramovich, just so that you know what this is, if you go back a page to 110, you'll see that this is the minute of an interview conducted by the Russian authorities with Mr Viktor Gorodilov.

Can you just tell us: Mr Viktor Gorodilov was in 1995 the general director of Noyabrskneftegas; is that right?

A. Yes, that is so.

Q. And if you go back to page 111, you can see that just before he is asked questions, there is -- you can see this in bold, two-thirds of the way down -- Mr Gorodilov had his rights and duties as a witness explained to him, including, as you see in this paragraph, the fact that it was a criminal offence to give knowingly false testimony. Do you see that?

A. Yes, I can see that.

Q. If you look at the bottom of page 111, Mr Viktor Gorodilov is asked this:

"Question by investigator: Would you describe how Siberian Oil Company..."

Which is Sibneft.

"... was created? How were you, Boris Berezovsky, Mr Patarkatsishvili, Roman Abramovich and your son, Andrei Gorodilov, involved in this? What contribution did SBS-Agro Bank (formerly known as Stolichny Bank Sberezheniy) make to the financing of the purchase of Sibneft shares?"

And this is his answer:

"Sibneft was formed on general terms. It took a long time to establish this company. I initiated the creation of this company. The goal pursued in creating Sibneft was the optimum organisation of a number of interconnected oil companies."

Do you see that? Can you say "da", please.

A. Yes.

Q. Only if the answer is "da", obviously.

And then if you go to page 112 H(C)8/112T, Mr Gorodilov gives the Russian authorities some information about your involvement, Mr Abramovich, in the creation of Sibneft. Just looking at page 112, about 13 lines from the end of the page on the English version, you see he says:

"I am not aware of the role that Roman Abramovich and [Mr] Patarkatsishvili played in the formation of Sibneft. I think that Abramovich appeared at Sibneft later."

Do you see that?

A. Yes, I can see the words.

Q. And Mr Gorodilov, as you've told us, is the director general of Noyabrskneftegas. What he says here is hardly consistent with it being your initiative, is it?

A. What Mr Gorodilov says here does not correspond to my evidence. I can see that.

Q. Now, it's right, is it not, that the top management of Omsk Oil Refinery and Noyabrskneftegas were the so-called "red directors"; is that right?

A. Yes, that is so.

Q. And they had worked in their respective industries for decades and they climbed to the top of very significant State assets; that's right, isn't it?

A. You can say that is exactly what happened with Gorodilov Viktor. I mean, he was the one to put in the first nail into what was meant to be a...

THE INTERPRETER: Sorry, nail in a positive sense, that he was at the very beginning of creating the enterprise.

A. But I can't say that about Mr Litskevich.

MR RABINOWITZ: By 1995 Mr Gorodilov had been the director general of Noyabrskneftegas for around 14 years; that's what he told the Russian investigators and I don't suppose you'd disagree with that?

A. No, of course I won't disagree with that. Yes, he had been working there for 14 years and I'm not going to disagree what he said to Russian investigators. That's what he said.

Q. And the red directors, including Mr Gorodilov, were or would have been very influential and powerful men?

A. You're asking a very general question. What do you mean in terms of "powerful"? Was it political power you're meaning?

Q. Well, let's compare them if we can: his position, Mr Gorodilov's position, to your position. Compared to you, Mr Gorodilov was a man, by virtue of him being a red director, who had power and influence; would you accept that?

A. In Noyabrsk he had absolute power and absolute influence; I agree with that. In Noyabrsk.

Q. What I don't understand, Mr Abramovich, about your evidence at paragraph 48 is this. You say that you met, in effect, with a representative of Mr Viktor Gorodilov in October 1994 and the idea of this creation of a new oil company involving Omsk and Noyabrskneftegas was discussed; but according to you -- I'm just looking at the last sentence here -- you say that:

"... [you] agreed to deal with the issue of creating a new oil company formed from Omsk... and Noyabrskneftegas."

Do you see that?

- A. I'm not looking at it yet. Just a second. Yes, I am looking at it and I can see it.
- Q. Can you explain why the management of Noyabrskneftegas, or indeed anybody else connected with either Noyabrskneftegas or Omsk, should have thought that you would be the one who could personally achieve something which they could not?
- A. I was recommended by the fuel and energy minister of Moldova.
- Q. Yes, but what was it about you, Mr Abramovich, that you say made you the person that people would turn to for putting these two companies together?
- A. Nobody turned to me to put these two companies together. It was my idea and it was born at this meeting. The thing is I worked with Omsk and I worked a lot with Noyabrsk. So at this meeting I had this idea, as I already said before, Viktor Gorodilov's initial idea was to create a company on the basis of just Noyabrsk or Noyabrsk together with Surgutneftegas. Omsk had a separate idea, to create a financial industrial group on the basis of Omsk Refinery, and to join these two enterprises was my idea. This is precisely what I'm trying to explain.

Q. Is this right: following your, as you put it here, agreeing with the Noyabrskneftegas management to deal with the issue of creating a new company formed from Omsk and Noyabrskneftegas, you went looking for someone who could provide you with the political clout to create this combined company and you used your contacts with Mr Aven to meet Mr Berezovsky?

A. Well, we're distorting the story slightly. But on the whole I didn't use Aven's contact; I came with this idea to Mr Aven.

Q. You came with the idea to Mr Aven and he put you in contact with Mr Berezovsky; is that your evidence?

A. My evidence is that he suggested that I discuss this with Berezovsky.

Q. And would it be fair to describe what happened in this way: that when you discussed this with Mr Berezovsky, you proposed to him that there was the potential to make a lot of money by consolidating control over Noyabrskneftegas and Omsk and also by directing sales through your trading companies?

A. The word "control" I find a bit perplexing. Could you repeat that sentence again?

- Q. You proposed to Mr Berezovsky that there was the potential to make a lot of money by consolidating control over Noyabrskneftegas and Omsk and also by directing sales through your trading companies?
- A. No, I would feel more comfortable -- I feel more comfortable about the second part, when you're saying that if the trade goes through my companies, then a lot of money can be earned. I feel more comfortable with that. But as for the control, if you allow me, I'll go back to my written evidence and have a look at that.
- Q. The trouble about that, Mr Abramovich, is that is exactly what your written evidence says.

Go back, if you would, to paragraph 53. It's at page 48 of E1 in the English E1/03/48 and I hope someone can find it for you in the Russian. You say here:

"I remember explaining to Mr Berezovsky that I wanted to combine the Omsk Oil Refinery and Noyabrskneftegas into a single company, whose management I would control. I explained that there was the potential to make a lot of money by consolidating control over these companies and directing their sales through my Trading Companies."

So those were your words, Mr Abramovich.

- A. Yes, I confirm it.
- Q. And by "a lot of money", is it fair to say that you were thinking at that time in the realms of increasing your annual income from $40 million to $100 million or so? Is that right?
- A. Indeed, I assumed that one could earn in the order of $100 million.
- Q. And what you say -- is this right -- that you were thinking at the time in the realm of increasing your annual income from $40 million to $100 million?
- A. Once again, I'm trying to explain that I assumed that the income can grow up to 100 million.
- Q. So that you would increase your income from $40 million to $100 million a year?
- A. Indeed, I came up with this assumption. It wasn't an exact figure; it was just my feeling.
- MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Could I be clear: when you're talking, Mr Abramovich, about your income being increased from $40 million to $100 million, are you talking about the income of the companies combined or your company or your personal income?
- A. I meant the income from operations with Sibneft -- from oil business, I would say that. Income from oil business.
- MR RABINOWITZ: Is that your personal income or is it your trading companies' income that you're talking about here?

- A. It's difficult for me to remember what I meant, but because all the companies belonged to me, both are true. Both statements would be true.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Again, if you're talking about income, do you mean revenue or net profit after expenses?

- A. At that time I wasn't thinking in those terms. I suppose I meant net income but I can't tell you 100 per cent for sure. It was a very approximate figure based on my intuition, on my feelings. At that time we did not think or operate in those terms.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So we're talking turnover?

- A. No, I was talking about profit. But I can't give you greater detail, I'm afraid.

MR RABINOWITZ: Now, you say this was your feeling about what you would do. Isn't this right that this is exactly what you told Mr Berezovsky: that you currently generated $40 million a year through your trading companies and that you expected, if the scheme that you were proposing to him worked, to be able to generate -- to be able to increase that to around $100 million a year?

- A. Yes, I said that. I passed on to him or shared with him my feelings.

MR RABINOWITZ: My Lady, that may be a convenient moment.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, I'm going to sit until 4.30.

MR RABINOWITZ: Now, I've asked you some questions about your position as it was in late 1994, when you met Mr Berezovsky, and perhaps I could just ask some questions about Mr Berezovsky at the time you met him at the end of 1994.

He was, was he not, extremely well known in Russia at that time?

A. Looking at it with my eyes of that time, then yes, I would agree with you.

Q. And were you aware when you met him of his academic career; that he was a doctor of mathematics, for example?

A. No, I didn't know anything about his academic career.

Q. Would you have known that he was a member of the Russian Academy of Sciences or is your answer to that the same?

A. No, I didn't know that.

Q. Did you know of his work with Avtovaz, the Russian State car manufacturer?

A. I knew he was trading cars, both new cars and secondhand cars. I knew that.

Q. Did you know of Logovaz and its extensive car dealership?

A. I didn't know about extensive dealership but I knew that Logovaz was trading Avtovaz vehicles.

Q. You knew of Mr Berezovsky's involvement in AVVA?

A. I think so. I think I did know. This was one of the pyramids that existed at the time.

Q. You knew too that Mr Berezovsky was associated with Consolidated Bank?

A. I beg your pardon, what time are we talking about exactly?

Q. The end of 1994.

A. I don't think I knew about the Consolidated Bank back in '94. Apropos, I think I learnt about AVVA in '95. If possible, please indicate very clearly what time you mean.

Q. I'm just trying to find out, at the end of 1994, what you knew about. So we're talking about the end of 1994.

Did you know that Mr Berezovsky had acquired ORT with the other wealthy and influential businessmen?

A. I think at that time, in '94, I probably did know that he acquired ORT. I think I learnt about that at the time of this cruise of ours.

Q. Mr Abramovich, do you suggest that despite Mr Berezovsky's involvement with, for example, Logovaz, Avtovaz, the other companies which you may or may not have known about, do you suggest that at the time you met him Mr Berezovsky was not a businessman in the sense of being interested in actually establishing and managing a business?

A. If we're talking about '94 again, I knew nothing about it.

Q. Can I just ask you, please, to look at paragraph 34 of your third witness statement, page 43 in the English E1/03/43. I'm not sure where the Russian is -- 143 E1/03/143.

Now, you're talking here about Mr Berezovsky in paragraph 34 and you say:

"[He] was not a 'businessman' in the sense that I understand the term. I never knew him to be interested in actually establishing and managing a business."

Is that your evidence or not?

A. Yes, this is my evidence, but I'm not saying -- I'm not discussing 1994 here. This is my general view.

Q. Can you just look then at paragraph 33, just so that you can get the context of what you're saying. You say:

"As I explain further below, my relationship with Mr Berezovsky began in late 1994..."

So what you're saying in the paragraphs that follow relate to your relationship with Mr Berezovsky as it began in late 1994. Or do you disagree with that?

A. Please repeat the question.

Q. If you look at the context in which paragraph 34 appears, where you say that he was not actually interested in establishing and managing a business, it immediately follows from paragraph 33. Paragraph 33 appears to be talking about the position in late 1994.

Now, my question to you is: the comment you make in paragraph 34 about him not being interested in establishing a business, are you saying that doesn't relate to the period of time when you met him in late 1994? Do you say it relates to another time?

A. My comment reflects 1995, when he said he's only interested in politics and not in business. In '94 I had no knowledge about what Mr Berezovsky was interested in. We met practically prior to the New Year. The year has finished almost. It was the very end of '94 when we met.

Q. Would you say, though, that you were a businessman at this time, in late 1994?

A. I would say that I was, yes.

Q. Can you tell us this. You say that Mr Berezovsky was not a details person. Are you a details person?

A. I think to a greater extent than Mr Berezovsky, but not much either.

Q. And you also say in your evidence that Mr Berezovsky, when you met him, was no longer interested in actually establishing and managing a business.

Can you tell me this: the pre-Sibneft businesses which we've heard about, Runicom and the like, did you establish and manage these?

- A. Yes, yes, all the businesses that happened pre-Sibneft I created and managed together with my friends, comrades, partners, but I was the only owner.
- Q. And when you obtained Sibneft, did you manage Sibneft or had you lost interest in management by this time?
- A. Can you repeat that again, please? We're talking now about '97; am I right?
- Q. When you obtained control of Sibneft, did you manage Sibneft or had you lost interest in management too by this time? Late 1995.
- A. In '95 I physically could not have obtained control over Sibneft. That was only through a relationship with the higher management of the company. I obtained control in '97. I had -- I could get access to product flows and oil flows, I could have, as you mentioned, an exclusive contract; but I could not get control until '97.
- Q. Did you ever manage Sibneft?
- A. If the question is whether I was ever president of Sibneft, no, I never have been.
- Q. Not whether you were president; whether you ever managed Sibneft?

A. I think so. After '97 I could have said that I was. But formally, no, but I was one of the managers of Sibneft. I must have managed it through the board of directors. If that is what you mean, then yes, I did.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Would you describe yourself as an executive director of Sibneft?

A. I would not describe myself in this way. I was not engaged in day-to-day running of Sibneft.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: But strategy, were you involved in the strategy for the future development of the company?

A. Yes, indeed. That is exactly what I was engaged in for this company.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Is that a convenient moment?

MR RABINOWITZ: It is.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well. Now --

MS DAVIES: My Lady --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just a second, Ms Davies.

Before anybody leaves the building or leaves the courtroom, can I remind them to leave their headphones on the chairs, please.

Secondly, I'd like to know from counsel when I'm going to be dealing with the issue about the witnesses.

MS DAVIES: That's what I was just about to raise, my Lady. My learned friend, just as we came back in after lunch, indicated that they no longer oppose the revocation of my Lady's order in relation to the six Chukotka witnesses. The application I effectively made on Friday, it's no longer opposed.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right.

MS DAVIES: So what we will do is produce a consent order and perhaps we can put that before my Lady first thing tomorrow morning.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, I had better -- I have only had a quick read of a bit of this. Perhaps you could produce the draft, but before I indicate that I'm happy to make such an order, I just had better see precisely what you're asking me to do.

MS DAVIES: Of course, my Lady.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well.

That's agreed, is it Mr Gillis?

MR GILLIS: My Lady, yes it is.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well.

Right. I'll repeat the direction I gave earlier: don't talk about your evidence or the case with anybody overnight. Do you understand? Yes? You do understand?

THE WITNESS: (Not interpreted) Yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well. 10.15 tomorrow.

Discussion re housekeeping

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I'm told that the smell of burning rubber is not a cause for concern but something to do with the resurfacing of the road outside. If the position changes, we'll all be informed.

Yes, Mr Sumption.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, could I raise with your Ladyship a problem relating to the translation.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, certainly.

MR SUMPTION: We have reviewed overnight, with Russian speakers on our team, the transcript and the Russian transcript against the English one. There obviously is a problem here which is not the fault of the translators at all; it's a problem really relating to the translation of the questions. And for that reason it's not possible to produce, so to speak, a revised transcript; the questions as recorded are the questions that were asked.

The difficulty is that Russian is a language which, like German for example, the principal verb comes at the end of the sentence. It is relatively difficult to cope with sentences in questions that contain complex sub-clauses, often more than one of them. When we looked particularly at the passages where the witness said that he would like a question to be put again or that he didn't understand it, almost invariably this was because the translators had had great difficulty keeping up with a question which is not broken up into small units but has many sub-clauses and it did in fact come over as being, on a literal translation, very difficult to follow.

It would therefore assist very much if questions were to be broken down into single propositions, if complex sub-clauses were to be avoided. It would both be fairer to the witness and it would mean we would probably get on quicker.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Rabinowitz.

MR RABINOWITZ: Well, my Lady, I hear what my learned friend says and I shall do my best. I'm sorry if my best was not good enough yesterday but I'll do better today.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, well, it is a problem with translation.

MR RABINOWITZ: No, I follow.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: The other remedy is to -- but I'm not sure it would cope with the problem -- stop having simultaneous translation.

MR RABINOWITZ: I, with respect, would entirely support that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: But what I'm going to do is I'm going to run today with simultaneous translation because I prefer it, it's much quicker, and I'm going to ask you, Mr Rabinowitz, to make the questions less structured and a bit more simple if you can.

MR RABINOWITZ: I will do my best.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Let's see how we go.

MR RABINOWITZ: Very good.

MR ROMAN ABRAMOVICH (continued)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Good morning, Mr Abramovich. You're still on your oath, you understand that.

Cross-examination by MR RABINOWITZ (continued)

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Abramovich, yesterday you told the court that it was your idea to create a vertically integrated oil company incorporating the crude oil producer Noyabrskneftegas and the Omsk Refinery. Do you remember that?

A. Yes, I do remember that.

Q. And I showed you paragraph 48 of your third witness statement and put it to you that your own evidence showed that the idea to combine two companies came to you from the management of Noyabrskneftegas and the Omsk Refinery. Do you remember that?

A. I do remember that you try to interpret my words like that, but this is not the case.

Q. When I asked you about that evidence, you suggested for the first time, I suggest, that -- and these were your words -- "the initial idea of the director general of Noyabrskneftegas, Viktor Gorodilov, was to create a vertically integrated company together with Surgut" rather than with Omsk Refinery. Do you remember that?

A. Yes, I do remember that.

Q. Now, in 1994 the oil produced at Noyabrskneftegas was refined by the Omsk Refinery, not by Surgut; that's right, isn't it?

A. I believe that I will have to explain to you exactly what I meant.

A vertical integrated company might have been created on the basis of one or two or three companies. Surgutneftegas, just as Noyabrskneftegas, is a producing company; but Surgut, the company called Surgut, included a refinery, Kirishi, not far from St Petersburg, therefore that in itself was also a vertically integrated company.

Does that clarify?

Q. With respect to that, Mr Abramovich, it simply confuses. Can I ask you, if you would, to listen to my question and answer it. You can comment afterwards, but if you just do that we will get on quicker, with or without sub-clauses. Do you follow?

Let me ask the question again. In 1994 the oil produced at Noyabrskneftegas was refined by the Omsk Refinery, not by Surgut; is that right?

A. Your understanding is correct because Surgut does produce crude oil.

Q. I'm not sure that that was an answer to my question. My question was that the oil producer Noyabrskneftegas was refined by the Omsk Refinery, not by Surgut. You're agreeing with me?

A. I agree with this. The crude oil that was produced by Noyabrskneftegas was refined by several Russian refineries, including the Omsk Refinery. I agree with that.

Q. And oil produced by Noyabrskneftegas could not be refined by Surgutneftegas because Surgutneftegas was itself a crude oil producer like Noyabrskneftegas?

A. That is exactly what I have been trying to explain.

Q. And the oil produced at Surgutneftegas was, was it not, refined -- sorry, I'll start that question again.

I realised it had a sub-clause.

The oil produced at Surgutneftegas was refined by an oil refinery called the Kirishi Oil Refinery?

A. That is correct, and that is exactly what I have clarified a minute ago.

Q. So if Noyabrskneftegas and Surgutneftegas had been combined into a single company, that would not have created a vertically integrated oil company, would it?

- A. No, this is not correct. This is absolutely incorrect. Of course it would have resulted in the establishment of a vertically integrated company. I think someone has misled you.
- Q. With respect to that, Mr Abramovich, the trouble with what you're saying is that if Noyabrskneftegas and Surgutneftegas had been combined into a single oil company, that is not a vertically integrated company; that is a very large oil production company.
- A. I agree with you. This would have been a large producing company that would have, amongst other things, included Kirishi, the refinery. In Russia, sometimes companies were established on the basis of two, three, five, six companies. I think you're just not up to speed on this. Sometimes -- take North Sea, for instance: North Sea was a company that was established on the basis of just one entity, one company.
- Q. Mr Abramovich, another reason why the initial idea of Mr Gorodilov in 1994 cannot have been to create a vertically integrated oil company by combining Noyabrskneftegas with Surgutneftegas -- and can I just explain what that is and then get you to comment.

In 1993 Surgutneftegas had already been corporatised, that is to say turned into an open joint stock company, as a vertically integrated oil company by combining Surgutneftegas production facility with the Kirishi refinery. I think you agree with that?

A. I absolutely agree with that. That is absolutely correct. This is exactly what I've been trying to convey to you.

Q. Is it your suggestion that what you were intending was that Noyabrskneftegas production should be added to Surgutneftegas production for refining at Kirishi?

A. I did not say -- I think you are getting more and more confused. Never have I suggested --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just a second, please. Mr Abramovich, it would speed things up if you don't make comments about the state of Mr Rabinowitz's knowledge or confusion. Do you understand me? Just answer the question.

THE WITNESS: Yes, I do. Forgive me.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Don't criticise his understanding or whatever. What's relevant to me is your answers, not whether he's got it right or wrong or whether he's confused.

Okay. Thank you.

MR RABINOWITZ: Shall I ask the question again, Mr Abramovich?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, please.

MR RABINOWITZ: Do you suggest that what was intended was that Noyabrskneftegas's production should be added to Surgutneftegas's production for refining by Kirishi?

A. That was one of the ideas that had been floated but that was not one of my ideas.

Q. Because that wouldn't have worked, would it?

A. It would have worked.

Q. Is it not right, Mr Abramovich, that the combined production of Surgutneftegas and Omskneftegas would have massively exceeded the refining capacity of the Kirishi refinery?

A. You are right: the combined production would have been far in excess.

Q. So what you couldn't have been talking about then was the combining of the two production companies with Kirishi refining?

A. I could have not said that and I have been trying to explain that my idea was to bring together Omsk, the refinery, and Noyabrsk, the producing facility. That's it.

Q. That's what you say. What started all of this off, Mr Abramovich, was your suggestion that that is not what Mr Viktor Gorodilov was talking about. You said Mr Viktor Gorodilov was talking about combining Noyabrskneftegas with Surgutneftegas, and what I've suggested to you is that that simply could not have been what he was suggesting at all.

A. Well, unfortunately, I beg to differ. This is not the case.

Q. I'll go on to a different subject then, if I may.

Can I ask you, please, to look at paragraph 34 of your third witness statement. It's at bundle E1, tab 3, page 43 in the English E1/03/43 and page 143 in the Russian E1/03/143. Can I ask you, please, to read paragraph 43 (sic) to yourself.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Paragraph 43 is not on page 43.

MR RABINOWITZ: Sorry, I meant to say paragraph 34. I'm very sorry.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Paragraph 34, please. (Pause)

A. I have read that paragraph.

MR RABINOWITZ: Now, you say here that when you met Mr Berezovsky you were "quite surprised [at] his extravagant lifestyle" and that you personally were "never interested in imitating this lifestyle". Do you see that?

A. Yes, I can see that.

Q. Can we just consider the truthfulness of this assertion, Mr Abramovich, that you, unlike Mr Berezovsky, have never had an interest in what you label an extravagant lifestyle. Do you follow?

Perhaps we could start with the English properties which you've owned over the years. There was, of course, Fyning Hill, which is a 420-acre estate and house in West Sussex. You bought that in 1999, did you not? You have to say "da" if you're agreeing.

A. I think so, yes. I think it was in the year 2000.

Q. Also in England there was Lowndes Square, a large and expensive central London property near Knightsbridge, I think, which you owned in 2000 as well?

A. Yes, that is correct.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Was that a flat or a house, an apartment or a house?

A. This is a flat. In the future I bought some further flats there and so that can be remodelled and turned into one house, but for the time being it's a flat.

MR RABINOWITZ: But I don't think you would disagree that this is a large and very expensive central London property?

A. I think so. I would agree with you. This is not a hugely large piece of property but it is in central London, yes.

Q. As for French property, you also acquired the Chateau or Villa de la Croe in 2000, didn't you?

A. That is correct, yes.

- Q. And this is a multi-million-pound chateau which once belonged to the Duke and Duchess of Windsor. But you say that's not extravagant?
- A. For the time being it is extremely expensive but at that time it was a property that had burnt down. It definitely did not cost as much at that time and I spent about seven years remodelling and rebuilding it.
- Q. Presumably at very substantial expense?
- A. Yes. Yes, I agree. It did involve significant amounts of money.
- Q. Did you have any other properties in France? Do you have any other properties in France?
- A. What period of time are you referring to?
- Q. Well, I'm trying to look with you at your suggestion that you avoid an extravagant lifestyle, Mr Abramovich. So my question to you is: do you have any properties in France?
- A. If I understand it correctly, in 33/34 we refer to 1994 and this is just the summary of what we are discussing, and for the time being what we are talking about is something that happened in the year 2000 and in the years subsequent, after the year 2000.
- Q. What you say in paragraph 34 is not on its face limited to 1994/1995. You say you were "never interested in imitating this lifestyle". But you now want to qualify that, do you, to say whilst you weren't interested in a lifestyle then, you may have an extravagant lifestyle now? Or do you dispute that?

A. Well, yes, possibly. I agree, yes, that one could put it that way. But at that time this was not part of my position.

Q. So when did this change, Mr Abramovich?

A. I think that when I bought Chelsea Football Club, that did impact my way of life significantly. It was a turning point really.

Q. Is Chelsea the only football club in which you have an interest or do you also have an interest in CSKA Moscow?

A. No.

Q. Now, what I want to do next is ask you about what you say was the content of the agreement made in 1995 with Mr Berezovsky. My first question, if I can, is this: what is it that you say it was agreed you would give to Mr Berezovsky in return for his assistance?

A. I will be giving money.

Q. Can you be a little more specific, Mr Abramovich?

A. We agreed that I will fund ORT and I will provide funding for some of his expenses. For the first year we agreed on the total amount of $30 million.

Q. Can I ask you, please, to go to bundle A1, tab 03 at page 44, please A1/03/44. Now, if you can go to the beginning of the tab, do you see that this is your defence in this action?

A. Yes. I think we discussed this document yesterday.

Q. We did refer to it yesterday. We're going to refer to it again today. Can you go to page 84, please A1/03/84. It's just before the red divider.

A. I'm on page 84 but because it's all in English, unfortunately I cannot say anything about this.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, we have a Russian text of this document if that would assist my learned friend.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I'm sorry, Mr Sumption?

MR SUMPTION: We have a Russian text of this document. If my learned friend is going to ask about the details, it might be sensible to use it.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, that would be helpful.

MR SUMPTION: Can I hand it round. (Handed)

MR RABINOWITZ: I'm very happy for that to be used.

Can I just mention this while my learned friend is handing this up. When we have previously asked for this document, we have been told that it was privileged and that they refused to provide it to us.

MR SUMPTION: It was prepared overnight in the light of my learned friend's questions yesterday.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, Mr Rabinowitz, I hear what you say. It's a matter for submission at an appropriate time.

MR RABINOWITZ: Can I ask my learned friend if he has more than one copy so that the Russian speakers behind us can follow as well, in case there's a dispute as to whether the interpretation is right.

MR SUMPTION: We have other copies; we will produce them.

THE INTERPRETER: My Lady, would it be possible to have a copy for the interpreter in the booth?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, certainly. Could the interpreter be provided with a copy and could Mr Rabinowitz's team and any of the other teams who want a copy also be provided with them. Mr Rabinowitz's team may need two copies or more, I don't know. I don't need a copy because I don't have Russian.

MR RABINOWITZ: Don't get rid of the English-version copy yet, please.

Mr Abramovich, before you put away the English draft in file A1, can you go to page 84 of that bundle, please. It's A1, tab 3, page 84 A1/03/84.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Paragraph?

MR RABINOWITZ: At the moment I just want the witness to be able to look at the final page of the English version which he has signed. We seem to be struggling to get there.

A. Yes, I can see that.

- Q. Do you see you signed this English version, Mr Abramovich? Mr Abramovich, look at the English version.
- A. Yes, yes, I'm looking at the English version.
- Q. Now, you signed it saying that you believe the facts stated in the re-amended defence are true. Can you explain how you were able to sign that? Did you have a Russian translation? Did someone take you through every paragraph of this? How did it work?
- A. I think that's how it was. Someone must have translated this for me or -- I cannot tell you exactly. There must have been a translation.
- Q. But you don't remember how it was that you came to sign this, whether you were reading a translation or someone translated each individual paragraph and you said, "Yes, that's right"?
- A. I really do not remember. Most probably there has been a translation but I cannot be more certain than that.
- Q. Mr Abramovich, this is signed by you on 28 October 2011, the most recent version; I think that's about three days ago. How can you not remember?
- A. I'm not sure I understand which document you're speaking about. I was not aware that this happened three days ago.
- Q. If you see on the page that you have opened, it should be page 84.007. Do you have that open in front of you in the English version?

A. Yes, it is open here.

Q. Can you confirm that that signature, that's your signature?

A. Yes, it is my signature.

Q. When do you say you signed that?

A. I signed it according to the date but I'm not sure I was clear as to the document that we were actually referring to and I thought that we were talking about the document that we were discussing yesterday.

Q. Mr Abramovich, this is the document that we were discussing yesterday.

A. That's what I meant. Because it's all in English, it was difficult for me to understand exactly what document it was.

Q. Can I ask you, please, to look at paragraph D32 in this document. It's at page 43 A1/03/43. Now, the part of this letter I would like you to focus on in particular is the part that begins:

"Prior to the August 1995 Decree, the Defendant informed Mr Berezovsky that he wished to acquire a controlling interest in Sibneft on its creation. In return for the Defendant agreeing to provide Mr Berezovsky with funds he required in connection with the cashflow of ORT, Mr Berezovsky agreed he would use his personal and political influence to support the project and assist in the passage of the necessary legislative steps leading to the creation of Sibneft which, in the event, were the obtaining of the August 1995 Decree and the September 1995 Resolution."

First, in relation to when this agreement was made, and looking at the first sentence of this passage, you say that the agreement was reached prior to the August 1995 decree. Do you see that?

A. Yes, I can see that.

Q. That is, of course, consistent with Mr Berezovsky's case, which, as I said earlier, is that the agreement was reached shortly before the August 1995 decree. Do you follow?

A. Yes, I do follow, and with your permission I would like to clarify, if I may?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, please do.

A. The decree said that 49 per cent needs to be privatised and 51 per cent will be owned by the government for the following three-year period of time.

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Abramovich, that's not -- sorry, just let me be clear. Is that the clarification you wanted to provide?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. That's not what I was asking you about. What I was asking you about was the date at which you and Mr Berezovsky made the agreement that is the subject matter of this dispute.

What I suggested to you is that what you say in your defence here, that this was prior to the August 1995 decree, is consistent with the time when Mr Berezovsky says the agreement was made, which is shortly before the August 1995 decree.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So what's the question?

MR RABINOWITZ: Is it your case now that you say that in fact the agreement was in February 1995?

A. If I understand correctly, our agreement was reached in February and the decree was issued much later. And so what it says here is that it happened, the agreement was reached, before the decree was signed. And this is what I'm saying: it was reached before the decree was signed, prior to the signing of the decree.

Q. Mr Abramovich, if it really was your case that there had been an agreement made in February, you could have said so here, couldn't you?

A. When we started preparing, I did not remember exactly when that was, but I did remember exactly that it had happened prior to the first letter being signed; and after I saw the date of the first letter then

I refreshed my recollection. Therefore I could not tell you exactly when it happened. I remembered that it did happen prior to the signing of the presidential decree but I did not remember exactly when.

Q. So you're saying that even when you made this defence, for the first time I think in 2008, you had no clear recollection of when this agreement was made?

A. That is true. At that time I did not remember exactly when the agreement was reached but I did remember at that time that the agreement had been reached prior to the very first batch of documents being sent to the president for his signing. And this is what you call in English reconstruction; this is not my recollection. This is not something that lingers in my memory.

Q. Can I then ask you this. You describe here what you say it was that Mr Berezovsky would be getting out of the deal, namely funds he required in connection with the cashflow of ORT; do you see that?

A. Yes, I can see that.

Q. So it's clear from this then, is it not, that the deal you made with Mr Berezovsky was that all Mr Berezovsky would get in return for his services is what he required in connection with the cashflow of ORT?

A. Mainly, yes.

Q. You say "mainly" --

A. By and large, yes.

Q. -- but that is all you say here, Mr Abramovich. You don't say "by and large" or "primarily". This is what you say you agreed he would get.

A. I think that this document uses very dry legalese and there are many details that never made their way to this document. My evidence is much larger and it provides much greater amount of detail with respect to the situation that appertained at that time.

Q. We will come back to that, if we may.

Again just looking at paragraph 32, we see that what you say Mr Berezovsky was going to provide to you was to "use his personal and political influence to support the project and assist in the passage of the necessary legislative steps". Mr Abramovich, one observes that you do not here use the phrase "krysha". Can you explain why not, please?

A. The word "krysha" is a very aggressive term and usually it was used with respect to criminal protection racket, but we also have the term "krysha" in political terms. And at the very beginning I was not very clear as to how I should define this and I did not want to offend the claimant, but this is exactly what happened at the very beginning.

Q. Just going back to what you said in this paragraph, do you see the sentence -- in fact it's the first sentence -- where you say:

"Prior to the August 1995 Decree, the Defendant informed Mr Berezovsky that he wished to acquire a controlling interest in Sibneft on its creation."

Do you see that?

A. Could you kindly repeat that? I'm afraid I missed out on that. At the time what?

Q. Well, I'm reading your pleading. It says:

"Prior to the August 1995 Decree, the Defendant informed Mr Berezovsky that he wished to acquire a controlling interest in Sibneft on its creation."

A. Yes, I did have a plan to acquire a controlling stake at the time of the establishment of the company. However, it was different from what we managed to actually implement.

Q. Just to be clear, what you're saying here -- and I think it is clear from your answer -- you are talking here about acquiring a controlling shareholding interest in Sibneft, are you not?

A. Originally we only discussed management control, control over the management of the company. After that, we proceeded to discuss a controlling stake in the company and we generally discussed the company, yes.

Q. I'm asking you -- and I'm going to ask you to be precise, Mr Abramovich, in the way that I've been asked to do. You say here you told Mr Berezovsky you "wished to acquire a controlling interest in Sibneft on its creation". Does that mean that you told Mr Berezovsky that you wished to acquire a controlling shareholding interest?

A. Originally, during the initial meeting, I did not say that or I have no recollection of that. But in the process of our discussions I'm sure I did say that and I'm virtually certain of this. Originally we only discussed the control over the management, not a controlling stake. However, my idea has always been to acquire a controlling stake in a company, amongst other things, in order to exercise control over the management structures.

Q. Mr Abramovich, we're dealing here with a paragraph in your statement where you're talking about the agreement that you made with Mr Berezovsky. I'm trying to understand what it was that was the subject matter of the agreement.

Where you say, "Prior to... August 1995... [you] informed Mr Berezovsky that [you] wished to acquire a controlling interest in Sibneft", you then go on to say what Mr Berezovsky would do in order to enable you to do this and what you would give him.

So one is dealing here with the agreement, what it was that you agreed would be done, and it's in that context that you talk to Mr Berezovsky about acquiring a controlling interest; correct?

A. With your permission, I would like to clarify, if I may.

Q. Well, can you answer the question first.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I think the problem, Mr Rabinowitz, is that you haven't actually asked a question. Could you ask a specific question so that the witness can give an answer because, speaking for myself, it's rather difficult when you summarise the pleading for him to know precisely what the question is to answer.

MR RABINOWITZ: Well, I will ask a question but I am first going to summarise the pleading because the question arises from that.

This is a paragraph in which you plead what you agreed with Mr Berezovsky; is that correct?

A. Yes, it summarises the gist of our agreement but the agreement was not achieved overnight. First we agreed on something in February and then we agreed on the shares, and it took some time, it happened step by step. But at the initial stage we only agreed on the things that I describe here.

Q. Can we take it that when you say you agreed these things step by step, you had agreed on them prior to August 1995?

A. With respect to the acquisition of a controlling stake, we agreed prior to August but not in February. What happened in February was just the initial agreement on the 30 million in consideration for assistance and help.

Q. Let's just get this clear then. Prior to August 1995, what you had agreed with Mr Berezovsky related to your acquiring a controlling shareholding stake in Sibneft; is that right?

A. We did not agree with Berezovsky that we will acquire a controlling stake. We agreed that he would give me help and assistance in making that acquisition.

Q. But what you were talking about acquiring was a controlling stake; correct?

A. Once again, let's be very clear. Are we talking about the agreement that was achieved in the course of the year or the very first agreement, the initial agreement?

Q. I'm talking about the final agreement which you had reached prior to August 1995.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I think that's ambiguous because I think the witness is saying that the agreement was concluded in stages.

MR RABINOWITZ: Well, I don't mind if that is what the witness is saying.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: And that to begin with in February he discussed certain things and that by the time August came, various other things had been agreed.

Is that right, Mr Abramovich?

- A. Yes, that is correct. After the shares for -- shares auctions, we agreed that Mr Berezovsky will help me take part and win the auctions. I mean shares for loans -- loans for shares auctions.

MR RABINOWITZ: The translation of that suggested that you said that:

"After the [loans for shares] auctions, we agreed... Mr Berezovsky [would] help [you] take part and win the auctions."

I think what you told my Lady is that by August 1995 you had agreed with Mr Berezovsky that he would assist you in obtaining a controlling stake of Sibneft?

- A. My feeling is that we lost a few words during the translation, something was lost in translation. Let me clarify.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, Mr Abramovich, it would help me if you could clarify, in your own words, how the process went from February to just before August 1995 and how you saw what you say is the agreement progressed?

- A. Before we sent the first batch of documents to the president for his signature, we agreed that I will be paying $30 million per year to fund ORT and to fund some of Berezovsky's expenses and for that he will help me obtain the signature, obtain the presidential signature for this decree, and that will -- and he will also help issue the regulations. And the regulations said that 51 per cent will be owned by the government and the 49 per cent will be auctioned off.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Just help me: at what stage did you send the first batch of documents to the president? What time roughly?

A. If my recollection is correct, it was on 10 February 1995.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. So by February, by mid-February, you'd come to this arrangement, you say, with Mr Berezovsky?

A. Yes, that is the case.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Taking it forward to the period before August, just before August 1995, what happened thereafter?

A. After that, what happened was that it was clear that 51 per cent will be held by the government while 49 per cent could be privatised. In order to privatise 49 per cent a certain number of auctions had to be held, and we agreed that Mr Berezovsky would help me in this.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Go on, Mr Rabinowitz, please.

MR RABINOWITZ: I just want for myself to get this clear.

And all of that which involved you getting a controlling interest in Sibneft you had agreed with Mr Berezovsky prior to August 1995; is that correct?

A. That I would acquire the share interest, yes, we agreed on that prior to August 1995.

Q. Thank you. You can put this to one side for a moment.

Can I ask you next, please, to go to bundle J2.2 at tab 12 J2/2.12/224. Mr Abramovich, at tab 12 you should have an English version of your first witness statement in this action. I'm pretty sure there was a Russian version but I can't at the moment locate it. I'm not sure it's in the files. It may not matter because this is incredibly short and I can read it to you. Okay? Do you have...

Now, just to remind you, when you made this statement, do you recall that, following the strike-out application that you made to strike out Mr Berezovsky's claim, Mr Berezovsky served a good deal of evidence in support of his case?

A. Yes, I recall that.

Q. And that evidence included a statement of Mr Berezovsky's solicitors and a statement from Mr Berezovsky himself; do you remember that?

A. I remember Berezovsky's evidence much better but there must have been some solicitors' evidence. But obviously

I paid more attention to Berezovsky's evidence.

- Q. And after Mr Berezovsky served this evidence -- I think I might start again because it may not have...

After Mr Berezovsky served this evidence, you then served this, which was your first witness statement in this action, in response. Do you follow?

- A. When you say "first", you mean this one, the very brief one, or the third witness statement?

Q. I mean this one that we're looking at here. This one.

A. Yes.

- Q. And you say it is a very brief witness statement, but what you do here is to confirm -- and just looking at paragraph 2, I'll tell you what you do confirm. It can be translated for you. You confirm that:

"... in so far as..."

Let me start that again.

Paragraph 1 of the statement, you refer to a statement which had been made by your solicitor, Mr Mitchard. Okay?

A. Yes.

- Q. In paragraph 2 of the statement, what you do is that you confirm that insofar as Mr Mitchard's statement refers to matters that are within your knowledge, that to the best of your knowledge and belief, Mr Mitchard's statement contains an accurate account of events.

Do you understand?

A. Yes, I do understand that.

Q. And you would have known, obviously, when you made this statement that the court would be considering your evidence and Mr Mitchard's evidence and might rely upon it to prevent Mr Berezovsky pursuing his claim to trial; is that correct?

A. When you say "prevent", what exactly do you mean?

Q. The object of your application was to put an end to this action so that it would never get to a trial.

A. Yes.

Q. And the evidence that you and Mr Mitchard put before the court was intended to produce that objective, was it not?

A. Yes, that is correct.

Q. Did you consider Mr Mitchard's evidence carefully before approving it?

A. To the extent I could, yes, I studied it carefully.

Q. Can we then just look at Mr Mitchard's statement. It's in the same bundle, one tab before this at tab 11 J2/2.11/171. Again, I don't think there is a Russian version of this, but if there is, I'm sure someone will tell me.

Can I ask you, please, to go to page 173 of the bundle J2/2.11/173. It's page 3 of the statement.

Now, at page 173, do you see a footnote, footnote 1?

A. Yes, I can see it but I cannot read it.

Q. Well, if I read out the part that I'm interested in, it can be translated for you and then I can ask you about it. Okay?

What Mr Mitchard says is to explain that you, Mr Abramovich, dispute "Mr Berezovsky's account of the ORT share purchase". And in the last sentence of this footnote Mr Mitchard says this:

"... the meeting at which ORT was discussed was not the last meeting between Mr Berezovsky and Mr Abramovich as Mr Berezovsky claims. There have been at least two meetings in Israel since then."

Do you follow?

A. Maybe -- maybe -- I'm not sure you actually asked a question. Could you ask a question?

Q. All I want to ascertain at this stage is that this has been translated for you so I can ask my question. So when I say, "Do you follow?", if you could just acknowledge it and then I know you've had the translation and I can ask you a question.

Do you follow?

A. Yes, this text has been translated to me.

Q. The meeting at which ORT was discussed that Mr Berezovsky had claimed occurred was one which had occurred after the arrest of Mr Glushkov on 7 December and before 25 December. Do you follow?

A. No, this is absolutely not the case.

Q. I haven't asked you a question yet, Mr Abramovich, other than to say, "Do you follow?"

A. Yes, but it did sound like you were asking a question; that's why I answered your question.

Q. Mr Abramovich, we have a difficulty in that I don't speak Russian and you don't speak English. As a result, we have to go through a process where I say something in English, wait for it to be translated and then seek to determine that you have had the translation before asking a question. And that's why I explained to you that when I say, "Do you follow?", it was simply to ascertain that you'd had the translation. Okay?

A. I understand.

Q. So, now, what Mr Mitchard is saying in this footnote is that when Mr Berezovsky said that the meeting at which ORT was discussed was the last meeting you had with him, Mr Mitchard was saying this was untrue because, says Mr Mitchard here:

"There have been at least two meetings in Israel since then."

Do you see that? Do you understand that?

A. Can I answer your question: yes, yes, I understand what you're saying, but I can clarify.

Q. I haven't yet asked you a question. I'll ask you the question and then you can explain.

Now, this must have been something in Mr Mitchard's statement which would have been within your knowledge and belief and which you would have confirmed. Can you confirm that?

A. I'm not sure I understand. Confirm what?

Q. The truth. The truth of what was being said by Mr Mitchard at footnote 1.

A. Could you ask your question again? This was really very long because I first had to remember what the footnote says and then to confirm. Now, as to whether or not I did have the feeling that we did have meetings in Israel or not: yes, I did have that feeling and we did have meetings.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, may I suggest that in fairness to the witness the whole of footnote 1 should be translated.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just a second. Let the witness answer the question.

Mr Abramovich, did you confirm what is said in the last two sentences of this footnote 1 when you made your short statement?

A. If my understanding is correct, what it says here is that the meeting which Mr Berezovsky says was the last meeting in Antibes was not the last meeting and this is what I confirmed, because we did have meetings in Israel. This is what I confirmed. Now, if this means --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Okay, just stop. Stop, stop.

Are you now saying that there were at least two meetings in Israel after the meeting at which ORT was discussed?

A. Yes, at that time I believed that there had been two meetings; in fact, there had been one.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. So your evidence today to me is that there was only one meeting in Israel after the meeting at which ORT was discussed?

A. Yes, I think there was only one meeting but we did not discuss anything; we just said "Hi" to each other and it was not a meeting per se. We literally exchanged a couple of words and that's it.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So Mr Mitchard is wrong to describe these "meetings" as meetings as such? They were just meetings between the two of you, not formal meetings at which you discussed business?

A. That is absolutely correct. Our paths just happened to cross. This was not a formal, full-blown meeting.

MR RABINOWITZ: In fact, Mr Abramovich, as I think is clear from your witness statement, you didn't have any meetings with Mr Berezovsky at all in Israel following this, did you?

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, my learned friend must not put statements about the witness statement which are frankly not correct.

MR RABINOWITZ: With respect, I don't accept that.

Can you answer my question?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Rabinowitz, just ask the question, please.

MR RABINOWITZ: In fact, Mr Abramovich, as I think is clear from your witness statements, you didn't have any meetings with Mr Berezovsky -- and I'll qualify that in the way that you've described meetings, that's to say a proper meeting -- with Mr Berezovsky at all in Israel following this, did you?

A. Yes, you are right. We did not have meetings with Berezovsky by way of formal meetings but our paths did cross and we exchanged a couple of words.

Q. In fact what you say in your witness statement at paragraph 312 E1/03/129 is that you did little more than briefly acknowledge each other and that you did not wish to speak to him. Is that correct?

A. Yes, that's true. We did not have a lengthy discussion. We did not just acknowledge each other; we exchanged a couple of words.

Q. And so when you said -- or when Mr Mitchard said, in a statement that you'd approved, in an attempt to respond to Mr Berezovsky's suggestion that the last time you met was to discuss ORT, that there had been at least two meetings in Israel, that was untrue, was it not?

A. It is true that there was only one meeting and it was exactly the way I've just described it.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: It was the saying "Hi" meeting? That's all you said, just "Hi" and a couple of pleasantries?

A. Absolutely, yes. We said, "Hi, how are things?", and that was it.

MR RABINOWITZ: My Lady, that may be a convenient moment.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Just a second, please.

Right, I'll take the ten-minute break.

(11.23 am)

(A short break)

(11.35 am)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, Mr Rabinowitz.

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Abramovich, you still have Mr Mitchard's statement in front of you and can I ask you, please, to go to page 177 in that bundle, please J2/2.11/177.

I want to read to you what Mr Mitchard says at paragraph 12(b). He says:

"In fact, what Mr Abramovich agreed with Mr Berezovsky was that, in recognition of the political assistance Mr Berezovsky had provided in respect of the creation of Sibneft, Mr Abramovich would fund certain of the cash requirements of the television company, ORT, in which Mr Berezovsky came to hold a 49% stake."

Again, would this have been something within your knowledge?

A. Which year do you mean? The date is very important here.

Q. Mr Abramovich, I'm reading Mr Mitchard's statement and what I want to confirm is that Mr Mitchard would have received this information from you. Do you understand?

A. Mr Mitchard did talk with me; yes, this is true.

Q. And this would have been information within your knowledge that you would have confirmed to him was true; is that correct?

A. Could you please clarify? What information do you mean: that Mr Berezovsky held 49 per cent of ORT shares or did you mean something else? Sorry, I didn't understand the question.

Q. What I'm particularly interested in here, Mr Abramovich, is what it is said you were going to give Mr Berezovsky in this deal, and what Mr Mitchard says about this is that:

"... Mr Abramovich would fund certain of the cash requirements of the television company, ORT..."

A. Yes, this is so. I confirm this.

Q. And when he says "certain of the cash requirements", what requirements did you mean? All the cash requirements? Half the cash requirements?

A. The requirements that Mr Berezovsky described to me: he said about $30 million would be required for ORT. So these are the certain cash requirements. I didn't determine them; Mr Berezovsky determined them.

Q. And what is said at paragraph 12(b) is broadly the same description of what you had said you had agreed to provide Mr Berezovsky, as we saw in your pleadings. Do you agree?

A. Could you please read out (b)? I think you were discussing (a) before. I didn't understand the question.

Q. What Mr Mitchard describes as being what you had agreed you would give to Mr Berezovsky here matches what you in your defence had said you were going to be giving to Mr Berezovsky here, and that is that you would give him funds for ORT. Is that correct?

A. Yes, I confirm this, and I say about this and write this in all my statements.

Q. The trouble about that, Mr Abramovich, is that your case about what you say you had agreed to Mr Berezovsky has changed, and it has changed because you no longer limit what you say you had to give him to the funding of ORT; you now say that that was one of the things that the funding would be directed towards, but that you were paying for other things as well.

Do you accept that your case has changed here?

A. No, I do not accept this and may I clarify, please?

Q. Please do, yes.

A. When we were writing the statements, remember I was telling about the history. The main sum that Berezovsky asked for was $30 million and the majority of these funds went for the ORT. Also I've offset some of his loans but it was nothing compared to $30 million. It was maybe 50,000 or 60,000, it was Alfa-Bank loan and some other loans, but it was a small sum compared to 30 million.

That's why, if you are reading in Russian, I didn't mean that. It's quite a broad interpretation. So it doesn't look like this.

Q. What I suggest has happened here, Mr Abramovich, is this: in response to Mr Berezovsky saying that you were partners and that this is why he offered -- he gave you assistance, you came up with an alternative false story, and that was that you were not partners and that in return for his assistance all you had agreed to do was to give him funding for ORT.

The problem for you --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I think the question is getting too long, Mr Rabinowitz.

MR RABINOWITZ: Well, it's not yet a question. I'm going to say what my case is and then ask him to comment.

The problem for you, Mr Abramovich, was that as it emerged, as the proceedings went on, that there was a great deal of evidence to show that you had been making distributions to him that had nothing to do with ORT, you have had to change your case in order to fit the new facts which were arising.

Do you agree with that?

A. I absolutely disagree with that.

Q. Now, I want to move on to a different but related subject and it is this: when do you say that you first acquired management control of Sibneft? Was it before the December 1995 auction or was it after the December 1995 auction?

A. Real management control over Sibneft was acquired by us after getting 51 per cent of shares to hold, but before that we also had good relations with the management. But from legal viewpoint, we have acquired control over Sibneft after we've taken 51 per cent to hold.

Q. Can I ask you, please, to go to paragraph 85 of your third witness statement, E1, tab 3, page 61 in English E1/03/61 and page 162 in Russian E1/03/162. You say in the first sentence of paragraph 85 that:

"[You] realised that [you] had to participate in the auction..."

This is the loans for shares auction.

"... no matter what or I would risk losing the everyday management control that I had already spent so much money on and fought so hard to acquire."

So here you seem to be suggesting that you already had management control prior to the December 1995 auction.

A. I think I've already explained that we've acquired management control after taking 51 per cent of the pledge, 51 per cent of the shares. And prior to that, the company was just created; there was nothing to control there. Well, we had a supply contract for some products but there was nothing to control there.

Q. But, with respect, Mr Abramovich, what your witness statement seems to be saying is that you had already acquired management control prior to the auction and that what you were worrying about was losing that management control.

A. No, I don't mean this at all. The company was created, was registered in October and the auction was held in December. There were three people working in the company. There was nothing to speak about. It was simply the decree was issued and that was all. We had supply contracts for supply of petroleum products, but the control was only acquired by us after the loans for shares auction.

Q. Can you then just explain what you mean at paragraph 85, where you say:

"I realised that I had to participate in the auction no matter what or I would risk losing the everyday management control that I had already spent so much money on and fought so hard to acquire."

A. Initially my idea was, in according to privatisation plan, to quietly -- immediately privatise 49 per cent from the package that was in the federal ownership. 15 per cent was given to the regions, to Yamal and to Omsk oblast. My idea was to buy 49 per cent and then to buy the rest of the 15 per cent. That was my initial idea.

Q. Mr Abramovich, I don't think that's an answer to my question. My question relates to what you've said at paragraph 85 of your statement. Paragraph 85 of your statement seems to say that you had management control over these companies and that the reason you wanted to participate in the loans for shares auction was because you were concerned that you were going to lose the management control that you had.

- A. That is exactly what I'm saying about. And if I didn't take part in the loans for shares auction, I would have lost management control; in other words, I would have not acquired it.
- Q. Mr Abramovich, I have no doubt that you know that there is a difference between not acquiring it at all and losing something that you already have, and what you say at paragraph 85 is consistent only with it being something you already had.
- A. Yes, indeed, I had good relations with the management of the company, with the president, and because of this we had access to supplies of oil and petroleum products. This is what I meant. The company was only created in October, so the real control and being on the board of directors, that wasn't possible.
- Q. Let me ask you this then, Mr Abramovich. Following the creation of the vertically integrated Sibneft in August 1995, do you say that you wanted Sibneft to be part of the loans for shares scheme and privatised or is it your case that you would have worked to prevent that if you could?
- A. Sorry, it's a strange way the question was put. I'll try to answer it. I didn't want to prevent it. First

I didn't want it to happen, but then we discussed it and thought that made sense.

Q. So is the answer to my question that you wanted it to happen?

A. Again, what point in time are you discussing? Before the decree about the loans for shares I didn't want it; and after the decree was issued, we made an effort for it to be included, for Sibneft to be included in the decree.

Q. And so let's talk about after the decree.

If Mr Shvidler were to say that when Sibneft was placed in the privatisation plan, this posed a problem for your team because the management control you had thought that you could obtain using your contacts with Omsk could now be lost unless it was paid for, you say that would be wrong?

A. Sorry, could you please repeat? I think the sense was lost in translation.

Q. Mr Shvidler's evidence is going to be that having Sibneft in the privatisation plan posed a problem for your team because the management control you had thought you could obtain could now be lost unless it was paid for. Do you say that is true or is what Mr Shvidler is saying there untrue?

A. What Shvidler is saying is true. If we didn't pay for the control stake 100.3 million, we would have lost control; someone else would have had those shares and pledge and that will be the end of it.

Q. But again, Mr Abramovich, in the answer you have just given to that question, you say you "would have lost" management control. Do you say you had management control prior to the loans for shares auction taking place?

A. Again, I'll try to clarify. At the moment of creation of the decree -- sorry, at the moment of creation of the company, Viktor Andreyevich Gorodilov was appointed the president. Due to my relationship with him, we had some control. But, if I understand your question correctly, we've gained control only after taking the shares on pledge.

Q. Now, just putting to one side this issue that we have been discussing about management control, the reality of the position in 1995, when you and Mr Berezovsky made your agreement, is that you wanted to get shareholder control of Sibneft; can you confirm that?

A. We've been discussing this in great detail before the break and you have summarised it again. What point of time are we talking about: initial discussions or nearer the creation or when the decree was issued or the loans for shares auctions? What do you mean?

- Q. Prior to August 1995, Mr Abramovich.
- A. Could you please repeat the question that you put to me?
- Q. By August 1995, when you and Mr Berezovsky made your final agreement, if I can put it that way, you accept, do you not, that what you wanted was to get shareholder control of Sibneft?
- A. Yes.
- Q. And you knew that the only way to get and retain control of Sibneft would be to acquire majority ownership of the shares?
- A. Yes, this is right, but I just clarified my plans in this regard.
- Q. And you knew also that if at any stage you had only a minority stake in the new company to be created, then there would always be a risk of the majority shareholders removing the management you had in place; is that correct?
- A. At any point in time, the State was the majority shareholder. So if the State appointed the president of the company, it was very unlikely that the State would change him in a very short point -- period of time. Moreover, Mr Berezovsky could control this; this is why I needed him at that point in time.
- Q. Mr Abramovich, we're talking about a process in which the company was going to be privatised and my question to you in that context was that you knew that the only way to get and retain control of Sibneft would be to acquire a majority shareholder interest, and you agreed with that.

I then asked you this: would you accept that if at any stage you had only a minority stake in the new company to be created and privatised, then there would always be a risk of the majority shareholders removing the management you had in place?

A. I will try to reply. I did not appoint the management; the president of the Russian Federation appointed the management.

Q. Okay. But the management with whom you had good relations?

A. That risk always existed. That's why Mr Berezovsky was taking that risk off, due to his relations with the coterie of Boris Yeltsin.

Q. Now, it wasn't only you who wanted to acquire an ownership interest in Sibneft, was it? Mr Berezovsky also recognised the enormous long-term benefits that could come from having ownership of Sibneft. Do you agree?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: There are two questions there. The implication of the first question is that there was somebody else in particular who wanted to acquire an ownership interest.

MR RABINOWITZ: Well, let me ask it this way.

Do you accept that, like you, Mr Berezovsky also recognised the enormous long-term benefits which could come from acquiring an ownership interest in Sibneft?

A. We have to -- both of us did not fully understand what the benefits could be. As I was trying to explain yesterday, when the company was created I had no idea it could cost that much, if you mean these benefits.

Q. Mr Abramovich, you come to Mr Berezovsky with a plan to acquire an ownership of Sibneft because you recognise the enormous potential, in terms of money, that such a plan would have; okay?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Do you agree with that?

A. Yes, I agree with that. And the infrastructure that belonged to me, the trading companies, allowed, together with Sibneft, ie on the basis of Sibneft, to extract large profit, yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: Do you accept that Mr Berezovsky also would have recognised that acquiring an ownership interest in Sibneft would have produced enormous potential in terms of money that it would generate?

A. I disagree with that. Just a controlling stake in Sibneft and Sibneft per se, that was long term a very non-profitable, loss-making enterprise. When I was with Noyabrskneftegas, before Sibneft creation, the atmosphere there was dire. When the supply goes down -- sorry, the production goes down in the oil company and only 16...

THE INTERPRETER: Apologies, I just asked to repeat --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just a second, Mr Abramovich. It might help if you spoke a bit more slowly.

A. Oil production is extremely capital-intensive.

Noyabrskneftegas was planned for 45 million tonnes production. At that point in time that we're describing, production was about 16 million tonnes; and the infrastructure, the whole infrastructure that was created in the oilfields, was only planned for 45 million tonnes. The infrastructure and maintaining the infrastructure was very expensive. The infrastructure was expensive.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So can I ask: is the point you're making that just acquiring Sibneft on its own, without the inclusion of your trading companies, wouldn't necessarily generate vast profits?

A. At initial stage it definitely would not generate them. Noyabrsk was a loss-making enterprise, unfortunately.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: All right. Continue, Mr Rabinowitz.

MR RABINOWITZ: You were very careful in your answer, Mr Abramovich, to say that acquiring Sibneft per se on its own would not be profitable, and you have been very careful in your case to explain that what would generate profits was to acquire, through ownership control of Sibneft, a control of what Sibneft did with its oil.

And is this right: where the money was to be made was by controlling Sibneft and therefore controlling the people with whom they dealt for the purposes of selling their product?

A. Could you please rephrase the question? Again, the question was quite long and I forgot the first part when you were asking the second part.

Q. Where you hoped to make profits from obtaining control of Sibneft was by ensuring, through that control, that Sibneft sold as much oil as possible to your trading companies, who would then make very substantial profits from that oil. Isn't that correct?

A. Yes, this is correct.

Q. And that is what you would have explained to Mr Berezovsky, is it not?

A. I didn't explain it to Mr Berezovsky in such a form and there was no need at that point in time. He was only interested whether I'll be able to perform my obligations that I've undertaken, and this is it, and I've performed these obligations. I have performed them.

Q. Mr Abramovich, we have already seen in your evidence that you explained to Mr Berezovsky that the scheme that you had would result in you more than doubling what you said was your own net income from $40 million to $100 million. I suggest to you you must have explained to him what it was that you were going to do with Sibneft in order to ensure that you were able to generate that sort of profit?

A. I didn't explain to him, not because I didn't want to explain it to him; because he was not interested in that. He was just interested whether I'll be able to issue 30 million or not and that was the end of discussion.

I was prepared, actually, I was ready to be explaining. At that point in time you have to understand I wasn't such a known man; I was glad that he was talking to me. But I didn't set the tone for these discussions.

Q. I suggest to you that what you are saying is not true, Mr Abramovich. Do you want to comment on that?

A. I disagree with this.

Q. You have said in your evidence --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: What paragraph, please?

MR RABINOWITZ: Let me ask it slightly differently.

Do you say that Mr Berezovsky had no interest at all in acquiring ownership of companies but was only ever interested in cashflow?

A. This is practically what I was saying. He was interested in the cashflows that I was able to provide. These are not the cashflows of Sibneft.

Q. Did you not know that at the end of 1994, when Mr Berezovsky became involved with ORT, he acquired a shareholding interest in it?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: A shareholding in what, Mr Rabinowitz?

MR RABINOWITZ: ORT.

A. Are we speaking about the 94th or the 95th year? Which year are we talking about?

Q. Let's ask all these questions by reference to the state of your knowledge by August 1995.

By August 1995 were you aware that Mr Berezovsky had become involved in ORT and acquired a shareholding interest in it?

A. Yes, I did know that.

Q. And in 1995, Mr Berezovsky had also acquired -- also had a shareholding interest in Logovaz, and you knew that as well, did you not?

A. I suspected that; I didn't know it for sure. Yes, but it's a high degree of certainty.

Q. Mr Shvidler says he knew it for sure and you were certainly closer to Mr Berezovsky than Mr Shvidler. Are you suggesting that Mr Shvidler might have known this and you might not have?

A. I think, again, it might have been error in translation.

You said I was closer to Mr Berezovsky than to Mr Shvidler. I think that is --

Q. Than Mr Shvidler -- you were closer to Mr Berezovsky than Mr Shvidler was to Mr Berezovsky?

A. Yes, this is true.

Q. And if Mr Shvidler would have known about it, would you accept that it is likely that you would have known about it as well?

A. Yes, I would accept, but I'm not the only source of knowledge for Mr Shvidler. But I think I would agree with you in this part.

Q. Also in 1995 Mr Berezovsky had a stake in Consolidated Bank and you were aware of that as well, were you not?

A. At some point in '95 I did find out about that, but I don't remember exactly.

Q. And in 1995 Mr Berezovsky had a large stake in a company called Anros SA, a Swiss company. Did you know about that?

A. One more time, what's the company name? Anros? No, I didn't know about that.

Q. Mr Berezovsky also had a majority stake in a company called Forus Holdings SA. Did you know about that?

- A. I don't think I knew that in '95.
- Q. Mr Berezovsky also had a shareholding in a company called Andava. Did you know about that?
- A. I think in 1995 I didn't know that -- about that either.
- Q. Did you know about Mr Berezovsky's stake in Aeroflot via Consolidated Bank?
- A. I doubt that Berezovsky's stake in Aeroflot via Consolidated Bank was held in '95.
- Q. You did know, I think, that Mr Berezovsky later acquired shares in Kommersant and TV6. Is that right?
- A. Yes, this is right, and I paid for this.
- Q. And you were also aware, I think, that Mr Berezovsky acquired interests in the Nezavisimaya Gazeta and Novye Izvestia?
- A. In Novye Izvestia this is not correct. This is not correct. He created it, the editor and the team left, and the new Novye Gazeta was created. But it wasn't in '95, that's for sure.
- Q. I'm not suggesting with that one it was 1995. But you are aware, are you, that he did in fact acquire interests in those companies?
- A. When you started asking this question, the whole series of these questions, you were talking about 1995, and then you slowly but surely started asking about my knowledge.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, again, Mr Abramovich, don't criticise Mr Rabinowitz. That's for me to do. Okay? If appropriate.

THE WITNESS: My apologies. I just simply don't understand the question.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: But, Mr Rabinowitz, I think you should make it clear whether you are asking the question by reference to 1995 or some later date, to be fair to the witness.

MR RABINOWITZ: I will. I think I did, but I'll do it again.

Mr Berezovsky also acquired interests in Nezavisimaya Gazeta and Novye Izvestia, even if that wasn't by 1995; is that correct?

A. This is correct. But again I'd like to clarify once more that he didn't buy a stake in Novye Izvestia; he created that paper.

Q. So he created and managed that business, did he?

A. I wouldn't call that a business. It's business with a negative income, yes.

Q. You see, Mr Abramovich, what I suggest to you is that Mr Berezovsky acquired some shareholding in every business venture in which he was engaged and your claim that he agreed to receive not a single share in Sibneft is simply unbelievable.

Would you like to comment on that, please?

A. Yes. Yes, I would.

If all companies that you listed, you didn't have to pay for it anywhere. These were the companies that were registered, I had hundreds of companies like that, but you didn't have to pay for them. They were just companies which are registered, via which you start a new business. That was it.

Sibneft is a completely different situation: one had to pay for it. That slightly changes the practice.

Q. Mr Abramovich, do you accept that in 1995, when you won the loans for shares auction, you had it in mind that in the event of a State default you would be able to take ownership of the 51 per cent stake in Sibneft, whether directly or indirectly?

A. Yes.

Q. You did not think that you would be required to auction the 51 per cent to some unconnected third party, did you?

A. Sorry, I didn't understand the question to the end. How did you mean by "third party"?

Q. To some unconnected third party. Well, let me repeat the question and then you tell me exactly what it is about the question you don't understand.

The question to you is: you didn't think that you would be required to auction the 51 per cent, in the event of a State default, to some third party with no connection at all to you?

A. If the State defaults, doesn't return the loan, yes, we had to put it up for auction. Whether the third party could take part in it? Yes, it could.

Q. I'm not suggesting a third party could not take part in it, Mr Abramovich; what I'm suggesting is that you would have had the right to auction the 51 per cent. Do you agree with that?

A. Yes, sure.

Q. And you could participate, directly or indirectly, in that auction and acquire that 51 per cent; that is correct as well, isn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. And your expectation was that if the State defaulted and there had to be such an auction, that you would win that auction?

A. I surely hoped that, but I couldn't say that I was absolutely sure of that. I can't say that.

Q. Neither did I ask you that. My question was: your expectation was that if the State defaulted and there had to be such an auction, that you would win that auction. That is correct, is it not?

A. Yes, I hoped for that. That was...

- Q. The whole purpose of engaging in the loans for shares auction was precisely so as to enable the person who won the loan auction -- that is to say who won the first stage -- to be able to acquire that 51 per cent in the event of default. You agree with that as well?
- A. The question is put in quite a complicated way. Was there a guarantee that if the default happens, that the pledger -- the person who holds the pledge would win? No, there wasn't such a guarantee.
- Q. But there was an expectation that this is what would happen, wasn't there?
- A. There was an expectation and there was a big desire for that; that's right.
- Q. Do you accept, Mr Abramovich, that in every case where there was a loan for share auction, the person who won the first stage of that auction was subsequently the person who acquired the State's shares that were auctioned?
- A. In the majority of cases, yes, but I think it wasn't 100 per cent. I think there was a strange story with Sidanko that some people won and other people got it as a result.
- Q. Do you accept this, Mr Abramovich: that there was, in relation to the loans for shares scheme, both an expectation and a very high probability that the government would default on the loan for which the shares had been given as security?

A. Yes. Yes, this is so, there was such an expectation and such a feeling. But I cannot say -- one cannot say that that was guaranteed.

Q. Do you accept that that was in fact part of the plan?

A. Yes, that was part of my plan, I agree.

Q. No, not your plan, Mr Abramovich; the general plan in relation to these loans for shares auctions.

A. No, no, it was namely my plan with regard to these auctions.

Q. Can I just hand up to you an extract from a book which Mr Kokh, who was the chairman of the State Committee for the Management of State Property, has written about this issue. (Handed)

THE INTERPRETER: Mr Rabinowitz, I was just wondering whether you had that in Russian.

MR RABINOWITZ: We don't. I will have to read it and you will have to get it translated.

Now, you can see -- well, you can't, but I'll tell you -- maybe you can. The title of the book is called "The Selling of the Soviet Empire" and it's by -- "Revelations of the Principal Insider" -- Alfred Kokh.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, there is a Russian text, as one sees from the second page.

MR RABINOWITZ: There is, but we do not have it here, my Lady.

Can I ask you, please, to go to page 105. What Mr Koch says at page 105 is this. He's describing the pledge plan or the loans for shares plan and he says:

"The government's obligations were limited."

This is the second paragraph:

"The government's obligations were limited. Bear in mind that at the expiration of the term of the loan in a future year, not only the term of a loan but also the ban on the sale of oil shares that our friends in the Duma had..."

I'm going to start again and go more slowly for the translator. I'm sorry.

"The government's obligations were limited. Bear in mind that at the expiration of the term of the loan in a future year, not only the term of the loan but also the ban on the sale of oil shares that our friends in the Duma had hung around our necks would have expired. Taken for granted was the idea that if, by that time, the government had failed in its obligations -- let's just say this was something we more than half expected; after all, the point was to inject huge sums into the budget, not pay them out -- the holders of the shares would assume actual ownership of the shares and could sell them."

Now, would you agree with Mr Koch when he notes that the point of the loans for shares scheme was to inject huge sums into the budget, not pay them out? Are you able to comment on that?

- A. I will try to comment, although it's a bit difficult just to hear such a long paragraph and understand it.

I think here Kokh is quoting that the probability was 50 per cent; this is what I was explaining. The probability of default was very high, probably even higher than 50 per cent, but we didn't know that it would be a guaranteed default.

In '96 there were elections and everything could have been changed and that would have been it; it would have been no default.

- Q. Mr Abramovich, there was an expectation of a default; would you agree with that?

- A. There certainly was an expectation, yes.

- Q. And a further strong indication that the state did not intend to repay the loans is the fact that no provision was even made in the budget to repay the loans; do you accept that?

- A. I would like to agree with you, but I can't, because Kokh himself was saying that the likelihood of that was 50 per cent. We're talking about the '95 budget and everything that happened after that happened in '96, '98. So one cannot treat this seriously. And plus the book we are looking at is fiction.

Q. Can I ask you, please, to go to the document that you will find in Russian at bundle H(A)09, page 62 H(A)09/62, in English at H(A)09, page 28 H(A)09/28.

Mr Abramovich, you probably recognise -- I don't think you're looking at the right page. Maybe you are. This is a report which was produced by the audit chamber into the sale of Sibneft shares by way of the loans for shares scheme and if you go to paragraph 4.1, which you have at page 62 of the Russian. It's at page 37 of the English version H(A)09/37. Can I just ask you to look at paragraph 4.1. The audit chamber find this:

"The Federal Law on Privatisation of State and Municipal Enterprises in the [Russian Federation] doesn't provide for such a way of privatisation as alienation of pledged state property. At the time of execution of the Credit Agreement, in violation of clause 6... the right of the Borrower (the Ministry of Finance of Russia) to repay with the funds of the federal budget for year 1996 was impossible to exercise -- the budget for 1996 did not provide funds for repayment of loans."

Do you see that? So when you say, as you do, that you can't accept what Mr Kokh says because his work is fiction and that therefore you can't accept that no provision was made in the budget to repay these loans, I suggest to you you're wrong.

A. Can I answer?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, please do.

A. This document was put together in 1997, it's looking backwards, and it describes the auctions that happened in '95; and subsequently, '96, no funds for offsetting the loans were provided. So it very clearly can be seen in '96 but cannot be seen in 1995.

MR RABINOWITZ: Well, are you suggesting there was something in the budget in 1995 and that the audit committee in 1997 neglected to discover that?

A. No, I didn't say that. I'm just saying that in '95 it was not possible to understand whether -- in 1996 it was absolutely impossible to understand whether there would be any payments for loans to shares auctions in '96, any provisions in the budget. But the likelihood that there won't be any was very high and therefore Mr Kokh is saying that he estimates it as over 50 per cent.

Q. I want to turn next to ask you about the krysha allegation that you make in this case. This is, of course, at the core of the difference between what you and Mr Berezovsky say was agreed in '95 because while he says that the agreement you made was that you, he and Mr Patarkatsishvili should be partners, you say that the relationship was not one of partnership at all but was rather one of krysha. That's correct, is it not?

A. Yes, this is correct.

Q. And can we begin by just trying to get some clarity by what you mean when you claim that your relationship with Mr Berezovsky was one based on krysha, because I have to suggest to you, Mr Abramovich, that what you say here is not clear.

Can I ask you, please, to look at paragraphs 32 to 35 of your third witness statement. In English it begins at page 42 E1/03/42 and in Russian at page 142 E1/03/142. Can I ask you to read that to yourself, please.

A. (Untranslated)

Q. If you read paragraphs 32 to 35. (Pause)

A. Yes, I've read that.

Q. Now, you note in these paragraphs that although krysha could be either political protection or physical protection, in your case you needed both; is that right?

A. In my case I needed political krysha more, but I would not refuse to have a physical one too.

Q. Mr Abramovich, that's not what you say here. What you say -- what is clear from what you say here is that although krysha could be both either political or physical protection, in your case you needed both.

A. This is almost what you mean. I'm saying that in start of '90s, in 2000, I needed both kinds of protection to create the conditions which are stable enough; and in some sense, yes, both, one and the other. The business after creation of Sibneft didn't require krysha. After Sibneft was created, political krysha was required, yes.

Q. So what you appear to suggest in these paragraphs is that what you went looking for, because this is what you needed, was both physical and political protection. I think you've agreed that that is what you went looking for. Correct?

A. No. I don't say it here. I'm saying that would not mind physical protection but what I was looking for was political protection.

Q. You see, Mr Abramovich, what you actually say, paragraph 32, towards the end:

"Krysha could take the form of political protection or physical protection. During the 1990's and through the early 2000's, I needed both kinds of protection..."

I suggest to you that what you are saying here is that that is what you went looking for: a krysha that provided you with both kinds of protection. That's your evidence, isn't it?

A. This is not quite what I'm saying here. I needed political krysha but I would not refuse to have a physical one either.

Q. Well, that's not at all what you're saying here, Mr Abramovich.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, that's a matter for me, Mr Rabinowitz, to decide what the witness is saying and to analyse it against what he's said in cross-examination.

MR RABINOWITZ: Now, you don't say, I think, that you entered into a krysha understanding or relationship with anyone other than Mr Berezovsky. Is that right?

A. I've entered into an understanding only with Mr Berezovsky; that's right.

Q. You don't suggest that someone other than Mr Berezovsky provided you, directly or indirectly, with any aspect of krysha, do you?

A. I think I didn't understand the question. Could you please repeat it?

Q. You don't suggest that someone other than Mr Berezovsky provided you, either directly or indirectly, with the two aspects of krysha that we've mentioned, either political or physical protection?

A. Well, Mr Berezovsky was able to provide both types of krysha.

Q. What I'm still unclear about is whether you say you went to Mr Berezovsky because he was able to provide both types and that is what you wanted?

A. No, I want to reiterate: I went to him for political krysha because I needed political krysha.

Q. Can you look, Mr Abramovich, at paragraph 33 of your witness statement. You say:

"As I explain further below, my relationship with Mr Berezovsky began in late 1994 at the time when I wished to take my business interests to the next level by creating what later became Sibneft. It was not possible to achieve this in Russia at that time without the help of a person who had the appropriate political connections."

Then you say this:

"Additionally, it was also necessary at that time to have 'physical' protection as anyone having access to businesses capable of generating strong cash-flows was vulnerable to criminal interference, including political violence."

So you're actually saying here it was necessary to have physical protection.

A. Physical protection was necessary but I did not contact Mr Berezovsky because of that.

Q. Well, who did you contact because of that?

A. I didn't contact anyone for that. Just the mere presence of Mr Berezovsky and his team allowed to solve this problem.

Q. Does it follow that you then did go to Mr Berezovsky because you felt that he could give you the physical aspect of krysha?

A. It doesn't follow from that.

Q. You've told us, Mr Abramovich, first that you needed physical protection. You've also told us that you went -- you needed physical protection and political protection. You've also told us that, because of that, you went looking for krysha and that the only person you went to for krysha was Mr Berezovsky.

What I don't understand is how you say you were getting the physical protection in respect of krysha if you do not say that you went to Mr Berezovsky for it?

A. I didn't go to him for that, but the automobile business is built in such a way that one has to resist criminal attempts, as it says here. Because his business was an automobile business, selling cars, with a large amount of cash, that business was smoothly operated in this way: the physical protection was necessary. And after meeting Mr Berezovsky I thought I can count on that as well. But did I contact him for that? No, I definitely didn't contact him for that, that's for sure.

Q. Is it not your evidence that in fact what you needed was access to people with connections to criminal gangs who could, by use of this access to criminal gangs, where necessary, inflict violence and threats on people who were challenging you?

A. I was saying just to the contrary: that I did not have enemies, I didn't have people in my way. I needed protection; I didn't need a way of attacking people.

Q. Can I ask you, please, to go to paragraph 43 of your witness statement, page 46 of the English E1/03/46. You see you say here -- and you're talking about the period of time where you had your relationship with Mr Berezovsky, at the end of 1994 moving through that to 1996 -- you say:

"In this era, a number of powerful individuals appeared who could get the ear of those close to the government. At that time, Mr Berezovsky was one of such people. Additionally, from 1995 on, he had the additional advantage of exerting substantial influence over the media -- both television and the press. There were also people like Mr Patarkatsishvili (normally everyone called him Badri), whose influence derived from their connections to criminal groups. That was the nature of the political support and physical protection I have referred to above as krysha."

So let me ask you this again: is it your case that you went looking for someone who could provide services including access to criminal gangs, and it was in respect of such services that you were willing to pay substantial amounts of money?

- A. What I am explaining here, this is exactly to the contrary: I had to ensure that criminal gangs did not have access to me and not about me having access to criminal gangs. So for them not to have any access to me, I was prepared to pay for that. But I contacted Mr Berezovsky not for this, not for this reason.
- Q. What is the purpose then of referring to what you say are Mr Patarkatsishvili's links to criminal gangs? Why did you say that there?
- A. I'm saying about this exactly because of his authority. Badri could make sure that criminal gangs will have nothing against me, to keep the situation in such a way that they would have nothing against me, no one would attack me or my companies.
- Q. Mr Abramovich, what I suggest to you is that, despite the evidence that you have given, you are now trying to limit this krysha relationship to simply the role of lobbying on the part of Mr Berezovsky. Is that what you're trying to do?
- A. No, it wasn't just lobbying. Everything I've described in Russian is called "krysha". If you translate this as "lobbying", okay, but in Russian this is called "krysha". When a person is ensuring protection, it doesn't matter what protection, and you are paying for that: this is the essence of the relationship.

Q. But again, are you saying you were paying for the physical protection which included connections to criminal gangs?

A. I didn't pay for that but I was paying for political krysha.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Abramovich, a moment ago you said that after meeting Mr Berezovsky you thought that you could "count on that as well", that is to say physical protection. Could you explain what you meant by saying after you met Mr Berezovsky you thought you could count on physical protection as well? It's [draft] page 66 of the transcript.

Also at [draft] page 65, you said:

"I didn't contact anyone for [physical protection]. Just the mere presence of Mr Berezovsky and his team allowed to solve this problem."

Can you explain to me what, after you met him, you were counting on him for in the context of physical protection?

A. I counted that the presence of Mr Berezovsky and people surrounding him, including Badri, would ensure physical protection for me as well, but I didn't pay for that.

That was, if you wish, a free attachment. I contacted him for one purpose, and that was going without saying.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Was the element of physical protection something you discussed with Mr Berezovsky?

A. No, I don't think we've discussed it. I don't remember that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right, thank you.

A. I only describe my feelings.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. And did you discuss it with Mr Patarkatsishvili, the question of physical protection?

A. No, I didn't discuss it with him.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you.

MR RABINOWITZ: You see, Mr Abramovich, I suggest your evidence in here makes it perfectly clear that -- let me put this another way.

Let me make it clear that we accept that the only thing that Mr Berezovsky ever provided you with in terms of influence was political influence. But the reason that this evidence is interesting, Mr Abramovich, is because it makes clear that you will seek to smear Mr Berezovsky, if that is what you think is necessary, in order to try and meet his claim in this action. Do you dispute that?

A. In translation it was said that I will do everything for him not to win this action?

Q. In order to try and avoid Mr Berezovsky winning this action, you will resort to smearing him by trying to associate him with criminal gangs and anything else you think will assist you by making him look bad in front of this court. Do you dispute that that is what you're trying to do here?

A. No, I do not agree. I'm just trying to describe the situation.

Q. Can we go, please, to paragraph 52 of your statement, page 48 in the English E1/03/48 and page 147 in the Russian E1/03/147. You say in paragraph 52, beginning five lines from the end of this:

"... I was aware that Mr Berezovsky was believed to have strong connections to the Chechen elements which exerted a powerful influence in Moscow at that time. Mr Berezovsky seemed to me capable of providing me with both political and physical support and protection."

Now, what you appear to be saying there, Mr Abramovich, is that you were aware that Mr Berezovsky was believed -- you don't say by whom -- to have connections to Chechen elements. Is that correct?

A. I'm just saying -- I'm saying that it was believed, and that was a well-known fact, that Berezovsky had strong connections with Chechens because these people protected his car business.

Q. Can we look at paragraph 65 of your statement, page 154 in the Russian E1/03/154, page 54 in the English E1/03/54. You see the last sentence of paragraph 65 -- it's actually over the page in the English -- you talk about "Mr Patarkatsishvili's known connections with certain Chechen elements in Moscow".

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: You might like to read paragraph 65 to yourself to put it in context. (Pause)

THE WITNESS: Yes, I've read it.

MR RABINOWITZ: And it's clear, isn't it, that these "Chechen elements" that you are referring to here was intended by you to carry a connotation of gangsterism?

A. No. I am describing the situation as it was at that time, as I understood it at that time.

Q. When you referred at paragraph 43 to Mr Patarkatsishvili having connections to criminal groups, that was a reference to the same connections, was it not?

A. Yes.

Q. And what you were seeking to suggest was that Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Berezovsky were in some way connected to Chechen gangsters; that's right, isn't it?

A. No, this is not so. I don't think they were connected.

I am not trying to present any of them as a gangster.
I'm just saying the car business was protected by these brigades.

Q. In fact, Mr Abramovich, it doesn't stop there because later on in your statement you say that Mr Berezovsky was believed to be supporting Chechen terrorists, don't you?

A. And here it's very important to note that we're talking again about another point in time. Here we are discussing 1995; there we're talking about year 2000, 2000/1999.

Q. That's what you say at paragraph 222 of your statement, page 101 E1/03/101, where you refer to:

"Mr Berezovsky... spending money on PR campaigns against President Putin and the Russian government and was believed to be supporting Chechen terrorists."

Page 202 in the Russian E1/03/202.

Mr Abramovich, I am going to be submitting that the insinuations and allegations that you make in your statement about Mr Berezovsky having links or involvements with Chechen criminal gangs and being involved with Chechen terrorists is an utterly unjustified smear and I would like to give you the opportunity to comment on that.

A. If I may, everything to do with the start of creation of Sibneft is described in previous paragraphs and I've clarified on that. Everything with regard to Chechen separatism or any connection with Chechen fighters, that was a known fact, everyone knew that. The minister of internal affairs was talking about that in his statement. And then the situation with Mr Putin, that happened a lot later. Mr Putin came to power a lot later and in '95 he was working in the mayory of St Petersburg.

Q. You see, Mr Abramovich, the truth is that in 1995, the time when you say you entered into a krysha relationship with Mr Berezovsky, Mr Berezovsky knew no more than five people of Chechen origin. That is what he says, in evidence that was unchallenged. One was a man called Maghamet Ismailov, who worked for Avtovaz.

Can I ask you, please, to go to H(B)1.056. Now, you have in front of you a picture of children playing and on the right in the picture is Ms Gorbunova and with her is Mr Berezovsky's young daughter, Arina. The woman on the left -- you can recognise her -- is Zara Shvidler; that's Mr Shvidler's wife, isn't it?

A. Yes, this is so.

Q. And she is with her son in this picture?

A. I think so, but it's hard to understand, looking at this picture.

Q. All right. Well, you can take it from me that she is.

If you go on to the next picture at page 57

H(B)1.057, can you see the host of this party -- you can see there's a caption there which explains this -- is Mr Maghamet Ismailov because this was his son's birthday party?

My question to you is this: this is not consistent with Mr Ismailov being a gangster, is it? Or do you say that Mr Shvidler routinely lets his children go to birthday parties at gangsters' homes?

A. Sorry, I think I misunderstood you. At some point -- did I say at any time that Mr Ismailov was a gangster?

Q. No, I want you to confirm that he isn't. Can you confirm that you do not say that Mr Ismailov was a gangster?

A. No, Mr Ismailov is not a gangster.

Q. You see, the other people that Mr Berezovsky knew at this time of Chechen origin are all identified in his evidence and we can just check them off as well.

Salman Hashimikov, he's a famous wrestler who later became a minister in Chechnya. You don't seriously suggest that he was a gangster, do you?

A. I think not, but I simply don't know him so I can't say anything about this. I'm not trying to say that all Chechens are gangsters, not at all.

Q. I'm sure you're not.

Vladislav Surkov, who is one of the other people that Mr Berezovsky knew, do you say he was a gangster?

A. No. No, I wouldn't call Surkov a gangster.

Q. No, because he became first deputy chief of staff to both President Putin and then President Medvedev; that's right, isn't it? Is that correct?

A. Yes, this is true.

Q. What about Aslambek Aslakhonov? He's a former senior policeman, adviser to President Putin and a member of the Duma. I don't suppose you suggest he's a gangster, do you?

A. I certainly would not call him a gangster.

Q. Ruslan Khasbulatov: he's an economics teacher and a former speaker of the Russian Parliament. Again, not a gangster, presumably?

A. I don't think he's a gangster. I don't know him, but I've heard a lot about him.

Q. You can close that.

Can I ask you next, please, to go to bundle B(B)2.04, page 149 B(B)2.04/149. Again, just to tell you what this document is -- we do not have it in Russian, I think -- this is a witness statement made by Sir Andrew Wood, who was British ambassador in Moscow in the latter half of the 1990s; he explains that in the first paragraph. And at paragraph 1 of the statement he also explains that in that capacity he had:

"... significant contacts with Mr Berezovsky during the time [he] was in Moscow as British Ambassador in the latter half of the 1990s..."

Then at paragraph 2 of the statement, Sir Andrew explains that he worked for the Foreign and Commonwealth Office for 39 years, from 1961 to 2000, and that he had "three stints of service in Moscow". For those trying to follow the text, that's in the second sentence of paragraph 2. He also explains in the statement in paragraph 2 that he speaks fluent Russian.

At paragraph 4 of the statement Sir Andrew says this:

"As Ambassador to Russia during a period of great change in that country, and at a time when the British government was seeking to promote the development of democracy and a market economy in Russia, it was important that I, as well as my European Union colleagues, cultivated contacts with those in the Russian political and business world who were prominent in pursuing the same end."

Then at paragraph 5 he explains that he met Mr Berezovsky in September or October 1995.

And then in paragraph 6, if I can read to you what he says in paragraph 6, he says this:

"Mr Berezovsky was quite plainly a very significant political figure. In October 1996, he was appointed Deputy Secretary of the Security Council of the Russian Federation with a portfolio to negotiate with the Chechens following the peace agreement reached with them by the late General Lebed in the summer of 1996. Mr Berezovsky remained in that position for a little over a year. In April 1998, he was appointed Executive Secretary to the CIS. Throughout the time I had contacts with him, he provided an extremely useful channel into the Kremlin and beyond it. The information which he provided was always extremely useful. He was always informative and insightful about what he believed to be happening, not least in the Kremlin, and his evidence always deserved careful attention. Anyone in the diplomatic establishment who could maintain contacts with him, did so."

Just pausing there, Mr Abramovich, I don't suppose you would disagree with any part of that, would you?

- A. Well, it's hard to understand just hearing it. I was trying to follow. As far as I understand, Mr Berezovsky was telling to Sir Andrew what was happening in the Kremlin and he was well informed. Yes, that's true.
- Q. Now I want to read to you what he says in paragraphs 8 to 13:

"I now wish to mention and confirm one specific incident in which Mr Berezovsky's assistance was extremely beneficial to British interests. I believe that this is a matter which he has already mentioned in the course of his own statements in the appeal.

"In July 1997, two masked gunmen abducted two British aid workers from the Chechen capital, Grozny, where they were working for a Russian charity which helped child victims of war. Their names were Camilla Carr and Jon James. We, and the British press and public, were extremely concerned for the safety of the two hostages. It later emerged that they had been mainly held in basements and had been subject to some violence. Later British hostages taken in Chechnya, I am sorry to say, did not escape with their lives.

"Given Mr Berezovsky's role in the Chechen negotiations generally, I was in direct contact with him over this matter from a very early stage. He was not, of course, the only person with whom I/we had contact in order to attempt to resolve the situation. Ivan Rybkin, for example, was another high profile figure with whom I had contact and who was helpful over the matter. I was also in contact with the Chechen and Russian authorities. As is standard procedure in such cases, we pursued every available channel. In addition, I made a number of public appeals.

"Mr Berezovsky assisted us in working towards the release of the hostages throughout the year and more they remained in their captors' hands.

"Finally, in September 1998, it was Mr Berezovsky who managed to secure the release of the hostages and fly them out of Chechnya and to safety. They flew in Mr Berezovsky's own private jet both to Moscow and onward to London. There were 1,536 hostages released altogether as a result of Mr Berezovsky's direct intervention. The majority were Russian and East European nationals, but this number also included French, German and US nationals as well as Jon and Camilla.

"Although there were pictures in the newspapers of the hostages departing on Mr Berezovsky's jet, I recall that Mr Berezovsky himself was discrete about the matter. He did not seek undue publicity over the matter and nor did he seek any kind of quid pro quo from us."

And again just pausing there, Mr Abramovich, I don't imagine you are in a position to dispute any of this either, are you?

- A. There were some irregularities in the way the ambassador is presenting it. As far as I remember, Badri was travelling to Chechnya to buy out the hostages; it wasn't Mr Berezovsky. After the hostages were bought out, Mr Berezovsky arrived with the journalists; everything was filmed and shown on TV. If this is thought to be without publicity, I disagree with that part.

Moreover, that story, I actually paid for that, paid for the story. That's how the story looked.

Q. Now, let's just have a look at paragraph 14, Mr Abramovich.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just a second. When you say "paid for the story", what do you mean by that?

A. I gave the money to Badri: he flew there and bought out the hostages.

MR RABINOWITZ: Sir Andrew says this:

"My own view is that the United Kingdom does retain a degree of moral obligation to Boris Berezovsky in respect of the difficulties he now faces."

This was in the context of his applying for asylum.

"It seems to me that that obligation derives from, first, his co-operation with ourselves in the difficult and complex evolution of a market economy and civil society in Russia after the fall of the Soviet Union. It is of course primarily a Russian responsibility to promote those ends, but their success is also very much in British interests. Second, I believe that Mr Berezovsky's specific (and successful) intervention in the matter of the Chechen hostages, gives rise to a certain moral reciprocal obligation where a person who was a demonstrative friend to British interests now finds himself in need."

Now, I take it, Mr Abramovich, that you would accept that Sir Andrew did not consider that Mr Berezovsky's connection to Chechens should be any cause for alarm?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just a second. I'm not sure it's relevant for him to comment on what Sir Andrew may or may not have thought. I mean, put something on the underlying factual material if you like. But we can all read what Sir Andrew has said; I'm not sure I'm going to be assisted by Mr Abramovich's comments on Sir Andrew's views.

MR RABINOWITZ: Well, let me put this question then.

If Mr Berezovsky really was -- as you, I suggest, try to insinuate -- widely believed to be connected to Chechen gangsters, do you accept that this is something that Sir Andrew would have known about?

A. It's very hard for me to comment. It all depends on the degree of -- to what Sir Andrew was informed. If Sir Andrew at some point in time was reading Russian newspapers, he would have known about that. I don't know at what point in time he left Russia.

MR RABINOWITZ: My Lady, is --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Rabinowitz, shall we leave it there?

MR RABINOWITZ: We'll leave it there.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. 2.05.

(1.07 pm)

(The short adjournment)

(2.05 pm)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, Mr Rabinowitz.

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Abramovich, I want to next ask you about your friendship with Mr Berezovsky. Let me begin by asking you this, do you accept that between 1995 and 2000, you and Mr Berezovsky were friends?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Hang on. There's a lot of interruption going on. Could everybody sit down, please. (Pause)

Right. Go on.

A. I would say that between '96 and the end of '99, perhaps early 2000, yes. Because I spent 1995 in his anteroom, in Mr Berezovsky's anteroom, waiting for meetings to be arranged between me and him, so I would not really describe that as friendship.

Q. And of course the fact that you were friends in that period was, of course, your pleaded position as well; but in your witness statement you make the comment that with the benefit of hindsight, you say, you would hesitate to call him a former close friend.

So what I would like to ask you is this: is it then the case that with the passage of time since May of this year, when you made that comment, you have realised again that he was in fact your close friend?

A. I am explaining in my witness statement that, with hindsight, I would not describe that as being my close friend, even though we did meet and it was very pleasant for me to have meetings with him.

Q. Then I'm a little bit unclear as to whether you say he was your friend or whether you say he was not in fact your friend.

A. In my witness statement what I'm saying is that looking from today, looking back from today, I would not describe what happened at that time as him being my close friend.

Q. But at the time you did regard him as your close friend; is that right?

A. I would just desist from using the term "close", the qualifier "close". He was just a friend. In Russian, when you describe someone as your "close friend", this has a very specific, focused meaning.

Q. Very well.

You also talk in your statement of the "strong emotional bond" you say you had with Mr Berezovsky.

Would you care to explain what you mean by that, please?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Could you just tell me what page you're on, please?

MR RABINOWITZ: In the witness statement?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: That is a comment that Mr Abramovich makes at paragraph 32, at page 42 in the English E1/03/42 and 142 E1/03/142 in the Russian.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you.

MR RABINOWITZ: That is also where Mr Abramovich says that, with the benefit of hindsight, he would hesitate to call him a close friend.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

The question for you, Mr Abramovich, was what you meant by having a strong emotional bond with Mr Berezovsky.

A. What I meant was that we had a very good relationship, that we spent a lot of time together. We relaxed together, we spent time together, but I would not describe that as being a close friendship.

Q. Can I just be clear as to why this is relevant, Mr Abramovich. You see, I ask you about your friendship because Mr Berezovsky says that the two of you were partners whereas you say that he was merely your protector and you were the protectee, and it's going to be my suggestion that the nature of your friendly -- very friendly -- relationship shows that you were not in a relationship of protector and protectee but that you were in fact partners. Do you understand?

A. I understand where you're coming from but I tend to differ. I disagree with that.

Q. Can I then just ask you this. Ms Gorbunova told the court that she often met with your wife Irina and they became close friends. You don't dispute that, do you?

A. I do not dispute that my former wife did meet with Elena very often. I wouldn't call them close friends but they were friends. My wife had closer friends. And our children used to meet quite often, they went to see each other at the respective houses, yes.

Q. And do you dispute that in August 1995 you and Irina went on holiday in Spain with Mr Aven and his wife and Andrey Bloch and his wife and Mr Berezovsky and his wife?

A. No, I'm not disputing that. I do remember that cruise.

Q. And that was to Spain in August 1995?

A. Yes, it was in Mallorca, Menorca and some other islands there.

Q. And it's true also that you went to Gstaad together at the end of 1995 and into early 1996; do you agree with that?

- A. We did go to Gstaad, I cannot say that we went there together, but we did there and there were quite a few people there, maybe 25 people. Yes, yes, we did go there.
- Q. And in Gstaad Mr Berezovsky celebrated his birthday in that year and you were invited, were you not?
- A. If he was celebrating his birthday there then, yes, I was definitely there.
- Q. And you were invited to Mr Berezovsky's birthday party every year between then and 2000; is that correct?
- A. If your question was whether I attended all Mr Berezovsky's birthday parties between '96 and 2000, then that is wrong. Now, whether I was invited to all of them, I don't know. I think I visited two of them, maybe more, but I would not be certain.
- Q. But if Mr Berezovsky says that he invited you every year, you would not dispute that?
- A. Well, if he says that he invited me every year, I would not dispute that. What I'm trying to explain is that I was not there. But there is a possibility that he did invite me, yes.
- Q. And then in June 1996 you went on holiday to Spain once again with the Berezovsky family; that's right, isn't it?

A. Possibly, but I do not have a specific recollection of that. Was that also a sea cruise -- oh, yes, yes, that is true. We lived not far from Mr Gusinsky, that's true, but we did not go there together. Once again, there were quite a few people, many people were renting houses there. So it was the Russian diaspora that was living in Spain at that time.

Q. But you certainly saw each other at that time, whilst there?

A. Yes, we very often saw each other. We visited each other. Our wives met. I met with Melnichenko, Berezovsky, Gusinsky, and I think Mr Shvidler even came there.

Q. That's June 1996. In August 1996 you again went with Mr Berezovsky and Ms Gorbunova and others for a yachting holiday around Sardinia and Corsica? Perhaps I can show you a picture to remind you. Do you remember it?

A. To be honest with you, I do not recall that cruise. But yes, yes, I think that may well have been the case, yes.

Q. And so far, in the two years since you had met Mr Berezovsky -- we're talking about 1995 and 1996 -- you appear to have been on vacation with him at least four times: Gstaad, Spain twice, and Sardinia and Corsica.

Now, you don't dispute -- for the New Year of 1996/1997, you and your wife were in the Caribbean with Mr Berezovsky and Ms Gorbunova, were you not?

A. I think in your previous sentence you said that I went to Gstaad twice; no, I think I went there only once.

Q. Gstaad once, Spain twice.

A. Oh, yes. Then yes.

Q. "Yes" to what? Let me just put the next question to you again, just so there's no confusion.

For New Year's of 1996/1997, you and your wife were in the Caribbean with Mr Berezovsky and Ms Gorbunova; was that correct?

A. I don't think that just the four of us were there.

Q. Well, I'm not saying that you were the only ones there but they were in a group of people with you on this cruise?

A. If I recall correctly, I think we rented two boats, two yachts, and I think there were about 12 families there; or maybe I'm wrong, maybe it was a different cruise. You know, we went on holidays quite often, maybe even twice a year sometimes.

Q. On this particular occasion there were six people in the Caribbean. Do you accept that that's likely to be correct?

A. If it was just one yacht, then there were probably six people or maybe eight. Now, if there were two yachts there, then there were 12. But I think -- I'm not sure which cruise we are now speaking about, but I think there were two yachts in the Caribbean.

- Q. In the summers of 1997 and 1998 your family and Mr Berezovsky's family stayed in neighbouring chateaux in Cap d'Antibes; is that right?
- A. That is correct. As I now recall, I was renting Mr Berezovsky's house.
- Q. And then in August 1998 your families went holidaying together on a yacht, the Southern Cross; is that right?
- A. Which year was that once again, sorry?
- Q. August 1998.
- A. Yes, possibly.
- Q. So, again, just pausing here, between 1995 and 1998 it appears that you and your family had been on something like eight holidays together: eight holidays in four years with Mr Berezovsky and his family. That is right, is it not?
- A. From what I heard, yes, that must be correct, but I have no specific recollection of that myself.
- Q. And it's also right, I think, that in the late 1990s you would meet with Mr Berezovsky very frequently, at least a few times a week. Is that right?
- A. In the late 1990s? Are you speaking about '96, '97? At that time I believe that we -- it may well have been that we have been meeting each other on a daily basis. That is quite possible.

Q. Can you say: did you go on holiday with anyone else more frequently than we see you had been going on holiday with Mr Berezovsky and his family?

A. Yes.

Q. Who?

A. Andrey Bloch, Mr Shvidler, Mr Gorodilov, we spent time together.

Q. On holidays?

A. Not only holidays; weekends, holidays. We basically all lived together in the same compound.

Q. Ms Gorbunova told the court that you called Mr Berezovsky a friend and appeared to behave like Mr Berezovsky's friend. Were you just pretending to be Mr Berezovsky's friend?

A. It's a very difficult concept, you know, pretending to be a friend. We have discussed "close friend", "friend", and Shvidler, Gorodilov and other people whom I have listed, including Eugene Tenenbaum, are my close friends. These are people with whom we work together and we relax together, we spend time together. Mr Berezovsky was my friend but I would not describe that as being a close friendship.

Q. All right. Let's move on to a slightly different theme.

Do you understand what I mean, Mr Abramovich, when I refer to the Russian law concept of a joint activity agreement?

A. Approximately, yes.

Q. Can you just explain to me what you understand it to mean?

A. People share interests, people share income and people share in their expenses. People participate both in the income, in the risks and in the losses: that's the way I understand it.

Q. And when you were preparing your witness evidence did you have in mind the question whether the agreement you reached in 1995 with Mr Berezovsky could properly be described as a joint activity agreement as that term was used in Russian law?

A. No, I did not mean that. If I understand your question correctly, whether I meant it at the time when I was writing my third witness statement?

Q. Yes.

A. No, I did not mean that it was a joint activity contract, an agreement to carry on joint activity.

Q. No, you may have misunderstood the question and it's my fault.

When you were preparing your witness evidence, did you have in mind the question whether or not the agreement you reached in 1995 with Mr Berezovsky could properly be described as a joint activity agreement as that term is used in Russian law? Was that something you were thinking about?

A. Before I started writing my witness statement I did not -- I was not thinking about this. But I think the question was whether or not our relationship can be described as a joint activity contract and I think that was the amended claim form, amended particulars of claim, and so I responded to that.

Q. Mr Abramovich, would you accept that nothing in your limited legal training provided you with any knowledge or insight in relation to commercial business legal matters?

A. I agree with that.

Q. Can you then please explain why --

A.

THE INTERPRETER: I'm sorry, sir, the microphone went dead for a second.

A. I would agree with that, yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: Can you please then explain why you regarded it as appropriate for you to give an opinion on such matters given that, as you say, you had no training that would have provided you with the knowledge or insight in relation to business legal matters?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Please will you take him to the relevant paragraph in his witness statement.

MR RABINOWITZ: Can you go to paragraph 33, please. It's at page 143 of the Russian version E1/03/143 and page 43 of the English version E1/03/43. Do you see the last sentence?

"Equally, our relationship could not be described as a joint business enterprise and nor did we ever enter into any arrangement that could properly be described as a joint activity agreement (as I understand that term in Russian law)."

- A. To be honest, I'm not sure I understand the question: where did I take this from, where did I get this from, or why do I believe this to be the case?
- Q. Why did you think it was appropriate for you, a person who says you have no knowledge or insight about legal matters, to be commenting about a Russian legal concept called a joint activity agreement?
- A. I think we discussed yesterday that I cannot say that I do not have any knowledge of law. Far be it from me to say that I'm a serious lawyer but I do have some knowledge. So, from what it says here, that I can draw the conclusion that this is not what a joint activity agreement is supposed to mean. And also you can read this up in some legal textbooks; you can figure out for yourself what a joint activity agreement is supposed to mean.

Q. Is that what you say you did here, Mr Abramovich, read it up in some textbook?

A. No. No, I did not read this in any legal textbooks; I simply remembered what a joint activity agreement was or maybe some lawyers explained this to me. I just don't remember the way it all happened.

Q. Was this actually your evidence at all or did someone put this in your statement and get you to sign that?

A. This is my witness statement and no one asked me to sign off on this -- on this.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Can we not have laughter, please.

MR RABINOWITZ: Now, I'm going to turn to a different topic, still dealing with the 1995 agreement.

In your witness statement -- this is at paragraph 89, page 63 of the English E1/03/63 and 163 of the Russian E1/03/163 -- you're talking about funding for the 1995 auction and you say here about Mr Berezovsky that:

"... he did not see it as his responsibility at all to assist with any of the funding..."

That's the bit I want to focus on:

"... he did not see it as his responsibility at all to assist with any of the funding... [in respect of] NFK."

Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. Can I ask you, please, to go to bundle H(A)02 at page 130 in the Russian H(A)02/130 and 130T in the English H(A)2/130. Now, again, just so you know what you're looking at, these are the rules that governed the Sibneft auction and I think there is no dispute about them.

If you look at paragraph 1, you can see from paragraph 1 that this was dealing with:

"... [the] auction for the right to enter into credit agreements, agreements on the pledge of shares in federal ownership and commission agreements..."

Do you see that, the auction?

A. Yes.

Q. I want to focus for the moment on paragraph 3.

According to the rules governing the auction, the starting price was to be $100 million; do you recall that?

A. Yes, I do remember that.

Q. And there needed to be a good faith deposit of $3 million; do you remember that?

A. Yes, I recall that.

- Q. And bidders had to be either a bank or needed to be able to provide a certified balance sheet showing free cash in excess of $100 million; that's right, isn't it?
- A. Yes, I remember that.
- Q. And that, in reality, meant that bidders had to have the support of a bank because it was very unlikely that anyone would have $100 million in free cash on the books; do you agree with that?
- A. I don't agree with you -- with the first part of what you said. I agree with 50 per cent of what you said. There were companies that did have $100 million free cash available to them, but obviously a bank would have been a preferable bidder, a preferred bidder.
- Q. And even in relation to banks, there were restrictions on the banks that might participate because of Central Bank rules that limited a bank's commitments to a proportion of its capital; do you agree with that?
- A. Yes, that is true.
- Q. And this meant that not just any bank could act in the auction; it had to be a bank of sufficient size. Do you agree with that?
- A. Yes, I agree with that.
- Q. And so in relation to the bid that you made in the auction, ultimately SBS provided the guarantee but there was a back-to-back guarantee from Menatep precisely because neither bank, of itself, had sufficient capital;

do you agree with that?

A. I agree with that, yes.

Q. And that was the position even though these two banks were the second and third largest banks in the country at the relevant time; do you agree with that?

A. I agree with that, with just one small comment, if I may.

Q. Yes.

A. There was the Sbergatelniy Bank, Sberbank, which was a huge bank in the Russian Federation, and then there were some privately held banks. And so amongst the privately held banks, Onexim, Menatep, Stolichny Savings Bank, were -- there was a ranking, but vis-a-vis huge government-owned banks, compared with huge government-owned banks, they were not large banks.
I mean, there was a huge, enormous gap between the biggest one and the second largest bank.

Q. It's common ground between yourself and Mr Berezovsky that NFK won the December 1995 auction with a bid of $100.3 million; do you agree?

A. Yes.

Q. And the $100.3 million loan in question was directly provided by SBS Bank; do you agree with that?

A. No.

Q. Well, let me just be clear about what you are agreeing and disagreeing with. We'll come later to the question of the source of the SBS Bank's funds but can we agree that it was SBS which actually paid the $100.3 million to the state?

A. I agree with that, yes.

Q. And do you say that SBS's willingness to act for you in the 1995 auction in this way had nothing to do with Mr Berezovsky at all?

A. This is not what I'm saying. Mr Berezovsky, I think, introduced me to Mr Smolensky, if my recollection is correct, so I -- he did help him develop that wish and that desire. But apart from that, it was all pure business.

Q. Can I ask you, please, to look at paragraph 93 of your third witness statement, page 64 in the English E1/03/64 and 164 in the Russian E1/03/164. You are referring at paragraph 93 to the SBS loan and what you say is this:

"Mr Andrey Gorodilov and I spent a lot of time negotiating with Mr Alexander Smolensky, Mr Aleksey Rasskazov and other employees of SBS. The reason that SBS was willing to lend its name to our bid was first that we had sufficient funds to cover the entire loan amount, and secondly we agreed to let SBS have all Sibneft's banking business. By late 1995, there were only a few companies in Russia with such a large cash flow as Sibneft (in the region of US$1 billion per year), so to become the principal banker to Sibneft was a significant coup for SBS. It had nothing to do with Mr Berezovsky."

Would you like to explain, Mr Abramovich, why you chose to put this in your witness statement when you now say it is not true?

- A. No, sorry, I did not say that, or maybe it was lost in translation. I'm confirming that. I'm confirming that Mr Berezovsky introduced me to Mr Smolensky, to the best of my recollection; all the rest is something that we did ourselves. We put the money into the bank. The bank gave the money to the government. We paid the earnest money, the deposit.

So if we are describing Mr Berezovsky's participation, then what he did was introduce me to Mr Smolensky. But for SBS it was important to get a hold of SBS as a client because it was a huge chunk of business. We also issued credit cards for the Noyabrskneftegas employees; it was a large programme that we put in place, so that was of interest to them.

- Q. Mr Sumption, when he opened the case, explained that Mr Berezovsky, he said, did give a personal assurance to SBS that they would be repaid. Do you say that what he said there was wrong?

A. Mr Sumption put it correctly: a personal promise is not the guarantee that Mr Berezovsky was speaking about. It was a personal assurance. Even today, if I go to a bank where I have an account and if I give them a personal assurance, just on the strength of my personal assurance they will not let me have any money.

Q. When you said that all Mr Berezovsky had done was to give you the introduction, even that was wrong, wasn't it? Because you now accept that he also gave a personal assurance that they would be repaid.

A. At that point in time I did not know this. I came to know this only when I started reading the documents. I'm not disputing this, but perhaps it would be a better idea to ask this of Mr Smolensky or whoever will be speaking for the bank.

Q. Can I ask you, Mr Abramovich, in your own words, to describe your own personal dealings -- that's you, not any assistant or one of your colleagues -- can you describe your own personal dealings in relation to obtaining funding in respect of the 1995 auction?

A. You mean what I did with my own hands?

Q. What you did with your own hands, your own mouth; whatever it was that you did.

- A. I put up my own money. I used my personal money.
- Q. Is that it? Is that what you say you did in relation to discussions with SBS, negotiations with SBS? All you did personally, you say, was to put up your own money?
- A. No, apart from that, I had meetings -- I mean, if you want me to go into the details, I had meetings with Smolensky, with Rasskazov, with Mr Grigoriev, Balagansky and others. I mean, there were protracted discussions, many discussions in fact. But the main thing that was required of me was to agree with Mr Gorodilov so that he goes there, meets Mr Smolensky, and then money had to be made available.
- Q. Very well. Do you accept that Mr Alexei Grigoriev was the chairman of the SBS management board at the relevant time for funding the 1995 auction, say from August 1995 onwards?
- A. Grigoriev, I think -- yes, I think he was chairman of the executive committee of SBS in August '95 and afterwards.
- Q. And do you accept that Mr Grigoriev was at that time working under the supervision of Mr Smolensky?
- A. I agree with that, yes.
- Q. And would you accept that although Mr Smolensky was not a member of the management board, in practice he was able to influence all major decisions because all principal directors and members of the board of directors were members of his team?

A. I agree with that.

Q. And would you accept that the decision to invest $100 million in a loans for shares bid would be a major decision for SBS?

A. For SBS it was not any kind of decision because they were not investing anything into the loans for shares auction.

Q. Mr Grigoriev will say that $100 million was an enormous sum in the context of Russian business at this time. Would you accept that?

A. I would accept that. I agree with that.

Q. Do you accept that the relationship between Mr Smolensky and Mr Berezovsky in 1995 was such that they met each other from time to time, both socially and for business reasons, in the context of meetings of the oligarchs, as they have become called: Mr Khodorkovsky, Mr Fridman, Mr Gusinsky and Mr Potanin, among others?

A. Are we once again speaking about 1995? At that time there were no such meetings because there were no oligarchs. But they did have meetings, Berezovsky and Smolensky did meet each other; I can confirm that.

Q. Would you accept also that Mr Berezovsky and Mr Smolensky had developed a relationship which was both mutually beneficial and developed on a friendly basis, as a relationship of equals?

- A. When you say "mutually beneficial", I'm not sure I understand what that means. Mr Berezovsky did raise debt from Smolensky that -- they had a good relationship. Now, calling this a mutually beneficial relationship does not really do justice to the situation. But if Smolensky continued meeting with him, well, that -- presumably that means that it was beneficial to him as well.

- Q. Would you accept that, by contrast with the position of Mr Berezovsky, you personally had no relationship at all with Mr Smolensky or SBS prior to SBS being asked to give consideration to funding the $100 million bid?

- A. I have already mentioned that I was introduced to Mr Smolensky by Mr Berezovsky; I do not deny that. But I would beg to differ with respect to your characterisation of the funding for the bid.

- Q. We will get there eventually.

Can I ask you, please, to go to bundle H --

- MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, just before you leave that, Mr Abramovich, why didn't you mention in paragraph 93 or paragraph 89 the fact that Smolensky was introduced to you by Mr Berezovsky?

- A. Well, at that time I did not have a very clear recollection as to when I met him. I thought that I had already known him prior to that. And so I was not -- and also I was not sure that this was relevant here.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right.

MR RABINOWITZ: With respect to you, Mr Abramovich, that is a curious answer.

At paragraph 93 you were plainly focused on the question of any involvement that Mr Berezovsky might have had with the bid. You must have been thinking about that very carefully. Is that not right?

A. I was very seriously considering this text and I take a very serious position in general to these proceedings.

Q. How could it have slipped your mind at that point that the only way in which you came to SBS was by virtue of an introduction by Mr Berezovsky?

A. Well, maybe I did not think that it was really that important who introduced whom to whom. Well, please forgive me.

Q. Can I ask you, please, to go next to bundle H(C)8, page 119 in Russian H(C)8/119 and 119T in English H(C)8/119. Now, again, just to explain to you what this document is, it's the record of evidence which Mr Smolensky gave to an investigator of the Russian Prosecutor General's Office on 28 May 2009. One sees the date on the top right-hand corner.

If you look at page 120 H(C)8/120, 120T in the translation H(C)8/120T, do you see that Mr Smolensky signed a statement acknowledging that he had been warned of criminal liability if he were to knowingly give false testimony? You see the bold writing and then the signature in the Russian version below that?

A. Yes, I can see that.

Q. Can I ask you then, please, to turn to page 122

H(C)8/122, 122T in the translation H(C)8/122T.

Could you please read to yourself the questions and answers numbered 3 and 4. (Pause)

A. Yes, I have read this.

Q. So we see there that Mr Smolensky's evidence is that it was Mr Berezovsky and no one else who approached him in order to secure SBS's involvement in the loans for shares auction; that is the first sentence of his answer to question 3. Do you accept that?

A. I accept that. But if you read this whole sentence, this whole paragraph, there are too many disconnects here; it is totally dysfunctional, this whole paragraph. Maybe he was reluctant to give evidence or he got confused or he was too nervous when he was giving that evidence. But if you read all his evidence, you will see that he provides an assurance here that has nothing to do with that bank, which is bizarre, to put it mildly.

- Q. Mr Smolensky had sworn an oath or made this evidence under caution that if he gave false evidence, it could be met with criminal prosecution. But you say he gave false evidence, do you?
- A. Questioning in the Prosecutor's Office is not done under oath. This is wrong to say that this was sworn. But anyone who goes to a Prosecutor's Office -- and far be it from me to criticise Mr Smolensky because I was not there -- this is a very unusual, a very unpleasant procedure, and obviously he was very nervous and he was confused and he may have confused things. Because if you read through this whole text, you see that there are too many things that just don't hold water.
- Q. Do you see at the end of question 3, Mr Abramovich, Mr Smolensky says:
- " SBS-Agro Bank financed the purchase of the Sibneft shares against Berezovsky's personal guarantees."
- Do you see that?
- A. I can see that, yes. But, once again, what I would like to say is that this evidence, this interview, is very strange and therefore I, for one, would not rely too much on the -- there are too many mutually exclusive statements here.
- Q. Given what Mr Smolensky says about Mr Berezovsky's personal guarantee -- and I should make it clear we don't suggest there was a formal legal guarantee given -- but in light of what Mr Smolensky says about it, I imagine you would accept that Mr Smolensky would say that the assurance that he received from Mr Berezovsky was an important factor in SBS's decision to become involved?

A. I would agree with that, yes.

Q. And then again just going back to question 4, do you see that Mr Smolensky told the Russian prosecutor that he regarded you as playing a supporting role compared to Mr Berezovsky? Well, that is his view. Are you in a position to dispute that this is his view?

A. No, I cannot dispute that. This is what he believes and in Smolensky's eyes I may well have played a smaller role.

Q. Can I now ask you in the same bundle, please, to go to page 110 H(C)8/110. It's 110T in translation H(C)8/110T.

Now, we have looked at this before, I think yesterday. This is the evidence that Mr Viktor Gorodilov gave to the Russian Prosecutor General on 27 May 2009. Again, if you look at page 111, you will see that he too has signed to say that he had been warned of criminal liability for giving knowingly false testimony. Do you see that?

A. Yes, I can see that.

Q. Now, if you look at the question and answer to question 1, I can then ask you a question about that. Can you read that to yourself, please. (Pause)

In fact I'm afraid question 1 -- answer 1 is the whole of the document -- sorry, the whole of the first two pages anyway.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: That's page 111, is it?

MR RABINOWITZ: 111 on to 112.

THE INTERPRETER: I'm so sorry, Mr Rabinowitz, could the interpreter please be provided at least with the Russian text because I understand you will be making reference to it.

MR RABINOWITZ: Page 111.

THE INTERPRETER: I don't have it. I only have Magnum, sorry. Thank you very much.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I think we need it in English. Can the interpreter be provided with it in the hard copy and can we have it on the screen in the electronic version in the English, please.

MR RABINOWITZ: Will you let me know when you've read that, please, Mr Abramovich.

A. I have read question and answer number 1.

Q. Do you see that in this answer Mr Gorodilov has explained that his view was that:

"... [Mr] Berezovsky played the key role in getting the decree passed, as he was able successfully to lobby for this decision at the highest level of power."

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Can we have the next page, please.

A. Yes, I can confirm that this was actually the case.

MR RABINOWITZ: My Lady, it's towards the top of the second page.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: You would agree with what he says about this?

A. Yes, I agree with that.

Q. And you see also that Mr Viktor Gorodilov says that his son Andrey had nothing to do with the creation of Sibneft, and again I think you would agree with that?

A. Yes, that's true. Andrey Gorodilov had nothing to do with the incorporation or establishment of Sibneft. He appeared on the scene only later, I believe.

Q. Mr Andrey Gorodilov is now one of the -- I think you told us yesterday -- small team of trusted advisers; correct?

A. Yes, that is true.

Q. And he is the deputy general director of Millhouse LLC; correct?

A. Yes, that is true.

- Q. And he has been working for you since October 1995; is that correct?
- A. I do not recall exactly but that must be the case, yes.
- Q. Can you tell us this: was his employment at that time -- that's to say October 1995 -- in any way connected to his relationship with Viktor Gorodilov, the general director of Noyabrskneftegas, or was this a pure coincidence that he is Viktor's son?
- A. No, it is not a coincidence. Viktor Andreyevich Gorodilov, Mr Viktor Gorodilov introduced him to me.
- Q. The fact that he was employed by you, was that because the father asked you to employ the son?
- A. Well, if I recall correctly, he was interviewed, I liked him and so I hired him. But initially it may well have been a request that came from his father, yes.
- Q. I think if you go to page 116 H(C)8/116 or 116T H(C)8/116T, see answer 14. Mr Viktor Gorodilov, at the bottom, really towards the bottom of that page:
- "... I asked Roman Abramovich to get my son a job with Runicom SA..."
- And he says you honoured his request.
- A. Yes, I can see that.
- Q. Is it correct that Mr Andrey Gorodilov was deputy governor of Chukotka at much the same time as you became governor?

A. Yes, that is true.

Q. And now he's a deputy of the Duma in Chukotka?

A. Yes, that is correct.

Q. And so, while you are speaker of the Duma in Chukotka, he is one of your deputy speakers?

A. I'm still speaker of the Duma.

Q. And he is one of your deputy speakers?

A. I know he is an MP, a member of the Duma, but whether he is deputy speaker or not, I'm not sure. But he is a member of Parliament, yes, a member of the Duma.

Q. And Mr Andrey Gorodilov is to be one of your witnesses, is he not? That's the same Andrey Gorodilov?

A. Yes, it is the same Andrey Gorodilov.

Q. Thank you.

Just getting back to the interview with the father, Viktor Gorodilov, it's clear from this interview that he gave to the Russian authorities that he was unaware of the role that you played in the formation of Sibneft. Can you explain that, given how central you claim your involvement was?

A. This interview happened 15 years after the facts. So a person who was 70 years old at that time may well be forgiven for having forgotten certain things. And, once again, someone who comes to the Prosecutor's Office for the first time in his life is -- tends to become very nervous.

Q. Can I just ask you to go to page 113 in this document H(C)8/113. Three paragraphs from the top, do you see the sentence:

"I considered Abramovich and Berezovsky to be the actual owners of Sibneft."

Do you see that sentence?

A. Yes, I can see that.

Q. Now, Mr Gorodilov, as we know, was the president of Noyabrskneftegas and the first president of Sibneft, not to mention the father of one of your closest and most trusted employees. Can you explain why he considered you to be, with Mr Berezovsky, the actual owner of Sibneft if, as you say, that is simply not the case?

A. The thing is that by the time Gorodilov -- or rather Gorodilov left the company after it was privatised, so he goes by press clippings, press reports. The company came under my control virtually in '97. So whatever he is giving evidence about is something that happened prior to that point in time.

Q. Can I ask you, please, to go to, in the same bundle, page 1 (H(C)8/1; 1T in translation [H(C)8/1T.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Rabinowitz, what's the context of this interview? The investigation is into what offence allegedly committed by whom?

Discussion re housekeeping

MR RABINOWITZ: My Lady, before we start cross-examination, just to mention that we have had a communication from each of the translators identifying certain corrections which need to be made to the transcript. As I understand it, what happened on the last occasion that this was identified, the transcript itself was then amended to take these into account and we will ensure that the same thing happens on this occasion.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: As long as it's all agreed, that's fine. I think it's easier if the transcript is amended because otherwise one's got to go back to correspondence or something.

MR RABINOWITZ: I don't know whether your Ladyship would like a copy of the email that we've had which identifies the corrections.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, I'd rather have -- because I do actually use hard-copy transcripts as well as what's on the system. So if somebody could hand up the new transcripts --

MR RABINOWITZ: Once that is done, we will arrange for that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: -- once that is done. There's no point in my having the intervening position. But thank you all the same.

Cross-examination by MR RABINOWITZ (continued)

MR RABINOWITZ: Good morning, Mr Abramovich.

Mr Abramovich, you may recall that on Monday afternoon I asked you whether anyone other than lawyers from Skadden had assisted you in preparing to give evidence today. Do you recall that?

A. Yes. Yes, I do remember the question.

Q. And you explained that you had been assisted but only by Bond Solon. Do you remember that?

A. Yes, I remember that.

Q. It was reported yesterday in a magazine called Legal Week that Lord David Gold, a former partner at Herbert Smith solicitors, had been instructed to help you with running the case and preparing you and the witnesses for trial. Can you say whether that is an accurate report or not?

A. No, this is not accurate.

Q. Can you identify what Lord Gold is doing for you?

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, my learned friend needs to be careful. Lord Gold does have a role as a legal adviser and it's not right that he should investigate matters that may be privileged. I'm anxious that that should be made clear before the witness answers.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Rabinowitz, I think it's legitimate for you to ask in headline general terms what the function of Lord Gold is.

MR RABINOWITZ: And that's what I was preparing to do. I wasn't going to pursue it beyond that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Fine. Proceed.

MR RABINOWITZ: Can you, if you know, Mr Abramovich, tell us what it is that Lord Gold has been engaged to do, in very general terms? I don't want you to get into legal advice that he is giving you.

A. At some point in time we did meet with him but I think it all went through Skadden Arps but I cannot be more specific. It all happened at the very early stage and last time we met somewhere around here.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, Lord Gold has been sitting in court so presumably he has some role, has on occasions been in court. So could you give just a description as to what his function is in these proceedings?

A. At some point in time he did advise me, but he is not performing any -- playing any role or performing any function within the framework of this trial.

MR RABINOWITZ: Thank you, Mr Abramovich.

Can we go back to a topic we were dealing with yesterday. We were looking at agreements that had been made by Mr Berezovsky together with Mr Gorodilov -- that's Mr Viktor Gorodilov -- and Mr Potapov in September and October 1995. Do you remember?

And just so that you have very clearly in mind what we're talking about, perhaps we can just go back to one of those agreements. You will find that at H(A)02, page 174 in the Russian H(A)02/174 and 174T for those in the translation H(A)2/174T.

A. Yes, I can see this.

Q. All right. And you explained in your evidence that this was, you said, not in fact related to NFK at all and it had to do with some other company and a plan that was never followed. Do you remember that evidence?

A. Yes, I do remember that evidence.

Q. And you also said that you were confident that this had nothing to do with a loans for shares bid because, you suggested, it was only in November that you decided that you would participate in the loans for shares auction. Do you remember that?

A. Yes, I do remember that and I can confirm that.

Q. Now, do you agree that you were actually also very involved in negotiating the agreements that we looked at yesterday?

A. Yes, you can put it that way, yes.

Q. Well, which way would you put it, if not that way, Mr Abramovich?

A. Yes, I can confirm I did take part in this. I simply am not sure I understand what you mean when you say "very involved in negotiating", when we're looking at a document which comprises three lines only. But yes, I did take part in that.

Q. Well, the fact that an agreement in the end can be summarised in three lines doesn't mean that it might not have taken a long time to negotiate, does it?

A. I apologise, I'm not sure I understood the question. The negotiation of the agreement did not take long?

Q. I'm trying to understand the extent of your involvement in the negotiation of these agreements.

A. I did take part in those negotiations and I maybe took part in preparing this.

Q. Can I ask you, Mr Abramovich, to go to your witness statement, E1, tab 3. It's paragraph 81. You'll find that in the English at page 59 E1/03/59 and in the Russian at page, I think, 160 E1/03/160. Can I ask you, please, just to read paragraph 81 to yourself.

(Pause)

A. Yes, I have read this.

Q. You seem to suggest in this paragraph that it was important to get Mr Potapov to sign up because his support was important in the same way that Mr Gorodilov's support was important.

- A. Yes, I can confirm that Gorodilov's and Potapov's support were always important.
- Q. And again, can I ask you to explain what it was that you say their support was important to?
- A. At the time, when this agreement -- you mean at the time when this agreement was reached or in general why their support was needed?
- Q. Well, if you can explain by reference to paragraph 81, where you say their support was important, what it is you are saying their support was important to, please?
- A. Those two people that we're talking about were the key people in the new company that had been incorporated and without them we would not have achieved anything and therefore their support was very important indeed.
- Q. But important to what, Mr Abramovich?
- A. That support was important for trading operations, for follow-on work, for everything. There is -- there was nothing in Sibneft that could have been done without the consent of the president and the vice president.
- Q. Now, at the end of this paragraph, paragraph 81, after explaining your case, which is that because the name of this bidding company was different these contracts in fact became irrelevant, you say:
- "However, it was in any event ensured that Mr Viktor Gorodilov and Mr Potapov would support me."

Do you see that?

A. Yes, I can see that.

Q. Other than in the context of referring to these agreements, I can find no earlier reference to Mr Potapov and him supporting you anywhere in your statement. And my question to you is this: if Mr Potapov's support was not ensured by way of these agreements or similar agreements, can you tell us on what basis you said at paragraph 81 that Mr Potapov's support was ensured?

A. I'm not sure I understood your question. Why -- are you asking me whether there was another agreement?

Q. I'm asking you about your evidence in paragraph 81, where, after referring to these agreements but explaining that the company involved in the loan for shares auction was not Neftyanyaya Finansovaya Korporatsiya, you nonetheless say it was ensured that Mr Potapov would support you. Where in your statement do we find anything else by reference to which you would say his support was ensured?

A. Is your question whether I know whether Potapov and his support is referenced elsewhere in my witness statement? I do not remember my witness statement by heart but there is -- I think there is something in my witness statement to that effect. I'm confirming that the support of Potapov and Gorodilov had been ensured whether or not this had been signed and this had nothing to do with the loans for shares auctions because we only decided to take part in the loans for shares auctions much later. This is what I'm trying to say.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Can I ask a question. How did you ensure these two gentlemen's support without an agreement? How did you ensure it?

A. As soon as the company was incorporated, we became one team for all practical purposes. We shared the same objectives, we were working together. We had a different understanding as to what will be happening later on. Early on Viktor Gorodilov was against privatisation and then he left because of that. Potapov was younger and he understood this much better. He had never worked as a CEO before we imported him as the CEO and he was with us, he was a comrade. So I would not describe him as a close friend, like others, but he had worked together and he was the person who was my vis-a-vis and someone who, when I was working with Omsk before that, therefore I did play a role in his appointment.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So there was no other agreement or other financial inducement that ensured Mr Potapov's support?

A. So far as I can recall, there were no other inducements, financial inducements. He received a salary in Sibneft and at Omsk; but whether we paid him anything on top of that, so far as I can recall, we did not.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you.

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Abramovich, what I suggest to you is that these agreements whereby you got Mr Gorodilov and Mr Potapov to sign up their support were much more significant than you are now suggesting. Do you agree?

A. I agree that they were important. What I'm saying is that they were not as important as we were trying to discuss now. They were not that important. And that company had never been incorporated, to the best of my recollection.

Q. What I also suggest to you is that the reason you are trying to downplay the significance of these agreements is because it is clear that Mr Berezovsky was involved in obtaining these agreements and you are seeking to downplay his involvement in ensuring the success of your loans for shares auction bid.

A. No, this is not the case, and with your permission I would like to clarify, if I may.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, you may.

A. I'm not trying to downplay the role that Mr Berezovsky played in terms of the participation in the loans for shares auction. Had it not been for Berezovsky, we would have never taken part in this auction and we would have never been able to ensure a signature, presidential signature under the decree. Therefore the role that Berezovsky played in the auctions was an exceptionally important role. We would not have achieved anything without him and I fully confirm that.

Having said that, this agreement has nothing to do with the auctions. We decided to take part in the shares -- loans for shares auctions --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Can you slow down a bit.

Okay, go on.

A. We only decided to take part in the auctions one or two days before the government resolution was signed and that's why Berezovsky went to see Kokh during the night, as his writing: we had been vacillating for a long time, we did not have money, we did not know what to do, Viktor Gorodilov was against us. There were many problems, very many issues why we were vacillating, why we had doubts and why we did not want to do this.

MR RABINOWITZ: Can I just pick that up with you,

Mr Abramovich, and the suggestion that these agreements really could have been of no relevance at all because it was only in November that you decided to commit to making a bid.

Can I ask you to look at paragraphs 82 and 83 of your statement, which should be in front of you E1/03/60.

A. Yes, I have read this.

Q. And what you appear to be saying at paragraph 2 is that at the end of August 1995 one had the presidential decree and that there was only a ten-day period following this in which the committee was to determine which shares would be in the auction and that Sibneft was not at that time on the list. That's right, isn't it?

A. Yes, your understanding is correct.

Q. And you then explain that you and Mr Berezovsky met with members of the committee to persuade them to include Sibneft in the list and that, at this stage, you even had to go back and get Mr Gorodilov's support for this because Mr Kokh made clear to you that this would be important. Is that correct?

A. Yes, that is correct as well, except that it was staggered in time. Everything is compacted into one paragraph and it may appear that we discussed that in September; however, Sibneft was only registered, was only incorporated as a legal entity in... in October.

THE INTERPRETER: Sorry.

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Abramovich, it's not one paragraph, it's two paragraphs, and you are very clear in these paragraphs about the time. You explain that in September 1995 or thereabouts you met with the committee in your attempt to lobby them to include Sibneft in the loans for shares auction. That's right, isn't it?

A. No, this is not right.

Q. Well, that's what you seem to be saying at paragraph 83.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, what's the point here? Is the point that he's got the date wrong?

MR RABINOWITZ: With respect, no. He's got the date right.
What --

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, my learned friend has not referred to the words "Later on", which start the second sentence. He's actually putting this statement on a rather unfair basis to the witness.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, what's the point you're putting to the witness, Mr Rabinowitz? Because I'm not following.

MR RABINOWITZ: Can I respond to Mr Sumption because what I'm putting to the witness is the first sentence:

"In September 1995 or thereabouts, Mr Berezovsky and I also met with members of the Committee... including... Kokh who... was then the acting Chairman of that Committee."

The point is this, Mr Abramovich: you were lobbying hard in September, at around this time, knowing that there was a limited period of time for Sibneft to be included in the list of companies which would be subject to the loans for shares auction, and it is therefore simply wrong to suggest that contracts that you made with Potapov and Gorodilov at this time could have had nothing to do with the loans for shares auction.

- A. I would like to confirm again that those contracts have nothing to do with the auctions. We had many meetings, multiple meetings with Kokh -- we actually started meeting with him in September, maybe earlier -- but the question of whether or not we would take part only appeared in November.

The company was incorporated in October; therefore it made absolutely no sense to start talking about this in September, before the company had been incorporated.

- Q. Well, again, Mr Abramovich, it's perfectly obvious that it would have made sense to start talking about it before October in circumstances where this is what you were seeking to do. You wanted to ensure that you had the support you needed --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, there are two questions there. Start with the first one, please. You're putting to him that it's obvious that something would have happened. Get his answer on that.

MR RABINOWITZ: Let me ask the question again,

Mr Abramovich. It's perfectly obvious that it would have made sense to start talking about it with people like Potapov and Gorodilov before October in circumstances where you wanted to ensure that Sibneft was included in the loans for shares auction?

A. This is not the case. My initial plan with respect to the privatisation was to privatise 49 per cent and then, stage by stage, buy up a further 5 per cent. I was not thinking about taking part in auctions until the end of October. It took us maybe two days finally to decide on taking part. It was a difficult process.

Q. Mr Abramovich, can you look at the first sentence of paragraph 84 of your witness statement, please E1/03/61.

A. Yes, I can see that.

Q. Paragraph 84 of your witness statement, you refer to the fact that on 11 October the first step in the process had been achieved, in that the State Property Committee had issued directive number 1462.

A. Yes, that was the case.

Q. And that was at least in part as a result of your lobbying activity, wasn't it?

A. No. It was a standard procedure that applied to all government-owned companies that were about to be privatised. I could have taken part only in speeding up the sell-off; I could have only influenced the speed with which the various equity stakes were being sold off.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just a second. But you accept that Mr Berezovsky was involved in the negotiations or the discussions with Kokh; is that right?

A. Berezovsky did take part in the negotiations with Alfred Kokh at an earlier stage and I'm not sure, I think he even introduced me to him. I cannot affirm that, but I think that was the case. Compared with Berezovsky, for Kokh I was a nobody. I was someone who could agree on small things. The main figure was Gorodilov. Without Gorodilov's signature, we would have gotten nowhere in terms of privatisation.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Do you accept that Mr Berezovsky was involved in convincing Mr Gorodilov to give his support?

A. I agree that without Mr Berezovsky's influence or clout -- I don't think he actually spoke with him directly, but just the fact that he was around --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: And behind the proposal?

A. Am I clear? So he was such a figure, with such cachet and clout. I mean, he liked me, but for him Berezovsky was much more important; he was a person who was part of Yeltsin's entourage, at least that's what he thought, he was close to the president. So that's why it all sort of balanced out.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So you would agree that Mr Berezovsky was, as it were, being the big figure instrumental in obtaining Gorodilov's support?

A. Yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: Thank you very much.

Now, can we then just move on to other aspects of the loans for shares auction in relation to which Mr Berezovsky and his team made a contribution.

You may recall, Mr Abramovich, that Mr Sumption told the court in his opening submissions that a rival bidder called Inkombank was disqualified from bidding in the 1995 auction on technical grounds. Do you remember that?

A. Yes.

Q. And Mr Sumption noted that Dr Nosova said that this was the work of her team and I imagine that you will accept that this was the work of Dr Nosova's team?

A. No, I would not accept that. I cannot deny this, but I wouldn't say that Dr Nosova had a team that could work with documents or could have an opinion as to whether or not Inkombank's bid could or could not be disqualified. I would doubt that very much, with all due respect to Dr Nosova.

- Q. I'm not clear what you are saying. Are you disputing that Dr Nosova might have been the person who spotted the problem with Inkombank's bid?
- A. No, I'm not disputing that. What I'm saying is that it might well have been the case, but whether or not Nosova had a team who could review the documents and influence the commission's decision -- it was the commission's decision at the end of the day whether or not their bid was a legitimate bid or not, and that happened at the end of the auction, very close.
- Q. Well, it's obviously the commission's decision at the end of the day whether the point which is taken is a good point, just as it's a referee's decision as to whether a penalty is a penalty, but someone has to spot the point first in order for it to be brought to the attention of the commission. Do you dispute that the person who spotted this point was Dr Nosova and her team?
- A. I'm sorry, which question would you like me to answer: whether I dispute that it was Nosova who found the mistake? I have no opinion on that, but that might have been the case. What I'm disputing is that Nosova had a team that was able to do all those important and fundamental things that you seem to be setting out.
- Q. I'm not sure I'm setting out anything more than that she spotted this point, but we can move on.

We can agree, I think, that there was a genuine rival bid from Inkombank but that it was rejected on legitimate, albeit technical, grounds; is that right?

A. Yes, the bid was rejected on technical grounds by the commission; that is correct.

Q. And it was legitimate to have identified this as a ground and brought it to the attention of the commission; correct?

A. I'm not sure I understood your question.

Q. There was nothing wrong or illegitimate in seeking to identify problems with an opposing bid and bringing that to the attention of the commission, was there?

A. This was not done. A bid is published, it's in the public domain, and then you can find an error in it and then you can wait until the commission makes a decision. If the commission had not found a mistake then you may well have brought this to the attention to the commission.

But, you know, bringing an error to the attention to the commission from your office is not something that can be done. There are many members on the commission and they spend a lot of time going through all the documents, all these seals and stamps and the guarantees, whether or not all the documents were processed properly and written properly.

Now, whether or not Dr Nosova could convey to the commission the fact that she had found an error, a mistake in Inkombank's bid; I don't think so, no.

Q. You see, Mr Abramovich, even with this minor matter you are doing whatever you can to deny that Mr Berezovsky and his team had any other involvement in ensuring the success of the bid than the involvement which you are prepared to acknowledge, which was previously just the lobbying of Kokh and this morning also involvement in getting the support of Gorodilov.

Do you want to comment on that?

A. This is being done only in order to convey to the attention of the court the picture that appertained, the position that appertained at that time. This is the only objective.

Q. Now, there was a second bidder in the auction, Sameko, who also withdrew its bid; that's right, isn't it?

A. Yes, that is true.

Q. And at paragraph 97 of your witness statement, you give evidence about this. It's at page 64 of the English E1/03/64 and I think 97 of the Russian, although that doesn't sound right.

THE INTERPRETER: It's page 65 (sic), says Mr Abramovich.

MR RABINOWITZ: Page 165 of the Russian E1/03/165. Do

please read paragraph 97 to yourself. (Pause)

A. Yes, I have read this.

Q. So you explain that:

"Mr Patarkatsishvili said that he would seek to persuade the General Director of... Sameko to withdraw the bid, which he succeeded in doing and obtained a signed letter confirming the withdrawal. Without Mr Patarkatsishvili's involvement, we would not have received the letter confirming the withdrawal of... Sameko's bid."

I understand your evidence to be that, although you do not mention it here, you too went to Sameko, along with a team of people, just before the auction. Is that right?

A. Yes. Yes, that was literally one day before the auction. We came back from Sameko on the day of the auction.

Q. And you arrived in Sameko after the agreement in principle had been achieved by Mr Patarkatsishvili?

A. If my memory serves me right, I think he spent half a day there and we arrived during the night. He arrived together with Viktor Gorodilov earlier and we arrived later, either in the dead of the night or in the early hours of the morning, if I'm not mistaken.

Q. Mr Abramovich, my question to you was that you arrived in Sameko after the agreement in principle had been achieved by Mr Patarkatsishvili?

- A. The agreement was, I think, reached either in our presence or in -- during the day when we arrived. But all the discussions and the subject matter of the discussion, yes, yes, I think you can look at this the way you're looking at it. The bulk of the negotiations had already been conducted but we needed to finalise the documents; and once again I want to confirm that without Mr Patarkatsishvili's involvement we would not have achieved that.

- Q. Thank you very much.

Now, can we just be clear as to what the consequences would have been if Sameko had not withdrawn. It's, I think, not in dispute that if Sameko had not withdrawn and there had therefore been a bid from Sameko, Mr Berezovsky would have had to bid $217 million in the auction. Do you agree?

- A. Yes, I agree with that.

- Q. But you didn't have $217 million, did you, Mr Abramovich?

- A. Yes, that is true.

- Q. And if you had bid $217 million, NFK and SBS Bank would have been liable for the $3 million deposit and $21.7 million more, being 10 per cent of the bid total; isn't that right?

A. Yes, that is correct: they would have lost the 3, whereas the $21.7 million could have been potentially in dispute, yes.

Q. So I think you accept that Mr Patarkatsishvili's role in his negotiations with Sameko had real value in preparing for the 1995 auction and your success, do you not?

A. Sorry, could you repeat your question again? I'm not sure I understood everything about the role of Mr Patarkatsishvili.

Q. Mr Patarkatsishvili's role in negotiating with Sameko had real value in assisting you in the 1995 auction, did it not?

A. The role that Badri played was invaluable only so far as the agreement with Sameko is concerned. Now, if, based on that, you want to draw all the other conclusions, well then with that I would agree.

Q. Still dealing with the 1995 auction, Mr Sumption in his opening submissions told the court that Mr Berezovsky made an agreement with Bank Menatep that they would bid fractionally less than NFK. Do you remember that?

A. Yes.

Q. And is that your evidence as well?

A. I can confirm that the agreement with Bank Menatep may well have been agreed between Berezovsky and Khodorkovsky; I cannot deny that. But all the documents and all the documents with respect to the bid were prepared by Mr Kagalovsky -- I think he was the vice president in charge of privatisation -- and myself. So it was Kagalovsky and myself: we together prepared the second part of the bid.

Q. So again, just dealing with the agreement that Mr Berezovsky managed to make with Menatep, this was again a contribution that Mr Berezovsky's side made to the success of the auction bid, wasn't it?

A. Yes. You can look at it that way, yes.

Q. Now, I want to move on to a slightly different topic, which is the subsequent auctions.

Mr Abramovich, is it your evidence that you participated in the remaining auctions of Sibneft shares, the three cash auctions under which a 49 per cent stake was auctioned, without direct participation from Mr Berezovsky?

A. If my memory serves me right, that was the case.

Q. But you did discuss these auctions with Mr Berezovsky, did you not?

A. I don't think so.

Q. And you did use the control of Sibneft, which you had acquired with his assistance, in order to obtain funding; that's right, isn't it?

A. There were three auctions: they all had different terms and conditions. Would you like us to go through each of them successively in order to understand what happened in each auction? Because otherwise we would be speaking only in general terms.

Q. All right. Let's take the first auction, in which you acquired or Runicom SA acquired 12.22 per cent of the shares. Let me put my question to you in relation to that.

You obtained funding from -- sorry. Did you use your control of Sibneft, which you had acquired with Mr Berezovsky's assistance, in order to obtain funding for that?

A. We organised finance in SBS, then a part of our own money went into the play as well, but I don't think that I would describe it the way you described it.

I wouldn't interpret it that way.

Q. All right. But you -- let's just take this in stages. You say you organised funding from SBS, and SBS, of course, were the bank to whom Mr Berezovsky had introduced you; that's correct, isn't it?

A. Yes, that is correct.

Q. And the funding that you got from SBS was guaranteed, among others, by Noyabrskneftegas and Omsk Oil Refinery?

A. Yes, that is true, if my recollection is right. But Andrey Gorodilov could tell you the details of this and he would -- he is much better informed about this than myself.

Q. Okay. Can we then --

A. Could I just add something?

Q. Please.

A. I think we raised debt at SBS, we got the shares -- we won the shares and then I think we pledged shares as collateral; something like that. I cannot be very sure, I'm sorry.

Q. Are we still talking about the first bid? I think if you look at paragraph 102 of your statement, maybe that will remind you. Page 66 of the English E1/03/66; I'm afraid I don't have the Russian. About 166 E1/03/166. You say there:

"Funding sources for participating in these auctions included our own funds and loans from SBS guaranteed by Noyabrskneftegas, Omsk... and Runicom..."

Okay?

Now, I want then to move on to the topic of the profits that you made as a result of having obtained ownership and control of Sibneft. Okay?

A. Are we now speaking about the year 1997?

Q. I will tell you which year we're speaking about when we come to the particular question. I just wanted to make clear to you that we're moving on to a slightly different topic.

Would you accept, Mr Abramovich, that you fully expected to make very large profits from acquiring control of Sibneft from early 1995?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Rabinowitz, I think you need, for clarity, to date the time of his expectation.

MR RABINOWITZ: Yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: And also date the time from which you are asking him to deal with the profits of Sibneft because the question you've put is ambivalent or ambiguous.

MR RABINOWITZ: Let me rephrase it like this: would you accept, Mr Abramovich, that in early 1995 you had an expectation that you would make large profits from acquiring control of Sibneft over whatever period you had that control?

A. When you say "control", do you mean control over the management structures or control over the shares?

Q. Well, we discussed yesterday that when you talked about control over these companies, you were talking about shareholder control, which you were hoping to get first by getting management control and then later by getting ownership. For present purposes, I'm not sure it matters.

The question really is this: do you accept that it was your expectation in 1995 that if you could get control of Sibneft, this would produce large profits for you?

- A. I did expect that sooner or later I would make some money; yes, that's true.
- Q. Your own evidence is that in March 1995 you were generating about $40 million per year through your trading companies and that at this time you told Mr Berezovsky that you expected to be able to increase that to $100 million per year if you got control of Noyabrskneftegas and Omsk Refinery; that's correct, isn't it?
- A. That is true, but we were talking about management control at that time and that's why I asked you what exactly you had in mind.
- Q. And so your case is that it was your expectation that if you got control of Noyabrskneftegas and Omsk, you would increase your profit each and every year by around 150 per cent a year?
- A. I'm not sure I understood your question. You said "every year": you mean every year on a compounded basis, 150 per cent on a compounded basis?
- Q. Well, your evidence has been that you would increase what you were making from $40 million per year to $100 million per year and it's on the basis of those figures, which is an increase of 150 per cent, that I've suggested to you that that was your expectation.

A. I was expecting that if Sibneft was incorporated and I did have management control then my profit would increase and achieve approximately the ballpark figures that I was speaking about.

Q. Okay.

Now, the Runicom companies played a substantial role in the way you made profits from your control of Sibneft and I would like to ask you some questions about Runicom. Okay?

A. Yes.

Q. Runicom SA was one of your companies and that was incorporated in Geneva, Switzerland, in 1994. You probably don't remember the exact date but otherwise do you agree with that?

A. Yes, I agree with that.

Q. And at least in the early years, Runicom SA was administered by Valmet; that's right, isn't it?

A. Sorry, when you say "administered", do you mean whether they took management decisions or whether you mean they were in charge of the books, the accounting? What do you mean?

Q. I'm not saying they took management decisions; I'm saying that they were involved in the administration of Runicom SA.

A. Yes, that is true.

Q. And in fact you personally negotiated the arrangement with Valmet over a period of several months, your negotiations being with a man called Christian Michel of Valmet; is that right?

A. I think I met with him on two occasions but it may well have been the way you have just described it: there may have been a gap of several months. But I think I met with him two or three times.

Q. Would you describe Valmet as being a specialist in the creation of complex and opaque offshore structures for holding assets?

A. At that time I was not aware of that. You have just painted a scary picture; at that time I did not know anything about that. At that time our main companies were in Germany and Romania, with a very high tax regime. So we met Valmet and they said that there are certain tax areas where the tax rates are way lower and so we moved to the location which they had recommended and I did not know anything about those complex holding structures.

Q. Now, when Runicom SA was set up in 1994, 98 per cent of the shares were put in Mr Shvidler's name rather than your own; that's right, isn't it?

A. 98 per cent I think were put in my name and one share was registered in Shvidler's name. I'm not sure, I would not give you 100 per cent certainty, but that's my recollection, yes.

Q. Sorry, your recollection is that the shares were put in your name and not Mr Shvidler's name?

A. I do not recall very well the way the shareholding was structured in Runicom but I think this was the way I described now.

Q. Well, perhaps we can have a look at a document which might help with that. Can you go to bundle H(C)1, page 141T H(C)1/141T. This is a translation from the French and I don't understand that there is a Russian version of this, so I'll just have to read it to you, Mr Abramovich, and it will have to get translated for you.

It appears to be a notarised document and on the first page it identifies certain people who appeared before the notary, one of whom was Mr Eugene Shvidler from the United States. And then on the second page of this document, so that's page 142T H(C)1/142T, under the heading "Subscription", the document notes that:

"The appearing founders declare that they themselves are subscribing for ONE HUNDRED... ordinary BEARER shares of ONE THOUSAND FRANCS... each, forming the entire share capital, without there being a public subscription, in the following manner..."

And then Mr Shvidler is identified as the person to whom 98 of the 100 shares are subscribed. Do you see that?

A. I cannot see this, I can hear this. But if I understood you correctly, these are bearer shares.

Q. They are bearer shares: they were issued to Mr Shvidler. I don't dispute that at some point they were transferred to you. But my question to you was: can you explain why, in the first instance, they were issued to Mr Shvidler?

A. I think that that was the procedure and he just went there to open this company.

Q. Okay.

A. Mr Shvidler went there to open this company.

Q. Now --

A. But, once again, the 98 per cent of Runicom belonged to me.

Q. And it's right, isn't it, that you were head of the Moscow office of Runicom SA between 1994 until 1996?

I can help you with this: I can show you a document which says that, if that will help. If you go to H(A) volume 7, page 41 H(A)07/41. Just so you know what we're looking at, Mr Abramovich, this is the offering circular for Sibneft's Eurobond issue in 1997. You can see that if you go back -- in fact you are on page 41, so you can see it from the page that you're on.

If you go to page 83 of this document H(A)07/83, there is again the short biography about you that we saw when you first started giving evidence. You see there that it says:

"From 1994 until 1996, [you were] head of the Moscow office of RUNICOM SA."

Do you see that or do you hear it?

- A. Yes, I can only hear that. The text is in English, so I can only hear what you're saying. Yes, but I heard that.
- Q. And late in 1996 you caused Runicom Limited to be incorporated in Gibraltar; is that right? You can take it from me that that's about right.
- A. I'm sorry, when you said "you caused", what do you mean "caused", caused Ltd to be incorporated?
- Q. Don't get hung up on the "caused". Let's say Runicom Limited was incorporated in Gibraltar?
- A. Yes, that is correct.
- Q. And from around that time Runicom essentially took over Runicom SA's business?
- A. I think there was a transitional period of one to two years, but I would not be sure. I think we -- for some point in time we worked with the two companies together, but I cannot tell you exactly.

Q. Now, from 1996 the sole business of Runicom -- by that I mean Runicom SA or Runicom Limited, depending on the period -- their sole business was trading in oil and petroleum products; is that right?

A. I cannot confirm that. I have no recollection.

Q. Is this right: that from 1996 Runicom SA and then Runicom Limited was the sole purchaser of Sibneft oil destined for abroad?

A. Could you confirm which year you mean when you said it was the sole exporter?

Q. From 1996 Runicom SA, and then Runicom Limited when it took over Runicom SA's business, was the sole purchaser of Sibneft oil destined for abroad?

A. If my memory serves me right, one of the Runicoms was the sole exporter of oil, starting in, I think, mid-1996.

Q. So I think you're agreeing with me?

A. It's just that I cannot confirm whether it was SA or Limited. But one of the Runicoms did sign in '96 an exclusive contract; but which one of the two it was, I just don't remember.

Q. All right. That doesn't matter for present purposes.

And from that time -- that's to say from 1996 -- the sole business of Runicom -- and it could be one or the other, it doesn't matter -- but the sole business of those companies was trading in oil and petroleum products; is that right?

A. I cannot confirm that. I just don't have any recollection of that.

Q. Can you confirm this: that Runicom Limited, like Runicom SA, do you say that was solely owned by you?

THE INTERPRETER: I'm so sorry, Mr Rabinowitz, could you kindly repeat? I think I missed out on one word of what you said.

MR RABINOWITZ: I'm asking: was Runicom Limited solely owned by you, Mr Abramovich?

A. I think so, yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Choose your moment for the break.

MR RABINOWITZ: Now is as good a time as any.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well. Ten minutes, please.

(11.27 am)

(A short break)

(11.39 am)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, Mr Rabinowitz.

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Abramovich, it's right, is it not, that from 1996 Runicom acquired almost all of its oil from a single source, namely Sibneft?

- A. In '96 I think Sibneft was constituting 60 per cent, if we're only discussing oil. I think it was 60 per cent.
- Q. You say if we're only talking oil then Runicom got, what, 40 per cent of oil from someone else, do you say?
- A. Yes, yes. We traded oil, we bought it in the market, we sold it; there were different operations, but 60 per cent of resources came from Sibneft. I don't remember exactly, just giving you approximate numbers.
- Q. And what about in 1997?
- A. In 1997 we got full contract from Rosneft and I think we got a part of Slavneft, but Rosneft had exclusive contract with us.
- Q. Can I ask you, please, to go to bundle H(A)09 at page 155 H(A)09/155. Now, these are Runicom's accounts, as you see, for -- sorry, financial statements for the year as of 31 December 1997. Can I ask you in this document, please, to turn to page 168 H(A)09/168 and look at note 14. I'll read that to you and it can be translated for you. It says:
- "The Company..."
- And they're talking about Runicom Limited.
- "... receives nearly all of its supplies of crude oil or oil products directly from a related party..."
- And one is then referred to note 17. Under note 17 it says:

"The Company engaged in various transactions with related parties. During the year the Company purchased oil products from Runicom SA in the amount of $24,222,957... all of which had not been paid as of the report date.

"The Company purchased crude oil and oil products directly from Sibneft in the amount of [$402 million]..."

So the related party that is referred to at note 14 was Sibneft, was it not?

A. If I have heard you correctly, it is so, but I cannot assert that. Possibly, yes.

Q. Can we look next at the ways in which you did in fact extract very substantial profits from your control of Sibneft.

Do you accept that one of the ways in which you were able to profit from your control of Sibneft was by exploiting the difference between Russian oil prices and prices on the international market?

A. Could I ask you, please, to repeat the question once more?

Q. Sure. Do you accept that one of the ways in which you were able to profit from your control of Sibneft was by exploiting the difference between Russian oil prices and prices on the international market?

A. Runicom was engaging in standard trading operations and certainly the difference, but this is not the difference between Russian prices and international oil prices; this is a difference, for example, in transport, in insurance. There were many percentages, many various components. We were buying it in one place, selling in another. For example, there is FOB supply, CIP supply. But we -- I think we discussed that moment.

Q. Can I ask you to look at paragraph 47.

A. I think it was 2 per cent.

Q. Sorry, what do you say was 2 per cent?

A. Sorry, I think we lost the train of thought because I was replying to the interpreter and that was misunderstood; it was a separate discussion.

THE INTERPRETER: I do apologise.

MR RABINOWITZ: You were talking to the interpreter about 2 per cent?

A. I just repeated. I have repeated that, if I understand correctly, the margin was about 2 per cent.

Q. Can we begin by looking at what you say at paragraph 47 of your third witness statement, page 47 in the English E1/03/47 and page 147 of the Russian E1/03/147. You say at paragraph 47 that:

"At that time..."

And you're referring here even to 1994.

"... domestic Russian refined products... and crude oil prices were both fixed considerably below world market levels. Trading companies such as mine could benefit from this price differential, buying oil and products at local prices and then selling them on the world market."

And that is in effect what I put to you, Mr Abramovich: that that is one of the ways in which you could profit from your control of Sibneft.

A. You are completely incorrect. I am describing the situation of 1994 and now I think you are discussing 1996 with me. By 1996 everything was very strictly regimented and oil could not leave the territory of Russian Federation at free prices. Prices were very clearly linked to the world market.

Q. Well, we will have a look at exactly what those prices are in a few moments.

In your seventh witness statement, which you served just a few days ago -- you'll find that at E8, tab 18, if you go there; I'm going to go to paragraph 7, which is at page 226 in the Russian E8/18/226 and page 216 in the English E8/18/216 -- you say in paragraph 7:

"One of the ways I expected to, and did, generate cash from which to pay Mr Berezovsky was by seizing the opportunity to increase the volume and range of oil and oil products from Sibneft which were traded through my existing Trading Companies. Contrary to what Mr Berezovsky suggests, this was not achieved by 'transfer pricing' -- it was achieved by skilful management of the flows of oil and oil products, improvements in logistics developed by my team of specialists and by my persuading management of Sibneft to direct new business opportunities exclusively to my Trading Companies. The practices adopted by my Trading Companies did not change after Sibneft was created."

And you then go on to make the point at paragraph 8 of your witness statement that you already had a turnover in 1993 of $350 million and it's clear from paragraph 8 that you don't take that from any accounts; you refer here to a letter from Mr Alexei Golubnichy, who wrote to Mr Curtis in September 1994.

Can we just have a look at that letter, please. You'll find that at H(F) volume 1, page 60 H(F)1/60. If you look at H(F) volume 1, page 60, do you see point 5? It appears to be where you have this figure of $350 million from. I can tell you point -- are you on page 60?

Now, you've referred to this letter in order to get the figure of $350 million and that is indeed the figure that one sees at point 5 in respect of turnover. But do you see the figure immediately below that?

"Net profits in 1993 -- [$]10 [million]."

That identifies what your net profit was, does it not, on the turnover of $350 million?

A. Yes, this is true.

Q. Can you explain why you didn't, in paragraph 8, mention also the fact that the profit that you were making was only $10 million?

A. Sorry, I don't understand the question. I didn't mention that it was $10 million?

Q. That's correct, and I'm asking you why you thought it wasn't necessary to mention that it was $10 million profits in your witness statement?

A. I don't think so. I think we just referred to the document. I think a part -- perhaps I didn't understand the question, I think. Why we didn't mention this document in my statements, why we didn't copy it?

Q. You did mention this document and what you picked out of this document was the high turnover figure of $350 million. What you didn't mention was the comparatively low profits that that was generating for you.

A. I definitely didn't want to conceal anything. This document is appended to the case, so I didn't have a thought to hide anything. I don't feel -- what are you trying to ask me, sorry: why I didn't state all the figures that are described in this document?

Q. I'm going to move on to the next paragraph of this witness statement E8/18/217. Paragraph 9, you say this:

"My trading companies..."

Sorry, I'm going to refer to your witness statement again, paragraph 9.

"My Trading Companies were not engaging in transfer pricing when trading with Omsk or any other enterprise. As third parties, we had no ability to influence the price at which the products were supplied to us. Even after my team assumed management control... we were limited in our ability to fix the prices of products because oil and oil products were highly regulated. We were not making huge money on the trades themselves but made money principally on the logistics, as well as the increased range and volume of trades. Only a market commission was charged to Sibneft. Runicom, for example, charged only a 2% margin to Sibneft in 1996 (as explained in the 1997 Offering Circular). In the early years, the markets were inefficient and so we also made margins on bartering."

So is your evidence that you were not making huge money on each trade but you were making money, substantial quantities of money, on logistics, on the volume of trades that you were diverting or could divert to own companies and on bartering?

A. Yes, this is my evidence.

Q. Now, you made the point I think at paragraph 7 of your witness statement, the one that we're looking at, that this was much as you expected. So you had succeeded then in converting your profits from the tens of millions of dollars to the hundreds of millions of dollars; is that right?

A. What year are we discussing again?

Q. Well, again, we'll look at particular years. I'm really picking up what you say in your witness statement, where you say at paragraph 9 that the way in which you made the money was effectively by taking the margin on an increased range of sales, so you increased your profits enormously. And my question to you is that: this effectively then meant that your expectation, which is what you referred to in paragraph 6, was met?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I'm not sure that question is terribly clear, Mr Rabinowitz.

MR RABINOWITZ: No, it isn't. I think I will deal with particular years, if we can.

But can you just give us a ballpark figure, Mr Abramovich, for what you say you managed to achieve by way of profitability by increasing the volume of oil products that Runicom was able to deal with in the period from -- let's take it from 1996 to the year 2000?

A. I don't remember how much Runicom made from '96 to year 2000. To be honest, I don't remember.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Aren't there accounts?

MR RABINOWITZ: We're going to look at them.

I would like a ballpark guess from you. Would you accept that it would be in the hundreds of millions of dollars?

A. I cannot say anything on this account. Rumours -- well, I completely cannot recollect. Perhaps there were hundreds.

Q. Okay. Can we just go next to the document that we just looked at at H(A)07, the offering circular, page 41. Again, if you can go to page 79 of that document H(A)07/79, I'm going to read you the third paragraph and it will be translated for you:

"In 1996, Sibneft exported 23.1% of its crude oil production, or 4.3 million tonnes. In 1996, all exports were to countries outside the FSU."

Which is the Former Soviet Union.

"Starting in May 1996, the Company used RUNICOM Ltd and its affiliate RUNICOM SA, a Swiss trader of crude oil and refined oil products, as its exclusive export agents, paying them a commission; since March 1997 these two entities have purchased outright all of Sibneft's exports. In 1996, sales commissions for the RUNICOM entities averages $0.35 per barrel, or approximately 2% of the total sales price. Since March 1997, no commission has been paid and the RUNICOM entities have paid market prices for their purchases. For sales of crude oil, Sibneft receives prepayment for at least 50% of the export value of the crude oil with the rest being settled within 60 days of delivery."

And then there's a reference to Runicom's interest.

Now, just pausing there, Mr Abramovich, you see there a reference to 2 per cent commission being paid to Runicom. Was that all profit?

A. If I understand correctly, yes; what I understood from hearing the paragraph.

Q. And if 2 per cent of the sales price is Runicom's commission in the early days and that is 35 cents, which is what the circular says, then we can derive from this that the total sales price, the price the oil was sold by Runicom, was about $17.50 per barrel, and I get that by taking 35 cents and multiplying by 50 and that gives you $17.50. Correct?

A. (Untranslated)

Q. All right. We also know that the domestic price for this oil was about 60 per cent of that price, the $17.50 per barrel price. You see this if you look in the passage that we were looking at. About four lines from the end it says:

"In 1996, domestic crude oil prices increased as a percentage of world prices reaching 58.9% of world market prices in December 1996."

Are you following?

A. Yes.

Q. So if the domestic price was about 60 per cent of $17.50, it follows that the domestic price was about $10.50 per barrel? You can take that from me, that mathematical --

A. (Untranslated)

Q. You agree, thank you.

So from March 1997, with Runicom getting the oil at $10.50 per barrel and selling it on at $17.50 per barrel, this gives Runicom a price differential of $7 per barrel; that's right, isn't it?

A. I think you are mistaken. I think you forgot about the tax, about the transport, about the freight; all these insignificant but very important details of oil export. Oil from the territory of Russian Federation was leaving the territory of Russian Federation only at market prices.

- Q. When you say oil was leaving the territory of Russian Federation at market prices, which market prices are we talking about there?
- A. I mean the global, the world market prices.
- Q. And that is --
- A. The quotes of the global oil market prices.
- Q. That is precisely the calculation we've been doing. You were buying it, you were getting it at Russian domestic prices, which were about $10.50 a barrel, and that oil was being sold by you on the world market at $17.50 per barrel; and that is right, is it not?
- A. We were selling it at 17.50 I think -- I don't quite recall that moment -- but Runicom was never buying oil at 10.50. Once again, you have forgot the transport from the oilfield to the sea port, you have to buy -- all these logistical things were not taken into account in your calculation, I think. Yes, shipping, freight, then the ice duty; there are many details before we get to the world market price.
- Q. You're not suggesting, are you, that tax, freight, et cetera, made up the full $7 differential, are you?
- A. This is exactly -- I'm saying that all the expenses between $17 and $10 include all these components. I don't remember exactly how much each component costs but everything was expensive, transport, shipping, logistics, and we were only taking 2 per cent margin.

I think it was an average rate for all the trading companies.

Q. Mr Abramovich, are you saying that the full amount of the $7 was taken up by expenses such as tax and freight?

A. I'm saying that Runicom only took 2 per cent for itself; that's what I'm insisting on. Where the $7 were going, where each of the $7 were going, I do not recall, but transporting, shipping and freight is very expensive. I'm just trying to explain this to you.

Q. Okay. Well, let's just see how much oil you were getting 2 per cent on.

Can you look again at the Eurobond circular that we have open because it identifies the quantity of oil which is exported. This is for the year 1996 and it identifies that at 4.3 million tonnes. If you're looking at page 79 H(A)07/79, the first line. Do you see that?

A. Yes, I can see that. But this document was checked, was audited I think by Salomon Brothers and by a law firm that was issuing the document. Everything was explained there in great detail.

Q. I'm not questioning the numbers, Mr Abramovich; I'm just trying to get a sense of the figures we're talking about here. So one is dealing with 4.3 million tonnes and to convert that into barrels we need to multiply this by 7.21. You can see that if you go to page 46 of this document H(A)07/46.

A. I do apologise, what figure will I see there?

Q. How you convert -- when you have a figure which is expressing crude oil by reference to tonnes or million tonnes, if you want to ascertain how many barrels that is, you multiply that by 7.21.

A. Yes, I recall that.

Q. And one has that actually set out in this document in the third paragraph of page 46.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: On page?

MR RABINOWITZ: Page 46.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you.

MR RABINOWITZ: And that means that 4.3 million tonnes of oil is equal to about 31 million barrels; that's right, isn't it? Well, you can take it from me that's right; we're not a mathematical class.

Mr Abramovich, you say that all you were getting was the 2 per cent. If you look at page 79 H(A)07/79, that explains that the 2 per cent commission arrangement ended in March 1997. Do you see that?

A. I only can hear it, I cannot see it. I think I already lost what we are discussing.

Q. You have said in your evidence that the only money you were making on this oil was 2 per cent commission and you were getting nothing of the differential between the domestic oil price and the international market price.

Do you remember saying that?

A. If the question is about whether I -- whether Runicom was receiving the difference between the Russian domestic prices or the oilfield prices and the world prices, no, it was not receiving that differential.

Q. Your evidence has been that the only money that Runicom was making on this was the 2 per cent commission.

A. Yes. From what I can recall, this is correct.

Q. According to the circular on page 79, it explains that the 2 per cent commission ceased entirely from March 1997. And my question to you then --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Where is that on the page, please?

MR RABINOWITZ: If your Ladyship is on page 79, about four lines from the end:

"Since March 1997, no commission has been paid..."

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: End of the page?

MR RABINOWITZ: Sorry, third paragraph down the page, the paragraph beginning, "In 1996, Sibneft exported 23.1%..."

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I've got it, thank you.

MR RABINOWITZ: And then four lines from the end.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I've got it.

MR SUMPTION: Could the whole of that sentence be read out for the witness because he hasn't, of course, got it in front of him in a legible form.

MR RABINOWITZ: Let me read it out to you. It says -- and I will read you the sentence before as well, in case that helps -- perhaps I won't, it's a very long sentence.

"Since March 1997" --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, read the sentence before, please:

"In 1996..."

MR RABINOWITZ: "In 1996, Sibneft exported 23.1% of its crude oil production, or 4.3 million tonnes. In 1996, all exports were to countries outside the FSU. Starting in May 1996, the Company used RUNICOM... and its affiliate RUNICOM SA, a Swiss trader of crude oil and refined oil products, as its exclusive export agents, paying them a commission; since March 1997 these two entities have purchased outright all of Sibneft's exports. In 1996, sales commissions for the RUNICOM entities averages $0.35 per barrel, or approximately 2% of the total sales price. Since March 1997, no commission has been paid and the RUNICOM entities have paid market prices for their purchases. For sales of crude oil..."

Let me stop there. So:

"Since March 1997, no commission has been paid and the RUNICOM entities have paid market prices for their purchases."

Now, are you saying that from 1997, when the commission disappeared, Runicom was making no profits on this oil?

A. I am not saying that. I'm saying Runicom started buying at market prices I think in 1997 and I think the export duty I think in '97 was passed on to the Customs and from that moment on we -- that is Sibneft -- had to pay to the Customs. So at the point of crossing the border everything had to be paid up.

Q. Are you saying that in -- when you talk about market prices in 1997, are you talking about domestic market prices or international market prices?

A. I always mean only the global market prices, if we're talking about export. If I would start selling oil or petroleum products not at market prices, then I would not be sitting here with you today.

Q. Do you say that from 1997 Sibneft paid taxes and freights and those costs, so that Runicom didn't have these expenses?

A. I'm not saying this. I simply do not recall that. But Runicom was purchasing oil only at market prices, at global prices. That was the practice we had.

- Q. Can I then ask you this, Mr Abramovich: do you dispute that from 1998 one method that was adopted by you to make money from Sibneft was by making use of tax-efficient companies in Russia?
- A. No, I do not dispute that, but it has nothing to do with export.
- Q. And is this right: from 1998 Noyabrskneftegas in fact stopped selling crude oil directly to Omsk Refinery and instead, under your control, it began to sell its crude oil to third-party legal entities as intermediaries?
- A. This is true.
- Q. And those intermediaries then sold the oil on to Omsk Refinery; is that right?
- A. This is true. That's right.
- Q. So whereas the arrangement previously had been that Noyabrskneftegas would sell the oil or would pass the oil to Omsk for refining and that oil would then be sold, what you did was to insert a third-party intermediary in the middle of that arrangement, that intermediary would then acquire the oil from Noyabrskneftegas and then sell it on to Omsk; correct?
- A. This is correct.
- Q. Now, so far as the nature of these third-party legal entities is concerned, you're very familiar with the concept of ZATOs, the closed administrative-territorial formations, I take it?

THE INTERPRETER: I'm sorry, could you please repeat the concept, Mr Rabinowitz?

MR RABINOWITZ: ZATOs, Z-A-T-Os.

A. It is familiar -- I am familiar with this concept.

Q. And these are territories in which the local authority were able to grant tax breaks from federal and regional taxation to entities registered on its territory?

A. Yes. Yes, this is so. That was allowed by federal legislation via the closed administrative entities and that was -- they did have tax benefits.

Q. And you're also very familiar with the concept of internal offshore zones, regions such as the Republic of Kalmykia and so on, where again tax breaks were granted from federal and local taxation?

A. I do not recall exactly what the difference between Kalmykia and other areas, but Kalmykia was one of them, yes, that had a law in this regard.

Q. And the third-party intermediaries that, under your control of Sibneft, were inserted into the chain between Noyabrskneftegas and Omsk Refinery were established by you and your team in these ZATOs or internal offshore zones; that's right, isn't it?

A. They were not established by me and my team. I think these were companies that already were there. They were registered by the local authorities, if I understand correctly. I don't remember this scheme very clearly because at that point I didn't deal with that, but I'm prepared to explain if that could be of help.

Q. Well, we'll go through this slowly so that we see exactly how this develops and if I haven't covered something then I will ask you to explain further.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Is this issue all related to transfer pricing?

MR RABINOWITZ: It's related to how the money was obtained by virtue of Mr Abramovich's control of Sibneft.

Now, the function of these tax-efficient companies was to buy the crude oil from Noyabrskneftegas, then pay the Omsk Refinery to process this oil under a tolling agreement, and once the oil had been refined in this way, these inserted parties would then sell the product on to Sibneft; is that right?

A. From what I understood, it sounds like this is right.

Q. And do you recall the names of any of these tax-efficient companies that were used?

A. No, I do not.

Q. The names -- do the names Olivesta, Vesta and Kalmykia mean anything to you?

A. No, they do not.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Rabinowitz, can you just explain to me why the issue as to how the money was obtained by virtue of Mr Abramovich's control of Sibneft is relevant to what I have to decide?

MR RABINOWITZ: Because, my Ladyship, my learned friend's submission was that if you just -- the way my learned friend puts his case is to say: look at Sibneft, it wasn't declaring a dividend until 2001, therefore the suggestion that the money that Mr Berezovsky was receiving was as a result of the profits which were generated from obtaining ownership and control of Sibneft just cannot be right because, he says, Sibneft was not making a profit that one could declare a dividend on until 2001.

Our case is that that is a fallacy because what was actually happening here is that Mr Abramovich, by virtue of having obtained control of Sibneft, was able to extract, by one means or another, very substantial sums of money which in many other -- as a result of that control. In other words, he gets control of Sibneft and he makes a great deal of money by virtue of that control.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, there's no dispute that vast sums of money were paid to Mr Berezovsky.

MR RABINOWITZ: No, the question is whether vast sums of money were being made by Mr Abramovich out of which he was paying Mr Berezovsky. Mr Sumption has a point which says: if Sibneft wasn't making money, then --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, Runicom was clearly making money.

MR RABINOWITZ: Well, indeed. Well, Runicom was making money and indeed Mr Abramovich, by virtue of these arrangements, was making huge sums of money.

If one then asks oneself whether what Mr Berezovsky was receiving was simply a pay-out or a pay-out by reference to profits which were being generated as a result of --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, I see all that. But is it disputed that Runicom, by virtue of its association or relationship with Sibneft, was making profits?

MR RABINOWITZ: I don't know what's being said. But in order for your Ladyship to understand how much money was being generated, so that what Mr Berezovsky was receiving was indeed a receipt of profits which were being made as a result of control being taken over Sibneft, then this is evidence that your Ladyship will need to hear.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, I'll ask Mr Sumption.

Mr Sumption, is it disputed that Runicom was making substantial profits as a result of its relationship with Sibneft?

MR SUMPTION: It is not disputed that the trading companies, of which the two Runicom companies were the most significant, were making substantial profits.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: By virtue of their connection or relationship with Sibneft?

MR SUMPTION: To a substantial extent, although they did have other businesses also.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, Mr Rabinowitz, I mean, obviously I must leave it to you. If you consider that the detail --

MR RABINOWITZ: Well, I do need to go through this.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: -- of how the profits were being made by the trading companies by virtue of their relationship, as set out in this circular or the accounts, with Sibneft is relevant, I'll get to grips with it.

MR RABINOWITZ: I will need to take your Ladyship through this.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well.

MR RABINOWITZ: Now, I asked you whether you recalled the name Olivesta, Vesta and Kalmykia and can I ask you, please, to go to bundle H(A)44, page 41 H(A)44/41. This is an offering circular issued by Sibneft in 2002. You can see the date -- well, I can tell you that's the date; it says so at the bottom of this page.

If you can go to page 76 in the bundle H(A)44/76, there is a heading there just below the middle of the page saying "Acquisition of Trading Companies". In the text which follows that heading -- well, let me read it and it can be translated:

"On 17 August 2001 Sibneft received approval from its shareholders for the merger of two Kalmykiya-registered domestic oil trading companies Olivesta and Vesta. On 1 December 2001 Sibneft also received approval from its shareholders for the acquisition of Terra, another domestic oil trading company. These acquisitions were carried out by means of a stock swap, whereby the entire share capital of each company was exchanged for a specified number of Sibneft shares. Neither of Olivesta or Vesta constitute more than 1 per cent, and Terra not more than 7 per cent, of the total consolidated assets of the Group."

So these companies were brought within the Sibneft corporation itself. Does this assist you in remembering the names of these companies?

A. It doesn't assist me because in 2002 I was governor of Chukotka autonomous region.

Q. Can I -- sorry.

A. I can continue if you like; perhaps I will bring some clarity so that you understand what are transfer prices, what are market prices, then we set out the terminology and then it would be easier for everyone to understand what we're talking about.

Q. Let me take you to one or two more documents and if they don't make it clear and you feel you need to explain, then please do so.

Can I please ask you to go next to G(B)2, volume 3, at tab 106 G(B)2/3.106/297. Now, at tab 106, you should see there an article in Russian from Vedomosti dated 18 December 2002. There is an English translation which begins at page 299 G(B)2/3.106/299. It refers here to a report by the Audit Chamber. Can I ask you, please, to read this article to yourself.

A. Do I need to read through the whole article?

Q. If you could, please. (Pause)

A. Yes, I have read it.

Q. Now, it cites research by the Audit Chamber. Do you recall the publication of the Audit Chamber report in December 2002?

A. I don't recall it, but I don't think that's important. I don't recall it.

Q. When you say you don't recall it, do you remember it at the time? I'm not asking you if you remember it now, everything it says, but were you aware of it at the time?

A. The Audit Chamber was checking Chukotka and Sibneft nearly every year, so that was an ongoing work.

Q. Perhaps I can show this to you. Before I do, just reading what the Vedomosti article says, do you dispute the accuracy of what the article says about what you were doing?

A. What is said in the article, it is true to some extent: indeed we, on legal grounds, were reducing the tax amount. But it didn't affect the Sibneft profit in any way.

Q. Well, let's go through this slowly. Do you dispute that you established oil trading companies with primarily disabled staff in order to take advantage of certain tax exemptions?

A. We've done it. I don't recall why it was done. But these were real people, we've paid them salaries.

Q. Do you dispute that Sibneft, under your control, sold in the region of 98 per cent of its oil to these companies also under your control and ownership, which, as the article notes, immediately resold the crude oil to Sibneft at two to three times the price?

A. It is difficult for me to say. This is a journalist's investigation and if he thoroughly investigated that, then maybe. But I do not recall this.

Q. That's quite a healthy profit that you were making from your control of Sibneft, was it not? You were buying the oil through these companies, at this stage not within the Sibneft corporation, and selling the oil back to Sibneft at two to three times the price that you had bought it from Sibneft at?

A. I think you are confusing oil because that was -- I think was done for tax purposes. It wasn't done to send any profit to these companies. It was done to reduce the tax amount and there was a law to that effect at that point in time.

Q. Mr Abramovich, it was only in, I think, 2001 that these companies, these companies which were located in tax-efficient places, were integrated into Sibneft. Prior to that, they were outside of Sibneft. That's right, isn't it?

A. Unfortunately I do not recall that. I don't think we used them before, but I simply do not recall.

Q. Sorry, when you say you don't think you used them before, are you saying that they only came into Sibneft in 2001 and that prior to that, although they were owned and controlled by you, they were not within the Sibneft ownership structure?

A. Sorry, I think I've lost your thought. Could you please repeat? Did I own or did Sibneft own these companies prior to 2001?

Q. Correct, and I'm distinguishing between Sibneft and you and your trading companies.

A. What year are we talking about?

Q. Prior to 2001, Mr Abramovich.

A. From what I can recall, all the profit of the trading companies was almost -- always accumulated in Sibneft. I think it was done by merging these companies in, but I do not recall.

Q. I suggest to you, Mr Abramovich, that that is wrong and that you know it is wrong. After these companies were brought within Sibneft, their profits were merged with Sibneft's; but before that, that profit was not a profit which accrued to the shareholders of Sibneft.

A. Do I need to comment on this or is that your assertion?

Q. Well, I'd like you to comment on whether you dispute what I'm saying.

A. I cannot say with the whole clarity. From what I can recall, the companies, the profits of these companies were almost (sic) accumulated, accrued in Sibneft, but I cannot say for sure. Mainly these companies were created in order to reduce the tax burden, the tax basis, and at that point in time that was lawful and it didn't affect the profits in any way.

Q. You'll see that this article refers to the audit report and we've managed to find that audit report, both in Russian and we have an English translation. Can I just hand up to you that audit report, please. (Handed)

A. May I say a couple of words, please?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, please do.

A. The source from you, where you've got it from, I understand this: this is the compromat.ru website. I cannot claim that everything that gets on that website is the truth, but I am prepared to discuss this document.

MR RABINOWITZ: Thank you.

In order to see what this audit report was a report into, can I invite you, please, to look at, on the first page of this, the heading "Subject of the Audit".

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: This will go on the system, will it?

MR RABINOWITZ: It will go on the system.

It says at point 1:

"Assessment of the effectiveness of measures taken by the company to ensure full and timely payment of tax and other required payments to the federal budget."

Then can I ask you next to go to page 21 in the Russian, page 19 of the English version, where we can see the conclusions of this report.

A. Sorry, once more, what the page was in Russian?

Q. 21.

"The Company carried on its business through a network of legal entities (hereinafter Companies or Intermediaries) registered in tax havens and acting as mediators. The Companies purchased the whole bulk of crude oil extracted by [Noyabrskneftegas] (the Company's subsidiary) and sold it at the same fiscal metering unit for a 2 to 3 times higher purchase price. The crude oil was not removed from the fiscal metering station and retained its physical qualities. Later, some oil was exported and some was used to produce petroleum products subsequently purchased by the Company. Legally, the oil was owned by the intermediaries; however, the Company arranged for export shipments, paid customs duties, arranged and paid for oil transportation and refining in the Russian Federation. Thus, the company arranged for and paid costs of the whole workflow, whereas the intermediaries accumulated profit, without performing any functional operations. Preferential tax treatment allowed the intermediaries to decrease the profit tax rate by over 6 times... Subsequently, intermediaries merged with the Company with net profit."

Do you see that?

- A. Yes, I can see that. This is what I was trying to say: that with regard to companies, we had no problems. The tax authorities could have had questions in this regard but the company couldn't have any questions. Never mind that we're discussing 2001, year 2001, and Mr Berezovsky is not saying anything in that regard.

Q. Except that what this says is that, "Subsequently, [the] intermediaries merged with the Company with net profit", not that they were always merged with the company. Do you follow?

A. Yes, I follow. But here only 2001 is discussed, if I understand correctly. And absolutely the auditors of the Audit Chamber, they are not as clearly putting themselves as you are, Mr Rabinowitz, so it's not quite clear what they could have meant.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Abramovich, when did the tax-profitable companies merge with Sibneft, what year?

A. If I recall correctly, that happened every year. I think unfortunately at that year I already did not work at the company; I cannot comment. I'm trying to help, but I do not have the knowledge in this regard.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I see. The tax vehicles would merge every year with Sibneft; was that the idea?

A. If I recall correctly, it happened every year, but I cannot assert that for sure. The idea of these companies was to reduce the tax burden and did not affect Sibneft.

MR RABINOWITZ: Isn't in fact what happened that you took the profit by virtue of lower taxes being paid in these intermediary companies which you had established in these tax havens, and then you sold the oil back to Sibneft at a price which was the same price -- which ensured that it made the same profit it would have made had it had to pay full tax?

- A. If I got correctly what you said, I think that was right. If you could, could you please repeat what you just said?
- Q. What was happening here was that you had set up these companies outside of Sibneft. These companies bought the oil and sold it to Sibneft at two to three times the price that they bought it at. The arrangement that you've set up, in effect, meant that Sibneft landed up making exactly the same net profit -- that's to say after-tax profit -- as it would have made had this arrangement not existed. Is that correct?
- A. It's very difficult for me to confirm from just being able to hear it. I think you're quite close to what was happening, but I cannot say for sure.
- Q. What I'm saying is that Sibneft's position landed up exactly as it would have been had you not had this tax-efficient arrangement because it was buying the gas back from someone to whom it sold it for two to three times the price. Is that correct?

A. It is very difficult to comprehend it from just hearing it, but it looks like this is the case. I wanted to say one small thing: that Sibneft, the company, was receiving all the profit that it was supposed to receive. We paid less tax; this is true.

Q. But the money was being made somewhere, Mr Abramovich: it was being made in these vehicles who were selling the oil for two to three times the price that they were buying the oil and they were paying tax at a rate of only 5.5 per cent. Is that right?

A. Yes, this is right. These companies were making money on the tax differential; this is right.

Q. And the benefit of that was being taken not by Sibneft but by you?

A. I cannot assert for sure, but it's very likely to be the case.

Q. Thank you.

Now, whilst we're in this --

A. Oh, I beg your pardon, can I correct myself, please? All the profit that was accumulated in these companies returned back to Sibneft.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: As a result of what you say is an annual acquisition by Sibneft of the tax vehicles?

A. If I recall correctly, yes, that annual acquisition. But, to be honest, I am not an expert on this and I think I will get myself confused and will confuse you.

And this is the part of which I don't have great knowledge, deep, in-depth knowledge.

MR RABINOWITZ: And what about the tax savings on those profits, Mr Abramovich? You were paying 5.5 per cent rather than 35 per cent tax on those profits. Do you say that the benefit of that went back to Sibneft as well?

A. With regard to Kalmykia, I do not recall. With regard to Chukotka, all the amount was either going to Chukotka's budget or to charitable foundations.

Q. But not to Sibneft?

A. The tax savings did not return back to Sibneft; this is true.

Q. So you kept them and you used them as you wished?

A. You can assert this, but this is not quite the way I see this. And again, it depends which year we're discussing. If we're talking about year 2001, then most of the savings -- basically all of the savings were to Chukotka's budget and to the charitable foundations.

Q. What about the years before 2001?

A. In year 2000 I think the situation was the same; and then I do not recall.

Q. Can I just ask you, please, to go to a different part of this report: it's at page 14 of the Russian version and page 13 of the English version. Now, what the audit report is dealing with here, again, when you see about three paragraphs down certainly from the top of the English version, it says:

"The audit revealed that the Companies that later merged with the Company..."

And it's dealing there with Olivesta, Vesta and Novella.

"... purchased promissory notes of credit institutions and transferred currency assets outside of the Russian Federation under import contracts.

"Thus, Olivesta LLC transferred 50 [million] US [dollars] in two instalments, on May 30 and June 1, 2001 as a payment to Palmtex limited, SA (Panama) for supply of dump trucks, bulldozers, excavators, etc under Contract No 210501 of May 21, 2001. Said amount was transferred to Latvian Trading Bank (Riga). On July 25, 2001, the amount of 50.00 [million] US dollars was returned by Palmtex limited, SA (Panama) to Olivesta LLC due to the supplier default under the import contract.

"Vester LLC transferred 50 [million] US dollars as a payment under Supply Contract with Palmtex limited, SA (Panama) (with the range of goods identical to that of Olivesta LLC). Said amounts were transferred to Latvian Trading Bank (Riga) on June 4, 2001. On July 26, 2001, the amount of 50 [million] US dollars was returned by Palmtex limited, SA... to Vester LLC due to the supplier default under the import contract.

"Novella transferred 35.0 [million] US dollars as a payment under Supply Contract with Palmtex limited, SA... (with the range of goods identical to that in case of Olivesta LLC and Vester LLC). On August 10, 2001, the amount of 35.0 [million] US dollars was returned by Palmtex limited, SA... to Novella LLC due to the supplier default under the import contract.

"Thus, funds totalling 135 [million] US dollars received by the Companies from the Company prior to the merger were transferred to the same foreign entity under import equipment supply contracts. Subsequently, within two months, the funds were returned to the Companies due to the supplier default; the Companies, in their turn, transferred said amounts to the Company's settlement account."

What is being described here, Mr Abramovich, is a scheme to transfer currency out of Russia. Can I just describe to you what I suggest is being said here and then get you to comment on it.

First, the Russian companies -- this is Vesta, Olivesta and Novella -- purport to enter into contracts with a foreign third party for the acquisition of goods, and the goods here are dump trucks, bulldozers and excavators. Secondly what happens is these Russian companies transfer money out of Russia in order to pay for these goods, in this case to accounts in Latvia. Third, the Russian companies use these bank accounts to pay the third-party suppliers of goods. And fourth, the contract is then cancelled and the money returned to the Latvian Trading Bank, where, presumably, it remains, Mr Abramovich.

Do you agree that that is what was happening here?

A. No, I do not agree. How did you conclude that the money remains there? I'm not sure. It's indeed quite difficult to follow. It's very different (sic) to comment because I didn't work in any of these companies and at that point I didn't work at the company, although I'm prepared to continue with this discussion.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just a second. Mr Rabinowitz, if you look at the third paragraph from the bottom:

"Subsequently, within two months, the funds were returned to the Companies due to the supplier default; the companies, in their turn, transferred said amount to the Company's settlement account."

MR RABINOWITZ: Settlement account.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So are you --

MR RABINOWITZ: That would be, we suggest, in Latvia.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: But that's Sibneft, isn't it? "The company" is defined as Sibneft.

MR RABINOWITZ: No. This report is not terribly clear. It talks about "the companies" when it refers to Olivesta, Vesta and Novella as well. You see that if you look --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I see that. But who is "the company" then? Well, if you look at page 2, it's Sibneft, isn't it? If you look at the definition just below the first hole-punch.

MR RABINOWITZ: That does appear to be Sibneft, when "the company" is referred to in the singular.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So whether or not it's in a Latvian account, the proposition you put that the monies stayed with Novella, Vesta, et cetera doesn't seem to be right, does it? I mean, you tell me, but I just don't want the question to be asked on the basis of a false premise.

MR RABINOWITZ: No, I will come back to that in a minute. I will just check that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well.

MR RABINOWITZ: Can I just ask you this, Mr Abramovich: these contracts between Olivesta, Vesta and Novella with Palmtex Limited, purportedly for dump trucks, bulldozers and excavators, Palmtex Panama is one of your companies, isn't it?

A. I honestly do not recall.

- Q. Well, I can tell you that Palmtex SA Panama is one of your companies; indeed, it is one of the companies that was used to hold the Rusal shares. Do you now remember it?
- A. Possibly. I just simply do not recall the company name. I don't want to deny it. If it's my company, so it is.
- Q. You see, if Palmtex SA in Panama was your company and if Palmtex SA in Panama was in fact a holding company used for holding your shares in Rusal, then it's very unlikely that that is a company which is going to be supplying dump trucks and bulldozers to Novella, et cetera.
- A. Why is it highly unlikely? I don't understand. If it's a company that holds Rusal's shares, maybe Rusal needs trucks. This is just my supposition. To be honest, I have no idea.
- Q. Was it not a shelf company which was being used to hold the aluminium assets?
- A. Possibly. I cannot confirm this.
- Q. Do you say that these were, so far as you're aware, genuine contracts whereby Palmtex SA was supplying dump trucks and bulldozers to Novella -- these tax vehicles?
- A. I'm not asserting this. I just simply have no idea. That's what I'm trying to say here.
- MR RABINOWITZ: I'm going to move on to another document, which I'm happy to do, my Lady. We may not finish it by 1.00.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Why don't we take the break now? I'll sit again at 2 o'clock.

(12.55 pm)

(The short adjournment)

(2.00 pm)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Rabinowitz, I'm going to rise at 4.15 this afternoon.

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Abramovich, can you go, please, to bundle H(A)87, page 250 H(A)87/250, a document which is only in English.

Mr Abramovich, this is a research note produced by ING Financial Markets in September 2004. Can I ask you, please, to go to the second page of this: that's page 251 H(A)87/251. At the bottom of page 251 there is something which is called "Sibneft's SWOT analysis" and that means strengths, weaknesses, opportunities and threats. One can tell that that's what that means because, in the box immediately below, one sees the headings "Strengths", "Weaknesses", "Opportunities" and "Threats".

Now, in the "Threats" box, the document says this:

"The company is run for core shareholders rather than minority shareholders. We estimate [the year] 2000 revenue was lower by US$700 million due to sales to an unconsolidated trading company. This company has since been consolidated."

Can you assist us as to what was the unconsolidated trading company which is here being referred to?

A. Unfortunately I cannot assist you in this. I've not been working at the company for the past two years, so it's difficult to comment. And if you're talking about this particular document, I've not been working there for five years, so I would be really hard put to say anything at all about that.

Q. Perhaps I can help you by referring you to another document. Can you go, please, to H(A) volume 38, page 1 H(A)38/1. This is another research note, this time produced by an organisation called Renaissance Capital, this time dated 4 September 2001. You can see -- well, I will tell you that it is headed "Sibneft -- Consolidating the Profits".

If we go over the page, page 2 H(A)38/1 -- perhaps I can just read to you the first three paragraphs of this:

"The major change in our view of the company has been caused by the impact of the consolidation of two trading companies named Vester and Olivestra (Kalmykia-registered structures that trade Sibneft's oil and products). We believe that both companies made around US$300 million in net profit during 2000 from arbitraging the transfer price between Sibneft's upstream subsidiaries and its refinery at Omsk (and perhaps also through involvement in its export sales). While it is important to note that the activity of both companies was not illegal under Russian law, it clearly transferred huge value away from Sibneft.

"As a result of the consolidation of these companies into the Sibneft holding structure, which has been almost entirely motivated by the new tax legislation that makes transfer pricing much more difficult, the profitability of the holding company will increase dramatically. We estimate that in 2000 the trading companies had revenues of around US$7 per barrel, which will effectively be added straight back into the net revenues of Sibneft as a result of the consolidation at minimal cost (Sibneft is paying around US$2,000 for both companies).

"Clearly the suspicion is that the trading companies were formerly owned by the majority shareholders of Sibneft, who are now transferring profitability back to the holding company rather than keeping it for themselves in the trading companies. This is clearly good news for Sibneft's minority shareholders going forward, despite the annoyance of realising how much they have missed out on in the past."

I suggest to you, Mr Abramovich, that this is an accurate description of the consolidation of your so-called tax-efficient companies in 2001. Do you want to comment on that?

- A. I can only speculate once again. In '99 I was elected member of the Duma and at that time I was no longer working in the company.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So what's your speculation?

- A. It's really difficult for me to comment. If I understood the translation correctly, the profits were consolidated in Sibneft; that's what I understood. But it was a very long text, several paragraphs, so I was not able to remember it all.

MR RABINOWITZ: What it seems to be saying, Mr Abramovich, is that as a result of the consolidation of Vesta and Olivesta into Sibneft, which was only taking place in I think late 2000, the profits of Sibneft would go up substantially because those companies had previously been making profits outside of Sibneft.

- A. If I understand you correctly, once again, they're speaking about taxes here, if I understand you correctly. But once again, I may be mistaken. It's very difficult to judge because I -- number one, I did not work there; and number two, I'm listening to a translation orally.

- Q. Can I ask you, please, to go to another research note. You'll find this at bundle H(A)46, page 244 H(A)46/244. Again, I apologise, but this is only in English so I'm going to have to read to you what it says under the heading "Blow Out 2001" and then ask you a question after that.

What it says is this. It's a research note from 3 July 2002 and it says:

"Last week, Sibneft reported way above consensus numbers for 2001, to US GAAP. Total revenues rose by 49% to [$3.576 billion] while EBITDA climbed 67% to [$1.719 billion]. This was palpably above last year's guidance which had indicated that [$1.6 billion] in EBITDA would be achievable. Moreover, it is amply in excess (10%) of our own expectation ([$1.564 billion]), as we had cautiously expected the demise of domestic pricing in the final weeks of 2001 to hurt Sibneft. The EBITDA outcome was also hugely higher than the consensus EBITDA expectation carried by IBES of [$1.311 billion], although admittedly this consensus estimate was sparsely populated. The very significant growth reflects both the sizeable production gain delivered by Sibneft (19.7%) and the marked positive effects of bringing trading activities in-house. Unpalatable as it is to think of Sibneft diverting hundreds of millions of dollars out of the company before the merger with these trading units, we confine ourselves here to comment on the positive economic effects of having ceased to operate on this basis."

Again, stopping there, one has commentators suggesting that there have been substantial profits, I think running into the hundreds of millions of dollars, which have been made outside of Sibneft, which are now being brought into Sibneft as a result of the consolidation of, I think, Olivesta and those tax-efficient companies.

Do you wish to comment on that suggestion, that that is what was happening here?

- A. Once again, if I understood you correctly, I have no knowledge about this; I can only speculate. Would it be okay if I continue speculating?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. What's being put to you is, is this true: that so far as you knew at the time, profits were being diverted out of Sibneft to these trading companies and that came to an end when the trading companies were consolidated with Sibneft?

- A. I cannot say anything clearly about those companies and I do not remember those company names. The practice was that we were saving money on taxes; that was the practice. Now, diverting income or profit from Sibneft, no, I'm not aware of that kind of practice. And also the increase in the income, if I understood the translation correctly, was mainly due to the appreciation of crude oil or due to the increase in physical volume of the crude oil produced.

- Q. Mr Abramovich, at the relevant time you say that you owned somewhere between 88 and 91 per cent of Sibneft and all of the trading companies. Surely you have more knowledge than you suggest and surely you're not -- you must know. It can't simply be all you can -- sorry. You must be able to actually tell us from your knowledge rather than have to speculate about the position here?
- A. Well, this is the case. This is what it is. I can only speculate and I'm happy to do that.
- Q. Would you at least accept this: that what was being kept out of Sibneft was the difference between what Sibneft would have had to pay on a tax of profits and what these tax-efficient companies were having to pay on profits?
- A. The tax savings was probably kept outside of Sibneft or maybe it was consolidated; I cannot tell you now. The question is: what year are we talking about? This is very important. When I became governor, that difference came either to the coffers of Chukotka or to charitable foundations and organisations.

Q. The years I'm suggesting are from 1998 to 2001.

A. But again this is going to be speculation. I have no knowledge about this. And in '98 I don't think there could have been any profit there at all because it was a time of crisis and one could not even speak about any profit at all.

Q. Well, the companies outside of Sibneft were certainly making a profit because they were taking the oil from Sibneft at one price and selling it back to Sibneft at two to three times that price. So they were making a profit.

A. I would like to understand: do you mean within Russia domestically or through export operations? We need to agree on the terminology. What exactly do you mean when you say "transfer pricing"? Then I will understand what you're talking about.

Q. I haven't used the expression "transfer pricing", Mr Abramovich. I'm talking about the scheme that had been set up by inserting an intermediary between Noyabrskneftegas and Omsk, that intermediary being positioned in a tax-efficient territory, the arrangement being that the oil would be sold to the tax-efficient intermediary and sold back to the company at two to three times the price at which the tax-efficient company bought that gas.

A. I cannot comment this. I have no knowledge about this.

Q. Very well.

A. Can I just add something? Runicom had never received any crude oil or petroleum products from Sibneft at privileged prices.

Q. Now, I want to ask you next about your evidence in respect of the payments that you say were made to Mr Berezovsky.

Can you tell the court, Mr Abramovich, what you say was the first payment which you made to Mr Berezovsky as a result of the arrangements that you made in 1995?

A. The very first payment, I think it was $16,000. I mean, if you want to drill down to that kind of detail, amongst the large payments, the first one I think was $8 million.

Q. And when do you say you made the first payment to Mr Berezovsky of that size?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Of $8 million?

MR RABINOWITZ: Of $8 million.

A. 8 million, I think it was in March.

Q. You see, Mr Abramovich, you make no reference whatsoever to this payment in your defence. You're aware of that?

A. What is defence?

Q. That's your pleaded defence. Do you remember the document we looked at in bundle A1, where you set out your defence to Mr Berezovsky's claim? You were given a translation of it, but at A1, I think tab 3, you'll see an English version of this A1/03/35. I don't know if there's a Russian version behind it.

My point is: you make no mention at all of this payment in that document, do you? Well, I can tell you you don't. I can also tell you that you make no mention at all of this payment in the evidence that Mr Mitchard gave to the court in the context of the strike-out application. Are you aware of that?

A. Yes, I know, and I could even offer a comment on this.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Give me your comment.

A. When I was answering Mr Paul Mitchard's questions, I was only giving him my first impression. I was mainly answering his questions, of course, I was sharing with him my story, but it's not like I was sitting there and, you know, put aside all my affairs and doing nothing but that. This is not the way it happened.

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Abramovich, Mr Mitchard tells us in his evidence for the strike-out application that the evidence he compiled was compiled after discussions with you, with Mr Tenenbaum, with Mr Shvidler, with Ms Panchenko, with all of your close and trusted advisers, and not one of you suggested at that time that you had made a payment to Mr Berezovsky of $8 million in March 1995. That is correct, isn't it?

A. If Paul Mitchard did not reflect that in his documentation then that must be the case. I don't think he would have concealed that.

Q. You see, not only is this not mentioned in your defence or in Mr Mitchard's evidence, but you have also produced no documentation at all to evidence this payment, have you?

A. I don't have any documentation. What I'm saying there is that this is what I remember. And I paid much attention to this, I spent a lot of serious time thinking about this. The part of it that was reconstruction, I spent a lot of time and effort in order to put together my more detailed third witness statement.

Q. You see, Mr Abramovich, I'm going to suggest that you have made this up. Do you understand? You're making this up. No such payment was made.

Do you want to comment?

A. Yes, I would like to comment and to say that there was such a payment and the payment like that was made.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: What paragraph of the witness statement is it, please?

MR RABINOWITZ: Paragraph 9. Sorry, that's a wrong reference. Paragraph 57 at page 51 of the English and then going on to paragraph 62 E1/03/51.

You see, you have no documentation and your evidence appears to be that sitting in 2011, writing your witness statement, you suddenly remembered that in March 1995 you made a payment of $8 million when you have no documentation at all to support that suggestion.

Do you really have any clear recollection of this, Mr Abramovich?

A. I do have recollection and this is what I describe in my witness statement. In an as detailed manner as I could do this, I did this in my witness statement.

Q. How could you possibly remember, without any documentation at all, both the month in which you say you made this payment and the precise amount that you say was paid?

A. Sorry, could you repeat your question? How could one recall the month? I'm not saying I recall the month. It was definitely before Sibneft was incorporated, this is what I remember exactly, but I'm not sure it was March. I think it was March, but I'm not sure.

Q. You don't really have any clear recollection of this at all, do you?

A. I do have a clear recollection of the fact and this is a recollection, it's just that.

Q. What do you mean when you say, "this is a recollection, it's just that"? A recollection as distinct from what?

A. If I had any documents which I could base myself on, then it would have been a reconstruction. But because this is my recollection, I'm saying this is my recollection.

Q. Do you also say that you personally remember a demand made by Mr Berezovsky in the autumn of 1995 for $10 million and that $4 million of this was paid directly by Runicom SA to Logovaz?

A. I'm sorry, I'm not sure I understand. Do I recall the request and the 4 million? Could you repeat your question, please?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Where is the $4 million in the witness statement, please?

MR RABINOWITZ: Paragraph 77 E1/03/58.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Can you repeat the question, please?

MR RABINOWITZ: Do you say that you personally remember a demand being made by Mr Berezovsky in the autumn of 1995 for $10 million, which you paid, including $4 million being paid directly from Runicom SA to Logovaz?

A. So the question is -- do you want me to offer some comment? I'm not sure I heard a question. Do I recall?

Part of this is reconstruction on the basis of documentation and the rest is my recollection. I do remember that 5 million in hard cash was actually brought to the club.

Q. Do you say $5 million or $4 million?

A. If my memory serves me right, it was $5 million hard cash and 4 million was transferred to Logovaz, to the Logovaz account.

Q. And is it the case that you had no recollection of this either at the time you produced your defence document or at the time that Mr Mitchard put in his evidence for you in the strike-out application?

A. No, that question did not arise at that time, so I did not spend much time on this.

Q. Are you saying that you didn't have a recollection or that you did have a recollection at that time?

A. $5 million hard cash I do remember. The $8 million I did not remember right away but then I recalled it later. But so far as the $4 million was concerned, I remembered that it was not far from that time, but I did remember it exactly. But then, based on the documents that were shown to me, I was able to reconstruct this whole thing.

Q. This payment also, Mr Abramovich, is not mentioned anywhere, either in your defence or in Mr Mitchard's statement; and again I have to suggest to you that you are making this up.

A. I do recall this.

Q. Now, at paragraph 77 you refer to a document which you seem to suggest is of assistance to you in remembering this payment of $10 million, of which $4 million was paid directly from Runicom SA to Logovaz, and I wonder if we can just look at that document: it's at H(A) volume 2, page 124.

A. Yes, I can see this.

Q. This document does indeed show a payment from Runicom SA to Logovaz in September 1995 but it refers, Mr Abramovich, to payment under a settlement agreement.

Are you suggesting that Runicom SA was issuing false invoices that misrepresented what the payments were being made for?

A. Sorry, I'm sorry, before you spoke about the false invoice, could you once again remind me about that other document, which you characterised as -- I don't remember what.

Q. This document, which identifies a payment of $4 million being made by Runicom SA to Logovaz, explains that that payment was being made under a settlement agreement. That's what this document says.

And my question to you, if you're suggesting that this was not a payment being made under a settlement agreement, is whether your suggestion is that Runicom SA were issuing false invoices that misrepresented what the payments were being made for?

A. Now, if I understand you correctly, this settlement agreement -- or that name, it's a very broad term, and I'm sure that that document was executed at that time because otherwise the bank, the paying bank, would not have accepted this payment and would not have made the payment. So there is nothing false about it.

Q. So is your evidence now that this payment was made as a result of some agreement called the settlement agreement between Runicom SA and Logovaz?

A. I can only speculate. It's been a long time and it's very hard for me to recall. But if it says what it is, then this is what it is. But I can comment why that money was needed.

Q. What I'm interested in is why it was paid, Mr Abramovich, because if you say there was a settlement agreement and it was paid as a result of a settlement agreement, then I suggest to you that is not consistent with this being paid as krysha.

A. If I recall correctly, Mr Berezovsky demanded that that payment be made and he needed this in order to pass it on to Mr Khorzakhov later on. Part of it was paid in hard cash and part of it was in non-hard cash, ie bank transfer.

Q. Can I go to another document which records a payment that you say was a --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just a second. I've got a question on this invoice.

Mr Berezovsky said that maybe it was one of your oil companies bought cars for employers, or maybe employees, and that it was payment under such an agreement. Have you anything to say about that suggestion?

A. If these are Russian cars, then for this amount you could have bought 1,000 cars. If these are foreign-made cars, then this is still a lot of money.

At that time I think I already had cars and we did not need to buy cars through Logovaz. We either bought it directly from dealers, dealerships. But, if I recall correctly, at that time I had a Bentley and Logovaz was not a Bentley dealer at that time.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you.

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Abramovich, you referred, when I first asked you what was the first payment you had made to Mr Berezovsky, to a payment, I think you said, of $16,000. Do you remember that?

A. Yes, I do remember that.

Q. Can I ask you, please, to go to page 109 of the bundle that you're in H(A)02/109. This again is a record of the payment made by Runicom SA to Logovaz on 19 September 1995 for an amount of $15,591.

Is this the payment that you say was the first of the payments you made to Mr Berezovsky?

A. I do not mean this payment. Mr Berezovsky owed money to Mr Denisov, and so when I got caught between Denisov and Berezovsky in a club he asked me to pay off his debt, and this is what I did. First off it was 16,000 and then one or two months after that there was a further 50,000. But this was in hard cash; it was not a bank transfer.

Q. Are you able to assist as to what you say this payment of $15,000 made by Runicom to Logovaz was for?

A. I do not recall what the objective of that payment was.

Q. You see, Mr Abramovich, I have to suggest to you that there were no payments that you made to Mr Berezovsky other than in respect of genuine commercial transactions for cars and suchlike prior to 1996. But you disagree with that, do you?

A. I can comment that. I disagree with that. We never bought any cars from Mr Berezovsky.

Q. Now, I want to ask you next about how much you say you paid Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili between 1996 and 1999.

First, how much do you recall paying them in 1996?

A. About $80 million.

Q. And how much do you say you recall paying them in 1997?

A. Can I do this before I have a look at my witness statement or after that? I think it was 50 million.

Q. Do you not have a recollection of it sitting here?

A. I've just mentioned this. I've just said this.

Q. How much do you recall paying them in 1998?

A. I think it was also 50, about 50, 50 or thereabouts.

Q. And in 1999?

A. In '99 it was a larger figure but I do not recall now.

I think we paid for TV6, for Kommersant, and altogether I don't remember what the grand total was.

Q. Now, your evidence as to the amounts paid each year is based exclusively on your recollection; is that right?

A. No, not only my recollection. I spoke with people, different people. For ORT and Kommersant, I looked it up, when it was done. A lot is based on my recollections. I do recall the ballpark figures but I cannot give the details. Was it 82 or 76 or 84? I remember that the ballpark figure was about 80 million.

Q. Mr Abramovich, you said you looked it up in order to come up with these figures; certainly that was the translation. Where did you look it up?

- A. With respect to Kommersant and TV6 I looked it up because I did not remember exactly when the payments went through. So I spoke with people, I spoke with colleagues. Now, whether I did have documents or not, I don't remember, but if I did have -- to the extent that I did have any documents, all the documents are part of the case file now.
- Q. So are you saying that these figures that you have come up with are a result of you having discussions with a variety of people and then coming up with these figures?
- A. Including that, yes, but not only that. I did have my own ideas but I needed to have them confirmed. I did not want to mislead the court or say anything to the court that I was not totally sure of.
- Q. Who do you say you discussed this with before putting these figures in your witness statement, please?
- A. Are you talking about all the figures or about the figures broken down by years? 30 million I remembered; 80 million I remembered; 50 million I remembered. But then when those payments started for TV6 and for Kommersant, I spoke with Lev Cherney, to whom the payment had gone.
- Q. I just want to be clear about this, Mr Abramovich. Are you saying that the payments that you've identified in answer to my questions -- $80 million, you say, for 1996; $80 million for 1997; $50 million for 1998 -- are amounts that you yourself personally remembered?

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, it was actually $50 million for 1997 that the witness had said. My learned friend I think suggested it was $80 million for both '96 and '97.

MR RABINOWITZ: I apologise. That's right. My memory is worse than his.

Are those figures that you --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Put the question again, please.

MR RABINOWITZ: The numbers that you have identified for the years 1996, 1997 and 1998, which were $80 million for '96, $50 million for '97 and $50 million for '98, do you say that these were figures that you personally remember paying to Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili?

A. Sorry, I -- could you take me through the figures again? Because I thought I misheard 18 instead of 80, so that raised a red flag, and so I focused on that and I missed out on the rest of it, sorry.

MR RABINOWITZ: I'll give you the figures first and then ask the question.

You have said in your evidence that you recall that in 1996 you paid them $80 million; you said in 1997 you paid $50 million; and you say you remember that in 1998, again you paid $50 million.

And my question is: do you say that you personally remembered that these were the amounts you paid in those years?

A. Because I have been taking part in this for such a long time, now, whether I did recall then as clearly as I remember it clearly now, when the proceedings started, that it was 80 plus 50 plus 50, I cannot say that now. I do recall that we had about -- first about 30, then about 80, and then 50 and 50 were also ballpark figures, approximate figures. But in order to be clear about this, I needed to speak with Marina Goncharova, who at that time was in charge of this relationship.

Q. You're suggesting, are you, that your memory got better as time passed?

A. Do you expect me to answer your question about whether my memory got better?

Q. Well, you seem to be saying that your memory now is better than it was earlier on about the amounts that you paid in these years.

A. I'm not sure I understand the question. I now do remember this well. Part of it was reconstruction; part of it was recollection.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I think we've gone round this hoop.

MR RABINOWITZ: Well, the trouble about saying part of it is reconstruction, Mr Abramovich, is there are no documents that exist, other than the bolshoi balance, which would support any of the figures that you're giving for these years. Which part of this do you say is reconstruction then, and from what?

- A. I've already said that some of the figures with respect to Kommersant and TV6 I got on the basis of the talks that I had with the colleagues with whom we were working then, Lev Cherney and his people who were in charge of that transaction.

The rest of it was my general recollection. I did remember those figures approximately but I could not confirm them with precision. Even though 30 million I do remember; that figure I do remember very clearly indeed.

- Q. Do you accept that the position is that apart from a document called the bolshoi balance, which we will come to shortly, you have disclosed no documents whatsoever evidencing or recording the payments which you say you made?

- A. There is a document on the screen now which confirms those -- some of the payments. So it would be wrong to say that I did not disclose any documents. It is true that we do not have many documents; that is true.

- Q. Well, the document on the screen at the moment that you're referring to, Mr Abramovich, shows $15,000 being paid from Runicom SA in respect of a payment that you say has nothing to do with what you claim were payments of krysha to Mr Berezovsky.

A. No, I did not affirm that it was related to this. It was part of the krysha and, prior to that, 4 million was also documented. What I'm saying is that it would be wrong to say that there are no documents at all.

Q. But what would be correct to say is there is, with the exception of the bolshoi balance, not a single document from you which would support what you're saying you paid; that's right, isn't it?

A. Didn't we disclose those documents?

Q. No, you didn't, Mr Abramovich.

A. Then we did not. Then if this is the only document, then we did not disclose any documents.

Q. You see, although you say you paid -- although you did pay hundreds of millions of dollars over the years, and these payments were made through the banking system, you claim to have no documents at all relating to any of these payments.

A. Many payments were made by hard cash and there's been a lot of time; it was no need, made no sense to store or keep those documents. The banks could have maintained -- retained those documents; I just don't know what the policy of the banks is in terms of storing documentation. We're talking about something that happened 15 years ago. If they store documents in banks for 15 years, then there is a possibility that they are still in the bank's archives, but unfortunately I cannot assist you with that.

Q. Do you say that there once were documents which carefully totted up how much Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili were being paid?

A. If by "document" you mean a bank payment, like this, of course documents like this did exist because I paid for ORT, I would pay some of Berezovsky's expenses -- we paid his credit card bills, we paid for his chateau in southern France -- and they are all documented. There is a lot of correspondence.

So it would be wrong to say that there are no documents at all but many documents are missing; they're no longer available. But we can draw a certain picture on the basis of this -- we can get a certain impression on the basis of this.

THE INTERPRETER: Sorry.

MR RABINOWITZ: My question was really whether you had produced a document which totted up how much you had paying Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili. Did such a document, in which you totalled up the amounts for any particular year or for every year, ever exist?

- A. It was not to those two people; it was to just one person mainly. I don't have one general document.
- Q. The question was whether you ever had a document which totted up, which added up what you say you were paying, I say, to Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili. Did such a document ever exist for any of -- for these years?
- A. I don't think there ever existed one general compounded document. Apart from small ledgers that were being kept, I don't think that there was one certified document that would tot everything up, or a banking document; no, I don't think so. But at the end of every year we put our figures together to try to figure out how much exactly had been paid, what the grand totals had been. If that may be of any assistance, that's what was the case.
- Q. Are you saying then that there was a document that you produced every year which showed these figures?
- A. Well, of course we did take note of the old expenses for our internal purposes. It couldn't have been otherwise.
- Q. But all of these documents have been destroyed now?
- A. When you say "destroyed", do you mean deliberately destroyed or do you mean that they are no longer there? They're no longer there because it's been a long time, so there was no need to keep them in the archives. And also many payments were made using hard cash, so that's just an entry in some notebook, in a small ledger.

- Q. And do you accept that the requests for payments that you say were made were made both by Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Berezovsky?
- A. Yes, that's -- that was the case.
- Q. Mr Patarkatsishvili controlled the payments and generally handled the commercial side of Mr Berezovsky's affairs; do you agree with that?
- A. I cannot tell you that -- I cannot say that he was in charge of all the commercial activities of Berezovsky but probably he controlled the bulk of it. The overwhelming majority of his commercial operations he controlled; yes, that's true.
- Q. And Mr Fomichev, who was a close associate of both Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili, liaised with your staff in relation to the making of payments on behalf of both Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Berezovsky; do you agree with that?
- A. Sir, could you be more specific when you ask your questions? Did I think that those payments went to Patarkatsishvili? The answer is: no, never, if this is what you're asking me about.
- Q. My question was more directed to whether it was Mr Fomichev who was liaising with your staff in relation to the making of those payments.

A. Yes, with respect to many of the payments, yes.

Q. And it follows that it would therefore not be surprising if Mr Berezovsky personally were not aware of all the details of those payments?

A. It's just in his character. Usually people know how much money they get, but I also sometimes forget how much exactly I have received. So it was part of Berezovsky's character. But I think that Fomichev and Patarkatsishvili knew what the grand totals were better than Berezovsky did.

Q. And so far as you are concerned, were you aware of the extent to which Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili had joint commercial interests?

A. Which year are you referring to?

Q. Well, do you say you were aware of their joint commercial interests in any of the years from 1995 to 2001?

A. No.

Q. Thank you. And it follows that, for the many payments --

A. I'm sorry. In the year 2001, chances are that I already got some hint, but I wouldn't have said that this was the case, between 1994 and 2001. Between those years I did not know that they were -- to use a term that you're using -- partners. But by the year 2001 I was probably partly aware of this because I discussed certain things with Badri.

Q. And if you didn't know about their joint commercial interests, you would not have known whether any payment that you were making was for Mr Berezovsky's benefit or for Mr Patarkatsishvili's benefit or for their joint benefits?

A. Only how we made the payments. We used our infrastructure: I knew who the payee was, I knew who the final recipient was.

Q. What if the payee was just some company the name of which you'd never heard before? You couldn't know then whether the payment was for Mr Berezovsky or Mr Patarkatsishvili or for both of them, could you?

A. Now, if the payment went to ORT bank account, then I could see that. If the payment went to a company who was recipient at Berezovsky's request, then I could see that. Sometimes hard cash also went to Badri, sometimes it went to Berezovsky, but it was also at Berezovsky's request.

Mainly Berezovsky or Badri explained to me what the purpose of this was. I had never made a payment at the beginning of the year and then they started using this. For every payment they had to call me or call one of my people and after that I issued an instruction for the payment to be made. We then started calling this a programme and then...

MR RABINOWITZ: I'm not sure if the translator is...

THE INTERPRETER: I'm so sorry, I cannot keep up with the speed. I'm asking Mr Abramovich to repeat.

A. It never so happened that we let them have the whole amount at the beginning of the year; we always made payments on the basis of their requests. We either repaid their debts or we received a request from Badri or Boris or they asked us to let them have hard cash. And therefore I'm absolutely certain that I never made any payments to Badri.

And they usually explained to me what the objective of the payment -- what the purpose of the payment was. Many payments went to ORT and in that case I did see who the payee was. Now, if we assume that the money went to ORT and then the shareholders split it 50/50, then perhaps you can draw that conclusion. But I usually saw who the payee was, who the recipient was, and on the basis of that I can draw those conclusions.

Q. Mr Abramovich, at the beginning of that answer, you explained that:

"It never... happened that [you] let them have the whole amount at the beginning of the year..."

Can you explain what you meant by that, please?

What was the "whole amount" that you were talking about there?

- A. What I mean is that we never had an arrangement whereby, for instance, we would let them -- all the $50 million -- let them have the 50 million together. The arrangement was that they issued requests and then in response to their requests we made the payments.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Did the requests come in writing or were they made orally to you personally?

- A. Mainly, on the whole, these were oral requests. Badri used to call me and then he sent an invoice and asked me to make a payment somewhere, or sometimes an invoice came and then Badri called, or sometimes they called me and asked me to send $50,000 worth of hard cash to the club; this is also something that did happen.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Did Mr Berezovsky ever call you?

- A. Yes, he did call me, and quite often. Of course, when he needed money, he did call me.

MR RABINOWITZ: You said in that answer that:

"... [you] never had an arrangement whereby... [you] would let them... have [all] the 50 million together."

Are you suggesting that what happened was that you had agreed that a particular amount would be payable, for example $50 million, and that you would not pay that out in one go?

A. No, never. Never in a bullet payment.

Q. I'm not sure that's an answer to my question. I follow that you say you didn't make the payment in one go, but were there agreements that there was a particular amount that would be payable?

A. It's almost always we had agreed in advance how much would be paid on an annual basis. Sometimes we were not able to pay the whole amount and then there was a spill-over for the next year.

Q. So this wasn't a case of you simply meeting a request for payment on any particular month; you accept that there were discussions and an agreement as to how much should be paid for each year?

A. Well, the way it worked was Badri came to me or I went to the club and we had a meeting and we discussed how much he needs and he said -- he used to say, "Okay, I think I will need this", and then he would let me know how much, depending on their needs, how much and in what instalments money needed to be paid. Sometimes Berezovsky used to call me directly or sometimes Badri called me. He used to ring me up. And so this is what I'm trying to convey to you: we never -- it never so happened that we let them have the whole amount right away.

So apart from making payments, we were also an infrastructure. We were an infrastructure that was used in order to make those payments, or rather we were the infrastructure in order to make those payments.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Rabinowitz, before the break, I would be assisted if you could tell me where I find your client's stated position as to the amounts which he was paid, because I'm not clear of the area of the dispute on this.

MR RABINOWITZ: I'm not sure that we give a particular amount for how much was paid each year. What I'm trying to ascertain from this witness is whether, as he suggests he has, he has a very clear amount as to how much was paid each year.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, I'm not clear in my own mind as to where the dispute lies between the parties as to the amounts of the payments.

Anyway, will you have a think about it.

MR RABINOWITZ: I will have a think about it. I can tell your Ladyship that we do not anywhere set out particular amounts, totals of particular amounts that we say we received.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, that's not quite correct, if I may say so, because such amounts were supplied to the French investigating magistrate and they appear to have been derived from the evidence put in in writing in our evidence, that's to say from Ms Goncharova or from Mr Abramovich, which were put forward by Mr Berezovsky to the French magistrates as correct figures, as we understand it. Moreover, in cross-examination he did not suggest, in spite of being asked to do so, that the true figures were either greater or less than that amount.

So it is correct that, while not in documents or in pleadings or in witness statements, Mr Berezovsky has in fact accepted that those figures were broadly accurate. It has been our impression to date that there is in fact no dispute about these matters --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, that's why I'm raising the point, because I don't understand --

MR SUMPTION: -- other than 1995. There's clearly a dispute about 1995 --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, absolutely.

MR SUMPTION: -- but not in relation to any subsequent period.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Rabinowitz, that's why I think I would like to know what you say is the area of dispute, if there is one, other than in relation to the -- was it 30 million in '95 where there is a dispute?

MR RABINOWITZ: Indeed. Can I just comment on what my learned friend said --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Maybe it's less; I can't remember. What's the figure for '95: is it 30 or 16?

MR RABINOWITZ: The question is whether there were any payments made at all at the times that Mr Abramovich says they were made, that is to say before the arrangement took effect. I'm not sure of the exact figure for that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I would be grateful to have somewhere on a bit of paper, if it's not already in the submissions, what the position is in relation to the area of disagreement.

MR RABINOWITZ: We will get those for you.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well. I'll take ten minutes.

(3.12 pm)

(A short break)

(3.30 pm)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, Mr Rabinowitz.

MR RABINOWITZ: My Lady, in answer to your question, the position is this: Mr Berezovsky does not in fact assert a case as to what precisely he was paid in these years. The purpose of the cross-examination was to determine whether Mr Abramovich himself has a clear recollection as to how much was paid in those years and the reason for that is not because we have a particular point that we want to make by reference to the precise figures, but just in case my learned friends have a particular point that they seek to assert by reference to the precise amounts of those payments.

Because of that, in our respectful submission, we thought your Ladyship might be assisted by an understanding of the extent to which Mr Abramovich really could be as certain as he claims about the extent of those payments for those years.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: But is this right: Mr Berezovsky does not dispute the defendant's case that the sums were paid? I know there's a dispute about '95, but in the other years, is it right there is no --

MR RABINOWITZ: There is no dispute at all that the sums were paid.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No dispute that the sums were paid.

Thank you.

MR RABINOWITZ: Sorry, I need to be clear. Mr Gillis points out that when your Ladyship says -- I was answering your Ladyship on the basis that there's no dispute that sums were paid. We don't accept, contrary to what my learned friend suggested, that those particular sums that Mr Abramovich asserts were paid were in fact the sums that were paid.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: You're not putting forward a positive case as to what sums, even in ballpark figures, were paid?

MR RABINOWITZ: We accept that there were substantial sums, but not the precise figures that Mr Abramovich seeks to put forward.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: What, they might have been bigger, they might have been smaller?

MR RABINOWITZ: They might have been bigger, they might have been smaller.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right, thank you.

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Abramovich, can we now please turn to the 1996 agreement. As you know, Mr Berezovsky's case is that between March and June 1996 you made clear to him that you felt very strongly that Mr Berezovsky should distance himself from Sibneft because Mr Berezovsky was so involved in politics and Mr Berezovsky says that he agreed to do this.

Now, let me ask you this question: do you agree that Mr Berezovsky was very involved in politics in 1996?

A. Yes, I do agree.

Q. And he was indeed a prominent politician at that time, was he not?

A. Yes, this is so.

Q. Would you agree that businesses in Russia were subject to substantial levels of political risk before the 1996 presidential elections, including attacks by local and national government agencies on businesses controlled by political rivals?

A. Sorry, I think I did not understand. I didn't understand the question. What was the question, the political rivals and the tax? What was the question?

Q. The question was this: businesses in Russia were subject to substantial levels of political risk before the 1996 presidential elections, including attacks by local and national government agencies on businesses controlled by political rivals; do you agree with that?

A. No, sorry, this is federal --

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, I think the problem is it's being translated "a tax", eg income tax or...

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Sorry, can you not talk at the same time as the interpreter, Mr Sumption. There was a problem. Say what you had to say again.

MR RABINOWITZ: I think Mr Sumption is pointing out that in the transcript it's come out as "tax" rather than "attacks", but that may not have been what Mr Abramovich was told.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Put the question again.

MR RABINOWITZ: Businesses in Russia were subject to substantial levels of political risk before the 1996 presidential elections, including attacks by local and national government agencies on businesses controlled by political rivals; do you agree with that?

I'm told it's been translated as "tax" as in T-A-X.

THE INTERPRETER: Sorry, it might be my mistake. Was it "attacks", as attacking someone?

MR RABINOWITZ: Yes.

THE INTERPRETER: I do apologise. I shall make an amendment.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Madam interpreter, if you could please translate the question again. If you would like Mr Rabinowitz to repeat it, I'll ask him to.

MR RABINOWITZ: The problem is translation from South African into Russian is even more difficult than translation from English into Russian.

Businesses in Russia were subject to substantial levels of political risk before the 1996 presidential elections, including attacks by local and national government agencies on businesses controlled by political rivals; do you agree with that?

A. I need to understand what you mean. Would you possibly break this question down into at least a couple of questions? I'm not quite sure what you mean by political opponents and companies being attacked.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Okay. Let me put the question.

Do you agree that businesses in Russia were subject to substantial levels of political risk before the 1996 presidential elections?

- A. I partially agree with this, but the main risk was that there were elections in 1996 and the Communists could have returned to power. Such a risk did indeed exist.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Do you agree that the risk included attacks, or aggressive attacks, by local and national government agencies on businesses controlled by political rivals of the people in power?

- A. To be completely honest, I am not quite sure what "political opponent" means. Yeltsin was in power; all people who were appointed in federal agencies were people appointed by Yeltsin. Thus, speaking about any political attacks prior to the elections, it's difficult for me to say so. Perhaps theoretically such possibility did exist, but it's very unlikely.

Some governors were, of course, from the other camp because then governors were elected and it could be supposed that they could have done something at the local level, but I would not take that into account.

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Abramovich, this is a matter on which all the historical experts are agreed. Let me show this to you, if I can. Can you go, please, to bundle G(B), volume 6/1 G(B)6/1.01/1.

The document you have in front of you is a joint memorandum produced by three experts who have been instructed by the parties to comment on matters of contemporary Russian history, including an expert who has been instructed on your behalf, Professor Robert Service, and what this document represents is a statement of areas of common ground, where it exists, and also to identify where there are differences.

Can I ask you, please, to go to page 19 in this document G(B)6/1.01/19.

A. Could I please read it because this document, again, it's only in English; it will be hard to understand how you mean.

Q. Well, I don't know if anyone has produced a Russian translation of this. If they haven't, I shall have to read it to you and you will have it translated.

Perhaps, my Lady, if Mr Prokofiev, who is sitting next to Mr Abramovich, can translate it for Mr Abramovich while he is sitting there, rather me reading it and getting it translated through the simultaneous translator, it might be quicker.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: That would be easier.

THE INTERPRETER: Certainly, madam.

Mr Rabinowitz, which part of the text are you referring to?

MR RABINOWITZ: Could you please read --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Do you want to have a chair?

THE INTERPRETER: No, I'm fine. Thank you very much, my Lady. I'm fine.

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Prokofiev, you'll see a heading D, "Political Risk", halfway down the page. Then you will see a statement 19. And then after statement 19 you will see at paragraph 41 the position that the experts have taken on this. Could you read that to the witness, please?

THE INTERPRETER: For that I would need to translate the statement as well because it says:

"Professors... agree with this statement..."

MR RABINOWITZ: Yes, please. (Pause)

So you see, Mr Abramovich, all the history professors agree that that is the position. Would you accept that the Russian business community, of which you yourself would have been a part, considered that these risks of attack were greater for individuals who were politically prominent?

A. If I may, could I please clarify what I think about this --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, please do.

A. -- this text? It says here that after the elections -- if I've understood correctly, after (sic) the elections of 1996 renationalisation was the main risk, and after the elections that risk has changed. Did I understand this correctly? If we are looking at the first line, prior to the 1996 elections there was a risk of renationalisation, that renationalisation might happen after the election. Of course, it would have been bizarre for Yeltsin to renationalise when he just privatised.

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Abramovich, you're focusing on the first subparagraph of 19. 19(2) doesn't mention renationalisation at all. And again, what these professors agree about is that prior to the 1996 presidential election the risk of this sort of threat was -- well, it existed; put it that way.

Do you follow?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I'm not sure he will understand the question from the way in which you've put it.

MR RABINOWITZ: In your comment, Mr Abramovich, you have focused on that part of the statement which refers to renationalisation and you are right to say that it says there was a risk of renationalisation both before and after the 1996 presidential election, but it diminished after the 1996 presidential election. That is what this says, but it is not all it says.

It also says that:

"Russian businesses were subject to substantial levels of political risk both before and after the 1996 Presidential election."

And that the risk included:

"Attacks..."

That's aggressive attacks.

"... by local and national government agencies on businesses controlled by political or economic rivals."

And that is what the experts agree about. Do you want to comment on that?

- A. I can comment with regard to renationalisation. That could have not happened at all at Yeltsin's because he was only speaking about privatisation. And there might have been some risk at local level, yes; possibly I could agree with that.

Overall, yes, there were some political risks. The main political risk was with the elections that could have been lost and then there could have been renationalisation, that could have been said for sure, and the leader of the Communists did not hide that at all.

- Q. It's not just renationalisation that these professors are talking about and indeed agree about; it is other attacks on businesses which were owned or controlled by their political rivals. Do you accept that or not? If you don't accept it, then say so and we can move on.

- A. I rather -- it's not that I accept this or don't accept this; I just can't understand this. What risks are we describing? If it's a risk of renationalisation, then there wasn't such a risk, and I cannot comprehend the other risks.

There wasn't a risk to do with taxes because these were set by the federal legislation. Was there a risk that the president will be dismissed and a new president appointment? Yes, but that risk was taken off by Mr Berezovsky. And with regard to any other risks, I am not quite clear what we are talking about.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: It's paragraph 19, subparagraph 2 that Mr Rabinowitz is asking you to look at and he's asking you to say whether you agree that the risk identified in subparagraph 19(2) was present before the 1996 election and/or after the 1996 election.

- A. With regard with risk prior to 1996, I said there could have been a risk of renationalisation and I perhaps didn't feel the other risks. Maybe, if all the professors agreed, maybe they felt or knew the situation better. I didn't feel that, so I cannot confirm.

And after the 1996 elections, well, I think surely some risks might have existed but they would have been considerably lesser. It's hard for me to judge. I can neither prove nor disprove it because this is quite a nebulous wording, "the risks".

I can't understand how a federal government could attack the business. Perhaps such an opportunity exists but I couldn't feel that because only in the end of '95 we have won the auction, we just paid the government. Who could have possibly attacked us? I am not quite clear about that. All the governors that existed, they did support us, those that worked in the regions where we worked, so I didn't feel that risk in particular.

And perhaps I could agree, but I am not quite clear what the matter is, what we're talking about.

Q. Mr Abramovich, I suggest you know exactly what we're talking about and we'll see that in a few minutes, but let's move on to the next question, shall we?

Would you accept that the Russian business community, of which you yourself would have been part, accepted that the risks of being attacked by political rivals using the government agencies was greater for individuals who were politically prominent?

Again, if you don't agree, just say so.

A. For people who are politically prominent, the risk is always higher, I agree.

Q. And in terms of your not knowing what sort of risks we are talking about here, perhaps I can show you precisely the sort of risks that there were. Can you please be given bundle B(B)1/02, page 166 B(B)1.02/166.

A. Sorry, what is this document?

Q. This is an extract from the memoirs of President Boris Yeltsin. If you go back to page 164 B(B)1.02/164, you can see the title of this book.

At page 166 President Yeltsin sets out the extraordinary events which occurred between the first and second rounds of voting in the presidential election in 1996. I will just tell you what President Yeltsin describes in the second paragraph.

He explains that he was in a run-off against Zyuganov. Do you remember that?

A. Yes. Yes, I do.

Q. And in that context he tells of how he met with his "analytical group", as he calls them, and this is a group funded by, among others, Mr Berezovsky; that's right, isn't it?

A. I don't know whether Mr Berezovsky financed the analytical group; I think not. I think Berezovsky supported Yeltsin via ORT. I don't think he was giving money to an analysis group.

Q. Well, I think he is, but I'll show you that in a few moments.

Now, there was a dispute which President Yeltsin then mentions in the third paragraph between Khorzhakov, who was the head of the presidential security service, on the one hand, and the analytical group on the other hand, and that dispute resulted in the arrest of two aides from the analytical group. Okay?

A. Yes, but it wasn't a dispute that led to it because these two aides, if I remember correctly, they tried to bring some hard cash into the White House and that's why they were arrested and detained, when money was passing through the metal detector, through the detector. This is from what I can recall. Perhaps there were some political motives behind this but I cannot appreciate that. I think there was some breach, some crime, and so they were detained.

Q. Let me read you what President Yeltsin says at the top of page 167 B(B)1.02/167 and I'll read it and perhaps Mr Prokofiev can translate it. He says this:

"But Tanya left home..."

And he's talking about his daughter here,
Tatyana Dyachenko.

THE INTERPRETER: I'm sorry, sir, which...?

MR RABINOWITZ: At the top of page 167.

THE INTERPRETER: Oh, 167. Yes, thank you very much,

Mr Rabinowitz.

MR RABINOWITZ: "But Tanya left home at about 1.00 am to go to the offices of Logovaz (Berezovsky's company), where most of the analytical group members had gathered" --

THE INTERPRETER: Sorry, where on page 167 is that?

A. May I ask a question, please?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

A. Do I understand correctly that this is Yeltsin's book or a book by Yeltsin, or did I misunderstand?

MR RABINOWITZ: It's a book by Yeltsin, correct.

A. To be honest, it's hard for me to imagine that Yeltsin did indeed write, "But Tanya left home", et cetera, et cetera. I didn't know Mr Yeltsin at that point in time, but I met him a few times; I don't think he knew about these details. I don't think this book was written by Mr Yeltsin.

MR RABINOWITZ: All I can tell you, Mr Abramovich, is that if you go to the title page, it does claim to be written by Boris Yeltsin. The book is called "Midnight Diaries" and that's all, I'm afraid, I have to go on; but if you know better, then you should say so.

Can we just have this read to you.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Prokofiev is going to translate, is he? It's probably easier.

MR RABINOWITZ: That may be the quickest way.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Start at the top.

THE INTERPRETER: If you just tell me where we're starting.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: "But Tanya left home". But down to where, please, Mr Rabinowitz?

MR RABINOWITZ: Down to the reference to the building being "surrounded by security service agents".

THE INTERPRETER: Until that sentence?

MR RABINOWITZ: Until those words.

THE INTERPRETER: Until the words "service agents"?

MR RABINOWITZ: You can read to the end of that paragraph if you like, the next sentence as well. (Pause)

The event that President Yeltsin describes here is one that took place slightly after the time when Mr Berezovsky says that the 1996 agreement was made, but I suggest that it well reflects the political exposure of Mr Berezovsky at this time. Do you disagree with that?

A. I disagree with you. Mr Berezovsky was one of the friends of Mr Khorzhakov and they fell out at the point when Khorzhakov suggested not to hold elections but to delay them for a later date. At that point they fell out and, if I understand correctly, this very moment is being described. And before that, they had very good relationship.

Moreover, at the asking -- at the request of Mr Berezovsky, as Mr Berezovsky explained to me, we actually passed the money on to him for his assistance in creating Sibneft. So he, as a political opponent, if we're talking about Mr Khorzhakov, I didn't view him as a political opponent at all.

Q. You see, I suggest to you that there would be very good reason why a businessman might prefer to be distanced from someone like Mr Berezovsky, who was involved in politics and was controversial. Do you dispute that?

A. Did I understand the question correctly: did Mr Berezovsky have to distance himself from business because he was a controversial figure?

Q. The question is put the other way. Was there good reason why a businessman might prefer to be distanced from Mr Berezovsky because he was a controversial business figure?

A. There wasn't such a reason, I don't know such a reason, I cannot find such a reason. Moreover, we paid for Mr Berezovsky to be close to us and not to distance himself from us. What was the point of those payments otherwise? He was protecting us from not having problems and we were not distancing ourselves from him.

Q. Mr Abramovich, I suggest you know that that is simply not the case. The reason that you were making the payments is because there was a partnership between yourself and Mr Berezovsky in relation to Sibneft.

Now, do you dispute that the question of political exposure was a factor which you took into account in your dealings with Mr Berezovsky?

A. To some extent there was a political risk but it was linked to elections.

Q. Can you explain what you mean by that? You accept there was a political risk or a risk, presumably, of being exposed as being close to Berezovsky. Can you explain how you want to qualify that?

A. I want to qualify that if Communists would have won, then whether you're close to Mr Berezovsky or not would have no difference whatsoever because all industry would have been nationalised and that was openly stated, proclaimed. So I disagree with the statement that the business that was close to Berezovsky for that sole reason would have been nationalised.

Q. Isn't it obvious that a business which is associated with Mr Berezovsky would be more subject to risk than a business which was not associated with Mr Berezovsky?

A. If we are discussing an oil company and its privatisation, then any oil company would have been nationalised; and if we were discussing a small business, for example a restaurant, a cafe, then perhaps it were not nationalised. It's not important whether it belongs to Berezovsky or any other person.

The Communists always were proclaiming that industry that was created at Soviet times belongs to the people, to the whole people, and therefore privatisation was unlawful and therefore everything privatised in serious industry, any serious items, will be renationalised. That was the main risk.

Q. It may have been the main risk, Mr Abramovich, but it was not the only risk. There were a lot of political factions and being associated with one of those political factions, in particular Mr Berezovsky, exposed you more than you would otherwise have been; that's right, isn't it?

A. I disagree. There were two factions: that was Yeltsin and the Communists. If you were for Yeltsin then your risk did indeed exist because Communists could have taken power back; and if you were for the Communists then perhaps you had risk as well, but because I was never on that side I cannot appreciate that risk.

Q. It wasn't just the risk of renationalisation; there was always a risk of being refused necessary licences, there was a risk of tax investigations and there was a risk of raids as well, wasn't there?

A. That could have happened, that we would have been denied licences, but that could have happened only after 1996 because I don't feel that that could have happened before 1996. Maybe with regard to tax, I'm not so sure.

But yes, indeed we could have been denied licences; but we were not thinking about new licences at the moment of creating the company.

Q. Now, by March 1996, you had acquired control of Sibneft; that's right, isn't it?

A. Are we talking about management control or control from the point of ownership?

Q. Well, let's break this down.

NFK had won the loans for shares auction in December 1995; is that right?

A. Yes, that's right.

Q. And that meant that in practical terms you were almost guaranteed -- not guaranteed, but almost guaranteed -- to end up with 50 per cent of Sibneft once the state defaulted; is that correct?

A. I've heard the word "guaranteed": did I understand the translation correctly?

Q. You did, but what I was saying was that there wasn't a guarantee; there was almost a guarantee. It was very likely, let me put it that way.

A. That was likely and very much desired.

Q. And Runicom had acquired a further 12.2 per cent of Sibneft in January 1996; is that correct?

A. Yes, that's right.

Q. And there would therefore have been no real interest for others in seeking to obtain large stakes in Sibneft in the remaining auctions since they would be doomed to remain as minority shareholders; do you accept that?

- A. Sorry, I didn't understand the question. Could you please ask that again?
- Q. You were in a situation in which you were very likely to get 51 per cent of Sibneft once the state defaulted and you had already acquired a further 12.2 per cent of Sibneft in January 1996; okay? We've agreed about that.
- A. I agree that if we knew about the defaults then that would have been a high likelihood. Sorry, sir, maybe I'm quite tired, I don't understand what you're saying. I don't understand the question. Yes, we did desire the default.
- Q. No, it's more than desire the default. The default was very likely to happen and in those circumstances you were almost certainly going to land up with 51 per cent of Sibneft? We discussed this yesterday. That is right, isn't it?
- A. The likelihood was high but there were some unknowns: whether the default would have happened and whether we would have been able to win the auction. So if to discount these two things, that -- yes, then indeed the likelihood was high.
- Q. And you had also acquired a further 12.2 per cent of Sibneft in January 1996; that's correct as well, isn't it?

A. Yes, this is so.

Q. And what I suggest is that in those circumstances, where you were very likely to acquire 51 per cent of Sibneft on the default and you had acquired a further 12.2 per cent of Sibneft in January 1996, there would have been no real interest for anyone else in seeking to obtain large stakes in Sibneft in the remaining auctions, since they would be doomed to remain as minority shareholders.

A. Do you mean the auctions for 19 and for 15 per cent shares?

Q. Yes, indeed.

A. May I see when these auctions were held? Then I would give you an exact answer to your question. I can't recall at the moment.

Q. We're talking about the position in March 1996 and I'm describing the position as it was in March 1996. It's not a difficult question, Mr Abramovich.

A. It seems to me that for every stake, even a small stake, there was some fights, especially for 51 per cent when the auction happened. There were many participants, many people wanting to win.

I don't understand your question, sorry. It's hard for me. It's late in the day.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Put it again. Put it again,
Mr Rabinowitz, please.

MR RABINOWITZ: By March 1996 you were very likely -- indeed, almost guaranteed -- to end up with 51 per cent of Sibneft when the state defaulted and you had already acquired a further 12.2 per cent of Sibneft in January 1996, and in those circumstances there would have been no real interest for anyone else in seeking to obtain large stakes in Sibneft in the remaining auctions because they would be doomed to remain as minority shareholders.

A. If to suggest that we belong -- we own 12 and 51 per cent, if to take away the likelihood, then at the following auction there would have been fewer people who wanted to purchase or maybe none at all. But I think it was all back-to-front. I'll be able to give you a more exact answer when I will understand when did the 19 per cent and 15 per cent auctions happened; then I'll tell you whether such a risk existed or not.

At the moment I can't get your question. I can't see how am I supposed to answer this if I have no data.
And why are you referring to March? What happened in March?

Q. That is the date when Mr Berezovsky says you began to -- you reached an agreement with him in 1996 that because of his political exposure, he should be distanced from Sibneft.

- A. I assert that we never had any agreement in '96. This is pure fantasy and there is no logic in it. Unfortunately I cannot confirm this.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Okay. Well, put the dates of the auctions to him so that he can...

MR RABINOWITZ: The auctions were in September and October 1996. In September 1996, 19 per cent was bought by Firma Sins and in October 1996, 15 per cent was bought by Refine Oil.

- A. May I ask one more question, please?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: I'd rather you answered questions than asked them.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, let him ask a question about the dates because it's difficult.

What's your question, Mr Abramovich?

- A. I don't remember when the first round of elections happened, therefore I don't understand the question. It's very hard --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Just a second. It's the end of a long day. Formulate the question and put it in the morning, Mr Rabinowitz, all right?

Now, how are we doing on the timetable? Perhaps you would have a think about that and let me know where we are on that too.

MR RABINOWITZ: We'll do that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well. Anything else anybody wants to raise?

MR SUMPTION: No.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: 10.15 tomorrow.

Cross-examination by MR RABINOWITZ (continued)

MR RABINOWITZ: Good morning, Mr Abramovich.

By March 1996 you did not need any political lobbying from Mr Berezovsky anymore; do you agree?

A. By March '96 I did need political lobbying services.

Q. From Mr Berezovsky?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you want to explain why you needed political lobbying services from Mr Berezovsky in March 1996?

A. Without Mr Berezovsky, alone I couldn't have maintained my grip on the company, until the company was fully privatised. For sure, without Mr Berezovsky, I would not have managed to keep hold of it and manage it. My authority was not sufficient to work with, say, Mr Gorodilov; he was an important figure. Without Berezovsky, I would not have been able to keep it going.

Q. By March 1996 NFK had won the loans for shares scheme; that was in December 1995. Do you agree?

A. Yes, in December '95 indeed NFK obtained the right to manage Sibneft shares.

Q. And Runicom had acquired a further 12.2 per cent of Sibneft in January 1996; do you agree with that?

- A. Yes, indeed.
- Q. I suggest to you, Mr Abramovich, that there was no risk at all to you of anyone else being able to obtain control of Sibneft given the position you had become placed in by March 1996.
- A. I don't agree with this.
- Q. And I suggest to you also that in fact a close association with Mr Berezovsky at that time, because of the political risk it would entail, would have been of more harm than any good that you would derive from having his public support.
- A. I disagree with this as well, totally disagree with it.
- Q. And I suggest to you that that is why you approached Mr Berezovsky at that time and asked him to agree to distance himself from Sibneft.
- A. I never asked for that. Moreover, it was impossible to have done that. If I understood you correctly, you said that it would have been harmful for me or for Sibneft company? Our association would have been harmful for me personally or for Sibneft? Could you specify?
- Q. What you suggested to Mr Berezovsky was that it was harmful for Sibneft for him to be associated with Sibneft at that time.
- A. So, for me to understand exactly what you mean, prior to '96 elections I allegedly told Berezovsky that his link or his association with Sibneft was harmful to Sibneft; is that what you mean?

Q. That is what my question involves saying, yes.

A. This did not happen. In the files of the case there is a document, I think it's called letter number 13; may we look at that, if that's possible?

Q. I'm sure that, if it's relevant, Mr Sumption will take you to that. We will have a look for it later on.

Can we move on, though. I want to go forward from 1996. Your case on krysha is that you paid Mr Berezovsky primarily for his political assistance, even after 1996; is that right?

A. Yes, that is so.

Q. And if these krysha payments were for political assistance, it follows that you would have considered yourself under no obligation at all to continue paying Mr Berezovsky if he ceased providing or being able to provide political assistance; is that right?

A. I think on the contrary: we made him a member of the board of directors so that he can be associated with the company to a maximum possible degree. So I don't quite understand what you mean when you say "cease to provide assistance".

Q. My question is this: if your krysha payments were for political assistance, lobbying assistance that Mr Berezovsky was providing, then it would follow that if Mr Berezovsky was no longer providing lobbying assistance, you would have considered yourself under no further obligation to keep making payments to him; is that right?

A. No, that is not right. He continued providing the services we agreed upon and I continued paying. Moreover, the traditional krysha concept did not envisage breaking up such an agreement unilaterally; two parties had to agree and then somehow exit from this arrangement.

Q. But if the services were no longer being provided, you would have no longer been under any obligation of whatever sort to keep paying. Do you agree with that?

A. No, I do not agree. I don't agree with the fact that the services were not provided and I do not agree with the statement that I could have broken up that agreement or arrangement unilaterally. I could not have done it just off my own -- on my own.

Q. Do you accept that Mr Berezovsky's relations with the Yeltsin regime became weaker in the period from 1998 to 2000?

A. Well, this is a long period of time; many things happened. If we look at these two years as a whole, then no, I do not agree.

Q. Would you accept that by this time -- and I mean the period 1998 to 2000 -- Mr Berezovsky's access to the presidential administration had been reduced to the point where he was only given the opportunity to discuss political matters and to meet with senior members of the presidential administration when he had a particular view that he wished to communicate to President Yeltsin?

A. Mr Berezovsky had never had frequent meetings with President Yeltsin. From what I know, he had three or four personal meetings overall, which doesn't mean at all that he was unable to exercise political influence. The main work that he did was with people around the president's people and the president's circle who could influence the president's opinion.

After '96 Yeltsin did not feel well physically, he was not a well man. If I remember correctly, he had two heart attacks. So the role of his circle was ever more important; and Mr Berezovsky was not only part of that circle, he had personal contacts with every member of that circle. So his influence in fact at that time was very, very significant, very high.

Q. Mr Voloshin, who you are calling as a witness, says about the period 1998 to 2000 that he can agree with Mr Berezovsky and confirm that his influence was not so great at that time. Do you say Mr Voloshin, who was part of the presidential administration, is wrong about that?

A. I cannot comment on what Mr Voloshin says. I can only tell you what I know myself and I know what I was paying for.

Q. Well, you in your evidence, Mr Abramovich, have not been able to identify a single action on Mr Berezovsky's part which you say he provided between 1998 and 2000; that's right, isn't it?

A. The concept of krysha doesn't envisage specific services or actions. This is not an exchange of services; it's just an arrangement that covers a period.

Q. With respect, Mr Abramovich, you've described krysha as being, when we got down to it, Mr Berezovsky lobbying on your behalf, and what I'm putting to you is that you have not been able to identify a single action in your evidence taken by Mr Berezovsky which you say he provided between 1998 and 2000.

A. Well, perhaps I cannot remember a specific action but for sure there have been many, but I can't just give you immediately an example. The concept of krysha is a long-term relationship, a continuous relationship with more or less regular payments; that's what the concept is.

And as to Berezovsky losing political influence,

I think in '97 or '98 he was appointed deputy secretary of the Security Council. So that only shows that his political influence was growing, if President Yeltsin appointed him to this high office.

Q. Mr Abramovich, you have served seven witness statements in this action, some of them very long, and you are suggesting that, notwithstanding those seven witness statements, there was something else that you might have said about what Mr Berezovsky was doing which you just forgot to put into those witness statements; is that your evidence?

A. No. Why do you think I've forgotten to write something down? It's just this matter was not discussed. I set down everything I knew about it in my evidence.

Q. Mr Abramovich, what I suggest to you is that it is simply inconceivable that you would have continued to pay tens of millions of dollars in fees for krysha in circumstances where no krysha was in fact being provided. Do you want to comment on that?

A. Yes, I can comment. I continued paying tens of millions of dollars for krysha. Moreover, following '96 elections Mr Berezovsky became a very significant political figure whom we supported; not just myself, other businessmen supported him, but I was the main one who was paying. He had turned into a political corporation. He sort of appointed himself -- and we all supported that -- but he self-appointed himself as a political leader of large business and all of us supported that, we all helped him, we all promoted that.

Q. We are now chronologically around the year 2000 and I want therefore to ask you some questions about the aluminium acquisitions that were made at about this time.

You entered into an agreement for the acquisition of aluminium assets in February 2000; that's right, isn't it?

A. Yes, that is so.

Q. Can we just then see what is common ground about the events leading up to this.

The aluminium assets that were acquired in February 2000 were primarily in the Krasnoyarsk, Bratsk and Achinsk aluminium assets; is that right?

A. Yes, indeed, only I missed the month. I missed the month that you mentioned.

Q. February 2000.

A. Right.

Q. And in the case of the Krasnoyarsk assets, this included both the Krasnoyarsk aluminium plant and the hydroelectric power station; that's correct, isn't it?

A. Yes, indeed.

- Q. And you accept that prior to the agreement being made in February 2000, as you were aware, Mr Berezovsky had visited the Krasnoyarsk region in early 1999?
- A. Mr Berezovsky did visit Krasnoyarsk region, I don't know -- I don't remember exactly when; and I also think he made several visits. But I know he visited, that's for sure.
- Q. I think you accept in your evidence that in fact Mr Berezovsky made that trip with Mr Lev Chernoi. That's right, isn't it?
- A. Yes, I agree with that.
- Q. And you also accept in your evidence that it is possible that Mr Berezovsky was also accompanied on that trip by Mr Anisimov?
- A. It is possible, but I just don't remember now.
- Q. Perhaps I can show you your witness statement. If you go to your fourth witness statement, that's E5, tab 11, page 53 in the English E5/11/53 and page 129 in the Russian E5/11/129, paragraph 130. Do you see the second sentence there, you refer to this?
- A. I am saying that possibly Mr Anisimov was there and I continue maintaining that possibly he was there. I don't know for sure.
- Q. And Mr Lev Chernoi was an associate of the Reuben brothers and part of the Trans-World Group; that's right, isn't it?

A. Lev Chernoi, yes, he was part of Trans-World Group. He had his own company and it was named something else, but I think they were close.

Q. And between them in 1999 Lev Chernoi and the Reuben brothers controlled a substantial part of the aluminium business at Krasnoyarsk and a substantial part of the business at Bratsk as well; that's right, isn't it?

A. Yes, indeed.

Q. And at that time -- again we're talking about 1999 -- Mr Anisimov also owned a substantial part of the business at Kras (sic)?

THE INTERPRETER: I beg your pardon, at where?

MR RABINOWITZ: Sorry, Krasnoyarsk.

A. Yes, that is true.

Q. And Mr Lev Chernoi and Mr -- sorry, I'll start again because that may not have clicked in.

Mr Lev Chernoi and Mr Anisimov also held interests in Achinsk Glinozemnyi Kombinat, AGK; that's right, isn't it?

A. That is so; they had shares in Achinsk Alumina Plant, or Glinozemnyi Kombinat. It's just that at that time Achinsk was undergoing bankruptcy procedure, so whether one had shares or not was already irrelevant.

Q. And so when Mr Berezovsky, in 1999, made the trip to the Krasnoyarsk region, he was accompanied by some of the key players in the Russian aluminium industry in that region, namely Mr Chernoi and possibly, as you accept, Mr Anisimov?

- A. I agree with that Chernoi was there. I simply don't know about Anisimov.
- Q. Now, Mr Berezovsky in 1999 also enjoyed good political relations with the governor of the Krasnoyarsk region, General Alexander Lebed; that's correct, isn't it?
- A. From time to time -- so at some time Mr Berezovsky was on good terms with General Lebed; at other times General Lebed hated him. So I don't really know on what kind of footing they were at that particular time.
- Q. His evidence about this wasn't challenged by your lawyers, Mr Abramovich.

But can I ask you this: Mr Berezovsky had supported and lobbied for General Lebed in the election for the position of governor of the Krasnoyarsk region in 1998 and that was an election that General Lebed had won; you're aware of that, aren't you?

- A. I know that Mr Berezovsky provided services to General Lebed in terms of elections to the post of governor and I know that Mr Lebed indeed won in those elections.
- Q. You accept, I think, that General Lebed was one of the most powerful and influential figures in the region where the aluminium enterprises were located?

A. General Lebed was indeed the most influential person in Krasnoyarsk region because he became the governor of that region. I just don't remember when the elections were held exactly, so it's difficult for me to say whether he was already very influential in '99 or not.

Q. They were in 1998.

So it was important when you came to acquire the aluminium assets in 2000 that General Lebed was on your side because if General Lebed had opposed your acquisition of the Krasnoyarsk assets, it would have been extremely difficult to establish and maintain control of the Krasnoyarsk assets; that's right, isn't it?

A. Well, that is not quite so. General Lebed could not influence on who -- on the question of who purchased the assets. That's not his remit. The idea is that the plant were at the point of being shut down; the workers were striking; the railroad was not operating. That obviously influenced General Lebed because he was the governor and of course if that continued, the situation would have worsened and Lebed would have had problems. Now, taking all that into account, yes, the rest becomes correct.

Q. So I think you're agreeing with me that it was important when you came to acquire the aluminium assets that General Lebed was on your side because if he opposed your acquisition of those assets, it would have been extremely difficult to establish and maintain control of the Krasnoyarsk assets?

A. Once again, I'd like to explain. General Lebed had nothing to do with the acquisition of assets and who acquired them and he actually did not say whether he was for or against that; that's not part of his authority. It's difficult for you to -- for me to explain, but local authorities had nothing to do with share acquisition process.

However, the situation prevailing, prevailing with the workforce, with the trade unions, when everybody came out into the streets and started protesting, that really was very relevant to the local authority and he was very keen for this matter to be resolved.

Q. Now, it wasn't just Mr Berezovsky who had good contacts in the Krasnoyarsk region; you accept, I think, that Mr Patarkatsishvili also enjoyed very good relations with Mr Lev Chernoi and Mr Anisimov?

A. Yes, I agree that Mr Patarkatsishvili was on good terms with Anisimov, Chernoi, and he was on very good terms with General Lebed.

- Q. I think you also accept that Mr Patarkatsishvili had visited the Krasnoyarsk region in relation to matters relating to the aluminium plants in late 1999. That's right, isn't it?
- A. Yes, that is so.
- Q. So it's in this context that, at the end of 1999, Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili approached you and asked you whether you would be interested in acquiring the Krasnoyarsk, Bratsk and Achinsk assets; that's right, isn't it?
- A. No, that is not right.
- Q. Do you want to say why you disagree with what I've said?
- A. Mr Patarkatsishvili asked -- turned to me and he said, "Listen, the situation in Krasnoyarsk", as I had described, "and most likely Lev Chernoi would like to sell". We were not interested in acquiring these enterprises and in '99 I didn't want to acquire these enterprises.

It sounds something very serious, this huge Krasnoyarsk aluminium smelter, the largest in the world. It sounds great, but by that time it was nothing but a heap of metal as raw material was not being supplied, power was intermittently supplied and the workforce was in the street striking. So having looked at that situation, I said, "I'm not that keen actually". And until the point when Bratsk was included in the deal -- Bratsk was in an ideal state -- until Bratsk was included in the deal, I was not interested.

At that time Krasnoyarsk smelter was not giving any profit; in fact the financial situation, as far as I remember, was very dire.

- Q. Mr Berezovsky's recollection is that he and Mr Patarkatsishvili approached you about whether you would be interested in acquiring these assets and I suggest to you that, in light of the evidence we've been through about Mr Berezovsky's connections with the aluminium sellers and in light of the way that we suggest Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili generally operated as partners, that it is entirely probable that Mr Berezovsky was also involved. Do you disagree?
- A. I can affirm only one thing: that Mr Berezovsky did not put this question to me. Yes, Mr Patarkatsishvili did indeed come to me and said, "Look, there is a possibility to acquire these assets; what do you think about it?" I had a look, I studied it and said initially, "No, I don't want to buy them". When Bratsk was included in the deal, that sort of balanced off the problems of Krasnoyarsk assets; then I agreed to the deal, but that was later.
- Q. You agree, I think, that Mr Patarkatsishvili was the one who in particular promoted the idea to you with considerable force. Is that right?

- A. Yes, I agree. He was very vigorous in pushing me towards these assets, yes.
- Q. Mr Berezovsky says that before you decided that you wanted to enter into a transaction to acquire these assets, you said that you would want to discuss it with Mr Shvidler. Is it right that you wanted to discuss this with Mr Shvidler before you decided that you were going to enter into this transaction to acquire these aluminium assets?
- A. Yes, that is so. I would not have acquired these assets without Mr Shvidler's position.
- Q. And why was it that Mr Shvidler in particular was someone who you needed to talk to about whether or not to acquire these assets?
- A. Well, first of all, Mr Shvidler is a close friend of mine and he is much better at finances than myself and when I need someone's support, I always seek his support in these decisions. I have never made a big acquisition, apart from real estate, I have never made a large acquisition without his advice and his opinion.
- Q. And of course by this stage you had been working together with Mr Shvidler for around 13 years; that's right, isn't it?

- A. Well, I mean, I have to count. I can't be exact about 13 years. We worked together for a long time. If we deduct the years when he was studying in the US and working in a company, perhaps Deloitte or something, perhaps if we then join together all the other bits, it will be 13 years. But I really don't remember exactly how many years.
- Q. And I think you've said, I think your evidence is that you wouldn't have done this deal but for Mr Shvidler persuading you that it was a deal you should do?
- A. No, I'm not saying that. Badri persuaded me, not Mr Shvidler. I don't think I said Mr Shvidler was the one who persuaded me.
- Q. Well, if Mr Shvidler wasn't there, even with Mr Patarkatsishvili telling you to do it, you wouldn't have done the deal?
- A. It's difficult for me to say today what might have happened 15 or whatever, 10 years ago, had Mr Shvidler not existed or not been there.
- Q. Would you at least accept that you were in fact initially reluctant to become involved in the aluminium industry but you were persuaded that it was a good deal to do by Mr Shvidler?
- A. I don't remember. The main person who was persuading me and who was the engine of this process was Badri. Badri was very, very keen for this deal to go through.

Q. Mr Abramovich, we accept that Badri was very keen for the deal to go through. What I'm trying to understand is the role of Mr Shvidler in this because I suggest to you that Mr Shvidler's role was also important in persuading you that this is a deal that you should do. Do you agree with that?

A. Well, I can't confirm that he made a contribution in persuading me in going for this deal and investing into these assets. I cannot agree with that. At some point he was for it; at some point he -- and in fact he was negotiating mainly with Lev Chernoi. But I can't remember him -- I can't agree that he was actually talking me into it or persuading me.

Q. Now, the master agreement was -- sorry, let me take this slightly differently.

Within one or two months of Mr Patarkatsishvili and, we say, Mr Berezovsky proposing this idea to you, a contract had been concluded with Mr Lev Chernoi, the Reuben brothers, Mr Bosov and Mr Anisimov, by which the aluminium assets were bought up for several hundred million dollars; that's right, isn't it?

A. I don't agree that it was 700.

Q. No, I didn't -- that's a mistranslation. Several hundred?

- A. Are we talking about the initial deal? The price was 550 million, if I remember correctly.
- Q. That is broadly correct. Can we have a look at the agreements. There were two sets of agreements: first, Mr Abramovich, there was a short master agreement in Russian; and then there were a number of further sale and purchase agreements which were drawn up in dual-language contract form. Do you remember that?
- A. Prior to these proceedings I didn't remember this very well, but when I was preparing myself to give evidence I looked at the contracts and recalled it all.
- Q. Okay. Can we look at the master agreement first, please: it's in bundle H(A)17. The Russian version is at page 38 H(A)17/38 and the English version begins at page 33 H(A)17/33.
- Now, we can see from the top of the page that this says this was an agreement drawn up in Moscow on 10 February 2000, but you would accept, I think, that this in fact was actually drawn up a few days later, on 15 February 2000, and backdated to 10 February 2000?
- A. It is possible.
- Q. That's in fact your own evidence, Mr Abramovich.
- A. Yes, yes. I don't remember 15th or 14th, but it is possible.
- Q. And if we look at the opening words of the agreement, we can see that there are said to be five parties to this agreement. Parties 2 to 5 are the sellers: that's Mr Chernoi, Mr Reuben, Mr Bosov and Mr Anisimov; do you see that?

A. Yes, I can see that.

Q. And party 1 is the purchaser; again, do you agree with that?

A. Yes.

Q. And party 1 is described as:

"Roman Abramovich, [Eugene] Shvidler, Badri Patarkatsishvili and companies represented by them..."

Do you see that, Mr Abramovich?

A. Yes, I can see that.

Q. And can we just -- one doesn't have this on the English version. On the Russian version at page 43 H(A)17/43 you can see the signatures for each of the parties; that's right, isn't it?

A. Yes, I can see.

Q. And under "Party 1" you have signed, Mr Shvidler has signed and Mr Patarkatsishvili has signed; correct?

A. Yes, I can see that.

Q. And then under parties 2 to 5 someone appears to have signed for each of Mr Chernoi, Mr Reuben, Mr Bosov and Mr Anisimov; correct?

- A. If I remember correctly, Lev Chernoi signed on behalf of Reuben. But I cannot insist on this; it may be not so.
- Q. So this agreement suggests that each of you and Mr Shvidler and Mr Patarkatsishvili, as well as the companies you represented, were parties to the transaction; do you accept that? That's what the agreement seems to say.
- A. In part I agree with this. If I may, later I'll explain this reservation.
- Q. We'll come to your reservations in a moment. At the moment I'm just trying to establish with you that you agree that this is what the agreement seems to suggest: that you, Mr Shvidler, and Mr Patarkatsishvili, as well as the companies you represented, were parties to the transaction. That's clear, is it not?
- A. If that's how you read this agreement, then this is what it looks like. If you don't know what happened in reality, this can be read in this way.
- Q. Let me ask you about this. You accept that Mr Patarkatsishvili was central to this transaction and that it could not have happened without his involvement? You've accepted that already this morning.
- A. I absolutely agree with that.
- Q. And you accept, I think, also that Mr Shvidler was important for you being involved in the transaction?

You discussed it with him, he was involved in the decision as to whether to proceed, and in fact you tell us that he did all the negotiations on your behalf.

That's right, is it not?

A. Yes.

Q. But your case is, is it, that neither Mr Patarkatsishvili nor Mr Shvidler were really parties to this agreement at all; that they were not even to have a 1 per cent interest in the assets being acquired? Is that right?

A. As to Mr Shvidler, he was paid a salary. As to Badri, he received commission. So they were not due to receive any percentage in shares. Percentage in shares could only be acquired by those people who were prepared to pay for them.

Q. Well, we'll come to the payment for this in a moment, Mr Abramovich. I just want to concentrate on who were the parties to it and the case as to whether Mr Shvidler and Mr Patarkatsishvili were, as you suggest, not actually parties to this contract at all, in terms of being party 1 and an acquiring party. Do you follow?

A. Well, I'm not insisting on that. They were part of party 1; they were not just people who acquired the assets. But they were part of party 1 and each played our own specific role. As a group we were party number 1, but that doesn't mean that as a group we're all acquiring the assets.

I understand that in the eyes of the English law it's difficult to comprehend, and I sympathise; but a Russian lawyer and I myself, we understand it very well. It's difficult for me to explain it to you, but it is a normal Russian practice. On the one hand; on the other hand. One party; the other party. And the roles within a party are established and assigned outside this agreement, this contract.

Q. Mr Abramovich, would you look at clause 4 of this contract. Clause 4 says that -- sorry, it's the first page of the contract H(A)17/33. Clause 4 says that:

"Party 1 shall acquire from Parties 2 and 3 all [of] their shares and interests in [the businesses identified]."

And clause 5 then identifies certain other assets which party 1 shall acquire.

Now, you accept that party 1 was you, Mr Shvidler and Mr Patarkatsishvili, as well as the companies that they represent?

A. Yes, I agree with that.

Q. But you're saying that we shouldn't treat the contract as saying what it in fact says; is that what you're suggesting?

A. Well, this is not really even a contract; it's a note, a letter, a paper that notionally -- that describes the situation.

Q. Can you look at clause 17 of this contract, Mr Abramovich, at page 35 of the English H(A)17/35. It's probably three pages on.

"The Parties agree that the conditions of this Agreement shall be incorporated in the share purchase agreements which shall be agreed on and executed [on] 10 February 2000."

It looks like this was intended to be a legal contract from that, does it not?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, isn't that a matter for me?

MR RABINOWITZ: That's a matter for your Ladyship.

Why do you say that you got Mr Patarkatsishvili to sign this contract if, as you say, he wasn't really a party in the sense of being one who was acquiring the assets?

A. Well, he was a party. He wasn't the acquirer, the purchaser, but he was a party. He represented us, he perhaps represented Mr Anisimov, he organised a meeting for us all around a table. And I can explain it's a Russian tradition: all those who take part in negotiations have to sign an agreement to certify that all of them understand and interpret the document in the same way.

Q. That's not precisely what you say in your written evidence, in your witness statement, Mr Abramovich.

Can I ask you, please, to go to paragraph 154. It's at page 81 of E1, tab 3 in the English E1/03/81 and page 160 in the Russian E1/03/160. Paragraph 154.

A. I beg your pardon, which witness statement, number 3 or number 4?

Q. Number 3. E1, tab 3. It should be on page 160.

What you suggest there, Mr Abramovich --

A. I beg your pardon, I beg your pardon, something else is being described here. I think we're probably in confusion here. I think we've got -- we're looking at the wrong paragraph.

Q. Can you find paragraph 154.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Bundle E1, tab 3.

THE WITNESS: I think we've got it.

MR RABINOWITZ: You've got it. Please do read it to yourself. (Pause)

A. I've read it and I think it's exactly what I've just been explaining.

Q. What you suggest in paragraph 154 is that the reason you wanted Mr Patarkatsishvili to sign in particular is because you wanted people to know that you were on the same team; is that right?

- A. Yes, indeed, and this is exactly what I've been explaining just now: that without Patarkatsishvili I would not have been doing that, for sure.
- Q. But, Mr Abramovich, everyone in the room at that time, every one of these sellers would have known very well that Mr Patarkatsishvili was, as you put it, your man and on the same team. He was the one, after all, who they'd approached who had introduced you to the deal. That's right, isn't it?
- A. Initially, they turned to him so that he would sort out the relationship between Mr Bykov and General Lebed because the situation in Krasnoyarsk region with these enterprises was out of control, and the catalyst for all of this was Oleg Deripaska. So the situation was such that they needed somebody from outside to negotiate because the relationship between the parties was so far gone that there was no chance of them to agree. So Badri was this kind of negotiator and when it was obvious that the parties cannot agree, he brought the deal to me.
- Q. Mr Abramovich, none of the sellers could have missed the fact that you had only come into the transaction as a result of Mr Patarkatsishvili's involvement; that's right, is it not?
- A. Yes indeed, and I am not refuting that. Without Badri,

I would not have poked my nose in there. Every three days somebody was murdered in that business. I didn't want to have anything to do with a business like that.

- Q. The point is this, Mr Abramovich: Mr Patarkatsishvili did not need to be made a party to the contract for you to impress on the other parties to the contract that he was on your team?
- A. I don't quite understand and where is the question? The contract was not signed to demonstrate something to someone; it's just a contract. Or perhaps I'm answering the wrong question?
- Q. Why do you say Mr Shvidler was made to appear as a party to this contract?
- A. Because Mr Shvidler was engaged in negotiations, he represented my side, just like Mr Patarkatsishvili in this case.
- Q. Mr Abramovich, I have to suggest to you that your explanation as to why both Mr Shvidler and Mr Patarkatsishvili signed as a party is simply untrue. Do you understand?
- A. I understand that you suggest that this is not true but it in fact is the truth. Once again I'd like to explain: to a Russian person's eyes, everything is clear here, if you look at it through Russian eyes, especially if you know the context.

Q. Just going back to the terms of the master agreement, if you look at clause 6 of the master agreement. It's page 34 of the English H(A)17/34. I just want to get you to see the price because we were talking earlier about what price was being paid here.

So do you see at clause 6 there is -- under clause 6 there is a box, a table?

A. And it shows 550 million; exactly what I said.

Q. That's correct. But we know, don't we, that as a result of a separate protocol which was supposedly signed on 14 February, the acquisition price was at some point increased to $575 million?

A. Yes indeed, and I can explain why it happened.

Q. Well, let's look at the document and then if any explanation is necessary, we can have that.

If you go to bundle H(A)18, you'll find the Russian version at H(A)18, page 18 -- don't put that contract away yet, Mr Abramovich, keep that -- H(A)18, page 18 in the Russian H(A)18/18 and 18T in the English H(A)18/18T.

Again, Mr Abramovich, we observe, do we not, that it is again a contract where you, Mr Shvidler and Mr Patarkatsishvili and the companies represented by you are identified as party 1 to the contract? Do you see that?

A. Yes, I can see that.

Q. Then if you look at clause 3, this says:

"... the total amount payable by Party 1 for the shares specified in article 1 of the Main Agreement is increased to USD 575 million..."

And it says that the amounts which are to be paid by parties 3, 4 and 5 are unchanged.

Now, do you want to give an explanation as to why the price increased in this way?

A. Yes, I would like to explain.

Q. Please go ahead.

A. When all the documents were already prepared and we agreed and we shook hands, the following situation arose: Mr Reuben said that notwithstanding the fact, if I remember correctly, that he had an equal share in business together with Lev Chernoi, he wants to get not just half but some amount of money that he quoted. And it turned out then that Lev Chernoi, who signed, who had signed, and in fact had the right to sign the deal, would stand to get less than he would get under this agreement.

So Badri came to me and said, "Listen, it turns out -- this is shameful, this is embarrassing, we need to do something", because Lev said that he's happy to grin and bear it and he's not going to raise this matter because he had promised, but Badri felt that we should really pay more.

And so we signed this -- another agreement whereby the cost increased by 25 million and the money was due to Lev Chernoi. Some of those who dealt with this on my side felt that there was something fishy there; others felt that Badri was trying to earn money from both sides. Nevertheless I didn't think that and we nevertheless signed this contract.

Q. You can put away H(A)18 but do go back to the master agreement, which I hope you still have open, H(A)17, page 34 H(A)17/34 and page 39 in the Russian H(A)17/39.

Again, just looking at clause 6, it's clear from the table that the purchase price was to be paid by way of instalments; that's right, isn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. And as is clear from the table, the final instalment was to be paid on 10 June 2001; again, that's clear, isn't it?

A. Yes, indeed.

Q. Now, I want to ask you about how the acquisition of these aluminium assets were funded. According to --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Well, I'm going to take the break now. Ten minutes.

(11.11 am)

(A short break)

(11.27 am)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Abramovich, before we do talk about the financing of the aluminium acquisition, can I go back to an answer you gave earlier today.

I was asking you this morning about whether you accepted that it was important to ensure that General Lebed supported your acquisition, or at least did not oppose your acquisition, because it would have been extremely difficult to establish and maintain control of the assets without his support, and you were finding it difficult to agree with that. Do you remember?

A. I believe that Mr Lebed's influence in that question that you raised was exaggerated, but on the whole his positive attitude would have been important. If he had been aggressive or negative or opposed to this, if he had been categorically opposed to this, it would have been very difficult to work in the region. However, the way you worded the question, some of the accents, some of the emphases were slightly shifted.

Q. Can I ask you to look at paragraph 152 of your witness statement, your third witness statement: E1, tab 3.

It's at page 81 in the English E1/03/81 and page 181/182 in the Russian E1/03/181. You may want to have a look at the last sentence and perhaps a couple of lines before that.

A. Yes, I can see this, yes.

Q. It was your own evidence I was putting to you, Mr Abramovich.

A. Yes, yes.

Q. All right.

A. If I recall correctly -- if I recall correctly -- it's not easy to understand because Magnum (sic) only shows the English text -- the question was whether or not Lebed could have opposed the acquisition. The acquisition itself had nothing to do with General Lebed but the work at the local level without Lebed would not have been possible.

Q. Let's just talk about the financing of the aluminium acquisition in February 2000.

According to Ms Panchenko, the aluminium acquisitions were initially financed by a $100 million loan granted by MDM Bank and then from March 2000 the monies paid under the merger transaction with Mr Deripaska were used to fund the purchase price. Is that your recollection as well, Mr Abramovich?

A. I apologise, could you speak slower or maybe split it up into smaller sentences?

Q. All right. Ms Panchenko tells us in her witness statement that the aluminium acquisitions were initially financed by a $100 million loan granted by MDM Bank.

A. Yes, that is true.

Q. And then from March 2000 the monies paid under the merger transaction with Mr Deripaska were used to fund the purchase price.

A. Because Mrs Panchenko was in charge of finance and the cashflows then presumably she understands that well.

I mean, do you expect me to give you a comment on this?

Q. Well, I was trying to break it up and in the end hadn't got around to asking you the question.

Do you agree that that is the way it was financed?

A. If my recollection is correct, then the funding for the transaction was 100 million came from MDM Bank, part came from the oil trading companies and part was something that we got from Mr Deripaska after we reached an agreement with him. But apart from that, there was a payments schedule and therefore there was no need to have one major bullet payment.

Did I understand your question correctly?

Q. I think you did understand the question correctly. The sums paid by Mr Deripaska under the merger transaction which you concluded in the spring of 2000, and which Ms Panchenko at least says were used to finance the original aluminium acquisitions, also came to a total of $575 million, did they not?

A. No.

Q. Okay. Perhaps we can have a look at that briefly. Can you go to bundle H(A)19 and turn to page 22 H(A)19/22. There isn't a Russian version of this so...

A. Could I just offer one clarification and then maybe there will be no need for a follow-on question.

The initial transaction with Deripaska included only $300 million. I believe that it would be wrong to believe that the 575 figure had been agreed upon originally and right away.

Have I answered your question?

Q. Well, I don't know. Do you accept that what you ultimately received from Mr Deripaska, the payment that you were going to receive from Mr Deripaska ultimately was $575 million?

A. I agree with that, but this is something that was agreed upon in May.

Q. I agree with that, if I may say so.

The net result therefore, Mr Abramovich, is that other than bridging financing costs, you in fact parted with little or no money at all in acquiring these extremely valuable aluminium assets and thereafter the subsequent interest in Rusal; that's right, isn't it? You agreed to pay $575 million and that is what you received back from Mr Deripaska as the balancing payment in the context of the merger to make Rusal?

- A. Well, if you mean that between the first transaction and the point in time where Deripaska was able to pay up, nothing happened, then perhaps then you're right. But what do you do with the 100 million that we got from the bank? If you're talking about bridge finance, you are responsible for this.

So I beg to differ: this is not something that we got for free. At the end of the day this is a transaction that Mr Shvidler did and it was a stroke of genius; but saying that no resources have been used, have been involved there, would be a wrong characterisation of what actually happened. I would disagree with that.

- Q. Mr Abramovich, in fact you agree with it and there's nothing that you are differing about and no need to beg to differ. What I said to you was: other than bridging financing costs, in the end the money that you received from Deripaska was sufficient to pay off any amount that you had to pay under the February 2000 agreements?

- A. The problem is I don't remember exactly what the schedule of payments was. Did we receive the money concurrently or in parallel or not? I remember that at the end of the day we made some profit.

So if you put it all aside and just answer your question whether the Deripaska transaction covered everything that we had to pay for the original assets, then the answer is: yes, it did cover that.

Q. And I think you would agree it was a pretty remarkable deal all in all, was it not?

A. Well, at the end of the day it was a very good transaction, yes.

Q. And would you accept that you could never have made any such deal but for the contacts and connection that Mr Patarkatsishvili and we say that Mr Berezovsky had both with the selling parties in February 2000 and with those with influence and power in Krasnoyarsk, including of course General Lebed?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, there are a number of questions tied up there, Mr Rabinowitz. Perhaps you had better just deal with it on the basis of looking at Patarkatsishvili on his own first and then add in Mr Berezovsky.

MR RABINOWITZ: Perhaps I can do it this way.

Would you agree, would you accept that you could never have made any such deal but for the contacts and connections that you were given both with the selling parties in February 2000 and those with influence and power in Krasnoyarsk, including General Lebed?

- A. The role that Mr Patarkatsishvili played was a very serious role but the selling party did want -- it was keen to sell. So if you factor all this in, then I agree with you. The role that General Lebed played was a minor role; he did not really take part in this, even though he could have put a monkey wrench into the works theoretically, but he was interested in this. He was interested in this, yes.
- Q. In fact, as we saw in your witness statement, you accept that it was important that General Lebed did not oppose your purchase because if he did, you couldn't do the deal?
- A. It was important to make sure that he did not oppose, but he could not have opposed. But people went out on the streets: when people are striking, the local authorities have a vested interest in making sure that everything comes down, that a good, real ownership comes in and can start the whole thing running, could pay salaries, could pay the taxes and so that the unions would create problems (sic) among the people. Every governor would have agreed with this. I used to be governor myself and I know how it works.
- Q. So I suggest to you that the contacts and connections of Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Berezovsky were absolutely critical to your being able to do this deal. Do you agree or not?

A. I absolutely disagree with this.

Q. Can we go back and look then at the master agreement, which I hope you still have, in bundle H(A)17. It should be page 38 of the Russian H(A)17/38 and page 33 of the English H(A)17/33.

Now, I want to go back to clause 17 of the master agreement: page 42 in the Russian H(A)17/42 and page 35 in the English version H(A)17/35. Do you see clause 17 says:

"The Parties agreed that the conditions of this Agreement shall be incorporated in the share purchase agreements which shall be agreed on and executed by 10 February 2000."

There were ten such dual-language share purchase agreements which were agreed as contemplated by this; that's right, isn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, could I ask you next to go to page 46 in the bundle that you're in H(A)17/46. It's dual language so it has both Russian and English. I'm just going to look at a sample of these agreements.

You should be, I hope, looking at an agreement dated 10/02/2000 between Greasbyn Commercial and Galinton Associated Limited. Do you have that at page 46?

A. Yes, I can see that.

Q. Now, Galinton was a bearer share BVI company; that's right, isn't it?

A. I think so.

Q. And we can see from clause 1.1, if you look towards the bottom of that page, that the subject matter of the purchase contract is a block of shares in the Krasnoyarsk aluminium plant. Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. And these shares are being sold by Mr Anisimov's company and purchased by Galinton?

A. Yes.

Q. Can I ask you to turn to page 49 in the same bundle H(A)17/49. Can you just note clause 2.4, which says that the shares were to be transferred to the buyer by no later than 29 February 2000. I don't suppose you particularly recollect that provision, do you?

A. I believe that I did not take part in the drafting of this agreement but I agree to continue discussing.

Q. Can I ask you, please, to go to page 58 of this bundle H(A)17/58, where you will find clause 8.1. Do you see it's headed "Governing Law and Dispute Resolution"?

"This Contract shall be construed and enforced in accordance with and governed by the laws of England without regard to the conflict of laws provisions thereof."

Do you see that?

A. It's hard for me to comment this. I mean, I can read this but I cannot comment on this. What is "conflict of laws provisions"?

Q. There are many people in court who have asked the same question. Don't worry about that for the moment. We'll come back to the relevance of that in due course.

Can I ask you next, please, to go in the same bundle to page 63 H(A)17/63, just to look at another one of these agreements. This is in very similar terms. On this occasion it's a company called Becassine, which is one of the Trans-World companies, who is entering into an agreement with Runicom Fort Limited.

Now, Runicom Fort Limited was a company incorporated in Gibraltar, was it not?

A. Yes.

Q. And if you look at clause 1.1, you see that Runicom Fort Limited was acquiring a block of shares in the Bratsk plant. Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. Again, just so you note this, can I ask you, please, to go to page 64 H(A)17/64 and just glance at clause 2.4, where again one has the provision that there should be a share transfer delivered to the buyer by no later than 29 February 2000.

You may not be on the right page. Clause 2.4, right at the bottom of the page.

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. And, again, if you go to page 73 H(A)17/73, again you will see clause 8.1 saying that the contract should be governed by English law.

A. Yes, I can see that.

Q. We're not going to go through, happily, all ten of these. There were ten and you will, I think, recall that the acquiring companies under these contracts were Runicom Fort Limited, which we've seen; Galinton; a company called Palmtex Limited of Panama -- you'll remember that, I think, from yesterday: it came up in the audit committee report --

A. Yes, I recall that.

Q. -- and Dilcor? And the fourth company was a company called Dilcor; do you remember that?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, I'd like to just ask you a little bit more about the ownership of these four offshore companies, Mr Abramovich.

These four offshore companies were not in fact subsidiaries of Sibneft, were they?

A. I don't think they were, but again I cannot assert that with certainty. I don't think they were. It would have been strange if an oil company were buying aluminium assets.

Q. So if it were not Sibneft itself, which I entirely accept, that owned these companies, again perhaps we can just consider together who it was who did own these companies.

Can I ask you, please, to go to bundle H(A)18 at page 12 H(A)18/12. Now, I'm afraid this is only in English and I wonder if the translator can then come up next to you and help you with this.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Do you want to have a chair to sit down so you can do it? It might be easier.

THE INTERPRETER: The whole thing?

MR RABINOWITZ: No, just the first two paragraphs, if we can start with those. (Pause)

So what we see here, Mr Abramovich, is that the Financial Times, quoting industry sources, understood that leading Sibneft shareholders were involved in the aluminium acquisitions. Do you see that?

A. Yes, I can see this. This is hearsay, this is rumours. The Financial Times -- the FT is publishing something based on rumours. But I'm not denying that the shareholders of Sibneft had acquired some assets.

Q. Well, let's just see what this says. If you go further down into the article, if you look at the sixth and seventh paragraphs:

"The major shareholder in Sibneft is believed to be Roman Abramovich, the former oil trader who last year emerged as one of Russia's most powerful oligarchs..."

Then the next paragraph:

"Another of Russia's influential oligarchs, Boris Berezovsky, is also believed to be a significant shareholder in Sibneft, although the company has made strenuous efforts over the past few months to distance itself from the media tycoon."

You say, do you, that this is completely wrong and that Mr Berezovsky was not one of the Sibneft shareholders and that he was not one of the people who acquired the aluminium assets alongside of you?

THE INTERPRETER: Sorry, we've lost you in the...

MR RABINOWITZ: Oh, right.

THE INTERPRETER: I'm so sorry, my Lady, I think

Mr Abramovich lost part of the question because he was not wearing his headset and he's apologising.

THE WITNESS: My apologies, I was not wearing my headset so I did not hear the question.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Don't worry. You've read the relevant paragraph now?

THE WITNESS: Yes, I have.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Ask the question again, Mr Rabinowitz.

MR RABINOWITZ: You say, do you, Mr Abramovich, that this is completely wrong and that Mr Berezovsky was not one of the Sibneft shareholders and that he was not one of the people who acquired the aluminium assets alongside of you?

A. This is exactly what I want to say. This is not true.

Q. Can you go to page 14, please, in the same bundle H(A)18/14. You have there the Moscow Times from 12 February 2000 and you can see that it's headed "Berezovsky & Co Buy Up 3 Smelters". I can tell you that it is clear from the article that the journalist has been talking both to a spokesman for Sibneft and a spokesman for Lev Chernoi; in other words, the journalist has been talking both to your people as buyers and to a spokesman for one of the principal sellers.

Again, perhaps I can just tell you what the relevant passages are and the translator can translate them for you. Can you look, please, at the first two paragraphs -- in fact the first three. (Pause)

A. Yes, I have understood what it says.

Q. So we have both a spokesman of Sibneft itself saying that the acquirers of the aluminium assets were a group of shareholders in Sibneft and we also have Mr Chernoi talking about the acquisition being by Sibneft shareholders.

But you say, do you, Mr Abramovich, that it was you and you alone who acquired these assets?

- A. Yes, this is exactly what I want to say and with your permission I would like to clarify, if I may.
- Q. Okay, please do.
- A. Before this article was published -- I need to read the whole of the article -- there was a rumour on the market that Sibneft had purchased aluminium assets and analysts were breathing down our neck. So we had to hold a press conference and tell the reporters, the journalists that it wasn't Sibneft that was buying this; it was Sibneft shareholders were buying this. So this is what it's all about.
- Q. Mr Abramovich, no one is saying that it is a Sibneft shareholder who is buying it; what they are saying here is that there is a collection of Sibneft shareholders -- that is to say more than one of the Sibneft shareholders -- who are buying these shares. And your case is that it was you and you alone who was buying these shares; that's right, isn't it?
- A. Yes, your understanding is correct, it was just me alone, and I can clarify why it says "A group of shareholders".

Q. If you can clarify that, please try and do so.

A. I have never said that I was the only shareholder.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: In Sibneft or in these aluminium assets?

A. I mean in Sibneft. For a variety of reasons, mainly for reasons of security, I did not want to be the only shareholder of Sibneft and so that everyone knows that I was the only shareholder in Sibneft.

Q. But, Mr Abramovich --

A. And that's why we often spoke about management, management control, as long as we did not mention just my name.

Q. But this didn't require anyone to mention your name, Mr Abramovich. It didn't require anyone to say, "Mr Abramovich is the shareholder". They could have just said a Sibneft shareholder had acquired these shares. But what it instead says -- and this is a consistent theme throughout this -- is that a group of Sibneft shareholders, more than one Sibneft shareholder, bought these shares in the aluminium assets.

A. Yes, that's true. That's what it says, "A group of shareholders", and we have always been upholding this: a group of shareholders.

Now, so far as Berezovsky is concerned and the mention of Berezovsky, the market has always believed that Sibneft belongs to Mr Berezovsky and we have never tried to fight against those rumours inside Russia. The concept of krysha presupposed that it looked like the whole thing belonged to Berezovsky one way or another, in different shapes or forms. That was the whole point of this arrangement. He was the ice-breaker who removed all problems, resolved all problems, and that's what he was being paid for.

- Q. So, so far we have you saying that we have a contract which doesn't mean what it says when it refers to who the parties are to this contract and we have you saying that the press were deliberately misled about who were the acquirers of the aluminium assets. Is that right?
- A. No, this is not right. I'm not saying that this was being done deliberately. We used very clear, very thought-out formulations, without mentioning any names. We have never misled the press, from what I remember. But the press conferences were organised with a specific purpose in mind, not just like that.
- Q. Mr Abramovich, your press spokesman said, talking about who acquired the assets -- and this is in the Moscow Times article:

"A group of Sibneft shareholders bought controlling stakes in the plants... It is not Sibneft itself, but some of its shareholders."

How do you say that that is not misleading the press, if what you say is true?

- A. This newspaper -- and I'm speaking from memory only -- it's all in English and to be more precise and more clear in my discussions, I would need to read this until the very end.

From what I recall, there was a press conference and it was said at the press conference that it was not Sibneft -- it was very important not to cause a collapse on the market -- that it was not Sibneft, it was a group of shareholders in Sibneft who purchased shares in some aluminium assets, and it specifically, explicitly mentioned that Mr Berezovsky is not a shareholder in Sibneft.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Rabinowitz, at the time of the acquisition of the aluminium shares, the actual registered holder of the shares were a number of Mr Abramovich's companies; is that right?

MR RABINOWITZ: We'll come to look at that in due course. There was a holding structure which was put in place just before this but none of those were involved in the acquisition of the aluminium assets, if I could put it that way. None of the companies involved in holding the Sibneft shares were involved in the aluminium assets.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right.

MR RABINOWITZ: Now, Mr Abramovich, I can take you to another press article by a Russian journalist who was plainly also told that it was an acquisition by Sibneft, which was owned by you and your business partners. But rather than taking you through all of these articles, can I instead just take you to one at page 51 of the same bundle H(A)18/51. It is another article but it's just another source.

Now, this is an article which appeared in the American Metal Market publication on 18 February 2000, so almost immediately after you'd made the agreement. It's entitled "Russian aluminium ownership shifts". And perhaps I can just read the opening paragraph -- perhaps I can get it translated to you; I'm sure that's a more efficient way of doing it.

THE INTERPRETER: The first paragraph?

MR RABINOWITZ: The first and third paragraphs in particular. (Pause)

So the article starts off by saying that:

"Three Russian aluminium producers have been bought up in less than a week by [it says] oil giant Sibneft..."

And it talks about this looking like:

"... another power play involving two of the [country's] most powerful businessmen... [Mr Berezovsky and yourself]."

The third paragraph, which is the one I'm particularly interested in, you see there a reference to what Mr Bosov had been saying:

"Dmitry Bosov, spokesman for Lev and Mikhail Chyorny... and until recently [one of the] leading figures at Trans World Group, confirmed that [Trans-World Group] had transferred its controlling stakes in the Krasnoyarsk and Bratsk aluminium plants to Sibneft shareholders."

Okay?

Now, Mr Bosov was one of the parties to the 10 February 2000 master agreement that we've looked at; that's right, isn't it?

A. Yes, I remember that. Could I offer a comment with regard to those two paragraphs?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, please do.

A. There is a mistake in the first paragraph because Sibneft was not taking part in the purchase. In the second paragraph there is a second mistake because Chernoi was not selling anything. So it's a comment of rumours that were making the rounds on the market at that time.

MR RABINOWITZ: But what it also is, Mr Abramovich, is a journalist who has been speaking to Mr Bosov, who was, as you accept, one of the parties to the agreement that you made in February 2000; yes?

A. I have major doubts that this journalist spoke with Mr Bosov, I mean the journalist who wrote this article in this newspaper. He is making reference to rumours. There is a very low probability that Mr Bosov actually spoke with the journalist who works for this highly regarded media outlet, the more so since Bosov knew who was the seller: he did not work with Mikhail Chernoi, he spoke with Lev Chernoi. Why on earth would he have been making reference to someone who was on the other side of the barricades, as it were?

Q. So you're suggesting this journalist has just made this up, are you, made up this conversation?

A. What I want to say is that the journalist did not look into all the details of this particular matter.

Q. Mr Bosov was closely involved in the negotiations which led to the sale in February 2000 and, as such, you would presumably accept that you might expect him to have a good idea of the buyers were, that's to say who he was selling to; correct?

A. Well, if I were in his shoes, I wouldn't really -- it wouldn't really matter to me who was buying. Whoever is paying the money is the buyer; it doesn't make any difference. But if you are saying that Bosov was well aware of this, then I can agree with this. He did attend the negotiations and I even think that there is a handwritten document here and this is his handwriting, if I'm not mistaken.

Q. You say that it wouldn't matter who the buyer was. Why do you say it wouldn't matter who the buyer was?

A. What I'm saying is that if I were to put myself in the seller's shoes, I wouldn't mind who the buyer is as long as they pay up and as long as they pay the money on time. That's it.

I'm just trying to offer you a comment regarding what Mr Berezovsky was saying: that it was important to sell the assets here to a good buyer. I mean, you are not selling a kitten, whereby it's important that he gets into good hands; it's aluminium assets and you don't really care who gets the assets.

Q. Are you sure that's your evidence, that you don't really care who you are selling assets to or dealing with, in a situation where you're dealing with aluminium as opposed to kittens? That's your evidence, is it?

A. I wouldn't really care. I mean, if I had to buy -- sorry, sell oil assets or aluminium assets and then I would have nothing to do with this any longer, then

I wouldn't care. There are two parties: one sells, the other buys. You got your money and that's the end of it.

Q. Now, Mr Bosov is in fact a person who you were planning to call to give evidence in these proceedings, is he not?

A. Yes, you are right.

Q. And do you say that he's a person who is likely to tell the truth about matters that he's talking about?

A. Well, I do hope that he would have told all the truth but it's not really up to me to determine. I would have expected that and I would have counted on that.

Q. Can I ask you, please, to go to bundle H(A)96, page 226.001 in Russian H(A)96/226.001 and page 226.001T in the English H(A)96/226.001T.

Now, you I hope have in front of you, Mr Abramovich, another interview given by Mr Bosov to Vedomosti journalist Maria Rozhkova. Do you have that?

A. Yes, I've read this.

Q. And this interview was given in January 2008; do you see that?

A. Yes, I can see that.

Q. Can I ask you to go over two pages to page 226.003 in the Russian H(A)97/226.003 and 003T in the English H(A)97/226.003T. Do you see a heading halfway down that page, "- In 2000" -- it's not a heading, it's in bold:

"- In 2000, Lev Cherny and the Rubens decided to sell their shares in alluvium factories. For how much? And why to Abramovich? Berezovsky claims that he was also among the buyers."

Do you see that?

- A. Unfortunately I did not. I did not find this particular paragraph. Could you direct me to that paragraph?
- Q. It should be in the translation.

What Mr Bosov says, in answer to the question from Rozhkova, is this:

"At some point, Lev Cherny and David said, 'We're selling up and getting out of the business.' Alfa and Renova conducted negotiations with us. But eventually the shares were sold to Abramovich and Berezovsky (signed on their behalf by Patarkatsishvili). They signed the deal as one entity. A week later, in early February, they met for the first time in Abramovich's Sibneft office and signed the primary document. It was a $550 million transaction."

It's pretty clear from this, isn't it, Mr Abramovich, that Mr Bosov is yet a further person who appeared to think that there was more than one purchaser of the aluminium assets and that the purchasers included

Mr Abramovich and Mr Berezovsky? But you say he's wrong about this, do you?

A. What I want to say is that he's wrong about this and I would like to clarify, if I may.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: You may.

A. This article discusses Bosov's vision of what had happened in 2000. Number one: it makes a reference to some internet assets that Berezovsky and Bosov were partners in, and I was not aware of this, by the way, with regard to the information that we had been partners everywhere, which is wrong.

Now, also Bosov's concept, something that he told me about, is that Badri, he owed him a commission for this and every reference to Berezovsky will mean that the -- I don't remember what the legal term is -- the term during which you can bring the action was that if he each time makes reference that he's sold it to Berezovsky, that sooner or later he will be able to bring an action based on that cause of action, even though Mr Bosov knew very well that his agreement had been with Patarkatsishvili, not with Berezovsky, so far as I know.

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Abramovich, I just want to be sure

I understand your evidence. You're saying that Mr Bosov deliberately lied in order to create a basis for a claim against Mr Berezovsky, are you?

- A. Mr Bosov believed, the way he explained it to me -- so his concept was, and I believed him, I trusted him, his concept was that Badri owed him some money for the original aluminium transaction and any reference to Berezovsky in the press will mean an automatic -- will automatically mean that it will cover Berezovsky as well.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Can you slow down.

Go on.

- A. Put it differently: he was trying to extend the period of limitation. Basically he tried to extend the period during which he would still be in a position to bring an action.

MR RABINOWITZ: But what you are saying is, in effect, that Mr Bosov was deliberately lying about Mr Berezovsky's involvement in order to enable him to bring an action against Mr Berezovsky. Is that your evidence?

- A. What I want to say is that there is a possibility that Mr Bosov was deliberately misleading a journalist, which does not mean that I believe that he's a liar. I did hope that he would tell the court all the truth.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Can I just be clear I understand what you're saying.

Bosov's concept was that Badri owed Bosov money for the aluminium transaction by way of some percentage of Badri's commission or by way of some payment for the shares or what? What was the nature of the money that Badri owed Bosov?

- A. Judging from what Bosov said, Badri had owed him money for the original aluminium assets. Bosov talked Lev Chernoi into selling Bratsk and that's why this smelter transaction happened. So originally he did want to work in that company but after we rejected that possibility, he agreed with Badri that he would make some money out of this transaction. There are different rumours to the effect that it was somewhere in the region of 20 to 30 per cent but I cannot affirm that, I cannot assert that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. So what was the point of Bosov telling this story to the press? Explain to me what you say Bosov told you about that.

- A. He believed that by making reference to this in the press, he extended his period of limitation.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Who extended his period of limitation? Bosov did?

- A. Yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you.

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Abramovich, in the answer that you just gave to my Lady, you said that Bosov's concept was -- sorry -- that Badri owed him money for the original aluminium assets. You said:

"Bosov talked Lev Chernoi into selling Bratsk and that's why the smelter transaction happened. So..."

And then you've carried on:

"... he agreed with Badri that he would make some money out of this transaction."

Why should Badri have to pay Mr Bosov if, as you say, Mr Patarkatsishvili had no interest whatsoever in the aluminium assets?

A. I already made reference to this. We agreed with Badri that I would pay him a commission and he promised part of his commission to Bosov. I don't know what portion of this was discussed, but there was definitely some discussion and some arrangement between them.

Q. You see, I suggest to you that that's completely untrue but we will come and deal with that in due course.

The reason that this payment was being made, if there was an arrangement under which Mr Bosov would be entitled to claim it from Mr Patarkatsishvili, was because Mr Patarkatsishvili was one of the people who had acquired those assets, Mr Abramovich, and Mr Bosov apparently felt that he was instrumental in bringing about that transaction. That's right, isn't it?

A. Could I ask you to split this up into two questions, if

I may.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Rabinowitz --

THE WITNESS: I don't recall which question I'm expected to answer, which of the two.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: -- I think it's rather a long question. Aren't you just making a comment, Mr Rabinowitz? If you've got a specific further question beyond what you've already put to the witness --

MR RABINOWITZ: I'll ask a different question.

It's right, isn't it, that Mr Bosov was suing Mr Berezovsky for commission arising out of the sale of the aluminium assets in February 2000, or at least he's planning to? Is that right?

A. To be honest with you, I'm not aware of that.

Q. Mr Abramovich, what I don't understand is this: why do you say that Mr Bosov could have thought that he could extend time for a claim against Mr Patarkatsishvili by mentioning Mr Berezovsky's name as one of the acquirers?

A. I am not sure I can answer that question. I just don't know.

Q. Can I ask you to go next to bundle H(A)39, page 38, please H(A)39/38. Again, we don't have this in Russian.

Now, this is a document, as you see, it is headed "Declaration" and it was signed by Mr Anisimov on 25 October 2001; you can see that at the bottom. And just so you know what this is, it's a copy of Mr Anisimov's declaration made in support of an application he was making for a visa to visit the United States.

I take it you won't suggest that Mr Anisimov was likely to have put forward false information to the US immigration authorities in applying for a visa; or would you?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, how can he tell until he's seen what information you're taking him to?

MR RABINOWITZ: Well, as a general concept.

Is Mr Anisimov the sort of person who would lie to immigration officials?

A. Why are you asking me?

Q. Well, what's your view? Do you have a view about Mr Anisimov's honesty? Is he the sort of person who would lie to US immigration authorities or seek to mislead them?

A. I hope he's not.

Q. Good answer.

Now, if I read the first part of this declaration to you, Mr Abramovich, it can be translated for you. He says:

"I..."

Or perhaps it can just be translated for you straightaway. What I want to focus on is in particular where he lists out the assets. You see at point 4 he says:

"I state categorically that last year I have sold all of my shares in:

"Krasnoyarsk Aluminium Plant [and]

"Krasnoyarsk Power Station"

And do you see that he says that -- well, he identifies who he's sold them to:

"Sold to [the] shareholders of Sibneft in February 2000."

Now, are you saying that Mr Anisimov also didn't know who he was selling his assets to, or was he also simply trying to mislead someone as to who he sold these assets to?

- A. It's hard for me to comment. He would be better off explaining this. There are several versions, several possible theories here, and if it would assist the court, I could try and set those out.
- Q. Please do so.
- A. Well, is there a possibility that Anisimov was thinking that there were more than one shareholders in Sibneft? The answer is: yes, he could have thought so. That does not necessarily mean that he believes that Berezovsky was a shareholder. Now, could he believe that Patarkatsishvili was a shareholder in Sibneft? Yes, he could have thought so. This would have been his speculation, his supposition. But I assure you that no one knew for sure who the shareholder in Sibneft was and I was trying to keep that information as closed as possible.

So we disclosed only what we had to disclose, we did not provide any information over and above that, and we did that for a reason -- I'm sorry, I did that for a reason.

Q. Okay. Mr Abramovich, I think -- were you in court when Mr Reuben gave his evidence last week, on Friday 28 October? I think perhaps you weren't.

A. No, no, I was not there.

Q. Mr Reuben's evidence was that he understood the purchasers of the aluminium assets to be the Sibneft people and in particular that the purchasers included Mr Patarkatsishvili and his partners, whom Mr Reuben assumed to be Mr Berezovsky and yourself.

That, my Lady, for the transcript, was on Day 15, page 17, line 114, to Day 15, page 21, line 11.

Do you say also that Mr Reuben's understanding that Mr Patarkatsishvili was one of the purchasers, and so was Mr Berezovsky as his partner, is also wrong?

A. Could I impose on you to make it either shorter or slower, please.

Q. I'll make it slower.

Do you say that Mr Reuben's understanding, which was that Mr Patarkatsishvili was one of the purchasers and that so was Mr Berezovsky as his partner, is also wrong?

A. With respect to my understanding, I don't think I ever met with Mr Reuben; however, I cannot affirm that with certainty. Therefore his understanding is not something that I could provide any comment on.

The impression on the market was that Berezovsky owes everything: Avtovaz, Logovaz, Aeroflot, ORT, Transaero, and Sibneft and aluminium and everything; everything was owned by Berezovsky. Therefore, whether or not Reuben could have formed the impression in his own mind that Berezovsky was the numero uno; yes, he could. But, if I understand correctly, he never asked for any confirmation of that or any clarifications with that regard.

Q. Okay. Can I ask you, please, to go to bundle H(A)92 at page 46.001 H(A)92/46.001. Again, let me tell you what we are looking at. These are the typed-up notes made by James Lankshear, an English solicitor, of a meeting that he attended with Mr Patarkatsishvili which took place on 8 December 2005.

What I am particularly interested in showing you, Mr Abramovich, is -- if I can identify them for the translator, she can read this to you -- under the heading "Meeting", if you read those two paragraphs, please. (Pause)

So, Mr Abramovich, what Mr Patarkatsishvili is recorded as saying in December 2005 is that the aluminium assets were acquired by the "core shareholders of Sibneft". Do you see that?

A. I'd rather say that I can hear: it was translated to me.

Q. I'm sorry, you hear that. That's very precise.

We can also see that Mr Patarkatsishvili has explained to the English solicitors what he meant by that phrase: that the "core shareholders of Sibneft" who acquired these assets, the aluminium assets, in February 2000 was a reference to himself, yourself and Mr Berezovsky. That's what he's recorded as telling the solicitor. Do you see that?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, what's the question?

MR RABINOWITZ: I just want to make sure he's got...

I haven't asked the question yet; I just want to make sure you've got that.

Do you say that Mr Patarkatsishvili was lying about this to his solicitors, Mr Abramovich?

A. I do not want to say that Badri was lying to his solicitors. He was setting out the situation as it was set out in the documents. The payment to Badri for his services was made by us through shares and that was the only way to be able to explain that.

On the other hand, it would have been very difficult to try and contradict what has already been recorded on paper, in documents; the more so since the payment for krysha -- I mean, it's very difficult to -- at that time it was very difficult to explain to an English solicitor what the concept of krysha was, or rather it would have been very difficult to explain what that concept means to an English lawyer.

Have I answered your question? I -- it looks to me like you did not understand my answer.

Q. It doesn't matter what I think about it.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, I understand your answer.

MR RABINOWITZ: In effect what Mr Patarkatsishvili was saying to the solicitors was that he and Mr Berezovsky were core shareholders in Sibneft. Are you saying that he was misleading them about that or not?

A. There is nothing I can say on this. I remember that Dr Nosova, I think, said that she had the impression that that was the case, that there are certain things that he withheld. But I cannot assert that, I cannot affirm this with certainty, because I did not attend the meeting.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Rabinowitz, I think there's a limit to the utility of cross-examination on somebody else's notes.

MR RABINOWITZ: If my Lady is not assisted by that --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, well, you've made the point, you've put the question.

MR RABINOWITZ: You've got the point. That was the last of these looks at what other people involved in the transaction thought.

Mr Abramovich, your case, as I understand it -- but tell me if I'm wrong -- is that very shortly after the acquisition of the aluminium assets you started to discuss with Mr Deripaska the possibility of merging your aluminium assets with his. Is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. And you also say that following a chance meeting in the White House in Moscow, that it took yourself and Mr Deripaska just one day in early March 2000 to agree the terms of the merger. Is that correct?

A. Well, that is my recollection, yes.

Q. And is it your case that on this occasion -- Mr Shvidler puts this around 4 or 5 March 2000 -- you and Mr Shvidler met with Mr Deripaska and Mr Bulygin first at the Baltschug Kempinski Hotel in Moscow and then at your house in Sareevo Village near Moscow?

A. Yes.

Q. And do you recall that meeting?

A. In general, yes, I do recall that.

Q. Well, how clear do you say your memory is of this, Mr Abramovich?

A. Well, it depends on the extent of detail. I remember what we were talking about but I don't think that I would be able to go into the details. Remember, I told you that I'm not a person of detail. I'm more of a person of detail than Mr Berezovsky, but I'm not much of a person of detail in the grander scheme of things.

Q. And do you say that you reached agreement with Mr Deripaska on all the key terms of your merger at this meeting?

A. No.

Q. Can you look at paragraph 164 of your third witness statement. It's E1, tab 3, page 84 E1/03/84 and in the Russian at page 185 E1/03/185. You see, Mr Abramovich, it's your own evidence. You say here:

"Having reached an agreement with Mr Deripaska on all key terms of our merger..."

Why did you deny, when I asked whether you reached agreement with Mr Deripaska on all key terms, why did you deny that that is what had happened at that meeting?

- A. I wanted to continue but then I was cut off, the microphone was cut off, and so I did not have an opportunity to develop my thought.

We had not agreed on all the details. We did agree, but not on all the details. And if I have leave of the court, I can explain what we agreed upon and what we agreed upon later.

- Q. We'll get to what you did and didn't agree upon in due course. I'm trying to understand why, when I suggested to you that you'd agreed on all key terms, you were not prepared to accept that. Let's move on.

Now, given the significance of the merger transaction, Mr Deripaska was anxious to get the key terms memorialised straightaway; do you agree with that?

I can tell you, if this assists, that this is Mr Bulygin's evidence. I take it you wouldn't disagree with what Mr Bulygin says about this?

- A. Well, I do hope that Mr Bulygin will give evidence and so he can tell you about this himself. But I think that the main parameters were agreed upon, the main, the principal parameters. The question is what "principal" means.

Am I expected to answer your first question because I think you asked me two questions and I'm not exactly sure which of the two we are now discussing.

Q. Well, let me repeat what I think you call the first question.

Given the significance of the merger transaction, Mr Deripaska was anxious to get those key terms memorialised straightaway; do you agree?

A. Well, we need to agree on the terminology. What is "this transaction"? If "this transaction" is understood to mean all the Siberian assets, then yes. We -- there were problematic assets and we had to describe those problematic assets in order for us to be able to immediately start our work.

Q. According to Mr Bulygin, he had a laptop with him and once you had all returned to your home, you all went back over all the terms of the agreement again and, as you did so, he memorialised your agreement as a preliminary agreement on his laptop in Russian.

Do you agree with that?

A. I'm sorry. When you said "returned to your home", when was that? I think that part of it he typed up on his computer when we were at Kempinski, but I'm not sure that I can affirm that.

Q. But you wouldn't disagree with his evidence, if that is his evidence; is that right?

A. I will not disagree, but I don't think that I can comment on this.

Q. Mr Bulygin also says that after memorialising your agreement on his laptop, it was then printed out and executed then and there. Again, can we take it that you don't dispute that, Mr Abramovich?

A. The fact that it was printed off and executed, I would not disagree with that, I'm not disputing that, no.

Q. Now, the impression that Mr Bulygin gives is that this making of the preliminary agreement was an exercise carried out by him with some care to ensure that it was an accurate record of what was agreed, given Mr Deripaska's view about the significance of the agreement.

Can I perhaps just show you what he says about this and then give you an opportunity to comment. We'll find Mr Bulygin's evidence at E4, tab 1 -- again it's only in English -- paragraph 5. I wonder if I can get the translator to read paragraph -- sorry, paragraph 11 on page 5 E4/01/5. It's paragraph 11 on page 5, please.

(Pause)

A. Yes, I have been translated the relevant section.

Q. Mr Bulygin is someone who you are calling as your witness, Mr Abramovich. Can we take it that you do not dispute the evidence that I've just shown you that he gives or will give?

- A. I do call him as a witness. Now, this evidence is his evidence. I'm not disputing this, but I tend to agree somewhat more with my own witness statement. He really is a very honest person. Unfortunately he's very frail and he may not be able to make it to London, but I do hope that he will come and he will give evidence.
- Q. How does your recollection of what happened in March 2000 differ from Mr Bulygin's recollection of what happened in March 2000 as we see recorded here?
- A. If I understood the translation correctly, what he's saying is that he was typing on his computer and then he had that text printed off. I believe that he had printed it off in my house.
- Q. I'm not sure he's saying anything different to that. I think he's saying he typed it at your house, printed it off at your house and it was signed then and there.
- A. Yes, but I -- again, it's very difficult to recall the oral translation, but I think it also says that we parted at some point in time, we went each our own way.
- Q. He doesn't say that. I think where perhaps the misunderstanding comes is he explains that you left the hotel and you went to your house, but I don't think he is saying you went your own way.

But subject to that point, you wouldn't disagree with what he says?

- A. I'm not disputing this. Unless we go into all the details, I'm not disputing this.
- Q. Mr Bulygin also says that the preliminary agreement was signed by "both principals", by which I take him to mean yourself and Mr Deripaska, and that it was witnessed by him. Do you recall that?
- A. I think Mr Shvidler signed the contract or, sorry, the agreement from my side.
- Q. Why would Mr Shvidler sign as principal, Mr Abramovich, if, as you say, you and you alone were the only shareholder, the only person with an interest in these assets?
- A. Mr Shvidler was in charge of this transaction, he was negotiating this transaction, and so I played a very passive role there. My task was to make sure that the transaction did happen and that was about it.
- Mr Shvidler usually is a very tough negotiator, Mr Deripaska is also a rather tough person so far as negotiations are concerned, and I did not want to see this transaction unravel before it was signed, even though sometimes we were on the verge of seeing it collapse.
- Q. Can we look at this agreement that you made then. It's at H(A)16, page 47 H(A)16/47, English version at 47T H(A)16/47T.

Now, one sees, Mr Abramovich, that the first part of the preliminary agreement says:

"Mr RA Abramovich, hereinafter referred to as 'Party 1', and Mr OV Deripaska, hereinafter referred to as 'Party 2' (together, the 'Parties'), have concluded this Preliminary Agreement on the following..."

Then there are a series of clauses set out.

Can I ask you, please, to look, if you would, at clause 4.1 at page 48 H(A)16/48, 48T in the translation H(A)16/48T. So:

"Parties 1 and 2 warrant that, together with their partners, (not including TWG or any companies and or individuals related thereto or affiliated therewith)" --

THE INTERPRETER: I'm so sorry, my Lady, could I ask to be provided with the Russian text because otherwise I may be distorting the actual Russian original.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, he should be provided with the Russian text.

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Abramovich actually has the Russian text in front of him.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Could he be taken to the page, please?

MR RABINOWITZ: Clause 4.1.

You've read 4.1, Mr Abramovich?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Are you there now, Mr --

MR SUMPTION: I think it's the translator who is asking for it.

MR RABINOWITZ: Do you have the Russian text, translator, at page 48?

THE INTERPRETER: Mr Rabinowitz, what I have is only what you have on Magnum. I do not have any hard copies.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Could he be provided, please, with the Russian version of the agreement.

MR SUMPTION: We are doing that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you very much.

It's page 48 in tab 16; is that right?

MR RABINOWITZ: Correct. Bundle 16, page 48.

THE INTERPRETER: I'm sorry, I cannot find it.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Could somebody please help him find the correct page.

MR RABINOWITZ: It comes before the translation, so if you've got to 47T, you've gone too far. It's the fourth page of the bundle, I think is the start of the --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Fourth page of the bundle, I think.

MR RABINOWITZ: All right. Mr Abramovich has the document in front of him in Russian.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right, the translator has it now.

MR RABINOWITZ: So clause 4.1 contains a warranty by each of you and Mr Deripaska that, together with your partners -- each of you, together with your partners, own the assets -- do you see that? -- which are the subject matter of this contract.

So can you tell me this: who did you understand to be Mr Deripaska's partners who he was warranting owned the assets together with himself?

A. First, if I may, I'd like to give you some background on the creation of this document and the extent to which I was involved in this and then I would like to provide a comment, if I may.

Q. I would prefer you to answer the question first and then make comments about it afterwards, if that's okay.

Could you tell us: who, together with Mr Deripaska, do you say was giving you a warranty as to the ownership of the assets which were the subject matter of this contract?

A. This contract was written precisely to make sure that we did not need other people's warranties and if you look at the substance of it, I think he was contributing 36 per cent of the Nikolaevsky Alumina Plant and Mr Yaroslavsky I think was Deripaska's partner there.

Now, I think I've answered your question. Could I provide a comment with regard to the background --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, provide a comment.

A. -- behind this document?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, provide a comment.

A. We spent time negotiating this document between 5.00 pm and I think 5.00 in the morning. After that, we moved, we moved to my place, to my house in the village of Sareevo. Before that, there was a full work day. By the time we executed the contract, I was not able to understand what was really going on; I was really a vegetable, I could have signed off on anything at that time.

But Mr Deripaska was very insistent, he was very keen to finalise this, and so there was no way we could have given this to the lawyers for their review. He was very keen to finalise this. For some reason, Mr Deripaska did not trust us at the early stage.

So that's the way it happened. Once again, I must say that I did not read this document but I'm more than happy to answer questions.

MR RABINOWITZ: Presumably Mr Shvidler, who was there, did read this document?

A. Mr Shvidler definitely read this document and so he can provide more clarity on his comments. I can only speculate and I can set out my own understanding, whereas he will be able to tell you exactly how it happened.

Q. Just let's be clear about this, Mr Abramovich. You are saying that Mr Shvidler, who would have read carefully this contract and signed it, signed this contract which plainly suggests that you had partners in this transaction, as did Mr Deripaska.

Are you saying that the contract is wrong to suggest that you have partners? Is that your evidence?

- A. No, this is not what I want to say. What I want to say is I did not read this document so it's very difficult for me to comment on this because I would only be speculating. I can speculate if need be, but I cannot give you a firm answer even though I do have some knowledge about this.

Now, if I have to answer your question as to whether I did see Mr Shvidler reading this: yes, I did.

- Q. Right. So what I want to ask you is whether it is your evidence that the contract is wrong to suggest that you had partners. It's not asking you to speculate. You can either say, "It is wrong", or, "It isn't wrong, because I had partners".

- A. I did not have partners. That's not the point.

The point is what -- the assets are being listed here. I cannot answer your question which you are now asking me. I did not have questions -- I'm sorry, I did not have partners. But the assets which are listed here do not belong to me; they're for the -- they're people for whom I was responsible. I was responsible for making sure that they contribute this and in the eyes of Deripaska I was responsible for this and in his eyes therefore those people were my partners. Does that explain the position?

Mr Deripaska was against TWG taking part on this; all the rest was not of interest to him. He was not interested in anything apart from that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Will you choose your moment?

MR RABINOWITZ: My Lady, now is as good as any. We will come back to this.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well. I'll sit again at 2.05.

(1.00 pm)

(The short adjournment)

(2.05 pm)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Rabinowitz, I've caused the heating to be turned down, so if it gets chilly, that's why.

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Abramovich, just before we took the break and at [draft] page 76 of the transcript, you said in answer to a question, and these were your words:

"But the assets which are listed here do not belong to me; they're for the -- they're people for whom I was responsible. I was responsible for making sure that they contribute this and in the eyes of Deripaska I was responsible for this and in his eyes therefore these people were my partners."

To whom were you referring, Mr Abramovich?

- A. I already mentioned that it's difficult for me to comment because I hadn't read it. I'm trying to explain to you Deripaska's view today as to what happened then. So my opinion, I'm just trying to explain, but I will continue to try and explain.

So here there is -- NkAZ is featured, Novokuznetsk Aluminium Smelter. At that time we hadn't acquired it yet. Further on, later, we acquired it together. And we had some documents with Mr Zhivilo, to whom this plant belonged, but the deal hadn't happened yet, but it was our responsibility to add this plant to this deal.

Also it talks about Achinsk Alumina Plant. In the way it's described here, 49 per cent of shares, it could not have worked because the second part of this alumina plant plus the -- it was under bankruptcy procedures as I've already said. The rest belonged to Mr Fridman and Mr Fridman controlled the liquidator and the tender manager. Without Mr Fridman, this enterprise could not have operated and Krasnoyarsk could not have operated. But this is my guess. At that time I had not read this document.

Once again I'm saying that the most important thing for Deripaska was for TWG not to feature there and if I remember correctly the documents that were signed between us and Mr Chernoi, the documents had a line which said: in case, in the event of, or there was a reference that they could change certain provisions or rejoin the deal if we don't pay out by a certain time. I'm not convinced, but this is the kind of impression I have.

And, if I may, I'll add: Mr Fridman --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, just -- I think that's enough, Mr Abramovich. Okay?

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Abramovich, that's the first time that you have anywhere made any suggestion of that sort of arrangement being in the background to this contract, isn't it?

A. This is the first time that I'm giving evidence on this point. I'm just giving you my vision today as to what was happening then. At that time I didn't read the contract -- I didn't read the contract and I didn't think about it.

Q. I suggest to you, Mr Abramovich, that the answer is very much more straightforward in terms of who your partners were: they were in fact Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili, were they not?

A. It's not so.

Q. Perhaps I can ask you to go to bundle E6, tab 1, where we have the Le Bourget transcript, to see if that assists on this question. I will give you box number references because I know you want to follow in more than one bundle: you want to be in E7 as well.

Can you go, please, to box 497 on page 172 of bundle E6 E6/01/172.

MR SUMPTION: The witness should have E7, I presume.

MR RABINOWITZ: He has E7.

Now, Mr Abramovich, we can see at box 497 the beginning of a short exchange between yourself and Mr Berezovsky about registering shares in the aluminium assets into Mr Berezovsky's name and we know that that's what this was about because you, in your commentary to box 497, say that that is what Mr Berezovsky was talking about. Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. And then, if we just follow the conversation, Mr Berezovsky says, because there has been a discussion about Sibneft:

"The same will have to be done with Aluminium."

That is to say, register the shares in his name.

You say:

"What do you mean by 'the same'?"

Mr Berezovsky says:

"With Aluminium, need (to do the same)."

And you say:

"You cannot do anything with Aluminium, that's for sure."

Mr Berezovsky says:

"Why not?"

And you say:

"We only hold 50 per cent there, so the other party has to agree."

Just pausing there, Mr Abramovich, the reference to "Aluminium" here is, of course, a reference to Rusal, is it not?

A. I have to answer "yes" or "no" or can I comment?

Q. If you could for the moment just answer "yes" or "no", please.

A. This is a reference to Rusal. May I comment now?

Q. I'd rather just sort of get to the main part of the question. At the moment I'm just trying to --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: You'll have an opportunity in a moment to comment, Mr Abramovich.

MR RABINOWITZ: So the reference to "Aluminium" is to Rusal and the reference to "the other party" that you mention when you say, "We only hold 50 per cent there, so the other party has to agree", that is a reference, is it, to Mr Deripaska?

A. Yes, the reference to "the other party" is a reference to Mr Deripaska.

Q. And then if we just follow the conversation through,
Mr Berezovsky seems to say:

"So what?"

You then say:

"And they will demand the same, will demand the same. Tax affairs haven't been regulated yet for Aluminium, so there is no point in applying this [scheme] there. It would significantly reduce income. Besides, you will have to wait in line to receive dividends."

Mr Berezovsky says:

"Fine, what I'm saying is... in any case, the time will come, finally..."

And you say:

"... with Aluminium it is very simple. If we go legal, they would have to do the same. They can't have one half legalised, and the other half -- not."

Again, just pausing there, in your commentary to box 506 you point out that you were explaining here that:

"... [a] problem with this scheme would be that all those providing protection... to Mr Deripaska would also insist on becoming shareholders..."

That's what your commentary says, does it not?

THE INTERPRETER: I'm ready.

A. It's difficult for me to comment. Which question is it that I need to answer? Or maybe there hasn't been an answer yet -- a question yet.

MR RABINOWITZ: We're just going through the course of the conversation and I want to make sure that when I say that this is what the conversation was, I'm not putting it to you incorrectly, and then we'll come to some questions.

Now, the conversation then continues. Mr Berezovsky says:

"I agree, so..."

And you then say:

"(Then they) will all appear: Bykov, Misha, Anton, and Aksyon, and Oleg Deripaska and his... companies, nobody would even talk..."

And then it's not clear whether it's "to them", "to it", "to us":

"... about it. You don't agree with this, do you?"

[That] is what it says there.

And then we see that Mr Berezovsky has tried to identify the names that are referred to here and you've agreed with him. And what you've agreed -- is this right -- Mr Bykov is a reference to Mr Anatoly Bykov; that's correct, isn't it?

A. What is the question? I didn't have the opportunity to answer the previous question, so I've sort of lost you. I've lost you. I wanted to comment but I felt that the mic was switched off.

Q. You will get plenty of chance to comment. At the moment we are just trying to confirm who these people are that are being referred to.

"Bykov" is a reference to Mr Anatoly Bykov; correct or not correct?

A. Yes, "Bykov" is Anatoly Bykov, yes.

Q. And "Misha" is a reference to Mr Michael Chernoi; is that correct?

A. Yes, "Misha" is Mikhail Chernoi.

Q. "Anton" is a reference to -- is that Anton Malevsky?

A. I can't confirm because at that time I didn't know his surname. But once these proceedings started, I read the press, the papers, and everybody thinks that's the person and so I have to agree. But I've never met him before, so I didn't know his surname.

And the fourth protagonist is unknown to me; I've only ever heard his nickname.

Q. That's right.

Can we agree at least about this: namely that at the time of your preliminary agreement in March 2000 you would have been aware that Mr Deripaska had an association of some kind with these individuals?

A. What is the question I need to answer? Just the last question or should I comment everything?

Q. No, just --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, just answer the last question, please.

A. I had a feeling that Mr Deripaska had to pay out to various people but I didn't know for sure to whom.

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Abramovich, that wasn't in fact the question. The question was: at the time of your preliminary agreement in March 2000 you would have been aware that Mr Deripaska had an association of some kind with these individuals; is that correct?

A. Association? I had a suspicion that not everything was smooth and clear in the aluminium industry but I can't say that I was convinced that he had association with these people. I had a feeling that he was forced to pay to someone, given the events that were taking place in the aluminium industry. It was impossible to operate in the aluminium industry without krysha, without physical protection, very real physical protection.

Q. By the time you got to December 2000 it is clear, I suggest, from this transcript that you were very clear Mr Deripaska had an association with these people. That's right, isn't it?

A. I just gave here my assumptions.

- Q. You're suggesting, are you, that these names were just assumptions rather than matters within your own knowledge?
- A. Apart from Mr Chernoi, I've never met any one of them. I don't know who they are. I've just heard that these are some kind of people who were in the trade unions who were keeping peace in the streets, but I've never met with them and I can't even tell you whether Mr Deripaska had relationships with them or not. This was my assumption.
- Q. Mr Abramovich, the course of this conversation has Mr Berezovsky saying that he wants the Rusal assets to appear in his name. Your response to this is to say, "Well, we're only 50 per cent of this. If we do this, the other side, Mr Deripaska, will want to do this and that will mean that these people also will want to appear to be shown as shareholders".

This is more than you making assumptions about their existence. This is you --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Too many questions, Mr Rabinowitz.

Mr Abramovich, you've heard what Mr Rabinowitz has just put to you. Comment now, please, if you would like to. Do you agree that this is Mr Berezovsky saying he wants to have the Rusal assets to appear in his name and you saying in reply, "We can't do that because we're only 50 per cent of this and the other side, Mr Deripaska, will want to have his colleagues as shareholders as well"?

A. I don't agree with this statement. May I comment?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, you may comment now.

A. The conversation transcribed there, the discussion in Le Bourget, was devoted to legalising income, payments. Mr Berezovsky found himself abroad, he didn't have money to live on. Prior to that, 300 million or 305 million were paid, but the most important problem was that he could not have this cash transferred to the bank so he could spend it.

The whole conversation, this whole conversation deals with legalising income. Income had to be transferred. We kept discussing what should be done for Mr Berezovsky to receive the cash. As to this reference to 50 per cent and why we couldn't do it through Russian Aluminium, through Rusal, is that I could not bring my part of the income to the head company, to the holding company; I needed Oleg Deripaska's agreement to that. That's number one. And then the reference to Chernoi, to Bykov, to Anton, to Aksyon, yes, there is a reference to them.

The problem with legalising income was the problem plaguing many people. If we started to pay money through Rusal to people like that, if we would transfer income to the holding company or to the lead company and start legalising this income, I thought that most probably those other people would also want to have their income paid to them legally. Then Rusal would turn into nothing, it would have no future. But again, at that point that was my assumption.

If I may, if I may --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, no, thank you.

Yes, Mr Rabinowitz, put your next question please.

MR RABINOWITZ: You see, Mr Abramovich, what I would suggest to you is in fact a fairly straightforward explanation both for the clause in the preliminary agreement and this exchange that you had with Mr Berezovsky at Le Bourget and it is this: both you and Mr Deripaska warranted to each other that you had partners when you signed the preliminary agreement. That is what clause 4.1 says. Okay?

A. I already commented clause 4. I don't remember it very well, but prior to the break I commented on it. For Mr Deripaska, the most important thing was not to have TWG representatives in this new company. He wasn't all that bothered about everything else, as far as I understood.

Q. Mr Deripaska's partners -- and I don't know what it was they were doing for him -- were the ones that we see you describing here, in the Le Bourget meeting, to Mr Berezovsky: Mr Bykov, Mr Chernoi and Mr Malevsky.

I think you've commented on that already.

- A. I never asserted and I continue to maintain that I can only guess. I never thought that they were his partners. I guessed that he might have some payment obligations vis-a-vis these people.

As for preliminary agreement, it only indicates Nikolaevsky Alumina Plant, which is in the territory of Ukraine. It's difficult for me to understand how these people could have any influence in the territory of the Ukraine. This is a neighbouring state, it's a sovereign state, it's another part of our former country.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you.

Next question, Mr Rabinowitz, please.

MR RABINOWITZ: And while they were Mr Deripaska's partners, your partners were the people you were talking to at Le Bourget, namely Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili; that's correct, isn't it?

- A. It's not correct.
- Q. And if we go back to the Le Bourget transcript and we look at box 502 E6/01/173, it is because you're talking to your partners that when Mr Berezovsky raises the point about putting these shares into his name, you say:

You used the word "we" because you were talking to your partners. Mr Berezovsky, Mr Patarkatsishvili and you together hold that 50 per cent, and that is what you are saying.

- A. No, I'm sorry, I am saying -- whenever I talk about companies, I always mean those people who talk with me and myself. I don't mean Mr Berezovsky and, as you insist, Mr Patarkatsishvili. I always say "we", I always say "we", mainly I say "we"; I very seldom use "I". I always mean myself and people who work with me.
- Q. Well, is that right? There are a number of other places in this transcript where you use the word "I" when you mean "I". If you look at boxes 509 and 510 E6/01/175, you're talking about you having a different view and you use the word "I" there, do you not?
- A. I commented this in as much detail I could. This was rather a long time ago and there are many breaks in the tape, I can't hear very well; I can't give you a deeper explanation than the comments I've already given.

But once again I would like to reiterate: I mainly use the word "we". Of course I use the word "I" as well, but mainly I tend to say "we".

Q. It is not just you who is using the word "we" when you talk about the Rusal shares; that is what Mr Patarkatsishvili says as well.

If you look, for example, at boxes 526 to 532 E6/01/179, I think the conversation here switched to Sibneft but Mr Patarkatsishvili, who of course we've seen considered himself your partner, is talking here about "we" in respect of this company, suggesting that he, with you, was an owner of this company. That's right, isn't it?

A. May I read these boxes --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, please do.

A. -- because we are just snatching bits out of the context.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: What box, Mr Rabinowitz, would you like to start at?

MR RABINOWITZ: I would like the witness to read from 526 to 532, please, just to focus on Mr Patarkatsishvili, when he's referring to Sibneft, talking about "we".

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, may I suggest he should start at 524, which is where this passage begins.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, very well.

Mr Abramovich, start at box 524, please. (Pause)

A. Here Mr Patarkatsishvili, as far as I understand, means Sibneft company and trading companies; that's why it's

"we", "you", et cetera. And there are comments which I'm giving on the right-hand side; I can't comment any further. And if you start reading earlier on, you see once again that we're dealing with legalising money flows. The very -- the problem that we were dealing with was how to transfer money abroad and this is what the whole discussion is about.

Q. Now, I will come back to that in the context of Sibneft when we get to Le Bourget later on. But can we for the moment just go back to the preliminary agreement, please: H --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Can we put away this bundle?

MR RABINOWITZ: You can.

Can you go back to bundle H(A)16, page 49 in the Russian H(A)16/49 and 49T in English H(A)16/49T.

Can you look, please, at clause 14 of this agreement. Do you see that it says:

"The Parties agree that the Agreement shall be governed by English law."

Yes?

A. Yes, I can see that.

Q. And do you say that choice of law clauses such as this were something that you were not interested in and that you usually left it to your lawyers?

A. Yes, I say that.

- Q. And on the basis that we don't count you as a lawyer, Mr Abramovich -- and I think that's the basis upon which you say we should proceed -- it's right that there were no lawyers present at this meeting at the Kempinski Hotel and at your house at Sareevo Village; that's correct, isn't it?
- A. You're right. I agree.
- Q. That was a meeting just between yourself, Mr Shvidler, Mr Bulygin and Mr Deripaska?
- A. Yes, and Mr Bulygin used this document or used a draft.
- Q. Let me ask you this: it's clear that in the context of this meeting this provision couldn't have been something that was left to the lawyers since they were not involved in drawing up this preliminary agreement.
- A. That's not so. This reference or this provision that we're discussing now does not refer to the agreement we signed but to the future agreement. If I remember correctly, it was signed much later: I think on 15 March perhaps.
- Q. Whether or not that is so, Mr Abramovich, whoever inserted clause 14 into this contract was someone at the meeting at the Kempinski Hotel and your house who was not a lawyer; it was one of the four of you. That's correct, isn't it?
- A. Yes, that is so: it was Mr Bulygin. That's what I'm trying to explain: he must have been using some kind of form, a draft contract. A person who is not a lawyer could not have drafted this. I don't understand half of it. If you read it in Russian, you realise that you need to have legal training to understand what is meant. So I think that he got some kind of preliminary draft or a form of words from the computer and just added our agreements to a standard form of words.

- Q. So it's your suggestion, is it, that although all of these key terms in the contract were discussed and Mr Bulygin then put them on the computer, this particular provision was one that wasn't raised for any discussion at all?
- A. I didn't hear any discussion of this item and it was absolutely irrelevant to me which law would apply. I never took part in choosing applicable law. I don't really feel the difference between English law or any other law; it's all the same to me.
- Q. Mr Abramovich, I wish that were so. But, Mr Abramovich, we're dealing here with a contract which is made in an arrangement between exclusively Russian businessmen; do you agree with that?
- A. No, I don't.
- Q. You say that the parties to this contract were not all Russian businessmen?

- A. I've already explained that this was a preliminary agreement, yes, indeed, between Russian businessmen. However, the agreement would have been signed between companies, as far as I understand it, and the companies could indeed use English law. On the other hand, it would have been bizarre if a company which is registered in BVI would be applying Russian law.
- Q. So you have -- certainly the people discussing this are Russian businessmen and you say that the agreement was made in Russia; yes?
- A. Preliminary agreement was executed in Russia.
- Q. Mr Abramovich, a preliminary agreement is still an agreement. Do you understand that?
- A. Well, of course, it's compulsory.
- Q. Yes. So an agreement between Russian businessmen which was made in Russia, and do you agree that it involved assets which were all in Russia?
- A. Yes, I agree; but, as already discussed, they were registered in BVI and in Gibraltar, or somewhere else perhaps. Anyway, they were -- they had not been registered in Russia. Yes, they were physically located in Russia; whereas they were registered outside Russia. I agree with that.
- Q. But you are suggesting that, despite all of these connections to Russia, Mr Bulygin would just have inserted a provision saying the whole arrangement has to be governed by English law without even raising it for discussion; is that your evidence?

A. It seems to me that there was no discussion, I can't give you 100 per cent guarantee but I personally did not hear this conversation and honestly it is all the same to me which law would have applied. I cannot distinguish them. All the same to me.

Q. Would you accept that it is at least very likely that this question of what law should govern the arrangement was one that was raised for discussion, whether or not you say you heard the discussion?

A. In my view it is not very likely. There were no experts there that could have discussed it. I doubt very much that Mr Shvidler understands legal matters deeply, or that Mr Bulygin or Deripaska either. I think it's the job of the lawyers to choose applicable law.

Q. Yes, but there were no lawyers there, Mr Abramovich, so it was the people there who chose the applicable law.

But it is still your evidence that it was not very likely that this was discussed; is that right?

A. I would say it is improbable that this question would have been discussed, to be exact.

Q. I suggest to you --

A. There was no one there who could have discussed it competently. I'm sorry.

Q. Do you at least accept this, Mr Abramovich: that by March 2000, which was the time when you came to make this preliminary agreement with Mr Deripaska, you had started to structure your business interests offshore and had already come to make it a fairly regular practice to include English choice of law provisions in the contracts to which you or your companies were parties?

A. First of all, I don't agree that I signed this. Mr Shvidler signed this. I was present in the room where negotiations took place, I took part in the negotiations. But the fact that we used companies which were governed by English law, that is quite possible, but I tell you the truth when I say that I really didn't care.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I'm not sure you're answering the question. Will you put it again, Mr Rabinowitz, please.

MR RABINOWITZ: Do you accept, Mr Abramovich, that by March 2000, which was the time when you came to make this preliminary agreement with Mr Deripaska, you had started to structure your business interests offshore and had already come to make it a fairly regular practice to include English choice of law provisions in the contracts to which you or your companies were parties?

- A. I can assume that but I didn't know about it. I didn't know anything about it at all. Offshore companies were being used and I'm sure these provisions will have featured.
- Q. In the autumn of 1999 you travelled to Cyprus for meetings to discuss the creation of trust structures to hold some of your ownership interests; do you agree?
- A. It was translated to me that I went to Cyprus. I didn't personally go. Is that a translator's mistake? I don't think so.
- Q. Are you saying that you did not personally go to Cyprus?
- A. No, I personally did not go to Cyprus. I mean, I have been to Cyprus but not on this business. I spent some holidays several times in Cyprus but I never went there to agree on anything, on any business.
- Q. Now --
- A. If I remember correctly, Mr Tenenbaum and Mrs Panchenko went to Cyprus.
- Q. Do you accept that in the course of 1999 you had set up or were in the process of setting up trust structures relating to your ownership interests?
- A. Yes.
- Q. And these were based in offshore western jurisdictions like Cyprus; that's right, isn't it?

A. I don't remember exactly whether in '99 they were based in Cyprus. Perhaps, but I seem to remember it was Liechtenstein, but I cannot be precise. I think perhaps it was Liechtenstein.

Q. Can I ask you, please, to go to H(A)15 and turn to page 42 H(A)15/42. You should have there a dual language contract, Mr Abramovich, between Finansovaya Neftinaya Corporatzia on the one hand and Kravin Investments on the other, dated 10 December 1999. Do you have that?

A. Yes.

Q. Kravin Investments was one of a number of offshore companies based in Cyprus through which you held your shares in Sibneft; that's right, isn't it?

A. Possibly. Possibly. I just didn't know that at that time.

Q. Well, I can tell you we were told that by your lawyers so let's proceed on the basis that that is right.

Do you accept that other offshore companies based in Cyprus through which you held your shares in Sibneft companies included White Pearl Investments Limited?

A. Do I understand correctly that this company was holding shares in Sibneft?

Q. It was part of the structure that you had set up to hold your interest in Sibneft.

A. I think so. I think the answer is yes, but I don't remember. It doesn't ring any bells, this name. If it's in the dossier, if it's in the documents, then yes.

Q. Let me mention -- this isn't a memory test. I will mention four other names of companies that we have been told were being used by you in Cyprus to hold your Sibneft corporation and if you, in relation to any of these companies, think that that is wrong, then please say so.

In addition to White Pearl Investments Limited, there was a company called Marthacello Company Limited, another company called NP Gemini, another company called Heflinham Holdings Limited and another company called Kindselia Holdings Limited.

Do you think that that is likely to be -- you don't think that any of -- sorry, let me put this this way. You don't dispute that these were companies that were being used to hold your Sibneft interests based in Cyprus?

Can I assist you with this: this is what Skaddens have told us. But if this is wrong, you should say so.

A. I cannot say "yes" or "no" because I have no knowledge of it. If Skadden have given you this information, I agree with it.

Q. Can I then ask you to look back at H(A)15, page 42

H(A)15/42 and you can see at clause 1.1 that it is dealing with the sale of a block of Sibneft shares or transfer of the shares. Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. If you look down at clause 4.4, do you see that it says:

"This Contract shall be governed by the laws of England."

A. Yes, I can see that.

Q. If you skip a few pages forward to page 44 H(A)15/44, we see there another dual language contract, this time between ZAO Branko and NP Gemini, which was one of yours, also dated 10 December 1999, again relating to a block of Sibneft shares. And again, Mr Abramovich, do you see clause 4.1?

A. Yes, I can see it.

Q. That again has another choice of English law to apply; do you see that?

A. Yes, I can see that.

MR RABINOWITZ: I'm not going to take up the whole of the afternoon going through these contracts but there are at least another five further contracts to similar effect, each containing an English governing law provision in this file. For the transcript I can tell your Ladyship that these contracts are to be found at page 46 H(A)15/46, page 48 H(A)15/48, page 50 H(A)15/50, page 52 H(A)15/52 and page 54 H(A)15/54.

In addition to these contracts, Mr Abramovich, there are also another five agreements between your offshore Cypriot companies and various western banks with depositary accounts under which your Cypriot companies purchased further shares in Sibneft. Again, I'm not going to turn them up with you, but for her Ladyship's reference they are to be found at H(A)14, page 128 H(A)14/128, H(A)14, page 156 H(A)14/156, H(A)14, page 200 H(A)14/200, H(A)15, page 20 H(A)15/20 and H(A)15, page 31 H(A)15/31.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: All these contracts relate to the purchase of shares in Sibneft, do they?

MR RABINOWITZ: Correct, or the transfer of shares in Sibneft. They were part of structuring transactions dealing with what Mr Abramovich says was his shareholding.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: How many contracts in all?

MR RABINOWITZ: 12 in total, my Lady: the two that I showed you and the ten further ones that I've given your Ladyship the reference for.

I can tell you, Mr Abramovich, that each of those contracts was also expressly governed by English law. Do you say you don't remember that?

A. I'm saying I didn't know it at the time. But here, yes,

I can see that English law applies in all these contracts and I agree with it. I'm not contesting that this has all been done in accordance with English law and that it's applicable for the contracts. I'm not contesting that.

- Q. No, but what I'm suggesting to you, Mr Abramovich, is that it had become a practice of yours to ensure that your arrangements were governed by English law. Do you dispute that?
- A. I'm contesting it because I didn't know that and I don't know it. Our lawyers were dealing with that. Yes, for some reason they were choosing English law to apply, that is what was going on. But I have no skill, no knowledge in this respect, therefore I don't know how I can comment.
- Q. You see, Mr Abramovich, in addition to the 12 contracts, some of which I've shown you, which were made in the period of the autumn of 1999 going all the way to December 1999, it is also the case -- and you'll tell me if you disagree -- that a few months later, in February 2000, only three weeks prior to your merger discussions with Mr Deripaska, you had acquired an extensive portfolio of aluminium assets under a suite of ten dual-language contracts, all of which also contained English choice of law provisions. And that is right, is it not?

A. Quite possibly. I think so, yes.

Q. So you'd entered into no less than 22 contracts in this period dealing with the structuring and the holding of your oil and aluminium assets, each of which contained an English choice of law provision?

A. I agree, but I think that is obvious. If a company is registered in BVI or in Cyprus then British -- English law, sorry, should apply. Or am I wrong? I think that's exactly what took place.

Q. And that is why I suggest to you it is very likely that at the meeting that you held with Mr Deripaska and Mr Shvidler and Mr Bulygin, you, or Mr Shvidler on your behalf, were again very keen to ensure that the arrangements were governed by English law. That's right, isn't it?

A. That is not right.

Q. Not only governed by English law but structured offshore? You dispute that?

A. At that time we did not discuss it.

Q. Now, between 7 and 12 March 2000 do you accept that you were likely to have been in London for some reason or another?

A. From 7 March until...?

Q. 12 March.

A. Yes, I agree.

Q. And this period coincided with a trip by a number of your team to London as well, did it not?

A. Yes, that is so.

Q. Mr --

A. They all came at different times, but we were all in London, yes.

Q. And that included Mr Shvidler, who says he was in London in this period; is that right? Do you remember that?

A. Yes, Mr Shvidler was in London at the time, yes.

Q. And Mr Tenenbaum also says that he was in London at that time. Is that right?

A. Yes, that is right.

Q. And Ms Panchenko was also in London, although she may have arrived slightly later than the three of you; is that right?

A. Yes, that is so.

Q. And Mr Shvidler, Mr Tenenbaum and Ms Panchenko all remember a series of meetings with Mr Deripaska's team, including Mr Hauser and Mr Bulygin, in London at that time. Do you recollect that?

A. Sorry, what is it that I need to confirm: whether they remember or whether I remember?

Q. Whether you remember.

A. I think I was at one of these meetings, yes.

Q. Mr Bulygin suggests that you were certainly at one meeting; I think he might suggest you were at more than one. But your recollection is that you were just at one meeting; is that right?

A. I think I was at one of them.

Q. And so it appears that you travelled to London together with Mr Shvidler and Mr Tenenbaum, with Ms Panchenko there as well, in order, among other things, to oversee the preparation of the Rusal share purchase and sale agreement. Is that right?

A. I didn't get it. Can you repeat that? "To oversee the preparation"? That sounds a bit strange.

Q. Maybe to you.

You had gone to London with these members of your team in order to ensure that the Rusal share purchase and sale agreement was successfully concluded, put it that way?

A. No, that is not so for two reasons and, if I may, I'll explain.

Q. Please.

A. At that time I was choosing a house for myself in the outskirts of London and I think at that time I entered into a transaction on a property. I'm not completely sure, but I think that's what I was doing.

As far as the Rusal shares, they didn't exist at that time. Rusal as a company was incorporated later. Perhaps we're dealing with assets and maybe there was some kind of agreement, but shares of Rusal as such did not exist at that time.

Q. And all of these people had flown to London to finalise the terms of the agreement; that's right, isn't it? By "all of these people" I mean, from your side, Shvidler, Tenenbaum and Panchenko.

A. Well, I suppose so, they dealt with that as well, but I think there were other things that had to be tackled. I can explain, if I may.

Q. If you think it will assist, then please do.

A. Mr Deripaska explained to us that it is important in the aluminium industry to have long-term contracts for alumina, for raw material. I thought that alumina could be sourced at any time, like in the oil industry: you can buy a crude oil tanker at any point in time, any day. But Mr Deripaska explained that in the aluminium industry the practice is totally different: that alumina has to be sourced in advance.

So we went there, amongst other reasons, in order to sign contracts for alumina supplies and for finished aluminium sales. The main traders both for alumina and for finished aluminium were based in London; I think it was the London Metal Exchange, I think it's here. And anyway, that's why London was a place.

- Q. Are you sure that the London Metal Exchange trades alumina?
- A. If I understand it correctly, London Metals Exchange trades primary aluminium. Alumina is not traded on the exchange. These are long-term contracts with the suppliers. I'm not sure if this problem was solved during this visit but I remember Oleg explaining it to us. For us, this is all new and unusual.
- Q. I take it you accept that, having gone to London with your team on 7 March, you only got back to Moscow on Sunday 12 March? I'm talking about 12 March 2000.
- A. Yes, I agree with that.
- Q. And you said almost immediately after coming back from this trip on 12 March you called Mr Patarkatsishvili to bring him up to date on what you and Mr Deripaska had been discussing in relation to the aluminium assets; is that right?
- A. Yes, that is right.
- Q. And then would this be a fair way of describing what happens next: that without any delay at all following the conversation with Mr Patarkatsishvili, on your return to Moscow you immediately arranged to fly all the way back to London, having just returned the night before? Is that right?

A. Yes, that is right.

Q. And you rushed back to London in this way because Mr Patarkatsishvili, you say, has passed on word from Mr Berezovsky that he was in London and could not get back to Moscow the following day, so that any meeting that there was to discuss the merger would have to be in London. Is that right?

A. Could you repeat that again, please? I'm finding it a bit difficult to concentrate.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, I'll take the break then. Ten minutes' break.

(3.02 pm)

(A short break)

(3.20 pm)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, Mr Rabinowitz.

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Abramovich, we were discussing the fact that you had been in London from 7 to 12 March, then you return on 12 March and almost immediately, after coming back from this trip, you call Mr Patarkatsishvili and bring him up to date on what you and Mr Deripaska have been discussing in relation to the aluminium evidence and you've agreed that's what happened. Then the question I had asked and will repeat is this.

Would this be a fair way of describing what happens next: that without any delay at all following the conversation with Mr Patarkatsishvili on your return from Moscow, you immediately arrange to fly all the way back to London, having just returned from there?

A. It was the next day. If everything that you've just described was the way you described it, I called Badri on the 12th and then on the 13th we went back to London.

Q. That's right. And you rushed back to London in this way the next day because Mr Patarkatsishvili has passed on word from Mr Berezovsky that he was in London and he could not get back to Moscow the following day for a meeting, so that any meeting with him to discuss the merger would have to be in London; is that right?

A. No, this is not correct. He said that Boris wants to see me immediately or wants to speak to me about this. This is all.

Q. Well, you say "about this" -- I'm not sure what you're disagreeing with me about. But when you say "about this", you mean about the merger; is that right?

A. I told Badri that we were thinking with Oleg to do a transaction, I mean, we were almost ready to do it, and it was important for me to tell this to Badri before we signed everything. So I told him about this, he conveyed this to Boris; and then Mr Berezovsky conveyed to me, through Mr Patarkatsishvili, that it was necessary for me to go to London to meet him, to explain what was going on.

- Q. In other words, to discuss with him the merger; is that right?
- A. No, this is not right. I did not have to go to London to discuss the merger. What was necessary was to explain what was going on. We had already discussed the merger.
- Q. All right. Let me put it this way. You get to Moscow on the 12th, you speak to Mr Patarkatsishvili; as a result of your conversation with Mr Patarkatsishvili, the very next day you fly back to London to speak to Mr Berezovsky about the merger?
- A. Yes.
- Q. Now, it would have been clear to you from that that Mr Patarkatsishvili had obviously told Mr Berezovsky whatever it was you had said to Mr Patarkatsishvili about the merger; do you agree with that?
- A. Well, I don't know, but one could presume that that was the case.
- Q. And you hadn't said to Mr Patarkatsishvili when you spoke to him on your return to Moscow that he could not inform Mr Berezovsky about what you had said to Mr Patarkatsishvili about the merger; is that correct?
- A. No, I did not tell Badri that he could not inform Berezovsky about that.

Q. Can I just ask you a little bit more about the conversation you had with Mr Patarkatsishvili on the afternoon or the evening of 12 March, as soon as you got back to Moscow.

Your own evidence is that almost as soon as you returned to Moscow on the 12th you informed Mr Patarkatsishvili about the arrangement with Mr Deripaska; is that right?

A. Well, speaking from memory, yes, but I do not recall whether it was immediately after my return or maybe sometime later. But on the 12th I did inform him about that, yes.

Q. Well, it had to be sometime on the 12th because by the 13th you had already made plans to fly back to London as a result of what Mr Patarkatsishvili said to you; correct?

A. Yes, it is correct.

Q. And presumably you would have told Mr Patarkatsishvili that you and your team had just got back from negotiating the deal with Mr Deripaska and his team in London; correct?

A. Can I ask you to repeat the question, please? I think I missed out on part of it, something about what I said to Deripaska. Could you kindly repeat?

Q. You would have told Mr Patarkatsishvili that you and your team had just returned from negotiating a deal with Mr Deripaska and his team in London?

A. No, I did not say that.

Q. Well, tell us exactly what you say you did tell Mr Patarkatsishvili about the merger, Mr Abramovich.

A. I told him that we were doing a deal with Oleg and I don't remember anything over and above that.

Q. Presumably you would have told him about which assets were the subject of the merger?

A. I don't think so, but I cannot affirm that with certainty. I don't think I did.

Q. So the only thing you say you can remember about this is that you called him and you said you're doing a deal with Mr Deripaska and that you mentioned nothing else; is that really your evidence?

A. My evidence is that I rang him up, called him on the phone and, as you have just set out, there's this kind of conversation, a lengthy conversation about all the assets and everything. This is a very unorthodox thing for Russian businessmen.

But from what I remember it's that I told him that we were doing a deal with Oleg. He told me about his concerns about this. He said that nothing good can come out of working with Oleg because he's a loner, he likes to work on his own and he will squeeze one out sooner or later at some point in time. But I cannot tell you exactly, I cannot recall exactly now what was said down to a word, but he was obviously apparently not satisfied with that; he was not glad.

Q. But you say you told him about a proposed merger but you didn't tell Mr Patarkatsishvili which of the assets that you say he was protecting for you that were to be included in the merger; is that your evidence?

A. No, I did not tell him that.

Q. Did you tell him about the price differential that Mr Deripaska was going to have to pay in the context of the merger, in addition to contributing his aluminium assets?

A. No.

Q. Did you tell Mr Deripaska that you were going to tell Mr Patarkatsishvili about the merger?

A. I think I did, although I have no specific recollection. But it was my obligation to tell --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just a second, please. There's somebody drinking out of a bottle at the back of the court. Can you please not do that. There's to be no eating or drinking in court. Thank you.

Yes, go on, Mr Rabinowitz.

MR RABINOWITZ: I asked you, Mr Abramovich:

"Did you tell Mr Deripaska that you were going to tell Mr Patarkatsishvili about the merger?"

And you said:

"I think I did, although I have no specific recollection. But it was my obligation..."

Is that the end of your answer?

- A. I don't think so. I don't think I did. To be honest, I think I've lost the train of thought. Could I kindly ask you to repeat your question, please?
- Q. The question was: did you tell Mr Deripaska that you were going to tell Mr Patarkatsishvili about the merger?
- A. I don't think I did. No. No.
- Q. And presumably you didn't speak to Mr Deripaska on the question of whether Mr Berezovsky should be allowed to be told about the merger?
- A. It's a rather convoluted question. Could you make it a shorter question?
- Q. Did you ask Mr Deripaska at any stage whether he minded Mr Berezovsky being told about the merger?
- A. I think that I certainly told him about this, yes, definitely.
- Q. When do you say you told -- when do you say you asked Mr Deripaska whether he minded Mr Berezovsky being told about the merger?
- A. Sorry, I think it was -- I think it was the other way round.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I think something has been lost in the translation or may have been lost in the translation here.

Mr Abramovich, did you discuss with Deripaska telling Mr Berezovsky about the proposed merger?

A. No, it was the other way round. While we had not done the deal, while we had not received the contracts, Oleg asked us not to tell anyone, be it Berezovsky, be it Patarkatsishvili or anyone else. We just wanted to make sure that before the deal is actually executed, we wanted to keep it in secret.

MR RABINOWITZ: But the difficulty about that,

Mr Abramovich, is that it's your own evidence that as soon as you returned to Moscow on 12 March you almost immediately phoned Mr Patarkatsishvili to tell him about the merger. So how is that consistent with you keeping the deal secret until it is actually executed?

A. I meant before it is done. The thing is that Mr Patarkatsishvili asked -- gave some help in terms of purchasing the original aluminium assets and so I had some financial obligations vis-a-vis Patarkatsishvili.

So the way I understood it, and the way he understood it, by the way, as well, I had to -- it was my obligation to let him know before it was done. It would have been inappropriate if he had learnt about that from newspapers. And therefore I thought it was necessary and appropriate to tell him that we were doing the deal before it was signed.

Q. But I think a few minutes ago you told us that you hadn't cleared with Mr Deripaska your being able to speak to Mr Patarkatsishvili about it. Is that right?

A. I'm not sure I understood your question. It sounded more like a statement on your part. What am I supposed to do with this?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I think we've been round this buoy, haven't we, Mr Rabinowitz? I mean, we've got your answers. We all know that the meeting happened. So unless this issue is of tremendous importance, I thought we might move on.

MR RABINOWITZ: It's of relevance because if you spoke to Mr Patarkatsishvili in circumstances where Mr Deripaska had told you that you couldn't tell anyone about the merger, I would like to know what it is you said to Mr Deripaska in order to be allowed to tell Mr Patarkatsishvili about the merger.

What did you say to Mr Deripaska about your relationship with Mr Patarkatsishvili?

A. I did not tell him anything about my relationship with Badri Patarkatsishvili nor did I ask him for any permission. I think by that time I was a grown-up person and I was a party to this and so I did not need any additional permission for that.

Q. Well, you say you didn't need any additional permission for that but you have earlier said to us that you agreed with Mr Deripaska that neither of you would say anything to anyone until the agreement was executed. So despite what you say --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Rabinowitz, we really have been over this now. The questions are getting longer and longer. It's getting quite late in the afternoon. I suggest that if you want to come back to it because there's a real point here, you do so tomorrow, and you move on to something different.

MR RABINOWITZ: Can you go to bundle H(A)18, page 113, please H(A)18/113. What you have here, Mr Abramovich, is a fax from Global Jet Concept to someone called Marina at Runicom dated 12 March 2000 and this sets out your travel arrangements for the following day, for 13 March. Okay?

You obviously had to ask your assistants to move very quickly to make the necessary travel arrangements for you for the following day, once you'd got back to Moscow; is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. Just looking at your travel itinerary, you see that in order to get back to London following the summons from Mr Berezovsky, because he wanted to talk about the merger, you had to board a plane in Moscow at 11.00 am and fly for three and a half hours to Luton Airport; do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. You were travelling with the benefit of time difference so your plan would land in Luton at 11.30 am at Greenwich Mean Time; do you see that?

A. Yes, I can see that.

Q. And then you had to transfer at Luton Airport into a helicopter and fly by helicopter from Luton down to Battersea Heliport, that was going to take you about 20 minutes, and that would mean that you would arrive at around midday Greenwich Mean Time at Battersea. Do you see that?

A. To be honest, I cannot see the word "Battersea" here, but it must have been the case.

Q. Okay. And --

A. Oh, yes, yes. I can see Battersea, yes.

Q. And then the plan was that you would be picked up by a Mercedes and driven, according to the invoice, to the Lanesborough Hotel; that's over the page. Is that correct?

A. Yes.

- Q. And again over the page, you can see that the plan was that at some point the same day you would repeat the whole process so that you could fly back from Luton to Moscow, another three-and-a-half-hour flight; that's correct, isn't it?
- A. Well, around that. I would say four hours, but that's the ballpark figure.
- Q. So we're talking here about a 13-hour round trip approximately; correct?
- A. Do you mean the flight took 13 hours?
- Q. Total round trip.
- A. It's just four hours.
- Q. The total round trip would be around 13 hours?
- A. Yes.
- Q. And that's really quite an effort, isn't it, especially given that you had only just come back from London the previous day?
- A. Well, yes, it is, unless you recall that it was G V: that was the most cutting-edge kind of aircraft at that time.
- Q. What I suggest, Mr Abramovich, is that these travel arrangements really speak volumes about the importance of this meeting at the Dorchester Hotel in London, don't they?
- A. Well, I don't know. That's the kind of conclusion that you are drawing. I do not believe that that was the case, but this is the conclusion that you drew. For me, meeting with Berezovsky was always important. Some of them were more important, other meetings were less important. If he had asked me to fly to New York, I would have probably flown to New York if I had that possibility to do so.

Q. Here was a meeting where you had spent five days in London, you'd got back to Moscow, you get told that he wants to speak about the merger and you immediately arrange to take a trip back to London to talk to him about the merger. I suggest that that tells you that this was a very significant meeting to discuss the merger.

A. Are you asking a question? Am I expected to say "yes" or "no"?

Q. Well, you can comment.

A. What I can say is that the meeting with Mr Berezovsky, usually meetings with Mr Berezovsky generally for me were important and I was very particular about those and I was always happy to wait for him for a long time if I had to.

Q. Can we look at what you say at paragraph 166 of your statement about this. It's at page 85 in the English E1/03/85. I think it's at page 186 in the Russian E1/03/186.

A. Did you say 186?

Q. Do read it to yourself: 166 on page 186.

Now, you say here that the reason why Mr Berezovsky wanted to meet was because:

"He liked to be informed about... events of significance in Russia..."

Do you see that?

A. Yes. Would you allow me to read this paragraph to myself?

Q. Please. (Pause)

A. Yes, I have read this.

Q. So you say that the reason why Mr Berezovsky wanted to meet was because he liked to be informed about events of significance in Russia and because he was interested in what you were doing.

Now, at this time Mr Berezovsky was still living in Moscow, was he not?

A. At that time, yes. Yes, he lived in Moscow.

Q. And so in general terms he was in a position where he could very well keep himself informed about events of significance in Russia; do you agree?

A. Yes, I agree with that, but I'm not sure I understand your question. Could he have been up to speed with what was going on? Yes, of course, he could. But he could have not been up to speed with this unless he had heard this from Badri and then read about this from newspapers.

Q. But it's your own evidence that he had heard about it already from Badri and that Badri had passed this on to him. That's what you say. Is that not right?

A. Yes, I'm saying that Badri told him about this after I had told Badri about this.

Q. If that's right, then there was no need for you to fly to London, having just returned to Moscow, in order for you to tell him about it, was there?

A. What's your question? Was it necessary for me or not? I did not discuss that. It was offered to me that I should go and then -- so I did go. I don't understand what your question is.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: The question is: what was the need for you to fly back from Moscow, having just returned there, if Berezovsky knew about the proposed merger already? Why did you need to go back to London?

A. At that point in time Mr Berezovsky was one of the most influential people in Russia and if he asked me to come and tell him about something, I usually did that immediately, without delay.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, Mr Rabinowitz.

MR RABINOWITZ: If Mr Berezovsky had wanted to find out more about this transaction and he wanted to hear it from you, you could have discussed it with him on the telephone, could you not?

A. Well, I don't think so. No, I don't think that we would have started discussing this over the phone.

Q. All right. That's your position. Can we then just consider the position of Mr Deripaska, Mr Abramovich.

It's your evidence, isn't it, that Mr Deripaska actively disliked both Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Berezovsky and did not get on well with either of them?

A. Yes. And with your permission I would like to clarify, if I may?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: You may.

A. The situation was as follows. It took quite a long time. Mr Berezovsky -- at the request of Deripaska, if I understand correctly, Mr Berezovsky was helping him in the so-called aluminium wars. I do not mean to say that there were rivers of blood flowing there; "the aluminium wars" is a term and the way I understand this term is that it was a confrontation, a show-off between TWG on the one hand and Mr Deripaska on the other, mainly around the Krasnoyarsk smelter. And so Mr Berezovsky had offered to help Oleg and he had raised some debt for that, plus some money for the ORT. And then, some time later, Badri began helping TWG against Mr Deripaska. And that loan, that debt, had not been repaid to Oleg and, to put it mildly, Oleg did not take kindly to this and he made it clear.

And therefore there were two people who were driving hard bargain against Oleg and playing a duplicitous game against Oleg, and Oleg got wind of this and he did not like it. In other words, to put it bluntly, they were cheating him.

Q. So you say that Mr Deripaska, who didn't like either Mr Berezovsky or Mr Patarkatsishvili, was nonetheless prepared to turn around, having just come back to Moscow, and go to a meeting in London with two men he disliked just because you wanted to talk to Mr Berezovsky about the merger?

THE INTERPRETER: I'm so sorry, Mr Rabinowitz, I'm afraid either yourself or me got a few names wrong.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, somebody's phone went off; that was part of the problem. Can you start --

THE INTERPRETER: Could you kindly repeat the question?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Repeat the question, please.

MR RABINOWITZ: Your evidence is that, despite disliking Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili intensely, Mr Deripaska was willing to get on a plane and fly, take this trip to London just to talk to Mr Berezovsky?

A. No, I'm not saying that he flew there only for this. He flew there at my request and it made some economic sense and in order to draw a line under what had been happening prior to that under those aluminium wars. I mean, in order to achieve peace it was necessary to get together, meet and put an end to this. But he did not know that Mr Patarkatsishvili was going to be there.

Q. You see, in your witness statement what you say, Mr Abramovich -- and this is at paragraph 167 E1/03/85 -- is that you invited Mr Deripaska to come with you, you were still getting to know him, and you thought it would be a good idea on the way to discuss the further details of how your new business would operate in practice without interruptions, and that is why you asked Mr Deripaska to fly with you and he agreed. You don't say anything about trying to settle any aluminium wars; in fact, what you mention is Mr Shvidler commenting that he could get the repayment of his debt.

Is that still your evidence or are you changing this evidence?

A. I think that I did mention the debt. Yes, we did discuss the debt at that meeting, or maybe I misunderstood your question. You said: do I want to change my evidence?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I think it's being put --

A. No, I do not want to change my evidence.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: It's being put to you, I think, that you don't mention in paragraph 167 the fact that Deripaska was flying to London because there was a possibility of resolving the aluminium wars.

A. That is true, I'm not writing about this. I was just trying to explain what the background had been, what had happened prior to that. So at that meeting we mainly discussed all the things that I listed here, but what I'm trying to do now is to give some broader context for this.

MR RABINOWITZ: You see, Mr Abramovich, I have to suggest to you that the reasons that you give, certainly in your witness statement, as to why Mr Deripaska would be willing to fly back to London on this 13-hour round trip, having just returned from London, are simply not a sufficient -- or do not properly explain why Mr Deripaska was willing to fly back.

The reason he was willing to fly back is that this was an important meeting that you were having with Mr Berezovsky, who you had told Mr Deripaska was a partner with you in the aluminium business; and that is correct, is it not?

A. No, it is not correct. If I understood you correctly, the $13 million -- I mean, it sounded like it was not sufficient in order -- the amount, the $13 million, was not a sufficiently credible reason for people to go to London. This is the way your question sounded. Did I hear your question properly?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, that's been lost in translation because the 13-hour round trip was referring -- the 13 figure was referring to the hours of the journey.

MR RABINOWITZ: Can we just look at the three reasons that you actually do give at paragraph 167 for why you say Mr Deripaska was willing to fly to London.

The first reason you say at paragraph 167 was so that you and Mr Deripaska could spend some quality time together on the plane where you could discuss things. That's the first reason, isn't it?

A. That is correct.

Q. And the second reason -- I think this is a reason you give -- is that he could ask Mr Berezovsky to repay him an outstanding loan of $16 million. Is that a reason you give?

A. That is correct.

Q. And your third reason -- and this is the last sentence of that paragraph -- is that you wanted to demonstrate that you had powerful friends like Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili, or powerful associates.

A. Yes. What it lists here are the reasons on my side and on Deripaska's side, but what you are doing now is you are mixing the two together, as it were.

Q. Well, I'm just taking the reasons that you identify out of your witness statement, Mr Abramovich. Can we just look at them each in a little more detail.

It's right, isn't it, that you and Mr Deripaska had already just spent rather a lot of time together in early March 2000?

A. I wouldn't put it that way. I wouldn't say we had spent much time. We met at Kempinski, then at my place, and then I'm sure we went to -- we had meetings in Moscow. Then I was in London and he was in London, but we only met once.

Now, in order to put together a second-largest aluminium company in the world, one is required to spend much more time, much longer time together.

Q. Mr Deripaska was not a complete stranger to Moscow, was he? It was a place he would come and go frequently?

A. Well, he lived there.

Q. Absolutely, Mr Abramovich. If you wanted to spend quality time with Mr Deripaska, you could have done it in far more convenient surroundings than both of you, having got back from London on one day, getting on a flight back to London the following day. You wouldn't have had to drag him along on this trip.

A. Well, if your question is whether I picked the most comfortable surrounding, well, my answer is: no, probably not. But I told you that G V, which was the jet that we used, was the cutting edge, very low pressure, very quiet jet, and if this is what we're talking about, it was quite comfortable. G V is a comfortable jet; the Lanesborough Hotel is a comfortable hotel; and, well, let's face it, London is a nice place.

Q. As for the suggestion that he would fly back in order to talk about the repayment of an outstanding loan, why would Mr Deripaska have undertaken a 13-hour round trip just to ask Mr Berezovsky to repay him? He could have used the phone.

A. Well, it's hard for me to comment on that.

The thing is that Berezovsky took a long time to repay the money and I'm sure that he would not have agreed with Berezovsky on the repayment of the money over the phone and I'm sure that he did have a few meetings to discuss that debt and that was probably the first meeting at which they could have decided on some set-off, they could have agreed on a set-off, and that meeting gave a good opportunity for that.

And also $16 million, for that time, at that time for Oleg was a rather significant amount of money.

Q. The suggestion that you wanted to demonstrate that you had powerful friends: it was well-known, wasn't it, that you were associated with Mr Berezovsky?

A. Yes, it was known to everyone but it would have not come amiss.

Q. There was no need for Mr Deripaska to fly to London in order to see that you were associated with Mr Berezovsky?

A. Just for -- only for that, it would not have been necessary. But if you take all those considerations together then it was necessary. I mean, mind you, it was not a vital necessity for him, but it was very useful, very helpful for all the sides, for all the parties, including it did make economic sense -- including the fact that it did make economic sense.

Q. Mr Abramovich, I have to suggest to you that your explanation of the reasons why you and Mr Deripaska were willing to turn around on 13 March and head back to London to meet Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili is obviously untrue. Do you want to comment on that?

A. I disagree with your statement.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Can I ask you this question: why did it matter to you that Mr Berezovsky was in the loop about this transaction? What did you need from Mr Berezovsky that made it so important that you flew back?

- A. To me personally, there was no benefit that accrued to me personally from this. If he had asked me to do this, I had to do this. I usually complied, if I could, with his requests. Therefore there was no benefit accruing to me from that meeting. But putting an end to that confrontation, let's put it that way, the confrontation between Badri, TWG, Oleg, and so on and so forth, was something that was important to me.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, thank you.

MR RABINOWITZ: I thought in earlier evidence you had said that Mr Deripaska did not know that Mr Patarkatsishvili was going to be in London.

A. Deripaska did not know that.

Q. So how was it that his going there was going to provide an opportunity to put the confrontation with Mr Patarkatsishvili behind him?

A. Deripaska did not know about this but I did. And so when Oleg walked into that room in the hotel he was quite surprised and let's say that he was not very glad, let's put it that way.

Q. Mr Abramovich, I would suggest to you that it is absolutely plain that both you and Mr Deripaska and Mr Shvidler went to the considerable efforts of flying to London to this meeting at short notice because you all recognised that this was an important meeting at which you were going to introduce Mr Deripaska to the partners which you had referred to in the preliminary agreement. That is correct, is it not?

- A. This is absolutely not the case and I think I already commented on the preliminary agreement.
- Q. Now, in terms of what was discussed at the Dorchester Hotel on 13 March, I think it's not in dispute that you did discuss the merger with Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili as well as with Mr Deripaska?
- A. It is true that we did tell Mr Berezovsky about the merger.
- Q. And in fact that was the whole purpose behind your flying to London, having been told by Mr Patarkatsishvili that Mr Berezovsky wanted to hear about the merger?
- A. Berezovsky wanted to hear about the merger from me, he did not want to hear this from Oleg or anyone else, and I asked the others to tag along. Now, if he had needed any details then Mr Shvidler could have provided explanations about that. And the reason behind this trip was precisely all those things that we have just discussed.
- Q. Just sticking with your recollection for the moment, how clear is your recollection of this meeting on 13 March,

Mr Abramovich? (Pause)

A. Sorry, I did not realise it was a question. I thought you had said, "We will see how clear your recollection is". Well, I do not recall all the details but I do remember some of them.

Q. And I take it that there would obviously have been a discussion about the fact that the merger was with Mr Deripaska and that it was a 50/50 deal. Do you recall that?

A. It's very difficult for me to focus. I've no longer any feel for the questions that you're asking.

Possibly, yes. Possibly. I'm -- honestly, I'm --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Well, I'm going to stop tonight. It's been a long day for everybody.

Right. Tomorrow, 10.30, 10.15?

Discussion re housekeeping

MR RABINOWITZ: My Lady, whatever you want. We are on track. According to the timetable, we will finish -- as long as things keep going -- within the designated time.

I was going to raise the question with your Ladyship of Friday sitting or not Friday sitting but I'm not suggesting, unless your Ladyship or Mr Sumption says that we should do this, that we should not sit tomorrow. So...

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Well, in order to consider the question as to whether I should sit on a Friday, I would need to have a revised timetable.

MR RABINOWITZ: We can produce that for you tomorrow.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: If you wish me to address that question.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, we have got a revised timetable which Ms Davies is digging out, which we can hand up. This is, like all timetables --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: It's flexible.

MR SUMPTION: This is not intended to be writ in stone, but it is the result of discussion between the parties and will tell your Ladyship where we think we are at the moment. (Handed)

MR RABINOWITZ: Can I just mention before my learned friend addresses you on this, I think it's generally agreed. The part which I don't think is agreed, perhaps still to be discussed, is the suggestion that there will be closing submissions immediately the evidence finishes, which is what this timetable suggests.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, I understand my learned friend's difficulties about that. I'm not sure that it's a matter that we would ask your Ladyship to rule on at the moment.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No.

MR SUMPTION: But it may well be sensible for me to deliver my closing speech on behalf of Mr Abramovich before the Christmas adjournment, even if my learned friend does so afterwards. Of course, that would involve Ms Davies having a right of reply on unexpected or unanticipated points and my learned friend would have to have the last word in any event.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, Mr Rabinowitz, if Mr Sumption's proposal were to be adopted, with the result that you wouldn't be making your closing submissions before Christmas, that might or might not free up Fridays.

MR RABINOWITZ: In response to Mr Sumption's proposal that I don't make closing submissions before Christmas, I can tell your Ladyship that I wasn't planning to, and if that means that Fridays are freed up then I would respectfully submit that that would be a good thing.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, why don't the two of you talk about it with the other counsel as to whether, if the defendant's closing submissions were to be presented before Christmas, that would enable a timetable to be formulated that didn't involve sitting on a Friday. But I'll rule on it if necessary.

MR RABINOWITZ: I hope we will be able to agree --

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, I'm sure that Mr Rabinowitz and I can sort something out that suits the court and all the parties.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well. I mean, it may be that we sit some Fridays and not others.

MR RABINOWITZ: Indeed.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, there's one other small matter of housekeeping which Ms Davies would like to raise concerning Latvian Trade Bank.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, very well. I signed some consent order the other day which should have worked its way back to you.

MS DAVIES: My Lady, that's the Chukotka one. Yes, we've got that. There's a further consent order but I need to explain it to my Lady because it's slightly --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, I signed another one.

MS DAVIES: No, that was to do with valuation evidence, my Lady, I'm told.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, and yet another one.

MS DAVIES: I'm relatively confident that this one hasn't --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Abramovich, are you all right? Would you like to go back to your seat? You don't need to sit there unless you wish to. You're coughing, that's all. If you would rather go back to your seat, you may do so.

MS DAVIES: I'm relatively confident that this one has not come to my Lady because we only managed to agree its terms yesterday. So this is a new matter, if I can put it that way.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right, okay. Well, pass it up.

MS DAVIES: Mr Gillis has been given it. I just need to explain how it arises because it's slightly unusual.

My Lady may recall the Latvian Trade Bank is the bank that was used by various companies connected to Mr Abramovich, in particular Pex Trade Corporation, Espat, Madison, Palmtex and Runicom.

In the course of the recent weeks it's become apparent that the Latvian Trade Bank may well retain documents relating to those companies but because the companies no longer exist, they cannot accept a request from us to provide the documents to them. But they have indicated in the correspondence, certainly so far as Pex and Espat are concerned, they have indicated in the correspondence which is attached to this clip that if an English court order were made, they would provide the documents.

That's their letter of 18 October, which is the second letter in the clip. They first of all explain -- it's slightly lengthy and I will just explain to my Lady -- that they can't do it on the basis of a request but then on the second page, in the passage in bold, they said they would be willing to provide the documents relating to Espat and Pex if there was an English court order.

We then sent this correspondence to my learned friend and they asked for the order to be expanded -- that's covered by the first paragraph of the draft order -- to cover records relating to Madison and Palmtex and Runicom, which were other companies that had banking arrangements with the Latvian Trade Bank, and that's paragraph 2, but that is not covered by the letter from the Latvian Trade Bank because that's a request from my learned friend. We are happy for that to be accommodated in the order but I just needed to draw to my Lady's attention that it's not covered by the letter.

What's slightly unusual about this, my Lady, is that there is no office in this jurisdiction on which an application can be served, which is why there is no application notice being issued, but the Latvian Trade Bank have indicated through their letter that they're happy to comply with an English court order if it's made nonetheless.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So they're agreeing to submit to the jurisdiction for the purposes --

MS DAVIES: Of this order, yes.

Now, my Lady, I wasn't necessarily asking my Lady to make it today because we've, as it were, just raised it.

If my Lady wants to take it away and read it, then we can address any questions that are arising.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, the letter is a bit opaque, isn't it, so I had better take it away and read it. I'll read that overnight.

MS DAVIES: I'm grateful, my Lady.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, the other order I signed related to, I think, some Curtis documents.

MS DAVIES: Oh, yes. That may well be correct, yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, Mr Gillis.

MR GILLIS: My Lady, might I just raise one matter and hand up a statement from a Mr Lugovoi which was provided to the various parties this morning and then if I could just explain the situation. (Handed)

Your Ladyship may recall that in connection with Mr Abramovich's application in March this year for further information in relation to the provenance of the Le Bourget transcript, both Mr Berezovsky and Mr Cotlick undertook to the court to notify the defendants in the event that they became aware of the possibility of further tape recordings of conversations.

Just for the record, my Lady, Mr Berezovsky's statement is at bundle J6/1, tab 20 at page 330 J6/1.20/330 and the relevant paragraph is paragraph 7, and Mr Cotlick's statement is at J6/1, tab 21 at page 331 J6/1.21/331, and again the relevant paragraph is paragraph 7.

Just to put this statement in context, my Lady may know that in 2010 Mr Berezovsky was successful in libel proceedings in front of Mr Justice Eady against Vladimir Terluk and that was in connection with allegations that Mr Berezovsky was involved in the death of Mr Litvinenko. Mr Terluk's appeal against that judgment is being heard this week and in that context yesterday this statement from Mr Lugovoi was referred to in open court and it refers both to the circumstances in which the Le Bourget recording was made and it refers to the possibility of further recordings.

My Lady, pursuant to Mr Berezovsky's and Mr Cotlick's obligations, we've provided a copy of this statement to the defendants in respect of that. My Lady, I think if I could just summarise the position very briefly and take your Ladyship to the relevant paragraphs because there are only a few paragraphs that are relevant.

Mr Lugovoi was the head of security at ORT and the relevant sections in the statement are paragraphs 77 through to 87 of Mr Lugovoi's statement, and if I could take your Ladyship to that just very briefly.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR GILLIS: Maybe I could just ask your Ladyship to read paragraphs 77 to 87.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. (Pause)

What's the date this was sworn?

MR GILLIS: This was sworn on 26 October 2011.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR GILLIS: So, as my Lady can see --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I haven't got a signature. I've seen the date at the top of the first page but as I have no signature --

MR GILLIS: My Lady, neither do I. I was just taking the date from the front page. I'll see if there is a sworn copy which we can produce to your Ladyship.

As your Ladyship will see, those paragraphs really deal with three matters. At paragraph 77 to 81 Mr Lugovoi is suggesting that meetings and conversations were routinely recorded. And then at paragraphs 82 to 87 he then describes how his deputy, Mr Mikhail Sazonov, arranged the remote recording at Le Bourget and I'm informed in Skadden's letter of 4 August 2011 -- and that's bundle L(2011)13/185 -- that Mr Abramovich has been in touch with Mr Sazonov.

Then, my Lady, of most direct relevance to the undertakings that were given in respect of further recordings, at paragraph 87 your Ladyship can see that

Mr Lugovoi explains that, following orders from Mr Patarkatsishvili in 2006, he ordered Mr Sazonov to transfer part of the recording archive to Georgia and that in Georgia Mr Patarkatsishvili is reported to have sorted the recordings into three categories of Sibneft, Rusal and ORT and he also asked Mr Sazonov to make a copy of the ORT recording which was kept by Mr Lugovoi --

MR SUMPTION: Of the Le Bourget recording.

MR GILLIS: I'm sorry, yes, of the Le Bourget recording, which was kept by Mr Lugovoi in Moscow.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right.

MR GILLIS: So, my Lady, no indication that Mr Berezovsky has access to any of these possible further recordings, but that's the further information that is available as regards the possibility of there being further recordings.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. So are you making any application?

MR GILLIS: No, I'm just bringing it to the court's --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Complying with the terms of the undertaking.

MR GILLIS: Exactly so.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right, thank you.

Mr Sumption, do you want to say anything about this?

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, what it appears to indicate is that the Le Bourget transcript, its survival appears to have been a matter of conscious selection on the part of Mr Patarkatsishvili, given that there seem to have been a large number of other recordings at one stage that may well throw some light on the history of events. But I'm not going to make submissions on that at the moment.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, your Ladyship didn't actually determine at what time we should sit tomorrow.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, I didn't. 10.30 tomorrow?

MR RABINOWITZ: Yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well. 10.30 tomorrow.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, Mr Rabinowitz.

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Abramovich, we were talking yesterday about the Dorchester Hotel meeting and you explained yesterday that you do not recall all the details of the Dorchester Hotel meeting but that you do recall some of them. I would like just to ask you about some of the details that you do recall.

There would obviously have been a discussion at the Dorchester Hotel meeting about the fact that the merger was with Mr Deripaska and that it was a 50/50 deal; is that right?

- A. It is possible that we exchanged a couple of words about that but we did speak about the merger a little bit.
- Q. Since it's your case that Mr Patarkatsishvili would have been very interested in understanding the detail of the transaction because you say he was going to be compensated based upon how you did, you would also have discussed the assets involved in the merger?
- A. No, we did not discuss those. The thing is -- and, if I may, I'd like to clarify. The thing is that, so far as I recall, by that time we had not yet agreed with respect to the other assets, we had only agreed about KrAZ and things around KrAZ: Krasnoyarsk Aluminium Plant, Achinsky Plant and the other things. These were the only ones we had already agreed upon by that time.

Q. But that would make it more likely rather than less likely that you would discuss what assets were involved in the transaction, wouldn't it?

A. No, it would not.

Q. Which assets do you say Mr Patarkatsishvili was protecting for you?

A. I cannot give you a list of the assets that he was protecting, but on the whole there was a problem with the Krasnoyarsk group. The Bratsk plant was working stably on the whole, was working in a stable manner.

Q. You see, Mr Abramovich, if, as you say, Mr Patarkatsishvili's role was to ensure that you had protection in respect of your assets, surely you would have told him what assets were now to be merged with Mr Deripaska and what assets were not?

A. At that time we had not yet decided that all the assets would be merged and we were not -- we had not decided how, we had not yet discussed how they would be merged. We had not yet decided that with Mr Deripaska.

Q. Would you at least accept that you would have told Mr Patarkatsishvili that?

A. I think that the reverse was true: that had I said this to Mr Patarkatsishvili, I would probably have spoken to him about the KrAZ assets. But I don't think that we were discussing this. There is a low probability that we did this. I mean, I was not intent on concealing this in any way, it was not my idea to hide this, but we just did not discuss this.

Q. Do you remember telling Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili that you had just been negotiating the transaction in London with Mr Deripaska's English lawyers?

A. I did not negotiate with English lawyers. That's why there was -- there was nothing that I could say because I don't think that I had had any meetings with English lawyers.

Q. Do you remember telling Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili that there had been negotiations in London with Mr Deripaska's team?

A. No, I did not say that. I have not said that.

Q. Do you remember saying that you had agreed with Mr Deripaska that your arrangements would be governed by English law?

A. I was not aware of that at that time. It's not that I was concealing this but I just didn't know it. It made no difference to me as to what the governing law would be.

Q. Mr Abramovich, we're not going back to this again but do you recall that the preliminary agreement that you made did say that the arrangements were to be governed by English law? Do you remember that?

A. I do remember that. What we discussed yesterday, there was a reference to English law and that's with respect to the agreement that was to be signed on the 15th. But I also remember that I did not read this agreement, therefore there is no way I could have known about this.

Q. I suggest to you --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I think what was said was "to be signed on the 15th", not "to be assigned on the 15th". What was said by the interpreter was "to be signed on the 15th". But could I clarify, please, whether "assigned" is being referred to by the witness here or "signed"?

MR RABINOWITZ: My Lady, is that addressed to the translator or would you like me to ask the question again?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: What did everybody else hear? I think it's just a transcription query.

MR RABINOWITZ: It should be "signed".

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: "Signed". Well, could that be corrected in the transcript, please.

MR RABINOWITZ: So, Mr Abramovich, what I suggest is that you did discuss all of these things with Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili at the Dorchester Hotel meeting. But you dispute that, do you?

A. Yes, I do dispute that, and I can explain the situation that appertained there and that may help to clarify the situation.

Q. If you want to provide a further explanation, will you please go ahead.

A. When we arrived at the Dorchester Hotel -- and I think it was well past midday, past 12 noon -- so we walked into the room and there was Mr Patarkatsishvili there. Oleg was, to put it mildly, surprised, and he was quite, quite upset, he was angry. And then we spent a lot of time, a long time, waiting for Mr Berezovsky to come to us and there was silence, there was silence there, oppressing silence, and Oleg left the room several times, he spoke on the phone with someone.

And when Berezovsky joined us, not only was it not a formal meeting because he was -- he was not properly attired, but when Berezovsky joined us, the conversation was a rather brief one, therefore there is no way we could have discussed all those details. More than that, moreover, I was not even myself aware of those details.

Q. Mr Abramovich, you're suggesting you weren't aware of details relating to which assets were going to be merged with Mr Deripaska?

A. No, I do not want to say that I did not know, I was not aware of the details of the assets that would be merged with Mr Deripaska's assets. Quite on the contrary: I was very well aware of that.

Q. Are you suggesting you weren't aware that there was going to be a 50/50 merger?

A. I knew that as well. What I'm saying is that your assertion with respect to English law is somewhat surprising to me because I never took part in this, I never participated in this -- definitely not with Berezovsky or Patarkatsishvili as to what the governing law would be and what law would apply where.

Q. The truth is --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Sorry, how long did the meeting when Mr Berezovsky arrived last?

A. Well, my feeling is that it was probably 20 to 30 minutes but it's really the feeling, the sense that I get now. Well, maybe a little bit longer than that but I cannot tell exactly. It was definitely not a long meeting. And we tried to defuse the situation, in a way, and improve the relationship somehow. But there was no one there who would be able to discuss questions of business.

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Abramovich, I think other witnesses suggest it was an hour. You wouldn't disagree with that, would you?

- A. I am not disputing anyone's evidence. What I'm saying is that this is my feeling, this is the sense that I got. I remember that the wait was very long but the meeting itself was a rather brief one.

The thing is that I was used to waiting, spending time waiting for Berezovsky, while for Oleg it was a first ever, so it was rather awkward. So -- he did not want to see Badri and so the whole thing, the whole thing was just unpleasant, even though at the end of the day everything -- at the end of the day everything went smoothly and we defused it, in a way.

- Q. Mr Abramovich, your evidence is that you, after spending a week in London, flew back to Moscow, got on the very next flight back or a flight back very quickly to go to London to discuss the merger with Mr Berezovsky, but you also say that when you arrived back in London for this meeting with Mr Berezovsky to talk about the merger, in effect nothing was said about it. I suggest --

- A. I'm not saying that nothing was said in a substantive manner. The substance was that there was going to be a merger, that the debt would be repaid, that Badri would get an airplane; these are the things that we discussed and that's it. The substance was that we need to put an end to the confrontation, draw a line, it's a new life beginning. But discussing the applicable law was definitely not part of the substance, the way I see it at least.

- Q. I suggest to you that there was a much greater discussion of the merger than you are suggesting, but you have disagreed with that.

I also suggest to you that it was also agreed at the Dorchester Hotel between yourself, Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili that you would manage the partnership's affairs in the merger with Mr Deripaska, and the partnership I'm referring to here is the partnership between yourself, Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili. Do you agree with that?

- A. No, I do not agree with this.

- Q. I also suggest to you that you also agreed with Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Berezovsky that the arrangements as between the three of you, just like your arrangement with Mr Deripaska, would be structured offshore and governed by English law.

- A. No, that was not the case.

- Q. You also agreed that although Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili would not be formally registered as shareholders in the new entity to be created, you would hold Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili's 25 per cent stake on trust for them; do you agree?

A. I do not agree with this either.

Q. And you also agreed that in order to ensure that Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili's minority interest was protected, nobody would sell out without the consent of the other parties; do you agree?

A. No, I do not agree with that.

Q. Now, one of the matters that you do accept was discussed at the Dorchester Hotel meeting was that a plane would be bought for Mr Patarkatsishvili; that's correct, isn't it?

A. Yes, that is correct.

Q. And do you say that your agreement to buy a plane for Mr Patarkatsishvili was in return for his assistance in enabling you to acquire the aluminium assets that you'd acquired in February 2000 or was it for a different reason that you agreed to buy this plane for Mr Patarkatsishvili?

A. Could you please repeat your question? I'm not sure I understood the second part of it. What was the other reason?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I think if you're saying, Mr Rabinowitz, if you're putting to the witness, "You say that your agreement to buy a plane", wouldn't it be easier just to put his statement to him?

MR RABINOWITZ: I want to check to see whether he actually remembers this, my Lady, but we can do it that way.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Okay. It's just that there is a difficulty in him taking on board, as it were, the two limbs of the statement that you're putting.

MR RABINOWITZ: I'll do it this way.

What do you say was the reason why you agreed to acquire a plane for Mr Patarkatsishvili at this meeting, Mr Abramovich?

A. Badri asked for a plane, so we discussed that. My feeling is that I believe that he wanted a plane, we also discussed that I would pay the five-year maintenance after the purchase of the plane, and it was all with respect to the aluminium assets that he had originally helped us acquire. So I think that's it.

Q. Again, you say he asked for a plane and you agreed that he should have a plane; that's correct, isn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. But again, can you just explain why you agreed that he could have a plane?

A. We agreed -- I mean, I agreed that a plane would be made available to him because he had given me a hand in -- given me assistance in the purchase of the original assets and the thing was that we were moving on to another transaction, a further transaction, and he had nothing on his hands. And so he asked me whether it would be appropriate for him to ask me to buy a plane for him and I said yes. By that time Badri was not a very wealthy individual. And so we bought the plane and we paid for the maintenance.

- Q. But do you not say, Mr Abramovich, that you had previously entered into commission agreements with Mr Patarkatsishvili and that his reward for assisting you with the original acquisition was documented in those commission agreements?
- A. Yes, this is what I'm saying. I -- one of the things that I'm saying is that there was a commission agreement and it was recorded on paper, but by the time the transaction was executed -- concluded with Oleg, Badri had not yet received anything, and prior to that we had agreed that he would not be asking for any payments.
- Q. But if you'd already agreed what he should get, as you claim, for his assistance, why should he then think he had a basis for asking for a plane as well?
- A. Why he thought so, I don't know, but he asked me and I agreed.
- Q. Well, why did you agree then?
- A. And I agreed because he had been of considerable assistance and his -- it was not very clear what his role would be in the future work with aluminium assets, and so I agreed to this. So he asked me and I agreed and that's it.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Did he get his commission payment as well?

A. Not by that time. He received it much later, I think it was in 2004. When we signed the agreement, I think there was a term of -- for two months before the payment could be made and then we moved on to another transaction. So we agreed at some point in time that we would not be making payment at that time, we would sort it out some time later. But because it was already the year 2000 we had paid quite a lot and the cashflow was like a constant cashflow, and I wouldn't say that we had forgotten about this but it just so happened, but by that time I had not yet made the payment.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So the plane was in addition to the payments you subsequently made under the commission agreement?

A. Yes, that was the case. That's the way it was.

MR RABINOWITZ: Are you sure about that, Mr Abramovich? Are you sure it's your evidence that you made a payment under those commission agreements?

A. If I understood your question correctly, your question was whether I had made a payment to Badri, whether it was a final settlement. Now, whether the payment was on the basis of the commission agreement or it was -- the reason for this was something different, that's a different matter. It was recorded in the form of a sale of shares actually.

Q. Mr Abramovich, the learned judge asked you -- my Lady asked you whether you had made a payment under the commission agreements and you said that you had, in 2004. And my question to you was whether you were sure that when you made a payment in 2004, that was a payment made under the commission agreement?

A. No, it was not a payment under the commission agreement. We recorded this as a share payment but it was on the basis of the debt that I -- or the payable that I had incurred prior to that on the basis, as a consequence of the commission agreement.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So the payment by shares which you subsequently made was in satisfaction, was it, of your obligations under the pre-existing commission agreement?

A. Yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: Now, we're going to look at these commission agreements in a little more detail but before we do, can we just be clear about this.

The commission agreements provided for a payment of around just over $100 million; is that right?

A. 115.

- Q. And the payment you made in 2004 was $585 million; is that right?
- A. Yes, that is correct.
- Q. And your evidence is that the $585 million payment was in satisfaction of an obligation to pay $115 million; is that right?
- A. I think you are distorting the sense of it a little bit but it was on the basis of that agreement, yes.
- Q. Well, I'm going to suggest that that makes no sense at all but perhaps we can start by looking at these commission agreements.

Now, your evidence I think is that the commission agreements were made with Mr Patarkatsishvili sometime around 15 February 2000, after you had concluded the agreement to acquire the aluminium assets on that day. That's correct, isn't it?

- A. Yes, so far as I can recall, it was very close to that time, if not on the very same day when we signed the agreement to make an additional payment to Mr Chernoi.
- Q. If you go to paragraph 157 at page 82 of bundle E1, tab 3 E1/03/82, page 183 in the Russian E1/03/183, we can see what you say about this. If you just read the first part of that paragraph, explaining the circumstances in which you say you made the agreement.

(Pause)

- A. Yes, I have read this.
- Q. Perhaps we can look at one of these agreements. You can find one of them at bundle H(A)18, page 162 in the English H(A)18/162 or page 156 in the Russian H(A)18/156. This agreement purports to have been with Dilcor International Limited: that was one of the four offshore companies which had acquired the aluminium assets under the 15 February agreement and I can tell you that the other three agreements are identical.

Let's just have a look at this contract. You can see, Mr Abramovich, that it's dated 3 February 2000; that is, before the master agreement was made on 15 February 2000. And that is a false date which has been inserted; that's correct, isn't it?

- A. Which is the false date: 3 February or 15 February is false?
- Q. To suggest, as this agreement does, that it was made on 3 February 2000 is false if your own evidence is correct because you say it was made on 15 February.
- A. Yes, that is true and this is exactly what I'm saying in my evidence.
- Q. And to be fair to you, when I asked you, in connection with the occasion on which you had been arrested, whether you -- by reference -- sorry. When I asked you, in connection with the occasion on which you had been arrested, whether you had ever made fabricated or false documents, you accepted that there was some backdating going on and this, presumably, you would say is just one of those occasions, would you?

A. Yes, this is the document that I had in mind.

Q. Well, we will see in due course that it's certainly not the only document.

But what I'm going to suggest to you, Mr Abramovich, is that the date is not the only thing that is fake or false about this document. Perhaps we can look at clause 1. Do you see that clause 1 says:

"The Intermediary..."

And the intermediary for these purposes is Mr Patarkatsishvili.

"... shall find out any information on owners and potential sellers of shares in the following issuers:

"Krasnoyarsk Aluminium Plant..."

"Bratsk Aluminium Plant..."

"Krasnoyarsk Hydropower Plant..."

If this contract was made on 15 February, the day on which the contract for the acquisition of these assets had already been concluded, what sense was there in inserting a provision into the contract which suggested that Mr Patarkatsishvili's role was to be to find out information about these assets? That had already been done.

A. This contract, on the whole, describes the work that Badri had carried out, but -- and we did backdate the contract, but the work that is set out here is something that he did do. So in that sense it is truthful: it corresponds to reality.

Q. Well, I suggest to you that that is not so. Let's look at the next clause:

"The Intermediary shall negotiate the potential sale of said shares to the Buyer by the persons referred to in paragraph 1..."

Now, again, at the date you say you made this contract with Mr Patarkatsishvili, that had already taken place, had it not?

A. Well, practically all the things that are listed here, they had all taken place already by that time.

Q. Then what was the point of producing a contract which represented on its face that these were things which were still to be done? You could just as easily have produced a contract which said, "In connection with the work you have done, we will pay you $115 million".

A. Unfortunately I cannot say that because I did not take part in the drafting of this contract. Badri I think did this with our lawyers or with some of our employees.

Q. Well, Mr Abramovich, what you say in your witness statement is that:

"After [the 15 February agreement was signed with Mr Deripaska] Mr Patarkatsishvili wanted to formally document his entitlement to a fee... We discussed this in my office... and agreed a fee of some US$115 million. I remember that I called in Ms... Panchenko and asked her to process the relevant documents..."

So it sounds as if you were involved in this?

A. When you said "Deripaska" -- it was translated as Deripaska -- Deripaska had nothing to do with this. Either it was the wrong translation or it was the wrong question.

Q. Well, I don't know what the translation was, but the question was clear. You had made an agreement with Mr Deripaska -- sorry, you hadn't, you're quite right. I apologise.

The acquisition had been made from Trans-World and Mr Chernoi and then, following that, you explain in your witness statement that you had discussed and agreed a contract with Mr Patarkatsishvili and you then called Ms Panchenko in to assist in the documentation of it?

A. Yes, that is true. Now, if you call that taking part, active part in drafting the contract, well, I beg to differ.

Q. Well, let's just look at a few more clauses in this contract. Do you see clause 4?

"The Buyer shall hereby determine the following terms and conditions pursuant to which he is willing to buy any shares...

"4.1. The shareholdings shall be major;

"4.2. The maximum share purchase price shall not exceed..."

Then certain prices are inserted there.

Now, that was all a sham, Mr Abramovich, because you absolutely understood at that time precisely what it is you were paying for these assets. Do you accept that?

A. Do I accept what: whether this is a sham or the whole thing is a sham? If backdating the contract is something you call a sham, then so be it. But...

Q. It's not just backdating the contract, Mr Abramovich --

THE INTERPRETER: I'm so sorry, my Lady, I'm afraid I missed out one sentence in what Mr Abramovich said, the very last one. Can I ask him, with your permission, to repeat the last sentence?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, certainly.

Can you repeat the last sentence, Mr Abramovich, please.

A. So what I said is that if you call this a sham just because it was backdated, then so be it. But other than that, the substance is set out here.

Q. Look at clause 5 -- sorry.

A. But once again --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, no, let the interpreter finish, please.

THE INTERPRETER: I'm almost done. I was listening to Mr Abramovich.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right, okay. Go on, Mr Rabinowitz.

MR RABINOWITZ: Look at clause 5, Mr Abramovich:

"The Buyer and the Intermediary have agreed that, in case the share sellers propose terms and conditions worse than those specified in paragraph 4.2, the Intermediary shall be obliged to compensate any negative difference to the Buyer out of its own funds."

So this was suggesting that part of what you had agreed with Mr Patarkatsishvili was the possibility that he would have to make some sort of balancing payment if the terms agreed were worse than as identified here.

A. Let me say once again that I did not take part in the drafting of this contract, so I can only tell you what my ideas or what my presumptions are.

Q. You see, this, I suggest to you, is a totally false contract.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, hang on. Let's just start with this clause, please.

Was it a term of your deal with Badri that in the event that the terms and conditions were worse than those specified in 4.2, Badri was to make a balancing payment to you out of his own funds?

- A. We did not agree on that term. It is worded in -- couched in very strange terms here. What happened was that Badri did want me to do this deal, he wanted to push me towards doing this deal, and he didn't care at what price I was going to buy this. And we agreed that I would not buy this at a -- for more than a certain price.

Now, why they listed those figures here, I don't know. There are many figures here that we never discussed. Maybe the lawyers needed this or maybe Badri wanted this, but I cannot give you any comment on this because I did not take part on this. But in general we agreed on something, but not more than that.

- MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Abramovich, your own evidence is that you first discussed this with Mr Patarkatsishvili on 15 February, which was after you had actually reached agreement with the sellers of the aluminium assets. That's correct?

- A. The fact that we needed to sign this protocol is something that we agreed upon on or around the 15th.
- Q. Your evidence is very clear, Mr Abramovich: that is when you say you discussed this and agreed it with Mr Patarkatsishvili and that was after the master agreement had already been made. Do you agree?

A. What is the master agreement?

Q. The agreement --

A. Is that the agreement between us and TWG et altera?

Could I ask you to repeat your question, if I may?

Q. Your evidence is that after you had agreed with Trans-World and the other sellers on 15 February the terms on which you were acquiring the assets, you then had a discussion with Mr Patarkatsishvili about compensation?

A. We had previously agreed that Badri would get a commission. That's -- all the rest of it is something that we agreed upon in the process of it.

Q. And by that stage you would have known full well the price at which these assets were being acquired?

A. By the time this agreement was concluded we did know the price at which everything was being acquired because everything had already been signed.

Q. There could, therefore, have been no purpose in clause 5, which suggested a possibility of an outcome which was different to that which already existed?

A. From that point of view, everything that is listed here is something that could have not happened because everything had already happened. Not just this particular paragraph; everything.

Q. The point about this particular paragraph is that it suggested that the payment that Mr Patarkatsishvili might receive might not be $115 million, indeed that he might have to pay something to you, and that was impossible at the time this contract was made.

A. That is true. That is something that was impossible.

Q. And the same is true of clause 6, which again is based upon the false notion that there was still negotiation to be done in relation to these contracts?

A. By the time this protocol was signed, all the negotiations had already been carried out and concluded.

Q. And that is why I suggested to you that this is a sham agreement: it does not possibly represent the agreement you actually made.

A. No, this is not the case because it sets out something that we had agreed upon except that it was backdated. It sets out more details than the details that we had discussed, but the substance is this.

Q. Mr Abramovich, you and Mr Patarkatsishvili would obviously have known the true position in relation to any agreement that you did make with regard to commission; would you accept that?

A. If I understood your question correctly, yes, we did know what the actual situation was.

- Q. Can you then explain why you and Mr Patarkatsishvili considered it appropriate to produce an agreement which falsely misrepresented what had been agreed?
- A. I do not agree with your statement that it misrepresents this; it just goes into greater detail than what was necessary and what was the tradition. The only question is that it was backdated; I agree with that. But other than that, it sets out everything correctly, except that it goes into greater detail than it should have gone into. But drafting this agreement were lawyers, therefore I cannot give you any comment as to why they saw it appropriate to go into all those details.
- Q. Mr Abramovich, I'm not going to go through the other three so-called commission agreements; they are all equally dubious in the same way that this agreement is. But what I want to ask you is this: why do you say -- well, I think I may have asked that already actually.
- You see, what I want to suggest to you, Mr Abramovich, is that your evidence about these commission agreements is simply untrue. Do you want to comment on that?
- A. I do not agree with this.
- Q. Can we at least agree about this: do you say that it was only after the Dorchester Hotel meeting on 13 March 2000 that Mr Patarkatsishvili had these agreements notarised?

A. I am not saying this. I found this out only when some documents appeared in the process. But I was not aware of that.

Q. But I think you say in your evidence and indeed you rely in your evidence upon the fact that Mr Patarkatsishvili had these agreements notified on 16 March, that is to say immediately on his return from the Dorchester Hotel meeting?

For your Ladyship that's at paragraph 176 of Mr Abramovich's statement E1/03/88.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I don't think it is.

THE WITNESS: Can I read this?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: It's not paragraph 176, it's another paragraph. There's something there about it, because I've read it, but it's not that paragraph.

MR RABINOWITZ: I think it's common ground that these agreements were only notarised --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, but I don't think Mr Abramovich is saying that he knew it at the time.

MR SUMPTION: Paragraph 175, my Lady, what my learned friend wanted E1/03/87.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you.

MR RABINOWITZ: Now, can I ask you this, Mr Abramovich: if these documents had been in existence, as you suggest, since 15 February 2000, can you offer an explanation as to why Mr Patarkatsishvili would not have had these notarised immediately and would only have had these notarised on 16 March 2000?

A. I have no knowledge about this. I can only speculate.

Q. Can you offer a suggestion as to why you suggest that might have been the case?

A. I believe that because we did the deal with Deripaska, Badri was left with an aftertaste that Oleg will squeeze me out and he would not get anything at all at the end of the day. But this is just my perception, the feeling that I have. It's just my speculation, purely my speculation. I think he -- something put him on his guard, maybe during the meeting at the Dorchester or after it. Maybe he was thinking about bringing an action with this and that's why he had it notarised. But I do not have any other ideas.

Q. Is it not actually your evidence that these commission agreements had, long before the Dorchester Hotel meeting, been agreed between you and Mr Patarkatsishvili -- sorry, let me start that again.

Your evidence is that you and Mr Patarkatsishvili had, long before the Dorchester Hotel meeting, agreed that these so-called commission agreements would be superseded by a further agreement between the two of you. Is that not your evidence?

A. No, I don't recall saying that those would be superseded by others, or maybe I misunderstood your question.

Q. Well, let me tell you what you said at paragraph 157, page 82 of the English E1/03/82 and 183 of the Russian version E1/03/183. After talking about how these agreements were created, you say:

"In the end I did not pay him this fee because we both agreed shortly afterwards that we should wait and see how things developed."

Now, that suggests, does it not, that shortly after you had made these agreements you decided that they would be superseded and not in fact represent the contract you made?

A. Well, maybe this is what the English translation says but in Russian it's very clear that we were not talking about any new agreements. There was no talk, no mention of any new agreements.

Q. Well, what did you mean when you said there, "we... agreed shortly afterwards that we should wait and see how things developed"?

A. Well, before the transaction with Oleg was done, everything was under a major risk. The 115 million compared to the original transaction was a lot of money. And so we agreed that we'll wait and then we'll see.

Q. You agreed that you would wait and then you would see what exactly?

- A. How the situation evolves.
- Q. And are you suggesting that, depending on how it evolved, the amount you would have to pay would either be greater or less than $115 million? Is that what you say you agreed?
- A. No, this is not what we agreed. There were many assets that were under risk; we could have lost many of them. For instance, the Achinsk Alumina Plant was in bankruptcy and if it hadn't been there at all, if there had been no Achinsk there, then it would have lost sense at all: there would have been no point in entering into that transaction because that was the only plant that actually produced the feedstock, the actual raw material.
- Q. Now, you explained yesterday that the deal that you did with Mr Deripaska in March meant that the aluminium transaction generally was a remarkably good transaction. Do you remember that?
- A. Yes, I do recall that. It was a very good transaction and that's why, at the end of the day, I paid more to Badri.
- Q. Why, following the Dorchester Hotel meeting with Mr Deripaska, when Mr Patarkatsishvili would have learnt that the deal that you had done was a remarkably good deal, why then should he rush off and have these commission agreements notarised, given that you say they were largely irrelevant because what he was going to receive was going to depend on how things turned out?

Shall I break that down into shorter questions for you?

Now, as a result of the transaction with Mr Deripaska, the aluminium transaction that Mr Patarkatsishvili had, in a sense, introduced you to was a remarkable transaction; I think you've agreed with that. Your evidence is that Mr Patarkatsishvili --

A. Yes, I agree with that, yes.

Q. Your evidence is that Mr Patarkatsishvili, after hearing about the deal that you had done with Mr Deripaska, at that point ran off and notarised these commission agreements; is that right?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: He didn't know that at the time, Mr Rabinowitz.

MR RABINOWITZ: No, that's his explanation now. It's his explanation in the witness statement.

That is your evidence, isn't it? That is what you have suggested was the reason why he went on the 16th to notarise this? In fact you repeated that evidence this morning.

A. I'm not saying that he did this on the 16th. What I'm saying is that when I received the documents in the course of these proceedings I saw that I believe it was notarised on the 16th. This is the only thing that I can say.

And I speculated that perhaps he was unhappy with something or maybe he did not trust or believe Oleg; maybe he did not believe me or he did not believe that I would be able to structure a good relationship with Oleg; maybe there were other things that he did not believe in. But this is pure speculation.

Q. Why was any view that he had about Mr Deripaska relevant to your obligation to pay him commission?

A. Well, once again, I can only speculate. This is pure presumption on my part -- or assumption, rather.

Q. You see, Mr Abramovich, what I suggest to you is that these so-called commission agreements were only produced after the Dorchester Hotel meeting and they were produced by you and Ms Panchenko knowing that they were false agreements and that they were never intended by either side to have any legal effect at all.

Do you want to comment on that?

A. I disagree with you. I understand that I cannot be my own counsel but then, I don't know, then it would be strange for me -- it's really -- it appears strange. Why on earth did Patarkatsishvili then go and have those agreements notarised?

Q. I'll tell you exactly why, Mr Abramovich. You and Mr Patarkatsishvili had agreed at the Dorchester Hotel that you would be paying a certain sum of money towards the acquisition of a plane by him; that's right, isn't it? Mr Patarkatsishvili wanted documentation to be able to show to a western bank so that he could open an account into which you would be making payments so that he could acquire this plane.

A. Can I comment?

Q. Please.

A. $115 million could buy you four planes, I think.

Q. Well, Mr Abramovich, there are documents in the disclosure which show payments by you or by your companies to a company that Mr Patarkatsishvili set up called Bili SA, which was the company he used to acquire, maintain and fit out his aeroplane, running to at least $50 million over the course of a year, the year immediately following the Dorchester Hotel meeting; and that Bili SA's account was set up with a western bank called Kathrein & Co; and indeed that in a file that we have found labelled "Kathrein & Co" were to be found these notarised agreements.

Now, you may not know anything about the detail of that and that's why I'm not going to take you through all the detail about that, but if you want to comment on that, please do.

A. To be honest, I'm not sure I understand the connection between the two. Maybe it was a very long sentence. But, once again, you do not need 115 million to buy a plane; the more so since we said we would be providing funding for the maintenance of the plane.

Q. What about the maintenance of the plane over a period of time?

A. It was five years.

Q. Five years?

A. If my memory serves me right, it was five years.

MR RABINOWITZ: Okay. Now, we've dealt with events going up to March 2000 and I now want to move on to the events of the summer of 2000.

My Lady, this may be a convenient moment for a break.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well, I'll take a break. Ten minutes.

(11.34 am)

(A short break)

(11.52 am)

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Abramovich, we're going to now move on to the events of summer 2000 and can I begin by asking you, please, to be given bundle A1 and to go to tab 2, page 7

A1/02/7. It's Mr Berezovsky's particulars of claim.
What I hope you have it open at is paragraph C18, where Mr Berezovsky describes what transpired in late August 2000, after the ORT broadcast relating to the Kursk.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Does Mr Abramovich have it in the Russian?

MR RABINOWITZ: There isn't a Russian particulars of claim.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. So perhaps the translator could kindly come forward and translate it for him.

(Pause)

THE INTERPRETER: Mr Rabinowitz, did you say C18?

MR RABINOWITZ: So if you could read C17(1), (2) and (3).

THE INTERPRETER: (1), (2) and (3).

MR RABINOWITZ: And also C18 and the first sentence of C19, please. I'm sorry, I know that's a lot.

THE INTERPRETER: C17...?

MR RABINOWITZ: C18 and the first sentence of C19.

THE INTERPRETER: And the first sentence of C19. Thank you very much.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Do sit down if you would like to.

(Pause)

MR RABINOWITZ: I'm sorry that took so long.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you very much.

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Abramovich, my question is: do you say you had no personal knowledge of the details of the meetings described in those paragraphs between Mr Berezovsky and Mr Voloshin and Mr Berezovsky and President Putin as well as the meetings which are described there attended by Mr Patarkatsishvili?

- A. Today, by now, I have read so many times about it, I've heard so many times about it, it's difficult for me to be certain what I knew at that time or not. But it seems to me that at that time I was not aware of these details.
- Q. But you were, I think, close enough to President Putin to know that in August 2000 President Putin was not happy about Mr Berezovsky's involvement with ORT. Is that right?
- A. I can agree with the second part, that I might have assumed or I might have known that President Putin wasn't very happy with Berezovsky's activity in ORT, but I would not assert that I was that close to President Putin.
- Q. You say you would not assert that you were that close to President Putin. Would you assert that you had a reasonably good relationship with President Putin at this time?
- A. Yes, we had good relationship, yes.
- Q. And did you not come to the chateau in Cap d'Antibes at the end of August 2000 to tell Mr Berezovsky that President Putin was unhappy with his involvement with ORT?

A. August, you meant August, I was right to understand that? To be honest, I don't remember it. August?

Q. Well, Ms Gorbunova remembers this, Mr Abramovich, in evidence that I don't think was challenged. Do you dispute it?

A. To be honest, I don't remember what happened in August.

Q. You can put away bundle A1. Can I ask that you be given bundle H(A)21 and go to page 143 in the English H(A)21/143 and 143R in the Russian H(A)21/143R.

Just so you know what you're looking at -- you're probably very familiar with this -- this is an open letter from Mr Berezovsky to President Putin in relation to ORT that was published in Kommersant on 4 September 2000.

Can I ask you, please, to read the opening three paragraphs, which I think will give you a flavour for what Mr Berezovsky is saying. (Pause)

A. I've read it.

Q. And you would have been aware of this at the time?

A. Yes, I read it at that time.

Q. And can I just ask you to look at the last two paragraphs of the letter, where Mr Berezovsky sets out a proposal that he's putting forward to President Putin about placing his shares in ORT "in a trust to be managed by a group of journalists and other representatives of the public". The last two paragraphs. (Pause)

A. I've read it.

Q. Mr Berezovsky says he will put his shares in a trust to be managed by these people and he invites the government to do the same.

Would you accept, Mr Abramovich, reading what Mr Berezovsky says here, that at least at this time, the time of this letter, he had no intention of selling his shares in ORT?

A. From what is written here, at that moment he had no wish to sell ORT shares.

May I -- your Ladyship, may I draw your attention to the first paragraph.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

A. It says that the president wants to manage ORT himself; it doesn't say that the president wants to obtain the shares. He's just talking about management and control.

MR RABINOWITZ: I'm not sure that was remotely connected to my question, Mr Abramovich, but thank you for that.

Now, a few days after this open letter of 4 September, Mr Berezovsky announced in a press conference the make-up of teletrust; that was the entity into which he planned to place management control. Do you remember that?

A. I don't remember the press conference but I've heard about it.

Q. So that was the position at the end of September, with Mr Berezovsky having said that he would put his shares into this trust to be managed by people, and at that stage I think you accept Mr Berezovsky had made clear that he did not wish or intend to sell ORT?

A. Yes, that is so. May I comment?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No. Let's get on now, please.

MR RABINOWITZ: Now, your case is, I think, that Mr Patarkatsishvili started discussing with you around mid-October 2000 that you might buy

Mr Patarkatsishvili's and Mr Berezovsky's stake in ORT.

Is that correct?

A. Yes, that is so.

Q. And in fact you say Mr Patarkatsishvili was pressuring you to consider doing this. What pressure do you say that Mr Patarkatsishvili placed upon you?

A. He was trying to talk me into it quite intensely.

Q. And I think you suggest that Mr Patarkatsishvili hoped that if Mr Berezovsky sold the shares, that would mean that Mr Berezovsky would calm down and, you say, the potentially difficult situation around Mr Berezovsky would also be defused. That's what you say at paragraph 214 of your statement E1/03/98.

A. Yes, that's right.

Q. Mr Abramovich, why would you be concerned about what the political situation was around Mr Berezovsky at this time? We're talking about October 2000.

A. Do I understand your question correctly: why was I concerned with the situation around Berezovsky?

Q. Why would you be concerned that the situation around Mr Berezovsky was one that perhaps needed to be defused? Why should it matter to you?

A. At that time everybody knew that we were quite close to each other and that most of his money he derives from me, so I was concerned. I was concerned with what was going on around him; it could have reflected on me as well.

Q. And even if what you say about Mr Patarkatsishvili pressuring you around mid-October is true, that is not evidence that Mr Berezovsky himself at this stage had indicated any wish to sell ORT, is it?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, I'm not sure it's for him to comment on --

MR RABINOWITZ: Let me rephrase that question.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: -- whether or not something amounts to evidence.

MR RABINOWITZ: You're not at this stage -- and we're talking about mid-October -- suggesting that Mr Berezovsky himself had indicated any wish to sell ORT, are you?

A. In mid-October, I don't think so.

Q. And then, of course, on 26 October 2000 President Putin made a direct and public threat against Mr Berezovsky. Do you remember that?

A. From what I remember, Berezovsky's name wasn't actually mentioned. But Mr Berezovsky must have taken it as a direct threat, one can assume that, but his surname wasn't actually mentioned.

Q. Well, perhaps we can look at the report of this: it's at H(A)22 at page 260 H(A)22/260. I don't think there is a Russian translation of this. This is a report in the Moscow Times on October 27:

"President Vladimir Putin warned Russian's powerful oligarchs that the state would beat them with 'a cudgel' if they stood in the way of reform.

"In an interview with Le Figaro newspaper ahead of a visit to France, the Kremlin leader said business bosses who amassed vast fortunes in the immediate post-Soviet era were trying to use the media to intimidate political institutions.

"The state has a cudgel in its hands that you use to hit just once, but on the head,' Putin told the newspaper, which published the interview Thursday.

"We haven't used this cudgel yet. We've just brandished it, which is enough to keep someone's attention. The day we get really angry, we won't hesitate to use it,' he said.

"It is inadmissible to blackmail the state. If necessary, we will destroy those instruments that allow this blackmail.'

"Putin was responding to a question about criticism of him by Boris Berezovsky, a business magnate with substantial media interests who quit Parliament in July after accusing Putin of trying to turn Russia into a Latin American-style regime."

It was not just Mr Berezovsky who would have interpreted this as a threat by President Putin to him; you presumably would have understood it in the same way?

- A. Well, if I had been trying to blackmail the state, I would have interpreted the same way. What it says is those who blackmail the state -- if I heard and understood the translation correctly -- so those who blackmail the state may get a cudgel blow on their head. So had I been trying to blackmail the state, I would have interpreted it in that way, as a threat.

Q. Mr Abramovich, that is not even close to an answer to my question. My question to you was: it wasn't just Mr Berezovsky who interpreted this as a threat by President Putin to him; you would have understood it -- this may have been the translation -- in the same way, that is to say a threat to Mr Berezovsky?

A. Well, it can be assumed. I would imagine that at that time I would have interpreted it like that, perhaps, I'm not sure; but yes, there is a chance and a probability that I might have done. One has to be very much in the context to understand what's said here.

Q. Now, that was on 26 October and then on 6 December 2000 you and Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Berezovsky met at Le Bourget.

A. Yes.

Q. And the meeting with Mr Berezovsky was in France because that was where Mr Berezovsky was then living?

A. Yes.

Q. Can I then ask you to take up the transcript of the Le Bourget meeting and can you please be given bundles E6 and E7. Now, I will try and ensure that you have a reference to what you want to see in E7 by giving box references and, where possible, page references as well, so you can see your Russian version of your comments.

Can we start, please, on box 28, which is at page 8 of E6 E6/01/8 and page 9 of E7 E7/01/9. There is, I think, agreement between you and Mr Berezovsky that this section of the transcript records you and Mr Patarkatsishvili discussing, by reference to a document, the sums which you owed to Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili. Correct?

A. Yes.

Q. Is this how discussions between you and Mr Patarkatsishvili were usually conducted?

A. One part of discussion was going on as usual but most of it were not as usual.

Q. Which part of the discussion would be as usual: the part to do with how much they were to receive?

A. More or less, yes. More or less, yes. The discussion on amounts, we did from time to time sit down and check, verify how much I was still owing.

Q. So is it right then that you would discuss with Mr Patarkatsishvili the cash or the income that you had generated from your dealings with Sibneft?

A. Yes, one can say that. Not just Sibneft; from the oil business. It's not really revenue or income; it's how much I was still owing, how much was outstanding. It wasn't directly linked to income or revenue.

Q. Well, we'll come back to that, but don't put away E6 and E7. Can I ask that you be given the bolshoi balance, please. Your Ladyship I think has it on the computer but it's not on Magnum.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: When you say "on the computer", you mean it's on a USB stick?

MR RABINOWITZ: I believe so.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, it's on the hard drive and if a legal assistant could sit behind the witness, she could get it on to the screen and it could be consulted in the original Excel format.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, that would be helpful.

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Abramovich, while that's being done, are you familiar with this document, the bolshoi balance?

A. I've never seen it. I never took part in drawing it up. Moreover, I hadn't seen it even when I was preparing for these proceedings. So now it will be the first time that I set my eyes on it.

Q. Okay, that's fine.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Could you tell me whether it's -- I've got two Excel spreadsheets here.

MR RABINOWITZ: One's in Russian.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: One is in English and one is in Russian, yes, fine. Thank you.

MR RABINOWITZ: Do you have it on your screen yet?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: It will go on the screen in the Russian because I've got it on my own computer here.

MR RABINOWITZ: Right, I think it's on your screen.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just before we get there,

Mr Rabinowitz, at box 29, Mr Abramovich says he believes he came to the meeting "with a simple spreadsheet provided to me by Mr Shvidler, reflecting mutual accounting". Is that this spreadsheet?

MR RABINOWITZ: I don't believe so.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Have we got the spreadsheet in evidence?

MR RABINOWITZ: No disclosure at all has been made of any such document.

MR SUMPTION: It doesn't survive.

MR RABINOWITZ: If it existed.

Now, can you look on your screen, Mr Abramovich.

I want just to explain to you how this document works. The first section on the first page, starting with the reference to the administrative territorial unit total, that part of the document shows your cash receipts by month from various sources.

So, just taking an example, if you look across at the first line, you will see that in the year 2000, the first line is dealing with your ZATOs receipts and this shows that in the year 2000, you generated something like $1.45 billion in cash from the ZATOs. Do you see that? The very first line of the document.

A. I can see the line, yes.

Q. And would you accept that this gives you a fair idea of the amount of profits or income that you were generating from the ZATOs?

A. I can't even comment this. I've no idea what this reflects. I have no knowledge on this matter at all. I mean, I can listen to it all, with pleasure, but I can add nothing.

Q. Let me ask you this, if you say you don't know about that: would you accept that what this document shows is that it was possible for you and your colleagues to calculate just how much money you were making from your dealings with Sibneft at any point in time?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: When you say "your dealings", what are you referring to, Mr Rabinowitz?

MR RABINOWITZ: Well, your Ladyship will recall two days ago we talked about the trading companies --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Transfers between -- dealings between the trading companies and Sibneft?

MR RABINOWITZ: And indeed the use of the ZATOs and the tax-efficient vehicles.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: You were able to calculate at any point in time how much income you were generating from being able to own and control Sibneft in that way?

A. I will repeat the question to see if I understand correctly. Is it true that I know that my colleagues could estimate and calculate how much money we earned from ZATOs operations; is that the question? I am convinced that my colleagues could estimate and calculate how much we were earning; what I can't comment on is whether the table reflects that or not.

Q. All right. Let's just put that to one side. That's very helpful.

If you go back then to the discussions at Le Bourget in bundles E6 and E7 E6/01/8, again, if you look first at box 29, I want to ask you about your commentary to this. You refer here to having come to the meeting "with a simple spreadsheet" and then later down in the commentary you refer, you say, "By way of background to the contents of that table", which is the simple spreadsheet, to a claim in your third witness statement that you had previously agreed to pay Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili $305 million. Do you see that?

A. Yes, I see that.

Q. In fact you have produced no documents whatsoever, not a single one, which support the existence of any such agreement; that is right, is it not?

A. That is so. But the transcript at Le Bourget is considered by you as evidence, as document, and it's discussed here. All I'm doing is I'm commenting the conversation. There's nothing else here.

Q. Prior to the disclosure of the Le Bourget transcript, you have never previously made any suggestion that there had been such an agreement under which you'd paid $305 million.

A. I don't remember it, or didn't remember it. This is reconstruction; this is my attempt at remembering on the basis of what I read. I didn't remember it myself; I was just trying to comment on this conversation.

Q. You see, Mr Abramovich, I have to suggest to you that you have simply made up the idea that you had this agreement to pay $305 million in the hope of being able to explain away parts of the Le Bourget transcript that, on their face, appear very strongly to undermine your case.

Do you want to comment on that?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just a second, Mr Rabinowitz. There are a number of questions tucked up there. I mean, put to him the suggestion that he's trying to explain away the Le Bourget transcript and put to him, if you like, the separate question that it undermines the case. But I think he's going to get confused otherwise.

MR RABINOWITZ: I will just put the first of the questions.

I suggest to you, Mr Abramovich, that you have simply made up this claim to recollect this agreement in order to explain away aspects of the Le Bourget transcript. Do you accept that?

A. No, I don't accept that.

Q. Let's then look at the relevant part of the transcript.

Can you go, please, to box 33. It begins at page 12 of bundle E6, on to page 13 E6/01/12. This, I think, begins a conversation about the figures. And if you go to box 35 at the bottom of page 13 E6/01/13, you say there:

"So, this is last year's. That is what we had agreed, 275 million."

And that's you referring to the $275 million figure and your evidence is that this was an amount that was related to Sibneft in the sense, at least, that you intended to source this amount from the oil trading business cashflows; is that right?

A. I think I've lost the thread of the question. You -- are you asking me whether this amount derives from Sibneft cashflows or from the trading companies' cashflows? Is that what you're asking me?

Q. I'm saying that it related to Sibneft in the sense, at least, that you intended to source this amount from the oil trading business cashflows.

- A. Well, this passage describes my debt to Mr Berezovsky but it can be concluded that this will come from the cashflow of oil trading companies, of course.
- Q. Mr Berezovsky says that the $275 million figure reflected 50 per cent of the profits you said you had generated from trading Sibneft oil over a certain period and this figure was therefore what you owed to Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili. But I take it you disagree with that?
- A. I disagree with that.
- Q. If you look then at box 37, do you see you say:
- "And 30 million -- it was... Aluminium."
- A. Yes, I can see that.
- Q. And again you say that this related to money generated from your aluminium investments; is that right?
- A. Yes, that is so.
- Q. So again, Mr Berezovsky says that it was due to Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Berezovsky because of your joint investment with them in aluminium. But again, I take it you disagree?
- A. I disagree, and I can explain and clarify at some point, when you think it's convenient.
- Q. Well, we'll get to that point in due course.
- Mr Abramovich, if, as you've suggested, it was always just a question of how much was due to Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Berezovsky and if the reason for the payment of any particular amount was completely unconnected to the source, why would you be bothering to tell Mr Patarkatsishvili the source of the money?

- A. In October or in September 2000, when Mr Berezovsky left Russia, it turned out that all his accounts had been frozen and I think all he had was $1 million to call his own. He would not have lived long on that $1 million. So Badri came to see me and said, "Listen, the situation is such that Boris cannot go back to Russia, so we have a request to you: please give us a large amount of money, pay us a large amount of money, and we shall keep it for a rainy day".

Because the amount was 275 or $300 million, it was such a huge amount for that time, I didn't quite understand where I would get it from. So we took out a loan. And when I was explaining to him that it was not possible, I said, "Listen, I'll get this from there, I'll get that from there, I'll get a bit from aluminium"; I was explaining to him where we will source the cash from. And this is -- then in part we're just repeating that conversation.

- Q. Mr Patarkatsishvili would not have been interested in the source of the money, Mr Abramovich, would he, if your story is true?

A. In ordinary times, in normal life, in ordinary life, he wouldn't have been interested. But because he told me, he gave me this challenge from Mr Berezovsky that by the end of December, as far as I remember, he needed this 300 million, then yes, he was bothered and interested as to whether I was able to do it and where I would source the money from and perhaps I would borrow some money, et cetera, et cetera.

Q. Now, your evidence about how this figure of around $300 million was reached involves you saying that this was the amount which Mr Patarkatsishvili had demanded as a safety cushion for himself and Mr Berezovsky. Is that right?

A. Yes, it's right.

Q. But if that is right, can you explain why Mr Patarkatsishvili's response to being told about what was coming from aluminium was to say, "Ah, Aluminium. Yes, correct. It's 305"?

A. I've no idea why he said that. How can I say? How can I comment what he has said and why?

Q. You see, I suggest to you that it is simply not compatible with your suggestion that this figure was simply a safety cushion that Mr Patarkatsishvili had demanded. It only makes sense on the basis that your profits in the aluminium were the reason for the amount of payment being made. That's right, isn't it?

A. No, that is not right.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just a second.

Mr Abramovich, it was put to you:

"It only makes sense on the basis that your profits in the aluminium were the reason for the amount of payment being made."

Do you want to comment on that point?

A. I'm sorry, I do not agree with this.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Thank you.

MR RABINOWITZ: Can I ask you next, please, to go to box 155 at page 58 in E6 E6/01/58 and page 55 in E7 E7/01/55.

You say in your witness statement, Mr Abramovich, that between boxes 155 and 450 there is a discussion relevant to ORT and that is why I want to look at what is said here, starting at around this point.

Are you there yet, Mr Abramovich?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, I'm just looking at box 156. You appear to be asking Mr Patarkatsishvili whether he planned to go to Moscow from time to time. Do you see that?

A. Yes, I can see 156.

Q. And Mr Patarkatsishvili, in response to your asking whether he had plans to go to Moscow, says:

"So far, no."

A. Yes, I can see that.

Q. And then he goes on to say, as you comment, that this was because there had been a raid on ORT. That's correct, isn't it?

A. May I just read this?

Q. Do.

A. If I have to comment my own comments, I would like to refresh them in my memory.

Q. Well, just read 159, which is where it's clear that you link this to the fact that there had been a raid on ORT.

(Pause)

You shouldn't have to read too far ahead, Mr Abramovich, to answer the question I've just asked you.

A. Be so kind and repeat your question again, please.

Q. Mr Patarkatsishvili, in answer to you asking him whether he had plans to go to Moscow, said:

"So far, no."

And then Mr Patarkatsishvili went on to link this to the fact that there had been a raid on ORT. Is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. And it is fair to say that Mr Patarkatsishvili thought that the raid on ORT was aimed at, among others, him, and this is why the fact that there was a raid on ORT was considered by him to be a reason why he would not personally go back to Moscow at that time; do you agree?

A. Yes, it can be interpreted this way, although it's not quite exact. It's not a very exact description of what took place.

Q. I take it you would not dispute that at this time in Russia it was entirely believable that a raid on a company such as ORT might be aimed at getting particular individuals out of such a company?

A. No, I don't agree with this. If I remember correctly, I think in '98 there were criminal charges or a criminal case opened on this subject. It took a long time and all that happened was that people came along and confiscated documents, if that can be called a raid.

Q. I'm not sure that you entirely understood the question. The question is that at this time in Russia it was believable that a raid on a company such as ORT might be aimed at getting a particular individual out of that company, in this case ORT? That's what people -- they could believe that and they wouldn't be crazy to think that?

A. I don't agree.

Q. Well, can you just jump briefly to box 630. It's at page 204 in E7 E7/01/204 and 202 in E6 E6/01/202.

Do keep your hand in the file at page 59, box 156 as well.

Can you just read boxes 630 to 632 and your commentary on those boxes. (Pause)

- A. I've read them. I've read my comments as well.
- Q. You see, Mr Abramovich, your own evidence makes clear that the general director of ORT, Mr Ernst, certainly thought that it was believable that a raid could be aimed at a particular individual when he was told that by Mr Patarkatsishvili. Do you see that? That's your own commentary.
- A. Yes, I'm saying that jokingly Badri said it to Mr Ernst. Whether Mr Ernst could have thought that the Prosecutor's Office raid on a television company was aimed at him, yes, he might have done. It can be assumed that it may have been aimed at management but it is impossible to assume that it may have been aimed at shareholders. Moreover, the company was state-owned.
- Q. My question was directed to asking you whether you could accept that it was believable that a raid would be aimed at getting a particular individual out of the company. You said it was not. I showed you what happened with Mr Ernst, where he plainly believed that the raid could be aimed at him.

Now, do you accept that Mr Patarkatsishvili could reasonably have believed that the raids on ORT could have been aimed at getting himself out of ORT?

A. I did not have that impression but I can't comment on what he might have been thinking. I personally did not have that impression and I saw him quite often and talked to him quite often.

Q. Why then was he linking the fact that there had been a raid on ORT with a concern about going back to Moscow at that time then?

A. Here it is said that during the raid one of the Prosecutor's Office people might have asked "And where is Mr Patarkatsishvili so we can question him?" So it was passed on to Badri and this is what we are discussing or partly this is what we're discussing.

Q. Can I ask you, please, to go next to box 161, so back where you were, page 63 in the English version E6/01/63. So this is still in the context of your asking Mr Patarkatsishvili about whether he had plans to travel back to Moscow and him highlighting the concern he had arising as a result of the Maski raid the previous day, and Mr Patarkatsishvili says:

"The problem is that I will have, that I will have, how shall I say it, if you know... you, yes, if you know that I have no problems, and I can give evidence, then absolutely -- I shall come with pleasure."

And it is clear from this, Mr Abramovich, that Mr Patarkatsishvili plainly believed that you were close enough to people in power in Moscow to know whether or not Mr Patarkatsishvili would have problems if he returned to Moscow. Do you agree with that?

A. I don't agree and, if I may, I'll clarify.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, you may.

A. The raid took place on the 5th; we're meeting on the 6th. Badri couldn't have known a priori that there would have been a raid, but that's not the point. Anybody who was in Moscow at that time and who knew -- and Badri knew I was -- I knew Voloshin, Yumashev. It doesn't matter; I knew many people. Anyone in Moscow could have told him more than the person in France. Of course, he was asking everybody: do they know anything about it or not?

Was I clear in my clarification?

MR RABINOWITZ: Your answer was clear, Mr Abramovich. What I don't think that your answer explains is what in fact Mr Patarkatsishvili is saying here, because what he says is that -- and he's speaking to you, Mr Abramovich -- he says:

"... if you know... if you know that I have no problems, and I can give evidence, then absolutely -- I shall come with pleasure."

So it's plain that he's willing to place complete trust in what you tell him the position is.

A. That's not quite so. And then if we read on, we'll see I'm saying: yes, I can ask, but I can't guarantee anything.

Q. You were well aware, Mr Abramovich, that Mr Patarkatsishvili regarded you as close to people in power in Moscow; that's right, isn't it?

A. Well, many of my acquaintances and friends worked in the government; that is true.

Q. So are you accepting what I have put to you: that you were well aware that Mr Patarkatsishvili regarded you as close to people in power in Moscow?

A. Well, yes, it can be read like that, yes.

Q. And Mr Patarkatsishvili was right to regard you as close to people in power in Moscow, was he not?

A. I've already said that I knew many people in government.

Q. Can you please go to box 164 on page 64 of the English E6/01/64, presumably 66 in Russian E7/01/66.

You were responding here -- box 164, do you have that? You were responding here to what

Mr Patarkatsishvili has said and you say to him:

"You won't have any problems. (He said) that he won't have problems... and then it's on his..."

And your comment makes clear that you think this is probably a reference to a conversation that you had had with President Putin. Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. So you were indeed in a position to relay President Putin's views to Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Berezovsky, were you not?

A. Yes, that's right.

Q. And it's right, isn't it, that if President Putin said that Mr Patarkatsishvili wouldn't be arrested, then he wouldn't be arrested? That's correct, isn't it?

A. I don't know that. I can't -- we're saying, "You won't have... problems"; we are not discussing arrest. My talk was two weeks prior to this Le Bourget conversation, on 29 November or something, and here we're discussing 5 December. Okay, a week prior that conversation took place.

Q. The thrust of the conversation here seems to be that Mr Patarkatsishvili had nothing to worry about because that is what President Putin had said. Do you accept that?

A. Yes, I passed on to him that, from my point of view, he had nothing to fear.

Q. And then just going to box 166 on page 66 of the English E6/01/66, you go on here to tell Mr Patarkatsishvili about your discussions at the Kremlin concerning

Mr Patarkatsishvili and ORT. It's not clear whether you're referring to a conversation with President Putin or Mr Voloshin.

A. Yes, it's not clear to me either.

Q. And as we see in the following boxes -- and I'll ask you to read them -- it's clear that you had previously had conversations with Mr Patarkatsishvili about your Kremlin discussions. You'll see that if I can invite you to read from box 167 to 176. (Pause)

Just to 176, if you would.

A. Right, I'm done.

Q. So it's clear from those boxes that you had previously had a conversation with Mr Patarkatsishvili about discussions you had had with the Kremlin. Do you accept that?

A. Yes, I agree. Whenever I could get a meeting with Putin, whenever or at least occasionally when I had a meeting with Putin, Badri always asked me to mention him and to discuss his position.

Q. And so, just looking at your commentary to box 176, it's clear that you were offering to act as an intermediary between Mr Patarkatsishvili and the Kremlin, going there to try to make certain of the Kremlin's views. Do you see that?

A. Yes, I can see the comment but I just don't understand why it follows that I wanted to be an intermediary. The conclusion we can make is that Badri wishes me to talk about him to the Kremlin.

Q. And you are willing to do it; that's what you say here?

A. I have always been willing to do the things he asked me to do.

Q. And so --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Rabinowitz --

MR RABINOWITZ: One more question, my Lady.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: It depends on the answer, I suppose, but...

And it's clear from this exchange, Mr Abramovich, that you certainly did have, or at the very least were suggesting to them that you had, the ability to raise questions affecting Mr Patarkatsishvili directly with the Kremlin, with President Putin directly or with Mr Voloshin and through him to President Putin?

A. I didn't tell him that. He knew it well anyway.

MR RABINOWITZ: My Lady, that is a...

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well.

Just a second. Ms Davies, your application for an order as against the Latvian Trade Bank. I've looked at the draft order. My concern is whether there should be some sort of recital that they accept jurisdiction.

I haven't looked at the relevant rule in the White Book but what I'm concerned about is making an order against a foreign bank unless there is some sort of evidence or recital that they accept the jurisdiction of the court.

MS DAVIES: My Lady, of course. We had anticipated that was covered by referring to their letter in which they accepted, but we can bring that into the body of the --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, do they accept in their letter? I mean, they seem to be going along with a notion but they have not directly -- they appear to be going along with the notion that they'd be content with an order of the English court or a request by the English court, but I'm not sure that they're responding to your suggestion that: could you please provide an address for service within the jurisdiction.

How urgent is this? I don't want to hold it up but I am concerned that they appear to be envisaging some sort of letter of request by the English court rather than actually them agreeing to the jurisdiction and my making an order against them personally to produce the documents.

MS DAVIES: Well, it's clear from their letter that they wanted a legalised document --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I agree with that.

MS DAVIES: -- which we took to mean an order. But if your Lady is saying you would like us to clarify with them whether -- in other words, to send the draft order --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Send the draft order to them.

MS DAVIES: -- and asking them to confirm that they're happy for it to be made in those terms, we can do that immediately and come back on it.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I think the draft order has got to recite their consenting to the jurisdiction of the court for the purposes of the court making this order and I would be happier, I think, to make an order in those terms if I were satisfied that they did not object to making an order.

MS DAVIES: We will amend the draft order, send it to them today I hope, and hopefully they can respond quickly and we can deal with this early next week.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Well, the reason I'm saying this is that if you produce a draft order at 2 o'clock, I can then sign off on it and you can then get it sent.

MS DAVIES: Yes, of course.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, hang on. If you send them a draft order now in the terms that you've indicated --

MS DAVIES: What I can do is bring back a draft order at 2 o'clock, ensure that meets with my Lady's point, and then we can send it to them this afternoon.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, very well. 2.05.

(1.04 pm)

(The short adjournment)

(2.08 pm)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Rabinowitz, I'll just deal with Ms Davies's order.

MS DAVIES: My Lady, I've added two recitals: one to deal with the submission to the jurisdiction and second to deal with the order only having any effect outside this jurisdiction with agreement, the Babanaft issue.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, that's fine. Okay.

MS DAVIES: I'm grateful, my Lady. We'll send that to the bank and get their sign-off on...

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: If you can get it by 4.15 --

MS DAVIES: I don't know whether we'll get an answer from them back by 4.15 --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, I'm sure you won't.

MS DAVIES: -- but hopefully by Monday.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well, thank you.

Yes, Mr Rabinowitz.

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Abramovich, we're still in bundle -- you're in bundle E7; the rest of us I think are in bundle E6. Can you go to box 194. In E6 it's at page 77 E6/01/77.

You're talking here, about three lines down, about someone in power, I think it's Mr Ustinov, who is the general prosecutor, and you make it clear you regard him as a fool and you explain that you have been asked "to develop the prosecutor's office". Do you see that?

A. To be honest, I cannot see this. I think this is your interpretation. This is just gobbledygook. But you cannot make the conclusion that -- at least in Russian you cannot draw the conclusion that I was asked to develop the Prosecutor's Office, based on what it says here in Russian.

Q. Isn't that your own comment about the Prosecutor's Office? Isn't that exactly what you say? I just want to find the exact reference to that. (Pause)

Well, leave that aside. I take it that you accept that what this conversation, at this part at least, shows is that you had a level of access to people at very high levels of the state, in this case the Prosecutor's Office. Would you accept that?

A. No, I do not accept that. I don't understand on the basis of what you have drawn this conclusion.

Q. Well, according to the transcript, what this has you saying, talking about Mr Ustinov, you say:

"A fool, yes, he is just a fool. He gives me tasks... sort of to develop the prosecutor's office..."

It's by reference to that, Mr Abramovich, that I have asked you that question.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: What box is that, please?

MR RABINOWITZ: 194, the first comment made.

A. I do not know if I'm expected to give comment on what I said about Ustinov. All the rest is just blanks here. There are gaps and then a few words about the development foundation or fund. It does not mean that I was dealing with this. The development foundation I think was established by the government and I had nothing to do with this. I may have had an opinion about this, that this will not result in anything good, but at least what I can say is that I definitely had nothing to do with this.

Q. Can I ask you now, please, to go to box 451 in the --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Sorry, can you just answer a question on box 194. You say at the bottom of the page in the English:

"I don't know, he... to me... I don't know him well, although Putin... to me... don't know well..."

Did you know Ustinov?

A. I did not know him at all. I had not been introduced to him.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, Mr Rabinowitz.

MR RABINOWITZ: Who is it then that you were saying that, whilst you didn't know him well, President Putin knew him well? Who was that about?

A. It has been so many years, I cannot recall this with the best of wish and all that I could have recalled I've written here. Once again, let me say that I did not know Ustinov.

Q. If you didn't know him, why were you calling him a fool?

A. Well, I can express my views and opinions about people, even if I don't know people.

Q. That's true.

A. It's my feelings.

Q. Very good.

Now, we'll come back to the discussions you were having about ORT shortly but can I ask you for the moment, please, to go to box 451. It's at page 154 of E7 E7/01/154 and 157 of E6 E6/01/157.

In box 451 we see that there is the beginning of a discussion about Sibneft and you are explaining here that President Putin was planning to implement new tax rules to prevent oil companies avoiding taxes. Do you recall that?

A. Mm-hm.

Q. You need to say "da".

A. Yes, I do remember that.

Q. And if you then go to box 458, in the English it's at page 160 E6/01/160, just picking it up at the -- box 458. You are explaining to Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Berezovsky that, in light of President Putin's new tax rules to prevent oil companies avoiding tax, that you say:

"... next year there'll only be one way for us to get the money: legally, through paying taxes, as dividends."

"Legally, through paying taxes", and then you say, "as dividends".

Now, just to be clear about this, Mr Abramovich, you are not saying here, I think, that you had previously been acting illegally, are you?

- A. If you look at this whole section of the discussion, we're talking about the way in which we can receive money and what I'm saying is that for next year the only way to receive money is this legal way, ie through the dividends, through the way it's set out here. All the companies had to come into Sibneft: there were no longer tax breaks, there were no longer ZATOs.

So what I'm saying is that for next year the only way to receive money will be this because all the others -- all the other ways, including ZATOs and tax breaks, had been lifted or cancelled.

- Q. So I think your answer to my question is that I am right: you do not say you had previously been acting illegally, you were simply saying that the methods that you had previously used to generate profits from yourself through Sibneft were being restricted in the future?

A. Yes, that is so.

Q. And then, just looking further down in box 458, you explain who would be entitled to dividends and you explain that all the shareholders, you say, including all the minority shareholders, would be entitled to dividends based on their shareholding. Is that right?

A. Yes, that is right.

Q. Now, just on the question of shareholdings, your case in these proceedings, we are told, is that at this time, December 2000, you personally owned at least 88 per cent of the company with the remainder free-floating. Is that right?

A. Yes, that is right.

Q. And in fact you've disclosed a document which appears to confirm the structures by which the 88 per cent was held. Can you please turn to H(A) volume 22, page 268 H(A)22/268.

I think we may have a translation of this. Your Ladyship will see that the version in the bundle is in Russian. We have an English translation of it. (Handed)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Can this be put on Magnum as well.

MR RABINOWITZ: It will be, my Lady. (Pause)

Now, Mr Abramovich, this is a document which you have disclosed in these proceedings. It was described by your solicitors as simply dividends, is how they refer to this document. And what it appears to do is to set out the shares held in Sibneft and dividends payable in respect of those shares as of a certain date, which, as you will see if you look at the top left-hand corner of the document, is 30 October 2000.

A. Yes, I can see this. But prior to this moment today I have not seen this table.

Q. That's okay. So that is just over a month before the Le Bourget meeting and I can go through this document with you.

What it does is to show the Sibneft shareholdings in two ways. In the top half of the document there are the beneficial owners of Sibneft shares. So, for example, one sees White Pearl Investments Limited was the owner of 15.759 per cent of Sibneft; do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. And the document also shows how much percentage of the shares was held by the other three companies that you were using to hold these shares immediately below that. Do you see that?

A. Yes. Yes.

Q. And what this also shows is that the beneficial holdings of shares by nominee companies totalled 56.059 per cent.

Do you see that?

A. Yes, I can see that.

Q. Can you say whether that broadly reflects your understanding of what the position was at this stage or do you not remember?

A. To be honest, I had no idea.

Q. All right. I'll carry on though.

Below that one has that part of the holding held in a type S account and 20.395 per cent of the shares are held there. Are you able to help us with what a type S account is or not?

A. I don't know. I was just about to ask you what it means. I've no idea.

Q. Right. Then the document refers to shares held, it says "Total of our shares held in the national depository centre", and I think there are 11 per cent of the shares which, added to the previous 20.395 per cent, gets one to 30.584 per cent (sic) according to this document.

Okay?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I thought it's 31.

MR RABINOWITZ: 31, sorry. 31.584.

A. Yes, I can see that.

Q. And then below that one has a reference for the number of shares held by Runicom Limited in Gibraltar and that's 0.946 per cent. Do you see that?

- A. Yes, I can see that.
- Q. And that then gives a total of 88.589 per cent, which the document describes as the total in "friendly structures". Do you see that?
- A. In Russian, it says "Total our shares" -- oh, no, it's a different line, sorry. Yes, yes, you're right. You're right.
- Q. And your evidence is that these beneficial interests are exclusively yours; that's right, isn't it?
- A. Yes.
- Q. And so whilst the 88 per cent was held in what you termed "friendly structures", the remaining 12 per cent or so was free-floating, not in a friendly structure; is that right?
- A. Yes.
- Q. And what the document also shows is that your stake, one way or another, was ultimately -- what you say was your stake one way or the other was ultimately owned by eight companies; that's correct, isn't it?
- A. Yes.
- Q. And Runicom was a Gibraltar company and the other seven companies were all based in Cyprus; that's right, isn't it? You may not remember that.
- A. I'm just not aware of this, I just don't know this.
- Q. Well, will you take that from me, that that is the case:

these were all Cyprus companies.

A. Yes.

Q. And then if we just look at the second half of the document -- by "second half" I mean below where it says "Register of shareholders" -- we see how the shareholding was actually registered with nominees. So, for example, we can see that ING Barings was registered as owning 23.305 per cent of Sibneft. Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. And you can see that that is made up of 6.754 per cent held by White Pearl Investments Limited and so on. I'm not going to go through all of that.

A. Yes, I can see that.

Q. But do you see that it also says "Others at ING Barings", 6.754 per cent?

A. Yes.

Q. And that means that was for other people and not for you; is that right?

A. It must be. Once -- but, once again, I told you that I've not seen this table. Do we have to go through this table together? Is this the procedure?

Q. I do want to take you through this table, Mr Abramovich. If you don't know what the reference to "Others at ING Barings" means, just say so, okay?

A. That's true, I do not know.

Q. Right. And just as we have seen the total amount registered in the name of ING Barings, we also see a total registered in the name of Fleming UCB and then Deutsche Bank and ABN Amro as well. Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. And you also see that, for example, at ABN Amro there is the comment "Others apart from us at ABN AMRO". But you can't help us with that; is that right?

A. I'm afraid I cannot.

Q. All right.

Now, if we can just stay for the moment with the holdings in the Cypriot companies, again, I don't think the arrangements were as straightforward as you personally owning 100 per cent of each of those in your own name. Do you remember that, whether that's right or not, that it wasn't simply you owning 100 per cent in your own name?

A. I have absolutely no idea.

Q. Can I ask you to be given a document at bundle H(A)44, page 210 H(A)44/210.

Now, this is a document again which you disclose, Mr Abramovich. As you can see, a lot of it has been blanked out. We can only see a certain amount of information on this. So far as one can tell, this shows the corporate information for a number of companies which are within your control.

So, for example, if you go to page 213, you'll see at the top of the page a reference to Heflinham Holdings Limited, which is one of the Cypriot companies we saw on the dividend sheet, and I can tell you that what it says is that the real shareholder of that is a company called Esklar Limited, about five boxes along. This is the name of the company and then it says "Real shareholders" and it gives the name of Esklar Limited. Do you see that?

Then equally, if you look on the same page, Jimenson Enterprises Limited, which was another one of the companies we saw on your dividend sheet, it has a nominee shareholder, ATS Nominees, and then under the column "Real shareholders" it says Runicom Limited.

I don't want to take too much time going through this. You can just look at the final two entries on the page that you can see: Kindselia Holdings Limited, again still on page 213, the real shareholder is shown as Esklar Limited; and Kravin Investments has a real shareholder which is known as Mearam Limited.

Mr Abramovich, I'm not expecting you to recall the name of every one of the offshore vehicles through which these interests that you say you owned were held in Sibneft, but do you accept that this multi-layered offshore structure is indeed how these interests were held?

- A. I think so, but I cannot assert this with certainty. I think so, otherwise those documents would not have been disclosed to you. But prior to today I have not seen this.

Q. Okay.

Now, we're going to go back to the Le Bourget transcript in a moment but before we do, do you recall that in your third witness statement you referred to a proposal which you say was made by Mr Fomichev? You can see it if you go to paragraph 196 at E1, tab 3, page 93 E1/03/93, and for you, E1, tab 3, page 194 E1/03/194.

At paragraph 196, if you look at the first sentence, you say that this proposal was made by Mr Fomichev at a time "Before Mr Patarkatsishvili's proposal for a large lump-sum payout". Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. And elsewhere in your evidence I think you suggest that this proposal by Mr Patarkatsishvili for "a large lump-sum payout" was made in early January 2001. That's right, isn't it?

A. I'm not sure. Which payment are we talking about: 305 million or 1.3 billion? What is it that we are speaking about now? Both sums -- both amounts are pretty large amounts, so I'm not sure.

- Q. If you go to paragraph 268 on page 218 of the bundle you're looking at E1/03/218, in English it's at page 116 E1/03/116, it's the proposal that you say was made by Mr Patarkatsishvili in Courchevel. You see in that paragraph you refer to him making a proposal that you make a final pay-out to him.

So we know, according to you, that that was in January 2001 and my question to you is about the proposal that you say that Mr Fomichev made. You make it clear that that was a proposal made before Mr Patarkatsishvili's proposal and I'm trying to get a date on when you say Mr Fomichev made a proposal to you in the way that you explained at paragraph 196 of your statement.

- A. We are talking about different amounts here. So, I mean, the way I see it, it would be wrong to make reference to the Courchevel meeting and then the meeting in Megeve and confuse this, mix this up with the meeting that I had had with Fomichev and what had happened in Le Bourget. I think we're speaking about different things because one thing, one item, one clause here describes one meeting and the other clause, the other item describes a different meeting.

Q. I agree with you about that, Mr Abramovich. What I'm trying to do is identify the date for the Fomichev meeting and I can only do it by reference to the meeting you say you had with Patarkatsishvili because all you tell us about this proposal you say you had from Fomichev was that it was before the Patarkatsishvili proposal. So what I'm trying to ascertain is: when do you say that happened?

A. Based on the meeting with Patarkatsishvili one cannot draw any conclusion but I will do my best and assist you on this. There is a reference in Le Bourget to either 13 October or 13 September so, if I understand correctly, this meeting was prior to that, it had been prior to that.

Q. So you're suggesting that this proposal you say was made by Mr Fomichev was made prior to Le Bourget; is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. But you are unable to be more specific about when you say that proposal was made; is that correct?

A. I -- it looks to me like it was made before we started the pay-out of the $300 million. At least that's the way I see it.

Q. Can you be more specific about when that was? Can you identify a date when you say broadly -- you cannot; is that right?

A. I cannot give you a date, no. I'm just going by this text and so I'm trying to make some assumptions, but I cannot -- draw some assumptions, but I cannot give you a date now.

Q. Mr Abramovich, would you accept that this proposal that you say you received from Mr Fomichev is not mentioned in any document which is before the court? I obviously don't include your witness statements.

A. I'm sorry, I'm not sure I understood you. How does my conversation with Fomichev be filed with the court other than from me or from Mr Fomichev? Or maybe I misunderstood your question.

Q. One doesn't find a single document anywhere in all the hundreds of documents, thousands of documents, hundreds of thousands of documents, which mentions any proposal of the sort that you claim you had from Mr Fomichev, other, obviously, than your own witness statement. Do you accept that?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, he can't have looked at all of the documents.

MR RABINOWITZ: Well, I can tell him that it doesn't. But if he knows of a document --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: The point that's being put to you, Mr Abramovich, is: isn't it surprising that there is no written reference to the Fomichev proposal anywhere in the documents, if your story is true? That's the point that's being made to you. So can you comment on that, please?

- A. It is not strange because it was a proposal how to legalise the money; not to transfer money forever but how to use the shares in order to get a stream of dividend. It was not a proposal to transfer shares forever, indefinitely, in general; it was a way of legalising the income. And that was the way that had been proposed by Ruslan and I rejected this.

MR RABINOWITZ: I have to suggest to you, Mr Abramovich, that there was in fact no such proposal. Do you want to comment on that?

- A. You are wrong.

- Q. We'll come back to that.

Can we then return to the transcript of the Le Bourget conversation, bundle E7 for you, E6 for everyone else. Can we look at box 459, please E6/01/161. We see in box 459 that Mr Patarkatsishvili asks about legalising his and Mr Berezovsky's income.

Do you see that? He says:

"(So we shall legalise our income then?)"

Do you see that?

- A. Yes.

- Q. And if we look at your commentary to this, you comment:
- "Here, Mr Patarkatsishvili asked how they would be able to receive their money legally under the circumstances."
- A. In this paragraph, what I'm saying is that what we are doing now is banned, it's prohibited, but I'm trying to assist, to help Mr Berezovsky to get his money abroad, outside of Russia. So this whole discussion is around this: how can we legalise the money in a way that would allow him to receive the money abroad?
- Q. Do you see, Mr Abramovich, although your commentary says that Mr Patarkatsishvili was asking how they would be able to receive the money, that is not, as you can see from the transcript, what he appears to have said? His question isn't "how" at all; rather it is whether this is something that should be done. Do you see that?
- A. I can see what it says here. Well, first of all, with your permission, in parenthesis here, in brackets, is something which was not very well heard and so no one will vouch that what it says here is true. It was one of the interpreters who believes that he or she heard that, and there were interpreters from both sides.
- Q. You see, the question of how the money could be received legally was something you had already described: namely by being shareholders and receiving dividends. That is what you're talking about at box 458, is it not? You say at box 458:

"So, nevertheless, next year there'll be only one way for us to get the money: legally, through paying taxes, as dividends."

You've already explained to them how. Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. And what Mr Patarkatsishvili was asking you in box 459, Mr Abramovich, is whether you would arrange for him and Mr Berezovsky formally to be shareholders, so that they also could receive dividends in this legal way.

A. Once again, if I may, the words in brackets are words that are hardly audible. This is an assumption of an assumption, so it could hardly be heard at all. Now, what you have in brackets is something that you just cannot hear. I've heard this recording many times myself.

Q. Let us just look at the answer that you give to Mr Patarkatsishvili, which is at box 460, from which it is clear that you were not willing to arrange for Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Berezovsky formally to be shown as shareholders.

Just looking at 460, you say:

"The idea is that we should legalise this process, that's the idea. To say that this portfolio belongs to so and so, this one -- to so and so..."

Then you say:

"... and if you trust me, I shall do it in such a way so as not to have you visible..."

So at the beginning of this discussion you again explain what is meant by legalising the process and you say that it involves saying who in fact owns what part of the Sibneft shares, so that it is clear to whom a dividend should be paid. Is that correct?

- A. Could I ask you to repeat the question again? It was a very long question, at least until the last part of it. So to whom the dividends should be going; did I understand you correctly?
- Q. What I'm doing is making sense of what you've said at box 460. The first thing you say in the extract I read out is to explain what is meant by legalising the process, and you explain it by saying it involves saying who in fact owns what part of the Sibneft shares so that it is clear to whom a dividend should be paid.

That is what you are saying in the first part of box 460, is it not?

- A. What I'm saying is that the dividends will be received by the shareholders only, it will only be the shareholders who will be receiving dividends, and because they are not shareholders then they cannot receive the dividends.

Q. What you are saying is that legalising the process involves identifying who owns what shares, so that those people can get the dividends; is that not right?

A. Well, you can interpret it this way but I think I've been saying exactly the same thing: it's only the shareholders that can receive dividends.

Q. What you then go on to say to them, and it is clear this is your preferred option, is that they should trust you and you will ensure that they receive what they're entitled to, but you want to do it in a way so that they are not visible. This is right, isn't it?

A. No, what I'm saying is that they trust me, then we leave everything as it was. I will make my payments for the krysha as I used to be making those payments. I will be receiving dividends because that's the only way for me to receive the income and then I will be paying -- making the pay-outs that I have to make to them.

And I'm making reference here to the fact that our relationship is bad, prohibited by law. I actually use the verdict "prohibit".

Q. Well, let's carry on with what you say. In box 460 you carry on explaining your alternative and you say this:

"... if you don't trust [me], then you need to (get some valuations, some prices). There can be no official agreements between us. Well, first of all, it is forbidden. Secondly, there is no way not to break these agreements. In other words, the moment you decide you want to break them, you have the right to break them, and legally you... all this is (nothing)."

And perhaps we can just consider your response to Mr Patarkatsishvili's request for legalisation in the context of your concern that they should not be visible.

Do you accept, Mr Abramovich, that there was in fact no legal or practical reason why you could not, for example, have formally transferred beneficial ownership of some of the Cypriot companies to Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili?

A. If you mean the level of my knowledge about those procedures at that time, then I disagree with your statement.

Q. No, that's not what I meant. What I asked was: do you accept that there was in fact no legal or practical reason why you could not, for example, have formally transferred beneficial ownership of some of the Cypriot companies to Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili?

You had Cyprus companies. You couldn't see from those Cyprus companies who the beneficial owners were. You could have transferred the ownership of those companies to Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Berezovsky and no one would have known that they were in fact the people who owned those companies and therefore the people who owned the Sibneft shares.

Do you accept you could have done that?

- A. Well, technically maybe I could have done that, but at that time I did not know this. And also why should I transfer shares to people who are not shareholders? And that did not resolve their problem of legalisation. They should have been able to -- they had to be able to demonstrate that they can receive the money.
- Q. Well, Mr Abramovich, the reason you should have transferred the shareholding to them is because they had been your partners since 1995 and you would have been registering in their name what had always been theirs. That is why.
- A. Well, this is not the case. And also, if you look at this, you will see that during this discussion no one raises this question with me; no one says that I have to transfer shares to them. What we are discussing is the legalisation of money, ie how to make sure that one can legally receive the money.
- Q. And what could have been done in order to ensure that they could legally receive their money is to register them or to ensure that they had ownership of a company which was registered as a shareholder. That wasn't that difficult, was it?

A. Well, if at that time I had been a lawyer and I had understood it so well, then I would probably have come up with this. But at that time I did not know -- they did not know this. So it was a discussion about nothing, if you wish.

Q. You see, Mr Abramovich I suggest that in this passage you were coming up with reasons for refusing to formalise Mr Berezovsky's and Mr Patarkatsishvili's interests in Sibneft which were simply not truthful reasons.

A. I do not agree with this. But if I had owed them shares, they would have told me directly, "You owe us money so" -- I'm sorry, "You owe us shares, please transfer shares to us". Now, during this discussion no one raises the issues of shares with me.

Q. I'm not sure that's right and in fact the whole premise of this conversation, I would suggest, was that they did have an ownership interest in those shares. That is why they want to understand how they can receive dividends if that is the only way profits were going to be distributed. Do you want to comment on that?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, he doesn't agree with the premise, does he? He's made that perfectly clear. Do you want to add anything else?

A. I disagree with the very premise.

MR RABINOWITZ: Can I ask you then to look at box 468

E6/01/164. You see, at box 468 we see that Mr Patarkatsishvili in fact identified that it would be possible for he and Mr Berezovsky to have an interest in Sibneft which was formalised, even without them personally appearing on the share register. He says:

"We can suggest another, we can suggest another option... yes. Another option, whereby a bank would participate instead of us."

Do you see that?

A. Yes, I can see that.

Q. And then Mr Berezovsky contributes:

"To which we shall entrust management."

In the next box. Do you see that too?

A. Yes, I can see that.

Q. And in fact, whilst they may not have known this, what they were proposing was very similar to what you already had put in place for yourself: to use a western bank as a nominee shareholder. Isn't that right?

A. Am I expected to answer your first question or your second question?

Q. Well, if you want them separately, I'll give them to you separately. What they may not have known at this time was that what they were proposing was very similar to what you had already put in place for yourself -- I'm not sure that there were two questions there -- which was to use a western bank as a nominee shareholder?

A. I used a bank as a nominee shareholder. At that time I did not know this, but I did use it.

Q. So there is no reason why they couldn't have done exactly the same, which is what they were suggesting?

A. But I was the shareholder and they were not shareholders.

Q. Well, we'll have to disagree about that, Mr Abramovich.

Can I ask you then to look at what you actually say in answer to Mr Patarkatsishvili's suggestion. We'll see that at box 470 E6/01/165. Do read that to yourself. This is a box where it really isn't very clear what's being said.

A. Yes, I have read this.

Q. But what is clear in box 470 is that you refer to a 44 per cent holding. Do you see that?

A. Yes, one could assume this, one could suppose this. Having said that, it says 40 here.

Q. It says holding, 44 per cent:

"... I am saying... holding... 44 [per cent]..."

Would you accept, Mr Abramovich, that if Mr Berezovsky's case is correct and he and Mr Patarkatsishvili were entitled to half of your 88 per cent stake at the time, then 44 per cent would exactly match their entitlement?

- A. No, I do not agree with that. They never had 44 per cent, so from this paragraph you cannot draw any conclusion at all. If you add up all the figures here, it will add up to more than 100 per cent, therefore drawing a conclusion from there that someone has a right to some share here is very difficult to do. It's very difficult to understand what this says actually here.

I think when I became a deputy or even already governor, I held a press conference -- or maybe it was an interview with Vedomosti, I'm not sure -- and then at that time I explained the way I understood the way I owned shares and how I held the shares and this is the reference to that. So based on what I had told them, we could do something that would make it easy for them or comfortable for them to receive the money.

- Q. In your commentary here, you don't deal at all with the reference to 44 per cent in your commentary, even though Mr Berezovsky had in fact highlighted this in his commentary and you were supposedly responding to what he had said.

- A. What's your question?

- Q. Can you explain why you didn't respond to what

Mr Berezovsky said there?

- A. What I'm saying, I did not write down this figure 44; I wrote it in words. So if you read my comment, it makes reference -- except that it doesn't make reference to 44; it says 45. And by the way, I don't think it was 44; it was 44 and a little bit above 44. There were a few decimal points after 44.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Abramovich, can you help me. In your commentary you say:

"... approximately half of which were under my control and the other half under the control of the management."

What do you mean by that?

- A. I never wanted to say publicly that I hold all the shares, I owned all the shares in Sibneft. So we came up with a sentence that does explain the situation but does not clarify it. So we always said that I control half of the company and the other half is controlled by the management. That kept investors happy and that made me happy as well.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: But wasn't right, wasn't correct?

- A. Well, it's true that the management of the company did control the companies that managed Sibneft. However, in terms of ownership and the final beneficiary was myself. I was the final beneficiary, the ultimate beneficiary.

MR RABINOWITZ: Can we then just move on in the transcript to box 475 at page 166 in the English E6/01/475.

I don't know what page it is in the Russian.

What is happening in box 475 is that you continue to raise with Mr Berezovsky practical reasons why you say he cannot have his interest in Sibneft formally recorded, including, as you see in box 475, the suggestion that if this were to happen then the dividends would be taxed in Russia and the money would stay there. Do you see that?

A. It's not exactly the case. What I'm saying is that if you receive dividends in Russia then you'll have to pay tax, taxes, and then I'm saying that there is no way that then they could make their way into a western bank.

Q. But you are talking about Mr Berezovsky here, are you not?

A. The whole discussion is about Berezovsky. It's not only here; everything is about Berezovsky. The whole discussion is about ways and means that would allow him to receive the money. This is the only thing that we are discussing here.

Q. And if you go to box 476 E6/01/167, you can see that there Berezovsky responds to this further problem you have sought to raise by querying the point about Russian citizens. He says:

"Russian citizen? A Russian citizen if I reside in Russia for over half a year. I am not planning to live in Russia for more than half a year, am I?"

And he apparently took the view that your objection could not be one that would apply to him because he wasn't planning to live in Russia for more than half the year. That's right, isn't it?

A. No, it's not entirely the case. It wasn't an objection, we were just speaking. So he says that most probably he would not be spending more than half a year in Russia but that does not mean that he does not pay taxes, doesn't have to pay taxes in Russia. If my understanding is correct, I think you need to spend more than a year outside of Russia and then your tax position changes, if I'm not mistaken.

Q. And if you just glance at boxes 477 to 484, the transcript is not very clear, but you continue to identify problems in arranging matters in the way that Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili want you to. Do you see that?

A. Yes, I can see that we are together trying to solve a problem that we are together faced with, to make sure that once Berezovsky is outside of Russia, so that he can receive the money, and one of the instruments that we're discussing is shares. But at the end of the day

I think we used the Rual, the aluminium trader company was something we used in order to make sure that he could receive the money.

Q. So what you were talking about here was registering shares in their names so they could get dividends; isn't that right?

A. We are discussing taxes here.

Q. But the question about taxes arises because you have made the point that the dividends get taxed; isn't that right?

A. Yes, dividends are taxed. That is so. That is the case. And so obviously if a Russian citizen receives an income, then he must pay a tax on that income.

Q. If you go to boxes 485 and --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Sorry, just before you go there, is there a withholding tax, so that the company has to withhold a percentage tax even if the dividend is being paid to somebody who is resident overseas?

A. I'm sorry, unfortunately I cannot answer your question. I simply do not know.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Don't worry.

Yes, Mr Rabinowitz.

MR RABINOWITZ: If you go to boxes 485 and 486 E6/01/168, you can see that Mr Patarkatsishvili's response to all the problems you are raising is to say:

"That's why I reckon that if a Western bank was involved in this..."

And Mr Berezovsky says:

"A Western bank with me behind it..."

And it's clear, is it not, that what was being proposed by Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili was that a western bank should be a nominee shareholder for the two of them?

A. Mr Berezovsky here is asking me what I think about this and I'm saying below here that I have no view on this. I simply do not know.

Q. I don't know why you couldn't just agree with my question, Mr Abramovich. Your own commentary says:

"I agree with Mr Berezovsky that one of the proposals that was put forward by them was that a Western bank would be a nominee shareholder in Sibneft."

A. I'm not against this at all. What I'm saying is that I'm not an expert on this, I'm not a specialist, so I cannot assist you, I cannot answer this question, and this follows from all the things that follow below.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Choose your moment, Mr Rabinowitz.

MR RABINOWITZ: I have two more questions.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, very well.

MR RABINOWITZ: And so it's clear from the transcript that you are against this, Mr Abramovich. By "against this" I mean against what Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili are suggesting. So that when you get to box 490 E6/01/169, you see Mr Berezovsky asking you directly:

"What do you have against this?"

Do you see that?

A. Yes, I can see that.

Q. And your response to this, the idea of Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili using a western bank as a nominee shareholder for their shareholding, you can see at box 491. You say:

"Bor', come on, I don't have enough of a feel for the situation to be able to tell you whether this is good or bad. An agreement from me -- that's the easiest thing. You get it, don't you?"

So your response is that you consider it easier for Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili to have an agreement with you than it would be to satisfy a western bank that they're entitled to a share of Sibneft; that's what you seem to be saying there, isn't it?

A. No, what I'm saying is the reverse. I'm happy to help them so far as I can and by doing as much as I can, except that I have no knowledge about this.

MR RABINOWITZ: My Lady, this may be the right time to break.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well. Ten minutes.

(3.14 pm)

(A short break)

(3.34 pm)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, Mr Rabinowitz.

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Abramovich, we were dealing with box 491 E6/01/169, where you respond to Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili's proposal to use a western bank as a nominee shareholder, where you say in effect that it is easier for Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili to have an agreement with you than to satisfy a western bank that they are entitled to a share of Sibneft. Do you see that?

A. That's not quite like that. What I'm saying is that I have nothing against it.

Q. That's not all you say. You say the easiest thing is to have an agreement from you.

A. So what I mean is that -- okay, let me read it again, sorry. So I'm saying that I can't advise him, that I cannot give him a piece of advice.

Q. What Mr Berezovsky says in response makes it clear that he doesn't think you're addressing the issue which is of concern to him, and you see that if you go to box 495 E6/01/170, where he says:

"But this does not mean my legalisation, and this is the heart of the problem."

He says:

"I agree with you."

So it's clear that Mr Berezovsky wanted his state to be legally, formally recognised, is it not?

A. No, that's not right. He wanted to receive the money that could have been legally put in a western bank, the legal origin of which could have been proved to the western bank. And then I say that if he insists to become a visible shareholder, for money to go legally to him, then I have nothing to do with Sibneft because then Sibneft will have no future.

Q. I was just about to ask you about that. That's at box 496 E6/01/171 and this is your response to Mr Berezovsky wanting his state to be legally formally recognised. You say:

"Right, but if legalisation takes place, Sibneft company kills Sibneft company. And this is the way [that] it is..."

And what you are saying is that if Mr Berezovsky became formally entitled to ownership in Sibneft, then Sibneft could be destroyed by the Russian State. Do you accept that this was the implication of what you were saying?

- A. No, I don't agree. If we read the sentence just like that, it becomes total nonsense. But I am trying to comment, to an extent that I can. May I?
- Q. Well, we can see your commentary on this, if I may, just by looking at the commentary box because what I suggest is that what you say there reflects what I put to you about the Sibneft being destroyed by the Russian State. You say:
- "I respond by saying that if the shares are registered in Mr Berezovsky's name, Sibneft would be 'destroyed'. As I explain in my Third Witness Statement... the very last thing I needed right then was an official registration of Mr Berezovsky's association with Sibneft. If he were to become a shareholder in Sibneft at that time, when he was such a politically controversial figure and under criminal investigation, I thought that it could well destroy the future prospects of Sibneft altogether."
- A. In my comments it does say that Sibneft will not have a future. I say that investors will want nothing to do with a company whose shareholder is such a politically scandalous figure as Mr Berezovsky.
- Q. But again, Mr Abramovich, there was in fact no need at all for Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili's formally recorded stake to be brought to the attention of the Russian authorities, provided it was done through offshore companies or using western banks as nominees, which is precisely what you had done with your holding. That's right, isn't it?

- A. I am not arguing that it couldn't have been done. At that time I didn't know it, there were no grounds for it, and I didn't quite understand how it could have been demonstrated to a western bank that Berezovsky had no shares, then suddenly these shares appeared and they were legal. Perhaps today, with the knowledge I have now, I would have acted differently; but at that time I did not understand it.

And we were discussing what should be done. If he were visible as a shareholder, then the company is finished, it has no future. That's what we were discussing. So to use the company to simply legalise your income, I didn't agree with that -- didn't agree to that.

- Q. I suggest you were just making up excuses for not putting Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili's interest on a formal footing when you were aware of available alternative structures. Do you agree with that?

A. No.

- Q. Then, just going back to the commentary, between boxes 497 and 517 you're dealing with aluminium and the payment of dividends in respect of aluminium, and we looked briefly at that I think yesterday and we may need to come back to it next week. If you very quickly glance at it.

The next box I want to focus on is box 518 E6/01/177, which is where you come back to Sibneft. Can I ask you to read the transcript of what was said in box 518 to yourself. (Pause)

A. Yes.

Q. And you and Mr Berezovsky are, I think, in broad agreement as to what you are saying here. You are saying that if Mr Berezovsky insists on you forming an interest in Sibneft and becoming visible, you would respond by selling out of Sibneft because the company would then have, as you say, no prospects. That's right, isn't it?

A. On the whole I agree; with some amendments, but I agree.

Q. But, as we have seen, there was plainly a way to do this without them becoming visible, in the way that was concerning you, because Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili could hold a stake anonymously through offshore companies or through nominee western banks in exactly the same way as you had. That is right, is it not?

A. Is this a statement or a question?

Q. It's a question.

A. I beg your pardon then, can you repeat it? Because I don't understand at which point this has become a question. Are you asking me whether it would have been possible to arrange it all through a nominal holding structure like I did?

Q. Yes.

THE INTERPRETER: It was a tiny technical glitch. It's all running again, sorry.

A. So technically it perhaps could have been done; I couldn't have done it. Perhaps it was illegal and at that time I had no knowledge of it. So I was not trying to deceive anyone; I just didn't understand how it could have been done. But I was happy to help in any way.

MR RABINOWITZ: Again, I have to suggest to you that what you were doing here was denying Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili their right to have their interest in Sibneft formalised and doing so for a reason which was simply not valid. I take it that you do not accept that? That's a question.

A. I do not agree with this.

Q. Can we look next at box 519, please. It's on the following page E6/01/178. You see, looking at box 519, that Mr Patarkatsishvili moves the conversation on to ask you how much they might expect to receive in terms of dividends in 2001. Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. And you say in your commentary that:

"... in this particular case, what Mr Patarkatsishvili means by 'dividends' are actually the 'krysha' payments."

But that is plainly not what he says, is it?

A. From what he is saying, it is impossible to make a conclusion either way. I am just trying to recall what he meant at that time.

Q. Well, you say it's impossible to draw a conclusion either way. We can see there is only one conclusion about what he is saying: he is talking about dividends. There is no dispute that this is an accurate translation of this, Mr Abramovich.

A. The translation is not contested. However, the meaning of the word "dividends" is contested.

Q. Well, can you just go back to box 458, please, at page -- in the English, page 160 E6/01/160. You see at 458 -- this is only a little earlier in the conversation -- you had been explaining that from 2001 payments from Sibneft would be through dividends.

I suggest that this is precisely what Mr Patarkatsishvili is referring to in box 519 when he asks you about the likely value of the dividends. Do you disagree with that?

A. No, I don't agree. I think 20 minutes might have passed between what we discussed earlier and what we're discussing here. But you may be right; I can't say.

Q. So we have Mr Patarkatsishvili asking in box 519 on page 178 E6/01/178 about what would be the amount of the dividend to be received. Could you please read to yourself boxes 520 to 528, where the conversation about what dividend would be received continues. Just read 520 to 528 to yourself, please. (Pause)

A. I've read it.

Q. I suggest to you, Mr Abramovich, that there is only one interpretation that can be sensibly put on this discussion: namely that Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Berezovsky are asking about how much they will be paid by reference to the quantum of Sibneft dividends because it is the money that you will be making from these dividends which will decide their entitlement to funds. Do you disagree with that?

A. I'm sorry, I've sort of lost the thread as to what I need to agree or disagree with. The question was very, very long.

Q. Do you agree that this conversation was about Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Berezovsky asking how much they would be paid by reference to the quantum of Sibneft dividends which would be distributed in the following year?

A. I agree to that, but that is not what we mean. Badri is asking, in my assessment, how much will Sibneft pay by way of dividend, because prior to that I explained that that was the only way of deriving revenue as of next year, only through dividends. So then he is asking: so how much dividend will be declared by Sibneft or will be received by Sibneft?

Q. The reason he is asking about the amount of Sibneft dividends is because that will determine how much they will receive as well in that year, will it not?

A. Well, to some extent, yes. One could say that they can't demand from me more than the company can make. To some extent, yes, you can make this conclusion, because I've already mentioned that that was the only remaining way of receiving profit, only through dividend. Everything else was forbidden.

Q. What they were trying to ascertain was what their share of that profit would be. Do you agree?

A. No. They were trying to understand how much I would be able to earn or how much the company will be able to earn.

Q. Can you look, please, at box 524 E6/01/179. It's clear from this that you and Mr Patarkatsishvili have discussed how much money was generated from dealing with Sibneft in the previous year on an earlier occasion; do you agree?

A. It's not quite right. We had discussed it previously: when we were discussing $300 million, we were discussing where the money would come from and I was telling him, "I can get it from here but there is no possibility of getting it from here". I said, "We may earn so much from here and we could earn so much from there", so as to pay him this cushion or this rainy-day money. So by this time, of course, he already had some idea of the income.

Q. The number he gives there, "in the order of 900 million", was not limited, was it, to Sibneft's own profits looked at in isolation?

A. This figure was given by him as an example. I don't quite understand where he got this figure from but he just voiced his guess. I can't comment on that. If we're talking about 900 million, right?

Q. But he seems to be responding to you saying:

"What does it depend on? I've told you... (How much have) have we earned this year? How much have we made this year?"

And he says:

"... in the order of 900 million."

And that suggests that there had been a previous conversation between the two of you as to how much profit would be generated.

A. So is the question whether we had a previous conversation?

Q. Indeed, in which the figure of 900 million had been mentioned.

A. I don't think so. No.

Q. 900 million could refer to how much money you had generated from your ownership and control of Sibneft in 2000; do you agree?

A. It's hard for me to say because Badri has suggested this figure and on the basis of this figure I explained why it's impossible to estimate beforehand what kind of income we'll have. And then I'm explaining: because if they tax us 600 from 900, we'll have one amount of revenue; if they tax us 70 from 900, we'll have another income. Just as an example I'm showing that. I don't think that there's a link with something specific.

Q. Is it not your own evidence that Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili were paid in the order of around $460 million in 2000?

A. If I remember correctly, 490 we might have discussed, but I cannot be very exact.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Is that $460 million each or $460 million between them, Mr Rabinowitz?

MR RABINOWITZ: Between them.

You see, Mr Abramovich, just assume the $460 million for the moment: that is roughly half of the $900 million figure that you were talking about with Mr Patarkatsishvili.

A. Well, if we -- with amendments like this, 490 is also almost half. But this figure, 900 million, is not linked to anything; it's just a figure.

Q. Can we briefly go back to the bolshoi balance and look on it, if we may, at something called the Fomichev table or "FOM" table, I think about three pages from the end.

Now, I know you're not familiar with this table and if you're not following what I'm saying, just say so and we can raise it with someone else. But if you have that table, you will see that the balance -- let's just look at this slowly. It's divided into two sections, "PRB" and "PRBR". Do you see that? You can see the green line, "PRB" and then "PRBR".

A. I have already mentioned that I had never seen it before but I am willing to continue on this basis.

Q. Thank you very much. And I want to look at this but ignore some Rusal-related payments because at the moment you were talking to Mr Patarkatsishvili about Sibneft and so we can leave out the Rusal payments here.

If you look at the section above "PRB", that's the upper section, do you see that there is a $7 million payment to Bili by way of a loan in October and then a $614,000 loan to Bili in December?

A. Yes, I can see that.

Q. And those payments were to the Bili company, which had been set up for Mr Patarkatsishvili's aircraft, so we can take those out because they relate to Rusal.

Do you also see a $16.27 million payment from May, which was the repayment of a loan made by Deripaska? Again, that was agreed at the Dorchester Hotel meeting and Mr Berezovsky's evidence is that that was to be set off against his profits from Rusal. Do you follow? That is what he says.

Do you follow? You don't have to agree with me, but do you follow?

A. Yes, I can hear and I follow.

Q. Thank you.

And if you then just take those two payments out, the PRB balance payments would total $437 million approximately; it's 437,481,929 but let's just work with the $437 million.

Then if you look at the PRBR balance, you see a $25 million payment for a plane for Mr Patarkatsishvili. Do you see the $25,348 "PRB(A1)" reference?

A. Yes.

Q. And that just leaves $3.8 million in payments under the PRBR section and that would suggest that the total non-related Rusal payments, using your own spreadsheets, is around $441 million. Sorry, non-Rusal related payments was $441 million.

I suggest to you that that is very close to half of the approximately $900 million which you and Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili were discussing as being the expected profits to be made from Sibneft in that year. Do you disagree with that?

A. I don't understand. Which year: 2000 or 2001? When you say "this year", you mean 2000 or 2001?

Q. This is for the year 2000.

A. So why is it then to do with expectation or estimation? Because we're in December. I don't understand what you asked me. Why "expected profit"?

Q. Because you're in December; you weren't right at the end of December. At box 524 you are saying, "How much have we made this year?" and Mr Patarkatsishvili says, "900 million". What I suggest to you is that that ties in -- 50 per cent of that ties in very closely with what your own evidence suggests was being distributed to Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili for that year.

A. It's difficult for me to comment. I don't understand the table very well, therefore I can't really say much. But 441, whether it's close to 450, it's also close to 490 but it's all very approximate. But I can't tell you anything else. I know for sure that 900 was an approximate figure that Badri threw out and on the basis of that we were looking at possible tax payments or rather we were discussing possible tax payments.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Rabinowitz, could you help me. I'm on the Excel spreadsheet but there are a number of different spreadsheets. Looking at the bottom, which one should I be on? "2000 total cash incl[uding] annual", "accrued", "payments", "summary payments", "total".

MR RABINOWITZ: Does your Ladyship have -- I think it's the third to last document in the bolshoi balance series. So it should look like this (indicating).

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I don't have the bolshoi balance. I was told to look at it on the Excel spreadsheet.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, it's the "FOM" tab at the bottom.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you very much. That's what I needed to know. Thank you, yes, I'm there. And that's called the bolshoi balance, is it?

MR RABINOWITZ: The whole series of documents is called the bolshoi balance. This is called "FOM", Fomichev table.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right, thank you. Yes, thank you very much.

MR RABINOWITZ: Now, just going back to the Le Bourget transcripts, can you just look at box 526 E6/01/179, Mr Abramovich, because the figure of $900 million comes up again there:

"So, let's assume that next year we shall once again make 900 million..."

Now, how is that consistent with the answer you gave earlier that this $900 million was just, in a sense, made up, an assumption, having nothing to do with what Sibneft had actually achieved in 2000?

A. You have to read the whole sentence, everything, and not just this box. I'm asking: how much do you think we earned? He says: 900. So on the basis of this 900, I'm giving him this breakdown and saying: look, if they tax us at 600, we'll have a certain amount of dividend; if they tax us differently, we'll have a different amount of dividend; if taxes remain as they are, then it will -- the figure will be the same as it is. That's all it means.

Q. Can I ask you next, please, to go to box 529 E6/01/180. Now, Mr Patarkatsishvili is asking why Sibneft has been managed so that it can no longer make money in the manner in which it had done historically.

Do you see that?

- A. Yes, I can see it, but it's not quite like that. It's not exactly what he's asking me, in my view.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: What is he asking you?

- A. He's asking me: why is it that we're doing everything that I'm describing? Why is it we're drilling first, et cetera, and then I pay him? Why can't we do it vice versa? Why can't he count on a larger amount of money? Instead of making all these investments, why can't we just sort of surrender this money, give up this money? And I'm explaining that it's not possible.

MR RABINOWITZ: When he asks you this question about managing the company in this way, he asks it using "we".

He says:

"... why have we taken this decision, to work in this way?"

Do you see that?

- A. Yes, I can see that. Badri's Russian wasn't native, it was his second language, and he did mix up sometimes his grammar. Sometimes he says, "Why do you work like this?"; sometimes he asked me, "Why do we work like that?"

- Q. I suggest to you the reason he says, "Why have we taken this decision?" is because you all three know that he and Mr Berezovsky are part of Sibneft, because they're your partners in Sibneft. That's right, isn't it?

A. No, that's not right. If we look at 155, you'll see that he's asking me: "Why did you" -- in singular, "you" -- "decide to do that?" It's just his Russian, the way he spoke it.

Q. Can we just look at your response to Mr -- can I just pause there.

You see, Mr Abramovich, you try and write off Mr Patarkatsishvili referring to "we" when he's referring to Sibneft but you also refer to "we" when you refer to Sibneft. It's not just Mr Patarkatsishvili's bad Russian; the three of you continually refer to Sibneft as though it is something in which all three of you have an interest, and that is why you both use the word "we".

A. Two boxes above, I am telling him that simultaneously we are drilling out many new fields, and he's asking me, "Why did we take such decision?" It's all to do with Russian grammar, Russian language. He is repeating my sentence. The correct way would have been to say, "Why did you take this decision?"

Q. That would only be the correct way, Mr Abramovich, if Mr Patarkatsishvili did not consider that he also had an interest in Sibneft so that it was his company as well.

A. No, that is not right.

Q. You, in response to him, say:

"There was no other for us... Everyone is doing it."

And then, going on to box 532 E6/01/181, you say this:

"No, of course, one could steal by fiddling with equipment, pretending that it is expensive, but acquiring it cheaply. Well, if we are ready to sink that low, then it is... We had put all that behind us. That's why..."

And then it becomes unclear.

Now, usually when someone says, "I have put that behind me", he means, "I used to do that, but I don't do that anymore". Is that what you meant: that you used to misstate asset values and fiddle the books?

A. We have never done it. When we acquired Sibneft, then all the contracts for equipment supply, they all had inflated -- raw materials, material contracts, they all had inflated values. As soon as the company became ours, we immediately put an end to that. I think we even went to court on that matter.

Q. Just going back to an earlier answer you gave, trying to explain away Mr Patarkatsishvili's use of "we", you said that he wasn't very good at Russian. Mr Sumption, when he opened the case, explained that Mr Patarkatsishvili's Russian was excellent; that was at Day 1, page 115.

Are you now suggesting that he was wrong about that?

A. I am not suggesting that. I'm not stating that he spoke Russian badly. He had a Georgian accent. He studied in a Georgian school, not in a Russian school, and he did mix up things like "I" and "we" and things like that. There were a lot of mix-ups there.

MR RABINOWITZ: My Lady, I'm not sure how long you want to go on.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I was going to rise at 4.15. Is that a convenient moment?

MR RABINOWITZ: This would be a convenient moment.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well.

Thank you very much, Mr Abramovich. You mustn't speak about your evidence or the case with anyone over the weekend. Do you understand that?

THE WITNESS: (Nods)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well.

Discussion re housekeeping

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Rabinowitz, is there anything we need to discuss now?

MR RABINOWITZ: No, my Lady. The only thing I wanted to raise at some point, and it may assist your Ladyship if I raise it now, is the possibility of not sitting next Friday. The reason I raise it with your Ladyship now is obviously in case your Ladyship has plans that you would want to make. We are broadly, I think, on track and certainly those at this side of the court could use Friday off.

I understand my learned friend Mr Sumption, at least, has no objection to that. But if your Ladyship --

MR SUMPTION: I've made it clear to my learned friend that if he says that he needs Friday in order to be able to conduct the cross-examinations properly, I don't think I can properly object to that. We would be dismayed if Fridays started regularly disappearing from the timetable but, on the basis that it happens once or twice, I don't think I can reasonably object.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. So just looking at your timetable, Mr Rabinowitz, that you handed up last week, it looks as though we'll have -- well, Pompadur is one of your witnesses, isn't he?

MR RABINOWITZ: Yes, he is.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: And Gorodilov and Mr Shvidler is perhaps starting on the Thursday.

And then we wouldn't sit on Friday the 11th; is that right?

MR RABINOWITZ: That is what I'm raising with your Ladyship. If your Ladyship doesn't want to take a decision on that now, I'm content to leave it over until next week to see how we're getting on.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right, okay. I mean, if you need time, well, provided we're up to speed on the general timetable, which we appear to be, and on the basis that only the defendant's closing submissions will be put in before Christmas --

MR RABINOWITZ: That is the basis upon which we would proceed.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, shall we see how we go, Mr Sumption and Mr Rabinowitz?

MR RABINOWITZ: Indeed.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: But I've no objection to not sitting in this matter on Friday if that's your wish.

MR RABINOWITZ: I would prefer to see how it goes, but the only reason I want to raise it now is in case your Ladyship needs a lot of advance notice.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, well, the person who needs advance notice is the person who, on the defence team, is arranging for the attendance of witnesses.

MR SUMPTION: Yes. I mean --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: That's the only reason why I should decide now rather than next week.

MR SUMPTION: Yes. The real question is, in particular, Mr Mamut: we want to know whether he is going to be required on Friday or on Monday because he has to make travel arrangements and so on.

MR RABINOWITZ: Well, I can tell my learned friend that now if he needs the best estimate: Mr Mamut should come on Monday and not Friday. I've discussed this with Ms Davies, I think.

MR SUMPTION: Well, on the footing that Mr Mamut is coming on Monday in any event, then there's no reason why your Ladyship should decide about Friday right now.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Because Mr Sponring and Mr Shvidler are around and it's not a problem?

MR SUMPTION: Yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well. Well, I've leave over the decision but in principle I've no objection to not sitting on the Friday, if that's what the parties want.

Very well. 10.15 on Monday.

MR RABINOWITZ: Yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: 10.15.

MR ROMAN ABRAMOVICH (continued)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, Mr Rabinowitz.

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Abramovich, can you please be given bundles E6 and E7. Back on the Le Bourget transcript. Can you in that transcript go to page 183 in E6 E6/01/183 or 181 in E7 E7/01/181. I want to look at box 540, please.

Just to remind you, the context of box 540 is the discussion between yourself and Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili of the fact that from this point on, Sibneft would only be distributing profits by way of dividend. That is then followed by a discussion between yourself and Mr Patarkatsishvili as to whether or not Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili should be shown as shareholders and you offer reasons why that shouldn't happen.

Then at 540, Mr Patarkatsishvili asks the question:

"And how will it work out, if at the moment it's... how will it work out that we'll be able to receive dividends? If we are not shareholders?"

And you reply:

"Why? We can take these dividends out assigning them to a company, and later we can disperse them very thinly."

You say, "Pay taxes", and then there's a gap.

"... management, 44 per cent is in a management-controlled trust. [The dividends] are taken out, taxes are paid, after that they... are dispersed through different routes..."

What you appear to acknowledge here, I suggest, is that 44 per cent, half of the shareholding you control, is their shareholding, but suggest that they should be paid by dispersing dividends which you receive through different routes, rather than them just receiving their entitlement themselves. Is that correct?

THE INTERPRETER: So sorry, the buttons got switched over. Start again.

- A. I don't agree. No shares have ever belonged to them. The fact that the word "spread out", "thinly dispersed" -- and "thinly", that means we'll be able to use the money that we got from the package so that the money eventually gets to Mr Berezovsky. The word "to spread out" means to split into very small portions.
- Q. What is happening here, Mr Abramovich, is that Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Berezovsky want -- they have made this clear -- a formal recognition of their interests, but you're coming up with schemes to keep their interests informal. That is right, is it not?

A. No, that is not correct. The conversation in its entirety, or rather the largest part of this conversation, is about how to behave and what to do so that money comes to London.

During the weekend I re-read the transcript. The word "legalisation" is used here in two meanings: mainly, one of these meanings is the way of receiving cash into a London-based bank.

Q. And then look, if you would, at box 543 --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Are we leaving boxes 540 and 541?

MR RABINOWITZ: I was planning to leave that for the moment, my Lady. If you have a question --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: May I ask a question on that, please.

MR RABINOWITZ: Please.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Abramovich, in your commentary to box 541 you refer to:

"... Sibneft shares held in trust by the management (and owned by me as beneficiary)."

At the time of the Le Bourget meeting, was there such a trust set up by which shares were held in trust by management and owned by you as beneficiary?

A. At the time of that meeting I didn't really understand it very well, although now, with the benefit of further knowledge, I know that this trust existed and I was the final beneficiary of this trust and, were I to die, in the event of my death, my children would acquire the right to that property held in that trust.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: And whether or not you knew it at the time of the Le Bourget meeting, at that date, had that trust been set up?

A. As far as I know, yes, it did.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. And that was a trust held in trust by the management: that was your colleagues at Sibneft, your managerial colleagues at Sibneft or who?

A. My colleagues that were managing Sibneft: I think perhaps Mr Shvidler was a protector and Panchenko and Tenenbaum were trustees. But at that time I had no knowledge of that. I realised all this and learned that later. At that time I didn't even know such terminology.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. But when, in box 541, you refer to "44 per cent... in a management-controlled trust", that's what you're referring to, is it?

A. Yes, that's what I was referring to. And further on I'm talking about 90 per cent being in management trust. I don't remember the box, but I'm saying that later at some point.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Thank you.

Yes, Mr Rabinowitz.

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Abramovich, you say in your commentary that the shares are "held in trust by the management". Are you suggesting that the shares were held in the name of the management?

A. I don't understand the terminology very well. What does that mean? What is the difference between "in the name of management" and "in management's trust"? What is the difference between these two?

Q. Well, I'd like you to tell me what you meant in your commentary. These are your words. You tell me what you meant when you said that these shares were "held in trust by the management (and owned by [you] as beneficiary)".

A. I've already described it: it was a trust where I was the final, ultimate beneficiary, but it was managed by the company's management.

Q. Okay. Can you then go to box 543, please E6/01/184.

You say to Mr Berezovsky:

"Somehow, legally, from Moscow. They can never get through to Borya."

That's Mr Berezovsky. Suggesting that a Russian citizen could not receive dividends on Russian shares outside Russia. But you presumably knew that that was not true, did you not?

- A. If I remember correctly, that's not what I meant there. What I'm saying is that a Russian citizen cannot receive cash on an account held in a foreign bank.
- Q. Well, Mr Abramovich, you were talking, it's clear, in the previous boxes about dividends and what you seem to be saying in box 543 is that Mr Berezovsky, because he was a Russian citizen outside Russia, could not receive dividends on Russian shares. That's right, isn't it?
- A. No, that's not right. I mean, he can probably receive -- if he's a shareholder in any company, he presumably can receive dividends, but what he can't do is receive money in an account in a foreign bank without a permission of the Central Bank. It was forbidden -- well, in fact it wasn't forbidden but you had to have a permission from Central Bank. Even if you wanted to acquire an apartment abroad, you needed at that time to receive permission from Central Bank to export currency.
- Q. You yourself used a number of corporate vehicles set up outside of Russia to hold your Sibneft shares and presumably they were companies to whom dividends were paid. Is that right?
- A. I think that's right but I didn't have the need to receive legal money in an English bank. I didn't have this purpose. That was the purpose of Mr Berezovsky.

- Q. But what would be the difference between receiving money in a bank in Cyprus, which is perhaps where your Cypriot companies had their accounts, and receiving money in an English bank account?
- A. I can't tell you what the difference is. This was the requirement that Mr Berezovsky was trying to satisfy. For me there is no difference. But in some boxes here we're talking that legalising the funds from an offshore account to an English account would cost 15 to 20 per cent. They may have been deceived, they may have had another problem, but they could not do it, they were not able to do it.
- Q. Can we then just look at boxes 544 to 549, where the conversation turns to the tax payable on dividends, and can I ask you to read boxes 544 to 549 to yourself.
- (Pause)
- A. I have read that.
- Q. What you appear to be doing here is now warning about the taxation of dividends while offering to draw up a plan for them to pay minimum tax, which you assert would be some 35 per cent. Is that right?
- A. I think I'm saying that we can arrange it for it to be 30 per cent tax, if I read it correctly; and if no tax planning is undertaken then it will be 35. I think that's what we're discussing.

- Q. Can we then look at box 552 on page 186 in E6 E6/01/186. Just, if you will, read box 552 to yourself. (Pause)
- A. Yes, I have read that.
- Q. So here, Mr Abramovich, Mr Patarkatsishvili is identifying what he sees as the unfairness in your proposal at Le Bourget. He has identified in the boxes leading up to this a number of disadvantages apparently to him of the fact that from now on Sibneft profits will have to be subject to tax but, as he notes at box 552, your interest would continue to be held through a formal legal structure, which he refers to as being "legalised", and your income would be "earned officially... in your capacity [as] a shareholder"; but, as he points out, he and Mr Berezovsky will have problems.

That's right, isn't it? That's what he's saying?

- A. Perhaps it can be interpreted this way. But the problem was not that my income will be legalised. My income was always legalised. The problem is that they cannot legalise their income.
- Q. He plainly doesn't think that it's fair that your position should be dealt with in this way, legalised and officially earned, whereas his and Mr Berezovsky's position should not be. That's clear from what he is saying in box 552, is it not?

- A. Yes, it can be interpreted this way but it's not that obvious to me. But basically I think it can be interpreted like that.
- Q. Would you accept that the reason he thinks that there's something unfair about this is because he does not see why any one of the three of you should be in a better position than the others?
- A. I don't agree with that. He understands it very well because I am a shareholder in that company and he was just receiving money through an arrangement with me. That's the entirety of the difference. And he understood that very well.
- Q. Then why do you say he seemed to think that it was wrong that you should have no problems when they should have all these problems?
- A. I explain it in the way that I had been the shareholder of that company from the very first day, from the day it was privatised, I remember it and I understand it very well, and you can follow the share ownership from the very first day until they got into my hands. Their problem was not with legalising the shares but with legalising of their income, and by legalisation they meant receiving cash in a London or English bank.
- Q. Can we just look at your response to the suggestion by Mr Patarkatsishvili that this is unfair. You'll see it at boxes 553 to 555. Could you just read that to yourself. (Pause)

A. Yes, I have read that.

Q. Your response is not here to say, "What are you complaining about? Why should your position be the same as mine? I am, after all, the owner of these shares and you are just people who once, a long time ago, gave me assistance". It's nothing like that at all.

A. I'm not saying it to them because they know it anyway. This is not our first meeting. So in order to understand what it is that we're discussing, you need to know the context and what had occurred before. Otherwise it's very difficult to understand what's going on.

Q. What you actually say to them is to suggest that in fact your position is not that different to their position because, so you're saying here, you too are also not formally a shareholder. That's right, isn't it?

A. I am saying that I am not an official shareholder and if I needed to transfer money to an English bank, I would probably come across the same problem. But I didn't need to do that because I had no plans to go anywhere abroad.

Q. The point you appear to be making to them here is that Mr Patarkatsishvili should not feel aggrieved because your positions are not different in the way that he has suggested after all, they are the same: neither of you are formally shareholders. That's right, isn't it?

A. From the formal point of view I was the beneficiary, I wasn't a shareholder anymore; well, anyway, I was a shareholder at all times but I was the beneficiary of the trust formally. But the position would not be any different: if I tried to transfer money to an English bank with all these procedures, I would probably have come across the same problem.

Q. Can you go, please, to box 580. It's at page 191 of E7 E7/01/191, 192 of E6 E6/01/192. Again, could you read that to yourself, please. (Pause)

Just box 580, Mr Abramovich. Tell me when you've read that, please.

A. Yes, I've read that.

Q. What Mr Berezovsky is doing here is telling you, in broad terms, what it is that he wants to do because, just glancing back at box 578, he anticipates a moment in the future where the existing arrangement will have to end. Do you see that?

A. Yes, I can see that.

Q. So he outlines this plan about what he wants to put in place for when that existing arrangement comes to an end; that's right, isn't it?

A. Do I understand your question correctly that he is preparing a plan for when the existing arrangement is over, so he's discussing with me what's going to happen when the existing arrangement runs out? Indeed that's true, but that is not necessarily having anything to do with what we were discussing before. That may pertain to all the other shares he had in Transaero or in any other companies, I don't know, Logovaz or something else, Kommersant. It doesn't necessarily mean -- because we're jumping from one subject to another, I cannot agree with you that that is so; although yes, indeed, he is discussing the future arrangement to manage shares.

Q. And what you are anticipating is the fact that at the end of box 580, one of the things Mr Berezovsky is concerned about, as he says, he says there:

"And as for the shares, it would make sure that they are truly mine."

He wanted an arrangement which ensured that it would be clear that the shares were truly his. And that's right, isn't it?

A. Yes, that's right.

Q. I suggest --

A. And further on I say that that's a reasonable or a sensible solution, but I can't help him because I don't understand anything about it.

Q. Since the conversation takes place almost immediately after your discussion about Sibneft and Rusal, I suggest to you it's clear that those are the shares that he is talking about.

A. Because I personally took part in this conversation, I don't agree with your statement. That's not quite so.

Q. Can we then move on to box 587, please. In the English it's on page 194 E6/01/194; I think in Russian it will be a page before E7/01/193. Can I ask you, Mr Abramovich, just to read to yourself boxes 587 to 592, please.

A. I've read it. And can we discuss 582 as well, because it follows and it explains and gives answers to the questions you raised just now.

Q. I will ask my questions about 587 and 592 and perhaps we can come back to your point about 582, which I think is about Mr Tenenbaum and Mr Shvidler being involved in the management of your shares. Correct?

A. No, that's not what I wanted to say. I wanted to say that Mr Berezovsky was asking for Mr Tenenbaum and Mr Shvidler to help him to select a company that would help him sort out his assets.

Q. Okay.

On boxes 587 to 592, what we see at box 587, Mr Abramovich, just looking at the first part of this, is that Mr Patarkatsishvili makes the point that they have been talking about a future structure to be put in place but he is interested in determining what should be done until then, which is to say in the immediate future, and before the point in time in the future for which Mr Berezovsky wishes to plan.

Do you agree?

A. Yes, I agree. He is mainly talking about next year.

Q. And it is obvious from what is then discussed, following that, that the topic of conversation concerns again Sibneft and dividends; that's right, isn't it?

A. Have we already abandoned 587 and gone on?

Q. 587 to 592 is where the discussion is about Sibneft and dividends, is it not?

A. Yes, that's right. May I comment 587, please?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, you may.

A. In 587 Mr Patarkatsishvili says that he thinks that certain amounts should be agreed that they will be receiving next year. He doesn't fully understand how a company runs: that first dividends have to be declared and then you can pay out of them.

He wants the arrangement to be like it was in the past: that he would name an amount of money and then dividends would be arranged to fit with that sum of money. And at the same time he wants these dividends to be paid out -- well, not the dividends but this cash to be paid out like in the past, not once a year or once every six months like in ordinary companies, but on the basis of need: as soon as money is needed, he would turn to us and we will pay.

MR RABINOWITZ: Perhaps I can ask you a question and you can answer it, rather than giving an answer in advance of any question.

What Mr Patarkatsishvili is asking about first is the amounts that can be expected to be received in the following year, having regard to what you have told him is likely to be the after-tax profit that Sibneft will be making in the coming year; that's right, isn't it?

A. May I ask you to ask this question again? You mean the amount of money he can expect? Because it was a long sentence; I didn't quite understand how the dividend crept up.

Q. The amount of money that he could expect to receive in the following year, having regard to what you have told him Sibneft is likely to be making in the following year.

A. Well, it can be interpreted in this way, yes.

Q. And his question here is obviously related to the amount that will be paid out by way of dividends by Sibneft and you can see that he wrongly thinks that there will be a dividend payment every month; that's right, isn't it?

A. Yes. He thinks that, just like in the past, money can be drawn out of the company at any time. And I'm explaining to him that the company can't do that; that the company can only act once a general meeting of the shareholders has declared.

Q. And you can see from box 587 that Mr Patarkatsishvili is talking about "the amounts [that] we could receive monthly". You then correct him in box 588 about the possibility of a monthly payment of dividends and you say:

"We'll be able to receive them every six months."

Because that is the frequency with which dividends are paid; correct?

A. Yes, that's correct; but the meaning of the pronoun "we" is not the meaning that I put on that. I say that "we" means the company Sibneft and all the shareholders of that company. And after we, the shareholders, have received this money, we'll be able to spread it out and then I will be able to fulfil my obligation vis-a-vis Mr Berezovsky.

Q. And I suggest to you that when you and Mr Patarkatsishvili both use the word "we", that is because you are talking about the three of you as partners.

A. That is not so.

Q. If you go down to box 590, we see you again say:

"We'll be able to receive them every six months, every month will not be possible."

So you are saying that whoever is going to be receiving whatever it is they're going to be receiving, that is going to happen every six months, not every month. That's right, isn't it?

A. Yes, that's right.

Q. And you and he then discuss whether this is necessary.

We can see in box 591 he says, still talking about the frequency of dividend payments:

"Can't we set it every quarter..."

And you say in box 592:

"In theory we can do it... [but this] is not customary."

And you explain to him that you had obviously asked the same question about the frequency of dividend payments. That is right, is it not?

A. That is right.

Q. We see, just looking at these boxes, and in particular at box 587 and box 590, that when you talk about who is to receive the money from the dividends, both of you use the word "we" to identify who would be entitled to receive those payments. You are each talking about a group of persons that includes both you and them, are you not?

A. No, that is not right. Each of us uses this pronoun but each of us puts a different meaning into this pronoun.

Q. Would you agree, Mr Abramovich, that the whole basis of this conversation is that, following the changes introduced by the Russian State, he was approaching the distribution of money that he would receive on the basis that this would coincide with the times when Sibneft dividends were distributed to shareholders?

A. That's what I'm trying to explain to him: that I -- that between the payments that the company makes, I can't pay them. I can only pay them once I have received the money from the company myself.

Q. You see, I suggest the whole conversation about dividends is exactly the sort of conversation that one would have between shareholders where the receipt of money would depend upon when a dividend was paid, but it would not be the sort of conversation with someone who is just able to demand cash whenever they wanted it, as you suggest was the position of Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili. Do you understand?

A. I understand your question but you are not right. This is exactly what I said: we are discussing how I would be making payments to them out of the dividends I would receive.

- Q. Can we then go to box 641 on page 205 in the English E6/01/205 and page 208 in the Russian E7/01/208. Are you there yet? You see at box 641 Mr Berezovsky asks you:

"Tell me, please, do you reckon they could arrest Kolya?"

And that is a reference to Mr Glushkov.

- A. Yes, that is so.

- Q. This is on 6 December: this is the day before Mr Glushkov was due to visit the Prosecutor General. That's right, isn't it?

- A. Yes, it's correct.

- Q. And your response, which we see at box 642 over the page, is to say:

"I don't think they would."

- A. Yes. Yes, that's what I say.

- Q. So it would appear from this that the day before Mr Glushkov was due to visit the Prosecutor General, you were of the view that he would not be arrested. Is that correct?

- A. I thought, I assumed, guessed that he would not be arrested. I expressed my guess. But then I am correcting myself and saying that in fact Krasnenker telephoned me and said that something was not quite right there.

Q. Well, whatever the reason, Mr Abramovich, it's clear from this that you guessed, thought that he wouldn't be arrested the following day. Can you explain why you thought that he wouldn't be arrested the following day?

A. I wasn't thinking about that. I just expressed my guess, my assumption. If somebody asks me, "Do you think he'll be arrested?" and then I say, "No, I don't think so", from my point of view there weren't such important -- such serious economic crimes alleged that he would have been arrested for. And then I correct myself and I say that Krasnenker had telephoned me and arrest is possible and I'm trying to explain to them what I know.

Q. Since we see that it's Mr Berezovsky asking you the question about this, you would accept, would you not, that Mr Berezovsky was also uncertain about whether Mr Glushkov would be arrested the following day?

A. You know, honestly speaking, at that time it seemed to me that he didn't care whether he would be arrested or not; it's just a logical development of the subject we were discussing. In the previous box we're discussing about problems in ORT; and then, an hour and a half into our meeting, he remembers that Mr Glushkov may also have problems. I can't say this was the very first problem or issue that they discussed. First we discussed all the money and then we moved on to discussing Mr Glushkov.

Q. Mr Abramovich, that was not even close to answering the question I asked you. It is clear from the fact that Mr Berezovsky is asking you the question that he plainly was also uncertain about whether Mr Glushkov would be arrested the following day; that is right, is it not?

A. Yes, it can be interpreted in this way from this question. You can make the conclusion from this question, but it's not an obvious conclusion.

The person who comes from Moscow and -- a person who comes to Moscow, in the eyes of a person who has been outside Russia for a long time, appears more informed. But in fact it was all in the papers, the representative of the Prosecutor General spoke about it, and they're asking my opinion just out of curiosity.

Q. Whether they're asking it out of curiosity or not, it's plain that Mr Berezovsky is uncertain and your view is that he will not get arrested the following day; that is right, isn't it?

A. It's not correct. In one box I say that I think he won't be arrested and in another box I explain that Mr Krasnenker phoned me and said the situation was complex and there are things that we need -- that must be thought over.

- Q. We know, Mr Abramovich, that the following day Mr Glushkov was indeed arrested, the day after you returned from meeting Mr Berezovsky at Le Bourget. Can you, in your own words, explain why you consider this happened, contrary to what you expressed here as your expectation?
- A. I don't understand. I should explain why he was arrested?
- Q. No. Why you consider Mr Glushkov was arrested the following day after your return from Le Bourget, meeting Mr Berezovsky.
- A. I didn't know why it took place the day after. First of all, he had summoned for a long time; everybody knew that he had been summonsed. If the Deputy Prosecutor General says that he's planning to arrest him, then the probability is close to 100 per cent that this person would be arrested.

So to speculate and to think of whether the Prosecutor General was right to arrest, I think that would not be correct, although of course I can continue and I can speculate if that's necessary.

- Q. You see, I suggest, Mr Abramovich, that the reason

Mr Glushkov was arrested the following day, contrary to your expectation, was because Mr Berezovsky didn't agree to sell the ORT shares to you that day. What do you say to that?

- A. I'd say to that that if you read this transcript in full, and in particular with regard to ORT, we had settled everything, we had agreed up on everything; there was nothing left to discuss. So if your assumption is right that Glushkov was arrested because Berezovsky refused to sell ORT, then I don't understand what it is that we settled and agreed upon here.

I left that meeting with the firm understanding that we'd agreed on everything: we agreed the arrangement, how to pay, what to pay and to whom. It's just that I immediately went on to my election campaign and we didn't have time to finalise the deal and the papers. Moreover, Berezovsky went away and Patarkatsishvili went away: one to Aspen, if I remember correctly, and the other one to Las Vegas. So the subject sort of -- the subject went away by itself until we all met again.

- Q. And if you go next to box 643 E6/01/207, do you see Mr Berezovsky asks whether the prosecution of Mr Glushkov was all Mr Ustinov's doing? We talked on Friday about the fact that Ustinov was the Prosecutor General; that's right, isn't it?

A. Yes, we discussed the fact that Mr Ustinov was the Prosecutor General, and perhaps the most aggressive Prosecutor General in the whole history of Russia, at least in my lifetime. So the question, "Is it Ustinov again?", then yes: if the Prosecutor General summons a person, it's difficult to assume anything else.

Q. And you reply, "Yes", and then in your commentary you say that you have no idea whether Mr Ustinov would pursue the investigation without President Putin's say-so.

But you know very well, Mr Abramovich, that this was very unlikely to have been something done without President Putin's support; that's right, isn't it?

A. Of course I don't agree with this. Prosecutor General does not report directly to the president. Of course, perhaps he listens to his opinion, but the Prosecutor General reports directly to the Federation Council, to the upper chamber of the Parliament.

Q. Mr Abramovich, we've already seen from earlier in this transcript that your own commentary on the risk to Mr Patarkatsishvili of arrest made clear that President Putin was in a position to say whether or not someone was at risk of prosecution, even though this was in law the responsibility of the Prosecutor General.

That's right, isn't it?

A. I didn't understand the question. Whether Putin decided who should be arrested and who should not be arrested; is that what you want to ask me?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I think he's asking you about a previous answer you gave, Mr Abramovich.

MR RABINOWITZ: A previous answer which you gave, which we --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Give him the box number, Mr Rabinowitz.

MR RABINOWITZ: Box 164 on page 64 of the English E6/01/64. It should be 63 of the Russian E7/01/63.

If you look at your commentary to box 164, this is you telling Mr Patarkatsishvili that he doesn't have to be concerned about being arrested and you refer to a conversation you had with President Putin in which he said that Mr Patarkatsishvili had nothing to fear and that he was free to visit Russia.

A. Yes, I can see that and remember it.

Q. That reflects the fact that if President Putin didn't want someone to be arrested, they wouldn't be arrested; and if President Putin did want someone to be arrested, they would be arrested. That's right, isn't it?

A. No, that is not right. This just says that President Putin is the most well-informed person. That doesn't mean that he influences who should be arrested and who shouldn't. Most probably he receives a lot of information, amongst others, from the Prosecutor General. But I'm not convinced, although I cannot be completely certain, I cannot assert that he can influence the other way round.

Q. Now, we'll come back to the Le Bourget transcripts again shortly but can I just first ask you some general questions about the ORT transaction because they will assist us in understanding the Le Bourget discussion about this better. Can you please go to bundle H(A)26 at page 27 in the Russian H(A)26/27 and page 1 in the English H(A)26/1.

A. Yes, I can see that.

Q. And what you should have in front of you, Mr Abramovich, is the share purchase agreement by which your company Akmos acquired Mr Berezovsky's shares in ORT-KB. Can you see that?

A. Yes, I can see it.

Q. And it's correct, is it not, that this document was prepared by Mr Andrey Gorodilov in conjunction with members of the Sibneft legal department?

A. From what I know, yes.

Q. This wasn't in fact a Sibneft project, was it, the purchase of ORT? Sibneft weren't buying ORT?

A. Sibneft was not acquiring ORT, you're right.

A shareholder of Sibneft was acquiring -- the office of Sibneft, 8,000 square metres, the building belongs to me; it did not belong to Sibneft. Sibneft was renting part of that building. My office in my role of an MP was in that building; other companies were renting offices in that building.

So if you think that if something is happening in the building of Sibneft, then Sibneft is doing it, that is a wrong assumption.

- Q. I was just wondering why Mr Gorodilov was assisting you with this. He was employed by Sibneft.
- A. Mr Gorodilov, at that time, I don't remember if he was an employee of Sibneft or not, but perhaps he was not just a Sibneft employee. Mr Gorodilov was dealing with many of my matters; also Mr Shvidler, Mrs Panchenko, et cetera.
- Q. Now, in the Russian version you can see from page 37 H(A)26/37 -- it's not clear from the English version because that doesn't carry any signatures -- that the agreement was executed on 25 December 2000. That's correct, isn't it?
- A. Yes, I can see that.
- Q. If you go to page 38 in the Russian version H(A)26/38, page 12 in the English language H(A)26/12, you will see an identical agreement made for the purpose of Mr Patarkatsishvili's shares in ORT-KB. That's right, isn't it?

A. Sorry, I missed the page -- oh, yes, yes, I can see that. Yes, I can see Mr Patarkatsishvili.

Q. And at that time, 25 December 2000, ORT, the company whose shares your company was acquiring here, owned 38 per cent of ORT; that's right, isn't it? Or I should have said ORT-KB, the company whose shares your company was acquiring here, owned 38 per cent of ORT?

A. As far as I know, yes. I don't know the situation right at that very time, but yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: ORT-KB owned 38 per cent of ORT.

MR RABINOWITZ: And it's your evidence that by this time, 25 December 2000, you had agreed with Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili that you would pay $150 million for 49 per cent of ORT; that's right, isn't it?

A. Maybe I don't quite understand your question: is it about the date or is it about the amount of money or what is the question about?

Q. The amount.

A. If I remember correctly, I think the entire amount came up to 164 million.

Q. Right. Well, for present purposes that difference doesn't matter.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Was that for 49 per cent,

Mr Abramovich? The figure of $164 million, was that for 49 per cent of ORT?

A. 150 million for shares; the rest is for make the money legal, to legalise the money.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: So $150 million for 49 per cent of ORT; that's correct, isn't it?

A. I think so, yes.

Q. On the basis that you say you were paying $150 million for 49 per cent of ORT, the 38 per cent that you were acquiring from ORT by acquiring ORT-KB would have a value of around $116 million: it's about three-quarters of the total that you were paying for the 49 per cent?

A. It's difficult for me to calculate it right now. The scheme was a bit different. If you allow me, I will explain.

Q. I just want to take you through these contracts first, Mr Abramovich.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, I think I'd like to understand.

You were purchasing 38 per cent by buying the shares in ORT-KB; is that right?

A. We were acquiring 49 per cent of ORT. Part of that, part of these shares were in ORT-KB. Another part was held by Logovaz directly, if I understand it correctly.

MR RABINOWITZ: That is correct. 11 per cent was held by Logovaz. 38 per cent was owned by ORT-KB. That gives you 49 per cent, for which you were paying $150 million. That is correct, is it not?

A. In total we paid 164 million.

Q. Okay. Let's not argue about the -- I'm leaving aside the $14 million for the moment, okay? Because I'm talking about the price you say you were paying for the shares. Do you follow?

A. I understand, but the arrangement was complex. If we calculate it in your way, we won't arrive at the point we're aiming at.

Q. Well, let's just see where we do arrive because if you're paying $150 million for 49 per cent then one would expect 38 per cent of the 49 per cent to have a value of around $116 million: that's three-quarters of the total. Would you agree at least with the maths?

A. Perhaps I'll agree with the maths, yes.

Q. Can we then look at paragraph 2.2 of the sale agreement for Mr Berezovsky: that's on page 28 of the Russian H(A)26/28 and page 2 of the English H(A)26/2. If you look at clause 2.2:

"The purchase price for [these are Mr Berezovsky's] shares... equals 5,000,000... Dollars..."

And we find an identical provision if you go to Mr Patarkatsishvili's agreement, page 13 of the English H(A)26/13 and page 39 of the Russian version H(A)26/39.

A. Yes, I can see that.

Q. So, looking at these contracts, the total amount that they record you were paying for, in effect, 38 per cent of ORT was $10 million.

A. Yes, I can see that.

Q. But that wasn't the true purchase price of those shares, was it, Mr Abramovich?

A. This is exactly what I wanted to explain from the very beginning: the deal was complex.

Q. And the documentation that you or Mr Gorodilov and the Sibneft legal staff produced was therefore misleading as to the actual position, was it not?

A. I wouldn't say that it was misleading or didn't reflect the true position. And again, it's not just Mr Gorodilov and our legal staff who were preparing this. The staff of Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili took part in that: Ruslan Fomichev for instance. This is the fruit of joint effort.

Q. I suggest to you that is not true, and indeed earlier in your answer you did confirm that it was produced by Mr Gorodilov and the Sibneft legal staff, but let's just move on.

Why do you say that contracts which assert that the total purchase price for 38 per cent of ORT was $10 million were not misleading?

A. So why the contract is not misleading; is that the question? So when did you ask me that?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Let's start again. Mr Rabinowitz, who are you suggesting is being misled by this document?

MR RABINOWITZ: Well, my Lady, we can come to that in due course.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Very well.

MR RABINOWITZ: The first point to get clear is that -- and I'll put this in the form of a question to Mr Abramovich, if I may -- on the basis that that was 38 per cent of the 49 per cent of the shares in ORT that you were acquiring for $150 million, the suggestion that the purchase price for these shares, 38 per cent of the ORT shares, was $10 million does not properly reflect the price you were paying for these shares, does it?

A. If you look at it this way, indeed. But the arrangement was put in place which we discussed in Le Bourget in detail.

The problem was to receive the funds in an account in an English bank, as I've already explained. To do that and not to fall under regulation of Central Bank, we pay part of the money in Russia, $10 million as far as I remember, and the rest was paid into a Latvian bank, as instructed by Mr Patarkatsishvili.

I'm not going to assert it; I don't remember exactly how it was done. Andrey Gorodilov was very familiar with this arrangement and he'll be able to tell you in more detail. He has a more through understanding of how this was all set up.

- Q. Can we then just look at the other part of the acquisition. It is at H(A)26, page 49 in the Russian H(A)26/49. In the English one has to go to bundle B(B)2.04 at page 91 B(B)2.04/91, B(B)2 at page 91.

And again, this was a document produced by Mr Gorodilov in conjunction with the members of the Sibneft legal staff; that's right, isn't it?

- A. As far as I know, yes. But I'm sure, and as far as I know, Ruslan Fomichev initially also took part in this. I don't know whether the final version of the document is the sort of -- was prepared by our legal department but the fact that this is the fruit of joint effort is for sure.
- Q. Well, we'll come to that, but I suggest to you that it is simply not true that Mr Fomichev was involved in this.

But this document was again produced on 25 December 2000; that's right, isn't it?

A. Yes, that's right. I think Mr Ivlev also took part.

I cannot be 100 per cent sure, but I guess.

Q. And this was the agreement under which your company Betas acquired the other 11 per cent of ORT from Logovaz; that's right, isn't it? You may already have answered that question.

A. Yes, that's right.

Q. And if you were paying $150 million for 49 per cent of Sibneft, one would, mathematically at least, expect the 11 per cent stake to have a value of about $34 million; correct?

A. That's correct. I think we acquired Logovaz shares on nominal value, for nominal value.

Q. Indeed, that is correct. If you look at clause 1.1.1 -- it should be on the page you're looking at -- do you see that the purchase price is said to be 1.1 million rubles?

A. Yes, I can see that.

Q. And that was indeed a nominal value, was it not?

A. Yes, I can see that.

Q. And again, this does not reflect the true purchase price for these shares, does it?

A. If 164 million, if you divide that by the number of shares, then perhaps, no, it doesn't reflect.

Q. And the documents that you have produced showing the acquisition by your companies of the ORT interests held by Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili show an amount being paid of very little over $10 million in total, but you say the amount was $164 million; that's right, isn't it?

A. From what I remember, altogether we paid 164 million, yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: My Lady, that may be a convenient moment. I'm happy to go on.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Ten minutes, please.

(11.22 am)

(A short break)

(11.37 am)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, Mr Rabinowitz.

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Abramovich, do you accept that the documents that we have been looking at were not the only occasion on which you or members of your team produced documents that did not reflect the true position of a transaction?

A. To be honest, I didn't understand, I didn't catch why they don't reflect it. Why do they not reflect it? Are you saying -- again, they are backdated. But everything else in my opinion, as far as I understand, although I cannot assert because I did not take part in their preparation, I don't understand why they would not reflect the true state of things.

Q. Because collectively they represent your acquisition of the full 49 per cent of ORT and collectively they have an acquisition price of just over $10 million, but we know that that wasn't the acquisition price, do we not?

A. I agree that the whole transaction was $164 million. But that was the seller's task: to spread what shares he wants to get money for. That's the way the money was -- this transaction was structured in such a way because Mr Berezovsky had to get money abroad.

Initially this transaction was very straightforward: all the money had to be paid by us in Russia and Badri was saying that they were going to pay 13 per cent of Russian tax. And when they come against the hardship, problems with the government, he decided to take this money abroad.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Can I be clear. Just tell me: why didn't the agreements reflect the actual price that you'd agreed to pay? The agreements only had $10 million or whatever in them; you agreed you told me to pay 164. Why didn't the agreements reflect the true price and put in this much lesser figure?

A. I cannot say for sure how much was paid for 38 per cent because the shares were split between ORT-KB and Logovaz. I think 10 million was paid for Logovaz and everything else, if I remember correctly, was paid for ORT-KB, and if we split the number of shares into 164 million then it would not reflect the state of things. But as far as I remember, that was a requirement of Mr Patarkatsishvili: that they don't want to leave money in Russia at risk.

Therefore, the shares -- sorry, the money was paid in such a way so the lion's share, 150 or 140 million, was paid abroad; and 10 million that could have been potentially under risk of confiscation or some other risk in Russia, that 10 million remained in Russia and was divided between them into two accounts so that could use them in Russia, using credit card or in some other way.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So it was to avoid paying tax in Russia and to avoid the possibility of confiscation in Russia; is that what you're saying?

A. I cannot say that that was a possibility of confiscation in Russia. Transfer of money from Russia into a Russian citizen's account abroad is quite a procedure and to avoid this, this is what we've done.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I see. Thank you.

MR RABINOWITZ: So my question to you, Mr Abramovich, is: do you accept that this was not the only occasion on which you or members of your team produced documents or agreements that did not reflect the true position or transaction?

A. To be honest, I don't quite understand why they didn't reflect the true position. It's the demand of the seller. If the seller wants to document it in such a way and our task is to pay the money, so we're simply reflecting the seller's demand, the seller's request. However, if to divide the number of shares into the amount of money, then yes, it does not reflect.

Q. Well, perhaps we can come back to that, but perhaps for the moment we can look at some other documents which were produced by your team for a different transaction, which show just how this practice of producing what I will call false documents was really a common practice within your team.

Can you please go to paragraph 293 of your third witness statement: E1, tab 3, page 224 in the Russian E1/03/224 and page 123 in the English E1/03/123.

Now, you're referring at paragraph 293 to the payment of the $1.3 billion which you agreed to make to Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Berezovsky in 2001 and what you say at paragraph 293 is that the first payment of the $1.3 billion amount was made on 31 May 2001. Do you see that?

- A. Could I read the paragraph, please?
- Q. Please do, sorry. (Pause) It's paragraph 293.
- A. Yes, I've read it.
- Q. Do you recall that this was a payment which was arranged for you by your employee Ms Khudyk? Perhaps I can remind you.
- A. Sorry, do I remember that payment was organised by Ms Khudyk?
- Q. Correct.
- A. I know that Ms Khudyk worked for us and still works for us. As I said, that prior to this hearing I read -- I met Ms Khudyk maybe six or eight times, with all my due respect to her. As I remember, she worked at the back office and I haven't used her services that often.
- Q. Can I just ask you to look at what Ms Khudyk says about this. If you go to bundle E2, tab 6, at page 115 in the English E2/06/115, you're looking for paragraph 30. In the Russian it's at page 140 E2/06/140.

Now, she's also talking about arranging the payments of the tranches in respect of the $1.3 billion and at paragraph 30 she explains that it was on 29 May that she was told by Ms Panchenko:

"... that Mr Berezovsky and (or) Mr Patarkatsishvili had agreed to a payment in cash directly to an account of Devonia to be opened with..."

That's the Latvia Trade Bank:

"... LTB."

Okay? Do you see what she says?

A. Yes, I can see that.

Q. And her evidence then is that she was only instructed to arrange this payment to Devonian on 29 May 2001. Do you see that?

A. Yes, I can see that.

Q. And her evidence is also that at the time Devonian did not itself actually yet have a bank account with the Latvian Trade Bank. Do you see that?

A. Yes. I do.

Q. Now, Ms Khudyk is the head of planning, finance and accounts department at Millhouse; that's right, isn't it? That's what she says in her witness statement.

A. That must be true then.

Q. She was previously --

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, could my learned friend please draw attention to the passage where Ms Khudyk is alleged to have said that the bank account didn't exist at the time?

MR RABINOWITZ: Well, it's very clear indeed in the passage that we're looking at. It says --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: What paragraph?

MR RABINOWITZ: Paragraph 30:

"... to an account of Devonian to be opened with LTB."

Now, Ms Khudyk was previously financial director and from 1999 head of the Moscow office of one or both of the Runicom companies; that's what she says and I take it you wouldn't dispute that?

- A. I would not dispute that, but I cannot confirm this either.
- Q. Now, it's fairly clear from Ms Khudyk's evidence that the payment which you were talking about to be made on 31 May had to be arranged very quickly by Ms Khudyk if she had only been instructed to arrange the payment on 29 May. That must be right, mustn't it?
- A. With regard to speed of payment, if she was instructed on the 29th and she had to do it on the 30th (sic), that's indeed a very high speed of payment. We've paid about -- I think we have paid 38 million, maybe 36, 38 million or thereabout.
- Q. Can I ask you, please, to go to bundle H(A)30 and go to page 199 H(A)30/199. There is no Russian translation of this.

Now, I'll tell you what this document is, Mr Abramovich, and if I misdescribe it, I'm sure the translator can help you with this. It's the minutes or it purports to be the minutes of a meeting of the board of directors of Pex. And Pex -- this is not the subject of any dispute -- is the company that was used on your side to make the payment to Devonian on 31 May 2001.

Okay? You can take that from me.

A. Yes, I agree with that.

Q. And at paragraphs 1 to 3 of this document it purports to record resolutions of Pex board of directors and what it says -- and I'll read it, they're short -- the first resolution that it says was taken was:

"To approve the following accrued distributable net profit as at 15 May 2001 which is in the amount of [$1.3 billion]."

The second is:

"The net profit of the Company shall be placed at the disposal of the sole shareholder of the Company, [that is] to the company named Devonian Investments Limited."

And the third resolution is:

"To pay the above dividends to the shareholder as he would direct it."

Okay?

So it is a document that relates to the payment of $1.3 billion to Devonian; would you agree with that?

A. From what you've read, I agree. And I don't have any knowledge about how this was done, if that was the question.

- Q. Well, I'm about to ask you about that because Ms Khudyk tells us in her witness statement that this was prepared after she had been instructed by you on 29 May to arrange for this payment.

Do you see that in the first paragraph, three lines from the top, the document says that it is the minutes of a meeting which took place on 18 May 2001? Perhaps the translator can just show you that.

- A. Yes, I can see that.

- Q. So if one just looked at this document, one would be led to believe that there had been preparations for the payment to Devonian going on since 18 May 2001. Would you agree with that?

- A. If I got it correctly from the interpreting, it says that the company is receiving dividends in the amount of $1.3 billion and -- if I understand correctly, and what we discussed was Devonian: that was the payment from that company to Devonian. I think these are related things but would not link them in such a way.

- Q. Mr Abramovich, that wasn't my question at all. My question related to the fact that this is a document which suggests that there had been preparations for the payment to Devonian going on since at least 18 May 2001. Do you agree?

A. Sorry, on what basis, on what document basis have you made such a conclusion?

Q. Three lines from the top. Well, let me read you the first paragraph of this:

"Minutes of the meeting of the Board of Directors of the Company held at the Andaluz Building [in the] Republic of Panama on 18 May 2001..."

So the document itself on its face represents that there has been a meeting on 18 May 2001. Do you follow?

A. Yes. Yes, I understand that the meeting was held on 18 May.

Q. That's what it says. It also suggests on its face that there had been preparations for the payment to Devonia going on since at least 18 May 2001. Do you follow that?

A. Yes, I follow that, but then again I lost the thread of thought. At what point did that become clear, that this company is being prepared for the payment on 18 May? This is the bit I didn't understand.

Q. Well, I can tell you that Ms Khudyk's evidence is that this was actually produced on 31 May 2001 and it is backdated to 18 May 2001.

A. Then it must be so, except I don't have this knowledge and it doesn't reflect it here in any way. Simply that contradicts what you just said before, that -- before you said that it must have been prepared on 18 May so as to pay on 29 May and Ms Khudyk is saying that the document was prepared on 31 May in order to pay on 29 May.

Q. No, Mr Abramovich. The document falsely represents that something happened on 18 May when it didn't. It's a false document. Do you follow?

A. Yes, I follow.

Q. And this wasn't the only document that your people were producing which was a false document. Can I ask you, please, to go to bundle H(A)31 and go to page 122 H(A)31/122.

Now, again you may need some help from the translator. We don't have a Russian version of this. But I can tell you, Mr Abramovich, that this is or purports to be a request on behalf of Devonian that dividends payable to the company as a shareholder of Pex should be transferred to its account at the Latvian Trade Bank. Okay?

A. Sorry, is that an assertion or is that a question?

Q. I just want to make sure you understand what I'm saying. It wasn't a question. You need to say --

A. (Untranslated)

Q. Okay. Do you see that the instruction appears to have been signed on behalf of Devonian by Mr Matar Mohd Saeed

Ali Al Neyadi? (Pause)

A. (Not interpreted) Yes.

(Interpreted) Yes.

Q. Or even "da".

Will you accept from me, Mr Abramovich, that again this letter of instruction was in fact a document that was produced by Ms Khudyk or do you want me to show you her evidence about this?

A. I would like to see her evidence about this. Why is this document prepared -- produced by Ms Khudyk when this gentleman with a very complicated name has signed it?

Q. I'll show you. If you go to her evidence at paragraph 33: it's bundle E2, tab 6, page 141 in the Russian E2/06/141, 116 in the English E2/06/116.

If you look at paragraph 33, you'll see Ms Khudyk explains the document that she produced sometime -- she explains that it was on 31 May that she produced these documents. (Pause)

A. Okay, I've read her evidence but I cannot understand: does this reflect what it says in this document or not? Is it the same document? Does she mean the same document? I think she means some other document.

Q. I think she means this document. If you look -- I'm pretty sure she means this document. Well, we can check with her. But this is the instruction from Devonia to Pex for the declaration and payment of dividends to the account of Devonia at LTB. There may be another version of the same document but this is certainly what she's referring to. Okay?

A. I didn't quite catch -- this document is the document that she's referring to. Is there another version of the document that she's referring to? How does this relate to Pex? I honestly did not take any part in preparation of this document so we'll be just discussing it starting from absolute step one, back to elementary school.

Q. Let's discuss that because what I'm going to suggest to you is that this is yet another document which your people have produced which is a false document. Shall I explain why I say that or will you accept -- do I need to explain why I say that?

Do you see that the date of the document is 22 May 2001?

A. Yes, I can see the date.

Q. So if you just looked at the document on its face, you would be led to believe that there had been preparations for the payment to Devonia since at least 22 May 2001. Do you follow?

A. What I can hear, yes, I do agree. However, I don't have an opinion. I really will have to see all these things from start to finish for the very first time.

Q. Ms Khudyk explains that she only produced this document on 31 May and backdated it to 22 May 2001.

Were you aware that this backdating was going on within your organisation, Mr Abramovich?

A. Well, to say that I were aware, I cannot say that I was aware. But I would not place such importance on it. If you are trying to say that I would oppose this, definitely not.

Q. What, you were happy with the backdating of documents, were you?

A. Usually I didn't take part in document preparation. That does not release me from responsibility from what's going on in my company. However, to say that I knew that something was backdated and some document was prepared and backdated, I cannot say that.

Q. You see, Mr Abramovich, it creates a false impression of what is happening and in that respect it is very dangerous to have documents like this in a --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, that's a matter for comment in the particular circumstances, isn't it, Mr Rabinowitz?

MR RABINOWITZ: Well, it is, it is.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I mean, whether or not it's dangerous will depend on all kinds of circumstances.

- MR RABINOWITZ: Can we look at another document then, please: H(A)30, page 40 H(A)30/40. This is a receipt from Devonia for shares in Pex. The translator will perhaps have to show that to you.
- A. Yes, I can see this.
- Q. Obviously you will understand that in order for Pex to declare dividends to Devonia, Devonia would first have had to be a shareholder in Pex?
- A. Yes.
- Q. And, as we have just seen in the documents that your Ms Khudyk was producing, the declaration of dividends by Pex and the payment of these to Devonia was the explanation given for the transfer of payments from Pex to Devonia; that's right, isn't it?
- A. Excuse me, could you please repeat? I agree about the transfer of money from the company Pex to Devonia but I didn't understand the first part of your question.
- Q. The explanation that was given as to why Pex was transferring money to Devonia was that these were dividends that were being declared by Pex to Devonia.
- A. Yes.
- Q. And for that to make sense, Devonia had to be a shareholder in Pex.
- A. From what I know during this hearing, I understood that the company Pex issued bearer shares.

- Q. Well, it still had to have those shares if it was going to receive the dividends? Devonia would still have to have those shares if it was going to receive the dividends?
- A. As I said, I think they issued bearer shares.
- Q. You see, what your staff were doing here was to ensure that prior to the declaration of the dividend there was a document which suggested that Devonia had received or held shares in Pex.
- A. I cannot either confirm nor deny this statement; I can only hear it. I don't know at what point in time these shares of Pex were transferred to Devonia and at what point the Pex dividends were declared, so it's hard for me to keep hold of all this. It happens sometimes in life, shares for which the dividend has already been declared, and sometimes it's already taken account of in the cost of transaction.
- Q. Well, I can tell you, Mr Abramovich, that this is, Ms Khudyk accepts, yet another false document, in the sense that she produced it on 31 May and backdated it to 14 May.
- Shall I show you Ms Khudyk's evidence on this?
- A. I cannot comment on this. If I understood correctly, Ms Khudyk says this is a false document. To be honest, I doubt that Ms Khudyk is saying that. However...

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, it's being put to you that this is another backdated document, Mr Abramovich. Do you understand?

A. Yes, I understand.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: That's why it's false. That's what is being suggested to you.

A. Yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: Can I ask you, Mr Abramovich, to go to bundle J2.2, tab 11, please J2/2.11/171.

This is Mr Mitchard's third witness statement, Mr Mitchard being your solicitor at the time of the strike-out. Okay?

A. Okay. "The strike-out", sorry, what does "the strike-out" mean?

Q. Do you recall that you made an application to try and get rid of Mr Berezovsky's claim?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. Can you go, please, to page 199 of this document, paragraph 44, please J2/2.11/199. Do you have a Russian version there? Is that what he's just been given?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. Thank you. All right.

Paragraph 44, Mr Mitchard is listing reasons why he says the Devonia agreement was clearly not a genuine agreement. He says:

"In short, the Devonia Agreement was clearly not a genuine agreement. In addition to the points made above, it should also be noted..."

Go down to point (c), please. He says:

"Mr Marino's evidence is that 'the Sheikh did not actually commit to being involved in the transaction until on or about 29 May 2001'. The Devonia Agreement itself was said to have been 'executed on 12 June 2001'. However, as is apparent from Ms Panchenko's schedule of payments [which he exhibits], the first instalment of the US$1.3 billion payment... was made on 31 May... to the designated account at Latvian Trade Bank, with the instruction for that payment having been delivered on 22 May 2001..."

In other words, Mr Abramovich, Mr Mitchard was relying on the date of a document that we now know to have been entirely fictitious.

A. Do I have to confirm? Sorry, what do I have to do?

Q. Well, do you want to comment on that?

A. The agreement with Badri was reached, as I recall correctly, on 29 May. Anything that happened before that, based on this, is fictitious. All agreements that were signed prior to 29 May, all were backdated, all of them are backdated. If I recall correctly, that was 29 May.

- Q. Can I ask you, please, to go to paragraph 9 of this statement. In the English it's at page 173 J2/2.11/173.

Do you see that Mr Mitchard in the first sentence explains who it was that he interviewed before producing this statement: yourself, Mr Shvidler, Mr Tenenbaum, Ms Goncharova, Mr De Cort, Ms Panchenko and Ms Khudyk. And it appears that no one told --

- A. (Untranslated)

- Q. It appears from what Mr Mitchard says that no one bothered to tell Mr Mitchard that the dates on those documents were all false; that's right, isn't it?

- A. From what Mr Mitchard has written here, it looks like no one told him that. But, on the other hand, it's logical to assume that in 2007 no one understood whether the documents were backdated or not and what date was on the document. It would have been very strange that one of those people listed here would remember that that document was signed on 29 May or on 18 May.

- Q. Now, I want to just go back and look, in the context of the ORT transaction, at how you say you came to agree the sale and purchase agreements involving Akmos and Betas. Can I ask you, please, to go to paragraph 213 of your third witness statement: that's bundle E1, tab 3, page 98 in the English E1/03/98, in the Russian page 199 E1/03/199.

If we can just focus on the second sentence of paragraph 213 for the moment, you say there that:

"Mr Patarkatsishvili first raised the idea of selling the ORT shares to me in around mid-October 2000 and I initially resisted."

Now, again, can you look at what you say at paragraph 214. You say there that it was only after some persuasion from Mr Patarkatsishvili that you were finally persuaded and agreed to purchase the ORT shares;
that's right, isn't it?

A. Yes, I can see that.

Q. And then in the last sentence of paragraph 214 you say that after you had been so persuaded by Mr Patarkatsishvili, you met with Mr Voloshin and informed him of your intention to acquire the shares in ORT; correct?

A. Yes, I can see this.

Q. And so this would have been the first time that you discussed buying the ORT shares with Mr Voloshin; that's right, isn't it?

A. From what I can recollect, that was the first time, but I cannot be 100 per cent sure. I think most likely that was the first time. I would have not kept this news for long.

- Q. So, Mr Abramovich, on the basis of your evidence then, this meeting that you say you had with Mr Voloshin must have taken place in late October or early November 2000; again, that's right, isn't it?
- A. If I understand correctly, we are talking about October here, so most likely that was October.
- Q. Late October or early November?
- A. Most likely, yes.
- Q. And when you met Mr Voloshin, Mr Abramovich, you had not yet in fact agreed with Mr Patarkatsishvili to buy the ORT shares; indeed you hadn't even definitely decided yourself whether to buy those shares. That's right, or do you not remember this very clearly?
- A. I think I've informed Mr Voloshin at the point when I decided that I will buy the shares. This is my logical conclusion; I cannot be 100 per cent sure. I can say for sure I would not buy -- I would not buy the shares if I did not inform him.
- Q. Well, can we just see what Mr Voloshin says about this. Can you go to bundle E1, tab 1 and turn to paragraph 30: in the English it's at page 9 E1/01/9 and in the Russian at page 21 E1/01/21. I just want you to look at the first few lines of that:

"The question of Mr Berezovsky selling his ORT shares arose only later. As I recall, some time after the meeting with President Putin, Mr Abramovich asked me whether it made sense for him to buy the shares from Mr Berezovsky in order to avoid any... future conflicts in relation to ORT between Mr Berezovsky and the state."

Do you accept that what Mr Voloshin says about this is likely to be accurate?

A. Could I please read it from the beginning, what you said in this paragraph?

Q. Go ahead. It's just paragraph 30. (Pause)

A. Yes, I've read 30, paragraph 30.

Q. Do you accept that what Mr Voloshin says about what you asked him is likely to be accurate?

A. Sorry, what did I ask him about?

Q. He says here:

"... Mr Abramovich asked me whether it made sense for him to buy the shares from Mr Berezovsky..."

And what I'm asking you is whether you accept that his recollection of what you asked him is correct.

A. Do I understand correctly that the question asked, or asked as in requested from me? So that's why I can't quite get the question. Asking him, informing him, or I asked him as in requested from him? What is the question?

Q. You requested his view about something.

A. I would interpret that I have informed him and I asked him whether he doesn't mind, but I cannot say how to place the accents here because a lot of time has gone since then; I don't remember the detail.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Abramovich, look at the first sentence of what Mr Voloshin said in his witness statement.

A. Yes, I've read it.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Does that accurately summarise what you said to him at the time?

A. Today I cannot say, because the accents are planned here, whether I've asked or requested him; I cannot say now whether it was this way or a different way because after such a length of time it's very difficult to remember the details, what was my question to him. Perhaps he's right.

MR RABINOWITZ: You see, it's clear from what Mr Voloshin says here that he recollects that you were speaking to him about whether or not you should buy those shares. Do you see that?

A. Yes, I can see that. Except I was going to buy ORT shares; it wasn't Mr Voloshin.

Q. Yes, but if you had already decided to buy the shares, it would have been somewhat misleading for you to have pretended to Mr Voloshin that you were asking him about whether it was a good idea to buy those shares?

A. I didn't try to pretend. If someone would say -- if the president would say that it's not recommended for me to buy the shares or if Mr Voloshin would say that it's not recommended to buy the shares, I would not buy them.

It's quite an explosive product, these ORT shares, I mean their impact, so that's why I didn't want to play any part in it at all. If I would have felt that someone is against it, I wouldn't touch it with a bargepole.

Q. I think it follows from what you're saying that at the time you spoke with Mr Voloshin you obviously had not yet decided definitively to buy the shares. Is that right?

A. I cannot say at that point in time I've decided for sure or not, but if Mr Voloshin would tell me in plain Russian or if I would have felt that he is against it in any way, I would have not made another step.

Q. Equally, if that is right, you obviously couldn't already have reached an agreement to buy the shares; that is right as well, isn't it?

A. Since we're not talking about a specific date, I cannot agree. I think that Badri and I have agreed overall; therefore I think that's why I went to Voloshin. But again I wanted to say: if Voloshin would have said to me that, no, he doesn't recommend it, then I would have not bought the shares.

Q. So you had certainly not reached a final agreement about this because, as you say, if Voloshin said, "Do not go ahead", you wouldn't have gone ahead?

A. It's important to understand here what is the final agreement. If drafting the documents, the final documents, which happened on 27 December I think. If an agreement is reached on the scheme or how to make the payments, that happened in Le Bourget. If to talk about the essence of the matter, which in my opinion is the most important, that happened round about 6 November.

Q. We'll come to that shortly. Can I now ask you just to go to paragraphs 215 and 216 of your statement: in the Russian it's at page 200 E1/03/200 and in the English at page 99 E1/03/99. Can I ask you to read paragraphs 215 and 216 to yourself, please.

A. Which -- whose statements are they?

Q. Sorry, your statement, so it's at bundle E1, tab 3. Paragraphs 215 and 216.

A. Yes, I have read this.

Q. So in paragraph 215 you are dealing with the meeting which you claim to have had with Mr Berezovsky in Cap d'Antibes on 6 November 2000. Do you see that?

A. I do.

Q. Then in paragraph 216, I think it's the fourth sentence, you say that:

"[You] told Mr Andrey Gorodilov of [your] agreement with Mr Patarkatsishvili to buy his and Mr Berezovsky's shares in ORT for US $100 million [and that you] asked him to contact Mr Fomichev to arrange the details of the deal."

Do you see that?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. Now, I'd like to deal first with the suggestion that there was a meeting on 6 November, if I may. In paragraph 215 you say that you think:

"It is probable that I discussed the possible sale of ORT shares directly with Mr Berezovsky at a meeting in Cap d'Antibes [on] 6 November..."

And it appears from what you say here that you do not in fact have any independent recollection of any such discussion and that all that is happening here is that you are trying to reconstruct what might have happened from the fact that you say you were in Nice at around that time, and that is why you talk about what is "probable". Is that correct?

A. At the moment of putting together the witness statement I remembered that we met with Mr Berezovsky; I don't recall the dates. But based on the documents that I received in the process, I can say with certainty that we met with Mr Berezovsky on 6 November exactly because of this matter. Moreover, Mr Gorodilov remembers that as well.

Q. Let's leave aside Mr Gorodilov for when he comes to give evidence but let's just talk about you.

The only reason you are putting the date of 6 November on this meeting is because you are reconstructing from documents which you have disclosed; that is right, is it not?

A. If the question is whether I understood the date or, sorry, if I recall the date, then certainly not. This is a reconstruction.

Q. Thank you. And it is a reconstruction based upon a document which has come out of disclosure to which you refer in your witness statement; that is correct, is it not?

A. Yes.

Q. And to support this reconstruction you identify a document which we will find, if you can turn it up, at bundle H(A)23, page 12 H(A)23/12.

A. Yes, I do see this.

Q. You see -- or I hope you see, because it's the part in English -- it relates to a flight, an invoice for a flight that was taken from Moscow to Nice on 5, it looks, November 2000. Is that right?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. And this is the invoice that you say triggered your recollection that the meeting was on the 6th, is it?

A. Yes.

Q. Mr Abramovich, leave aside the fact that this suggests that the flight may have been on the 5th and not the 6th. Do you suggest that if you were in France that day, that necessarily meant that you would have met with Mr Berezovsky then?

A. That flight was not on the 5th but on the 6th. We left and we arrived on the 6th, that was midnight. So the dates switched -- they changed in flight. And we stayed at Maeterlinck Hotel, if I recall correctly. And the next day, if I recall correctly, round about lunchtime, I think that was the same day, the same 24 hours, I went to see Mr Berezovsky and Mr Gorodilov was waiting for me outside somewhere.

Q. That, I'm afraid, is not an answer to my question. Even if you were in France that day, do you suggest that it necessarily means that you met with Mr Berezovsky?

A. From my point of view, this necessarily does mean this. But understanding the cross-examination technology, I understand that one cannot assert it with 100 per cent certainty.

Q. You are not saying, are you -- I need to put that differently so we don't get confused.

Are you saying that you can think of no other reason why you might have gone to the south of France in November 2000?

A. I am certain that there couldn't have been any other reason, but this is reconstruction.

Q. Well, perhaps I can assist you then.

At this time, towards the end of the second half of 2000, you were in the process of buying the Chateau de la Croe; that's right, isn't it?

A. Sorry, the name of the chateau sounded strange.

Q. That's because my French is very strange; it's nonexistent. At this time you were in the process of buying the Chateau de la Croe?

This time I would in fact appreciate some assistance from my learned friend.

MS DAVIES: Croe.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: How do you pronounce it, Mr Abramovich?

A. (Not interpreted) Chateau de la Croe.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, it is spelt C-R-O-E.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you.

A. (Interpreted) Sorry, I can hear English.

THE INTERPRETER: Yes, I think we've fixed the problem now.

A. Indeed, in the year 2000 I was buying the chateau. Sorry, may -- I cannot assert at what point in time the transaction was closed. It's easy to get this information because we can request documents from Mr Bordes, who assisted Mr Berezovsky and Badri in buying their chateaux. But I'm confident that in winter, I never visited that chateau in wintertime until the moment when it was completed. That was a completely destroyed, burnt-out building so it was, for certain, nothing to do there in wintertime.

MR RABINOWITZ: If you let me ask the questions, you'll find that your responses tie into the questions.

First, this chateau is also in Antibes, isn't it?

A. Yes, this is true. It's one chateau away from Mr Berezovsky's chateau and two chateaux away from Mr Patarkatsishvili's chateau.

Q. And you had retained Mr Bordes as the estate agent on this purchase; that's right, isn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. And in early November 2000 there were problems with the acquisition; do you recall that?

A. I don't recall any problems with the acquisition of the chateau. I cannot assert that there were no problems; I simply didn't know about them.

Q. Can I ask you, please, to go to bundle H(C)6 at page 68

H(C)6/68. This is a letter to you, Mr Abramovich, from Mr Bordes. You can see it's dated 1 November 2000. I shall read it and then someone will translate it for you. It says:

"Dear Roman,

"Obviously your representative Mrs Lorraine HICKEY and your solicitor Mr Mark Halama are more than crossed against myself because I criticized their approach of the fiscal and juridical negotiation concerning your eventual purchase of the three corporations controlling the... Chateau... in Antibes, and also because I suggested some solutions for the future and I asked to Mr Alexander MAMUT to oblige them to accelerate the negotiations due to the fact that we are facing a serious competitor."

Mr Abramovich, would it help if we had that paragraph translated or would it better if I read the whole? Because I don't want you to have to retain everything.

- A. This is not a complicated text, I shall remember it.
- Q. Thank you.

"Mr Alexander MAMUT by sending them my confidential correspondence to him and to you has increased the antagonism between us and now they don't keep us anymore informed of what they are doing, of their intentions and of the appointments they are organising with the Vendors.

"They have the same attitude towards the important specialised attorney I recommended to you and that you accepted to retain, Me John HEINZEN in Paris.

"Consequently, I would like to ask you to insist that your two representatives, just as a matter of principle and politeness keep us informed. Also for my protection that you kindly return me the attached letter.

"I am sorry to ask you this, but you will certainly understand my position. I can imagine that being familiar with your interests it is normal for you to have a representative and I accepted it, but I am sincerely afraid to [lose] important interests like it already happened to me because of Mrs Lorraine HICKEY['s] behaviour."

So it looks as if at the beginning of November 2000 there was a problem developing with Mr Bordes and his handling of the acquisition; that's correct, is it not?

A. May I clarify, please?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, do.

A. I do agree that there was a problem. The problem was as follows: the chateau was belonging to three companies and we didn't want to buy any companies and we didn't take any tax risk. We were -- it was important for us to buy it all clear above board and pay all the taxes, the French authorities were monitoring this very carefully, and the previous owners wanted to sell these three companies to us, and this is the whole story.

Lorraine Hickey was -- well, she was quite tough and aggressive in negotiations and, therefore, perhaps an understanding (sic) has arisen, but... Except I don't understand why I need to visit a burned-down chateau in the middle of winter.

MR RABINOWITZ: Well, you wouldn't necessarily be meeting in the chateau; you could be meeting with Mr Bordes.

A. That is also illogical because Mr Bordes does not speak English -- sorry, does not speak Russian and I did not speak English and Mr Gorodilov doesn't speak English still, the same as myself. So there is no logic in that.

Q. You see, by early December you had in fact acquired the chateau, had you not?

A. I don't recall exactly what was the date but I didn't take any part in these negotiations, ie I knew that Mr Bordes wasn't happy with Lorraine's behaviour but I didn't know any more details.

Q. I suggest to you that you had very good reason to visit the south of France in November 2000, precisely because you were finalising the acquisition of your chateau there.

A. Sorry, I didn't understand. What was the reason? What was the reason? You're saying I was finalising the acquisition of the chateau. I had no part in it; that was my lawyers' work. I could not have impacted the transaction in any way. I could have paid the money and the rest would have been the way the transaction would have been documented.

Q. Is it not the case that Mr Bordes's son spoke fluent Russian?

A. Neither Mr Bordes nor his son, as far as I know, speaks Russian. As far as I remember, he wasn't in business at that point in time at all.

Q. Sorry, who wasn't in business at that time at all?

A. If I recall correctly, in year 2000 the business was led by Mr Bordes Senior, not by Mr Bordes Junior. I cannot 100 per cent assert that he wasn't working in the office, but as far as I recall I dealt with Mr Bordes Senior: that's the father of the current company owner.

Q. You see, I suggest to you that if you were in the south of France on 6 November, then this was not to see Mr Berezovsky but it was rather in connection with the acquisition of the chateau. That is right, is it not?

A. This is completely ruled out and I insist that I had nothing to do inside that chateau; as I explained, it was burnt out, there was nothing to do there. And I had no reason to meet Mr Bordes in the middle of winter because I spent every summer in the south of France; I could have had plenty of time to speak with him when I was spending my vacation there.

Q. I suggest the fact that you were dealing with the chateau also makes sense of the presence of Mr Gorodilov. In your witness statement you provide no explanation at all for why Mr Gorodilov should come to Nice to stay at the hotel at that time, do you?

A. Indeed I do not provide any explanation and I can explain that. The latest that I needed the help of Mr Gorodilov on, that was help in negotiations with Mr Bordes. If we would have negotiated the final transaction, that would have been a need to structure it and I would have really used the assistance of Mr Gorodilov there.

MR SUMPTION: I wonder if that needs to be retranslated because the transcribed answer is a little incoherent.

MR RABINOWITZ: What you seem to be suggesting in your answer -- let's see if we can work through this -- is that Mr Gorodilov was a person who would assist you in, for example, negotiating and dealing with the acquisition of the chateau. Is that right?

- A. This is completely not the case. The assistance of Mr Gorodilov in acquisition of chateau, I didn't need that assistance at all. There was no role for him there.
- Q. But, Mr Abramovich, you also do not provide any reason at all why you say Mr Gorodilov accompanied you to Nice on 6 November.
- A. There are several reasons: (a) he is my close friend; second reason, if we were discussing a payment scheme, I would have needed his assistance.
- Q. But he wouldn't have to fly there with you for you to be able to discuss a payment scheme with him, would he?
- A. If Boris or Badri -- if Mr Berezovsky or Badri wanted to talk to him or to speak with me in more detail than we discussed that in the meeting, then Mr Gorodilov would have been necessary, required.
- Q. And, as we shall see from Le Bourget, when Mr Gorodilov was necessary you could always phone him, because that's what you did at Le Bourget, did you not?
- A. Yes, this is true. We did call Mr Gorodilov from Le Bourget.
- Q. Now, so far as what happened at the meeting, which you say took place in early November, you I think acknowledged that you have very little recollection of this. That's right, isn't it?

- A. I indeed remember little about this meeting.
- Q. And you in fact say at paragraph 215 E3/01/99 that you "do not recall the details of what [you] discussed at the meeting"; that's right, isn't it?
- A. I do not recall the detail of what we have discussed, but from my point of view this is the meeting that Mr Berezovsky is describing and his witnesses are describing it. That meeting happened on 6 November, namely, and this is all that -- they are describing all this alleged taunting and putting them down that I supposedly did; all of that happened on 6 November.
- Q. And you also don't suggest that you actually recall whether you discussed ORT or not; that's right as well, isn't it? You say:
- "... I believe we probably discussed ORT."
- A. At the moment when I was writing the witness statement I wasn't 100 per cent sure at all.
- Q. And it's also correct that you don't claim to have discussed any sale price for ORT at this meeting?
- A. If I recall correctly, we've agreed the sale price with Mr Patarkatsishvili at my offices.
- Q. So it follows from what I'm saying that you don't claim to have discussed any sale price for ORT at this meeting; that's right, isn't it?
- A. Yes, I do not claim that.

- Q. And you certainly don't say in your evidence that at this meeting Mr Berezovsky told you that he wanted to sell his interests in ORT for $150 million?
- A. Sorry, I didn't understand. What I do not claim: that Mr Berezovsky wanted to sell for 150 million? No, I don't claim that. I don't remember how it happened. If I recall correctly, it was in the offices of Sibneft company and I discussed the cost of $150 million with Mr Patarkatsishvili.
- Q. In fact, Mr Abramovich -- and I'm not sure your witness statement suggests anything very much different -- you have no recollection of this particular meeting at all, do you?
- A. This is not so. I do recall that meeting.
- Q. You don't mention whether Elena Gorbunova was there or not; you can't recall, is that it?
- A. I recall Ms Elena Gorbunova; the question is whether she was related to that matter. She sat -- spent some time sitting at the table and left. We didn't discuss any detail -- I'm not sure whether we would have discussed any details in the presence of Ms Gorbunova. From my point of view...
- Q. You don't mention her at all in your witness statement, do you?
- A. I indeed do not mention Ms Elena Gorbunova in my statement. I usually mention -- or at least my logic is built in such a way -- I mention those who were related to the meeting, to the negotiations, not everyone who was in the chateau. I also do not mention all people who would theoretically have been met along the way; or, for example, people offering a drink of water, I don't mention them either. Ms Gorbunova, for sure, definitely did not take part in any negotiations.

Q. You don't even mention in your evidence whether Mr Patarkatsishvili was there or not. Do you not recall whether he was there or not?

A. I recall that Badri set up that meeting. As usual, he asked me to arrive and meet.

Q. I take it you're aware that until August of this year you had made no reference to this meeting at all in your pleaded case. Do you recall that? Well, perhaps we can look at that.

Can you be given bundle K4, tab 34 and go to page 92 K4/34/92. Just to explain what this is, it is your defence document, but it's your defence document as it stood in April of this year, and if you go to page 134 K2/34/134, you can see the date and your signature. Okay?

Can you go back, please, to page 92 K4/34/92. I want to show you paragraphs D27.1 and D27.2, where you're describing a meeting, and I will just read those to you and obviously if you need them translated specifically, the translator will help you.

"It is admitted that, on a date prior to 25 December 2000, Mr Berezovsky told the Defendant at a meeting between them and Mr Patarkatsishvili that he could no longer live in Russia, that he wanted to sell his (and, the Defendant assumed, Mr Patarkatsishvili's) indirect interests in ORT and [he] asked the Defendant to purchase those interests for US$150 million. In order to assist Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili, the Defendant agreed to do so, although the amount paid was, in the event, increased to approximately US$175 million, an amount which was greater than the value of those interests.

"Given the passage of time, the Defendant cannot now recall where the meeting took place, although he believes it was unlikely to have been in southern France at that time of year."

So, according to this pleading, Mr Abramovich, where you signed a statement of truth, there was a meeting and it was a meeting attended by Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili. Do you see that?

A. Yes, I can see that -- I can hear that.

Q. But your evidence now is that you say

Mr Patarkatsishvili was not there; is that right?

MR SUMPTION: No, my Lady, he did not say that.

A. I never said that.

MR RABINOWITZ: Sorry. Then please tell me what your evidence about Mr Patarkatsishvili is, in terms of the meeting that you're talking about in the pleading.

A. That we've discussed Ms Gorbunova in detail, as far as I understand, what you asked before that. And Mr Patarkatsishvili was the person who set up the meeting and certainly there were the three of us there. I don't know at what point it sounded like I said that there was no Mr Patarkatsishvili there.

Q. Well, Mr Abramovich, you do not mention anywhere in your witness statement that Mr Patarkatsishvili was at this meeting on 6 November, do you?

A. May I read the statement about this meeting? From what I can recall, I am writing about this. The ORT shares were discussed by the three of us at that meeting.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Are we talking about the meeting in the south of France or the meeting in your offices at Sibneft in the autumn?

A. We're talking about the 6 November meeting.

MR RABINOWITZ: In your witness statement, you do not say that Mr Patarkatsishvili was at this meeting that you claim happened at 6 November in Cap d'Antibes.

A. May I read my statement about this, please?

Q. Paragraph 215.

A. I have read this. I indeed do not directly say that Mr Patarkatsishvili was there but it can be seen from the context that we have discussed it with Mr Patarkatsishvili as well. If you read two paragraphs together, you can see that we discussed it together.

Q. You see, when I asked you about Ms Gorbunova and whether she was there, you explained that people who weren't centrally involved in the meeting, people who might have offered you water, wouldn't be mentioned; but people who would be involved in the meeting you would have referred to. And you don't refer to Mr Patarkatsishvili as being at the meeting you claim happened, do you?

A. In that paragraph I do indeed not refer to Mr Patarkatsishvili but I do refer to him in the following paragraph and in the previous paragraph.

In paragraph 215 I'm saying that the question is whether I've met with Mr Berezovsky about this. Yes, I did meet Mr Berezovsky directly. That means that Mr Patarkatsishvili -- we always negotiated with Mr Patarkatsishvili about this and so for me it was natural that Mr Patarkatsishvili was in that meeting. I did not state that specifically in this paragraph but if -- to have -- to read everything that's said by me about this, that's obvious; at least it is obvious in Russian.

Q. Just going back to your pleading, D27, whenever this meeting was, your pleaded case was that this was a meeting -- so you said here -- at which Mr Berezovsky asked you to purchase his interest for $150 million; that's the fourth and fifth lines of paragraph D27.1. But your evidence now is that you do not have any recollection of any such request having been made at this meeting in early November. That's right, isn't it?

A. As I said, I indeed do not recall in detail how this happened.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Choose your moment, Mr Rabinowitz, please.

MR RABINOWITZ: We can stop now, my Lady, and come back to this.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well. 2 o'clock.

(1.02 pm)

(The short adjournment)

(2.00 pm)

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Abramovich, we were looking at paragraphs D27.1 and D27.2, which you have in front of you K4/34/92. We had just talked about whether or not Mr Patarkatsishvili was in fact at this meeting, which was what you had said in the pleading, but that wasn't reflected in your witness statement.

Again, just looking at paragraph D27.1, you can see that you said that whenever this meeting was, it was a meeting at which Mr Berezovsky asked you to purchase his interests for $150 million. Do you see that?

A. Are we talking about my witness statement or are we discussing...

Q. The pleading, the...

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: This is an earlier version of your pleading, not your witness statement.

MR RABINOWITZ: Do you see that?

A. Of course my witness statement is much more precise than what was written much earlier than that. So, if I may, I will refer to your opening and you said that the more a person deals with something, the more he remembers, the more comes to him, and this is exactly what was happening to me. The deeper I immersed myself into this matter, the more time I dedicated to it, the more I remembered, the more details came to mind.

Q. You see, Mr Abramovich, it's not just a question of not remembering about the $150 million purchase price being agreed there; your current evidence is that you positively assert that the $150 million price was not requested at the 6 November meeting. That's right, isn't it?

- A. In my witness statement I say that the price $150 million was agreed with Mr Patarkatsishvili in my office.
- Q. And it was at a much later stage than the 6 November meeting; that's right, isn't it?
- A. No, that is not correct. I can't tell you the date; it might have been end of October or it might have been the very beginning of November. I cannot remember the date. From what I remember, it was around 6 November; otherwise there would have been -- there wouldn't have been any point of going there. That's how I see it.
- Q. Well, let's just see what you actually said in your witness statement.

If you look at paragraphs 215 and 216 E1/03/99, that's where you're dealing with the 6 November meeting, and then in 217 you say: in accordance with what you say was an agreement, which at that stage you were talking about an agreement for $100 million, you say that Mr Fomichev and Mr Gorodilov dealt with documentation dealing with this.

Then if you go to paragraph 218 on the following page E1/03/100, you claim, and I'm looking at the end of the second line:

"[You] particularly recall a meeting in [your] office in Sibneft where Mr Patarkatsishvili informed

[you] that Mr Berezovsky wanted [you] to pay more for their shares and had required the price now to be US$150 million."

Now, that is plainly after the 6 November meeting.

That's right, isn't it?

A. No, that's not necessarily so at all.

Initially the price was $100 million; at some point Mr Patarkatsishvili came and said that Mr Berezovsky doesn't agree to sell for 100 million, 150 million is the price that would satisfy them. To say it was after 6 November, I don't think it's possible to say that on the basis of this witness statement. On 9 October the movement of shares started but I can't remember exactly when the price of 150 was agreed.

Q. Well, in fact, not only is it possible to say that it was after this date but you do say it was after that date. Look at what you say at paragraph 219. You say:

"Accordingly, although the price (US$150 million) for the ORT deal was agreed by mid or late November... certain aspects of the [transaction] remained outstanding."

So you're suggesting there a date certainly after 6 November: by mid- or late November.

A. It can be read this way. I'm not stating a date; I'm just saying that by mid-November it was already agreed.

6 November, as far as I understand, is prior to mid-November. It is precisely because I don't remember the date I'm saying that by mid-November the price had already been agreed.

Q. Mr Abramovich, I have to suggest to you that this supposed meeting that you say occurred with Mr Berezovsky in early November 2000 simply never happened. Do you understand? Do you want to comment on that?

A. My Lady, I insist that this meeting took place and it took place on 6 November. There's nothing else I can comment. I disagree with the suggestion of the plaintiff.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Can I just be clear that I understand your evidence. We've got the meeting with Mr Voloshin, the meeting you say occurred with Mr Patarkatsishvili at your office -- or at least one, maybe more -- and then we've got the meeting with Mr Berezovsky which you say happened on 6 November.

Can you put those meetings in any sort of order or are you saying, speaking today, you can't recall the chronology of those three meetings, the order of those three meetings?

A. I cannot give you the chronology. As I understand it, as I imagine, I remember, first there was a meeting with Badri about $100 million; then at some point, around 6 November, we agreed 150 million, maybe a bit later, and prior to that, there was a meeting with Mr Voloshin. This is the logic of how I understand this process but I cannot put the dates one after another.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right, thank you.

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Abramovich, I suggest you are right to suggest you met with Mr Berezovsky in a chateau in Cap d'Antibes after he left Russia but in truth this meeting happened later, shortly following the arrest of Mr Glushkov in early December. That is right, isn't it?

A. After arrest of Mr Glushkov we never met with Mr Berezovsky in the south of France. We met once in Megeve.

Q. Can I just ask you next, please, to look again at paragraph 216 of your witness statement. It's at page 200 of the file in Russian E1/03/200, at page 99 in English E1/03/99. You refer in this paragraph to telling Mr Gorodilov of your agreement and asking him to contact Mr Fomichev to arrange the deal.

Do you say you told Mr Gorodilov on the day of the meeting that you say happened on the 6th or do you say it was later on, or do you not remember clearly?

A. Most likely we discussed it on 6 November but I cannot be precise as to what exactly and I cannot really be sure.

- Q. And in fact would it be fair to say that a lot of what you say here is reconstruction rather than actual recollection?
- A. That is fair to say. Many of these things are reconstruction.
- Q. Mr Gorodilov's evidence seems to be that the conversation you say you had with him which led him to contact Mr Fomichev about an acquisition of ORT shares took place at the end of October, he says at the end of October/early November, but before 6 November.
- A. I think I've said the same. I said that it could have happened at that time. I did not give you the date when it might have happened. On the other hand, it would be strange if I had brought or taken Mr Gorodilov along with me, not explaining to him why it is that he is accompanying me there.
- Q. But the point I'm trying to make, Mr Abramovich, is that according to Mr Gorodilov the time when you told him about your agreement and asked him to contact Mr Fomichev was before 6 November. Do you want me to show you that or do you agree with Mr Gorodilov that that is when you told him about the agreement and told him to contact Mr Fomichev?
- A. I'm not contesting this. I'm saying that I don't recall when it is -- when it was that I told him. I cannot give you that date.

- Q. You see, if it is right that you told him about the agreement and he should contact Mr Fomichev before 6 November, does that mean that you instructed Mr Gorodilov that he should start working on the transaction structures for this purchase before you discussed it with Mr Berezovsky on 6 November for the first time?
- A. That's quite possible. I can't see any contradiction here.
- Q. So your case is you instructed Mr Gorodilov to prepare these documents even before you had ever discussed purchasing Mr Berezovsky's ORT shares for the first time?
- A. Well, I'm not insisting; I'm just saying that it is quite possible. We were discussing this deal with Badri for quite a long time, so it's quite possible that documents could have been prepared in anticipation. I can't tell you the date. Very likely at some point it could have happened, it could have easily happened before 6 November; I just simply cannot tell you for sure.
- Q. And 6 November is the only occasion on which you suggest in your evidence that you might have discussed buying

Mr Berezovsky's shares in ORT with him before the meeting at Le Bourget; that's right, isn't it?

A. "With him" means with whom?

Q. Mr Berezovsky.

A. Yes.

Q. So if you are wrong about having seen Mr Berezovsky or discussed ORT with him on 6 November, it's pretty clear that you hadn't discussed it with him at all prior to 6 December; that would follow, would it not?

A. I sort of lost the cause-and-effect link. What follows from what, please, again?

Q. If you are wrong about having seen Mr Berezovsky or discussed ORT with him on 6 November, it would follow that you hadn't discussed ORT with him at all prior to 6 December, when you met at Le Bourget?

A. I'm convinced that we met with him and discussed acquisition of ORT shares.

Q. Although you acknowledge that you cannot in fact recall anything about that meeting on 6 November, including whether or not you in fact discussed ORT; that's right, is it not?

A. No, that's not so. The only thing that worried Mr Berezovsky at that time was ORT. So if I went -- I mean, to go to his home, to go to his place, to go to talk to him, or to go to Nice at that time and not to visit him, or visit him and not discuss ORT, all of these things are totally incredible and impossible.

- Q. Mr Abramovich, the last answer you gave is reconstruction and perhaps, you would say, logical deduction, but you have no recollection of that, which is what I suggested to you.
- A. You are wrong in suggesting that. I don't remember the details of the meeting but I do remember that the meeting took place and on the basis of reconstruction, on the basis of consulting the documents, I then assert that the meeting took place on 6 November.

Q. No one disputes that a meeting took place; the dispute is about the date. You do understand that, don't you?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. Can we go back, please, to paragraph 216 of your statement E1/03/99. We've already looked at where you say you instructed Mr Gorodilov to work on the structure for the ORT transaction and you say that might even have been before you met with Mr Berezovsky.

What you go on to say in the paragraphs that follow is that the complications for the transaction arose from the need to pay the money to Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili offshore; that's right, isn't it?

A. Yes, indeed. I said that initially the deal was structured in such a way and we planned it in such a way that it would be a totally Russian transaction and they would pay taxes on the deal at the rate of 13 per cent.

- Q. Now, this concern of Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili about being paid offshore was a concern that was raised fairly early on; it wasn't a concern which was raised at the last minute, was it?
- A. What do you mean, an early stage?
- Q. Well, certainly before you met at Le Bourget on 6 December.
- A. Yes, indeed. Absolutely.
- Q. Now, you don't suggest that you had any involvement in preparing a structure for the purchase of ORT, do you?
- A. I am not insisting that I took part in preparing the structure, no.
- Q. And you don't claim that you had any discussions with Mr Fomichev, do you?
- A. No, I had -- as far as I remember, I had no discussions with Mr Fomichev.
- Q. And you don't claim to have had any discussions with any of Mr Berezovsky's or Mr Patarkatsishvili's associates about a sale of ORT or about the structure for such a sale before December 2000, do you?
- A. I did not catch it. Are you counting Mr Patarkatsishvili among Mr Berezovsky's associates?
- Q. No, I'm talking about associates -- no, I wouldn't include Mr Patarkatsishvili as Mr Berezovsky's associate for the purpose of this question. I'm asking you about the people who were their associates rather than either of them.

- A. It's unlikely that I would have talked to any of them about it.
- Q. The arranging of the sale and the arranging of the structure for the sale was something that you say you left entirely to Mr Andrey Gorodilov; that's right, isn't it?
- A. The structure of the deal, the arrangement of the deal, yes, indeed, I left entirely to Gorodilov; but I discussed this with Badri as well.
- Q. In terms of the structure and what was done in relation to the structure, you cannot give any first-hand evidence about what, if any, specific steps were taken to prepare a structure for a transfer of shares in ORT; that's right, isn't it?
- A. Well, it depends on what we call direct evidence. I didn't deal with the structure myself; I was informed, I knew a little bit, I understood a little bit, but indeed I wasn't engaged in it personally. So it is obvious that I am not a direct source for this information.
- Q. And you aren't able to give any first-hand evidence about when any specific step was taken in terms of putting the structure together, are you?

- A. I can talk about the final structure but I can't talk about the initial structure. I remember that the movement of shares started on 9 November but which steps preceded and which steps followed that, I don't know, I don't remember.

And the final structure was agreed on 6 December in Le Bourget. If you read the transcript, you see all the steps as they went along because Badri and I keep recalling who was guilty of what, as it were, whose fault was what action and what we had to pay for and which action was done and not done.

- Q. You don't suggest that either Mr Berezovsky or Mr Patarkatsishvili personally had any involvement in preparing a structure for the transfer of the ORT shares, do you?
- A. I maintain that Mr Berezovsky and Badri, and in particular Badri, took part in organising the structure.
- Q. Do you suggest there was any contact between Mr Gorodilov and either Mr Patarkatsishvili or Mr Berezovsky personally in relation to the preparation of such a structure?
- A. If a telephone conversation is not a personal contact, then I don't remember anything else. I don't remember, when I was discussing this 150 million, whether Andrey came into the office whilst I was talking to Badri or later. But most likely, no, there were no direct contacts.

- Q. Can I ask you, please, to go back to paragraph 217 of your witness statement E1/03/99. You say at paragraph 217:

"In accordance with this agreement, and consistently with the documents I have recently reviewed relating to this agreement, I understand that, as a result of a number of transactions arranged by Mr Andrey Gorodilov and Mr Fomichev, in the period 9 November to 12 November 2000, the shares [in ORT-KB]... were transferred out of all but one of the companies and into the personal names of Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili."

And you can see, Mr Abramovich, in that sentence that you are avowedly giving evidence on the basis of the documents you have recently reviewed. Do you see that?

- A. Yes, I can see these words and I did say that mainly this is reconstruction.
- Q. That suggests that you don't yourself have any first-hand knowledge of these matters and that you were relying on the documents in order to piece together what you say happened. That's right, isn't it?

A. In some cases, that is so. Some things I remember. But on the whole, you're right, I am relying on documents.

Q. And you say that the transactions which you were referring to and which you have used the documentation to put together were arranged by Mr Gorodilov and Mr Fomichev.

Now, Mr Abramovich, there are no documents whatever relating to these transactions which were produced by Mr Fomichev or even which were amended by Mr Fomichev. Is that something that you're aware of?

A. The question is whether I know that Mr Fomichev has not amended or edited any documents? No, I don't know that.

Q. Presumably when you conducted the review you say you conducted, you would have noticed that there are no documents either produced by Mr Fomichev or which were even amended by Mr Fomichev; or did you not notice that on your review?

A. I've already said that I'm not a man of detail, so I'm not -- I didn't read the documents all that attentively. But I'm not insisting that Mr Fomichev amended the documents. In no way am I insisting on that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Rabinowitz, if you look at paragraph 217, the reference is to "as a result of a number of transactions arranged by... Gorodilov and...

Fomichev".

MR RABINOWITZ: Well, he says that it's consistent with the documents he's reviewed.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, I'm not quite understanding the point that you're putting but I don't think it matters anyway.

MR RABINOWITZ: There are not only no documents which carry Mr Fomichev's involvement; there is also no correspondence to or from Mr Fomichev in which he sent documentation relating to these transactions to Mr Gorodilov or anyone else. Would you have noticed that in your review of these documents?

A. I've already mentioned that I didn't notice it, but it's quite possible. First of all, Mr Fomichev is not involved in these proceedings, so we can only get documents from one side: we can only get our disclosure. So it's not correct to insist that there are no documents from Mr Fomichev.

Q. I'm suggesting to you that the documents themselves do not show that the transactions were arranged by Mr Fomichev.

A. I can't either -- I can neither refute or agree with this. On the basis of these documents I have no understanding. That's all I can say.

Q. Can you go next to paragraph 219 of your witness statement, please E1/03/100. You say in the last sentence of paragraph 219:

"I understand that Mr Andrey Gorodilov and Mr Fomichev continued to discuss these issues..."

You're talking about the mechanics of the structure.

"... between themselves."

Now, again, there are no documents relating to the structuring of an ORT transaction produced in November or early December which were produced by Mr Fomichev. Are you aware of any document that was produced by Mr Fomichev at this time relating to the structuring of the transaction?

A. I am not asserting that we have documents that come from Mr Fomichev. In Russian practice it is not customary to document meetings, to have protocols or minutes after every meeting. If a meeting took place, that doesn't mean that it would give rise to a document; not at all.

Q. So what is the source of your understanding here as to what occurred in this period in relation to structuring, if it's not documentation?

A. Documents which is part of these proceedings, which has been disclosed; number 1. Number 2: my absolute understanding that the only person in the organisation of Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Berezovsky who even theoretically could have taken part in such a deal is Mr Fomichev.

Q. Yes, but, Mr Abramovich, if there are no documents which either come to or were sent to Mr Fomichev, it appears that the only basis for your understanding is an inference that it must have been Mr Fomichev who was involved because he was the only person in the organisation of Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Berezovsky who even theoretically could have been involved. Is that what you're saying?

A. Well, not quite so. What I'm saying is given that the fact that the other side has not disclosed any documents for these proceedings, I cannot say for sure that these documents don't exist. Therefore we're forced to work with the documents that have been disclosed, that we have disclosed for the purposes of these proceedings.

Q. And none of those suggest that Mr Fomichev had any involvement at all. Do you understand what I'm saying to you?

A. Yes, I understand what you're saying. It doesn't follow from the documents in these proceedings that Mr Fomichev had anything to do with these documents but in fact, in reality, this is exactly what happened: he was involved.

Q. Can you then go back to paragraph 217 of your witness statement E1/03/100. I want to look at the second-last sentence of that paragraph. You're referring here to corporate notices and you say:

"In addition, corporate notices were then served of Mr Berezovsky's and Mr Patarkatsishvili's intention to sell their shares to a company that was associated with me."

And then in the last sentence you say:

"It is possible that I was told about this at the time but I cannot now recall."

Again, you don't suggest that you were personally involved in producing or serving any such corporate notices, do you?

- A. In fact I am saying that I did not participate personally.
- Q. And you don't suggest that you remember being shown these corporate notices before they were sent, do you?
- A. I think that it's very unlikely that I was shown these corporate notices.
- Q. And you don't suggest that you would have known when those corporate notices were produced or served?
- A. In my evidence I say that I have now seen these documents and on the basis of that, I'm giving evidence. If you ask me whether I remember that corporate notices were served, of course I don't remember it.
- Q. So all your evidence is based upon a reconstruction of what you see in documentation in the case; is that right?

A. The question is: just what do you mean by "all", "all your evidence"? If you're asking me when shares started moving, then yes, that's on the basis of documents I have seen. Whether all my -- if you're asking me whether all my recollection, all my memory is based on these documents; no, of course not, not all my evidence and not all my recollection.

Q. I'm just talking about the documentation relating to the movement of shares, corporate notices and the like.

A. And I said that from the very beginning. Why did we need to go over it? I said from the very beginning that I cannot remember this. My evidence here is based on documents and is reconstruction.

Q. And then at paragraph 18 --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: 18 or 218?

MR RABINOWITZ: Sorry, 218.

Can I ask you to read paragraph 218 to yourself,

Mr Abramovich. (Pause)

A. Yes, I have read that.

Q. So you here are talking about a meeting that you say you had with Mr Patarkatsishvili in Moscow in late autumn 2000 and if you go down to paragraph 219, you appear to be more specific about this. You say, I think, that it was in mid- or late November; is that right?

- A. This is what is written, yes.
- Q. Mr Gorodilov in his evidence says that the meeting may well have been after 28 November 2000. I don't suppose you would disagree with that, would you?
- A. May I read Mr Gorodilov's evidence, please, on this subject?
- Q. If you go to bundle E2, tab 4, it's at page 67 of the Russian E2/04/67 and page 26 in the English E2/04/26. It's paragraph 64, I think I may have said that. He refers to this meeting about eight lines from the bottom. He says:
- "It is possible... that the meeting in Mr Abramovich's office took place after 28 November."
- A. Yes, I can see this.
- Q. And as I understand your evidence about this meeting in late November, you suggest that whilst you discussed possible structures for buying shares in ORT at that meeting, there was still no decision about what structure should be used. Is that right? It seems to be what you're saying at paragraph 219.
- A. The final decision on structure, the absolutely final decision was taken on 6 December.
- Q. Just so that we're clear about this then, I think you're accepting that by the time of the Le Bourget meeting on 6 December, the position remained that, while structures had been discussed, you had still not decided on the structure for the transfer of the shares from Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili to you?

- A. That is not so. Everything was discussed and agreed. The actual arrangement for the deal hasn't been ready; the arrangement of how money should be paid and in what form has not been taken. Everything else was decided, including the price.
- Q. You see, I don't think you understood the question. I was in fact following on from what you had said, which was that the final decision on structure was taken on 6 December. And all I said to you was that prior to 6 December there hadn't been a final decision on structure and that must follow from what you had said, Mr Abramovich?
- A. Well, the problem is that on the one hand you're using the word "structure" and on the other hand you're using the word "arrangement". The arrangement for payment was agreed on 6 December. The structure for the deal had been discussed ages ago and agreed.
- Q. Well, we'll see if that can possibly be right when we look at the Le Bourget transcript.

But would you accept this: that before the meeting at Le Bourget, given that there were still outstanding issues relating to the arrangement or structure, whichever word you prefer, it would not have been possible to execute any transactions for the transfer of shares in ORT from Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili to you?

A. Of course I don't agree with that.

Q. If you had not yet agreed the final arrangements or structures under which this transaction was to take place, how could it have made any sense to execute any transactions for the transfer of shares, given that you hadn't finally concluded the structure that was to be put in place?

A. Well, the structure had in fact already been agreed and there is a big difference between an arrangement for payment, how money should be paid and received legally in London, and the structure of share transfer. These are two different things. This is a very obvious business logic.

I've already mentioned, before lunch, there is a difference between -- and, I mean, we have to agree what we call termination of the deal, the end of the deal, what is a scheme, what is an arrangement. For me the essence of a deal and the end of a deal, the deal is closed when we agree that one is selling and the other one is acquiring the shares and when we discuss the structure. The rest is an arrangement to transfer the cash, and that can take as long as it must.

Q. Can we go back to the Le Bourget transcript, please, at bundle E6 and E7. Can you go to box 206, page 81 of the English version E6/01/81.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, could I ask you please, can you read to yourself boxes 206 to 211, please. (Pause)

A. I beg your pardon, until which box?

Q. 206 to 211.

A. I've read. I've read them.

Q. And what is discussed in boxes 206 to 211 relates to the announcement which you made to the Kremlin press pool that you would be willing to act as an intermediary in the sale of Mr Berezovsky's shares in ORT; that's right, isn't it?

A. No, no, no, this was not my statement. This was a closed meeting over lunch with editors-in-chief of various newspapers. It was devoted to my election campaign to the position of governor and at the meeting I was asked: is it true that I was planning to acquire ORT shares? First of all, I wasn't expecting that. Secondly, Badri asked me never to tell anyone about that. That's why I open -- that's why I answered in such a way that, "No, I have no plans, and even if I were to buy them, I would most probably act as an intermediary to resell later". It was not an official press conference; it was a lunch with journalists.

Q. Whether it was a lunch with journalists or an open meeting, you were telling them that you would be willing to act as an intermediary in the sale of Mr Berezovsky's shares in ORT; that's right, isn't it?

A. I gave them this version, yes, that is so. Moreover, if after I had acquired those shares I had managed to sell them to anybody at all, I would have been delighted to do so.

Q. And it wasn't a question of you acting as an intermediary for resale afterwards. If you look at your commentary at box 207, what you said was:

"I... said... I was not buying ORT but that I could theoretically act as a trusted intermediary between Mr Berezovsky and the Government..."

That is not what you have just claimed you were saying, is it?

A. I think that's exactly what I've just said. I just extrapolated the sentence a little bit.

Q. Right. And when you say this, at the end of box 207, that you are willing to act as an intermediary, Mr Berezovsky asks:

"Intermediary in what?"

And you reply:

"Should the question of selling shares arise. But currently, as it were, this is not being discussed."

That's at page 84 of the English E6/01/84.

A. Yes.

Q. So what you were telling the journalists then is that, in relation to ORT, should the question of selling shares arise, you would act as an intermediary, but that this had not yet arisen?

A. I'm using these Russian words, "kak by" --

THE INTERPRETER: The witness is asking the interpreter to translate this into English because it's an important phrase, "kak by": "as it were", "as if", "as it were".

MR RABINOWITZ: Well, it says:

"But currently, as it were, this is not being discussed."

That is to say a sale of the ORT shares is not being discussed. That is what you told the journalists?

A. No, that's not the same. That's not what I said to the journalists. I said to the journalists, "I don't want to buy and most likely I'll be an intermediary", but here I'm saying, "as it were", hypothetically.

Q. Okay. You see, I suggest to you that when you were telling the journalists that the question of selling shares had not yet arisen, you were telling them the truth.

- A. Your statement is not right. It's not something I do, talk about something before the deal is done. There would have been rumours, there would have been a lot of noise around and then there was still nothing happening, no movement. So telling the journalists, who are curious, of course, to tell them something before it had happened, that's not something I do. Once the deal is done, we make a press release. This is the way to act.
- Q. Mr Abramovich, on your case there was already an agreement in principle and if that were the truth, you could have told the journalists that, could you not?
- A. Of course not. What is the point of telling something to the journalists before the deal is concluded? What, just to have attention attracted to that, for the deal to be jeopardised? What is the point of talking to the press before the transaction is finalised? None at all.
- Q. Let's just go back to the transcript. If you can go to box 211 E6/01/85, you'll see from box 211 and following there is a discussion between you and Mr Patarkatsishvili about the possible sale of ORT shares and this goes on for a while.

Can I ask you, please, to go to box 237 E6/01/96. At this point you start discussing with Mr Patarkatsishvili the methods of structuring the transaction; do you see that? 237.

A. Yes.

Q. Thank you. And then if you go to box 249 at page 99 of the English E6/01/99, you say that you had spoken to President Putin and he had said that if you --

A. May we -- I beg your pardon, may we dwell a little bit on 237? I would like to add a few words on 237.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Make the point.

A. In 237 I'm saying that overnight from the 5th to the 6th, Gorodilov told me about this arrangement, and on the 6th I am reporting on this arrangement to Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Berezovsky. From my point of view it proves that I wasn't -- or hadn't planned this trip beforehand. I came there on request of Mr Patarkatsishvili, on the 5th, in fact. My plan was to fly to Chukotka.

Q. Box 249, page 99 E6/01/99, you say that you have spoken to President Putin and he has said that if the sale of ORT could be achieved quietly and he was kept out of it, then he would not stand in the way of money being paid to Mr Berezovsky; that's correct, isn't it?

A. Well, I'm telling them in great detail about my conversation so there's nothing much I can add.

Q. What you can do is to tell me whether what I summarise as being your conversation is correct.

You say you have spoken to President Putin and he has said that if the sale of ORT could be achieved quietly and he was kept out of it, then he would not stand in the way of money being paid to Mr Berezovsky; and that is correct, is it not?

A. That's part of it. He said that he didn't want to participate. He said, "It's nothing to do with me. Do it between yourselves. This is your private business".

Q. And the issue that you are discussing with Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili here related to the fact that, if there was going to be a sale, Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Berezovsky wanted to be paid in England and not Russia; that's right, isn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. And President Putin was focused upon getting ORT from Mr Berezovsky but at this time not so concerned about Mr Berezovsky receiving some money; that's correct, isn't it?

A. No.

Q. Mr Abramovich, it's just not right to say that President Putin had no interest in whether or not Mr Berezovsky gave up his interest in ORT. Can I ask you, please, to go back to box 449 at page 154 E6/01/154.

A. Yes, I can see that.

Q. This is an exchange that arises after you have been discussing ways of structuring any transaction and, as we see, you say here:

"What, then, should we sign then so that I could take it to Vladimir Vladimirovich, show it to him and say: here you are, the deal is done..."

That plainly shows, Mr Abramovich, that President Putin was interested in ensuring that the deal was done.

A. That's not so. I got involved in this deal: I said that I was going to acquire it, I don't know directly or through Voloshin. Since I got involved and I'm taking part, then of course I have to explain at what point I will finalise the deal. And in 450 Badri says:

"... we have signed everything [already]."

Q. You see, Mr Abramovich, if President Putin had no interest then why would you be talking about rushing back as soon as you could to show him a piece of paper to show that you had done the deal? That's not the way you would have behaved if President Putin had no interest in whether this deal was done.

A. At that point, after I had already explained, that was concerning me; I was concerned and worried. If I promised the president that I would do the deal, that I'm planning to make this deal, then I of course have to inform him that I have finalised the deal.

If I may add, ORT shares, the 49 per cent, in particular they are valuable only in the hands of Mr Berezovsky because he influences content. Not a single normal businessman who thinks about the financial aspects, he doesn't need ORT shares because this is a loss-making enterprise capable of creating only problems and would never bring any profit to anyone, at least in the foreseeable future.

- Q. Did you promise President Putin to do the deal to acquire ORT shares?
- A. No, I didn't promise. I just promised that if I buy them, I'll inform him. In fact I don't even remember whether I promised it to him directly or through Mr Voloshin. I can't be precise here.
- Q. In the course of the meeting at Le Bourget you suggested that on a number of occasions that a deal for you to buy 49 per cent of ORT should be closed at that meeting; that's right, isn't it?
- A. It was closed at this meeting in fact. Well, the arrangement -- in fact the deal was done earlier but the arrangement was finalised at the meeting.
- Q. Can you go to box 428, please. It's at page 148 of E6 E6/01/148. You see you say there:

"We could now close this deal as it is, and later -- I promise -- we shall always find understanding on this matter..."

So that's one occasion on which you refer to closing the deal.

Can you look then at 430. You say again:

"(So then) we shall finalise this deal, so that I could report on it without further ado, (that) the deal is done..."

And you say that would be reported to President Putin or Mr Voloshin.

I suggest to you it's clear from this that at this point you obviously didn't think that the deal had been done.

A. 428 is where I say that I promise that we will anticipate find a solution later: that means that I promise to pay some of the money for legalisation that Mr Berezovsky had achieved earlier. That's nothing to do with this. But in 430 years, in fact I would agree with you.

Q. And can you next go to box 449, please. It's on page 154 of the English E6/01/154. This is the third occasion in a fairly short space of time where you talk about the need still to complete the deal. You say:

"What, then, should we sign then so that I could take it to Vladimir Vladimirovich, show it to him and say: here you are, the deal is done..."

- A. I've already commented that in 450 Badri says we've already signed everything.
- Q. You expected that when the deal was done, it would be put in writing; that's right, isn't it?
- A. From the legal point of view, a concluded deal, a closed deal, if that's we mean, then that's when all the documents are ready; I agree with you.

But at the meeting we were discussing a different thing. I meant this thing but Badri was waiting for instructions in ORT-KB for shares to be transferred. That's what Badri meant.

- Q. I think we can agree, Mr Abramovich, that no agreement was signed at Le Bourget; that's right, isn't it?
- A. Yes, we can agree on that. No agreement was signed in Le Bourget. Moreover, I had no text of any agreement with me. There was nothing to sign, there was nothing prepared.
- Q. And Mr Berezovsky, in the course of the meeting, did not once say anything to indicate even that he would be willing to sign an agreement at that stage, did he?
- A. That's not true.
- Q. Where do you say Mr Berezovsky said anything that he would be willing to sign an agreement at that time?
- A. There are references to -- well, not references but there are replicas made by Mr Berezovsky. Moreover, at the time 408, 410, when I am on the phone, the two of them, Badri and Mr Berezovsky, are discussing between themselves. If you would like to go back to that, we can read it, then I'll explain to you. It's difficult for me to quote from memory, it's difficult to remember the text and the number of boxes that the text refers to.

Q. When the meeting ended you had nothing signed to take to President Putin to show him you had completed the purchase of ORT, did you?

A. I, at that point, didn't have to bring anything. I already said I went over there to discuss the arrangement. I didn't go there to conclude the deal in a legal sense and this is why there was nothing to sign, nothing to be signed and nothing to be taken back.

Q. And since you had agreed to keep President Putin informed, you would have had to tell him that no sale had been agreed and certainly that you had been unable to get an agreement in writing; that's right, isn't it?

A. You're absolutely wrong. I left with a firm understanding that the deal is done, finalised. We discussed the arrangement and all the final issues have been resolved. We have resolved how payment could be made for them to receive the money in the bank that they wanted to receive it in.

- Q. I suggest to you you would have gone back to Moscow and reported back to President Putin that you had been unable to close the deal and President Putin would have been very disappointed about that. That's right, isn't it?
- A. That is not right. I did not meet President Putin at that time. In fact, immediately after Le Bourget, on the 7th, I was planning to leave. On the 6th, after the meeting I went straight to Moscow and from Moscow I was planning to leave for Chukotka immediately.
- Q. And it was precisely because you had been unable to produce a concluded deal with Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili, that is what led to Mr Glushkov being arrested the next day; this is right, is it not?
- A. Of course not. We have discussed already that Glushkov's arrest was envisaged. The Deputy Prosecutor General has already declared or announced that on the television to him. So there was a -- and to link these events, that's quite wrong.
- Mr Glushkov, if I understand it correctly, was arrested on charges related to Aeroflot; nothing to do with ORT.
- Q. Mr Abramovich, I'm not going to go around this one again but in fact we saw an exchange between you and Mr Berezovsky in which you said you did not think Mr Berezovsky would be arrested the following day. Do you remember that?

A. Yes, I remember I said that I didn't think he will be arrested but in the following box I say that Krasnenker phoned me and told me that problems could be expected. But, again, I was only putting forward my guesses.

Q. Now, again -- stay with Le Bourget and the transcript -- one of the things that was discussed were possible transaction structures so that, in any transaction, the purchase price for ORT could be paid offshore outside of Russia.

With that in mind, can I ask you please to go to paragraph 216 again of your witness statement. That's at page 200 of E1, tab, 3 in Russian E1/03/200, page 99 in English E1/03/99.

In the second sentence you say that Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili "were very keen to receive their money in their personal names in foreign personal accounts", and that this complicated the transaction.

Do you see that?

A. Yes, I can see that.

Q. And if you then go back to the Le Bourget transcript at [box] 364. In bundle E6 it's at page 130 E6/01/130.

Can I ask you to read boxes 364 to 367.

A. I think something is wrong in pagination. We have -- okay, sorry, I've found it.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I don't think you've been given the Russian pagination, I think that's the problem.

MR RABINOWITZ: Page 127, please, in the Russian E7/01/127.

A. I need to read 364; yes?

Q. 364 to 367, please. (Pause)

A. Yes.

Q. Mr Patarkatsishvili is talking to Mr Gorodilov about the need for contractual documentation for a payment of money to him and Mr Berezovsky offshore.

And then if you go to box 379: page 132 of E6 E6/01/132 and 129 of E7 E6/01/129. 379, you can see that Mr Patarkatsishvili is explaining that the contractual documentation is needed because he and Mr Berezovsky now have personal accounts, bank accounts in the west to which the money needs to be transferred. Do you see that?

A. Yes, I can see that.

Q. And you were in fact aware that those bank accounts were in London? I think you may have mentioned that earlier.

A. Today I know that they were in London. At that time I didn't quite understand it. I might have guessed. I cannot be 100 per cent sure at that time that I knew they were in London.

Q. Can you go back to box 400, please. It's at page 135 in E6 E6/01/135 and 134 in E7 E7/01/134.

Do you see Mr Patarkatsishvili is talking about receiving the money in London in the accounts?

A. On 394 Mr Berezovsky said, "I'm ready to do all this".

Q. Mr Abramovich, can you answer my questions, please.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: You have to go down to read box 400, where Mr Patarkatsishvili refers to receiving the money in London.

MR RABINOWITZ: And then if you go also to box 402 E6/01/136, again you'll see that he refers to the accounts in London.

A. Do I need to confirm? Yes, he's talking about accounts in London.

Q. If you go to box 412, page 141 E6/01/141, you actually say in the commentary that the money will be -- you're talking about money being transferred to "Mr Berezovsky's accounts in London". Do you see that?

A. So 412, am I right?

Q. I referred you to 412.

A. Yes, I have read that.

Q. 412, yes? And if you go to box 234 on page 95 of E6 E6/01/93 and if you look at your commentary at the end of 234 -- page 90 -- again, in your commentary you're talking about them receiving "proceeds of the ORT sale in England".

A. Yes, I can see that.

MR RABINOWITZ: My Lady, that may be a convenient moment.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well. Ten minutes, please.

(3.15 pm)

(A short break)

(3.30 pm)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, Mr Rabinowitz.

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Abramovich, do you recall that at the Le Bourget meeting you told Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili about a proposal that Mr Gorodilov had for a structure for you to purchase the ORT shares?

A. Yes, I recall that at Le Bourget meeting we've discussed that arrangement, the way we shall make the payment for ORT.

Q. And if I can ask you, if you still have bundle E1 in front of you, to go to your witness statement at paragraph 235: it's at page 207 in the Russian E1/03/207 and 106 in the English E1/03/106.

You say, just reading the first few lines, talking about Le Bourget, you say in the first sentence:

"We therefore discussed a possible plan proposed by Mr Andrey Gorodilov whereby companies associated with me would purchase the shares for a relatively small amount (US$20 million) paid in Russia, and then companies not associated with me would make a separate (larger) payment of the remaining amount to Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Berezovsky's designated foreign bank accounts."

And then in footnote 76 on this page you refer back to boxes 261 to 305 of the Le Bourget transcript. And what in fact happened at Le Bourget was that you explained Mr Gorodilov's proposal to Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili; that's right, isn't it?

A. I started to explain that but I got quickly confused and Gorodilov was explaining that himself.

Q. Indeed. And Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Berezovsky did not know about the proposal before you explained it to them at Le Bourget; that's right, isn't it?

A. Yes. Yes, that was the initial time they've heard it.

Q. And this is reflected in Le Bourget at box 339 but we don't need to turn it up.

At some point, as you say, you needed Mr Gorodilov to help to explain the proposal; that's right, isn't it?

A. Yes, that's right.

Q. At no point in the conversation relating to Mr Gorodilov's proposal do either Mr Berezovsky or Mr Patarkatsishvili suggest that they already know of Mr Gorodilov's plan; that's right?

A. Yes, that's right. Their initial plan was related to an auction (sic) and then Andrey made his proposal, perhaps a more elegant scheme.

- Q. Now, can I ask you to go back to the Le Bourget transcript at box 261. At E6 it's at page 103 E6/01/103. And this is the box where you start explaining Mr Gorodilov's plan for a structure for you to purchase ORT. Do you see that?
- A. Yes, I do.
- Q. And then at boxes 263 to 266 E6/01/104 you can see that there is a discussion about that plan.
- A. Yes, I can see this.
- Q. Yes. And if you look at the last sentence of box 263, you are explaining that although some money will be paid in Moscow, the remainder of the money will be transferred to Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Berezovsky in the west. Do you see that?
- A. Yes.
- Q. And Mr Patarkatsishvili checks with you that this will be a transfer made under a contract; that's in box 264, do you see that?
- A. Yes.
- Q. And then at box 265 you explain that the transfer will not be done under a shares sales contract and that the offshore transaction will be done under a more complicated contract. Do you see that?
- A. Yes.

- Q. And it's clear from this that this isn't something that had previously been discussed with Mr Patarkatsishvili; that's right, isn't it?
- A. He did not discuss this very scheme. He discussed an option scheme. Therefore it's saying either about shares or options here.
- Q. Well, if we just look at box 266, we can see that Mr Patarkatsishvili expresses his concern that it must be clear that the money comes from the sale of their shares. Do you see that?
- A. Yes, I do.
- Q. And just to be clear, Mr Abramovich, you accept that the money that you were talking about transferring was in reality to be the purchase price for the shares in ORT; that's right, isn't it?
- A. How do you mean "the purchase price"?
- Q. Well, you were buying the shares in ORT from Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili and the money that Mr Patarkatsishvili is concerned about is the money that he is going to receive for the sale of those shares; that is to say the purchase price, what you are paying him for those shares.
- A. Yes.
- Q. And so what Mr Patarkatsishvili is asking is that the contractual documentation should show the true position that the money is the purchase price for the sale of the ORT shares; that's right, isn't it?

A. One could look at this point in this way. In actuality, the way they worded -- the way they wanted that are two phrases which are mutually exclusive. A Russian citizen selling Russian company shares can get his money in Russia. They were worried about not being able to get the money in Russia; therefore this complicated scheme has come about.

Q. Well, if you look at box 269 E6/01/105, you can see that you are responding to Mr Patarkatsishvili at 266 saying:

"... it will be seen that these are the monies we receive for the sale of shares?"

And you say:

"Yes, shares or options."

So you are saying that it will be seen that the origin of the money is the sale of either shares or options; that is right, is it not?

A. Yes, this is right. As I said, I got confused in these matters quite quickly and I asked them to speak to Andrey Gorodilov, who understood the matters better.

Q. And just again to be clear, Mr Abramovich, this is the first time in the conversation at Le Bourget that anyone has mentioned the possibility of a sale of options;

that's right, isn't it?

- A. As far as I know, it was not. That was the original idea, the idea involving an option, and here it's mentioned the first time. So the sale of the shares is being -- has been mentioned for the first time in this way.
- Q. I think we're talking about the sale of the options being mentioned for the first time at Le Bourget at this point in the conversation.
- A. If I understand correctly, the initial transaction, ie initially, we decided to do it using an option; and later we decided to go down this road, as it was done at the end.
- Q. You see, this idea of using both the possibility of a sale of shares or options really reflects the point that you made at box 265, where you explained to Mr Patarkatsishvili that the transaction would not be by way of a simple sale contract for shares; that's right, isn't it?
- A. After all, the transaction was done in a very simple way: in one bank the money was transferred from one account into another account. Or am I answering the wrong question?
- Q. I'm not at all sure about that. Maybe if I repeat the question. I don't want to take up too much time over this but let me repeat the question and you can see if this was the question you thought you were answering.

My question to you was that this idea of using both the possibility of a sale of shares or options really reflects the point that you made at box 265, where you explained to Mr Patarkatsishvili that the transaction would not be by way of a simple sale contract for shares.

A. I'm not quite sure how to answer this question because I'm not sure at which point the question arises here, in your question. Where is the question?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I think the question is too complicated.

MR RABINOWITZ: Let me ask it in this way. The reality is --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just a second, Mr Rabinowitz. Asking him to answer whether it reflects an answer he has given is just too difficult, for me anyway.

MR RABINOWITZ: What is happening here is that you are proposing that a sale of an option should be the alternative transaction structure for the sale of the ORT shares. You're introducing this as an alternative structure. That is right, is it not?

A. No, this is quite the opposite. The initial idea was using the options. But since I always -- it wasn't my strong point, these schemes. When I arrived there, thinking about all these ideas, I already forgot what the conversation was about. Therefore I asked -- I put Badri in touch directly with Andrey, Mr Gorodilov, and they discussed how it should be done.

Q. Can I ask you to look at box 325, please. It's at page 118 in the English version E6/01/118 and 116 in E7 E7/01/116.

You see, in box 325 we have Mr Patarkatsishvili -- do you have it? -- having spoken to Mr Gorodilov saying:

"We shall have a contract for an option, which we sell to a western company, and in return for that we get a minimal share of the money, and separately for the sale of the shares. Do I understand it correctly?"

Do you see he says that?

A. Not quite. I'm still looking for it. (Pause)

Yes, I've found it.

Q. So just read to yourself box 325 then, please. (Pause)

A. I have read it.

Q. So Mr Patarkatsishvili is asking a question here: he's asking you whether he has understood the proposal. Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. And it's clear from your commentary that this is Mr Gorodilov's proposal?

A. This is not quite the way it was. I have already explained: since I was talking how it should be done, I already forgot what I started talking about, what was the start, because it's not my strong point, these schemes. So when I start talking about the end of the plane, this is not because I had a problem with my head; it's only because I was dialling the number to connect Badri with Mr Gorodilov.

Q. Okay. Can we put away bundle E6 for the moment. I want to move on from Le Bourget.

Can I ask that you please be given bundle K2 and go to tab 12. Now, this is a copy of Mr Berezovsky's particulars of claim as they stood in June 2008. Can I ask you, please, to go to page 137 K2/12/137 so that we can look at paragraph 22, please.

The first sentence of paragraph 22 of Mr Berezovsky's claim says this:

"On 7 December 2000, Russian State authorities arrested Nikolai Glushkov... Mr Glushkov is and was at all material times a close... friend of Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili."

And just so that there is no confusion about this, it's clear that the pleaded date of Mr Glushkov's arrest is 7 December. That's right, isn't it?

A. Yes, that's right.

Q. Can I then ask you to go to page 138 and look at paragraph 27, please K2/12/138. Now, the first sentence of paragraph 27 says:

"Soon after Mr Glushkov's arrest, in December 2000, Mr Abramovich met Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili at Mr Berezovsky's home in Cap d'Antibes, France."

It's clear from that that the pleaded period in which Mr Berezovsky is saying the meeting took place is from 7 December, which is when Mr Glushkov got arrested, to 31 December 2000. And that's right, isn't it?

A. The question when was Mr Glushkov arrested or is the question about the time period we are discussing here?

Q. Mr Glushkov, we know from the pleading, was arrested on 7 December. Mr Berezovsky says that:

"Soon after Mr Glushkov's arrest [7 December], in December 2000, Mr Abramovich met Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili... in Cap d'Antibes..."

So it's clear that what Mr Berezovsky is saying is that the meeting was somewhere between 7 and 31 December 2000. Do you agree?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, that's what Mr Berezovsky is saying, okay? Mr Berezovsky is pleading here that sometime between Glushkov's arrest until the end of December you met him and Mr Patarkatsishvili in Cap d'Antibes, okay? That's what he's saying; you don't need to agree with it or not. That's what he's saying.

Okay, go on, Mr Rabinowitz.

MR RABINOWITZ: Can you go to tab 13 in the same bundle.

This is your defence which you put in in response to Mr Berezovsky's pleading. Can I ask you, please, to go to page 164 K2/13/164, where we can see what you say in response to the suggestion that Mr Glushkov was arrested on 7 December.

Look at paragraph D22. You see that it says:

"... the first sentence is admitted..."

So you're admitting there that Mr Glushkov was arrested on 7 December. Okay?

A. Yes.

Q. And then if you go to page 165 and look at paragraph D27.1, we'll see what you say in response to what Mr Berezovsky had said in paragraph 27.1. You say:

"It is admitted that, on a date prior to 25 December 2000, Mr Berezovsky told the Defendant at a meeting between them and Mr Patarkatsishvili..."

And then you go on to say what was discussed there, including about the sale of ORT.

So you are admitting here that the meeting was before 25 December 2000; that's right, isn't it?

A. Yes, that's right. It is strange if the meeting would have happened after 25 December if we've signed the documents before that date, if we have already signed the documents. I was based on the following: I looked at the documents and the dates and at the signatures and the meeting must have clearly happened before that.

Q. What I'm going to suggest, Mr Abramovich, is that this pleading makes clear that you instructed your lawyers in June 2008, when this was produced, that the meeting did take place between 7 and 25 December. Do you understand what I'm suggesting?

A. No, I don't understand what you're suggesting. If I have heard correctly, it doesn't follow from this document. Again, what I managed to understand, it said here that the meeting was before 25 December.

Q. Mr Abramovich, if it was your case that in fact the meeting took place before Mr Glushkov's arrest, why did you not say that in your defence, rather than just saying only that it was prior to 25 December?

A. At that point in time I don't -- I didn't remember when we met. I just thought what I recalled, I looked at the documents that were shown to me. If the document was shown on 25 December, I asked: is it possible to suppose that we met after 25 December? No, not at all; it's a very illogical statement. And it's not connected in any way to Mr Glushkov's arrest.

Q. You see, the first time that you ever suggested that the meeting that you say took place in Cap d'Antibes to discuss ORT in fact took place before Mr Glushkov's arrest was in your third witness statement, which you served at the end of May this year; that's four years after the proceedings commenced. And I suggest to you that if the position was that there had been a meeting before Mr Glushkov's arrest, you would have identified that fact a long time earlier.

A. The thing is that for me the arrest of Mr Glushkov was not a landmark. I was just based -- basing myself on the documents. I do not link the sale of ORT shares with arrest of Mr Glushkov. That is a completely made-up, trumped-up position, that one thing was linked to another, unfortunately.

Q. Now, I think you agree that you did meet with Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili at Mr Berezovsky's chateau at some stage between the beginning of November 2000 and the end of December, but there is a dispute about the date. Correct?

A. I indeed agree that we did meet but the dispute is about the date and this is the problem; or rather there is no dispute.

Q. Well, there is a dispute because you say it was on 6 November and Mr Berezovsky says that it is sometime in early December. (Pause)

Okay. Now, in order to try and establish that the meeting could not have been in December, you have in fact produced a great deal of evidence, and I want to go through that evidence with you just to see if it does in fact establish what you would like it to establish, namely that there couldn't have been a meeting in December. Do you understand?

A. Yes.

Q. Can we start from this: can we take it that you do not dispute that it is perfectly possible for a person with your resources to leave Moscow mid-morning, travel to the south of France and be back again that evening?

A. No, I do not dispute this fact.

Q. I think it's your own evidence that, provided one has access to a private jet from a supplier such as Global Jet, one could get from Moscow to Nice in just over three and a half hours' flying time; that's right, isn't it?

A. That's right. If the plane is ready, indeed one can fly there for three and a half hours -- in three and a half hours.

Q. And you explain that there would be a handling time of 15 minutes at the airport and then a 15-minute journey from Nice Airport to Cap d'Antibes?

A. Well, it depends on the day. If it's the 7th or 8th, then I think there was some sort of summit going on, so the nearest airport that would in theory be able to accept planes would be Marseilles Airport and that would take two/two and a half hours to get from there by car, or was it an hour -- it would have been an hour and 15 minutes' travel by helicopter.

- Q. By helicopter, that's right. But in any event, you could get from Moscow to Cap d'Antibes and back -- certainly if you left Moscow by mid-morning, you could be back in Moscow that evening?
- A. It would have rather been quite late. Maybe you could call that an evening.
- Q. Okay. And do you also accept that when travelling to Cap d'Antibes, there are a number of airports nearby which one could travel to and from where one could take an onward helicopter flight: Nice, Marseilles, Lyon and Cannes?
- A. Cannes is unlikely. Possibly Lyon or Marseilles.
- Q. And in the year 2000 it was not unknown for you to fly between Russia and Western Europe and back on two successive days; that's right, isn't it?
- A. I wouldn't dispute that.
- Q. All right.

Now, can I then ask you some questions about evidence which you haven't made available to the court which might have assisted for determining your location in the period 7 to 9 December.

First, are you aware that you and indeed your team have produced no diaries or calendars at all for yourself for the period December 2000?

A. I certainly didn't keep any diaries ever.

Q. Would anyone in your team have kept a diary for you?

A. For me? Unlikely. Perhaps someone will keep their personal diary but they didn't do it for me.

Q. And in --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So who kept your business meetings?

Who kept records of when you were going to be having business meetings or meetings with people?

A. At that point in time it was either secretaries of -- or some of my assistants. Usually it would be a secretary.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So they would keep some sort of diary recording where you were going to be and what meetings you were going to?

A. I would not call it a diary. It wasn't like a book where they would write down who I'm going to meet. I was planning that myself. Everything was organised. I didn't take -- I didn't keep a diary. Usually they would pass on phone [calls] to me and the rest I kept myself.

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Abramovich, at this time you were obviously a busy person, you had a series of businesses with which you were involved; that's right, isn't it?

- A. Yes, one could assert that. Yes, I was a busy person.
- Q. And you were involved -- by this stage you were becoming involved with politics, with the Duma?
- A. At that point in time I was already a deputy and I was starting my gubernatorial campaign. I was taking part in an election campaign.
- Q. Indeed. So in addition to being in the Duma in Moscow, you were starting to campaign to be the governor of Chukotka.

Now, someone must have been trying to keep track of what your engagements were in this period. You say it was your secretary?

- A. The secretary had nothing to do with my locations, my relocations across Chukotka. I had two assistants in the Duma, Ponomareva and Morozova; and Chukotka, I had my own assistants; and in the Moscow office, that was mostly connected to business meetings.
- Q. Yes, but someone, your secretary or someone else, must have kept a record of your appointments; that's right, isn't it?
- A. Meetings, if they happened in my office, yes, they kept a record of those.
- Q. They wouldn't keep a record of you having to be at a meeting in someone else's office?

- A. I think that's unlikely, although that's possible.
- Q. Wouldn't there have to be some coordination between the people who were responsible for keeping track of the various aspects of your life, that is to say the people who were dealing with your political responsibilities and the people who were dealing with your business responsibilities, so that you could be sure you didn't have a clash between engagements relevant to each?
- A. Sorry, I did not understand the question. Did they coordinate it between themselves so I would not have a double booking, two meetings in different places? Did I understand the question correctly? Perhaps -- I think I was coordinating that myself.
- Q. What, without writing anything down ever?
- A. I myself never make any notes. Usually if I write something down, I can't read it afterwards. I haven't got the most beautiful handwritings, the tidiest of handwritings.
- Q. The secretary that you currently have, Marina, is she the same secretary that you had in this period, December 2000?
- A. I think so. I think then she was an assistant and I had another two or three secretaries. They worked from 9.00 until -- 9.00 am to 1.00 in the morning. And apart from the secretaries, there were other people that assisted me.

- Q. Now, I take it that you do not dispute that in December 2000 you had and made use of a mobile telephone?
- A. Sorry, what is the basis of that assertion, that I did not use a mobile phone?
- Q. No, the assertion is exactly the opposite: that you had and did use a mobile telephone.
- A. Surely I must have had a mobile phone but I used it very rarely. One couldn't call me on my mobile phone and all the calls were connected mostly via the office, although perhaps some of my friends were able to call me directly.
- Q. Whether they were connected via the office, you did use a mobile telephone in this period. Are you able to provide any explanation for why you haven't disclosed a single mobile phone bill for any date, including the period we're presently looking at, December 2000?
- A. Because the company that operates in Moscow doesn't keep records of mobile phone bills. We did try to find them.
- Q. But you haven't disclosed any; that's right, isn't it?
- A. This is not a question to me. We just simply couldn't find them. We tried all telephone operators. We looked everywhere, but no documents were preserved and this is unintentional. Simply the thing is I think they keep records for four years and that's all.

- Q. Presumably you also had and used credit cards in December 2000?
- A. I had credit cards but I usually didn't use them.
- Q. Well, again, can you explain why you failed to disclose any credit card records for this period?
- A. This is only linked to the document storage period and then I used them very rarely. I could perhaps pay by credit card two or three times a year and sometimes I didn't use them at all.
- Q. So that is some of the evidence that has not been put forward before the court. What I'd like to do now is look at some of the evidence you have put before the court. Just so you are clear about this, I'm going to suggest that none of this evidence actually establishes what you say it establishes.

Now, the first category of evidence you have produced are photographs. I take it, though, that you accept that you haven't been able to produce even a single photograph of you in the period of 7 or 8 December that would put you somewhere other than in Cap d'Antibes?

- A. Indeed, from 7 to 8 December I was not photographed. That's true.

Q. So that puts the photographs to one side.

Now, you have also assembled evidence from a number of people claiming to have been with you or seen you in December 2000. A lot of this evidence relates to the period after 9 November, where it's agreed you were not in Cap d'Antibes. But I do want to look at a small part of that evidence because I will be submitting that it demonstrates that you have been willing in this case to procure evidence to support your case that simply cannot be taken at face value. Do you understand?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Do you want to start that tomorrow morning?

MR RABINOWITZ: I would very much prefer to start that tomorrow morning.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, because it seems silly to start it now at 4.15.

Thank you, Mr Abramovich. That's all for today. Don't talk to anybody about your evidence or the case.

Discussion re housekeeping

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I've got one or two housekeeping matters, Mr Sumption and Mr Rabinowitz.

On Wednesday, there's going to be apparently a student demonstration which may result in the closure of Fetter Lane for vehicular access. I'll let you know tomorrow what the arrangements are. We'll still be able to get to the court and hopefully get along Breams Buildings but one may need to walk from somewhere and I'm not sure when Fetter Lane is being closed, but I'll let you know that tomorrow.

The other thing is that no courts are sitting in this building on Wednesday, 7 December, so that's going to be a non-day. We've got Mr Allen, somebody has got Mr Allen coming provisionally on that day, and Mr Bean, question mark, the day before. But you'll have to rearrange Mr Allen.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, Mr Allen of course is my learned friend's witness but I'm sure that can be done.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. He's the expert in --

MR RABINOWITZ: The valuation expert.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: -- valuation. Two days is necessary to cross-examine him, is it?

MR SUMPTION: Probably a bit less.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Well, anyway, I tell you that because it may impact on whether Mr Bean is called or not.

MR SUMPTION: Yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right.

MR SUMPTION: I don't know whether my learned friend can give us an update on how long he expects to be cross-examining Mr Abramovich for.

MR RABINOWITZ: Well, I hope to finish as planned on Wednesday. If it runs over, it will not run over for very long into Thursday. It's very hard to predict, as your Ladyship will appreciate, because one doesn't know --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I appreciate that. It's impossible to predict in these circumstances.

Therefore whether or not we sit on Friday is another matter, is it?

MR RABINOWITZ: Indeed. I think we should just keep that under review.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Play it by ear. Very well.

Okay. 10.15 tomorrow.

(4.14 pm)

Tuesday, 8 November 2011 at 10.15 am)

(Proceedings delayed)

(10.28 am)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I apologise to the parties for keeping the court waiting. I was in a meeting outside the building.

Yes, Mr Rabinowitz.

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Abramovich, I was about to take you to some of the materials that had been gathered to support your case that you could not have been in Cap d'Antibes in December and I'd made it clear to you that I was going to be submitting that this evidence shows that you have been willing to procure evidence to support your case that simply cannot be taken at face value.

I don't expect that you will dispute the fact that you are a person of substantial power and influence in Chukotka and indeed that you have been in such a position for more than ten years now?

A. "Influence", the word "influence" sounds bizarre; but yes, indeed, I have been working in Chukotka for many years.

THE INTERPRETER: I'm repeating the answer.

A. The word "influence" sounds a bit bizarre; but yes, indeed, I have been working in Chukotka for several years.

MR RABINOWITZ: And you personally have been directly involved in actively soliciting the evidence that you have obtained from individuals in Chukotka; that is right, is it not?

A. No, that's not right.

Q. Can you go, please, to paragraph 263 of your third witness statement: E1, tab 3, page 115 in the English E1/03/115, page 216 in the Russian E1/03/216. Do you see at paragraph 263 you say:

"To confirm my recollection..."

And you are dealing with the position in Chukotka.

"... I... asked the officials and other people I met when I was in Chukotka at that time to provide me with any documentation that shows I was in Chukotka from 10 to 26 December 2000."

Now, that suggests you were directly involved in soliciting this evidence from the people of Chukotka.

A. I did not directly participate in obtaining this evidence and soliciting it. What is written here is what I've said. I had no contacts with those people at that time at all.

Q. You say, "What is written here is what I've said", and that seems to suggest that you were involved with this. But can you look at bundle E5, tab 11, page 47 in the English E5/11/47 and page 123 in the Russian E5/11/123.

If you look at paragraph 111, the second-last sentence, you are again dealing with aspects of your visit to Chukotka and you say:

"At my request, several residents of the Bilibino district who attended that meeting have kindly provided me with written confirmations of it."

Again, Mr Abramovich, that suggests that you were directly involved in soliciting and obtaining this evidence, doesn't it?

A. That's not so. If you read this sentence in Russian, it says, "Upon my request". So this request was passed on. I hadn't -- haven't visited this village for at least five years I think.

Q. Well, can I show you, if I may, just one of the documents which you received in response to your request. If you go to bundle H(A)99 and you turn to page 37 in the Russian H(A)99/37, 37T in the English H(A)99/37T.

Do you see on this document, which is a letter from a Mr Zivilev, who claims that he can confirm that you personally took part in the celebration of Chukotka's 70th anniversary on 20 December 2000 in Anadyr, do you see:

"... further to a request by Roman Arkadyevich Abramovich."

Doesn't that suggest that you were involved in requesting this correspondence?

A. I can't see the word "request" here at all.

Q. The second line of the document, top right-hand corner:

"Copy: further to a request by Roman Arkadyevich Abramovich."

A. It says "Upon request". It's an official term saying a request. That doesn't mean my personal request to someone; it's an official requisition or request. If a person has an official public position, I have to send him an official request.

Q. My Lady, I wonder if we can get the translator just to translate the word for us, since there seems to be a dispute about what the document actually says.

THE INTERPRETER: It says, second line from the top, "Copy" --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just a second. Can you translate it very literally, please.

THE INTERPRETER: Okay, my Lady, I shall go from the top of the page:

"For submittal to court and other official bodies.

"Copy: following an official request of Roman Arkadyevich Abramovich."

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right, thank you.

MR RABINOWITZ: Thank you.

Now, still on the evidence that has been procured in the form of statements from the people in Chukotka, are you aware that on four separate occasions your lawyers told Mr Berezovsky's lawyers that the evidence from these people in Chukotka had been provided without any written request for that evidence having ever been made and that that turned out to be untrue?

A. I know nothing about that.

Q. Well, you can take it from me that that is what has happened. If the lawyers want to address it with you in due course, they can.

The position in fact, Mr Abramovich, is that it was only after Mr Berezovsky's written opening made the point that the four confirmations given simply couldn't be true that it was acknowledged by your lawyers that there was indeed a written request in existence that had elicited the evidence from the Chukotkans. Are you aware of that?

A. I didn't quite get it. What is the question?

Q. Are you --

A. So I've already mentioned that if there was some kind of correspondence, I have no knowledge of it at all.

- Q. Perhaps we can just look at the document that was at that stage produced. Can you go to bundle H(A)99. It's at page 27.001R in the Russian H(A)99/27.001R, page 27.001 in the English H(A)99/27.001.

You should have there a letter dated 12 April 2000 (sic) and it appears to be a letter from the Duma of Chukotka. Is that the letter you're looking at?

- A. Yes.

- Q. Just reading what it says:

"Dear Aleksander Aleksandrovich!

"The Duma of the Chukotka Autonomous Okrug (at the request of Roman Arkadievich Abramovich, the Chair of the Duma of the Chukotka Autonomous Okrug) asks that you provide information about the presence of [yourself] in the Chukotka Autonomous Okrug in December 2000. This information is needed so it can be provided to court agencies and other official agencies."

- A. It also says "upon official request". So the Russian word "zapros" means "official request"; the Russian word "pros'ba", there would just be a request. So in Russian there is a bit difference between these two terms, an official -- so you can't write in this letter, "I am asking you" -- for instance to the Customs authorities, you can't just ask, "I'm asking you"; you have to write,

"I'm officially requesting", which is what is written here.

- Q. Just for the transcript, I think I said or the transcript records that the letter is dated 12 April 2000; it is dated 12 April 2011.

Mr Abramovich, can you tell us this, please: can you explain why the request made of the Chukotka Border Protection Directorate was made on behalf of the Duma of Chukotka? What did the request for use in your private litigation have to do with the Duma's function?

- A. That's the rule. As a private individual, I cannot -- well, perhaps I can, but there's a very low probability that I will get an answer or a reply from them. If I make this official request as the chairman of the Duma, I have a chance. This is why I asked my deputy to write this official letter.

However, had it been a request from a private individual, we would have been waiting for a long time. I'd still be waiting for them to reply. Usually FSB Russia, if I understand it correctly -- this is my feeling anyway -- FSB Russia would not react to a private individual. That's the way things are. That's the rule in Russia.

- Q. Can you explain why the request says that the information was needed for "court agencies and other official agencies", and in particular can you indicate what those other official agencies are?

A. It's a standard form of words for an official request.

You have to state why it is that you need these documents; otherwise you will get no reply.

Q. Faced with a request in these terms, Mr Abramovich, the individuals approached in Chukotka, seeing that the request was coming either from the Duma itself or even from you as the chairman of the Duma, would have been very concerned to ensure that they gave you precisely what it was they knew you were looking for; that's right, isn't it?

A. I don't agree with that. First of all, this person didn't know what it is that I wanted to receive because I just wanted to understand where I had been at that time. That's the first thing.

Secondly, the Federal Security Service and the Border Directorate and border protection services of Russia are in no way subordinate to the Duma of Chukotka Autonomous Okrug or region.

Q. Would it be fair to say that the reason that care was taken to ensure that there should be almost no written requests either in existence or handed over was because you well understood that if the court were to see the way in which these requests were framed, this would expose the fact that the person who had been asked to give the request was likely to have felt under some pressure to give you evidence that would be of assistance to you?

A. Absolutely disagree. No.

Q. Can I ask you, please, just to look at one or two examples of the sort of statements or evidence that you did obtain from these people and can I ask you, first, to go to bundle H(A)99, page 48 H(A)99/48 and it's 48T in the English H(A)99/48T.

Now, as you can see from the heading of this document, this is described as "Testimony" and it comes from a Ms Makarova and again we see that it has the statement towards the top on the right-hand side:

"Copy on request to [yourself]."

And:

"For production in court and before other official bodies."

Then Ms Makarova says this. After explaining who she is, she certifies -- and look at the words:

"... that, on 17 December 2000, I as a member of a delegation of residents from the village of Keperveyem, Bilibinsky district, Chukotka Autonomous Region, was present at the meeting with Roman Arkadievich Abramovich, member of the State Duma of the Federal Assembly of the Russian Federation, and MA Zurabov, Chairman of the Russian Federation State Pension Fund, which took place in the Bilibino community centre."

Keep a finger on that page and go over to the next page, page 49 in the Russian H(A)99/49, page 49T in the English H(A)99/49T. It should be just the next -- yes, close to the next page.

Now, this is a statement from an SA Antipova and again she explains who she is, and then look at the words that she uses in giving her evidence. She again certifies:

"... that, on 17 December 2000, I, as a member of a delegation of residents from the village of Keperveyem, Bilibinsky district, Chukotka Autonomous Region, was present at the meeting with Roman Arkadievich Abramovich, member of the State Duma of the Federal Assembly of the Russian Federation, and MA Zurubov, Chairman of the Russian Federation State Pension Fund, which took place in the Bilibino community centre."

The words, Mr Abramovich, are identical. Do you accept that this suggests that these people either agreed between themselves what to say or that they were told by someone precisely what to say?

- A. It all depends on what kind of request they got, official request they got. Most likely this is the answer to the question that was put to them. Whether these people agreed with each other, it's not very likely. I didn't quite catch where it was happening; I had many meetings. I can't insist that these people were at the same meeting. But in my view it's very unlikely that these people agreed with each other beforehand. What would be the reason for that? They have no reason to have done that.
- Q. You see, Mr Abramovich, you say, "It all depends on what kind of request they got, official request they got", but we will never know because according to your solicitors, who have apparently checked with your team, no written requests were ever in existence and therefore the only way in which a request must have been made would have been by someone telling these people precisely what to say.

Do you want to comment on that?

- A. Yes, I can comment. Nobody was telling these people precisely what to say, that's for sure. Moreover, if you are talking about me, then I wasn't even there.
- Q. Let's just have a look at one more example of this. Can you go to page 31 H(A)99/31. It's 31T in the English H(A)99/31T.

This is a statement from a Ms Rechkunova, who says, after giving her name, she was:

"... born in 1961, a Russian citizen, residing at the address..."

And what she certifies is that:

"... on 12 December 2000, RA Abramovich had been in our cafe three times (for breakfast, lunch and dinner), and on 24 December, he was dining in our cafe with his entire team."

Now, go, if you would -- keep a finger in that page -- to page 35T in the English H(A)99/35T, 35 in the Russian H(A)99/35.

Again, the name is similar but presumably that's because they are related. They apparently are born in the same year. The wording here is again identical. But again, you say that's just the way these people chose to express themselves and that's not because they were told what to say here; is that right?

- A. I insist this because, as far as I understand, they're husband and wife. And there are photographs in the case materials from this particular cafeteria.
- Q. Mr Abramovich, there are numerous other examples of such documents produced from Chukotka which strongly hint at this evidence having been dictated. I'm not going to go through any more of it because it does relate to a period where in fact there is no dispute that you were in Chukotka.

What I want to do next is to look at a further category of evidence that you try to rely upon in seeking to establish that you could not have been in Cap d'Antibes in December 2000 and that is evidence from your bodyguards.

Can I ask you, please, to go to paragraph 127 of your fourth witness statement, which you will find at E5, tab 11, page 127 in the Russian E5/11/127, pages 51 and 52 in the English E5/11/51.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just before we go there, Mr Rabinowitz.

Mr Abramovich, can you help me, please. There are a number of these statements. Who identified whom should be asked to provide the statements? Because presumably you must have told your solicitors or your advisers, "Well, I was in that cafe, I was at that meeting, go and speak to those people". So the question I'm asking you is: who went along in Russia or in the Autonomous Region of Chukotka and found the people and asked them to sign a statement pursuant to the request? Who did that?

A. I didn't go there, for sure. It was done in the following way: I telephoned my deputy, he telephoned everyone -- because I couldn't remember where I was at what point of time -- he telephoned to everyone who could theoretically have any recollection. So it looks like that. He rings to the head of the village, the head of the village disseminates this information; and the people who remember anything -- some people might have recollections, some people might have photographs -- they come along and they tell them. And the form of words is a standard Russian form of words: I confirm, this and that and the other.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I'm not asking you about the form of words; I'm just asking you about how you went about the process or somebody on your behalf went about the process of gathering these statements.

So you said to your deputy, "I need to establish where I was in December, I've got a formal request, please go and find the following people", or somebody on your behalf said that?

A. Indeed. It was my deputy who signed the letter, Dallakyan; we saw his signature. He took care of that. In towns, in terms of Chukotka they're large towns of 5-10,000 people, there the request was done through the internet. But in villages of 100, maybe 150 inhabitants, it was done through the head of the village. It is an elected position, head of the village, and he can gather people to a meeting and the citizens can tell him what they remember.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I see. Thank you.

MR RABINOWITZ: Let's just try and get some clarity about that, Mr Abramovich.

When you say you spoke to your deputy about this, you're talking about your deputy in the Duma and that is Mr Andrey Gorodilov; that's right, isn't it?

A. Andrey Gorodilov and Aramais Dallakyan.

Q. And they got in contact with Mr Gorenichy, Sergey Gorenichy, who is a lawyer or has been a lawyer with Sibneft; isn't that right?

A. Yes.

Q. And it was Mr Gorodilov and Mr Gorenichy who were involved in obtaining these statements in this form; is that right?

A. Yes, yes. Not in this form. They took part in organising this, yes.

Q. Right.

Now, I've asked you, if you would -- and I see you have it -- to look at paragraph 127 of your fourth witness statement, page 51 of bundle E5 at tab 11 E5/11/51, page 127 in the Russian E5/11/127.

What you say here, dealing with your attempt to establish that you could not have been in Cap d'Antibes in December, is this. You say:

"In addition to all the evidence of my movements itemised above, I am also able to provide further corroborative proof that during the entire period of 6 December 2000 through 2 January 2001, I was in the territory of the Russian Federation. In the years 2000 -- 2001, the private security firm Centurion-M provided security services to me. When I was in the territory of the Russian Federation, I was escorted by bodyguards. Individuals who served as my bodyguards were issued weapons for every 24 hours that I was in the territory of Russia. This was documented in a special Record of Issuance and Collection of Weapons and Special Equipment, which is maintained by Centurion-M and strictly controlled by the department of internal affairs of the Tagansky district of the directorate of internal affairs of the Central Administrative District of the city of Moscow. For the purposes of these proceedings, I requested this information to be provided to the English Court. The director general of Centurion M has signed a corresponding statement No 47 of 2 June 2011 and provided me with a copy of the Record of Issuance and Collection of Weapons and Special Equipment."

Now, just let's be clear about what you are saying here. The first thing you seem to be saying here is that whenever you were in Russia, you were accompanied by armed bodyguards; is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. Secondly, you are saying here that those armed bodyguards would be issued weapons for every 24 hours that you were in Russia; is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. Third, you are saying that the issue of such weapons to your bodyguard had to be recorded in a register; is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. And fourth, what you appear to be suggesting here is that if one could look at the register then provided it showed that arms had been issued to your bodyguards for a particular 24-hour period, this could be regarded as corroborative documentary proof that you would have been in Russia in the period from 6 December to 2 January; is that correct?

A. If we're talking about 24 hours, yes.

Q. Can we then look at the document that you have produced, which you say corroborates your evidence. Can you first go to H(A)99, page 39 in the Russian H(A)99/39, page 39T in the English H(A)99/39T.

This is the statement from the director general of Centurion M that you were referring to at paragraph 127. You see it's dated 2 June 2011 and, as you can see, the letter says -- this is from Mr Romanov -- that Centurion M provided security services to you while you were in Russia in 2000/2001. He then says:

"For the purposes of personal protection of RA Abramovich... CENTURION M Private Security Firm created a special group that consisted of 24 hour shifts of bodyguards. In December of 2000 the shift managers were..."

And it then names them.

"... who went through the daily arming procedure in the weapons storage room of CENTURION M Private Security Firm only when starting their shift and that of mandatory disarmament once their shift was over."

And he then explains that this is all strictly regulated.

And he then sets out, looking at the last paragraph before the bullet points, in the journal from which he has extracted this material:

"... there are records of times and dates when weapons were issued to [your bodyguards] prior to their assuming the responsibilities of bodyguards [to you] and times and dates when weapons were collected after termination of their respective shifts between 03 December 2000 and 02 January 2001."

And can we just look at two entries in particular here. Can you first please look at the third bullet point, which records that Mr Brusentsov took out weapons at 6.33 am on 6 December 2000 and did not return them until 10.03 am on 7 December. Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. But you accept, Mr Abramovich, that you attended a meeting at Le Bourget Airport with Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili during the day on 6 December 2000; that's correct, isn't it?

A. Yes, I accept. This is why they're talking about 24-hour shifts. I mean, I can be taken out from these 24 hours for a bit. If during these 24 hours I left and came back, this doesn't help us, because in the morning the person gets his weapon, then in the morning I leave for France for a couple of hours, then I come back; this person is not going to surrender his arms because his 24-hour shift is not over. However, if I leave Russia, the 24-hour period is over, then he does have to hand over his weapons, if I don't come back within the same 24 hours. That's how I understand the system.

Q. All right. Well, let's assume that that may be how it works. Can we look at another bullet point then.

Would you look at the next bullet point, which is

Mr Drobushevich -- sorry, let's just do this.

Mr Brusentsov returns the weapon on 7 December; you see that, do you? He takes it out on the 6th, then he returns it on the 7th?

A. Yes, yes.

Q. Following that, the next entry here is Mr Drobushevich who collects the weapons on 10 December and then returns them on 26 December. Do you see that?

A. Yes, I can see that. Drobushevich is the person who accompanied me to Chukotka.

Q. The difficulty of this for you, Mr Abramovich, is that if your evidence is true about how the system works, you were not in Russia from 7 December until 10 December, because if weapons were checked in on 7 December, the next time they were checked out was on 10 December.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, if my learned friend is going to put this sort of point, he should actually be referring to the weapons book and not to the letter purporting to take contents out of it.

I have to say I question the appropriateness of my learned friend cross-examining on points that have been expressly conceded on Mr Abramovich's behalf. We have in fact conceded that the weapons book provides no valuable evidence, primarily for the reason which the witness has given.

I also, with respect, question whether it is appropriate for my learned friend to beat about the bush in this way. In taking documents, for example, relating to the events in the cafe on 24 December, is he actually saying or is he not that Mr Abramovich instructed people to obtain lies that he was somewhere else? In which case let him say that out loud and not simply tiptoe around the point and allow innuendos of this sort to go on to the record.

I respectfully suggest that this is not the way in which to make very serious allegations of falsification of evidence.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Two points, Mr Rabinowitz.

Firstly, put the weapons book or don't put the weapons book, but put it against the background of the concession made on behalf of Mr Abramovich.

Secondly, if you are suggesting that Mr Abramovich wasn't in Chukotka on a day where the witness says he was, I think you should put that directly. I think Mr Sumption is right about that.

MR RABINOWITZ: My Lady, can I deal with the second point first because in my respectful submission there is nothing in either of my learned friend's points.

So far as the second point, I accepted when I started with Mr Abramovich that there was no dispute at all about his being in Chukotka in this period. The point that I was making is that there is a great deal of evidence which has been obtained from people in Russia which cannot be taken at face value. We will come to other examples of this, but there is a stream of this sort of letter where, frankly, it is simply unreliable evidence, and that is the first of the examples.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So the point you're making which you say goes to Mr Abramovich's credit is that he's the sort of person who will go round collecting up highly questionable evidence; that's the point you're making?

MR RABINOWITZ: That's the point, and it is through people like Mr Gorenichy, and we will come to other examples of it. And I don't resile from the point I've been making to Mr Abramovich. It's the first of the --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No. Well, I think -- just a second, Mr Rabinowitz, please. Then I think you should put that specific point to Mr Abramovich, namely that he is the sort of person who will go around collecting unreliable, concocted evidence.

MR RABINOWITZ: Well, I thought I had. I thought I had, but if I haven't, I'm very happy to put it again.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, that's the first point.

Now, what about the weapons book point?

MR RABINOWITZ: The weapons book, my Lady, I can show you what it looks like if you go to 42T H(A)99/42T. It is completely --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Which bundle, please?

MR RABINOWITZ: In the bundle you're in. It is --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: H(A)99?

MR RABINOWITZ: 99. It is completely --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: In the translation or not in the translation?

MR RABINOWITZ: Well, that it will be -- it's in the translation.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: H(A)99...?

MR RABINOWITZ: 42T.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Just a second, please.

MR RABINOWITZ: It is completely incomprehensible.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, just a second. Let me just get that, please. (Pause)

42T, yes?

MR RABINOWITZ: The reason I've gone to what Mr Romanov has extracted from this is because, in my respectful submission, it is incredibly difficult to read the record and if Mr Romanov is better based to read it, then in my respectful submission the easier way to deal with this with the witness is to show what Mr Romanov says.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, the trouble about Mr Romanov's letter is that it's inaccurate, as my learned friend, if he had bothered to read the weapons book instead of giving it up as incomprehensible -- we have had no difficulty in reading it. It contains dates, it contains precise amounts and times of equipment delivered, and if we compare that with Mr Romanov's letter, it is plain that Mr Romanov has made a number of mistakes.

Now, we didn't go into this in detail in our written submissions precisely because we conceded that the weapons book was itself not reliable evidence of Mr Abramovich's whereabouts. So that this seems both irrelevant and inappropriate, if I may say so, given that Mr Romanov's letter is not the primary evidence involved.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Mr Rabinowitz, for my assistance, can you explain to me -- don't put it to the witness yet -- what the purpose of going to either the letter or the weapons book is if there isn't -- well, is this to establish that -- MR RABINOWITZ: It's to establish that the witness has consistently put forward evidence which he says supports this alibi which doesn't do it.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Well, are we talking about the meeting in December or the meeting in November?

MR RABINOWITZ: As your Ladyship knows, Mr Abramovich's case is that the meeting must have been in November because he couldn't have been at a meeting in December.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right.

MR RABINOWITZ: And what he has done in seeking to establish this, whilst not disclosing certain documents which we talked about yesterday, is to rely first on photographs; second on evidence from Chukotka; third on this statement from the security people; and then on further evidence that we are going to come to.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Okay. Well, put this point -- I mean, for my part I'd rather look at the weapons book because I can understand the weapons book once I've got it in the right position, and if you're putting a point about a specific date, I think you should put a point about a specific date, because otherwise it's difficult, for me at any rate, to ascertain its relevance.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, the relevant page for this date is in fact at page 26 and not on the page that is -- R(J)/06/26, rather than the page which is up on Magnum.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: What, that's the page for the November date or for the December date?

MR SUMPTION: For the December date, 7 December.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right.

Well, I don't want to take you out of your course,

Mr Rabinowitz, but I do need to be clear precisely what you're putting to the witness in relation to his alibi.

MR RABINOWITZ: Well, perhaps I can do it shortly and then come back to the weapons book.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Fine.

MR RABINOWITZ: Do you accept, Mr Abramovich, that the weapons book does not establish that you could not have been in Cap d'Antibes during the relevant period, by which I mean 7 to 9 December?

A. As far as I understand, I have no right to assert whether it does prove or it doesn't prove.

MR RABINOWITZ: Can I come back to that, my Lady, because I have to say I'm still struggling to read this weapons book in the way my learned friend says is easy. Can I move on to another category of evidence?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, please do.

MR RABINOWITZ: Now, can I just ask you this about Centurion M, Mr Abramovich: is this a company with which you have a relationship? Is it connected to you in any way?

A. This company is directly linked to me.

Q. You didn't say that in your witness statement though, did you? You simply put this forward as if it were an independent company providing independent evidence.

A. I didn't say that. I don't know which way I own it.

Perhaps I own it. It's a small company that provides security services not just to me, perhaps to other people, but I'm sure it depends on me. Presumably through the payments I make to it, it is dependent on me, but I am not aware of the formal way it is owned. Perhaps I'm even a shareholder in this company, but to be quite honest I've no idea.

- Q. But what you were aware of is that it was a company connected to you and you were aware of that when you made your witness statement, were you not?
- A. I had no wish and there is no need to conceal the fact that Centurion is interested in my custom, in having me as a client. I have no idea, maybe I'm a shareholder; I cannot confirm or disprove. Maybe it belongs to me in its entirety. It's such a tiny service company that I can't really tell you anything about it.

Q. Now, the next way --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Sorry, Mr Rabinowitz, are you putting to the witness that he had the ability, because of his shareholder control, to dictate what the records say?

MR RABINOWITZ: I will put that. I'm suggesting that the witness ought to have explained in his evidence --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I appreciate that.

MR RABINOWITZ: Well, I'll put the point my Lady has.

Mr Abramovich, do you accept that you had the ability, because of your connection, your shareholder control of this company, to affect the evidence that Centurion M was going to produce for the court?

- A. No, I don't agree. If we refer just to this book, to the record, this register, the arms register, is controlled by the Ministry of Interior. It's a very important accounting document and I cannot influence it at all. I wonder if that answers your question?

Now, if you are wondering whether the company is keen to have me as a client: of course it is. Am I the only client of this company? No, but I am the largest client. Perhaps the whole of our organisation is a client of this company; I have no idea. It is also possible that I am its shareholder; I simply don't know.

- Q. Now, the next way in which you've tried to establish that you could not have been in Cap d'Antibes at any time from and after 7 December is by producing documents relating to your air travel arrangements and I want to therefore ask you some questions about that.

It's your evidence, I think, that the only means of air transport that you would have used at this time to go from Russia to the south of France would be on a chartered plane. Is that right?

- A. At that time I think so, yes.

- Q. But --

- A. The question is whether I will take a scheduled flight and whether I will take a train? With almost 100 per cent certainty I would say: no, I wouldn't take a scheduled flight or a train.
- Q. And is it right that at this time -- and we're talking around December 2000 -- the people in your organisation with responsibility for arranging your travel arrangements included Mr Zhadovsky; is that right?
- A. Yes, Mr Zhadovsky.
- Q. Zhadovsky, I'm sorry. Ms Ivanova?
- A. Yes.
- Q. And was Ms Goncharova also involved in organising air transport for you?
- A. I think that she was involved in internal Russian air travel but not travel abroad. I think so. I'm not sure but I think she didn't deal with my travel abroad. She doesn't speak English.
- Q. Now, I'm not going to take you to the correspondence on this, Mr Abramovich, but you can take it from me that we've been provided with a list of individuals who were consulted from within your team in searching for relevant flight records and neither Mr Zhadovsky nor Ms Ivanova were on that list. Were you aware of that?
- A. No, I wasn't aware of that. I didn't take part in that correspondence.

Q. So you're not able to help us as to why those particular individuals were not asked to provide relevant records?

A. Mr Zhadovsky hasn't been working in our organisation for long time now. Maybe people approached him but he didn't want to provide any -- I just don't know.

MR RABINOWITZ: My Lady, I don't know when you want to take the break. I'm happy to carry on but...

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Why don't you carry on for a bit because we didn't start until 10.30.

MR RABINOWITZ: I want to move on next to the flight records which have been disclosed.

It's right that you have produced a number of records from a company called Global Jet; you're aware of that?

A. Yes.

Q. But it's right also that Global Jet, although they have provided a quantity of records, have explained that they cannot say that their records for this period are exhaustive; are you aware of that?

A. Well, if they said so, then I suppose that's so. I have no knowledge of that.

Q. And so, even putting to one side any other private jet providers, one cannot be sure even that all Global Jet documents have been disclosed. Do you follow?

A. No. No, I don't. You mean that they have intentionally concealed or withheld a number of documents or do you mean that their archive is just not complete?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I don't think this is a useful debate, is it? I mean, the position is as you've stated, Mr Rabinowitz. He can't comment on it.

MR RABINOWITZ: No, I'm just asking whether he follows; I didn't ask him to comment.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right.

MR RABINOWITZ: So let's just put Global Jet to one side for the moment.

You don't dispute, I think, that you might have flown on a plane provided by a different jet provider to Global Jet?

- A. From my point of view it's not very likely because we had good relationship with Global Jet and I was satisfied with their service. But I cannot insist 100 per cent that this could not have happened; you're probably right. Apropos they continue maintaining and servicing all my aircraft. This is to this day the company that looks after all our aircraft.
- Q. Can I just, on this subject, ask you about this. One of your witnesses, Mr Gorodilov, has explained that Mr Zhadovsky flew to meet Mr Berezovsky in France and then to meet Mr Patarkatsishvili in Italy at the end of December 2000. The purpose of the flight was to obtain signatures on the ORT sales document. Do you remember that?

A. Yes.

Q. And what Mr Gorodilov says is that Mr Zhadovsky flew from Moscow to France and then to Italy to get the documents and then came back to Moscow with the executed documents. Again, presumably you remember that?

A. Yes.

Q. And during this period Mr Zhadovsky, like you, would have been travelling on charters between Moscow and France when he was travelling on work-related matters; that's right, isn't it?

A. No.

Q. You think he would have been flying on standard planes, scheduled airlines?

A. I'm convinced that he flew normal airlines, scheduled flights. Mr Zhadovsky was not a high-ranking employee of the company who could afford each trip on a chartered jet. But because this was an important trip, he was allowed to use a plane. Perhaps it was the first time or a couple -- two times or three times he flew a chartered plane and us paying for it.

Q. Okay. But we can at least agree on this: that on this particular occasion he took a chartered flight?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, there has -- you may be aware of this, you may not -- been some investigation about Mr Zhadovsky's flights. People can see how he got from Moscow to Nice but it is unclear how he got back. Okay?

I just want to show you a document --

A. What happened, he disappeared? He disappeared?

Q. No, it's assumed that he got back but it's not clear how he got back. You can tell us that he got back: presumably you saw him?

A. Well, yes, I saw him.

Q. Can I show you, please --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Rabinowitz, I'm assuming that there's some relevance in Mr Zhadovsky's travel arrangements.

MR RABINOWITZ: There is.

Can I ask you, please, to go to a document which you will find at R(H)1, tab 63, page 69 R(H)1/63/69. Now, this is a document that Skadden produced to assist in seeking to ascertain how Mr Zhadovsky travelled between Nice and Brescia and Brescia and Nice and we know that it comes from Global Jet.

If you look, you will see in the document there's a reference to flights between Nice and Brescia and then Brescia and Nice, do you see that, on the 29th of the 12th?

A. Yes.

Q. Then below that you will see "EX: RA02803" and then it says "JTT9605"; "ETA", which is presumably expected time of arrival, 1500 at Nice. Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. And "JTT" appears to correspond to a Russian company called Jet-2000 that has provided chartered jets since 1999. Are you aware of that? Are you aware of Jet-2000?

A. No, I don't know it.

Q. Perhaps I can hand up something from their website which explains that they've been providing charters since 1999. (Handed)

So you have two documents there. The first one says "Jet-2000 Business Jets", "About us", and they then explain they're an award-winning full-service business aviation provider, and in the second sentence of the first paragraph they explain that since 1999 they have been providing charter jets.

And then the second document that you have should look like that (indicates). You see towards the bottom of the document that it identifies "JTT" as the code for Jet-2000; do you see that?

So what this indicates, I suggest, Mr Abramovich, is that Mr Zhadovsky, when he flew from Moscow to Nice, was put on a flight by Jet-2000. Do you see that? From the document at R(H)1/63, page 69 R(H)1/63/69.

A. Yes.

Q. And would you accept therefore that Jet-2000 appears therefore to be another jet provider that your business was using at this time, in late December 2000?

A. You can make this assumption. The question is what kind of quality jets they supplied and the year these aircraft was manufactured. Whether such a plane would have been chartered for myself, I'm convinced that it wouldn't have been. Was I willing to risk my life and fly to Nice for a chat? I doubt it.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just a second, Mr Rabinowitz. How do we know from just looking at this page that the Jet-2000 aeroplane flew to Russia? I mean, all this is looking at is Nice-Brescia, Brescia-Nice.

MR RABINOWITZ: But he also explains that he was getting to Nice in order to get from Nice to Brescia. If your Ladyship looks below the Nice-Brescia, Brescia-Nice, your Ladyship sees an entry, "EX: RA02803", "JTT" -- this is the number of the plane, expected time of arrival in Nice. This is an aircraft which flies from Moscow to --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I thought Brescia was in Italy.

MR RABINOWITZ: Well, indeed. But what is happening was

Mr Zhadovsky was getting from Moscow to Nice, he was then having to get from Nice to Brescia, Brescia back to Nice. Global Jet were dealing with the Nice-Brescia, Brescia-Nice part of this, but Mr Zhadovsky had to get from Moscow to Nice.

And what this indicates -- and indeed this appears to be the view of Skadden themselves, they explain this in correspondence --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, it may be the view of Skadden.

I just don't see from this page that the reference to Jet-2000 is necessarily -- you say it arrives at 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

MR RABINOWITZ: In Nice.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I see. So you say that's from the Russian airline, I see.

MR RABINOWITZ: Well, that's where he was coming from. That's again not in dispute.

You see, Mr Abramovich, I suggest to you this was another airline which your business and indeed you might have been using at the time. You dispute that, do you?

A. Well, I'm not disputing that -- I'm not asserting that Global Jet was the only company we were using. From what I remember, Global Jet was the company I was using. For me, this particular aircraft would never have been chartered. I don't want to appear arrogant but it's practically 100 per cent certain.

MR RABINOWITZ: My Lady, that may be a convenient moment.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well. I'll take ten minutes.

(11.28 am)

(A short break)

(11.44 am)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, Mr Rabinowitz.

MR RABINOWITZ: What I'd like to ask you about next,

Mr Abramovich, is the evidence that you have produced relating to passport stamps and whether this is a category of evidence that establishes that you could not have been in Cap d'Antibes at the beginning of December.

Now, you accept, I think, that you have no Russian exit stamps in your passport on 6 December 2000?

A. Yes, this is so. So have we finished with this, with the jets?

Q. Yes, we've finished with that, yes.

So this is an example, we can agree, I hope, of the possibility of leaving Russia without a passport stamp?

A. Yes. Yes, I agree. That is unusual, but such a thing happened so, yes, it is possible. But the usual practice is that it's not possible to cross the border just like that.

Q. And you accept also, I think, that it is equally possible to enter Russia without getting a stamp?

A. Everything could happen but, from my perspective, it's also quite unlikely.

Q. Can I just ask you, please, to look at a document at L(2011), volume 26, page 181 in Russian L(2011)26/181, 182 in English L(2011)/26/182. It may be that it needs to come on to the screen for you, Mr Abramovich. I don't know if we've got the bundles in court.

This is a letter from a Mr Mochalov of the FSB Border Guard Service. Read through, if you would, the whole letter. I'd like to focus for the moment on the last sentence of the last paragraph of this letter.

(Pause)

A. Okay.

Q. So Mr Mochalov of the FSB Border Guard Service makes the point that it is possible that stamps were not applied, which I think reflects what you were saying; is that right?

A. Well, there is always a human factor, there is always a human error. It's always present. They have automated control system and they also have the passport stamps, as it said here. So he is saying that there could be an instance where a passport stamp is not applied, is not put in.

Q. You also accept that you have no French exit stamp in your passport for 6 December 2000; you agree with that, don't you?

- A. That also happens if you stay within the area. If you don't leave the railway station, then they might not stamp it, or if you don't leave the airport. But that can not happen in Nice, that's for sure; there they don't have such an area.
- Q. You see, I suggest, just as a matter of common experience, whatever the rules may be in different countries, it's not uncommon for passport stamps to be omitted. Do you agree with that?
- A. Are you speaking about Russia or France?
- Q. France.
- A. If we are discussing whether France has a rule that when you exit the country you have a stamp in your passport -- are we talking about this or are we talking about entry stamp? For example, if you are exiting England, United Kingdom, there is no exit stamp. These are the rules. In the US, when you are exiting the country, also there is no stamp.
- However, Nice Airport, it's quite possible to -- it's impossible to leave Nice Airport without an exit stamp, and the same about entry. I think the rules are quite rigid. I think that's because of Monaco.
- Q. Do you accept that, as well as there being passport stamps missing from your passport, there are also some pages of your passport that contain illegible passport stamps?

Perhaps I can take you to an instance of this. If you can be given bundle H(A)38, page 99.002 H(A)38/99.002.

Do you see on page 27 -- your passport's got the numbers 26 and 27. On page 27, the top stamp on page 27, you can see that it appears to have the words "ROISSY-LB", which presumably is Le Bourget. Do you see that?

A. I think that probably is an exercise for the experts, I wouldn't be able to help, I'm sorry.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, Roissy is not Le Bourget; it is an airport north of Paris. Le Bourget is somewhere else.

MR RABINOWITZ: It is illegible; we can't really see any date for that at all, can we?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, I think that's a matter for me on the basis of what we read and what the forensic experts say. I don't know whether I'm going to be assisted by what Mr Abramovich is going to comment on this document.

MR RABINOWITZ: Okay.

I want to show you another document that you rely on in order to support your case that you didn't leave

Russia between 6 December and 2 January 2001 and that's a letter from the FSB guard service.

Before I do that, can I just ask you this: on 6 December, your then wife accompanied you to Le Bourget, didn't she?

A. Yes. She did.

Q. Did she stay with you in the airport?

A. I do not remember exactly. I'd completely forgotten that she was with me. I didn't remember that. I've made such conclusions based on her passport.

Q. You see, her passport also has no entry stamps for 6 December. I withdraw that question, actually.

I want to show you the border guard letter which you have relied on. It's at R(J) tab 4. The Russian is at page 8 R(J)/04/8 and the English starts at page 5 R(J)/04/5.

Now, the order of these letters is as follows. If you go to the English at page 7 R(J)/04/7 and the Russian at page 10 R(J)/04/10, you see a letter from a member of the Federation Council of Russia, Mr Malkin, dated 18 April 2011, and he writes to the head of the Border Guard Service of the FSB of Russia, Mr Pronichev. Do you see that?

Mr Malkin in his letter asks Mr Pronichev for an explanation of the procedure for crossing the Russian Federation state border when exiting from the Russian Federation, as well as information on the crossing of the Russian Federation state border by you during the period from 1 December 2000 to 10 January 2001. Do you see that? Mr Malkin's request appears to have been made pursuant to some procedure which allows members of the Federation Council to ask questions of and for documents from organs of the Russian State.

So you had been asking Mr Malkin to make a request under the Federation law entitling members of the Federation Council to make such requests; is that right?

A. Sorry, I didn't understand. What was the question? Did I agree that Mr Malkin would contact the first deputy director? I agree. But with regard to the -- with regard to law, the member of the State Duma or the member of the Federation Council has -- is entitled to contact any state authority, any state body.

Q. Okay. Can we now look at the information which Mr Pronichev provided: that's at page 5 in the English R(J)/04/5 and page 8 in the Russian R(J)/04/8. Now, do, if you would, read this letter to yourself. (Pause)

You see then that he -- you see that you do see then that he says:

"Based on the available records and documents, the information sheet requested by you was prepared..."

And the information sheet is on the following page, if you could go to that, please: page 9 in the Russian R(J)/04/9, page 6 in the English R(J)/04/6.

Now, according to this information sheet, you left Russia on 6 December 2000. Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. So your passport didn't show any Russian exit stamp for 6 December 2000, did it? I think we've established that.

A. Yes, we've established that there is no mark in my passport. But upon the request whether they have any data in this regard, they have confirmed that they do have the data.

Q. Let's just look at that a little more carefully. We know that your passport doesn't have any stamp and that would suggest, would it not, that whatever the available records and documents were which were used to compile this information sheet, it could not have been your passport?

A. Sorry, and what is the question? Whether my passport is a document? Yes, it is a document. Was it in the list of these documents on the basis of which the conclusions could have been drawn? Yes. Sorry, I do not understand the question.

Q. The point is this: that whatever the available information, whatever the documents and records were that Mr Pronichev says he was relying on, one thing we know for sure is that that couldn't have included stamps in your passport because there is no stamp in your passport showing a Russian exit on 6 December.

A. Indeed, my passport did not have any exit stamps for 6 December. We have discussed this.

Q. And so -- you may not know this but this led -- there was a discussion between the solicitors to try and ascertain what the available records and documents were that Mr Pronichev said that he was looking at.

Can I ask you, please, to go to bundle L(2011), volume 26, page 181 in the Russian L(2011)26/181, page 182 in the English L(2011)26/182. Now, if you're on page 182 of L(2011)26, do you see the third paragraph?

A. Is that my witness statement?

Q. No, it's a letter. You should be looking at it -- it's on the screen, sorry.

The third paragraph of this letter, which is from a Mr Mochalov, says:

"With respect to information concerning border crossings in 2000-2001, during this period, airports in Moscow and some other cities in the Russian Federation carried out an automated registration of persons crossing the border (by surnames, first names and passport numbers)."

Mr Mochalov then goes on to say that:

"... we are not allowed to disclose either the means used to collect such information or the relevant registration records."

And he then says:

"Nonetheless, the automatic registration system employed during the period referred to above makes it possible to confirm the facts outlined in the previous letter to Mr Malkin of 23 April 2011 and the list attached thereto. These facts are also confirmed by the marks made in the document proving the identity of the citizen of the Russian Federation abroad."

Now, there are a number of things about this that I would like to ask you about. First, you see that we're not told anything about what the automatic registration system was or how it worked, and so obviously there is no way that the court would be able to assess the reliability of that system, since it's not told anything about that. Okay? I just want you to know that that's what I'm going to be submitting.

Do you want to comment on that?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, I don't see how his comment can be useful. It's a submission and a comment by you.

I don't see what Mr Abramovich can add to what you've said.

MR RABINOWITZ: Very well.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Or, if he does so, what relevance it will have.

MR RABINOWITZ: Let's look at the next thing.

You see that Mr Mochalov appears to be referring, when he says, "These facts are also confirmed by the marks made in the document proving the identity of the citizen of the Russian Federation abroad", to passport stamps: that appears to be what he's referring to, doesn't it?

A. Sorry, what is he referring to? He's saying -- he's referring to something they've got and also referring to the passport data as well.

Q. So he says that what he is saying is confirmed by the marks made in the passport. That's what he is saying, is it not?

A. No, it's not what he is saying. He's saying they've got the data, plus they've got the passport marks and also they've got the document -- that's what they call it, it's a foreign passport.

Q. Indeed. So what he is saying is that the data that he has given is confirmed by the passport stamps?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Rabinowitz, at the end of the day it's what I think this statement means that matters; not, with respect to him, what Mr Abramovich thinks.

MR RABINOWITZ: You see, there is a problem with this, Mr Abramovich, and it's this: if Mr Mochalov is referring to passport stamps, are you able to offer an explanation or try and offer an explanation of how he can say the data confirming that you left Russia on 6 December is confirmed by a Russian passport stamp? Because we've seen that there is no exit stamp on 6 December for you from Russia.

A. Here he is referring to the automatic system of data collection and registration and also to the passport. If to put this system to one side and only consider the passport, then perhaps your assertion would be correct. But Mr Mochalov, he said that -- he has written that they've got the data and moreover they've got the passport.

Q. Now, the --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Rabinowitz, the marks that are referred to at the end of the last sentence of the penultimate paragraph of this letter are not necessarily stamps, are they? They could just be marks. Who knows?

MR RABINOWITZ: Who knows? But in a sense one isn't then helped by this at all because, in my respectful submission, it's difficult to see what other marks he can be referring to; and if they are stamps, then this suggested this is unreliable evidence again because he cannot say that there was a stamp which confirmed the other evidence because there isn't a stamp.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: But isn't this all submission on the basis of the forensic evidence for me rather than, as it were, you testing out the theory on the witness?

I mean, what can he say that can add to his credibility of lack of credibility on this point?

MR RABINOWITZ: My Lady, I want to put to him what I'm going to be submitting to your Ladyship. It will be said if I don't that I needed to put it to him.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, I'm not sure it will be. You put what you're going to be submitting.

MR RABINOWITZ: Well, I have now put it, so I don't need to take any more time on this.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right.

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Abramovich, in addition to what we have looked at, you have also given evidence on what you say is your recollection of meetings that you had in the first part of December and I want to ask you about some of those recollections, if I may.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just before we go there, can you give me the reference again to the passport page that has the omission for 6 December or the passport pages you're looking at that don't reflect exit from France or entry into Russia.

MR RABINOWITZ: Well, it's difficult to give you a page reference for something which isn't there, my Lady.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, precisely.

MR RABINOWITZ: But it's accepted --

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, they do in fact reflect entry into Russia; I think that's common ground.

MR RABINOWITZ: What is accepted is that there is no French exit stamp for 6 December.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: What, from Le Bourget?

MR RABINOWITZ: That's right. And what is also accepted by Mr Abramovich is that there is no Russian exit stamp in his passport for 6 December: that's at E8, tab 8, page 104 E8/08/104, page 117 in Russian E8/08/117.

Now, my learned friend --

A. May I say something with this regard?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

A. In theory there should have been four stamps: exit from Russia, entry to France, exit from France and entry to Russia. I only have two stamps: entry to Russia and entry to France. In other words, I didn't have the stamp when I exited Russia, when I --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. When you exited Russia --

THE INTERPRETER: I do apologise, that was too fast.

A. I flew out of Russia; I didn't have the stamp.

I arrived to France --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: In the morning of 6 December and you went to Le Bourget.

A. I arrived to France and a stamp was put in my passport.

We were in the area, we didn't leave the airport territory; we had a conversation there and I got back to the plane. My passport wasn't stamped in France.

I arrived to Russia, I got a stamp in my passport.

It's the same set of stamps that my wife has in her passport. When I was giving evidence I didn't even know that she was with me, so I just simply didn't remember that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Okay, thank you.

MR RABINOWITZ: Just before we leave passport stamps, on the question of Roissy and LB, in your witness evidence you refer to a document at H(A)38, page 99.001

H(A)38/99.001 as indicating that you arrived at Le Bourget on 6 December 2000. Can I ask you just to take that up, please.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Roissy is Charles de Gaulle, isn't it?

MR RABINOWITZ: I'm not sure it is.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: It is according to the internet.

I mean, whether that tells you anything or not --

MR RABINOWITZ: But if it's got "LB" after it -- it's an area.

Mr Abramovich, can you look, please, if you have that, at the stamp just above the divide on the right-hand side.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Rabinowitz, before we go there, whether the initials "LB" signify Le Bourget or not has to be a matter of record, doesn't it? I mean, somebody must be able to --

MR RABINOWITZ: What I'd like to ascertain is whether Mr Abramovich has been relying on "ROISSY-LB" to say that he arrived at Le Bourget.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, I can accept, notwithstanding what I said earlier, that "ROISSY-LB" is the stamp that is applied at Le Bourget because --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So your evidence is wrong, Mr Sumption?

MR SUMPTION: What I said earlier was wrong; that's quite right. That must be so because when one looks at the 6 December stamp and everybody agrees that the entry was at Le Bourget -- indeed the arrival of his plane is actually recorded at the beginning of the tape -- one can see that "ROISSY-LB" --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Is Roissy-Le Bourget rather than Charles de Gaulle, yes.

MR SUMPTION: -- must be Le Bourget, even though it's not at Roissy. I apologise.

MR RABINOWITZ: Which is, of course, precisely the point I was making.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Fine. Okay, well, I'm clear now anyway.

Mr Rabinowitz, it's clear that the stamp on page H(A)38/99.001, dated 6 December, is the entry stamp for Roissy-Le Bourget on 6 December 2000.

MR RABINOWITZ: I took your Ladyship to that simply to identify that "ROISSY-LB", contrary to what Mr Sumption suggested, is Le Bourget.

Now, I want to move to the final part of your evidence which seeks to establish that you could not have met Mr Abramovich in Cap d'Antibes in the period 7 to 9 December, and can we begin by looking at what you said about this period in your third witness statement. Can I ask you, please, to go to bundle E1 at tab 3, please, and go to page 216 in the Russian E1/03/216, 114 in the English E1/03/114.

At paragraph 261 you are dealing with the period 7 to 9 December and what you said here was that:

"... upon returning to Russia after the meeting at Le Bourget airport on 6 December, I remained in Russia for the entire period through to 2 January 2001. I was in Moscow from 7-9 December..."

And, as we see here, at this stage what you recall during this period, 7 to 9/10 December, is an official meeting with Mr Alexander Nazarov and President Putin around 9 or 10 December. Do you see that?

A. Yes. I said in the witness statement, "I think I had the meeting", but this is what Mr Nazarov was saying. I think I don't say this in other witness statements.

Q. What you say is:

"... (as I recall I was at an official meeting with Mr Alexander Nazarov and President Putin around 9 or 10 December)..."

So this statement was based, according to your witness statement, on your own recollection, Mr Abramovich.

A. No, it wasn't based on my recollection; it was based on what Mr Nazarov said to me. He remembered that we had a joint meeting together. He didn't remember what date it was; I think it was 9th or 10th. But if we look at other witness statements -- at my other witness statements, it might be described differently.

Q. Well, it is, and that's the point, Mr Abramovich.

I want to start by looking at what you said here.

At this stage you were saying that it was, as you recalled, a meeting with Mr Nazarov and President Putin.

Was that simply wrong? Was it not a recollection of yours?

- A. I said, "as it seemed to me"; I'm not saying that I'm asserting it. This is what I recall. Mr Nazarov said that we had a meeting and explained to me that was the 9th or the 10th and it turned out that it wasn't to be the case. And so in my other witness statements I've taken that into account and I've described it in more detail, more precisely.
- Q. Let's look, if we may, at your next witness statement to see how this deals with this: bundle E5, tab 11. It's at paragraph 106, please E5/11/45.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Page?

MR RABINOWITZ: Page 45, paragraph 106. Page 121 in the Russian E5/11/121. You say here:

"With the help of the members of my team who assisted me during the gubernatorial elections in Chukotka, I am now able to reconstruct in greater detail the events of December 2000."

You say that you're:

"... absolutely certain that [you] did not leave Russia during the period of 7 December... through 2 January 2001..."

And then if you go, please, to paragraph 108, you deal with the period of 7 to 10 December and you deal with this specifically. What you say again, as regards this period, is:

"As I am reminded by Mr Alexander Nazarov ([who was the] former Governor of the Chukotka Autonomous District), the two of [you] met with President Putin on 9 or 10 December. That meeting was also attended by Mr Konstantin Pulikovsky who was at the time the authorised representative of the President of the Russian Federation for the Far Eastern Federal District. At that meeting we discussed the upcoming elections..."

So it's clear, first, that you identify only one meeting that you say you have in this period; that's correct, isn't it?

- A. In my subsequent witness statements I'm saying that Mr Nazarov was incorrect: that meeting didn't happen, it happened earlier. And this is based on Mr Nazarov's words, I read -- what I'm saying in this witness statement. It seemed to him that we met on the 9th or the 10th but that meeting didn't happen. And I was trying to ascertain the date and for every date I was trying to give maximum detail and everything that I knew I was trying to reflect in my witness statement.
- Q. So, just to be clear, having said there was this meeting in your first witness statement and that you recalled it, you then say you spoke to Mr Nazarov and he recalled more detail about it and that is what you then identified as the only matter that you say you can rely upon for showing you in this period to be in Moscow, but you accept now that what is said at paragraph 108 is incorrect. Is that right?

A. I do not agree for a number of reasons. First, to do -- paragraph 261, you're saying that I was asserting in my witness statements. I didn't assert; as I said, it seemed to me.

And secondly, in my second witness statement I am saying that I am quoting Mr Nazarov; I myself do not recall it. In subsequent witness statements we are discussing that the meeting did happen; most likely it happened earlier. That meeting with Pulikovsky and Nazarov and the president did happen, but I cannot assert the date. It's most likely it was the end of November.

Q. Can you please just go to your commentary on Le Bourget at E6 -- well, you had better go to E7, tab 1, page 156 (sic). In E6 it's at E6, tab 1, page 62 E6/01/62. You see, in your commentary, E6, tab 1, page 62, in the English at box 159 --

A. Is it possible to show it to me in the Russian text, to quote the Russian text pagination?

MR RABINOWITZ: I did give that to you: it's at E7, page 156, I hope. We're looking at box 159.

Mr Abramovich, are you on page 56? I think I may have said 156 but you should be on page 56 of E7 E7/01/56. Yes?

Now, you see in your commentary to Le Bourget you talk about communication you had with President Putin on 9 or 10 December in Moscow.

A. Mm-hm.

Q. And this appears, does it not, to be a reference to the same meeting that you were referring to in your third and fourth witness statements?

A. Sorry, could the question be posed again? From my commentary it's clear that that meeting was on the 9th?

Q. This suggests, does it not, again that you were saying here that you met President Putin on the 9th or 10th?

A. Could I read it, please, and then I'll comment.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: It's quite far down the commentary. In the English it's on about the fourth page of the commentary to box 159. (Pause)

A. Yes. Yes, I've read it. If I understand correctly, we were submitting Le Bourget transcript at the same point when the third witness statement was submitted, so everything I knew at that point in time, it's reflected either here or there. But this is based on what Mr Nazarov told me and he said he's got diaries and he shall find them, but he couldn't find anything and his assistant also couldn't find any -- didn't find any records.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So you're telling the court now that you think you had the meeting with Putin at the end of November sometime?

A. This is only a reconstruction. I cannot assert the dates. If we interpolate all the schedules when I was in Moscow and when the president was in Moscow, then only 29 November would work, but I cannot say that I can recall the date for sure. It definitely was not the 9th or the 10th because the president wasn't in Moscow.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I see.

MR RABINOWITZ: But, Mr Abramovich, it's fairly clear from what you are saying that you do not have a clear recollection of who it was you met in this period, in early December 2000.

A. That's exactly what I'm saying: I do not recall. This is only based on the documents.

Q. And just on that, you were translated as answering the question from my Lady as saying that all of this is a reconstruction. You say:

"I cannot assert the dates. If we interpolate all the schedules when I was in Moscow..."

What were you referring to when you were referring here to "schedules" which showed when you were in Moscow and when you weren't?

A. Sorry, that's the word I used. These are not schedules. Perhaps the word "schedule" or "chart" could be used. When I was in Moscow and when the president was in Moscow, if you can put these -- what would you call it? -- schedules, dates, if you put them together, then, yes, there would have been a theoretical possibility: only the 29th. It's just a figure of speech, the word "schedule".

Q. Now, more recently, as you've suggested, when I think it had become clear that you couldn't have met President Putin on the 9th or 10th because he was not in Moscow, you have now given evidence that in fact you saw certain other individuals, including Mr Davidovich, Mr Zurubov and Mr Adamov in Moscow and I'd like to ask you about that, if I may.

A. Yes, but again it's only based on reconstruction. I myself do not recall this.

Q. Okay. Let's just see what evidence you are relying on here and I appreciate you telling the court that you don't remember this.

Can you go, please, to your sixth witness statement and first go to paragraph 14: that's at bundle E8, tab 8, page 106 in the English E8/08/106 and page 119 in the Russian E8/08/119.

At paragraph 14 you say:

"[You've been] reminded by Mr David Davidovich that [you] met with him that day in Moscow to discuss the delivery of vehicles of the make 'Gazel' (which were vans to be used as transport) to Chukotka."

I think you accept that you have no recollection of this, but it's your evidence that Mr Davidovich remembers this from some 11 years ago; is that right?

A. I remembered the story with these Gazels because that was quite an unusual one. If I may, I can tell it, if it's important.

Q. Well, we will come to it shortly but I just want to ask you a few questions first about Mr Davidovich, if I may.

Mr Davidovich is a close associate of yours, is he not?

A. Yes, one could say that.

Q. Well, he is the executive director of Millhouse LLC; correct?

A. I think so.

Q. And it's right, is it not, that he's been sitting in court on a number of days during these proceedings?

A. Yes, and he is in the courtroom now as well, as we speak.

Q. And he is a close and trusted friend of yours?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, even assuming that Mr Davidovich was trying to be impartial about this, given how long ago it was, you would accept, I take it, that Mr Davidovich could be wrong about the date of the meeting?

A. I cannot accept it and, if I may, I shall explain.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, you may explain.

A. There are two aspects to the story. I have asked to organise vehicles for Chukotka and any person who never visited Chukotka would think it was just some territory with a road network. And when the vehicles would be crossing the tundra and if there is snow or a snowstorm, we had big red crosses on them, on the vehicle roofs, so as to be seen from the helicopter in case anything happens from the vehicles. There is no road network in Chukotka; it's only helicopter transport. One can only move by car in small towns. Therefore that was just not necessary; that was an extra.

Mr Davidovich, having spoken to me, left for Nizhny Novgorod to work on these vehicles -- there was some mistake about these red crosses -- and he arrived there on the 7th, after our conversation with him. We'd spoken with him in the office and he arrived there and in the hotel it was -- he was checked in in the hotel. So basically it's only a reconstruction, of course I don't recall what date it was; and retroactively, looking back, it works out that it was on the 7th. This is all I've got to say.

- Q. Well, can I ask you this. Let's proceed on the basis that Mr Davidovich is right that he went to -- I think he went to the Hotel Volna in Nizhny Novgorod from 7 December onwards.

It doesn't follow, Mr Abramovich, that your conversation with him had to have been on the 7th; it could have been on the 6th, it could have been on the 5th, just to give two examples. That's right, is it not?

- A. I disagree. Yes, one can make such an assumption. It's hard to speak about the 6th because I was in France. But overall in our organisation it was the following way: if I asked for something to be done and it's not done, that would have been unusual. I really needed these vehicles to reach Chukotka as fast as possible because there was no transport there whatsoever. So my assertion that he left on the same day as soon as I spoke to him, especially as the flight was only about 30 minutes long, this is what I assert.

- Q. But do you accept that you have no recollection about it?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just a second. Sorry, what flight is only 30 minutes long?

A. The flight between Moscow and Nizhny Novgorod, where these vehicles are being manufactured. I indeed have no recollection in this regard and it would be wrong to say otherwise. This is pure reconstruction. I remember the story with the vehicles and I certainly do not remember the date.

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Davidovich stayed at that hotel, didn't he, for six months?

A. Yes, he did, Mr Davidovich stayed there for six months. Moreover, he even started to work for them because after that we've bought it, bought the factory.

Q. He would have been making plans ahead for his visit to that hotel in Nizhny Novgorod; he wouldn't have made a reservation on the 7th and flown out on the 7th?

A. That is a factory hotel. He would not have -- it's not a city hotel. And Nizhny is not a very frequented town; it's an industrial town.

Q. Mr Abramovich, what I'm suggesting to you is that you have to accept that it must at least be possible that your conversation with Mr Davidovich before he left for Nizhny Novgorod could have been on 5 December and didn't have to be on 7 December.

A. I rule out this possibility based on my own knowledge and recollection, but if you think that that could be possible -- well, usually in our organisation the way the organisation is built is that decisions are executed immediately, asap.

- Q. I want to ask you next about the meeting you suggest you had with Mr Adamov, the minister of atomic energy, which you deal with at paragraph 18 of your witness statement E8/08/106. This is a meeting you say you had on 8 December.

Now, again, you have no recollection of this meeting either, as I understand it?

- A. Yes, I remember that there was a meeting but I don't remember the date of the meeting.
- Q. But you say Mr Adamov has told you that you met him on the afternoon of 8 December to discuss questions relating to the Bilibino power station?
- A. Yes.
- Q. And you say that Adamov is certain that your meeting took place on 8 December because he apparently was not in Moscow on 9 December. Is that right?
- A. Yes, I agree. He left for Bishkek on 8 December to give a honours document to the Bishkek president from the president of Russia and there was some inauguration and he left in the evening.
- Q. So he left in the evening on the 8th. But, Mr Abramovich, you give no reason to explain why Mr Adamov is sure, some 11 years on, why the meeting must have been on 8 December rather than, for example, on a date shortly before then.

A. Did I understand the question correctly: how can I assert that the meeting happened on 8 December and not before that?

Q. Yes.

A. I cannot confirm it myself. This is only based on his words. He went to the ministry, he went through the documents and that's what he was able to get out of -- fish out of there.

Q. Can we just look at what Mr Adamov in fact says. We have the letter from Mr Adamov at bundle L(2011), volume 29, page 253 in the English L(2011)29/253, 252 in the Russian L(2011)29/252. I think it will come on to your screen.

It hasn't yet come on to Mr Abramovich's screen.

(Pause)

So he says:

"I have received your request regarding meeting with Mr Abramovich on 8 December..."

Just pausing there, someone appears to have asked him about a meeting on 8 December. Can you explain how --

A. Would it be okay to see the whole letter, please?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: There's a problem with the computer display functionality. (Pause)

MR RABINOWITZ: What about getting it on the smaller screen?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I can get the Russian on my smaller screen: it's just one page back from the English.

MR RABINOWITZ: Can you just read that letter to yourself, please. (Pause)

You see that Mr Adamov explains that "[his] work diary at that time was maintained in Outlook", but he says that "no copies of any entries still exist". Do you see that?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. And he then says:

"... there are known dates of certain events which I remember very well."

And he identifies some of those things which he says he remembers very well: meeting the president of Kirgizia. Having said that, he just says:

"Prior to my departure to... (Kirgizia) Mr Abramovich asked me for a meeting, since he had to go to Chukotka himself. My recollection is that this meeting did actually take place on 8 December 2000."

So, again, Mr Abramovich, I suggest that one is none the wiser at all about what it is that Mr Adamov says he is relying upon in order to come up with a date of 8 December. He doesn't seem to suggest there's any documents he's looked at at all.

A. These are his recollections. I cannot help you. If this is not enough, this is all I was able to do in this regard.

Q. You see, I suggest that Mr Adamov simply doesn't explain how, over 11 years ago, he can remember that the meeting was on 8 December as opposed to another date.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I think the witness has given his answer.

MR RABINOWITZ: I think he has.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: He can't comment. And at the end of the day, it's a matter for me to address the validity or the value of this evidence, isn't it?

MR RABINOWITZ: Let's look at paragraph 20 of your witness statement: page 107 in English E8/08/107, page 121 in the Russian E8/08/121. Bundle E8 we're still in.

Here you are talking about having been reminded by Mr Zurabov that you met with him on 8 December and you specifically say that you had not remembered it, that is to say when the meeting took place. E8.

A. Yes, I did not remember it. Initially we thought to meet -- we were going to meet at the State Duma because he was going to speak at the Duma, but because there was a rumour that perhaps a terrorist act could be organised, an explosion, I went to sort it out. So the meeting happened, as I can recall, in our offices after his speech.

Q. You see, in your witness statement, whilst you refer to Mr Zurabov reminding you of this, you give no reason at all why this meeting should have been on 8 December as opposed to some other date.

A. I already said that the meeting had to happen on the 8th, on the day when we were voting -- there was a state hymn issue on the agenda and Zurabov had to speak after lunch with the pension reform presentation and both of us were going to fly to Chukotka together and because it was delayed, we flew by different planes.

So we had to discuss it at some point and, from what I can recall, the meeting happened and, from what I can recall, that happened on the day when the Duma was voting on the state anthem.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: What's the journey time from Moscow to Chukotka by private aeroplane, by private jet?

A. Usual flight -- there are two flight routes, the north and the south one: the north one takes nine hours and the southern one takes 11 hours.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: And that's by private jet? You travelled in private jet, did you, to Chukotka?

A. To Chukotka, yes, we went by charter to Chukotka.

MR RABINOWITZ: Now, can I ask you about the suggestion you make that on 8 December you voted in the Duma in Moscow.

It's right, isn't it, that in December 2000 you were a member of the State Duma of the Federal Assembly of the Russian Federation as the representative of Chukotka?

A. Yes.

Q. And the State Duma of the Federal Assembly sits in Moscow; that's right, isn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. Now --

A. This is the parliament.

THE INTERPRETER: Sorry, that might have been interpreter's mistake. It's not an assembly, it's a parliament.

MR RABINOWITZ: And the first time that you have claimed that you were in the Duma on 8 December to vote on draft laws about national anthem/flag/crest of Russia was one week before trial in your sixth witness statement; that's right, isn't it?

A. Yes, this is correct. The thing is that initially Mr Berezovsky was asserting that the meeting took place round about Christmastime and then obviously we were trying to focus to understand where I was at that point in time. And with regard to the 7th or the 9th, he changed his opinion not so long ago, so obviously later we started focusing on these dates.

Q. Now, can we just look at what you say at paragraph 17, please. You have it there: E8, tab 8 E8/08/106, in the Russian it's at page 120 E8/08/120. You say that you recall well attending the vote on 8 December and that you were recently reminded of the date of the vote by Ms Ponomareva.

Do you happen to know how Ms Ponomareva recalled this? Was she with you at this time, on 8 December?

A. I cannot say whether she was with me on 8 December but she was overseeing my work in the Duma. So that person was the person who would know, or maybe there was a second assistant: I mentioned her yesterday, I mentioned Ponomareva and Morozova.

Q. There is only one document you have disclosed relating to the Duma session of 8 December and that is the chronicle of the session of 8 December, which you can find at H(A)25, page 162, at 162.003 in the Russian H(A)25/162.003 and 003T in the English H(A)25/003T. H(A)25.

Now, I'm not inviting you to take a lot of time reading through this, but I can tell you that there is no reference in that document to you having been present in the Duma on 8 December.

A. Certainly there was no reference in that document but this is an official registration. I'm certain that it should have been registered in the Duma and certainly this can be found somewhere, but I didn't recall on what date the voting was held. I remember that I was voting on the anthem and therefore my recollection that I voted and the date on which I voted, in my understanding, that gives us, if not an evidence, then something close to evidence, something close to proof.

Moreover, the story with the police dogs with the bomb, planted bomb in the Duma, also was quite a rare thing and I also recall that story -- or that's happened and I was in the hall when that was announced, when the announcement was made.

Q. Mr Abramovich, you do refer to the story with the police dogs and the bomb, but that is in fact a story which was publicised by way of the transcripts of the Duma session being published online; that's right, isn't it? The fact that that had happened was something that anyone looking at the internet could have discovered.

A. Is the question whether the story about the dogs was publicised, and about the voting on the anthem? Yes, certainly it was.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: It's being put to you that you could have made up this story because the reference to the dogs and the bomb threat was on the website, so it would be easy for you to make up the story without actually having been there in the Duma at the time.

That's right, Mr Rabinowitz; that's the suggestion that you're making?

MR RABINOWITZ: That's right.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: What do you say about that?

A. I remember that I voted on the anthem, I remember that I was in the Duma and I remember the announcement about the dogs. I didn't know that that happened on the 8th. But if you put all the parts together, then one can make --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Sorry, you did know or you didn't know that happened on the 8th?

A. I did not know that that was the 8th. But when we started looking...

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: Sorry, you say "when [you] started looking": when you started looking for what?

A. We started looking for where I was on these dates. If I may, I will say a couple of words how this happened.

Q. Please.

A. I asked the secretaries to take their telephone book and ring all their acquaintances that someone -- everyone who knows or remembers something about that time. And bit by bit people started saying what they remember, what they recall; some might have some pictures, some pictures might have been preserved; and thus we were able to recall these dates.

Q. Mr Abramovich, you voted in the Duma in Moscow on 14 and 20 December when you say you were in Chukotka; that's right, isn't it?

A. No, this is not right. My colleague Zubov voted for me. I passed my card to him. He is ex-governor of Krasnoyarsk Krai and he was sitting on my right.

Q. You gave a proxy card to Mr Zubov and on 14 and 20 December he exercised -- sorry, you gave your own card to Mr Zubov to use as a proxy and on the 14th and the 20th he voted for you; is that right?

A. Yes, that's right.

Q. And there is a record shown in the public records of you having voted in Moscow on 14 and 20 December; that's right, isn't it?

A. I don't know about this. Are you saying is there a record or whether I voted? I didn't vote because my colleague voted for me --

Q. There's a record --

A. -- and I cannot say whether there is a record or there isn't one.

Q. Well, take it from me: there is a record of your vote having been cast.

What we haven't been able to find, however, is any record of any vote by you on 8 December 2000. Can you perhaps assist as to why that would be so?

A. I'm confident that if it was open vote, that there is registration, and I'm confident that maybe you're mixing things up.

Q. Mr Abramovich, I would just like to summarise our case on the Cap d'Antibes meeting to give you a final chance to comment on it.

First, we say that you originally admitted this meeting, before seeking to change your case. Do you dispute that?

A. No, I do not dispute that. I'm saying that there was a meeting in France, yes.

Q. Second, we say that your own recollection of events, whether or not prompted by a third party, is unreliable and that any evidence you do give is based entirely on reconstruction. Do you dispute that?

A. I'm sorry, I've missed it. What is it based on?

Q. Reconstruction.

A. Yes. Mainly everything is based on reconstruction.

I remember I didn't leave Russia, but everything else is reconstruction.

Q. Third, we say you have notably omitted to produce relevant materials, such as diaries and mobile phone records and credit card receipts, or indeed to ask individuals to search for that -- I'll leave out the last bit, sorry.

You have notably omitted to produce relevant materials, diaries and mobile phone records and credit card receipts, for the relevant period. Do you dispute that?

A. Sorry, it might have been again an interpreter's error. It sounded like I deliberately didn't produce something. Did I understand the question correctly?

Q. You have failed, whether deliberately or otherwise, to produce these sources of evidence.

A. The evidence that Mr Rabinowitz is talking about, we simply couldn't find them because it looks like they were not preserved.

Q. And fourth, we suggest that the evidence that you have relied upon to try and establish that you could not have been in the Cap d'Antibes in December, and in particular in the period 7 and 9 December, simply doesn't establish that fact. Do you dispute that?

A. This is not for me to choose. I've done all I could in this regard, with regard to submitting evidence.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Is that a convenient moment?

MR RABINOWITZ: It is.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Before I rise, there may be a problem about tomorrow because of this demonstration. I'm just going to have a meeting with the court staff to see what the impact of closing Fetter Lane is going to be, or might be, on all of us tomorrow. So could you come, as it were, prepared to deal with how we're going to get into the building if there's no vehicular access anywhere around. You may need to have to cope with that. That's all.

Okay. I'll let you know further at 2 o'clock.

(1.02 pm)

(The short adjournment)

(2.10 pm)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Rabinowitz, Mr Sumption, the position for tomorrow is that at present the police are saying it's business as usual. The road will be closed to vehicles, however, from 10.30 am in the morning until the evening but this may change with little or no notice, but in the meantime we should continue business as usual.

The pavement will be open to the public. The march starts somewhere near the LSE around 12.00 noon and it's anticipated that the demonstrators will be coming up Fetter Lane from between 12.30 to 2.00 pm, depending on the numbers. Apparently the number of protesters will be in the region of 5,000 to 10,000. That's what's anticipated.

The problem will be therefore at its worst over lunch, so if any of you leave the building to go back to chambers or somewhere for lunch, there will be a risk that you may be delayed getting back in. Can you please make your own arrangements so that at least the participators who need to be here in the afternoon will be here and won't get lost in some demo. That particularly goes for Mr Abramovich, if he will still be in the witness box tomorrow, and Mr Rabinowitz and somebody at least from your team, Mr Sumption.

If you would like me to start at 10 o'clock, with a view to perhaps rising at 12 o'clock, I'm happy to do that; but it seems to me that that may make it worse, it may make it better.

MR RABINOWITZ: I think we can cope with arranging lunch.

MR SUMPTION: If your Ladyship starts at 10.15 as usual, I'm sure we will find a way. Mr Rabinowitz's armoured cars will then be able to arrive outside without let or hindrance.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Well, if we start at 10.15, that should be all right and that should give you time to get away. But I think that there will be, as I said, a problem at lunchtime if anybody leaves the building.

Very well. Yes, Mr Rabinowitz.

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Abramovich, you deny that you were at any meeting at Cap d'Antibes in December 2000 but I'm going to give you a chance to comment on Mr Berezovsky's evidence as to what occurred at that meeting, should you wish to comment.

Mr Berezovsky says that you told him at this meeting that you were there as a messenger from the Kremlin. You dispute that, do you?

A. Yes, I dispute that. Should I comment after each of your statements or should I listen to the end of the sentence or the paragraph?

Q. It's probably better if you do it at the end of each sentence.

Mr Berezovsky also says you told him and Mr Patarkatsishvili that you were there at the specific request of President Putin and Mr Voloshin and that he and Mr Patarkatsishvili had to agree to sell their interests in ORT immediately. Do you accept that?

A. Are we discussing just the alleged meeting on 7 December, do I understand it correctly, or are we discussing a possible discussion?

Q. We're discussing what Mr Berezovsky said happened at Cap d'Antibes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Can we be clear about the date. The date that Mr Berezovsky is putting forward is between the 7th --

MR RABINOWITZ: The 7th and the 8th, I think he said. He said the 7th or the 8th.

Do you want to comment on the second of those parts of the evidence?

A. On the 7th or the 8th, on either 7th or 8th December I was not in Cap d'Antibes, so everything that we discuss later will follow from this statement.

Q. All right. Perhaps then it will be quicker if I just read to you the remaining parts of what Mr Berezovsky says you told him --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just a second. Mr Rabinowitz, in the agreed chronology that has been provided to the court recently, the dates upon which Mr Berezovsky alleges the meeting in Cap d'Antibes occurred were the 7th to the 16th. Has that been modified to just the 7th or the 8th?

MR RABINOWITZ: I think Mr Berezovsky's evidence was that it was the 7th, the 8th and perhaps he said the 9th as well, and it's on that basis --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right, so I shall delete that. Only I need to be clear.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, it's also been conceded in correspondence that it couldn't have occurred after the 10th.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So it could have occurred on the 10th?

MR SUMPTION: Well, the position in correspondence is that it could not have occurred after the 10th. The position on Mr Berezovsky's evidence is that he says that he believes that he recalls it occurring on the 7th but it could have happened on the 8th.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, thank you.

Well, you heard that, Mr Abramovich: those are the possible dates that you're being asked to address.

MR RABINOWITZ: So it will be quicker, if your answer is simply going to be, "I wasn't there on the 7th or the 8th", if I can tell you everything he says and then you can just, if you want, comment on it.

He says you told him that if they did not sell their shares at the price you specified, then Mr Glushkov would be in prison for a very long time. He says also that you said that if he agreed to sell, Mr Glushkov would be released. And he says that you also said that if they did not sell the shares, President Putin would seize them in any event.

And finally Mr Berezovsky says that you told him that you would pay $175 million but that you would deduct $25 million for money you had spent on President Putin's campaign, so that while Mr Berezovsky had previously thought he would be getting $175 million from you, you reduced this at the last minute to $150 million.

Now, there are two more bits and I'll read them and then you can comment.

Mr Berezovsky says that he had decided that he would be willing to hand over ORT, if this would secure Mr Glushkov's release, as soon as he heard of Mr Glushkov's imprisonment; but that at this meeting with you, he understood that he was being blackmailed and that the promise of Mr Glushkov's release was being held out in return for the sale. And Mr Berezovsky says that he said to you at the end of the meeting that he felt betrayed by you and that he never wanted to see you again.

- A. It was difficult for me to remember all of that. So, if I may, I'll concentrate on two statements that, in my view, are senseless, nonsense.

On the one hand, according to Mr Berezovsky, I asserted that if he sells me shares -- so I was ready to pay for the shares -- then Mr Glushkov would be released from custody. On the other hand, I was also saying, allegedly, that if he sells the shares to me -- sorry, if he doesn't sell the shares to me, they would be confiscated anyway.

In my view, this is not entirely logical. In other words, I wanted these shares for myself; but everything we heard and everything we discussed in Le Bourget points to the fact that it wasn't my idea to get these shares for myself. This is my guess, my assumption; I don't want to assert it.

Apart from that, I wanted to say that everything that Mr Berezovsky alleges is not true on this point.

- Q. It wasn't your idea to get these shares for yourself; you were in fact doing it because President Putin and you discussed that you would get these shares from Mr Berezovsky. That's right, isn't it?
- A. I didn't quite understand the question. Is the question whether I discussed with President Putin that I would get these shares? Yes, I did discuss.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, that's not the question.

MR RABINOWITZ: The reason you were acquiring ORT was because President Putin wanted Mr Berezovsky to give up the shares in ORT and you were assisting President Putin in achieving that end?

- A. President Putin didn't want the shares. It wasn't the shares that he wanted. He wanted Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili to leave management of the company and relinquish control, stop influencing the content of the programmes. The papers in themselves weren't that necessary.

And in my evidence I'm explaining that ORT is a rather bizarre organisation. The essence of the company is a licence, it's based on a licence. It was easy to take that licence and give it to any other organisation. The broadcasting licence did not belong to Mr Berezovsky. He held only 49 per cent of ORT.

So, in the end, the situation might have developed in the following way: the licence might have been transferred to another company and Mr Berezovsky might have kept the shares. So, to avoid that, Badri talked me into buying these shares.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So what do you say is the reason for your purchase of the shares in ORT? Because Badri asked you to do so? Because of President Putin's concern about Berezovsky? What do you say was your reason for buying the shares?

A. I had two reasons. Number one, I was associated closely with Mr Berezovsky, I was like a shadow of Mr Berezovsky, so if at some point he wouldn't calm down and if he didn't stop using ORT in his fight with the government, I would suffer personally and most importantly Sibneft as a company would not be stable.

Secondly, Badri understood that very well: he understood that sooner or later this would come to a sorry end. Badri understood that and he was persuading me, talking me into acquiring the shares; then Boris would calm down and then we'll see what should be done with it. Initially, from the very first discussions, we discussed that I would acquire these shares, I would hold them for a while; and later, when it all settles down, he'll take them back. However, this option was forgotten very soon.

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Abramovich, in answer to the previous question, you explained that:

"President Putin didn't want the shares. It wasn't the shares that he wanted. He wanted Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili to leave management of the company and relinquish control..."

So President Putin didn't want the shares, but what he did want was for the shares to be taken away from Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili; that is right, isn't it?

A. Well, "taken away", I don't quite understand this word. Do I have to confirm that I took them away? I didn't take them away; I paid for them.

Q. Well, allowing for the fact that you paid for them, President Putin did not want these shares in the hands of Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili and that is why, at the behest of President Putin, you bought the shares from Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili?

A. Mr Putin did not task me with buying the shares. You can see it from Le Bourget transcript and I'm explaining it: he says, "It's your personal business, please don't bring me into that".

Q. Did President Putin think that you were associated with Mr Berezovsky?

A. From what I know, yes, he did.

Q. Why did President Putin think that you were associated with Mr Berezovsky?

A. Everybody knew that. Everybody knew I was linked to him. It was an absolutely obvious thing.

Q. Now, can we next just look at your third witness statement: bundle E1, tab 3, page 209 in the Russian E1/03/209, 107 in the English E1/03/107. It's paragraph 238. Can I ask you to read the first sentence of paragraph 238 to yourself, please. (Pause)

A. Perhaps I'm looking at a wrong paragraph. 238, third witness statement? It's not really about that.

Q. No, it's about the acquisition of the ORT shares. It should begin, "In the end, therefore"; yes?

A. Yes. (Pause)

I've read it.

Q. And so you say here that at Le Bourget you agreed that the shares in ORT would be sold for a minimal amount of $10 million and you say that afterwards there would be a side payment of $140 million and you say that you added a further $14 million as half of the so-called commission.

But, of course, although you were negotiating with Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili, they did not themselves own all of the 49 per cent of ORT which was privately owned, did they?

A. Are you asking me whether the shares were registered in their names or what are you asking? I didn't quite catch it. What do you mean "they did not themselves own"? They were registered as held by companies that belonged to them, as far as I remember.

Q. It's common ground that immediately prior to the sale of ORT, Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili owned 38 per cent of ORT through a company called ORT-KB; that's right, isn't it? I think we've seen this yesterday.

A. Yes, yes.

Q. And Logovaz owned a further 11 per cent; that's right as well, isn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. Can I ask you, please, just to look then at your fourth witness statement: bundle E5, tab 11, page 28 in the English E5/11/28 and the reference is 102 in the Russian but that sounds like it may be wrong E5/11/102.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: What paragraph, please?

MR RABINOWITZ: Paragraph 59.

In this paragraph, Mr Abramovich, about eight lines from the end, you say that you recollect that you called Mr Dubov at the end of December 2000 and that you informed him that you and Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili "were closing the ORT deal". Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. And you told him this because you thought he was still the general director of ORT? Sorry, of Logovaz, not ORT. The reason you informed Dr Dubov that you were acquiring these shares is because you thought he was still the general director of Logovaz, which held 11 per cent of the shares?

A. I cannot assert that at that time I thought that Mr Dubov was director of Logovaz. Mr Dubov was the only person I knew in Logovaz.

Q. And you thought he was in a position of authority at Logovaz?

A. Do I understand correctly that we're talking about his authority? I didn't know if he had any authority to sign documents or not. He was just the only contact I had in Logovaz. But it can be assumed that he had certain authority. Whether he was director general or not at that time, I did not know.

Q. And this was the first time that you had discussed with Dr Dubov the sale of these shares; that's right, isn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. And he said to you that if you told him how much you wanted to pay for the shares, he would pass that on to Mr Frolov; that's right, isn't it?

A. I don't remember this. The thing is I don't know Mr Frolov, I've never seen him, and I don't remember this conversation at all. I do remember that I telephoned him but I can't say that he mentioned Mr Frolov; I could not assert that.

Q. But you could not dispute it either; is that right?

A. It's true, I can't. I can't dispute this either.

Q. You expected Logovaz to hand over the shares for nothing; is that right?

A. For nothing? That I was not going to pay anything? No, I didn't expect that. I think we agreed on nominal price.

Q. And the reason you expected Logovaz to hand these shares over for a nominal price is because you knew that Dr Dubov was also a friend of Mr Glushkov; that's right, isn't it?

A. That's absolutely not right. I had no idea that Dr Dubov was a friend of Mr Glushkov.

Q. As for why you called Dr Dubov, that is explained in this paragraph of your witness statement: you called him because you had told President Putin that the agreement to acquire ORT would be finalised by the end of the year?

A. Yes, this is possible. Only I don't understand why I telephoned Dr Dubov and how that is connected.

Q. You telephoned Dr Dubov because 11 per cent of the shares were held by Logovaz and you needed those 11 per cent of the shares to be sold before the end of the year?

A. With all my respect to Dr Dubov, he certainly couldn't have taken such a decision himself in Logovaz. Rather his position was director general, I don't even know what his position was called at that time, but he could not have taken such a decision single-handedly. Badri had to instruct him.

If I just called him and asked him, and if you're asking me whether he could have taken that decision on his own, without seeking approval of the shareholders, the answer is: of course not.

Q. Do you say you told Dr Dubov of the importance to President Putin of having the sale completed by the New Year?

A. Of course not.

Q. You had promised President Putin to get the deal done by the end of the year; that's right, isn't it?

A. Even if I had promised, I would not have told Dr Dubov about the details of this conversation. So this is -- my main contention is this: that there's no link.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, did you promise?

A. I can't agree with the word "promised". Well, I promised that once the deal is closed, I would inform him. I don't remember if I told him that directly or via Mr Voloshin. But I did say: when I finish the deal, I will inform.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Did you tell President Putin or Mr Voloshin that you would close the deal by the end of the year?

A. My feeling is that I might have said that, I could have said that, but I cannot be completely certain that I said, "By the New Year I will close it". But it is possible. In fact, I must have given him a date, I must have given him the date that I'm planning to conclude it by that date; but whether it's linked to the New Year, perhaps.

MR RABINOWITZ: Well, in fact, Mr Abramovich, your evidence in paragraph 59 suggests that that is precisely what you had said to President Putin. You said you had "informed [him] of the finalisation of the agreement to acquire [the] shares before the end of the year", and you wanted to ensure that it was in hand before you left Moscow before the end of the year.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, that's not quite the same, Mr Rabinowitz, as promising President Putin that he would conclude the deal by the end of the year.

MR RABINOWITZ: Well, I was picking up on your Ladyship's question, which was: did you tell President Putin that you would close the deal by the end of the year?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right, okay.

MR RABINOWITZ: And that is why, because you had told President Putin that you would get this done by the end of the year, that you were pressing Dr Dubov to finalise the arrangements for the sale; that's right, isn't it?

A. I've already said that in my eyes, Mr Dubov, with all my respect to him, he's a very good man. He was not a party to negotiations so I could not have put pressure on him; there simply wasn't any reason for me to do so. Most importantly, however much pressure I might have put on him, he would not have done anything without instructions from Badri.

Q. Can we then turn to the question of what you did do with the 49 per cent of ORT after you acquired it.

It's your evidence that at no time did you cede control over any part of your stake in ORT to the Russian government; that's right, isn't it?

A. Yes, that's right.

Q. In fact --

A. Did I understand the question: we're talking about the shares?

Q. The shares. But in fact, Mr Abramovich, the truth is that you allowed the Russian government to control ORT, so that it ceased to be an independent channel; that's right, isn't it?

A. No, we must understand what we're discussing. Are we discussing the shares or was I interfering with the content of the programmes? I never interfered with the content of the programmes and I never transferred or handed over any shares.

What is an independent channel? The controlling stake had always belonged to the government. The director general who was in that position prior to my acquiring the shares was the same after I acquired the shares; he's there to this day. The same director general was in fact, I think, employed by Mr Berezovsky at one time, or at least he was nominated to the president by Mr Berezovsky.

I don't understand how I was meant to demonstrate the independence of the channel.

Q. Mr Abramovich, your evidence earlier had been that what President Putin wanted was for Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili to cease to control the channel and that is why you had got involved in acquiring their shares.

Once you had acquired the shares, you allowed the Russian government to control ORT, so that it ceased to be the independent channel it had been under Mr Berezovsky's control; that is right, is it not?

A. Of course not. Mr Berezovsky, through Mr Patarkatsishvili and directly, worked with the journalists, told them what should be broadcast, where to get material, et cetera et cetera. Naturally I never did that.

Besides, it was never my purpose. That's why I didn't really want the shares. They have no value to me and in my hands. That's why I didn't want to acquire them initially.

Q. You did not yourself appoint any representatives to the ORT board, did you?

A. I think for a while Badri was a representative there and then I think Yakov Rusin, the same -- I don't really remember very well, but I think exactly the same man who represented Mr Berezovsky. But later I think our lawyers were on the board; I don't remember.

But to be quite honest, I didn't care at all about it; I wasn't interested.

Q. In fact you made clear that you would not be taking any active part in the TV company's operations; that's right, isn't it?

A. Again, what do you mean by saying "TV company's operations"? Would I interfere in the content of political programmes? I have no opinion to express, I have no wish to express it. I had other things to do. So at that level of course I never interfered.

The question -- if you ask me whether I handed over the shares ever; no, I didn't. This is my property. Programme content, I am not interested in that.

Q. Let me show you some evidence on this so that you can have the opportunity to comment. Can you go, please, to bundle H(A)61 at page 70 H(A)61/70.

Now, it's a report -- as you can see, it's in English -- by the internationally respected Committee to Protect Journalists and it dates from 2001; you'll see that if you look at the reference from the internet. If you go to page 74 H(A)61/74, what is reported here is this -- I'll read it to you, it's not a very long extract -- just below the picture on page 74:

"The fate of the national television channels ORT and NTV should also be decided in the course of 2001.

In February 2001, Berezovsky sold his 49 percent stake in ORT to the Kremlin's new favourite oligarch, Roman Abramovich, who immediately announced that he would allow the Kremlin to name all 11 members of the ORT board. Immediately, the Kremlin announced it would appoint Lesin, Putin's chief of staff Vladislav Surkov, and three other senior officials to the board. In short, ORT has now joined RTR as a wholly state-controlled television network."

Do you wish to comment on that?

- A. I don't understand what it is that I'm expected to comment. Whether it became a state channel from the point of view of share ownership? No, the director general remained the same. As for the board of directors, if I remember correctly, 11 government officials were meant to be appointed and then they changed their mind and they appointed other people, public figures. The most important thing is that the state had always held 51 per cent.
- Q. It may have held 51 per cent but what had always worried President Putin was that Mr Berezovsky had, in effect, exercised control over this channel, but I don't think I'm going round that one again.

Now, why did you not want to appoint directors to the board of ORT to protect your investment?

A. At some point we did appoint some directors. In order to appoint someone, you need to put a list of nominees beforehand to the AGM. But to be quite honest I did not take part in any management matters and I said straightaway, and I repeat again, that this investment in terms of business was not of any to me at all. Doing this, I was saving my other business and I was helping Mr Berezovsky and Badri. ORT's shares themselves were of no interest to me at all and I never planned to acquire them.

Q. Can I ask you, please, to go to bundle H(A)29 at page 33 H(A)29/33. This is a report in the Moscow Times of 6 February 2001 and it refers to the fact that you had acquired the 49 per cent stake in ORT. There is a quote from someone saying that:

"'Roughly speaking... [you had] paid off Berezovsky on behalf of the Kremlin,' said the source close to Abramovich."

And then it has this halfway down:

"Last week, the government announced plans to nominate all 11 members of ORT's board. Interfax reported that Berezovsky's representatives -- including his long time proxy at ORT, Badri Patarkatsishvili, daughter Yekaterina and favourite anchor Sergei Dorenko -- will be replaced by Deputy Prime Minister Valentina Matviyenko, Press Minister Mikhail Lesin, Culture Minister Mikhail Shvydkoi and President Vladimir Putin's deputy chief of staff, Vladislav Surkov."

That is an accurate report, is it not, as to what the government had announced?

A. I've already said at some point the government did indeed plan to appoint 11 of the 11 possible members of the board, but later they gave up that plan.

Q. Now, I want to leave ORT behind.

Mr Berezovsky says that after you had met in Cap d'Antibes in December 2000, he never spoke to you again until he served this claim on you. You're aware of that, I think?

A. Yes.

Q. You claim that there was a further meeting in Megeve in France on about 10 January 2001 where you met with Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili; is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, can we please just look at how your pleaded case has changed over time. Can you please take up bundle A1 and go to tab 3, page 57 in the English A1/03/57 and in the Russian it's at page 61R A1/03/61R. I want to look at paragraph D45.2, if I may.

Now, you'll see that there are some crossing-outs and changings, and I can tell you that these were changes which were made in August of this year, so just shortly before the trial, and they reflected what you had said for the first time in your witness statement in May. Okay? So what is added are the underlined words and then it crosses out the parts that are not wanted.

Can you just look at paragraph 45.2. I want to just read it ignoring the additions and just including the words that were deleted, so that we can see what your case was until very recently. What you had been saying was this:

"It is, however, admitted that, at a meeting which, to the best of the Defendant's recollection, was at St Moritz Airport in January or February 2001 and prior to the meeting at Munich Airport referred to in paragraph D46 below, Mr Patarkatsishvili requested the defendant to pay Mr Berezovsky US$1.3 billion."

Okay? And that wording --

THE INTERPRETER: Excuse me, sir, the interpreter apologises: we did not have the text on Magnum, we could not interpret at that rate. So if you would like the witness to hear it, please say it again slowly.

MR RABINOWITZ: I don't think that's necessary because Mr Abramovich has got his own Russian version in front of him.

A. I beg your pardon.

MR RABINOWITZ: Thank you.

And so that was the wording that was first in your defence and that was so from June 2008. The meeting, as you see, that you refer to is a single meeting in January or February 2001; do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. And it was a meeting that you say was attended by Mr Patarkatsishvili and you make no reference to Mr Berezovsky at all being at this meeting; do you see that?

A. That's what I remembered.

Q. And it was also a meeting at which, so you had pleaded, Mr Patarkatsishvili had asked for $1.3 billion; do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. And if what you were saying here was true, one would expect that this would have been a very clear recollection given the unique circumstances, even for you, of someone asking you for over $1 billion. Would you accept that?

A. Yes, that's quite unique, I agree. The question is what it is that I was meant to remember. I remember that we had a meeting, I remember more or less what we talked about, but the details I did not remember.

Q. Now, since May 2011 you in fact tell a very different story. You now say that your recollection is that in early January 2001 Mr Patarkatsishvili contacted you and asked you to meet, and you say you then met first in Courchevel on about 4 or 5 January 2001; is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. And you say that at this first meeting Mr Patarkatsishvili had proposed to end his and Mr Berezovsky's relationship with you with regard to Sibneft; that's right, isn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. And the proposal, you now say, had been that in return you would make what you describe as "one final huge payment" to Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Berezovsky; is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. And this conversation, on your evidence, would have been a very memorable conversation because it was at a time when you say you had been struggling with how you were going to deal with the increasingly unreasonable demands being made by Mr Berezovsky directly and via Mr Patarkatsishvili; is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. And so, as far as you were concerned then, this demand for a huge payment would have been another demand from

Mr Berezovsky, even if it was Mr Patarkatsishvili who passed the demand on to you?

A. I didn't understand the question, "It would have been", et cetera.

Q. You say at the time of the meeting you were struggling with how you were going to deal with increasingly unreasonable demands being made by Mr Berezovsky, directly and via Mr Patarkatsishvili, for money; yes?

A. I don't understand, I was struggling.

MR RABINOWITZ: This is your evidence. If you go to --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Why don't you take him to his witness statements?

MR RABINOWITZ: Paragraph 269 of your third witness statement: E1, tab 3, it's at page 218 of the Russian E1/03/218 and 116 of the English E1/03/116.

So you say you were struggling with --

A. 269?

Q. 269.

A. Here I'm saying that it was difficult for me to understand what to do with unreasonably growing requirements. I'm not saying I didn't know how I would pay them.

Q. I wasn't suggesting that you were saying that.

You had these increasing demands from Mr Berezovsky; it was troubling you that he was making these increasing demands. This is your evidence; yes?

A. Yes.

Q. And here you have Mr Patarkatsishvili coming along in January and asking for yet another huge payment; is that right?

A. Yes. Rather he said, "We need to sever our relationship and to finalise this. I would suggest you pay one last amount and that will be it". I'm not insisting that it had to be paid off as a lump sum. But he said, "Look, to finish our relationship you should pay a lot and that will be it then".

Q. Now, whereas previously you had said there's only one meeting, you now say there's a second meeting at Megeve in France; that's right, isn't it?

A. Yes. At the time when I was giving evidence to Paul Mitchard, I did not remember that there were two meetings then. Most importantly, the first meeting was not as important compared to the second, so they kind of merged into one in my memory.

Q. Yes. The second meeting you refer to is at paragraph 267 of your statement E1/03/116.

Do you see there's one other important change, Mr Abramovich, and that is that you now claim that Mr Berezovsky was also present at this meeting, don't you?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: What, the meeting --

A. Yes, I do claim.

MR RABINOWITZ: In Megeve.

A. Yes.

Q. So it's not just a question of your saying, "Well, there were two meetings and in my mind it had merged into one". Not only have you gone from one to two meetings but whereas previously you hadn't suggested that Mr Berezovsky was at these meetings, in your evidence since May this year you are now suggesting that Mr Berezovsky was also there. That's right, isn't it?

A. Yes, I maintain that Berezovsky was there too.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: At both the meeting in Courchevel and at Megeve?

A. No, just at the meeting in Megeve.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I see. Thank you.

MR RABINOWITZ: And this recollection is really just another example of reconstruction by you, is it not?

A. Some parts are reconstruction. Some parts are what I recalled, remembered.

Q. You tell us that your personal assistant reminded you that you went to Megeve; that's right, isn't it?

A. Yes, you could say so. But I saw that from the documents as well.

Q. Well, from the documents that would plainly be a reconstruction. But we have not only your looking at the documents but Mr Sponring, your personal assistant, telling you that you were there. But you have no recollection at all of this meeting, being in Megeve?

- A. From the very first day, when there was a half-day's interrogation, I explained there was a meeting in the Alps but I didn't remember the place. I remembered that I visited that place once and never went back there, and I also remember that Badri was spelling his holiday there. And what I had in my head was are the following: as far as I knew, Badri didn't ski; he often walked with a stick, in fact. So it must have been some kind of place -- as I envisaged it, as I imagined it, it must have been a luxury place, a chic place, where it is not necessary to just ski; where you can simply have a good time in the winter.

And I also know that I've never been to St Moritz.

So I decided perhaps it must have been St Moritz.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: And in fact it was Megeve?

MR SUMPTION: I wonder if the translation may have gone wrong in that last --

- A. In fact it turned out to be Megeve.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Abramovich, according to paragraph 267 of your statement, you met Mr Patarkatsishvili first in Courchevel.

A. Yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: And you were staying in the same hotel there, were you?

A. No. He flew in to meet me -- perhaps he had other business, I don't know -- but he came to Courchevel to talk to me and we agreed, as I now know, that we will meet in Megeve. At that time I thought it was somewhere else, so initially I thought it was just one meeting.

The meeting in Courchevel actually did not stick in my memory. I thought that we'd only met in St Moritz but then gradually I reconstructed this meeting on the basis of the documents, on the basis of my own memories and on the basis of what Mr Sponring remembered.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So he flew in to your hotel in Courchevel, you say, for the purposes of having a meeting with you; is that right?

A. I didn't stay at a hotel at that time. We were renting a villa. We met in a hotel. If I remember, it was a Byblos hotel, if I remember correctly. We just met there.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you.

Yes, Mr Rabinowitz.

MR RABINOWITZ: Now, Mr Sponring is your personal assistant, isn't he?

A. Yes.

- Q. And at the time he was your private personal live-in chef; is that right?
- A. Yes. Yes, if we understand the word "live-in" correctly.
- Q. I'm sure there's no misunderstanding about that, Mr Abramovich. But you say he was --
- A. No, no, I mean he didn't always live in our house.
- Q. Right. He didn't live in your house but in effect he, what, cooked for you in your home; is that it?
- A. Yes.
- Q. But you say he was with you at Megeve?
- A. Yes. If I remember correctly, he did not spend his nights in the house where we were living, if I remember correctly. Well, in Courchevel he didn't stay the night in the house where we were living, answering your previous question; and in Megeve, yes, he was with us.
- Q. The impression you give in your evidence is that you had entirely forgotten about this meeting in Megeve until Mr Sponring reminded you of it. Is that right?
- A. Not quite right. I remembered there was a meeting, I already explained that I remembered there was a meeting in the Alps, I remembered what it looked like, I remembered that we came by helicopter, I remembered the snow-covered helipad, but I didn't remember the location. And I forgot that Mr Berezovsky was there too, I did indeed forget that.

Q. As for the contents of the Megeve meeting, you say that this was not a meeting like Le Bourget, where you had prepared a document with numbers on it to discuss; you were having a high-level meeting to discuss the principle of a pay-out. That's your evidence, isn't it?

A. High-level meeting and that we discussed the principles of the pay-out. Now, the level was exactly the same as in Le Bourget, so here the level hasn't changed if that's what we're comparing.

Q. So you don't say, for example, that there was any discussion about the $1.3 billion figure for payment at all at this meeting?

A. Whether we were discussing 1.3 billion, I don't remember that. I'm not maintaining that. I think -- I think 1.5 was the figure I was suggested but I don't remember exactly when that took place.

Q. You see, if you look at your defence, what you had pleaded was that at this meeting Mr Patarkatsishvili requested you to pay Mr Berezovsky $1.3 billion.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Paragraph?

MR RABINOWITZ: Paragraph D45.2 A1/03/57. You can pick it up in the new pleading. Perhaps it's easier to read at K4. You can read it in D45.2. Do you see -- you need to ignore everything in blue:

"... prior to the meeting... Mr Patarkatsishvili requested the Defendant to pay Mr Berezovsky US$1.3 billion."

- A. Yes, I can see that, and there is a reference, "as much as the Defendant can remember". This is what I remembered at the time. Naturally, in my further statements and my further evidence on the basis of documents, on the basis of sitting there, trying to remember, discussing it with other people, I reconstructed this somehow in my memory and naturally my next witness statement was more detailed than what I could remember when I was interviewed for the first time.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Did you go to Megeve specifically for the purpose of meeting Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Berezovsky at the heliport or were you staying there for a holiday?

- A. I went to Megeve from Courchevel. We flew by helicopter from Courchevel to Megeve, talked at the helipad, and from there I went straight to the airport in Geneva. So this was -- I went there for the purpose of the meeting.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I see.

MR RABINOWITZ: Now, you say in your evidence -- this is at paragraph 271 E1/03/117 -- that you don't recall Mr Berezovsky saying anything at this meeting you say he was at. Do you say then it was a meeting at which just the two of you, Mr Patarkatsishvili and yourself, talked a lot about details?

A. No, I don't assert that just the two of us were talking; mainly the two of us were talking. In terms of potential payment, the two of us talked. I'm not asserting that Mr Berezovsky was silent throughout; I just thought that for the purposes of these proceedings he didn't say anything. Of course I remember a little bit of what we discussed, but let me assure you: it has nothing to do with what we're discussing here. Just personal things.

Q. You actually --

A. I haven't finished yet, I'm sorry.

Q. Sorry, carry on.

A. Now, it looks, of course, a bit bizarre: three adults meet, the two of them are talking, the third one is silent. But if you look at the Le Bourget transcript, Berezovsky doesn't say much there either, although we were sitting there for two hours talking.

Q. Mr Abramovich, in fact what you say in your witness statement at paragraph 271 is that you do not recall Mr Berezovsky saying anything. Are you now trying to change that evidence?

A. I'm just trying to say that I don't remember

Mr Berezovsky saying anything that may be of relevance for these proceedings. I'm not saying that he was silent throughout.

Q. Because having Mr Berezovsky sitting silently throughout anything would be wholly out of character, wouldn't it?

A. Well, you can make your own conclusions about his character but if we look at the Le Bourget transcript, he -- now, if I hadn't read that, if I hadn't read the transcript in detail, I would have just remembered my own discussion with Badri; I wouldn't even have remembered that Mr Berezovsky was saying anything or discussing anything and at this meeting at Megeve it was like that.

What I remembered or what I might have remembered is what I talked about with Badri because Badri was leading in the meeting. But I can assure you Mr Berezovsky did not keep quiet; it's just that it was not relevant to these proceedings and to what we're discussing now.

Q. Mr Abramovich, the suggestion that you can draw a comparison with Le Bourget, I would suggest, is completely false. Mr Berezovsky was only quiet during discussions of matters of detail or the structuring of the proposed ORT transaction. Other than that, he, certainly made himself heard.

Do you want to comment on that?

A. Well, I don't know whether there is any point. It's not up to me whether there is any point to discuss this, but if you count the number of characters, how many were uttered by Berezovsky, by Badri, and how many were uttered by Berezovsky on the substance, then it can be discounted. In my point of view, I'm not insisting, but I think that's...

He didn't say anything significant that I would remember, any contribution that he would have made that I would have remembered. I really can't remember. And again, I'm just discussing any replicas by him that would have been relevant to these proceedings.

Q. In your description of the Megeve meeting you make no reference at all to any discussion about Nikolai Glushkov; that's right, isn't it?

A. That's right, I'm not mentioning Nikolai Glushkov. And why should I make a reference to Mr Glushkov every time?

Q. You see, on your case this was the very first time you had met Mr Berezovsky after the arrest of Mr Glushkov, isn't it?

A. Yes. That doesn't at all mean that each meeting with Mr Berezovsky started or ended with our discussing the arrest of Mr Glushkov.

Q. Mr Abramovich, it doesn't need to start or end with your discussing Mr Glushkov. Your evidence has it that Mr Glushkov and the subject of his imprisonment was not even mentioned.

A. Indeed, I don't remember us discussing Mr Glushkov. It might have happened, but I don't remember it.

Q. If it had happened and you did remember it, you would surely have put it in here because you wouldn't suggest that the imprisonment of Mr Glushkov is a matter of irrelevance to this dispute, would you?

A. Sorry, I didn't get it. To which proceedings, to which process? To the cost -- to the price of Sibneft potentially? Which process? Which proceedings? I have lost your thought of what we're discussing here today. What are we talking about? Do it again.

Q. Mr Abramovich, Mr Glushkov and his imprisonment form a central part of the facts relating to this dispute; you wouldn't dispute that, would you?

A. I don't dispute that. I have a different idea of what is the central part of this case; but no, I don't contest it.

Q. Earlier in an answer you explained that all you were seeking to put into your witness statement were facts which were relevant to the issues in this dispute. Correct? Do you remember that?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. If it was therefore your evidence that Mr Glushkov and his imprisonment was a subject that had come up at this meeting, that is something that you would surely have included in your description of what was discussed at this meeting?

A. If I'd remembered, I would of course have included that. Why would I conceal the fact that we discussed the fate of Mr Glushkov? I just don't remember it.

Q. You see, I suggest to you that if there really was this meeting, one of the things that Mr Berezovsky would plainly have wanted to discuss with you, even on your case, would have been the fact that Mr Glushkov had been imprisoned; but you make no mention of that having been discussed at all.

A. First of all, I don't remember it; and secondly, if I remember correctly, at some point I described that Badri had handed over a letter to me, maybe for me to give to Voloshin. If I remember correctly, Mr Voronoff, who was with Mr Berezovsky for a long time in Aspen, also says that they did not discuss Mr Glushkov much.

I would imagine that at that time Mr Berezovsky, notwithstanding the fact that he is disposed very well towards Mr Glushkov, he didn't start every meeting with discussing Mr Glushkov and his fate with any interlocutor he might have.

Q. You say at this meeting that Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili asked for some amount in excess of $1 billion to be paid to them and that this -- well, let's just take this in stages or you'll -- I should break the question down.

You say at this meeting Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili asked for some amount in excess of $1 billion to be paid to them; that's right, isn't it?

A. Given the fact that we had a series of meetings, I don't remember what we discussed at which point exactly, but I -- from what I managed to remember, I understand that I left with the feeling that I would have to pay at least a billion and I think they had been left with the same feeling.

Q. Now, that would be an amount more than you had paid them in all the previous five years combined, would it not?

A. Yes, indeed. No doubt.

Q. It would be something like double everything that you had paid them, in your case, in the previous five years.

A. Well, if your task here is not to test my mental arithmetic ability, then perhaps I might say it's a bit greater. But we can sit down and calculate it if you wish.

Q. What I suggest to you, Mr Abramovich, is that if this meeting happened, it would have been a most memorable meeting. But your recollection, as we've seen and heard, is remarkably indistinct, isn't it?

A. The question that my memory is indistinct; is that what I need to confirm? I have to judge myself that I have this indistinct recollection?

Q. Well, do you disagree with that?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: What's being put to you, Mr Abramovich, is that this was a very significant meeting, if you're right, and surely if you were being asked to pay this huge sum, you'd remember the details of the Megeve meeting more clearly.

Can you comment on that, please?

A. It's hard for me to comment. But I could have remembered it better, but I told you everything I remember on that matter.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: How long was the meeting with Mr Patarkatsishvili in Courchevel when you say he first raised the question of this payment?

A. In Courchevel I think the meeting was not long at all, 20/30 minutes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: What, you met in the hotel bar or something like that?

A. I think we met in the lobby. Well, it's a lobby and a bar all in one.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you.

MR RABINOWITZ: How long do you say this meeting was, Megeve?

A. Well, I don't know; 40 minutes, an hour perhaps, something like that.

Q. But again, you don't have any clear recollection of the length of the meeting either?

A. Well, I can't tell you exactly how long it was.

(Mobile phone rings)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mobile phones are not to be switched on in court.

MR RABINOWITZ: You see, Mr Abramovich, I have to suggest to you that your account of this meeting is just not credible. Do you want to comment on that?

A. I told you everything I remember on the matter. It's difficult for me to say whether it's credible or not.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, that's a matter for me at the end of the day.

MR RABINOWITZ: My Lady, I don't know whether this is a convenient moment for you.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, very well. I'll take ten minutes.

(3.20 pm)

(A short break)

(3.37 pm)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, Mr Rabinowitz.

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Abramovich, I just want to summarise where we have got to on meetings in late 2000 and early 2001.

We all agree that you met with Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Berezovsky at Le Bourget Airport on 6 December 2000; that's right, isn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. And this was, you say, a candid and amiable meeting?

A. For the most part, yes. I had a strange feeling, but overall, yes. Badri usually asking detailed questions, so he would not usually do that in peaceful times, so to speak. But overall, yes.

Q. That's your evidence, in fact. If you go to bundle E5, tab 11, paragraph 98, page 42 in the English E5/11/42 and 117 in the Russian E5/11/117, that is what you say about it. You say:

"Looked at as a whole, the transcript... supports [your] recollection that it was a candid and amiable meeting."

Do you see the second line?

(Mobile phone rings)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Is that the phone that went off before? Is it the phone that went off before? If any phone goes off again, the person whose phone it is will be asked to leave the court.

Yes, continue, Mr Rabinowitz.

MR RABINOWITZ: So you have the meeting at Le Bourget, which is a candid and amiable meeting. Then we say that you met with Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili a little later, but still in December 2000, but you deny that.

(Mobile phone rings)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Could you leave the court, please. Somebody's phone just went off: could they please leave the court. If it was your phone, madam, could you please leave the court.

MEMBER OF THE PUBLIC: It wasn't my phone.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, whose phone was it? Could you leave the court, please. Thank you. Yes, could you just leave the court, please.

That's three times now a phone has gone off this afternoon. It just wastes everybody's time. Thank you very much.

MR RABINOWITZ: So again, Mr Abramovich, you have the meeting on 6 December, which was a candid and amiable meeting. Then we say that you met Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili a little later, but still in early December 2000, but you deny that; that's right, isn't it?

A. Yes. If I don't have to comment point -- paragraph 98, then yes. I discuss this in more detail in other witness statements. But for the main part, yes.

Q. And of course we say that at the end of the Cap d'Antibes meeting, Mr Berezovsky had made clear that he never wanted to see you again; but again you deny that?

A. I deny this because I don't recall -- I don't remember that meeting.

Q. So, on your case, this difficult meeting never happened; that's right, isn't it?

THE INTERPRETER: I do apologise, the interpreter apologises, I think the witness said, "because that meeting didn't happen".

A. There was no meeting in December.

MR RABINOWITZ: And so you never, on your case, had a difficult meeting with Mr Berezovsky at this time; is that right? In early December.

A. I assert that there was no meeting in December at all, such difficult or that type of meeting.

Q. But you say that you then met Mr Berezovsky again in Megeve in early January 2001 -- we've talked about this -- and this was, you say, the first time the two of you had met since Le Bourget, which was, as we've seen, a cordial meeting; is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. And according to --

A. I -- sorry, I've missed -- whose assertion was it that the meeting was cordial?

Q. Le Bourget I think people agree was a cordial meeting.

A. Mm-hm.

Q. According to you, the meeting that you say happened at Megeve in early January 2000 was also a cordial meeting. You can see that if you look at paragraph 105 of your fourth witness statement: bundle E5, tab 11, page 45 E5/11/45, in the Russian at page 120 E5/11/120. The second last line, paragraph 105.

A. (Untranslated)

Q. Something may have gone wrong; I'm not sure your answer was translated there.

THE INTERPRETER: Sorry, the witness said, "I've missed the paragraph number".

MR RABINOWITZ: Sorry. We're looking at paragraph --

THE INTERPRETER: If I've heard correctly.

MR RABINOWITZ: It's paragraph 105 of your fourth witness statement, so E5, in the Russian it's at page 120, I believe.

A. I have read this, yes.

Q. And so the meeting at Megeve you say was a cordial meeting. And if you look at paragraph 273 of your third witness statement, so that's back to E1, tab 3, in the English it's at page 117 E1/03/117 and in the Russian at page 219 E1/03/219, in the last line of that you say:

"We left on very amicable terms."

Do you see that?

A. I see. Does it contradict?

Q. No, it's a similar way of saying it was a cordial meeting. I'm not suggesting those two are in contradistinction.

A. Sorry, the intonation in your question was that I've said something not quite right. So I didn't understand what the question was about.

Q. Well, I do suggest -- well, let me ask you the question.

You see, you accept that since these meetings, which you say were all cordial, since this time you have never again met up with or spoken to Mr Berezovsky, apart from one occasion where you say you exchanged a couple of words, where you bumped into each other in Israel.

That's your evidence, isn't it?

A. From what I can recall, yes.

Q. It's right, isn't it, that while you had been invited to all of Mr Berezovsky's parties since 1996, you were not invited to Mr Berezovsky's party at the end of January 2001?

A. I think not. Or maybe; I just simply do not recall.
May I add, please?

Q. Well, can I ask a question, please.

Mr Abramovich, can you explain then why, if, as you say, you have these amiable meetings with Mr Berezovsky at this time, why there was the sudden ending of your relationship with Mr Berezovsky?

A. Is that a question how do we treat the friendship? How close this friendship is? We've never discussed this. Mr Berezovsky was at some of my birthday parties. When I was invited, I was attending; and again, that wasn't every time. But from what I can recall, in 2001 indeed I didn't attend Mr Berezovsky's birthday party. And the important thing: that in the circumstances and in the position that he's taken, I think even if he would have invited me, I probably would have not gone.

Q. Mr Abramovich, we have seen from your evidence that you say you were concerned about Mr Berezovsky and what was happening in relation to ORT, so that you were willing to fly over to talk to him about getting rid of ORT. You say everyone knew you were very close; President Putin knew you were very close. But after these two meetings, both of which you say were cordial, you have never had anything to do with Mr Berezovsky, save that on one occasion you bumped into each other in Israel, in a hotel lobby.

Are you able to offer any explanation as to why you and Mr Berezovsky broke off your relationship after December 2000?

- A. I beg your pardon, the question was very long and that was at speed. I simply cannot -- I can't keep up with either remembering it or answering it. There was something --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Let me put the question, Mr Abramovich.

What is being asked of you is: why, if you had friendly meetings with Mr Berezovsky at Le Bourget and then at Megeve, why suddenly does your relationship break up and you never see each other again until the meeting in Israel, and then only accidentally? What is the explanation, if everything was so rosy in the garden at Megeve, for this break-up in your relationship?

- A. This is the question about the nature of our friendship. Our friendship was based on my pay-outs. That wasn't a friendship when -- as, for example, it's me, my friends, we are friends for many years and it doesn't matter for me what the position is, where they work; we simply are friends. And with Mr Berezovsky, our friendship was based on my pay-offs. Each time when he would invite me, obviously I would arrive, if I had such opportunity. But this word, the word "friendship" that we are discussing here, big friendship, strong friendship, friendship between men, this is not quite the same.

Moreover, after the situation with Kursk submarine, I started looking at Mr Berezovsky in a completely different way. For me it was a turning point in our relationship. I think that he took a completely dishonourable position. It was a large tragedy for Russia and people who were in the submarine, they were still alive, everyone knew they could not be rescued from there; everyone understood that. That was the horror in the country. And he used that, you know, to demonstrate to the president who is boss, who has to be listened to, whose recommendations have to be adhered to. And from that moment on, I started treating him somewhat differently.

So I cannot say that our friendship stopped or our relationship ceased at a single point in time, that something was just switched off; it's not so. There was a gradual transition. Then with Badri I kept some relationship, I maintained relationship for a long time after this, and Badri was my main contact. So I think that would be all.

Moreover, if I may add, he broke off not just with me; he broke off, he stopped communicating not just with me, all people that communicated to him at that point, and Mr Yumashev and his big friend Mikhail Denisov and all, everyone who we started with together, they all stopped communicating with him, socialising with him.

Q. Mr Abramovich, I'm not going to get into the question of your friendship again because we went through that on the first day of your evidence.

But on your evidence you had incredibly generously agreed that you would be paying Mr Berezovsky a sum or a half-sum of over $1 billion. Why do you say Mr Berezovsky would never have invited you again to a party after this point in time?

A. Sorry, I don't understand the question: why he did not invite me or why did I pay that money? How does it fit together?

Q. Why did he not invite you? You see, on your evidence, Mr Berezovsky should have been very grateful to you; but you accept that you were not invited by Mr Berezovsky at any time thereafter to his birthday parties and indeed he had nothing to do with you.

Are you able to offer an explanation as to why that would have happened if, as you say, you had only had cordial meetings which ended in you agreeing to pay him a great deal of money?

A. Unfortunately I still do not understand the question. You're asking me about Mr Berezovsky and I have to explain why Mr Berezovsky didn't invite me to his party, to his birthday party. And most importantly I don't understand the gist of the question because the question is not to me: why did he not invite me? I have explained my attitude to this and he explained his attitude to this and I don't know what I should add.

Moreover, I don't remember very well that I've been to many of his birthday parties. Perhaps I've been to two parties out of our joint parties over five, six, seven years. But to say that I was a regular fixture at his birthday parties, I cannot say that. Moreover, I don't remember that he was attending my birthday parties, if it helps in any way to clear the situation.

Our friendship was quite specific, it was a sort of a one-sided friendship, although we did indeed socialise a lot and it was very interesting for me.

- Q. And you went on holiday around eight times in about three years with your families; that's right, isn't it? We saw that on the first day of your evidence.
- A. Yes, certainly we went on holidays together, our wives were friends. And most importantly, talking about my wife, even people that I'm not necessarily friends with, if my wife is friends with, if our children communicated, were friends together, then we would still go on holiday together. I can't say that we didn't communicate. We had a good relationship.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Did you go on holiday with Mr Berezovsky's family in the summer of 2000?

A. I don't recall it. That could be, but I don't recall it.

MR RABINOWITZ: Ms Gorbunova gives evidence that you were in the same place on holiday and that you saw each other in the summer of 2000.

A. From what I can recall, during the interrogation a couple of days ago you said that I arrived to say that Mr Putin is concerned about what happened with Kursk submarine, the way it was presented in the media. But I didn't hear -- or maybe I just missed -- that I was on holiday together with them that summer. I doubt it very much, although I cannot assert it for sure.

The thing is that in Russia the vacation finishes in August and, as far as I recall, then the submarine has sunk on 9 or 12 August. So it would be very unlikely that we would have gone on holiday in September.

Q. You see, Mr Abramovich, I suggest to you that, as with your denial of the Cap d'Antibes meeting, your account of the Megeve meeting is simply untrue.

You did not meet with Mr Berezovsky in Megeve, did you?

A. To be honest, I didn't catch the connection between vacation, Cap d'Antibes and Megeve. Maybe the interpretation was incorrect. Maybe we didn't finish with discussing the friendship or the vacation?

- Q. Let me tell you what the connection is then, Mr Abramovich. You see, Mr Berezovsky's case is that the last time you met was a very angry meeting in Cap d'Antibes in which he told you that he never wanted to see you again. Now, that fits in with what happened thereafter: that you never did see him again, except for this occasion in Israel.

Your evidence, however, is that you had a cordial, amiable meeting in Megeve in January 2001; but notwithstanding that, you never saw each other again except for this occasion in Israel. And I'm suggesting to you that it is clear from what happened afterwards that Mr Berezovsky's evidence as to when you last met is correct and that your evidence as to when you last met is false.

- A. I disagree with you. Do I need to comment or not?

Q. Not if you don't want to.

- A. I think that our friendship was quite specific, has a specific element, although it did exist: our relationships were based on pay-outs. So at that point when we agreed the final pay-out, I think the interest in me was gone. Therefore I don't know what else I could add on that matter.

Q. I want to turn to the question of the intimidation of Mr Berezovsky in 2001 but what I want to do first, by way of background, is to just go back in time for a moment to the circumstances surrounding the arrest of Mr Gusinsky in June 2001.

Now, Mr Gusinsky was in 2001 chairman of the board and majority --

MR SUMPTION: Does my learned friend mean 2000?

MR RABINOWITZ: 2000, sorry. Absolutely. I apologise.

I do mean 2000.

Mr Gusinsky was in 2000 chairman of the board and majority shareholder of Media Most, which owned NTV, a popular independent television channel in Russia; that's right, isn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. And in June 2000 Mr Gusinsky was arrested and criminal charges were brought against him; do you recall that?

A. I do not recall the date, but that was the story.

Q. And you will be aware, I think, that the European Court of Human Rights later -- that was in May 2004 -- concluded that there were facts that strongly indicated that during the course of his detention Mr Gusinsky had been subject to intimidation directed to getting him to dispose of his interests in Media Most. You're aware of that?

- A. Yes, I've heard about this.
- Q. And you will also be aware, I think, that Mr Lesin, who was at the time the acting minister for press and mass communications, was implicated in this suggested intimidation?
- A. Do I need to confirm this or what I've heard about it? What do I have to say? I really don't know what was happening there.
- Q. You can take it from me that Mr Lesin was involved. Do you have no recollection of that?
- A. I recall that there was a story with Gusinsky but with regard to detail, what followed what, I do not recall that exactly. Yes, I remember there was some story.
- Q. And Mr Lesin, who was involved, the minister, later became a board member of ORT; that's right, isn't it?
- A. Yes, possibly.
- Q. And what happened with Mr Gusinsky was that he was persuaded to sell his interests at a price determined by Gazprom, a State-owned company, in return for which it was agreed that all criminal charges that had been brought against him would be dropped; that's right, isn't it?
- A. From what I recall, this is right. The thing is, maybe I can start -- say a couple of words from memory, if I may, about the story.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, go on.

A. Mr Gusinsky financed his company using Gazprom's money and I think that his debt was about $600 million from various structural divisions of Gazprom, and at some point in time the market dropped and he couldn't return the debts. And this somehow was used and Lesin indeed had some bearing on that, had some relation; I don't know the details.

And then Mr Berezovsky spoke in the press and said that since NTV takes an anti-government stance and is financed by the government money, then this cannot be done because, he said, if I recall his interview correctly, the government would not allow to use its own money at the same time to fight the government. And initially he was siding, so to speak, with the government and then he changed his position.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Go on, Mr Rabinowitz.

MR RABINOWITZ: For your Ladyship's note, the facts of Gusinsky's arrest and detention are a matter of public record. The ECHR report is in the authorities bundle at O2, tab 8.109 O2/8.109/1.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: Now, I'm not going to ask you to comment on the detail of the case, Mr Abramovich, but do you accept that already by late 2000 the facts of the case were widely known in Russia?

- A. Yes, I do. I don't know how detailed that was, but it was known.
- Q. And that included it being widely known that Mr Gusinsky had been persuaded to sign an agreement handing over Media Most in return for the criminal charges against him being dropped; that's right, isn't it?
- A. Yes, it is right.
- Q. And I suggest, Mr Abramovich, that if someone with close ties to the Kremlin had threatened another businessman at this time that state officials might be persuaded to use criminal proceedings for some illegitimate purpose, that would be a credible threat, would it not?
- A. I do apologise, could you please put the question again? That was -- I didn't quite follow what it was about. Was there a credible threat? Are we talking about Gusinsky or Mr Berezovsky or myself?
- Q. In light of what had happened with Mr Gusinsky and Media Most, if someone with close ties to the Kremlin had threatened another businessman at this time that state officials might be persuaded to use criminal proceedings for some illegitimate purpose, that would be a credible threat, would it not?
- A. I still cannot understand what you are trying to assert. At what point do we have the Kremlin officials, state officials, they have to be convinced? I understand -- I understand that Gusinsky had problems. Yes, parallels could be drawn that Berezovsky could have similar problems. But at what point in time do we have state officials that could have been used?

Q. Given what had happened to Mr Gusinsky, if someone like yourself had said to another businessman, "If you don't sell your interests in a company at a reduced price, I will have you or a friend of yours imprisoned until such time as you agree to sell on the terms that I want to acquire", that would have been something that the person to whom it was being said could have believed to be true?

A. To be honest, I doubt it, but what can I say? You know -- if I may comment, please?

Q. Go ahead.

A. The story that I could have threatened Mr Berezovsky, this is not just false; this is concentrated falsehood that you could sell in pharmacies. This is a sample to be shown to students at university what is falsehood, what is a lie, that I was threatening Mr Berezovsky.

Q. Mr Abramovich, can I ask you, please, to go to bundle H(A)25 at page 162.001 in the Russian H(A)25/162.001 and at 162.001T in the English H(A)25/162.001T.

Now, again, just so you know what this is, it's a transcript of a radio interview with Mr Berezovsky which, if you look at the bottom of the page, you will see took place on Ekho Moskvyy on 7 December 2000. Do you see that?

A. I do apologise, it's impossible to understand anything in the Russian copy. If I may, I will try to hear it, if you read it out to me.

Q. All right. Can I first just ask you this: you would have learnt of this interview fairly shortly after it was given, would you not have, given that you had an interest in acquiring ORT?

A. To be honest, this business press, this press organ, I've never seen it, I've never heard of it. And then it's such a small print I can't even read the letters. Is it possible to bring it out on the screen?

Q. It is on the screen.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, the English is on screen.

MR RABINOWITZ: Perhaps it can be brought on the screen in Russian.

MAGNUM OPERATOR: I could give him the iPad.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, why don't you give him the iPad.

(Handed)

THE WITNESS: Thank you.

MR RABINOWITZ: Just perhaps to assist you as you try to make out the small print, what the presenter begins by saying is that:

"There has been a new turn of events in the so-called 'AEROFLOT case'. Nikolai GLUSHKOV, the former first deputy general director of AEROFLOT, was taken into custody and placed in the LEFORTOVO pre-trial detention centre. The Prosecutor General's Office has confirmed that new charges have been filed against him. That is why, upon arriving at the Prosecutor's Office for routine questioning today, GLUSHKOV was promptly arrested. Sources at the Prosecutor's Office point out that new evidence of his guilt has recently surfaced, including documents provided by their Swiss colleagues. It is interesting that a similar charge was brought only yesterday against another person in the AEROFLOT case, Aleksandr Krasnenker. He is the company's former... director. When asked by ITAR-TASS why KRASNENKER was not arrested, his lawyer replied: 'They probably forgot'. According to the lawyer, Boris KUZNETSOV, the new charges are related to credit agreements between AEROFLOT and the companies ANDAVA and FORUS which date back to 1996. We are now trying to get well-known businessman Boris Berezovsky, who served as a witness in the AEROFLOT case, on the line, and if we manage to get through to him we will return to this topic."

So one sees, just pausing there, Mr Abramovich, that unlike Mr Glushkov, Mr Krasnenker, who was a friend of yours, had not been arrested. Is that correct?

A. Krasnenker wasn't arrested. But he's also a friend of Mr Berezovsky and, if I can understand correctly, he's a friend of Mr Glushkov. He had to sign a recognisance not to leave and he was also often called to attend the General Prosecutor's Office, but he was not arrested.

Q. Now, do you see Mr Berezovsky's first response when asked to comment on the arrest of Mr Glushkov, which contains his assessment of the position? What he says, he says he's only just heard about Krasnenker and he'd heard about Glushkov earlier. He says:

"The actions against KRASNENKER are absolutely consistent with the authorities' actions. My assessment is as follows. This is pure blackmail. Blackmail against me. And it is blackmail in the best KGB tradition, so to speak. In other words, the president said that he would bash my head with a cudgel. The cudgel turned out to be too short; he cannot reach me here. So he started hitting people close to me. In other words, it is in the very worst tradition: blackmailing someone by putting pressure on their relatives, their associates, their friends."

Do you see that?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. And the "cudgel" reference, of course, is to President Putin's direct and public threat against Mr Berezovsky from late October which used that metaphor; you'll remember that we saw that yesterday or last week. Do you remember that?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. Now, I'm not going to ask you whether Mr Berezovsky was right to perceive the arrest of Mr Glushkov as an attack on Mr Berezovsky by the state, but you knew that this was what Mr Berezovsky believed was happening, didn't you?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. And you would accept that Mr Glushkov's prospects of being released were connected to Mr Berezovsky's political campaigning; that's right, isn't it?

A. The question was: do I agree that Glushkov's problems were related, connected to Berezovsky? If to -- bear in mind that they're somehow siphoning money out of Aeroflot, the company that they owned, and then they were taking that money, then in that sense, yes, the answer is yes.

Q. My question to you in fact, Mr Abramovich, as you probably know, was to ask whether you would accept that Mr Glushkov's prospects of being released were connected to Mr Berezovsky's political campaigning.

A. Yes, one can make that assumption. I think if Mr Berezovsky would stop publicly, if he would stop publicly put the blame on everyone, then surely Mr Glushkov's chances would increase. That was my feeling.

Q. And do you see, just looking at the fourth-from-last answer that Mr Berezovsky has given, that Mr Berezovsky also explained that he was concerned that other people should also not be made the target of attacks and because of that, he was abandoning his plan to transfer his shares to Teletrust?

Perhaps I can read it to you. Shall I read it?

It's the answer which --

A. If you could, please.

Q. You've got it? He says:

"You know, despite all the talk, all the speculation that I sold those shares, all 49% of those shares currently belong to me and my partner, Badra PATARKATSISHVILI, and in this situation I believe it makes absolutely no sense to struggle on against such risks -- not risks to me personally, but to my friends and family. Therefore I will decide within the next two..."

"Weeks", it says, but it should be "days" in the Russian.

"... what to do with these shares."

The English translation has a mistranslation in that it says "two weeks" but it should say "days".

A. Sorry, and what was the question?

Q. Well, I'd asked whether you'd seen it, but I've now read it to you.

And what this suggests is that on this day, the very day of Mr Glushkov's arrest, Mr Berezovsky appears to abandon what had been his Teletrust plan. Do you see that?

A. Yes, but I knew that that happened much earlier.

Teletrust, so to speak, died before it was born. And the Teletrust idea was to pass on 49 per cent and for the government to pass on their 51 per cent; and of course the government didn't plan to do it at all. And the initial idea was that both the government and Mr Berezovsky would finance that. And the statutory fund, if I recall, should have been contributed into by the cultural figures and the representatives of Russian culture and there was such an amount that they would never be able to pay that sum in.

So it was pure fiction, Teletrust; it was just a discussion topic. And the first meetings with those representatives for culture didn't go beyond the first point, didn't get very far.

- Q. Well, it is clear from this document that this is the point in time where Mr Berezovsky announced that he was abandoning it and that was the very day of Mr Glushkov's arrest.

What I suggest to you is that it is clear that his announcement of the fact that he was abandoning that plan was directly related to Mr Glushkov's arrest. That is clear, is it not?

- A. No, it's not clear because Mr Berezovsky lives in the media; he breathes its ether and he decides what he's interested in. It's only what's happening in the media. Importantly, every day he solves a different task. So if you would keep track of everything he is saying, you would never ever understand what is really happening. As he himself was telling here when he was giving his evidence, one day he was playing, next day he was telling the truth. And if to cite what he was saying to the media, there would be never ever any clarity.

Whether he was using the situation that formed around Mr Glushkov in order to announce this? Yes, he did. If you look at it in detail, it says the 9th; and in truth he announced, if I recall it correctly, on the 7th. Moreover, in the announcement, in the press release, it was said that he was giving an interview in Paris and at that point in time he was, as he said himself, in Antibes, Cap d'Antibes. There is a lot of confusion here.

So to base my opinion in the press releases, I wouldn't do that. I don't think it should be the main source. This is just my feeling.

Q. Mr Abramovich, before we leave this document, you say you have not seen this or you didn't hear about it before, but this is a document which comes from your own disclosure. Are you aware of that? It's not a document from Mr Berezovsky.

A. Delovaya Pressa documents, this is a newspaper or a magazine or internet site, I just never seen it before. Indeed, Mr Berezovsky did give that interview on the 7th at Moscow radio station. Indeed, it does say that the interview was given in Paris at some hotel and Mr Berezovsky was asserting that was done in Cap d'Antibes when he found out about the arrest of Mr Glushkov. That's why I'm saying it's very hard to rely on all this, although possible.

MR RABINOWITZ: My Lady, I don't know whether you were proposing to sit --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I wasn't going to sit beyond half past, so if that's a convenient moment.

MR RABINOWITZ: Your Ladyship is asking whether this is a convenient moment?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, is this a --

MR RABINOWITZ: It is.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well. I'll sit at 10.15 then tomorrow and you'll take into account the difficulties that may be around tomorrow as a result of the demonstration. Very well.

MR ROMAN ABRAMOVICH (continued) .....1

Thursday, 10 November 2011

(10.15 am)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, Mr Rabinowitz.

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Abramovich, at the end of yesterday I was asking you questions about the sale of the second tranche of 25 per cent of Rusal in 2004.

There was, in the context of the discussions relating to that sale, a discussion about there being a series of transactional documents that acknowledged that there were two beneficial owners of the 25 per cent stake in Rusal, but subsequently it was decided that the sale documentation would acknowledge that there was in fact only one beneficial owner of the 25 per cent stake in Rusal, namely Mr Patarkatsishvili.

Were you aware of that change in the transaction structure at the time, Mr Abramovich?

A. If the question is whether I had ever seen those documents: no, I didn't.

Q. Can I just take you to one document, just ask you about this: bundle H(A)76, page 51 in the Russian H(A)76/51 and 57 in the English H(A)76/57.

Now, we have here a draft letter which has come out of your disclosure and it was a letter which was sent

I think by email by Mr Streshinsky to Ms Khudyk on 17 June 2004. Can I ask you just to read it to yourself quickly, please. (Pause)

A. May I ask a question about this letter?

Q. Can I ask a question first.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, if he wants to identify what the document is -- are you asking what the document is?

Yes, can you explain what the document is?

MR RABINOWITZ: It appears to be a draft letter which was produced by someone on, I think, Mr Anisimov's side and sent to Ms Khudyk under an email dated 17 June 2004. In fact my questions relate to trying to get to the bottom of who, in a sense, was responsible for what is produced here.

Can I ask you this, Mr Abramovich: do you see that in the first line, the first sentence of the letter --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just a second. Wouldn't it be easier if we looked at the email so we know what this was an attachment to?

MR RABINOWITZ: If your Ladyship wants to go to -- in the English I think it's H(A)76, page 65 H(A)76/65.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I just think it might be fairer for the witness if he's --

MR RABINOWITZ: It's not going to help at all, my Lady, but I'll show your Ladyship.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: It's not? Right, well, let me just look.

MR RABINOWITZ: Page 65 in the English H(A)76/65 and page 23 H(A)76/23 -- I see, they're both in English. H(A)76, page 23 and page 65 give you two emails.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Page 65 and 23? So which one is it an attachment to?

MR RABINOWITZ: Well, it's going to be an attachment to one or the other. There were two letters drafted on 17 June and the email at page 23 is "CoalcoLetter17jun" and the email at 65 is "CoalcoLetter2-17jun". This is one or other and they're being sent by Mr Streshinsky to Ms Khudyk.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Okay. You see where they come from, Mr Abramovich, do you? Right, let's go back to the document then.

MR RABINOWITZ: So the document again was on page 51 in the Russian H(A)76/51 and 57 in the English H(A)76/57.

Do you see, Mr Abramovich, that it begins by saying:

"As discussed over the phone, in order to meet the representations that you previously made to the banks, please find... an alternative structure."

And this suggests that there had been a telephone conversation at this stage and that someone on your side of the transaction had said that because of representations previously made to banks, the structure of the transaction would have to change.

Can you assist as to who on your side of the transaction is likely to have been the person involved in the telephone conversation?

A. Well, if we bear in mind that this letter is from the -- perhaps Streshinsky, then most likely his contact was Natalia Khudyk, this is how I understand it now, or perhaps Irina Panchenko, but I can't be certain.

Q. So you think either Ms Khudyk or Ms Panchenko? Thank you very much for that.

A. Possibly. However, a letter like this, from my point of view, should have been addressed to the lawyers. It is formulated in a complicated manner. For a person without legal training, it's difficult to digest. It describes the deal in a very complex manner.

Q. The sentence we looked at also refers to "representations... previously made to the banks". Now, again, just so I know who to ask about this, who in your organisation would be likely to be the person making representations to banks about ownership interests in Rusal?

A. If we're talking about Rusal as a company, Rusal had its own management and those managers would have been explaining something to the banks. But I don't quite understand what organisation we're talking about when you're asking me about "in your organisation". And what kind of representations to banks? I don't quite understand which representations to banks. I really would like to try and answer your question but I don't quite understand what it is that you're asking me. What representations to banks?

Q. Well, let me be very clear then. This letter refers to "representations... previously made to... banks" and it appears to affect -- the representations made to the banks appear to have been about who owns the interest in Rusal or how those interests are held.

What I'm trying to understand from you is who in your group -- is it Ms Khudyk, Ms Panchenko, Mr Tenenbaum perhaps? -- who is the person who is most likely to have been making representations to banks -- if you don't know, then just say so -- about who owned the interests in Rusal?

A. I don't know.

Q. All right.

A. Moreover, I don't even know why the banks would wish to know and would need to know who held what shares and interests. I can't see the logic of any of this.

A company would negotiate with a bank regarding a loan.

I doubt that shareholding structure has any bearing on borrowing, on loans, in my understanding. So I don't understand this letter at all.

- Q. Well, a bank might have asked the question and it might have been of concern to it to understand precisely, for example, whether you alone were the beneficial owner of these 50 per cent of shares.

All right. Can you perhaps assist me with this: if you don't know who would have been potentially making representations to banks about this, can you tell me who you think might know the identity of the person dealing with the banks? Would it be Mr Tenenbaum?

- A. Well, I can't tell you that you shouldn't be asking Mr Tenenbaum, of course you should, but I can't insist that he would know. I would think that rather Ms Panchenko should know, but perhaps he also knew who was negotiating what.

- Q. Okay.

Now, you have said in your witness statement that you were not involved in the negotiations for the second Rusal sale but you say at paragraph 307 E1/03/128 that you did see some of the final documentation, including a deed of acknowledgement, and I wonder if we can just look at the deed of acknowledgement.

Can you go, please, to bundle H(A)84 at page 60
H(A)84/60.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Rabinowitz, just for my information, before we leave H(A)76, page 57 H(A)76/57, is there any evidence as to what the "alternative structure" is in the documentation?

MR RABINOWITZ: My Lady, we will see some of that in the course of the evidence.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well. Thank you.

MR RABINOWITZ: H(A)84, page 60 H(A)84/60. This is, I think, the deed of acknowledgement that you refer to in your witness statement and it's, as you see, dated 20 July 2004. It's between yourself and Mr Deripaska; do you see that?

If you look at page 63 H(A)84/63, you'll see that Mr Deripaska has executed this version of the document and if you go -- you can keep your finger there, but if you go to page 209 H(A)84/209, you'll see a version of the document where you have signed. Page 209. Do you see that?

Now, can we go back to page 61 H(A)84/61, Mr Abramovich. If you look at clause 2, clause 2 is the acknowledgement that you make to Mr Deripaska on 20 July 2004, and in fact that's really the whole point of this deed, that you make this acknowledgement. Do you see that it reads:

"RAA..."

That's you.

"... states and acknowledges to [Mr Deripaska] that with respect to the Shares (including predecessor shares) and the Business Interests represented thereby (as defined in the Deed of Release)..."

And just pausing there, you can take it from me --

MR SUMPTION: Could we get the translator to take the witness through this clause?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, certainly.

Madam translator, could you come forward and translate to the witness clause 2, please. (Pause)

A. I have to say that it will be difficult for me to comment. It is formulated in a very complex way.

MR RABINOWITZ: Well, let me help you with that a little bit, Mr Abramovich, because this is a contract that you've signed. In clause 2, just so that you understand it, the reference to "the Shares" there and "the Business Interests" is a reference to 25 per cent of the joint venture with Mr Deripaska as held through Rusal Holdings and the reference to "Beneficial Owner" is defined earlier on in the contract as being a reference to Mr Patarkatsishvili. Okay?

I'll tell you what this acknowledgement says: it says that you were expressly acknowledging to Mr Deripaska that whoever Mr Patarkatsishvili, in the deed of release or otherwise, said was the beneficial owner of the 25 per cent stake in Rusal, that would be, to the best of your knowledge and belief, who the beneficial owner was. In other words, you were acknowledging to Mr Deripaska that Mr Patarkatsishvili was going to make a statement about who the beneficial owner of these shares was and that, to the best of your knowledge and belief, whatever Mr Patarkatsishvili was going to say about it was correct.

Do you understand that?

A. Well, I understand everything you're saying. But what's been read to me in Russian, I mean, you know, you have to then translate from that Russian into other Russian for me to understand what it means and I am not capable of grasping that legal Russian. But what you are saying, I do understand.

Q. Right. I've tried to put it in language that both of us can understand because the legal language here is not straightforward.

You can see also that there is a reference in clause 2.2 (sic) -- or perhaps you remember that you were told this -- there is a reference to the deed of release and this being where Mr Patarkatsishvili was going to say who the beneficial owner was, and clause 1.1.5 of the contract we're looking at, on the same page, page 61 --

THE INTERPRETER: I do apologise, there isn't clause 2.1
(sic) in this document.

MR RABINOWITZ: It's just clause 2. Sorry, I may have said clause 2.1.

It's just clause 2. That refers to a deed of release and if you look above, maybe the translator can help you, at clause 1.1.5 it says "Deed of Release", and clause 1.1.5 tells us that it is a document which is attached to this agreement.

And if you go to page 64 in this bundle H(A)84/64, we can see the deed of release which was attached to this document, and at clause 3.1 on page 66 H(A)84/66 we have the relevant representation from Mr Patarkatsishvili about who the beneficial owner of this 25 per cent of shares was.

A. May I ask a question at this stage?

Q. Please do.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, is it because you don't understand the document? What's the problem?

A. I -- well, the fact that I don't understand the document, that's one thing and that's obvious. But there are two documents here: one of them is signed by me and another one isn't signed by me.

MR RABINOWITZ: Correct.

- A. For some reason we're not looking at the document I had signed, which would have been logical from my point of view, and we're discussing a document I hadn't.
- Q. They're identical documents. The way it works, Mr Abramovich, is clause 7.2 of the document says that you and Mr Deripaska must each sign but you don't have to sign the same document. So Mr Deripaska signs one of the identical documents and you sign the other. But the clause I've taken you to is identical. Okay?
- A. Mm-hm.
- Q. All right.
- A. Okay, I got it. Thank you very much.
- Q. Now, if you go to page 64 H(A)84/64, which you may be at, you will see the deed of release which is exhibited to the document that you signed and indeed Mr Deripaska signed; and then if you go to page 66 H(A)84/66, you can see the representation which Mr Patarkatsishvili makes about who the beneficial owner of the 25 per cent stake is.

And if you have clause 3.1, what it says -- and perhaps the translator can help you with this -- what Mr Patarkatsishvili represents and warrants at clause 3.1 at page 66 is that:

"... during the Period..."

And I can tell you, Mr Abramovich, that "the Period" means, if you go back to page 65 H(A)84/65, "the period commencing on March 15, 2000 and ending on Completion".

"... during the Period..."

So that's the period from 15 March 2005 (sic).

"... [Mr Patarkatsishvili] was the sole and ultimate beneficial owner of the Business Interests..."

That, as you've seen or as I've told you, means that Mr Patarkatsishvili was warranting that he was the sole and ultimate beneficial owner of the 25 per cent interest in the Rusal joint venture.

Now, the date 15 March 2000 is the date of the written agreement that you made with Deripaska; do you remember that?

A. Earlier you said 15 March 2005, and of course we had finished all that. But this was a slip of your tongue, so we've...

Q. This was a slip of my tongue. It's from 2000.

So what Mr Patarkatsishvili is warranting is that from the date of your contract with Mr Deripaska he has been the beneficial owner of 25 per cent of the Rusal joint venture investment. Okay?

And the other thing that he warrants, and this is in the second part of clause 3.1, is that the stake was not held by Mr Patarkatsishvili "for the benefit of any other Person", and he also says:

"... and no Encumbrances or Claims were imposed or asserted in respect of [that interest] during the Period."

Okay?

Now, just to summarise where we are, in the deed of acknowledgement, which was the first document we looked at, which was the one that you signed, you acknowledged to Mr Deripaska that whoever Mr Patarkatsishvili said was the beneficial owner of 25 per cent of Rusal was the beneficial owner of 25 per cent of Rusal and had been the beneficial owner of 25 per cent of Rusal since 15 March 2000.

In turn, Mr Patarkatsishvili warranted in the beneficial ownership deed of release that he was the beneficial owner of 25 per cent of Rusal and had been since March 2000.

And what I want to ask you is this, Mr Abramovich: how is this consistent with your present case that you, and you alone, at all times were the owner of the full 50 per cent of shares in Rusal?

A. May I explain?

Q. Please do.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, please do.

A. At the time when the question arose that for Badri to receive money, shares should be re-registered in his name, and the question arose because under the original contract we couldn't pay him this amount of money, at that time it was clear that commission amounting to 540 or $575 million -- I can't remember at what time we were discussing it -- not a single bank would receive this amount of money as commission payment.

So we decided that we will give him shares, so that he could receive this money legally through the banks he wanted. At the time when we finalised the deal with Oleg Deripaska, we would do that; and then, in the course of this procedure, we had to explain how he got these shares, how come he was holding these shares. So we wrote that he was holding, owning these shares from 15/03/2000.

I can't tell you that I understand all this mechanism very well, not at all. I can't say I understand it very well. But this is my assumption, my guess.

- Q. So your case is -- tell me if I have this right -- that you deliberately created a false document which deliberately misrepresented whether Mr Patarkatsishvili was a beneficial owner in these shares; is that right?
- A. If the question is whether Mr Patarkatsishvili was indeed the beneficiary owner of these shares from 15/03/2000, then the answer is: no, he wasn't. If the question is whether I had the right to hand over the shares to him when I felt I wanted to and I was owing him some money, could I pay him with shares, I think that I had the right to do that.

So I don't quite understand where false and falsification and fictitious comes in.

Q. Well, Mr Abramovich, just looking at your answer, the question is whether Mr Patarkatsishvili was indeed the beneficial owner of these shares.

Now, you have signed an agreement which says that whatever Mr Patarkatsishvili says about this, that is true. But you are now saying that you were, in effect, party to an arrangement which deliberately misstated who was the beneficial owner of these shares. Is that your evidence?

A. Badri asked me to help him to arrange this transfer so he could receive this money and when he was asking me and whatever he was asking me to do, I always tried to assist him.

Q. Mr Abramovich, I have to suggest to you that you are simply not telling the truth and that this document, when it acknowledges that you were not indeed the owner of the full 50 per cent of the shares, was stating the position as it in fact was, namely that you held that 25 per cent of shares for someone else.

Do you follow what I'm putting to you?

A. I understand your question and that is not right. The answer is no.

Q. And the reason this document was acknowledging Mr Patarkatsishvili's beneficial interest was because Mr Patarkatsishvili was indeed a purchaser of the aluminium assets under the master agreement of February 2000 and, as a result of that, he, with his partner, Mr Berezovsky, came to hold 25 per cent of the shares in Rusal which you agreed to hold as trustee for them.

That is the truth, is it not, Mr Abramovich?

A. That is not true. That is not so. I never held anybody's shares for anyone on trust, as a trustee.

MR RABINOWITZ: Thank you very much, Mr Abramovich. I have no further questions.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you very much.

Yes, Mr Malek.

MR MALEK: I have no questions, my Lady.

MR ADKIN: My Lady, I have no questions.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Mumford? No.

Right, Mr Sumption.

Re-examination by MR SUMPTION

MR SUMPTION: I'm afraid it's not quite over yet,

Mr Abramovich. I want to ask you a few questions of my own.

Could Mr Abramovich please be given a bundle of the Russian-language transcripts of the hearings during which he's been giving evidence.

Now, Mr Abramovich, could I please ask you to turn to the transcript for Day 17. You'll find that in the Russian version, the pages that I'm going to refer you to are contained within the text. Could you please turn to page 26.

MR RABINOWITZ: Before my learned friend goes any further, I should just mention that we don't actually have Russian transcript versions of this. If you're going to be putting points about what is the proper translation of X or Y --

MR SUMPTION: No, I'm going to be putting the transcript to the witness but in a version that he can understand without having to have it translated for him.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: What's the position in relation to that? Is it a payment issue?

MR SUMPTION: I'm told that it is. Clearly, since I'm referring to it, my learned friend must be entitled to see a Russian-language copy if he wants, but I'm not going to ask Mr Abramovich to engage a translator.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No.

MR RABINOWITZ: I think it would be worth someone on my side who understands Russian at least having --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. Well, I'm going to direct that one copy is passed over to a Russian speaker on Mr Rabinowitz's side without prejudice as to any question as to costs, which no doubt can be argued later.

MR SUMPTION: Indeed.

My Lady, I'm not sure that we've got an extra copy in court, apart from the witness's copy, but I'm having enquiries made about that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Okay. Well, we can go on in the meantime.

MR RABINOWITZ: Can I ask my learned friend just to clarify this: is the version that is being put to the witness the version produced by the translators with or without Skadden's corrections? Because, as I understand it, there has been quite a lot of toing and froing about trying to get them to accept particular words.

MR SUMPTION: I understand it's simply a type-up of the audio feed. I'm not sure who does the typing-up.

MS DAVIES: Without corrections.

MR SUMPTION: Without any corrections.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Okay. Well, if there's a correction point, I'll give you an opportunity to deal with it.

MR SUMPTION: Mr Abramovich, could you perhaps look at page 26 here on Day 17, in the numbering which you'll find embedded in the page. At the top of page 26 you will see that you are being asked about the 1995 agreement -- sorry, I'm trying to find the exact reference, forgive me.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I think it's on page 25 I ask a question, line 19, or Mr Rabinowitz at line 13 on page 25.

MR SUMPTION: Yes, let me just find the bit that I'm looking for. (Pause)

At the bottom of page 26, Mr Abramovich, my Lady asks you a question about two-thirds of the way down the page and your answer is -- this is about what was agreed before August 1995:

"After that, what happened was that it was clear that 51 per cent would be held by the government while 49 per cent could be privatised. In order to privatise 49 per cent, a certain number of auctions had to be held, and we agreed that Mr Berezovsky would help me in this."

Do you see that answer that you gave in the Russian transcript, Mr Abramovich? Now, when you said that you "agreed that Mr Berezovsky would help me in this", what were you referring to as "this"?

- A. At that time I meant the subsequent loans for shares auction. I was slightly confused with this question about August and I forgot what was happening when. But of course we agreed about these shares for loans -- loans for shares auction much later; I think it was end of October or something like that, if I remember.
- Q. I see. So the answer that I have just read to you, if you've still got it in front of you, you say that you were confused between the auction of the 49 per cent and the loans for shares auction. So if we can sort the confusion out: what did you intend to say?
- A. Mr Berezovsky didn't help me at all with the auctions for 49 per cent, but of course and indeed he did help me in a very serious manner during the loans for shares auction.
- Q. And was there an agreement about what would happen in relation to the 49 per cent? What you've just told us is that he didn't help you. Was there any agreement on that subject, as to whether he would help you with the 49 per cent?
- A. There was no agreement at all.
- Q. Now, could I please ask you to leave that transcript open and to take up bundle H(A)02, at page 102 H(A)02/102. 102 is the Russian-language version of a document that the rest of us can see at 102T and 103T

H(A)2/102T, which in my bundle is just before the coloured page, immediately before the document in Russian.

Now, you were taken to this document and it was suggested to you that Oil Finance Corporation was the same company as NFK, which was subsequently the successful bidder in the loans for shares auction. Do you remember that being discussed in your evidence? And you said it was not, it was a different company.

A. Yes, I remember.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Sumption, can you give me the reference to the transcript where --

MR SUMPTION: It's at Day 17, pages 142 and 143.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you.

MR SUMPTION: Now, do you remember when NFK, the company that subsequently succeeded in the loans for shares auctions, was created?

A. It was created just before the auction, just prior to the auction, if I remember correctly, in December. I mean, I can't remember the exact date, but something like December.

Q. Could you please be given bundle H(A)09/28 H(A)09/28. In Russian it's at 28R H(A)09/28R and for the rest of us it is immediately after the Russian version.

In the Russian version this is a copy,

Mr Abramovich, of the Audit Chamber report into the loans for shares auction. Do you remember that document?

A. Yes. I do.

Q. If you turn in the Russian text to page 31R H(A)09/31R. In English it's at page 36 -- I'm afraid the bundle I'm using is paginated differently. Right. It's --

A. May I -- I can answer.

Q. You've got it in the Russian text, right. Does that help you to identify the exact date?

A. Yes.

Q. What is the exact date that you see there?

A. It's the date when the company was set up: 07/12/95.

MR SUMPTION: I will give your Ladyship the exact reference to the English translation. It was at page 36 but the reference has been changed subsequently.

Mr Abramovich, I wonder if you could turn back to the transcript now. You can put away bundle H(A)09. Would you please turn to page 64 in the transcript of Day 17. The first answer that you give on page 64 begins in English:

"This is almost what you mean."

Do you see that? Now, what you're being asked about here is krysha and in particular you're being asked whether you needed krysha after the creation of Sibneft. That's what Mr Rabinowitz was asking you about and I just want to ask you to clarify a particular part of your answer.

In the first answer you give on page 64 you say -- I'm reading from the English. It says:

"This is almost what you mean. I'm saying that in [the] start of the '90s... I needed both kinds of protection... and in some sense, yes, both, one and the other."

That's a reference to physical and political krysha. And then you say:

"The business after creation of Sibneft didn't require krysha. After Sibneft was created, political krysha was required, yes."

I wonder if you can clarify those two sentences, where you're recorded as saying in the transcript, "The business after the creation of Sibneft didn't require krysha", and then in the next sentence you say, "After Sibneft was created, political krysha was required, yes". Can you help us on what you are saying there?

- A. Indeed krysha was required. It was impossible to keep hold of the company without krysha. So we required both political and physical krysha protection.
- Q. Thank you. Could you put away that -- well, sorry, keep the volume. If you turn to the next tab, I think it is, you will find the transcript of Day 18. Can the witness be helped to find the transcript of Day 18, please. I'd like you to turn to page 39.

At this point in your evidence you're giving evidence about a document which you will be given in a moment: it's at H(F)1/60. Now, you may remember being taken by Mr Rabinowitz to this letter. It's a letter which contains details sent to Mr Curtis in 1994 of the turnover and net profits of one of your trading companies called BMP Trading GmbH. Do you see that?

A. Yes. Yes.

Q. There isn't a Russian version of this but if you look at the numbered lines just below halfway down the page, item 5 says:

"Turnover in 1993 -- $350 [million]."

And item 6 says:

"Net profits in 1993 -- 10 [million]."

Do you see those figures?

Now, you were asked in particular about the figure for $10 million net profits in 1993. Those were the profits of which company?

A. These were the profits of this company. We had several companies that were engaged in trading operations. This profit refers to this company.

Q. Right. And what was the aggregate profit at that time, ie 1993, of the total of the trading companies?

A. I can't give you an exact figure but in the region of $40 million, perhaps a bit less.

Q. Thank you.

Could you please now turn to the transcript for Day 19 and turn to page 45. Now, what you're being asked about at this stage is the ownership of shares in Sibneft in the year 2000. Now, at that stage 12 per cent of Sibneft was owned by the general public and you say here that you and only you owned the rest, the other 88 per cent.

And you then clarify, if you look at page 45, why some documents refer to "A group of shareholders". Do you see your answer about that? At about a quarter of the way down 46, you say:

"Answer: I have never said that I was the only shareholder."

Then my Lady asks:

"In Sibneft or in these aluminium assets?"

"Answer: I mean in Sibneft. For a variety of reasons, mainly for reasons of security, I did not want to be the only shareholder of Sibneft and so that everyone knows I was the only shareholder in Sibneft...

"And that's why we often spoke about management, management control, as long as we didn't mention just my name."

Now, can you tell us: what were the reasons of security that you refer to in that answer as the explanation of why you referred to the control by management?

A. I can give you a longer answer or -- may I? May I say a few words?

Q. Of course.

A. Just to give the context and the history of the matter.

When I started to do business, when cooperatives first appeared and when I started to make more or less serious money, at that time, for those times, then of course at that time I wanted to show everyone that life is different, it's new kind of life, we are earning this money, we wanted to pay taxes and live honestly.

And while I was thinking about that, a person, I think his surname was Darasov, he declared that he had earned 3 million rubles that he had paid all the taxes. He was a member of the Communist Party, he paid party contributions, he did everything completely honestly and above board. You can't imagine what happened in the country: people were saying that he should be put in custody, to prison, this is unbearable, this is shameful, nobody has the right to earn so much; and in the end he left for the UK.

And I remember that very well and I decided that I was not going to stick my neck out. The next person who decided to declare his earnings, his shares, and that he was such an open person, was Mr Khodorkovsky. Well, at that time I had the desire to declare everything and to show everything and to make it all obvious, but then I decided it won't lead to anything good; it would only create problems for myself.

So I decided: sit quietly and do business and don't stick your neck out and tell everybody everything belongs to me, et cetera; that would only cause problems for myself. Therefore I never told these stories or declared all these things to anyone.

- Q. And from what date, approximately, did you have this policy of not being publicly seen as the sole owner of Sibneft?
- A. If I remember correctly, this story I told you about happened in '89 and that happened prior to Sibneft. So I learnt my lesson on the example of that guy before Sibneft.
- Q. In your public statements what did you say about who owned the rest of the shares apart from you yourself?
- A. Well, first of all, I never made any public statements; at least I tried never to make any public statements. I know I don't do it well: I become very nervous, I forget what it is that I mean to say, I can't really convey my logic and my thought to the journalists. So I decided this is not my thing, I really shouldn't be doing it.

And even when I was asked, and I was being asked when I was running for governor, I think it was the year 2000 when I was asked, rather I was going to say -- I was going to say there was a question -- rather I was asking (sic) about control and I was being asked about ownership and I simply got confused and didn't understand what it is that they were asking me about.

So I never had the intention to deceive anyone.

Q. Could you please take bundle E6, or E7 rather, which is the Le Bourget transcript. We'll look at it in bundle E6. I'd like you to turn to box 470, please E6/01/165. I'd like you to read to yourself the text in box 470 and then I'd like you to look at the transcript of the evidence that you gave about it.

Could you perhaps read the text of box 470 first.

(Pause)

A. Yes.

Q. Now, if, leaving that open, you would like to turn to the transcript for Day 20 and to page 89 of that transcript. You give evidence about this matter between pages 89 and 91, if you would just like to remind yourself of that. (Pause)

A. Should I read 90 as well?

Q. I think you can read up to the end of page 91, up to the question that my Lady asked you. Perhaps you should read your answer to my Lady's question as well. (Pause)

A. I've read it.

Q. You say in the longest answer on page 91:

"So we always said that I control half of the company and the other half is controlled by the management."

On what other occasions did you say that?

A. If I remember correctly, I gave an interview to Vedomosti newspaper, if I remember correctly.

Q. Could you please take bundle H(A)15/2R.

A. May I add? May I add a few words?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, you may.

A. Everybody who asked me this question were not interested to know who owned the shares; all they wanted to know, whether Berezovsky was the owner, whether Berezovsky had any influence on the company. That's the only thing they were keen to know. Nobody was bothered to know who in reality was the shareholders; just that all foreign investors were very concerned that Berezovsky might be a shareholder. This is why all these stories and questions appeared and every time we had to explain to foreign investors that he had nothing to do, he was not an investor, he was not a shareholder and had nothing to do with this business.

MR SUMPTION: Now, could you please take bundle H(A)15 at page 2R H(A)15/2R, which is the Russian version. It's on coloured paper in my bundle. The English version is at 2 H(A)15/2, which, in my bundle, is just before that.

Now, is this the interview with Vedomosti that you were referring to?

A. (Untranslated)

Q. If you look at the top, you'll see that it's described as:

"Interview with Sibneft board member Roman Abramovich published in Vedomosti on 1 December 1999."

Now, you'll see -- if you would like to just cast an eye through this, can you draw our attention to which parts of this interview you had in mind?

A. The journalist is saying:

"Let's talk about your business. What is it that you do in Sibneft?"

And then I'm discussing that.

Q. And then in the English there's a heading or there's a question:

"Can you say something about your stake in Sibneft?"

Starting there, as you've asked us to, where should we read to to get the passage that you had in mind in your last answer?

My Lady, it's page 3 on the English version

H(A)15/3.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I'm there. Thank you.

A. Right. If you read seven or eight lines or so, then everything is described.

MR SUMPTION: Thank you.

Could you please, on this same point, be given bundle H(A)23 at page 67 H(A)23/67. 67 is the English version. You'll find a Russian version, I think, immediately -- hang on. 67R is the Russian version H(A)23/67R and the English text is on 67, immediately before that. In the English, this is headed "On the Record" and it's an interview with Mr Shvidler published in Petroleum Intelligence Weekly in November 2000. Do you see that?

Could you please turn to page 70.001R

H(A)23/70/001R. There is a question which is being put to Mr Shvidler:

"Unclear shareholding structures remain a worrying aspect of many Russian oil companies. Can you reveal who the principal shareholders are in Sibneft?"

It's the very last question that Mr Shvidler is asked. His answer is:

"First, I would like to say that Sibneft is a separate oil company not mixed up with the aluminium interests with our shareholders. As for the list of shareholders, Roman Abramovich controls about a 40% stake, a similar amount is controlled by the company's top management, while the rest is in free float."

Now, can you help us on what Mr Shvidler is referring to there?

A. This is -- what is the date of this? Could you please remind me?

Q. November 2000.

A. This was the main question. The main question was whether Sibneft acquired aluminium assets, that was the big thing; and this is why, if I remember correctly, the whole story was written. And it was important for us to convey that Sibneft as a company has nothing to do, no links with aluminium assets. The market got very excited and worried that we might suddenly start using Sibneft's money and we'd stop being a purely oil company and become some kind of strange conglomerate. This is what it was all devoted to, if I remember correctly.

Q. If you still have the Le Bourget transcript open in front of you, bundle E7, can you turn back to box 470, please E6/01/165.

Now, box 470 is, of course, about Sibneft. Why did you refer at the Le Bourget meeting to your owning only 40 per cent or 44 per cent and to part being "in trust with management"? Why were you saying this to Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Berezovsky?

A. We were talking about what should be done for them to receive legal money in the banks and I tried to remember the arrangement which exist -- which people explained to me and which I was trying to explain to them so as to help them in some way to use the arrangements we've discussed before, so they would have a possibility of explaining all of that to the banks.

But here I am referring to my interview, I'm trying to remember what it is that I was explaining to the Vedomosti newspaper, as I've already mentioned that I don't recall these things very well and -- you know, and I really don't retain this information. By the time I arrive wherever I'm going, I already forget what it is that I wanted to say.

Q. Could you please turn to the transcript of Day 19 at page 2.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Choose your moment for the break,

Mr Sumption.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, why don't we break now?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well. I'll break for ten minutes.

(11.25 am)

(A short break)

(11.43 am)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, Mr Sumption.

MR SUMPTION: Mr Abramovich, could you take the transcript for Day 19, please, and I'd like you to turn to page 2 in that transcript.

Now, the point that Mr Rabinowitz is asking you about at this stage of your evidence is this: he was suggesting to you that in 1996 you thought that there was a need to distance Mr Berezovsky from Sibneft, and you denied that. You remember that exchange between you and Mr Rabinowitz, do you?

A. Yes.

Q. And in this part of your evidence -- it's at the bottom of page 2 and the top of page 3 -- you say, bottom of page 2:

"Answer: So, for me to understand exactly what you mean, prior to [the 1996] elections I allegedly told Berezovsky that his link or his association with Sibneft was harmful to Sibneft; is that what you mean?"

And Mr Rabinowitz says:

"Question: That is what my question involves saying, yes."

Your answer is:

"Answer: This did not happen, in the files of the case, there is a document, I think it's called letter number 13; may we look at that, if that's possible?"

I want to show you a document and ask if it's the document that you have in mind. Could you please be given bundle G(B)2/3.041. If you turn to flag 41 in that bundle.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: It's on the screen. Is there an English version?

MR SUMPTION: There's an English version at page 7T and the Russian version is 1R.

Mr Abramovich, this is -- if we can have the English version on the screen, since you've got the Russian version in front of you.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Do we think there's an English version?

MR SUMPTION: There is an English version in my bundle at page 7: that's G(B)2/3.041/7.

Now, is this the document that you had in mind as letter number 13, Mr Abramovich, or is it a different document?

- A. This is what I meant. This is not called letter number 13 but this is appeal number 13. After Mr Berezovsky, it was Mr Viktor Andreyevich Gorodilov who signed that letter, who represented Sibneft, so to speak, that at that point in time Sibneft wanted to distance itself from Mr Berezovsky. This is completely incorrect.
- Q. So what is it about this letter that shows that it was completely incorrect?
- A. That letter -- sorry, I didn't understand the question. What was it in that letter that was showing that it was --
- Q. The transcript, I'm afraid, has mistranscribed my question. My question was: what is it about this letter that shows that the suggestion put to you about distancing Mr Berezovsky from Sibneft was completely incorrect?
- A. I have asked Mr Rabinowitz: did he mean that Sibneft would have problems or me personally, and he said certainly it would be for Sibneft, if I remember correctly. That's what I'm saying. And in that letter the second person, after the appeal of Mr Berezovsky, that was Mr Gorodilov, who did represent Sibneft.
- Q. Could you please, in the transcript of the answers that you've just given, go back to the line on the current page of the [draft] transcript to line 6. Could the translator please translate the answer that begins, "This is what I meant", and in particular the last sentence says:

"This is completely correct."

If you can just explain what you meant by that.

Madam translator, do you see the answer that begins, "This is what I meant"? Have you stopped the...

Can the whole of that answer beginning "This is what I meant" up to "This is completely correct" be translated to the witness.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: What's the date of this letter?

MR SUMPTION: The date of the letter is -- I think it's June 2000 -- sorry, June 1996, forgive me -- 27 April 1996.

THE INTERPRETER: I have translated [draft] lines from 21 to 25. Is that what you wanted?

MR SUMPTION: I'm sorry. If you look at [draft] line 6, you will see an answer that begins:

"This is what I meant. This is not called letter number 13..."

Do you see that answer?

THE INTERPRETER: Yes, now I've got it.

MR SUMPTION: That is the answer. Please could we have that translated.

What is it that is completely correct?

A. This is completely not what I said. I mean that this letter, after Berezovsky, was signed by Mr Gorodilov and that letter was putting Sibneft at risk because that letter was sent, I remember, to the leader of the Communists, Mr Zyuganov, and he was categorically against. So it doesn't matter, and I'm referring to that letter.

Q. Yes.

A. Therefore, by this letter I want to show that we did not distance from Mr Berezovsky and Sibneft didn't distance from him. Quite on the contrary, we supported him and the company, Sibneft, has provided all the resources for that and Mr Gorodilov signed that letter.

Q. Now, could you please in the same transcript, Day 19, turn on to page 6. At page 6 of this transcript, if you would just like to glance at it, you will see that Mr Rabinowitz is putting it to you that you had failed to identify any krysha, any services by way of krysha provided by Mr Berezovsky to you between 1998 and 2000. Do you see that?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. Can you tell us: what role did Mr Berezovsky play, if any, in the attempted Yuksi merger of 1998?

A. He was going to be a political representative of the united group and I cannot say that we've discussed that he will be the krysha for the whole group, but this is what was meant.

- Q. Could you please turn in the same transcript to pages 26 and 27. Now, at this point of your evidence you are explaining why Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Shvidler were shown as parties on the agreement in relation to the acquisition of the aluminium assets in February 2000. Do you remember being asked questions about that?

A. (Untranslated)

- Q. Now, if you look at the transcript, you will see that at the end of page 27 Mr Rabinowitz asks you:

"Question: ... I have to suggest... that your explanation as to why both Mr Shvidler and Mr Patarkatsishvili signed as a party is simply untrue. Do you understand?"

And you say:

"Answer: I understand that you suggest that this is not true but it is in fact the truth. Once again I'd like to explain: to a Russian person's eyes, everything is clear here, if you look at it through Russian eyes, especially if you know the context."

Mr Rabinowitz then went on to another aspect of the matter.

Can you please help us on what was the context that you were referring to at the very bottom of page 27?

What was the context that helps you to understand this?

- A. If you understand everything that was going around all this, Badri was a very influential figure. For the aluminium industry there was a certain risk and it was important for us for Badri to be near to us and demonstrate that he's with us.
- Q. And what about Mr Shvidler: what is the context that helps one understand why Mr Shvidler was named as a party?
- A. And Mr Shvidler was negotiating, he was conducting negotiations. Therefore he automatically was a party, becoming a party, party 1, what was called party 1 there.
- Q. Could you, in the same transcript, please turn on to page 67. Towards the end of page 67 you will see you're being asked about the merger agreement with Mr Deripaska and in particular the document which you and Mr Deripaska signed at the beginning of March 2000. You're being asked about whether that contained all the key terms of the merger agreement.

Mr Rabinowitz, at the bottom of page 67, quotes your witness statement:

"Having reached an agreement with Mr Deripaska on all key terms of our merger..."

And he then asks:

"Why did you deny, when I asked you whether you reached agreement with Mr Deripaska on all key terms, why did you deny that that is what had happened at that meeting?"

And this is a reference to the meeting --

A. Sorry, I do apologise, I'm not keeping up. You are speaking very fast, the interpreter is speaking even faster, so I'm not understanding what's going on.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Okay. Take it more slowly.

MR SUMPTION: I will take it more slowly.

In this part of your evidence you're being asked about the preliminary agreement with Mr Deripaska for the merger of the aluminium assets of each side, and in your witness statement you had said that in that agreement you reached agreement with Mr Deripaska "on all [the] key terms of our merger". And this is in the context of the meeting that you had at your house at Sareevo after the Baltshug Kempinski hotel.

Mr Rabinowitz then says:

"Why did you deny, when I asked you whether you reached agreement with Mr Deripaska on all key terms, why did you deny that that is what had happened at that meeting?"

And if you then look at your answer at the top of page 68, if you could just read to yourself the answer that begins in the English text:

"Answer: I wanted to continue but then I was cut off..."

Just that answer. (Pause)

Have you read that, Mr Abramovich?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. Now, at the end of that answer, you say:

"... if I have the leave of the court, I can explain what we agreed upon and what we agreed upon later."

Mr Rabinowitz says he'll come back to that. I'm not sure he did, which is why I'm going to ask you now.

What did you agree upon at your house in Sareevo and what did you agree upon later? What did you want to explain when you said that?

A. I wanted to explain that the terms with regard to BrAZ, with regard to Sayansky Aluminium Plant, about the whole structure of Russian Aluminium, was agreed by us later.

So my feeling was that we had a preliminary discussion. We've agreed to only spin out the problem assets, KrAZ, everything around KrAZ, and everything else will be decided later. We'll get the work started and decide the rest later. That was my feeling.

Q. So what was added later was further assets; is that what you are saying?

A. Bratsk Aluminium Plant, we have brought a part, and the other part we bought from Rusal, Sayan Aluminium Plant, from what I can remember, and I think we also were buying power plants, but I do not recall.

And one more thing: and later it happens we were not able to bring in KrAZ or Novokuznetsk Aluminium Plant and we were buying it together.

Q. How much later was that?

A. Bratsk and Sayansky Aluminium Plant were brought in in May, I think we agreed in May. And when we brought NkAZ, Novokuznetsk Aluminium Plant, I do not recall that.

Q. We can find the documents in due course.

Now, Mr Abramovich, could you take the transcript now at Day 20, please, and turn to page 5. At this point you were being asked about the Dorchester Hotel meeting and if you look at page 5, you'll see there's a long answer which begins:

"When we arrived at the Dorchester Hotel..."

Do you see that answer?

A. Sorry, I've missed -- what page was that?

Q. Page 5 on Day 20. There's a long answer in which you describe what happened at the Dorchester Hotel meeting. In English it begins:

"When we arrived at the Dorchester Hotel -- and..."

it was well past midday..."

Would you just like to remind yourself of that answer. (Pause)

A. I have read this.

Q. Now, towards the end of that answer you say it was not a formal meeting because -- and you give various reasons including that Mr Berezovsky was not properly attired.

What was Mr Berezovsky wearing when he joined the meeting?

A. He was in a dressing gown.

Q. Could you turn on in this transcript, please, to page 79. Now, at pages 79 and 80, if you have those open, you will see that you are being asked about Mr Fomichev's proposal in the autumn of 2000 that Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili should become registered shareholders of Sibneft in order to legalise their receipts.

Now, what was suggested to you was that it was surprising that there were no references in any document to Mr Fomichev having made that proposal. You will see that my Lady asks you that question.

Now, how was this particular proposal by Mr Fomichev made? Did he make it in a document? Did he make it at a meeting? Did he make it on the telephone? How did he make it?

A. If I recall correctly, he arrived to my offices and said he had such a proposal. He didn't have any correspondence in this regard. So there couldn't have been any documents surviving, if I recall correctly.

Q. Is it normal, can you tell us, to document arrangements to legalise the receipt of money? If proposals are made on that subject and you have discussions about it, is it normal to have those discussions in writing or orally?

A. Usually -- it's very unusual for Russian practice to sit down and write down what you are saying. That looks quite strange. I understand that from the perspective, from the point of view of an English lawyer, everything has to be documented. I've seen how -- the way it's happening. I've seen people's notes. If someone said something and then that was documented, to be honest, I've never ever come across this before. This is very unusual for us.

Q. Thank you.

Could you please turn in the transcript for Day 21 to page 13. Now, in this part of your evidence you're being asked about the Le Bourget transcript and if you look at the transcript from pages 13 to 15, you'll see that you're being asked about Mr Patarkatsishvili's interest in the question how much Sibneft was likely to earn in the following year. Do you remember that?

Would you like to --

- A. I do remember. Just could I have the page reference, please, again?
- Q. Yes. If you look at page 13 and read through to yourself until page 15, you will see a number of questions are being asked of you about -- it's a discussion at Le Bourget about how much Sibneft was likely to earn in the next year. If you would just like to remind yourself of that by glancing through it. You don't need to read every detail, but just to remind you of the context. (Pause)
- A. I do remember the context.
- Q. Right. Now, what I want to ask you is this: why were Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Berezovsky interested in how much Sibneft was likely to earn in the following year?
- A. That was the year 2001: that was the first year when everything had to be brought within the company and the only way how I could in theory pay out to them would be via dividends. So I would have to get Sibneft dividends and then distribute them. And it can be seen from there, I am explaining that I can do it only twice a year; I cannot pay them the money at their first demand.
- Q. Was the amount of money that you paid to Mr Patarkatsishvili or Mr Berezovsky dependent on or related to the amount of money made by Sibneft?

A. No.

Q. Could you please turn to page 23 of the same transcript for another aspect of the meeting at Le Bourget. You will see that on page 23 there is a long answer from you in the middle of the page beginning:

"I'd say to [you] that if you read this transcript in full, and in particular with regard to ORT, we had settled everything..."

Do you see that? Could you just read through that answer so that I can ask you to clarify one point.

A. (Untranslated) (Pause)

Yes, I did.

Q. At the end of that answer you explain that you left the meeting with the understanding that you had agreed on everything: you had agreed "the arrangement, how to pay, what to pay and to whom". You say you then went off on your election campaign, Mr Berezovsky went away and Mr Patarkatsishvili went away, and you then say:

"... if I remember correctly... the other one to Las Vegas."

Mr Berezovsky to Aspen and Mr Patarkatsishvili to Las Vegas. And you then say, and we're talking about ORT here:

"So the subject sort of -- the subject went away by itself until we all met again."

Do you see that?

Now, what was the next occasion after the Le Bourget meeting that you all met again, that you're referring to there?

A. We've met in Megeve.

Q. Now, when you say that "the subject went away by itself until we all met again", did the subject of ORT come up when you met in Megeve?

A. No, we've never revisited it at all. Everything was finished there. There was nothing to discuss there. Moreover, if I recall correctly, the end of October I was already financing the budget difference using my own money, and the budget differential of ORT, that was already financed by me.

Q. Yes. Now, on that point, could you please -- you may need some assistance on this. I'd like you to look at the bolshoi balance on the screen. We know from experience that this is technically possible but you may need some help. If possible, on the actual Excel spreadsheet, so that we can operate it under the software.

I wonder if someone could go up, simply so that we can manipulate the spreadsheet and turn to the right box. What I suggest is that if Daria would just like to sit down beside you, Mr Abramovich, so that we can get up on screen the right part of the spreadsheet.

Looking at the tabs at the bottom of the sheet, you will see that the left-hand tab or one of the left-hand tabs is headed "2000 total, cash incl[uding], monthly". Can we please have that tab opened and could you please look at line 118 in that tab.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Hang on, I'm just a bit behind you.

We're looking in the left-hand tab or one of the left-hand tabs?

MR SUMPTION: It's the tab which is labelled at the bottom "2000 total, cash incl[uding], monthly", so if your Ladyship clicks on that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR SUMPTION: And then in the spreadsheet part that will then open up, turn to line 118.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right, okay.

MR SUMPTION: And you will need to pull it over to the right so that we can see October, November and December.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Okay.

MR SUMPTION: Now, Mr Abramovich, if you look at line 118, you will see that there is a heading which says "ORT CASH", and you will see that under "ORT CASH" there is a figure of $1.6 million in October and another figure of $2 million in December. Do you see those figures?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. Can you tell us what those figures of $1.6 million in October and $2 million in December represent?

A. This is the budget deficit of ORT that I've undertaken myself, starting from October, because Badri was considering that we've closed everything, it was just a bit of drafting, and that would be all. So he put these expenses over to me.

Q. Thank you.

Could you go back to the transcript of Day 21, please, and turn to page 108. Now, if you'd like to remind yourself of the question and answer in the bottom half of page 108 and then along to 109. Just to tell you what the context is, what is being suggested to you here is that in the course of the meeting -- this is about three-quarters of the way down page 109 -- at Le Bourget:

"... Mr Berezovsky... did not once say anything to indicate... that he would be willing to sign an agreement at that stage...?"

And you say that isn't true. Do you see that evidence?

A. Yes.

Q. And Mr Rabinowitz then says:

"Question: Where do you say Mr Berezovsky said anything that he would be willing to sign an agreement at that time?"

And you say there are references and replicas made by Mr Berezovsky.

I want to ask you, leaving that part of the transcript open, to turn to bundle E7 in the Russian and the rest of us can follow this in bundle E6 in English. Could you please turn to box 394 E6/01/135. Perhaps you should go back a few boxes earlier to see the context. This is at a time when Mr Patarkatsishvili is on the phone to Mr Gorodilov and at 394 Mr Berezovsky says:

"I am willing to do... this..."

Then there's a short interjection by you and Mr Patarkatsishvili continues over the phone to Mr Gorodilov about an option.

Can you help us on what Mr Berezovsky was expressing himself as willing to do in box 394?

- A. That is to do with ORT shares.
- Q. And what was he willing to do about ORT shares?
- A. This is what Badri was explaining, only he wanted for some reason to use the option and it ended up using a different arrangement.
- Q. Could you turn on to box 408, please E6/01/140. Could you remind yourself of the context by reading to yourself boxes 408 to 411. (Pause)

A. I have read it.

Q. What do you understand to be happening in this part of the conversation?

A. This is Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili talking between themselves and Badri is saying: I am happy with everything. The whole arrangement that was discussed there and that he was discussing with Mr Gorodilov, he was completely happy with it.

Q. And what is Mr Berezovsky saying about that?

A. And Mr Berezovsky is saying, if we're looking at 411, box 411, he says, "Yes".

Q. Now, could you turn to box 431, please E1/06/149.

Just to get the context of this, if we go back to 428. Perhaps you would read to yourself from box 428 to box 431, please. (Pause)

A. I've read it.

Q. What do you understand is happening here?

A. I'm trying to convince Badri not to get involved, not to link two payments together, and he was trying to convince me so that the money for legalisation for previous deals to be included in the ORT payment, ORT payment.

Q. In box 430 you say:

"(So then) we shall finalise this deal, so that I could report on it without further ado..."

What was the deal that you were talking about finalising in that box?

A. This is the ORT deal.

Q. And what was Mr Berezovsky doing during this exchange?

A. He was sitting at the table with us, if I recall correctly.

Q. Did he give any indication of his own attitude?

A. He certainly didn't display any negative attitude. He was very much for it. The only thing, he was asking a few questions about the arrangement and that's all.

Q. When you say "the arrangement", which arrangement are referring to?

A. How shall this money that shall be paid? How would that money get into his account? He was only worried about that particular moment, that particular point.

Q. Could you please turn from there to box 449 E6/01/154. Mr Rabinowitz took you to box 449.

My Lady, for your Ladyship's reference, this is at --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: T41/104.

MR SUMPTION: This part of it I think is at Day 21, 108-109.

That's the reference I've got, but I'll check that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Oh, right. I've got Day 41. Day 21, it must be. Day 21.

MR SUMPTION: I've got a reference to 108-9, but we'll check that that's correct.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Oh, right. I've got 104. 108-109, thank you.

MR SUMPTION: Mr Abramovich, you were taken by Mr Rabinowitz to box 449, where you refer to signing so that you can take something to Mr Putin and you gave evidence that you didn't have actually a document with you to sign.

I'd like you to turn back to box 448, which is the box immediately before that, where Mr Patarkatsishvili says:

"Right, it's settled then, no problems. No problems. De facto we don't lose anything, because we are compensating the amount we stand to lose now, so that later... And as for what we'd lost already -- well, it's gone."

Now, what was "settled then", as you understood it? When Mr Patarkatsishvili said, "Right, it's settled then, no problems", what was it that was settled?

- A. At that point in time we were talking about the arrangement. We have finalised everything. I had a clear understanding that we had nothing else to discuss.
- Q. Did Mr Berezovsky give any indication of his attitude to that?

A. No. He was sitting at the table and I had an impression that he was absolutely fine with it, absolutely agreed. So I left with a firm understanding that that was all; everything was closed.

Q. Now, I want to ask you about a different subject although about the same period of time. The transcript reference is Day 21, pages 128 and 129.

Now, what you're being asked about here is the time required to fly from Moscow to the south of France in early December and back again to Moscow. Now, you don't need to look at the details of your answers in order to answer my following questions.

If you are in Moscow and you decide to fly to the south of France, what arrangements, if any, have to be made before you go to the airport? You're going to fly by private jet, let us say, to the south of France: what are you going to do and how long does it take to --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, are we talking about him packing his bag or what are we talking about?

MR SUMPTION: No, I'm not.

In order to get a plane organised to take you to the south of France, what arrangements have to be made and how long do they take?

A. From the moment when I decided that I want to fly out until the moment until I am able to fly out, the very minimum would be four hours and more likely it would be six hours.

Q. What is happening in that period of four to six hours?

What takes all that time?

A. If it's my own jet, I can tell you exactly: you have to call the crew, you have to fuel up, you have to get the permission, and most importantly you have to agree it with Eurocontrol. This is not a correct understanding: it's like a car, you put keys into the ignition, off you go. No, there are lots of arrangements. The Russian Federation has to let you out from its territory. Everything is quite complicated. It's a lengthy procedure.

Q. And when that's completed, how long does it take to get from your office in Moscow to the airport?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Just a second. You're putting the question on the assumption that he can only leave his office once all that's completed; I'm not sure that's right.

MR SUMPTION: Your Ladyship is quite right to pick me up on that.

Mr Abramovich, at what stage can you leave your office for the airport? How long after you've started putting these arrangements in train?

A. If you are not completely sure that everything is prepared and if you have not received confirmation that everything is prepared, then you can spend two hours in the airport and not get anywhere. Basically, the way I do it, usually first I organise everything first and only then I leave the office or I leave my house. So that could add another one and a half to two hours.

Q. That one and a half to two hours, is that the time required to get to the airport or what are you doing in that one and a half to two hours?

A. From my house or from my office, to get to the airport, one has to spend in the journey. If it's not happening at daytime, if it's in the evening, it would be one hour 15 minutes, when there are no traffic jams; and it would be the whole of two hours if it's happening in daytime.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Can I ask you this way. Say you decide at 8 o'clock in the morning you want to fly from Moscow to Nice: when would be the earliest time that you could actually take off, if your decision is made and communicated to your aircraft at 8 o'clock in the morning? Just roughly.

A. If it were at the same time and the jet was not prepared, the very minimum would be six hours.

MR SUMPTION: Now, if you fly to Nice --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Sorry, I've just got one more question.

Aren't aircraft kept fuelled up all the time?

I mean, if you've got a private aircraft or a private charter aircraft, aren't they kept fuelled up, just so they are ready if the client rings up?

- A. The technology there is quite complicated. It's to do with safety. Fuel does expand and contract depending on the temperature. So there are some rules and regulations that allow to keep some amount of fuel, but they have to refuel prior to take-off and depending on the length of flight they take a certain amount of fuel on board. The plane cannot land with fuel on board, so they have to burn it off before they actually land. They only have to have the emergency supply on board.

MR SUMPTION: If you're flying to Nice and you intend to go to the Chateau de la Garoupe, how long does it take to get from the airport to the Chateau de la Garoupe, measuring it from the time that the aircraft lands to the time of your arrival at the Chateau de la Garoupe?

- A. It seems to me that at best it would take about 45 minutes, if -- to go through all the formalities.
- Q. And what means of transport do you use to get from the airport to the Chateau de la Garoupe: do you take a car or a helicopter or what?
- A. I don't remember that I've ever flew by helicopter to Chateau de la Garoupe. This is not my estate and to be able to get a licence to land there, I think you have to register, et cetera, so it's quite a complicated thing. If I fly into my own estate, I have a set-up, registered helipad; and for Chateau de la Garoupe I didn't have such a thing, although in theory a helicopter could have landed there.

So most likely, if to assume that I did go there indeed, especially at the last minute, at the drop of a hat, I probably would have taken the car. And also if we are discussing autumn of year 2000, at that time of year using the helicopter is quite a risky thing; one can hit bad weather and one wouldn't have either a car or a helicopter.

Q. Now, one final question on this point. How long does it take to get from the airport at Moscow, after landing, to Mr Voloshin's house?

A. It really depends what time of day you're travelling. If there are traffic jams, then you could spend the whole of three hours; and if it's happening at nighttime, then it might take an hour, an hour and ten minutes.

Q. Thank you.

Now, could you turn in the transcript of Day 22, please, to page 74. Now, if you just look at the transcript for page 74, Mr Rabinowitz is summarising his case about the alleged Cap d'Antibes meeting so as to give you a final chance to comment on it. You'll see that about a quarter of the way down page 74.

The first point that Mr Rabinowitz makes is this. Reading from the English text, he says:

"First, we say that you originally admitted this meeting, before seeking to change your case. Do you dispute that?"

And your answer is:

"Answer: No, I do not dispute that. I'm saying that there was a meeting in France, yes."

Do you see that answer in the transcript?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, what meeting in France are you referring to in that answer?

A. That was 6 November.

Q. And what is it that you do not dispute when you gave that answer?

A. I did not dispute that the meeting happened. I'm saying that the meeting happened on 6 November.

Q. Now, could you turn on, please, to page 85, same transcript. Mr Rabinowitz is asking you on page 85 about Mr Putin's role in the ORT transaction. Towards the top, the first question on page 85, Mr Rabinowitz asks you:

"Question: Did President Putin think that you were associated with Mr Berezovsky?"

And your answer is:

"Answer: From what I know, yes, he did.

"Question: Why did President Putin think that you were associated with Mr Berezovsky?"

And you say:

"Answer: Everybody knew that. Everybody knew that I was linked to him. It was an absolutely obvious thing."

What was the nature of the association between you and Mr Berezovsky that everybody knew about?

A. Everyone knew that I financed him, everyone knows that he was my krysha.

Q. Could you turn on to page 104 in the same transcript. About three-quarters of the way down page 104, just before a question from my Lady, you were being asked about changes that you had made to your pleading concerning the place where this meeting in the Alps happened and you're explaining why the pleading originally referred to St Moritz. Do you remember that?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. What you say just before my Lady's question is:

"And I also know that I've never been to St Moritz. So I decided perhaps it must have been St Moritz."

I think something may have gone wrong with the way your answer is transcribed there. Could you explain what you're saying in that particular passage?

- A. Yes, I can. I remembered a meeting. I didn't remember where the meeting happened. My logic was as follows: that was a place where I have never been before, before that meeting or after that meeting. I've only been there once, in the town, and I didn't go to visit the village. Therefore I was thinking: where could it be? I was really tormented trying to remember. And because I remember, I decided that I've never been to St Moritz, I thought: yes, it could have been St Moritz. I've never been to St Moritz before, after or ever.

And I was referring to the trip, there was -- Badri was there, and it would have been unlikely for Badri to be in some average resort, so I thought that most likely that would be St Moritz.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Had you been to Megeve before?

- A. I've never been in Megeve either before or after. I was only at the helipad. That's why I couldn't understand where the place was. I was speaking out my assumptions and I was really tormented about it.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: You said, I think, Mr Patarkatsishvili wasn't a skier, so it was likely he would have gone to a resort where you could walk and shop as well as ski?

A. Yes.

MR SUMPTION: Could you turn to page 109, please, of the same transcript. You're being asked about the Megeve meeting and in particular about what Mr Berezovsky contributed to that meeting, and you say that Mr Berezovsky did not keep quiet. This is about two-thirds of the way down page 109. In English you say:

"But I can assure you Mr Berezovsky did not keep quiet; it's just that it was not relevant to these proceedings and to what we're discussing now."

Do you remember what Mr Berezovsky did talk about that wasn't relevant to these proceedings? Or do you just remember generally that he said things that weren't relevant?

A. I remember; I am simply not quite sure that we have to talk about it here. This is not what we're discussing now. It's a bit embarrassing for me to discuss our personal affairs.

Q. I see.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So you remember he was talking about either your or his personal affairs; is that right?

A. (Untranslated)

MR SUMPTION: I'm not going to ask you to be any more explicit about that. But you remember a particular conversation?

A. Yes. I can tell about a part of that conversation. He arrived from Aspen, he was saying how good it is, that the skiing there is so much better than in Europe and for me to absolutely try Aspen, and that was the least harmful part of our conversation. And the rest it seems to be should not be discussed.

Q. Yes, I quite understand.

Now, could you please turn on finally to page 131 of Day 23. Now, what you're being asked about here by Mr Rabinowitz is why you haven't disclosed any memorandum to your team describing the terms agreed with Mr Patarkatsishvili about the payment of his commission. This is about the commission concerning aluminium and it's about your agreement in 2003 with Mr Patarkatsishvili about how his commission would be paid; that's the subject that's being discussed.

The question that Mr Rabinowitz is asking you is: why have you not disclosed any memoranda, any written memoranda to your team describing what had been agreed about that with Mr Patarkatsishvili?

And the question I want to ask you is this: what is your practice about sending written memoranda to your team?

A. At some point I was -- at some day I was talking about that. It's very rare that I make notes and I communicate with my team, with people that I work with. I sleep...

THE INTERPRETER: Sorry, the interpreter apologises.

A. People that I eat with three times a day, it's very strange for me to enter into correspondence with them. We never correspond between ourselves; we talk.

MR SUMPTION: Thank you.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Rabinowitz, you've got no further questions arising out of re-examination?

MR RABINOWITZ: No.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Abramovich, thank you very much for coming along and giving your evidence. You may be released and talk about the case and talk about your evidence with anyone. Thank you very much.

(The witness withdrew)

MR GILLIS: My Lady will recall that we're now interposing the last of Mr Berezovsky's witnesses, Mr Pompadur.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. Do you want to call him in the quarter of an hour we've got before lunch or would you rather start again at 1.50?

MR GILLIS: If it would be convenient to start, I'd start, because I think Mr Pompadur is under some time pressure to get away.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Well, let's start with him.

MR GILLIS: Could Mr Pompadur please be called.

My Lady, Mr Pompadur is giving his evidence in English. He's an American.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. (Pause)

MR GILLIS: My Lady, I do apologise, I thought that he was at the back of the court.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Don't worry. Is he in the room?

MR GILLIS: Yes, he is. I'm sure he's just coming through.
(Pause)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Can there be silence in court and no movement while the witness is being sworn.

MR IRVING POMPADUR (sworn)

Examination-in-chief by MR GILLIS

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Please sit down, Mr Pompadur, if you would like to.

THE WITNESS: Thank you, my Lady.

MR GILLIS: Mr Pompadur, could you please just confirm that you don't have a telephone or electronic device with you?

A. Correct.

Q. Thank you very much indeed.

Could Mr Pompadur please be given bundle D3, open at tab 19.

At page 103 we have the first page of your statement D3/19/103 and then could I ask you to turn to page 109 in that bundle D3/19/109. We have the paginated numbers in the bottom right-hand side.

Is that your signature?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. And could you please confirm that this is your first and your only witness statement in these proceedings?

A. That's correct.

Q. And could I please ask you to look at paragraph 20 in your witness statement D3/19/108.

A. Yes.

Q. You there indicate that at the time of making this statement you've not been able to locate any diaries to see if you can pinpoint the dates of the meeting in June 2001 and their location.

A. Correct.

Q. Could I ask you this: have you subsequently been able to locate any diaries?

A. No.

Q. And could I ask you to confirm that the contents of this, your statement, are true to the best of your knowledge and belief?

A. They are true to the best of my knowledge and belief, yes.

MR GILLIS: Thank you. If you could just wait there,

I think Mr Sumption has some questions for you.

Cross-examination by MR SUMPTION

MR SUMPTION: Good morning, Mr Pompadur.

You describe yourself as a longstanding personal and professional friend of both Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili; that's right, isn't it?

A. Correct.

Q. Roughly how often have you met Mr Berezovsky since his departure from Russia in 2000?

A. 40 times.

Q. Right. And have those meetings continued right up to recent times?

A. Yes.

Q. What about Mr Patarkatsishvili: roughly how often have you met him between 2000 and his death in early 2008?

A. I'd say a little bit less, maybe 30 times.

Q. Right. And did those meetings continue right up to shortly before his death?

A. I'm sorry, a little louder?

Q. Did those meetings with Mr Patarkatsishvili continue until right up to shortly before his death?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, your professional dealings with Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Berezovsky, as I understand it, were not in any way concerned with oil?

A. Any way concerned with...?

Q. Oil.

A. No.

Q. Or Sibneft?

A. No, correct.

Q. So, so far as those matters arose in conversation, they arose incidentally to the main business?

A. Correct.

Q. Now, when you met Mr Berezovsky or Mr Patarkatsishvili, was it usually for business reasons or did you also meet them on purely social occasions?

A. Both.

Q. Both. Now, when you met them for business reasons, as I understand it, that was generally about your media joint venture in Russia?

A. Correct.

Q. Now --

A. Let me -- I'm sorry, let me... it also had to do with media in Latvia and in Georgia as well.

Q. Understood.

Now, have you discussed with Mr Berezovsky since 2000 his allegation that he was forced by Mr Abramovich to sell out of ORT and Sibneft? Is this a subject that has come up in conversation since 2000?

A. Yes.

Q. Regularly or just very occasionally?

A. I'm not quite sure how you define "occasionally" and "regularly".

Q. Well, give us the answer in your own words.

A. It has come up quite often.

Q. Right.

Now, Mr Voronoff also works for News International, or did. Are you also a friend of Mr Voronoff?

A. Yes.

Q. And have you discussed Mr Berezovsky's complaints about the conduct of Mr Abramovich in relation to ORT and Sibneft with Mr Voronoff?

A. Yes.

Q. Again, over what period and with what degree of frequency, roughly?

A. More frequently and quite often.

Q. Right.

Now, when you have been told so often and have discussed so often Mr Abramovich's alleged role in the sale of ORT and Sibneft, would you agree that it must be rather difficult for you to remember when some particular part of the story was first told to you?

A. Correct.

Q. Now, you've confirmed that you have not been able to find your diary since writing your witness statement. Can you tell us, looking at paragraph 19 of your witness statement, what it is that enables you to say that it was in June 2001 that you spent that week that you refer to with Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili?

- A. It was unusual for me to spend that amount of time anywhere and I remember it was an extended period of time and we discussed a number of matters having to do with media and how -- what the effect would be of Mr Berezovsky and Badri leaving Russia on our joint venture.
- Q. Well, I understand that it was unusual for you to spend as long as a week in one place, but what is it that leads you to think that that unusual event occurred in June 2001 rather than at some other point in time?
- A. Because it was tied into my birthday, which is June 25, and I remember I had some difficulty in timing-wise, and that's why it stuck in my memory.
- Q. I mean, I take it that you have a birthday once a year?
- A. At least once a year.
- Q. Now, was Mr Voronoff present through the extended week that you're referring to at paragraph 19?
- A. Yes.
- Q. Now, Mr Voronoff's own evidence is that he has diary records of having spoken to Mr Patarkatsishvili on the phone on several occasions between 6 and 22 June and that he met Mr Patarkatsishvili in person on 30 June.

Are you aware of that evidence that he's given?

A. No, I'm not.

Q. Right. Now, Mr Voronoff does not seem to have any diary record, so far as his evidence suggests, of spending time with Mr Berezovsky at that particular stage in June. But you are sure that whenever this extended week happened, it was on an occasion when Mr Voronoff was present?

A. That's my best recollection.

MR SUMPTION: Thank you very much, Mr Pompadur. I have no other questions to ask you.

MR MALEK: I have no questions.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Any other questions?

Yes, Mr Gillis.

MR GILLIS: My Lady, I have no re-examination.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, thank you very much indeed, Mr Pompadur, for coming to give your evidence. You may be released.

(The witness withdrew)

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, I'm not going to suggest that we should call Mr Gorodilov at 12.55.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well then, I'll sit again at 2 o'clock.

(12.55 pm)

(The short adjournment)

(2.03 pm)

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, I call Mr Gorodilov.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, very well. Is he giving evidence in English or in Russian?

MR SUMPTION: In Russian.

MR ANDREY GORODILOV (affirmed)

(All answers interpreted unless otherwise indicated)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you very much. Please sit down if you would like to.

Examination-in-chief by MR SUMPTION

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, could I pass up a list of corrections which I propose to ask the witness to prove. (Handed)

Good afternoon, Mr Gorodilov, I wonder if you could take bundle E2 and turn to flag 4 E2/04/1. You have made three witness statements in this action and this, I think, is the first of them. Can you confirm that?

A. Yes.

Q. And you'll find your signature on page 81 in the Russian text at the end of the flag E2/04/81; is that correct?

A. Yes, this is my signature.

Q. Now, there are, I think, a couple of corrections that you wish to make to this. Have you got a copy with you of the corrections? If not, perhaps a copy could be supplied.

You are being handed a Russian text which the rest of us have in English. (Handed).

A. Yes, these are the amendments I'd like to make.

Q. Right. Now, I think the first relates to paragraph 22, which is about the precise chronology of the first of the auctions for the 49 per cent, and the second is a very minor correction to paragraph 29, changing the number 49 to 40.

A. Yes, that is correct.

Q. Subject to those two corrections, is your first witness statement true?

A. Yes, it's true.

Q. I'm sorry, I referred to paragraph 22; there's also a correction to paragraph 23, but I think your answer covers both.

A. Indeed, that's true.

Q. Now, your second statement will be found in bundle E4 at flag 5 and perhaps you could be shown that E4/05/52. Is this your second witness statement?

A. Yes, that's so.

Q. And is it your signature that we see on page 86 E4/05/86?

A. Yes, it's my signature.

Q. And is that statement true?

A. Yes, they are.

Q. Finally, Mr Gorodilov, at bundle E8, flag 2 E8/02/14, is this your third witness statement?

A. Yes, this is my third witness statement.

Q. And on page 24 E8/02/24, is that your signature?

A. Yes, it's my signature.

Q. And is that statement also true?

A. Yes, it is true.

MR SUMPTION: Thank you very much. If you just wait there for questions to be asked in cross-examination.

Cross-examination by MR RABINOWITZ

MR RABINOWITZ: Good afternoon, Mr Gorodilov, and let me apologise in advance if I mispronounce your name.

I shall try my best to get it right.

A. You're pronouncing it completely correctly.

Q. Thank you.

You explain in your witness statement that you first started to work for Mr Abramovich in Moscow in October 1995, when you were 24 years old; is that correct?

A. Yes, that's true.

Q. And prior to that you had been working as an engineer at Noyabrskneftegas, where your father, Viktor Gorodilov, was the general director; correct?

A. I was deputy chief engineer in one of the structural units of Noyabrskneftegas. The unit was actually overhauling drilling rigs. In fact it was a plant.

- Q. And from 1995, when you were 24, until the year 2001, you worked for Mr Abramovich in businesses he controlled; is that correct?
- A. Yes, it's correct.
- Q. So from October 1995 until October 1996 you worked for Mr Abramovich in a general role relating to the acquisition of Sibneft; that is correct, isn't it?
- A. What are the dates? Could you repeat them again, please?
- Q. October 1995 to October 1996.
- A. Yes, it's correct.
- Q. And in October 1996 you were appointed as the head of Sibneft's investment and credit department; is that correct?
- A. Yes, it's correct.
- Q. And then from March 1997 until May 1998 you were the director of Sibneft's Moscow office?
- A. That's true.
- Q. And then from May to July 1998 you were Sibneft vice president and head of Sibneft finance projects department; correct?
- A. Yes, it's correct.
- Q. And then from July 1998 to March 2001 you were the first vice president of Sibneft?
- A. That's also true.

- Q. And then in March 2001 your career took a change when you went into politics; that's right, isn't it?
- A. Yes, I became a public official.
- Q. You became first deputy governor of Chukotka from March 2001 to October 2008?
- A. Yes, it's true.
- Q. And at the time Mr Abramovich was the governor of Chukotka?
- A. Yes, it's true.
- Q. And then from October 2008 onwards you've been a member of the Chukotka Duma?
- A. Yes, I was.
- Q. And during this period Mr Abramovich has also been a member of the Chukotka Duma; is that correct?
- A. Yes.
- Q. And so is this correct: since you were 24 years old, you have never held a job which wasn't either working for or with Mr Abramovich?
- A. As of which date?
- Q. Since you were 24 years old.
- A. From October '95, yes.
- Q. And you are now part of Mr Abramovich's team, a small group of people whom Mr Abramovich absolutely trusts and relies upon; is that correct?
- A. Yes, it's correct.

- Q. And you're also a very close friend of Mr Abramovich; is that right?
- A. Yes, it's true.
- Q. And you are also Mr Abramovich's partner and a co-investor in various businesses with him; is that right?
- A. Yes, it's true.
- Q. And can you, if you can do this briefly, tell the court in relation to what businesses you're a partner of Mr Abramovich?
- A. Highland Gold: it's a gold mining company. I have a small holding also in a company called Evraz or Euraz. Currently I think that's it.
- Q. And since you have started working for or with Mr Abramovich, you have become very wealthy indeed? I don't want to get into a debate as to how wealthy "very wealthy" is, but would you agree that in general terms you have become very wealthy?
- A. I became a wealthy man, let's put it that way.
- Q. Would it be fair to say, Mr Gorodilov, that you must feel a very great deal of loyalty towards Mr Abramovich?
- A. What do you mean by "loyalty"?
- Q. Well, I don't know how else to put it. You feel very close to -- you would like to ensure that his interests do well?

A. I would wish his interests and his businesses to flourish but you can't say that I'd do anything and everything for that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: But loyalty is a concept you understand; yes?

A. Yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So do you feel loyal to Mr Abramovich?

A. To some extent, yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: You see, I have to suggest, Mr Gorodilov, you cannot really be regarded as an independent witness of the matters about which you are testifying, can you?

A. I think that I tell the truth, I am telling the truth. I was one of the participants of the events on which I'm giving my evidence.

Q. Very well. What I would like to ask you about in particular is the evidence you give about the purchase of Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili's shares in ORT.

It's your evidence that Mr Abramovich informed you that he would be buying Mr Berezovsky's and Mr Patarkatsishvili's shares in ORT in either late October or early December (sic); that's right, isn't it?

A. Yes, that's true.

Q. And you also say that Mr Abramovich did not inform you as to why he had decided to buy the ORT shares --

MR SUMPTION: Did my learned friend mean to say late October/early November? Because that I think is what was actually in the... Perhaps the question should be reasked if my learned friend did get it wrong.

MR RABINOWITZ: I did get it wrong.

It's your evidence that Mr Abramovich informed you that he would be buying Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili's shares in ORT in either late October or early November; that's right, isn't it?

A. He told me that he'd agreed to buy end of October or early November.

Q. And you also say that Mr Abramovich did not inform you as to why he had decided to buy the ORT shares? That's at paragraph 47 of your witness statement E2/04/18.

A. He did not inform me.

Q. Can I ask you, please, to go to paragraph 50 of your first witness statement: bundle E2, tab 4, page 19 in the English E2/04/19 and page 60 in the Russian E2/04/60.

A. Page 60, is it, in the Russian text?

Q. I believe so. I'll just check that.

A. Okay, I've got it.

Q. Can I ask you to read paragraph 50 to yourself, please.

(Pause)

A. I've read it.

Q. Thank you.

You say there that you flew to Nice with Mr Abramovich on 6 November 2000, returning that evening, spending the day separately. Can we just be clear about what you say about this trip.

You don't claim in your witness statement to have attended a meeting with either Mr Berezovsky or Mr Patarkatsishvili, do you?

A. I left late at night together with Mr Abramovich, it was around midnight, so I think perhaps the 6th already started. Then I spent the whole day in Nice and in Cap d'Antibes and then we returned again late in the evening; it was already the 7th in Moscow. I was not present at the meeting with Badri and Mr Berezovsky.

Q. Right. Can you listen to the questions, please. We'll get on a lot quicker if you do.

And you also don't claim in your witness statement that Mr Abramovich told you that he was attending a meeting with Mr Berezovsky or Mr Patarkatsishvili?

A. No, no, I do state, I do state that he told me that he was at the meeting with Berezovsky.

Q. Where do you say in your witness statement he told you he was at a meeting with Mr Abramovich (sic) and Mr Berezovsky?

A. Where I'm saying in 50: as far as I know, they had a meeting -- where, as far as I know, there was a meeting with Berezovsky and possibly Mr Patarkatsishvili. So it's paragraph 50 of my first witness statement.

Q. But you don't say there that you were told by Mr Abramovich; you say you believe there was a meeting.

A. Well, as far as I remember, I saw Roman, Mr Abramovich, leaving for the meeting.

Q. You don't actually remember why you went to France on this trip, do you? You say:

"I cannot now recall..."

A. I recalled -- remembered this trip quite by chance. As we were preparing for these proceedings and preparing our evidence, I remembered that I went to France off-season, in November. It was raining hard. We arrived late at night. I personally wasted a day, a whole day, and basically it was different from what one normally sees in the south of France. And at some point I looked into my passport and saw when it took place, and Roman also checked his passport, and then we realised that it was that year on 6 November.

Q. You say that you arrived -- just hang on one second, please.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Gillis, I think you should turn your microphones off because it's very easy to pick up what you're saying.

MR GILLIS: Thank you.

MR RABINOWITZ: You see, in the evidence you have given, you said that you left Moscow after midnight and you say that you arrived in the south of France at night.

A. Yes.

Q. How can it be that you left Moscow at night and you arrive in the south of France at night as well?

A. Well, there's a three-hour time difference and it takes three hours' flight or three and a half hours in the air. So if we took off half past midnight, then by about 1.00 am local time we were in Nice.

Q. Well, that's the morning, isn't it?

A. 1.00 am, morning.

Q. All right.

Now, although you suggest you might have been on hand "so that Mr Abramovich could discuss any details of the structuring of the [ORT] transaction", you don't suggest in your witness statement that Mr Abramovich did in fact ask you for details of the structure of ORT or that he contacted you at all while you were apart.

A. He did not contact me while I was in Nice. I was expecting it to happen, but it did not take place.

Q. You see, Mr Gorodilov, your evidence in this paragraph contains nothing more than a series of suppositions or reconstructions based on the fact that you have passport stamps suggesting that you went to Nice on 6 November; that's right, isn't it?

A. I don't agree with you.

Q. Now, one of the suppositions, Mr Gorodilov, is that you might have been on hand "so that Mr Abramovich could discuss any details of the structuring of the [ORT] transaction". I just wonder if we can examine that for a moment.

You will obviously be aware of the meeting between Mr Abramovich and Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili at Le Bourget on 6 December; that's a month later, isn't it? Well, it is.

A. Yes, I did -- I was, rather. I was aware.

Q. Mr Abramovich claims in his evidence that the meeting at Le Bourget was arranged specifically for the purpose of discussing possible structures for a sale of Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili's interest in ORT to Mr Abramovich; that's right, isn't it? You're aware of that evidence?

A. Yes.

Q. And do you not also say that this was a meeting that had, as one of its main purposes, to discuss possible transaction structures for a sale of Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili's interests in ORT to Mr Abramovich?

- A. Well, as far as I know, the essence of the meeting was to give answers to questions that were still unresolved. They had to be discussed to finally implement the deal.
- Q. Dealing with structures, that was one of the things that needed to be discussed; that's right, isn't it?
- A. The thing is that structures, the structures were changing in the course of this deal. There were certain structures that had been agreed, but once they were being implemented, problems arose or the other side expressed -- I mean Badri by "the other side" -- expressed wishes. So by that time it was a dragged-out process and the meeting was needed to sort of move the situation forward.
- Q. And your evidence is that you briefed Mr Abramovich in advance about possible scenarios or structures for this meeting; correct?
- A. Yes, I briefed him.
- Q. And you did not attend the meeting at Le Bourget; we know that.
- A. I did not attend it. I did not attend the meeting in Le Bourget.
- Q. And it's never been suggested that you flew to France for this meeting, did you?
- A. I did not fly to France for that meeting. I remained in Moscow.

- Q. And when Mr Abramovich needed input from you at the meeting about scenarios or structures, he telephoned you, didn't he?
- A. On 6 December that's exactly what happened, yes.
- Q. But in light of those facts as to how the matter of your giving assistance on structuring was dealt with at Le Bourget, your supposition or suggestion that you would have flown all the way to Nice with Mr Abramovich just so that you could be nearby just in case he wanted to discuss details of the ORT transaction structure seems somewhat questionable. Do you agree?
- A. I don't agree.
- Q. Now, can I ask you, please, then to look at paragraph 48 of your first witness statement: bundle E2, tab 4, page 18 in the English E2/04/18, page 59 in the Russian E2/04/59.
- A. Sorry, which paragraph?
- Q. 48. Can I ask you to read that to yourself, please.
- (Pause)
- A. I've read it.
- Q. You identify here the people who you say were involved in the structuring of the ORT transaction and on your side you say it was yourself, Ms Popenkova, Ms Panchenko and Mr Gorenichy, who was head of Sibneft's legal department; that's right, isn't it?

- A. Yes, that's right, and these people had different degrees of involvement; they were involved into this process to a different degree.
- Q. And on Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili's side, you suggest that it was Mr Fomichev and Mr Ivlev, who was a lawyer who acted for Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Berezovsky, who were involved; is that right?
- A. Mainly, of course, Ruslan Fomichev was responsible for this deal. But Pavel Ivlev, because he was a tax consultant for Mr Berezovsky and Badri, then of course -- Badri or Ruslan, I can't remember who told me that -- the final structure should be passed by him and he should be in agreement.
- Q. Now, just so that I understand this, it's your case, isn't it, that the contractual documentation for the sale of ORT was drafted by your team, Mr Abramovich's team, including yourself, Mr Gorenichy, Ms Panchenko and Ms Popenkova? Is that correct?
- A. We were preparing draft documents, then I was showing these draft documents to Ruslan Fomichev, who agreed them. If he disagreed with something, he put in amendments, and after that we signed these documents.
- MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So you had the responsibility for producing the drafts?
- A. Yes, we performed the back-office function here.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you.

MR RABINOWITZ: Can you tell us who took primary responsibility within your team for producing those draft documents?

A. What do you mean by "primary"? I was responsible for the deal.

Q. Now, Mr Gorodilov, Mr Abramovich accepted in his evidence that members of his team had, on occasion, engaged in the practice of backdating documents. You were present when he gave that evidence. Do you remember that?

A. Yes, I remember.

Q. And I don't suppose you suggest that Mr Abramovich was wrong about that?

A. I don't know.

Q. You're suggesting you don't know at all about whether members of Mr Abramovich's team were involved in backdating documents; is that your evidence?

A. No, this is not my evidence. Indeed, perhaps we've had occasions when the date of an agreement is a particular date and physically the date was signed two/three/four days later. Yes, I remember such occasions. In particular, in my evidence I'm relating when ORT shares purchase and sale agreements were physically signed. They're dated 25 December: this is the date when we, from our side, signed these contracts; but Mr Berezovsky and Badri physically, from their side, signed these documents on 29 December.

- Q. Mr Abramovich confirmed that he was aware of the fact that members of his team did backdate documents at the time and what I want to ask you, Mr Gorodilov, is whether you were also aware of that practice.
- A. No. I don't know anything about it being a practice.
- Q. Well, let me put that slightly differently: of this being done within your team at Sibneft.
- A. No. Well, perhaps on some occasions that I don't recall.
- Q. Can I ask you this: have you yourself ever backdated documents, Mr Gorodilov?
- A. Let's determine first: what does it mean to backdate documents? If you mean two or three or four days, do you mean that backdate -- that that constitutes backdating? I can't rule this out.
- Q. You can't tell us whether or not you yourself have personally backdated documents? Let me be more specific: backdated documents which are relevant to the issues in this case, in particular ORT.
- A. To ORT? The sales and purchase agreement was signed on 25 December by us; the other side signed it on 29 December. That's it. I can't remember anything else.

Q. Let me be clear about that. You're suggesting that that is the only document you're aware of that was backdated in relation to the ORT transaction; is that right? Is that your evidence?

A. I can't remember any other documents where there were any questions about dates.

Q. Very well. Let's just look at some of the documents which you have primary responsibility for producing. Can we begin by going to bundle H(A)26, page 27 in the Russian H(A)26/27 and page 1 in the English H(A)26/1.

Now, this, as you I think will recognise, is the share purchase agreement which I think you and Mr Gorenichy produced for Akmos to acquire Mr Berezovsky's shares in ORT. Can you see that?

A. Yes, I can see that.

Q. And, as you can see, the agreement was dated 25 December but you explain that it was not actually signed by Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili until 27 December; that's right, isn't it?

A. I said 29 December it was signed by the other side.

Q. Very well. That's fine.

Now, at this time ORT-KB owned 38 per cent of ORT, didn't it?

A. Yes, it is so.

Q. And it's your evidence that the price at which Mr Abramovich agreed to pay for 49 per cent of ORT, which would obviously include this 38 per cent, was $150 million; that's right, isn't it?

A. Initially the price was 100, then it changed to 150; that's true.

Q. Thank you.

So, just doing the maths, if one was paying $150 million for 49 per cent of ORT, then for the 38 per cent of ORT that was held through ORT-KB, that would have a value attributed to it of $116 million; that's right, isn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. Under this agreement, your vehicle company -- Mr Abramovich's vehicle company Akmos Trade was acquiring Mr Berezovsky's near 50 per cent interest in ORT-KB. One sees that, if one needs to, from clause 2.1, but you're familiar with that, I think?

A. Yes.

Q. If I can just ask you to look at the next document in the bundle: that's page 38. Sorry, page 12 in English H(A)26/12, page 38 in Russian H(A)26/38. We have an identical agreement for Mr Patarkatsishvili acquiring his 50 per cent in ORT-KB?

A. Yes.

Q. So, taking these two agreements together, this is how you would be acquiring the 38 per cent interest in ORT held through ORT-KB; correct?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. Now, the agreements are pretty much identical so we can deal with this just by looking at Mr Berezovsky's agreement, beginning at page 27 for the Russian H(A)26/27 and page 1 in the English H(A)26/1.

If you look at paragraph 2.2 --

A. Yes.

Q. -- it says there that the purchase price for the shares was US$5 million?

A. Yes, that's true.

Q. And there's an identical provision obviously in Mr Patarkatsishvili's contract, isn't there: again, $5 million for his shares?

A. Yes.

Q. So that the total price, according to these contracts, that was being paid for these shares was $10 million; is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. That was obviously not anywhere approaching the true price that you were paying for these shares, was it?

A. These contracts reflect the agreement which was reached on 6 December at Roman's meeting with Mr Berezovsky and Badri.

- Q. Just repeating my question: the price stated in these contracts was obviously not anywhere near approaching the true price that you were paying for these shares; that's right, isn't it?
- A. In order to answer this question I think I need to explain this history of this deal, from beginning to the end.
- Q. From beginning to end may take a long time but if you can give a short explanation, that would be helpful.
- A. I'll try and be quick.

Initially there was an agreement to pay $100 million for 49 per cent of ORT shares. Later I met with Ruslan Fomichev, who, after a while, showed me how Badri and Boris had these shares registered officially: partly they were registered for Logovaz on nominal price, 1,100,000, and the others registered through ORT-KB.

Given the fact that we had to pay physical persons, together with Ruslan we agreed a mechanism, a structure that Logovaz shares are transferred on their nominal value and ORT-KB shares are transferred to physical persons and they are sold at 100 million. Given that, the structure was agreed and approved and after mid-November we started to implement it.

In mid-November, when, as far as I remember, Mr Berezovsky decided not to go back to Russia, on 14 November in particular, Badri and Ruslan said that they're happy with everything in this deal, but at the same time they would wish to receive the cash on their accounts in London, on a physical person's account in London. For this to have been done legally, we would have had to receive permission from the Central Bank of Russia in accordance with currency regulation of Russian, legislation on currency regulation.

Then we started to look at the possibility of Mr Berezovsky obtaining such a permission. We concluded that at that point in time it would be rather difficult to get that. I even asked Mr Abramovich to go and try and help us solve this problem.

After that, when Roman said that we won't be able to solve this problem this way, we, together with Ruslan, started to discuss alternative options; for example, to have -- to transmit, to transfer the shares offshore and then to pay through dividends, but for some reason Badri and Ruslan were against that. Then the arrangement with an option arose. Then we discussed a large number of other mechanisms that are disclosed in various documents. And finally, on 6 December, we agreed that the deal in Russia will amount to 10 million.

Badri said that they would be happy with this amount to be paid to them in Russia and the rest of the money, the rest of that amount, as finally we agreed that the payments would be increased by 100 million, so we would increase the usual payments according to the established practice by 100 million in December.

Q. These are then the documents you produced to buy the ORT-KB shares. Can I just then ask you to look at the other document that you produced in order to acquire Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili's interests from Logovaz. You will find that if you go to H(A)26 at page 49 in the Russian H(A)26/49. In the English it's at B(B)2, page 91 B(B)2.04/91.

A. Yes, I have it.

Q. Unfortunately I don't. Give me one second. (Pause)

I do apologise. B(B)2, page 91. Now, as you see, Mr Gorodilov, this is the share purchase agreement which you and Mr Gorenichy produced for Betas to acquire the remaining 11 per cent of ORT that made up Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili's 49 per cent from Logovaz.

A. Yes. 11 per cent, yes.

Q. And again, the agreement is dated 25 December. I think your evidence is that it was not actually signed by Mr Frolov on behalf of Logovaz until 28 December 2000. Is that right?

- A. Again, on the 25th our side signed it, although -- no, perhaps -- I think we resigned them. As I've already mentioned earlier, I'm explaining in detail the situation when the contract was physically signed, indeed on 28 December.
- Q. And if you look at the purchase price for these shares at clause 1.1.1, it suggests that you are paying just a nominal purchase price for these 11 per cent of Logovaz; that's correct, isn't it?
- A. Yes, that's true.
- Q. And again, that doesn't really reflect the value of the 11 per cent shares which were being acquired, does it, or indeed the purchase price?
- A. This reflects nominal value of those shares.
- Q. Now, what I want to do next, Mr Gorodilov, is to talk about the steps which you say were required for the sale of Mr Berezovsky's shareholding in ORT-KB to Mr Abramovich's company.
- Can we begin just by looking at paragraph 52 of your first witness statement: it's E2, tab 4, page 20 in the English E2/04/20 and 63 in the Russian E2/04/63.
- Can I ask you just to read paragraph 52 to yourself.
- A. I've read it.
- Q. You explain here that Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili were not personal shareholders at this time -- you're talking about October/early November -- and that the shares were held by seven separate legal entities; correct?

A. Yes, that's right.

Q. And at this time neither Mr Berezovsky nor Mr Patarkatsishvili had ever had a personal shareholding in ORT-KB, had they?

A. Personally, no. Perhaps they did it through companies. I don't know who owns these companies.

Q. They didn't have a personal share; that's right, isn't it?

A. There were no shares that were registered in their name.

Q. And in fact not all of the legal entities listed here were wholly owned by Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili. One of the companies you see here was Consolidated Bank, and it's common ground that Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili were not the sole shareholders of that company; that's right, isn't it?

A. Yes, that's right, I suppose.

Q. And what you explain is that in order for Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili to sell their shares to Mr Abramovich, first they would have to acquire them from the companies and then Mr Abramovich's companies would have to acquire the shares from them; correct?

A. Yes, correct.

Q. Thank you.

Now, can you next look at paragraph 58 of your statement: it's at page 22 in the English E2/04/22 and 63 in the Russian E2/04/63.

Just so you have the context of this, you are talking about a notice which was addressed to SBS Bank, which was a minor shareholder in ORT-KB. Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. And can we just have a look at this notice: you'll find it at bundle H(A)23, page 60 in the Russian H(A)23/60 and page 61 in the English H(A)23/61.

A. I can see it.

Q. In paragraph 58 you explain why this notice was produced. You say:

"Under the law, this notice is sent if shareholders of a closed joint-stock company are selling their shares to a third party. If the shares are sold between shareholders (inside the company), no notice to other shareholders (and/or) the company itself is required."

So if Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili were selling their shares in ORT-KB, which was a closed joint stock company, to Mr Abramovich or his vehicles, then a notice of this sort would be required to be sent and this notice had to be sent to SBS because it owned a small shareholding in the company; is that right?

A. Yes, it's right.

Q. And I can tell you, Mr Gorodilov, that we don't dispute what you say there about the Russian law regarding closed joint stock companies.

And then, just looking further at paragraph 58, you explain towards the end of that paragraph that:

"Because of rules establishing a waiting period of no less than 30 days after notification, we understood that the notice had to be given in advance..."

And then you say that if you did that, you would "have everything ready to close the transaction when the waiting period ended". Okay?

A. Yes, okay.

Q. And your evidence then is that the notice to SBS had to be served because you could not make a transfer of the shares to Mr Abramovich until 30 days after it was served. Correct?

A. Yes, it's correct.

Q. And you say that those involved, including you, understood this requirement, which is why the notice was served.

A. The notice was prepared by ORT-KB, which at that time belonged to or rather was managed by Badri and Ruslan Fomichev. So our team did not make this notice, we did not prepare the text; in fact Fomichev Ruslan is the author.

Q. Don't put the notice away, but can you just have a look at paragraphs 52 and 53 of your witness statement E2/04/20. You've looked at paragraph 52 before. Just look at 53 as well.

A. I've read it.

Q. You say there that you jointly decided with Mr Fomichev that the shares in ORT-KB should be transferred to the personal names of Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili and it appears that you say that this happened after you give evidence of your trip to Nice.

So presumably you suggest that this decision which you say was made between you and Mr Fomichev was made after you came back from Nice on 7 November 2000?
6 November.

A. Where am I saying that?

Q. Well, if you look at the way your witness statement is drawn up, you deal with the trip to Nice, including at paragraph 50, on 6 November; you then tell us at the end of paragraph 50 that you arrived back in Moscow on 7 November; and then you talk about the preparations for this.

Are you saying that it wasn't done when you returned back from Nice on 7 November?

- A. In my witness statement I am writing that the beginning of this deal was early October -- late October/early November and they belonged to -- they did not belong to physical persons; and then I'm saying that Ruslan and I agreed that they should be transferred to physical persons. So we agreed on that prior to 6 November.
- Q. Well, you say "[you] agreed on that prior to 6 November". This must be right: your evidence is that this decision was made after you were informed by Mr Abramovich that he was buying Mr Berezovsky's and Mr Patarkatsishvili's shares; that's right, isn't it?
- A. Can you repeat that, please, again?
- Q. Your evidence as to when this discussion that you say happened with Mr Fomichev occurred was after you had been told by Mr Abramovich that he was buying Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili's shares? It's difficult to see --
- A. Yes. First Roman told me that he is buying the shares and then he asked me to contact Fomichev. I contacted Fomichev and we sketched the plan of action.
- Q. All right. That tells us that that discussion that you had with Mr Fomichev must have been in late October or early November because that is when you tell us that you were told by Mr Abramovich about this plan to buy the shares; is that right?

- A. Yes, that is right.
- Q. So, at the very earliest, the conversation you say you had with Fomichev in relation to arranging for this was in late October/early November; correct?
- A. Yes, after Roman told me about it.
- Q. And then you say -- this is at paragraph 53 of your statement E2/04/20 -- that you arranged those transfers and they were completed on 9 November. Do you see that in paragraph 53 of your statement?
- A. Yes, we agreed with Ruslan that shares should be re-registered and Ruslan did it and he sent us the documents confirming that this took place and we just looked at whether we were satisfied or not.
- Q. Mr Gorodilov, please listen to my questions. What I said to you was that you arranged those transfers and they were completed on 9 November, according to your evidence. Is that right? You see that at paragraph 53 of your statement.
- A. Together with Ruslan, I organised for the shares to be re-registered to physical persons on 9 November.
- Q. And I think you may already have said this, but you don't suggest that you drafted the agreements by which the shares were transferred, do you?
- A. No, we did not prepare these agreements.
- Q. Now, one of the share purchase agreements that was produced you can find at bundle H(A)23 between pages 26 and 32 in the Russian H(A)23/26, pages 26T to 32T for the English version H(A)23/26T.

You see that this is the share purchase agreement prepared for the transfer between Consolidated Bank and Mr Berezovsky?

A. Yes, I can see that.

Q. And if you look at paragraph 3.1, you can see that the purchase price that was agreed is said to be 212,990 rubles?

A. Yes, I can see that.

Q. If you go to page 31, you can see that there is a deed of transfer prepared for these shares. Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. And also, on page 32, a transfer order. Do you see that?

A. Yes.

Q. And there are a number of these agreements which have been produced and they're all in broadly identical terms. I'm not going to take you through them all. For the transcript, those are at pages 19 to 53.

Each of these share purchase agreements is for the sale and transfer of shares in ORT from the company which owned them to either Mr Berezovsky or Mr Patarkatsishvili; you're aware of that?

A. Yes.

Q. And you've already explained, Mr Gorodilov, that before these transfers neither Mr Berezovsky nor Mr Patarkatsishvili was a personal shareholder in ORT-KB; that's right, isn't it? That was your evidence earlier.

A. Well, at that time when I saw the structure, as of 1 November Berezovsky personally did not own shares in ORT-KB.

Q. And it follows, I think --

THE INTERPRETER: Berezovsky or Badri personally did not, I'm so sorry.

MR RABINOWITZ: It follows, I think, that under the rules of joint stock companies, they could not buy the shares in ORT-KB until the companies which owned them had sent a notice to SBS notifying it of the planned stock sale and offering SBS the right of first refusal? That would follow from what you have already explained.

A. Yes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: There's an interference with the microphone, I don't know what it is.

SOUND OPERATOR: Mobile phone.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Somebody has a mobile phone on. Please could you turn it off.

SOUND OPERATOR: It's a mobile phone that's close to a microphone.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you. Whoever's got the mobile phone on, it's probably on vibrate or something that is causing it to be difficult.

Have you got a mobile phone on you, Mr Gorodilov?

THE WITNESS: No, I haven't.

MR RABINOWITZ: Neither have I.

Now, Mr Gorodilov, your evidence is that the sale of these shares to -- sorry, let me just go back a step.

In light of what you have told us about the rules on joint stock companies, there would have to have been a notice sent to SBS about the planned stock sale offering SBS the right of first refusal; that's right, isn't it?

A. Yes, that is right.

Q. And, as you've explained, there would have to be a 30-day waiting period after that notice before the transfer could be completed; that's right, isn't it?

A. Yes, yes, yes.

Q. Mr Gorodilov, your evidence is that the sale of these shares to Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili was completed on 9 November 2000; is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. But if, as you say, you had jointly decided with Mr Fomichev only in late October or early November that these shares should be transferred to Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili, then a notice to SBS could not have been served even before that date, could it?

A. But all these deals were being made within the joint stock company of a close type; that's number one. And secondly, Ruslan Fomichev was dealing with these matters. We received share sales and purchase agreements and notices that shares have been registered in the name of physical persons.

Q. Could you just answer my question, please.

My question to you was that: if, as you say, you had jointly decided with Mr Fomichev only in late October or early November that these shares should be transferred to Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili, then a notice to SBS could not have been served before that date, could it?

A. Once again I shall repeat: the procedure was implemented by Ruslan Fomichev. We didn't really know or care how it was all undertaken from the legal point of view.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Do you agree that the document or the notice couldn't have been served before late October or early November, which is the question which was put to you?

A. The notice could not have been sent or served but I think it was possible to find a legal construct that would solve their problem.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: What do you mean by "a legal construct"?

A. I mean, I can't answer this question now. We have to look at the charter in detail; we have to look at the law in detail; we have to look at who were the shareholders in these companies and whether this operation could have been undertaken without violating this provision of the law.

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Gorodilov, on your own evidence there could not have been a sale without a 30-day notice having been given and on your own evidence there could not have been a 30-day notice given until late October or early November; that's right, is it not?

A. Yes, that's right.

Q. And if that is right, then the 30-day waiting period -- assuming late October was the date when you say you and Mr Fomichev agreed these matters, the earliest that there could have been a transfer completed was at the end of November; that's right, is it not?

A. Once again I will repeat: transfer of shares was something Ruslan Fomichev was dealing with. ORT-KB did not belong to us, therefore all those seven companies that -- where the shares were registered didn't belong to us either. It appears to me that a legal way could have been found to re-register the shares without violating this provision of the law, but I cannot comment on that now because I do not have the necessary documents.

Q. You see, the reason I'm asking you about this is because you do purport to give evidence about these transfers. But what I suggest to you is that for these transfers from the companies to Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Berezovsky to be completed on 9 November, this would mean that the notice to SBS needed to have been served at the latest on 10 October 2000, and that is a very substantial period before you say you and Mr Fomichev even discussed these matters.

A. Can you repeat the question once again, please?

Q. For the transfer from these companies to Mr Patarkatsishvili and Mr Berezovsky to be completed on 9 November, this would mean that the notice to SBS needed to be served at the latest on 10 October, 30 days before the transfer, and that is a good two weeks before you say you were even told by Mr Abramovich that he wanted to acquire these shares and that you say you agreed with Mr Fomichev that something should be done about it.

A. Possibly they used another way to solve this problem, I don't know.

Q. Can I ask you next, please --

A. Perhaps they obtained agreement from SBS. Apart from a notice and a 30-day waiting time, one could just go to SBS and ask them that they don't mind and get some kind of written --

Q. You have no -- sorry.

A. -- notice from them that they relinquish their rights or something like that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Some sort of waiver, you mean?

THE INTERPRETER: Waiver.

A. Yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: Now, you have no knowledge about that at all and that is certainly not the way you try and describe it by reference to the documents in your witness statement.

Can I ask you next, please, to go to paragraph 56 of your witness statement: it's at page 22 in the English E2/04/22 and 63 in the Russian E2/04/63. Can I ask you to read paragraph 56 to yourself.

A. Which paragraph should I read?

Q. 56. It's very short.

A. I've read it.

Q. So you are talking there about an agreement on 12 November 2000 by which Mr Patarkatsishvili transferred 4,773.75 ORT-KB shares to Mr Berezovsky; do you see that?

A. Yes, I can see that.

Q. Can I ask you, please, to go to bundle H(A)23 and look at page 79 in the Russian H(A)23/79. It's at page 89 in the English H(A)23/89. This is the share sale and purchase agreement that you're referring to, I think dated 12 November; is that correct?

A. Yes, it's correct.

Q. Do you know who drafted this agreement?

A. I am not sure; maybe Ruslan or perhaps ourselves.

Q. So you don't really know at all who drafted this agreement; is that fair?

A. Indeed, I don't know which one of them prepared this agreement.

Q. Can I ask you, please, now to go to bundle H(A)23 and turn to page 63 H(A)23/63 and look at pages 63 to 66.

Your Ladyship will find that that is a Russian-language document. We have prepared an English translation of the document which we'll hand up.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Can the translation be put on Magnum.

Otherwise I've got so many bits of paper.

MR RABINOWITZ: It will be, but just so your Ladyship has it. (Handed)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you.

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, I think this is already in the bundle at H(A)23/66.001T.

MR RABINOWITZ: This may be a draft of that. Just bear with us for this one.

Now, Mr Gorodilov, if you can just look at the document.

A. I've looked at it.

Q. This is a draft of the document that we had just been looking at, at H(A)23, page 79 H(A)23/79, is it not?

A. Yes, that's right.

Q. And at the bottom left-hand corner of the document. Do you see that it has a disclosure reference which ends in the numbers 0031? That is a reference to the system on which disclosure has been made. Do you see that?

A. Yes, I can see that.

Q. Now, on the version that I've just given you from Ringtail, you will see that -- can I just hand you another document which has come off Ringtail which is a draft of that. (Handed)

Perhaps you can confirm that this is a draft of the document that we're looking at?

A. Excuse me, what is it that I need to confirm: that this is a draft of a document which is where?

Q. Which is the document that you were looking at at page 63 to 66 of H(A)23 H(A)23/63.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Can I have a copy of it, please?

(Handed)

A. Yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: The draft that I've given you on Ringtail is the same --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: This is the Russian I'm meant to be looking at?

MR RABINOWITZ: Your Ladyship needs to have the Russian as well.

Mr Gorodilov, on the document that I've handed you in Russian, at the last page of the document is a report which shows the metadata of the document, the draft that I've handed up to you. Do you have that?

A. Yes, I can see that.

Q. And this shows that the author of the document that you were looking at, or the draft, is someone called Alexander Berezin. Do you see that towards the bottom of the page?

A. Yes, I can see that.

Q. Do you know who Mr Berezin is?

A. No.

Q. If you look higher up on that document, do you see there's a reference to "Company Media Most"?

A. Yes, I can see that.

Q. That's Mr Gusinsky's company, isn't it?

A. Well, it's difficult to understand. It says Media Most;

I suppose it can be interpreted as Mr Gusinsky's company. Maybe it's some other company.

Q. Mr Berezin was the lawyer for Mr Gusinsky and for Media Most; are you aware of that?

A. No, I'm not.

Q. Right. Well, take it from me that he is.

And at this time Mr Gusinsky and Media Most were engaged with their own public battle with President Putin about whether or not they would be forced to sell the television station NTV; you're aware of that, I think?

A. Well, possibly.

Q. Mr Gusinsky and Media Most were not in any way involved in the purchase of ORT by Mr Abramovich, were they?

A. Can you repeat the question again, please?

Q. Mr Gusinsky and Media Most were not in any way involved in the purchase of ORT by Mr Abramovich, were they?

A. I know nothing about it.

Q. And therefore you can't really help us about who did create the document that we were looking at, the 12 November document at pages 63 to 66?

A. Obviously we have to ask Mr Ruslan Fomichev this question.

Q. Well, I'm not sure that asking Mr Fomichev this question will help, not least because he's not here, and because according to the Ringtail report it was produced by Mr Berezin.

Now, can we then go back to the document we were looking at, at bundle H(A)23, page 60 in Russian H(A)23/60 and page 61 for the English speakers H(A)23/61. It's the notice to ORT-KB.

A. Yes, I have it. I can see it.

Q. And you see that this notice says -- it's a document which says -- sorry, this is the document containing what is said to have been a "Notification of Shareholder of... ORT-KB on Planned Stock Sale"?

A. Yes, that's so.

Q. And on the face of the document you see that it's dated 10 November 2000; correct?

A. Yes, it's correct.

Q. And if one were to believe what was written on this document, one might be led to believe that Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili were making preparations to sell their shares in ORT-KB to Akmos Trade in November 2000, because this would be thought to be some evidence of that; that's right, isn't it?

A. Why would you have to assume anything if I knew it? Why would...

Q. You see, Mr Gorodilov, you in your witness statement have worked back from documents in order to construct what you say was the way this transaction proceeded, and one of the documents you've worked back from is this notice. And that's why I suggested to you that if you looked at this notice, you would be led to believe that Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili were making preparations to sell their shares in ORT-KB to Akmos Trade in November 2000.

A. Why would I be led to believe anything if I know it? And the notice is dated the 10th, whereas the shares were transferred or re-registered to physical persons on the 9th. It's obvious that on the 9th they were re-registered on to physical persons and on the 11th the notice was prepared.

Q. You see, I suggest to you, Mr Gorodilov, nothing is obvious about this documentation.

Can I ask you, please, to look at paragraph 58 of your witness statement E2/04/22.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Choose your moment, won't you,

Mr Rabinowitz, for the break.

MR RABINOWITZ: Now may be a good moment.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well.

You're not to talk about the case or your evidence to anyone; you understand that, I'm sure.

Very well. Ten minutes.

(3.22 pm)

(A short break)

(3.38 pm)

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Gorodilov, before we broke I'd asked you to look at paragraph 58 of your witness statement E2/04/22 and it's clear from what you say in paragraph 58 of your witness statement, particularly the first and last sentences, that you are saying that this document was produced by someone in ORT-KB. Correct?

A. Yes.

Q. Right. And then just looking again at the document at H(A)23, page 60 in the Russian H(A)23/60, 61 in the English H(A)23/61, do you see that it says:

"CJSC ORT-KB has received notices from two shareholders of... ORT-KB that own 23,726.25... common registered shares... each."

Do you see that? It's referring to shareholders and it's received notices from shareholders; that's right, isn't it?

A. Yes.

Q. And it says that these shareholders both own just over 23,726 shares each?

A. Yes, that's right.

Q. But you're aware of the fact that on 10 November 2000 Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili did not own 23,726 shares each in ORT-KB, did they?

- A. Mr Berezovsky owned 18,952 shares and Mr Patarkatsishvili owned 28,500 shares of ORT-KB.
- Q. So your answer to my question is: yes, I am right, on 10 November neither Mr Berezovsky nor
Mr Patarkatsishvili owned 23,726 shares?
- A. Someone had fewer shares, someone had more shares, but they were shareholders of ORT-KB as of the 10th.
- Q. In fact it was only two days later, on 12 November, that they equalised their shareholding in ORT-KB so that they both came to own 23,726 shares; that's right, isn't it?
- A. Yes, that's right. On 12 November Patarkatsishvili sold part of his shareholdings to Berezovsky so that he would have the equal number of shares.
- Q. And so one couldn't have a genuine notice sent on 10 November 2000 which recorded the fact that they each had the same number of shares, being 23,726 shares; you accept that?
- A. The notice was true, it was genuine. It's simply that in the process it was shown that people who were responsible for the transfer of shares, that had to do it on 9 November, they made an error, and that error was corrected on 12 November.
- Q. You could not have, on 10 November, a notice to another shareholder saying that ORT-KB had received notices from two shareholders, each of whom had 23,726 shares; that would have been impossible?

A. Could you please repeat the question?

Q. You could not have, on 10 November, a notice to SBS saying that ORT-KB had received notices from two shareholders, namely Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili, each of whom had 23,726 shares; that would have been impossible?

A. As of 10 November we have a notice saying that each of the two shareholders has 23,726 shares.

Q. Well, it says more than that: it says that ORT-KB has received notices from these two shareholders, who both own that number of shares. And that would have been impossible as at 10 November, Mr Gorodilov.

A. As I'm saying again, in the process, it's quite obvious that there was an error here and I think the error happened due to the fact that there were two different companies, SBS, another company. So a large number of people were dealing with that, with Ruslan or with someone else, and basically they performed their tasks on the 9th, they've given the notice out and then they looked as a result and it turned out that they had an error and they did correct that error on 12 November.

This exactly is saying that everything was happening in accordance and the way it was -- this is the way it was and that's how the documents were drawn up.

Q. Can I ask you, please, to go to bundle H(A)27 and go to page 35, please H(A)27/35. We'll see there a Russian-only document.

My Lady, we have a translation of this which I'll hand up. It obviously will go on to Magnum in due course. (Handed)

What you see at H(A)27, page 35 H(A)27/35, Mr Gorodilov, is a draft of the notice to go to SBS. Do you see that?

A. Yes, I do.

Q. Now, can you see that the document that you are looking at has a Ringtail reference ending in the number 0026?

A. Yes, I can see that.

Q. Now, what I'd like to do, Mr Gorodilov, is to hand up to you the copy of this document which we have been looking at, held on the Ringtail document management system. It has the same reference number. The only reason to hand you this version of the document is because on this version we have metadata, which you can see if you go to the second page of the document.

A. Yes, I can see that.

Q. There are two things, Mr Gorodilov, which are interesting about the metadata. The first is that if you look at the company where this document has been produced, it appears to have been produced by Sibneft and not by ORT-KB. Do you see that? On the right-hand side, under "Properties", just before it gets to "Related Dates".

A. Yes, I can see that.

Q. And the other thing which is interesting, Mr Gorodilov, is that according to the metadata, this document was first created -- this is the draft of the notification -- on 16 November 2000. Do you see that?

A. Yes, I can see that.

Q. Now, are you able to explain how this is consistent with your evidence, firstly, that the notification was one produced by ORT-KB?

A. Could you please repeat the question?

Q. We see from the metadata that this document, a draft of this document first produced on 16 November, was produced by Sibneft. Your evidence has been that this document was produced by someone in ORT-KB; I think you say it was produced on 10 November. And I'm asking you if you can explain how it is that what we see here from the metadata is consistent with the evidence that you are giving about when this document was produced and by whom.

A. The reason: because it's a draft document, as far as I understand, that is on the computer. So was it received from Sibneft's computer?

- Q. Received -- this is produced on Sibneft's computer, first created on 16 November.
- A. And accordingly, to explain in detail, Sergey Gorenichy could explain in detail. I can only assume -- I only assume that when Sergey saw that error, he thought to send another notice in order for the deal to be more clear, clean in the legal way. This is only my supposition.
- Q. You see, Mr Gorodilov, we have asked Mr Abramovich to search ORT-KB, a company which he accepts was under his control, to see whether any drafts of this document were held by ORT-KB and we have been told that none have been found in ORT-KB. The only drafts of this document that one finds come from Sibneft and appear to have been produced after the date when you say this document was produced by ORT-KB.
- But you say you're unable to offer any explanation for how that could happen at all?
- A. I thought I explained in my previous answer how it could have happened. The ORT-KB notice, it was a package of documents of ORT-KB which is now owned by Mr Abramovich and previously it was owned by Mr Berezovsky and Patarkatsishvili.
- Q. Can we go back again and look at the notice at page 60 in the Russian H(A)23/60 and page 61 H(A)23/61.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: What bundle, please?

MR RABINOWITZ: Sorry, H(A)23. We're looking at the final notice here.

A. Did you say page 60?

Q. It should be page 60, yes, thank you. Page 61 in the English.

You see in the second paragraph, the first line of the second paragraph, it says that:

"... ORT-KB has received notices from two shareholders of CJSC ORT-KB..."

Do you see that?

A. Yes, I see that.

Q. And if this were a genuine document, one might expect to be able to find such notices having been received by ORT-KB from its shareholders to which this responds; correct?

A. One could assume that.

Q. Are you aware that, despite a search having apparently been conducted by Mr Abramovich's solicitors, no such notices from the ORT-KB shareholders have been found to exist?

A. Yes, they were not found to exist, yes.

Q. And can I ask you this: if this were a genuine document, one might expect there to have been a response from SBS-Agro, might one not?

- A. It might have been a response or it might have not been a response. If SBS-Agro within a certain time period does not respond, then accordingly it is assumed that the bank has been duly notified and the deal can go ahead.
- Q. You are aware, I take it, that, again despite Mr Abramovich's solicitors apparently having researched ORT-KB, no response from SBS-Agro responding to this notification has ever been disclosed in this action either?
- A. It's hard for me to comment this. Just to remind you once more: Mr Abramovich did not -- we did not own ORT-KB at that point in time, therefore the package of documents, the way it was passed on to me -- to us, the way it was passed on, this is the way we've got it maintained and one could assume whichever.
- Q. But you will be pleased to hear, Mr Gorodilov, that, unlike in the case of any notices from the shareholders, we do have a draft of a response from SBS-Agro responding to this in the bundles. Can you please go to bundle H(A)23, page 56 in the Russian H(A)23/56.
- Again, my Lady, because it is only in the Russian, we've prepared a translation for this document as well so your Ladyship can follow it. (Handed)
- A. Yes, I can see this.

Q. Okay. And you see that it is a draft, it's apparently also dated 10 November 2000; do you see that? It's supposed to be to ORT-KB from someone at SBS.

A. Yes, I do.

Q. Again, Mr Gorodilov, do you notice the Ringtail number at the bottom left-hand corner ends in the numbers 0009? Do you see that?

A. Yes, I do see that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: We've got this document.

MR RABINOWITZ: I beg your pardon?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: We've got this document in the bundle anyway, haven't we?

MR RABINOWITZ: What we don't have, my Lady, is the document with the Ringtail --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: We've got the translation.

MR RABINOWITZ: All right.

Can I hand up another copy of the document we've been looking at which is taken from the Ringtail document management system and it has the same 0009 reference number.

A. Yes, I can see that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: This is H(A)23/56T, is it, in the English?

MR RABINOWITZ: The translation?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: It may not matter for the point I'm going to be making, my Lady.

Mr Gorodilov, in front of you you have the Ringtail version of this document but again you can see it has the metadata at the back. Do you see that?

A. Yes, I can see that.

Q. And again, what we see from the metadata, Mr Gorodilov, are two things which are interesting. The first thing is that this draft of a document which is supposed to go from SBS to ORT-KB appears to have been produced by someone in Sibneft. Do you see that?

A. Yes, I can see that.

Q. And the second thing which is interesting about this metadata is that it indicates that the first time this draft was created was on 16 November 2000, although, as you see, the date which someone has inserted in the draft is 10 November 2000. Do you see that?

A. Yes, I can see that.

Q. Are you able to offer any explanation as to why your team at Sibneft were producing notifications which were backdated, were to be backdated, to come from SBS?

A. I think it's quite obvious. If we were leading the transaction then in the computer of the lawyers might contain a draft of the answer. With regard to the date of -- creation date, it says 16th and the agreement -- sorry, the draft shows the 11th, I think we need to ask the lawyers. I wouldn't be able to clarify. Perhaps there was some technology: maybe someone was resaving the file, I'm not sure. I don't know.

Q. Can I ask you -- well, the difficulty about --

A. Maybe the date in the computer was changed, was shifted.

Q. And maybe it is just that this document was first created on 16 November, which is what the metadata appear to indicate.

Now, can I ask you, please, to go back to your witness statement, paragraph 58 again please: page 22 of the English E2/04/22 and page 63 in the Russian E2/04/63. Just focusing on the last sentence of this paragraph, you say:

"Because of rules establishing a waiting period of no less than 30 days after notification, we understood that the notice..."

That's the one we've been looking at.

"... had to be given in advance..."

And so -- and this just goes back to evidence I think we've covered -- a transaction to sell shares could not go ahead unless there was a notice like this one from 30 days before the sale; is that right?

A. You've said quite a bit. What do I have to confirm?

Could you please state it in more detail? What do

I have to confirm?

Q. You could only have a transaction go ahead selling these shares if a notice like this had been served 30 days before that transaction was to conclude?

A. Yes, if there wouldn't be any other agreement achieved in this regard.

Q. And obviously if a sale needed to go ahead very quickly, this 30-day waiting period might present a problem in that regard, particularly if one needed the sale to be concluded in less than 30 days?

A. That was a problem and we needed to go to SBS-Agro and agree with them for them to give a response that they do not mind for that transaction to go ahead and then law would not be breached.

Q. Mr Gorodilov, Mr Abramovich says in his evidence that he had at some point told Mr Putin of the finalisation of an agreement to buy Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili's shares in ORT before the end of the year. You can take that from me for the moment: that is what he said. And he also says that, as a result, he wanted to make sure that the transfer was completed before the end of the year. Again, take that from me for the moment: it's at paragraph 59 of Mr Abramovich's fourth witness statement E5/11/28.

If Mr Abramovich had in fact only agreed to buy the shares less than 30 days before the end of December 2000, that would mean, given the 30-day rule, that he would have to wait until a notification was served and for 30 days afterwards; that's right, isn't it?

A. May I repeat once again: if no agreement would have been reached with SBS-Agro.

Q. Then the way you would have to do it, without any side agreement -- and I'm not aware of anyone suggesting there's a side agreement so let's just leave that to one side -- without that sort of agreement, you would have to wait the 30 days until the notification had run its course?

A. 30 days or from the point of receipt of a response from SBS-Agro, ie that response could have arrived earlier.

Q. Right, but no one suggests there was any response from SBS-Agro which arrived at all.

A. Maybe there was some sort of response; we simply do not have it in the case materials.

Q. No, we don't.

The only way around the position, if you have a 30-day notice which has been served closer to the end of the year than would allow you to conclude the transaction by the end of the year, the only way around that problem would be to produce a notice to SBS and then to backdate it to an earlier date.

A. No. What is the point to backdate and to produce a notice and bring it back to SBS backdated? How can we backdate -- bring it to SBS in a backdated way? And if SBS gives its consent to the deal, it will give its consent in real time.

Q. But what we see happening here, Mr Gorodilov, is not just a notice produced on 10 November which couldn't have been produced on 10 November, but we also see people in Sibneft drafting a potential response from SBS on 16 November, all of which in order to be able to conclude this transaction before the end of December. Do you follow?

A. Sorry, I'm already lost.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Rabinowitz, I'm not clear where this is going because Mr Berezovsky had a power of attorney over the SBS interest in ORT, didn't he? So, I mean, Mr Berezovsky could have waived the requirement if he was the guy who held the power of attorney over the shares in ORT held by SBS.

So where is this all going? I mean, I'm not saying he did, but I'm not quite sure --

MR RABINOWITZ: Well, no one says he did. In those circumstances, given what appears to be the position with the documentation, the documentation appears to have been backdated.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, but let's assume that the documentation has been backdated, maybe a day, maybe longer than a day; I'm not quite clear what you're suggesting. But it clearly could have been waived, the requirement. I mean, you tell me. But the person who's got the power of attorney over these shares seems to be Mr Berezovsky. So I'm not quite clear where all this is going, but maybe you'll tell me in due course.

MR RABINOWITZ: I'll tell your Ladyship now.

The witnesses, and in particular Mr Abramovich's witnesses, have produced a chronology of how the transaction took place by references to documents and by taking the dates of those documents. Now, our submission is that those dates are not genuine dates; they've all been backdated. The consequence of that is that the evidence that the witnesses give as to how the transaction proceeded and when it proceeded is based on a false premise, namely that the dates in these documents can be relied upon, whereas in fact they have all been backdated.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right.

MR SUMPTION: Is my learned friend suggesting that the document, for instance this one, was created on some other date than the 16th? Because we find it difficult to follow how there is any relevant difference between the 10th and the 16th if the issue was whether this was being discussed in November.

MR RABINOWITZ: There's no suggestion that any final document was done on the 16th. That is a draft that one sees on the 16th; one doesn't have a final document at all. So one is actually not assisted at all by the dates on these documents.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Well, I think what I need to understand is, on the assumption that you're right and some of these documents have been more or less backdated, where that, you say, undermines the factual statements in Mr Gorodilov's witness statement.

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Gorodilov's witness statement presupposes, as your Ladyship sees -- paragraph 58 E2/04/22 -- that the 10 November document is a document produced on 10 November and he gives evidence which, in a sense, tries to explain how the matter could have proceeded if that was in fact the genuine date.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: He is specifically saying that it anticipates events that had not yet taken place. So in one sense it's all been drafted in anticipation of things that haven't yet --

MR RABINOWITZ: But it purports to be a final document in circumstances where we see a draft of the document being produced later in time.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, I mean, I see what you're saying but I'm not quite clear where this is getting us on critical issues, that's all.

MR RABINOWITZ: Well, your Ladyship may not regard the timing of the ORT transaction as a critical issue. We will address it --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, I obviously see that it matters in relation to the intimidation claim and the date of the meeting, I can quite see that, but I have yet to understand what dates you're attacking in Mr Gorodilov's witness statement that you say impact on the date of the meeting in Cap d'Antibes or the veracity of your evidence in relation to the threat.

MR RABINOWITZ: My Lady, I don't --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: That's the point I think I'm not picking up on.

MR RABINOWITZ: All right. Well, I don't think I'm going to go into more detail on that now --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right, very well. Well, continue with the cross-examination.

MR RABINOWITZ: -- because that really is a matter of submission. My purpose at the moment is just to establish that you cannot rely on the dates in these documents.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right.

MR RABINOWITZ: Now, in fact, Mr Gorodilov, I want to move on to a different subject and it is this --

A. May I add on the previous subject, please?

Q. Please.

A. There is a register of share movement that I think no one has any doubt that that was in any way tampered with, which shows the steps in share transfer.

Q. That is right and it shows first that there was an equalisation between Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili on 12 November; correct? And then I think it shows a transfer from them on 29 December.

A. The 28th and the 29th.

Q. Thank you.

Now, can I ask you this. Can you go to paragraph 76 of your first witness statement: bundle E2, tab 4, page 31 in the English E2/04/31 and page 64 in the Russian E2/04/64. Can I ask you, please, just to read subparagraph (b) of paragraph 76 to yourself. It relates to the Logovaz part of the transaction. (Pause)

A. Yes, I have read it.

Q. And can I next just ask you to go to paragraph 78 of your witness statement, over the page E2/04/32.

A. Yes, I have read it.

Q. So what you're saying here is that, after suggesting that there was an agreement made at Le Bourget:

"In view of this agreement, we drafted the 'Action Plan'."

And you say:

"I think this document was drafted while Mr Abramovich was running for office in Chukotka and [finalised] when he returned to Moscow in late December..."

And just to be clear about this, Mr Abramovich I think headed for Chukotka to run for office on 10 December. Is that right?

A. As far as I know, this is correct.

Q. Yes. Can I ask then that you be given bundle H(A)26, page 110 H(A)26/110. The English translation of this I think is at H(A)103, page 124 H(A)103/124.

So this is your action plan, is it?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. And this was in fact, I think, produced, according to the metadata, on 25 December 2000, last modified on 26 December 2000. Is that right? Does that accord with when you would say that this was actually produced?

I can show you the metadata.

A. I think so. We were preparing the action plan about the arrival of Roman to Chukotka -- sorry, from Chukotka.

Q. From Chukotka. So in fact it was at the end of December that you were preparing this action plan. It's not around 10 December; it's when he was returning from Chukotka that you produced this plan?

A. Could you please ask the question again?

Q. I'm trying to establish when you say this action plan, or the "Algorithms of actions" in the translation, was produced and I suggest it was at the end of December, 25 and 26 December.

MR SUMPTION: Does your Ladyship have the English translation?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No, I'm just -- I was going to let the witness give the answer because I haven't got the document. It's the wrong reference, Mr Rabinowitz.

A. The algorithm of action, as far as I recall, I spoke to Roman, Roman was still in Chukotka, and we have agreed that by his arrival we should be prepared for everything and try to close the deal in that year. So therefore I make an assumption that indeed the document was created on the 25th because Roman had to arrive back on 25 December, as far as I recall. I think it was the 25th.

MR RABINOWITZ: Your Ladyship should be looking at H(A)103, page 124 H(A)103/124.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: 124? Oh, you said 24, that's the problem. Hang on. 124. Just a second, let me get it up.

Right, thank you.

MR RABINOWITZ: This is in fact the first document produced, Mr Gorodilov, that mentions Betas being involved; is that correct, or are you aware of some other document where you might have included Betas in this plan?

A. The fact that the Betas will buy Logovaz's shares, I think we've -- in the first half of November we knew that that will be Betas; and whether there are any documents where this is mentioned, to be honest, I do not know. Maybe.

Q. I can tell you that there are not.

Can I just ask you, please to go to your second witness statement: that's at bundle E4, tab 5. I want you to have a look at paragraphs 30 to 32 on that, if you would. It's page 64 in the English E4/05/64 and 82 in the Russian E4/05/82. Can I ask you to look at those and read those to yourself, please. (Pause)

A. Yes, I have read it.

Q. You see, I have to suggest to you that what you're doing here is disputing Mr Dubov's evidence that Logovaz only agreed to sell its shareholding in the company at par on 24 December and you are trying to dispute this by reference to what you say is the fact that:

"... this price... reflected the par value of LogoVAZ's shares [which] was already provided for in the reference sheet dated 13 November 2000 and [you say] was never questioned after that time..."

Do you see that?

A. Initially, when the deal was being actioned, we planned that Logovaz shares will be re-registered at par value of 1.1 million rubles -- sorry, at nominal value.

Q. You see, I'm referring to your comment in your witness statement that the reference to Logovaz shares being sold at par value is found in a document dated 13 November and you say it was never questioned after that time.

I want to ask you this: you don't suggest anywhere that you showed this reference sheet to either Mr Berezovsky or Mr Patarkatsishvili or Mr Fomichev or indeed anyone else from Mr Berezovsky's team, do you?

A. I think that Mr Fomichev certainly didn't see that. Perhaps Badri didn't see it. It's quite obvious: you can see by the reference that that was prepared for someone. Internally we wouldn't have made such a reference sheet. Maybe I prepared it for Roman and I have -- won't be able to help you and say who Roman has shown it to.

Q. But when you say it was never questioned after that time, if you never showed anyone, either

Mr Patarkatsishvili or Mr Fomichev or Mr Berezovsky, the sheet, how could they have questioned this?

A. How do you mean the reference sheet was queried or questioned?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Hang on. Can I look at the reference sheet, please, because the reference at the bottom of Mr Gorodilov's paragraph --

MR RABINOWITZ: Your Ladyship will find it at H(A)103, page 132 in the English H(A)103/132. It's at H(A)23, page 71 in the Russian H(A)23/71.

MR SUMPTION: I'm told that there has been a mistranslation of the witness's answer when he said, according to the transcript in English, that Mr Fomichev certainly did not see it and that Mr Patarkatsishvili may not have seen it. I understand that the actual Russian answer was different. I wonder if that could be explored while the iron is still hot.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes. Mr Rabinowitz, you might want to check the Russian feed overnight.

THE INTERPRETER: The interpreter apologises, I might have misheard.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, can we check it now with what was said previously, please?

MR RABINOWITZ: Can I perhaps just ask it again?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, ask the question again.

- MR RABINOWITZ: You never suggested in your witness statement that you showed this reference sheet to Mr Berezovsky or Mr Patarkatsishvili or Mr Fomichev or indeed anyone else from Mr Berezovsky's team?
- A. As far as I recall, I do not write about this in my witness statement.
- Q. And that is because you never showed this reference sheet to any of those people?
- A. I think it doesn't mean this. That reference was obviously made in mid-November. It was reflecting the deal structure that was approved at that point in time. I think I prepared that reference for Roman in order for Roman to show it to Badri or Berezovsky, I don't know about that, and obviously that Ruslan Fomichev has seen it as well. It can be seen that this is prepared for someone external.
- Q. You see, I suggest to you if you had shown it to anyone, Mr Gorodilov, you would have said so in your witness statement.
- A. Why would that be?
- Q. Because your witness statement is where you set out the relevant evidence and that would have been relevant. But you dispute that, do you?
- A. In my witness statement I was showing the whole chronology of the deal, as I recall, the way it was happening. And further, in the process we have disclosed all the documents that we could have found for this hearing, that we were able to find.

MR RABINOWITZ: Thank you, Mr Gorodilov.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Are those all your questions?

MR RABINOWITZ: Those are all my questions.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, Mr -- has anyone else got any cross-examination?

MR MALEK: No questions, my Lady.

MR ADKIN: No, my Lady.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: No.

MR SUMPTION: I will try and finish this straightaway, rather than leave Mr Gorodilov over until tomorrow.

Re-examination by MR SUMPTION

MR SUMPTION: Mr Gorodilov, I wonder if someone could assist you with scrolling back through the screen transcript of your answers this afternoon. If we could scroll back to [draft] page 91.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I'm in the hands of the parties as to whether you want to go on tonight, Mr Sumption.

MR SUMPTION: I'm not going to be more than five or ten minutes, so it seems --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, then let's -- you're happy with that, aren't you, Mr Rabinowitz? That means that you'll have Friday clear.

MR RABINOWITZ: Yes.

MR SUMPTION: Mr Gorodilov, you will need the assistance of the interpreter for this purpose. You will see that there is an answer that begins on [draft] page 90, line 20, and continues on [draft] page 91, up to line 10, and I wonder if the interpreter would be kind enough to translate that back to you. Beginning with:

"After that, when Roman said..."

(Pause)

THE INTERPRETER: Until where do I read, sorry?

MR SUMPTION: [Draft] page 91, line 10.

A. There is an error in the figure of 100 million.

Additional payments were 140 million plus commission.

MR SUMPTION: Right. That's what I wanted to clear up.

Thank you very much.

My Lady, I have no other questions.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Mr Rabinowitz, you've got nothing further arising out of that?

MR RABINOWITZ: No.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you very much, Mr Gorodilov for coming along to give your evidence. You may be released.

(The witness withdrew)

Discussion re housekeeping

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, can I just say two things very briefly. First of all, although there is a dispute about its exact date, there is of course a reference to Betas in the Logovaz board meeting dated November 2000, which was a document disclosed by Mr Berezovsky and about which Mr Dubov gave some evidence. The reference to that is H(A)23/196.

The second thing that I wanted to say was that we will not be calling Mr Mamut. In the light of the basis on which my learned friend cross-examined Mr Abramovich, we have concluded that his evidence is no longer of any relevance.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. Very well.

MR SUMPTION: That means that the next witnesses that your Ladyship will be hearing from are Mr Voloshin, Mr Kapkov, and they will be followed immediately by Mr Shvidler.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So Mr Sponring is going off?

MR SUMPTION: Mr Sponring will come after Mr Shvidler.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right.

MR SUMPTION: But we may get to Mr Shvidler on Monday.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Right. And so far as time is concerned, Mr Rabinowitz, you're still comfortable with where we are and your time?

MR RABINOWITZ: Still comfortable, indeed.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Because if you weren't, I would feel slightly obliged to sit tomorrow.

MR RABINOWITZ: No, we are still comfortable.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Very well.

Then I'll adjourn this case until Monday at 10.15, 10.30? I'm in your -- 10.15?

MR RABINOWITZ: 10.15.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: It's probably easier, 10.15.

Very well.

Monday, 14 November 2011

(10.15 am)

(Proceedings delayed)

(10.24 am)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, Mr Sumption.

MR SUMPTION: I call Mr Voloshin.

MR ALEXANDER STALIEVICH VOLOSHIN (affirmed)

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Please sit down, Mr Voloshin.

Examination-in-chief by MR SUMPTION

MR SUMPTION: Good morning, Mr Voloshin. Could you please be given bundles E1, E4 and E8. You have made three witness statements, I think, for this action and you'll find the first of them in bundle E1 at flag 1 E1/01/1. Is this your first witness statement?

A. Yes, it is indeed.

Q. And if you turn to the back of the tab at page 23 of the bundle, is that your signature on the Russian version?

A. Yes, this is my signature.

Q. And if you'd like to turn to paragraph 2, is there a correction that you want to make to the date at the end of paragraph 2?

A. Yes, that is correct. So far as the year where I graduated from the Academy of Foreign Trade is concerned, the year is 1996 (sic). There was a mistake here. It says 1990, I'm sorry, it's 1986, my apologies, sir.

Q. 1986, fine. With that correction, is that statement true?

A. Yes, definitely.

Q. Would you like to take bundle E4, please, and turn to flag 7 E4/07/115. Is this your second witness statement in this action?

A. Yes, it is indeed.

Q. If you turn to page 147, is that your signature at the end of the Russian version?

A. Yes, this is my signature.

Q. Is that statement also true?

A. Yes, it is indeed.

Q. Finally, Mr Voloshin, your third statement will be found in bundle E8 at flag 15 E8/15/184. Is this your third statement at flag 15?

A. Yes, it is indeed.

Q. And is that your signature at page 190?

A. Yes, it is my signature.

Q. And is that statement also true?

A. Yes, it is indeed.

MR SUMPTION: Thank you. If you'd wait there, Mr Rabinowitz will have questions for you.

Cross-examination by MR RABINOWITZ

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Voloshin, can you go, please, to paragraph 8 of your first witness statement, E1, tab 1, page 4 in the English E1/01/4, page 16 in the Russian E1/01/16. Can I ask you, please, to read what you have said at paragraph 8 to yourself and let me know when you've finished reading it. (Pause)

A. Yes, I have read this.

Q. And you say there, and you are talking here about 1993 or 1994, that you had a consultancy role in relation to AO All Russia Automobile Alliance, that's AVVA, a company headed by Mr Berezovsky, and that you helped with the preparation of the paperwork to set up AVVA.

Can I ask you next, please, to look at your second witness statement, paragraph 5. You'll find that at bundle E4, tab 7, page 117 in the English E4/07/117 and 133 (E4/07/133 in the Russian.

Again, if I can ask you to read paragraph 5 to yourself. Let me know when you've finished reading it.

(Pause)

A. Yes, I have read this.

Q. What you say here is that your consultancy in relation to AVVA:

"... consisted of helping to prepare the paperwork (including the preparation of the prospectus) for and assisting with the public placement of the company's securities ..."

If you helped prepare AVVA's prospectus and assisted with the public placement of its securities, you must have known how AVVA was to operate. That's right, isn't it?

A. I'm not sure I understand your question as to how AVVA was to operate.

Q. Did you understand, when you were preparing the paperwork and helping with the prospectus, how AVVA was to operate as a company? What it was going to do?

A. On the whole, yes. Now, if you mean the purpose, the mission of the company, I can explain what my understanding was at that time.

Q. Well, let me ask you questions and you can answer the questions, and then if you have some comment to make you can make your comment, okay?

In working on the AVVA project I assume you would not suggest that you were involved in any unlawful or fraudulent activity, is that correct?

A. Your understanding is correct.

Q. And it follows that you would not suggest that the AVVA project was a fraudulent pyramid selling scheme, is that correct?

A. No, I am not certainly suggesting that and this is not what I think.

Q. So if anyone were to suggest that AVVA was a fraudulent pyramid scheme, your evidence would be that they were wrong, is that right?

- A. Well, you know, at a time where this project was being run and it was never completed, it was never finished, but when the securities of AVVA, securities were being placed, there were many things that happened on the securities market that you could describe as a pyramid, a Ponzi scheme.

The project that we were handling, I'm definitely certain that it was not one of those schemes, but at that time there were many articles that were wrote in the media about that and attempts were being made to put that project on a par with other projects. So there was a lot of talk around this and I do not believe that there is any truth to that.

- Q. Thank you very much for that.

Now, Mr Voloshin, I want to move to a different topic, and you accept in your evidence that you met with Mr Berezovsky towards the end of August 2000? That's right, isn't it?

- A. Yes, that is true.

- Q. And Mr Berezovsky's evidence is that this meeting occurred on 23 or 24 August, I don't suppose you're in a position either to confirm or deny those specific dates, are you?

- A. It is true, I do not recall the exact dates but it was late August. That is true.
- Q. Now, before we look at what you say happened at this meeting, can I just identify for you some of the events that had occurred in the summer of 2000 in order to put this meeting into some sort of context. Now, first, in June and July 2000 there was the arrest of Mr Vladimir Gusinsky and the sale of his company Media Most to Gazprom, that's correct, isn't it?
- A. So is your -- I beg your pardon, what is your question? I'm not sure I understood the question.
- Q. I'm just going through with you the events in the summer of 2000 which were a prelude, or which happened before your meeting with Mr Berezovsky. One of those events was that in June and July 2000, Mr Gusinsky, who was the owner of Media Most, was arrested and there was an incident in which he sold his company to Gazprom.
- A. I believe that some events did occur. I'm not sure I can recollect whether the sale and purchase of the shares that you're referring to had already happened by that time, but it is true that he was in custody, he did spend a few days in custody. That is true, yes.
- Q. And Media Most, Mr Gusinsky's company, was the owner of the independent television station NTV, that's right, isn't it?

- A. So far as I can recall, yes, that is true.
- Q. And in that summer of 2000, NTV had adopted an editorial policy which was generally critical of the Putin administration. That's right, isn't it?
- A. I believe that NTV as a TV channel had always had a rather sharp view of all the things that happened around it. It was quite critical or sufficiently critical of the various events that occurred at that time, including to the powers that be, yes, that's true.
- Q. And they were often critical of President Putin and his policies?
- A. Amongst other things, yes.
- Q. Now, Mr Gusinsky was arrested on 13 June 2000. You won't remember the exact date, I suppose, but you will agree, I think, that it was around this time, is that right?
- A. It is true that I do not recollect when that happened but it was some time in the summer, yes.
- Q. Thank you. While Mr Gusinsky was in prison, Mr Lesin, the Acting Minister for Press and Communications, offered to have the criminal charges against Mr Gusinsky dropped in return for Mr Gusinsky selling Media Most to the government-owned company Gazprom. Again, you may not remember the precise details of this but you will, I think, agree that this is broadly correct?

A. I'm not sure that your description is correct. I do not recall that in those days, where Gusinsky was in prison, certain documents were signed. I have no recollection of that in my memory.

Q. Your evidence is that you do not recall that in those days when Gusinsky was in prison certain documents were signed. Is that your evidence?

A. So far as I recollect, some documents were signed but they were signed later on.

Q. Can I just, if I can, ask you to be given bundle O2, tab 8 -- sorry, O2/8, tab 109, which is a judgment of the European Court of Human Rights O2/8.109/1.

I don't seem to have the bundle in court. Perhaps I can just read you a paragraph from the judgment of the European Court of Human Rights which had to consider all the facts here. Paragraph 27 on page 6:

"During the applicant's detention between 13 and 16 June 2000, the Acting Minister for Press and Mass Communications, Mr Lesin, offered to drop the criminal charges against the applicant in connection with the Russian Video case if the applicant sold Media Most to Gazprom, at a price to be determined by Gazprom."

Okay? Does that help your recollection?

A. Yes, I've heard an excerpt from a judgment of the European Court, so what is your question?

- Q. My question to you was, whilst Mr Gusinsky was in prison, Mr Lesin, the Acting Minister for Press and Communication, offered to have the criminal charges dropped in return for Mr Gusinsky agreeing to sell Media Most to the government-owned company Gazprom, and that is right?
- A. The way I see it, it is not the case. This does not flow from the judgment of the European Court that has just been read out.
- Q. I suggest it flows precisely from that.
- Let me ask you this: Mr Lesin was first appointed minister for press in July 1999, do you recollect that?
- A. To be honest, I do not recall when he was first appointed minister but it may well be the case.
- Q. And he was reappointed to the post by President Putin after the 2000 presidential election in May 2000. Do you recollect that?
- A. Yes, I do recollect that.
- Q. Now, the agreement made with Mr Gusinsky contained a protocol called Protocol 6 which provided for the termination of the prosecution of Mr Gusinsky. Again, you may not remember the details but this is generally what happened, is it not?
- A. I'm not sure I understood your question. Would you mind repeating, please?

Q. The agreement made with Mr Gusinsky contained a protocol called Protocol 6 which provided for the termination of the prosecution of Mr Gusinsky. That is broadly what happened, is it not?

A. I do recollect that a lot was written at that time about the existence of a Protocol 6. To be honest, I had never seen that protocol in my life, and nor do I recall anyone asserting that it had been signed by the government or by a representative of the government or at the instruction of the government.

So far as I can recollect, it turned out that Mr Lesin had put his approval under this protocol but he had not been a party to the protocol, and once again I have not seen this protocol and all I can do is make a judgment based on press reports at the time.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Voloshin, were you involved in the events relating to Gusinsky at all?

A. The events that are being referenced now I had nothing to do with. But in general, I did have numerous meetings with Mr Gusinsky. I had several meetings with him prior to that, maybe even after that, but I did not have any involvement in the events which have just been described here. I had no part in those events.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: That includes his arrest, his subsequent release and the sale of the shares in his television company?

- A. That is exactly the case, my Lady. And I can clarify that -- I can clarify the situation, the way I see it, if I have your --

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Maybe in due course.

MR RABINOWITZ: But you were part of an administration of which Mr Lesin was also a part, were you not?

- A. Mr Lesin was not a -- was not part of the administration, definitely not at that time. He had worked in the administration many years prior to that but at that time he was in the government and I was head of the presidential administration. These are two different bodies and they do not report one to the other.

Q. But you would have been aware of what was happening with Mr Gusinsky at this time, would you not?

- A. I did learn what had happened, that is true, yes.

Q. And just in terms of what did happen and the Protocol 6, you say there was reporting about this at the time. We have in the judgment of the European Court of Human Rights at paragraph 28 this finding, that:

"While the applicant was in prison, Gazprom asked him to sign an agreement in return for which the applicant was told that all criminal charges against him would be dropped. The agreement between Gazprom and the applicant was signed on 20 July 2000 ... It included a provision in annex 6 calling, inter alia, for the termination of the applicant's criminal prosecution in relation to Russian Video and for an undertaking regarding his security."

I'm not going to read the whole of annex 6.

Paragraph 29 then explains that:

"Annex 6 was signed by the parties and endorsed by Mr Lesin's signature."

Later, Mr Gusinsky refused to comply with the agreement that he had made in these circumstances because he said it had been signed under duress. Do you recall that?

A. To be honest, I do not recall those nuances.

Q. Right. Again, that is dealt with in the judgment of the European Court at paragraph 72, page 19 02.8/109/19. I'll read you the relevant part which is fairly short.

Paragraph 72:

"The applicant submitted that the facts of the case spoke for themselves. He reiterated that the authorities were motivated by a wish to effectively silence his media and, in particular, its criticisms of the Russian leadership. The applicant drew attention to the fact that when Media Most did not comply with the July agreement, on the ground that it had been signed under duress, the GPO initiated the Media Most loan investigation."

The GPO is the prosecuting authority, is it not?

A. Yes. The General Prosecutor's Office does -- is directly related with the prosecution of criminal cases, yes.

Q. And I just very briefly want to tell you or show you what was said about what happened to Mr Gusinsky by the European Court of Human Rights. Can I hand up to you a translation of paragraphs, there are just two paragraphs, paragraphs 75 and 76, of the judgment. (Handed). Just so that we can see what the European Court found here, paragraph 75:

"The government did not dispute that the July agreement, in particular Annex 6 to it, linked the termination of the Russian Video investigation with the sale of the applicant's media to Gazprom, a company controlled by the state. The government did not dispute either that Annex 6 was signed by the Acting Minister for Press and Mass Communications. Lastly, the government did not deny that one of the reasons for which Mr Nikolaev closed the proceedings against the applicant on 26 July 2000 was that the applicant had compensated for the harm caused by the alleged fraud by transferring Media Most shares to a company controlled by the state.

"In the court's opinion, it is not the purpose of such public law matters as criminal proceedings and detention on remand to be used as part of commercial bargaining strategies. The fact that Gazprom asked the applicant to sign the July agreement when he was in prison, that a state minister endorsed such an agreement with his signature and that a state investigating officer later implemented that agreement by dropping the charges strongly suggests that the applicant's prosecution was used to intimidate him."

Now, that's what the European Court found. Can I ask you, please, to go to bundle H(A)22 at page 34 H(A)22/34. This is an article from the Moscow Times, I'm afraid it is only in English but it may be you understand English. I will read you the relevant paragraphs anyway which are short.

In the first paragraph the report says that:

"Press Minister Mikhail Lesin conceded Wednesday [that is the day before the article was written] that 'as a minister' he had made a mistake by putting his signature on a deal selling Vladimir Gusinsky's Media Most to state-controlled Gazprom-Media."

Then in the sixth paragraph, the paragraph beginning "The disputed deal", it says this:

"The disputed deal, known as [protocol] 6 in a document signed by Gusinsky and Gazprom-Media head Alfred Kokh, links the sale of Media Most to criminal charges being dropped against Gusinsky and his freedom to travel abroad."

Now, can I ask you this, is it right that Mr Lesin did not lose his job as a result of entering into this agreement with Mr Gusinsky? He stayed in his position, did he not?

- A. So far as I can recollect, he did stay in his position and I still do believe that he did not enter into a deal, he just endorsed, and that might have been -- that must have been a mistake. He has endorsed the document but this was not a deal, and this does not flow from the documents that have been presented by the way.
- Q. And Mr Lesin remained involved in the Putin government's policy towards the mass media, is that right?
- A. Yes, he remained as part of the government, as a government minister, that's true.
- Q. And part of what he would be responsible for is the government's policy towards the mass media?
- A. Well, the policy is decided upon (sic) the government. What the minister does is submit proposals and ideas as to what they believe that policy should be.
- Q. So he would have remained involved in dealing with the policy towards the mass media?

A. Well, his ministry, the ministry of which he was head, was directly linked to the working out of that policy, yes.

Q. You can put that bundle to one side. Can you please be given bundle G(B)2/6 and if you can go in it to page 171 in the Russian G(B)2/6.177/171 and page 173 in the English G(B)2/6.177/173. 2/6, tab 177, and then I think it's page 171 in the Russian and 173 in the English.

Now, this goes somewhat later in time but I just want to check this with you. This is an order of the Russian prime minister, is that correct? You can see it's made on 30 January 2001.

A. Yes, it's a government order.

Q. And this is made after Mr Abramovich acquired the ORT shares from Mr Berezovsky, and the order accepts a proposal from the Ministry of Property Relations, approved by the Ministry of Press and Communications, and the second of those ministries was Mr Lesin's ministry, was it not?

A. Yes. Mr Lesin at that time was the minister and there is a direct reference to that in the text.

Q. And it instructs the Ministry of Property Relations to make arrangements for appointing directors of ORT. One of the directors appointed is Mr Lesin, do you see that?

It's the fourth one down.

A. Yes, I can see his surname here.

Q. So in January 2001, the Russian government approved the appointment of Mr Lesin as a director of ORT. That's right, isn't it?

A. So far as I can recollect, the procedure was a staged one, and this was stage one of the procedure, and the document that you're looking at now is a nomination of candidates to the board of directors. Now, later on, there had to be a separate, a further decision in terms of whom they should be voting for at the general meeting of shareholders. That might be a different decision.

So based on this document alone it is difficult to make final decisions, and it happened quite often in practice where the opinion of the government in terms of who they should be voting for at the general meeting of shareholders, during the voting for the members of the board of directors, did change.

Q. But the point at this stage is that the government approved, certainly as at January 2001, the appointment of Mr Lesin to the board of ORT; things may have changed later but that is the position then, is it not?

A. Yes. If we follow the text, what the government did was nominate a candidate for the board of directors but it had not yet voted in favour or against that nominee.

Q. Now, you can put that to one side for the moment.

Can you answer this question: the arrest of Mr Gusinsky and his dispute with the government had been very widely publicised in June, July and August 2000.

That's right, isn't it?

A. Well, you know, those were the sort of events that did cause quite a few informational tidal waves, as it were. It was being heatedly debated. And in terms of the question which we are now -- which is now in dispute here, I can recall that Mr Berezovsky, and I think it was two to three months prior to those events, in the summer, that he made a public statement where he said that he was going to ask the General Prosecutor's Office to look into the link between Gusinsky and the Chechen terrorists and to investigate those possible links, and I think he made that statement in February or in March, it was made publicly.

Now, when those summer events took place and Mr Gusinsky was taken into custody, Berezovsky was the only major businessman who did not sign a letter demanding his release. So that was the informational background for all of this, as it were.

Q. Mr Voloshin, can you listen to the question and try to answer the question, please. The question was that the arrest of Mr Gusinsky and his dispute with the government was very widely publicised in June, July and August 2000; that is right, is it not?

A. Definitely. It was widely covered in the press.

Q. Yes, and so by the time of your meeting with Mr Berezovsky in late August 2000, both of you would have been aware of the fact that Mr Gusinsky had been arrested and of the fact that he had been required to sell Media Most to Gazprom. That's right, is it not?

A. I do not believe that anyone demanded that he sell Media Most to Gazprom in the course of his custody, therefore I would beg to differ and I cannot agree with your statement.

Q. All right. Well, let me break it down. By the time of your meeting with Mr Berezovsky in late August 2000, both of you would have been aware of the fact that Mr Gusinsky had been arrested and imprisoned, is that right?

A. Yes. We also knew that he was subsequently released, a few days after that.

Q. And both of you would have been aware of the fact that he had, whilst in prison, sold Media Most? I don't want to get into the circumstances of that.

A. No, that was not the case. So far as I know, he sold Media Most after that, not during his being in custody.

Q. Well, we've in fact seen from the court -- sorry, the European Court judgment that, certainly by August 2000, he had sold Media Most which is when you met Mr Berezovsky, in August 2000?

A. I think that the sale can be best confirmed by sale documents rather than the judgment of the esteemed European Court. And I think that the documents, with respect to the sale of that media asset, were signed much later, way later than Mr Gusinsky's being in custody.

Q. It's clear what the European Court found, I'm not going to argue with you about that. That says that it was signed on 20 July, the court says it was signed on 20 July 2000.

Now, that is one event which had occurred in the lead-up period to your meeting with Mr Abramovich -- sorry, Mr Berezovsky, the arrest of Mr Gusinsky. The other event which had occurred in that eventful summer, and this was on 12 August 2000, was that the Russian submarine, the Kursk, sank in the Barents Sea, do you remember that?

A. Yes, I do remember that.

Q. It's right, is it not, that the coverage of this incident by both ORT and NTV were critical of the way in which President Putin's administration dealt with the incident? That is right, is it not?

A. So far as I can recall, the coverage was quite varied. It was a terrible tragedy, and I think everyone agreed that it was a tragedy, and I don't believe that anyone could have said anything other than that. There were some programmes, both in ORT and NTV, what the authorities were doing did draw criticisms, yes, that is true.

Q. And shortly after this, that is to say shortly after the Kursk incident, which occurred on 12 August, and the coverage that it received from ORT and NTV, President Putin publicly expressed his anger about the television coverage of the Kursk incident. That's right, isn't it?

A. To be honest, I do not recall such a public statement on the part of Mr Putin.

Q. All right. Well, perhaps I can get you to go to bundle H(A)21, go to page 101, please H(A)21/101. This is a press report of 25 August and it's obviously a reporting of an incident in the previous days. The first paragraph of this notes:

"Russian President Vladimir Putin has lashed out at the news media over coverage of the submarine Kursk disaster, even accusing the media of trying to destroy the navy."

If you go to the second page of this report --

- A. My apologies, what is this news report? I'm not sure I understand what this source is.
- Q. It's something called the Freedom Forum Online and it's reporting about news --
- A. It's just the first time ever that I hear about that source but, okay, that's all right.
- Q. If you go to the second page, really taking material from other news media, as you can see. They refer to the London Guardian, they refer later on to the London Telegraph.

If you look at the second page, towards the top of the page:

"Putin blamed television reporting, the two Russian journalists said, and then he launched into the strongest attack on the Russian media he has made since becoming president."

Then this is quoting President Putin:

"'They are liars. The television has people who have been destroying the state for ten years. They have been thieving money and buying up absolutely everything,' Putin said, according to Nekhoroshev, a former BBC employee. 'Now they're trying to discredit the country so that the army gets even worse.'"

President Putin directed this anger at the businessmen who owned the media outlets who criticised him, did he not?

THE INTERPRETER: I'm so sorry, Mr Rabinowitz, could you kindly repeat the last sentence? This is a request from the interpreter, sorry.

MR RABINOWITZ: Don't worry.

President Putin directed his anger at the businessmen who owned the media outlets who had criticised him. That's right, isn't it?

A. Well, I have read this and this is what it says. But I cannot share with you my personal recollection, I cannot comment what it says here because, amongst other things, this is not a very credible source.

Q. All right. Let's go to a different source then. Go to H(A)21 at page 59, if you would H(A)21/59.

Do you consider the Financial Times as a credible source, Mr Voloshin?

A. Quite. Quite.

Q. Good, I'm sure they'll be pleased to hear that.

If you look at the headline:

"World news: Putin hits [out] at media 'oligarchs' over Kursk tragedy."

Just looking down, let me read the first three paragraphs to you:

"President Vladimir Putin of Russia yesterday lashed out at individuals he claimed had attempted to make political capital out of the Kursk submarine tragedy, in a thinly veiled attack on the country's influential business 'oligarchs'."

Looking to the third paragraph:

"... in a clear attempt to deflect strong criticism of his handling of the crisis, he rounded on the oligarchs who control much of the media that led [to] the criticism of him."

Just going down a couple of paragraphs, you see that President Putin:

"... singled out 'some who have even given a million dollars to the crews' families', in an apparent reference to Boris Berezovsky, the former 'grey cardinal' of the Kremlin who controls the daily newspaper Kommersant, which organised a campaign of voluntary donations to help the grieving families."

President Putin is quoted as saying:

"They would have done better to sell their villas on the Mediterranean coast of France and in Spain."

If you go two paragraphs down, you see there's a reference to the fact that Mr Berezovsky owns a villa on the Cote d'Azur in southern France while Mr Gusinsky has a property in Spain.

So it was clear to everyone, was it not, that the people who were being attacked by President Putin here were Mr Gusinsky and Mr Berezovsky? Correct?

- A. I think that, since this is what newspapers are writing, there must be a grain of truth to that, particularly when we talk about such a highly esteemed newspaper.

What I can say is that President Putin did have a reason to become so emotional, because he did believe, and I fully agreed with him on that, that Mr Berezovsky was using that tragedy in order to get some political capital for himself, and I'm absolutely certain that this is what President Putin thought and I completely agree with this. This is the way it was.

It was a horrible tragedy and it was not very clear what the grievances on the merits of the case were because 118 people lost their lives and they -- as the investigators found out, they died in one second because a torpedo exploded. When it happened, at that time, people had hopes that some people could be rescued but then it turned out that, unfortunately, there was no hope for that. At that time people did hope that someone could be rescued, there was a major rescue operation and it was widely covered in the world. But President Putin did believe that Mr Berezovsky and his controlled journalists were helping him in that and that he was setting himself the task of making political capital on that, and I think that he could become quite emotional and that, I believe, does look like this is the way it was.

Q. I don't want to get into the rights and wrongs of the handling of the Kursk crisis, Mr Voloshin, but as you say, President Putin obviously felt very strongly about Mr Berezovsky's coverage of it. That's right, isn't it?

A. No. Mr Berezovsky's role is hereby overstated.

President Putin was much more concerned about the rescue operation with the submarine while there was some hope to rescue people, much more than what Mr Berezovsky was doing about that at that time.

Q. In fact your evidence was that President Putin felt strongly that -- about Mr Berezovsky's, about the coverage in ORT which he felt was wrong at the time?

A. Yes, this is what I have said, and he did believe that Mr Berezovsky was capitalising on this tragedy in order to get some political capital. This is what he thought, this is what he believed, and he believed that the coverage of the Kursk tragedy was not objective, was not impartial.

Q. I think you also explained that that was your view as well?

A. Absolutely. And this is still my position, even as we speak.

Q. Right. Now, we know that the outburst from President Putin occurred on 23 August 2000 because the report in the Financial Times is dated 24 August. We now come to the meeting itself which happened the day after President Putin's outburst, or perhaps a day after that, on 24 or 25 August 2000.

Can I ask you, please, to go back to your first witness statement and look at paragraph 13, E1, tab 1, page 5 in the English E1/01/5, page 17 in the Russian E1/01/7. Can I ask you to read from paragraph 13 to 17 of your witness statement to yourself, please, just remind yourself of what it says. (Pause)

Have you read paragraphs 13 to 17?

A. Yes, I have read those, yes.

Q. And so it's your evidence that you requested this meeting with Mr Berezovsky, that's what you say at paragraph 13. Is that right?

A. Yes, that is true.

Q. And the only thing that you say was raised at that meeting was the situation with ORT, again that's what you say at paragraph 13. Is that right?

A. So far as I can recall, yes.

Q. So I think we can agree that discussing ORT was the main or the only purpose of the meeting, is that right?

A. I think it was the only purpose of the meeting.

Q. And if you look at paragraph 15, what you say there is that:

"... the Government wanted [Mr Berezovsky] to stop using ORT for his own political and financial benefit."

You are suggesting that the message you were delivering to Mr Berezovsky came from the government rather than just you personally, is that right?

A. It was the general position. The word "Government" here is used in the general meaning of the term. It was the position held by the powers that be, and the position of the powers that be was that he had to stop using ORT for his own political and financial benefit. This is exactly what was said.

Q. And when you refer to the powers that be, you would obviously include President Putin in that, would you not?

A. Definitely. Yes, it would be difficult not to include him in that definition. He was president of the country at that time.

Q. And so you would accept then that the message that you gave to Mr Berezovsky at that meeting was one that Mr Berezovsky was intended to understand came from President Putin as well, that's right, isn't it?

A. I think so, yes. I think I made it clear to him that it was our joint position.

Q. And since you were delivering a message to Mr Berezovsky from President Putin, that was obviously something that you would have discussed with President Putin before this meeting. It must follow, mustn't it?

A. Yes, this is quite logical. I -- most probably I did discuss that. I don't recall the exact discussions but that was part of the logic of this process.

Q. Now, Mr Voloshin, you don't explain in your evidence in these paragraphs why you called Mr Berezovsky to this meeting at the specific time you did, that is to say at the end of August 2000. Can you please explain why you say there was, in late August 2000, a concern about the situation with ORT given that, as you say, Mr Berezovsky had been exercising de facto control there for some time?

A. Well, there is an end to everything sooner or later. He did exercise control over the company for a long time, and the situation around the Kursk submarine disaster was so dramatic, and the position of his controlled journalists was so flagrant and the (inaudible) was not consistent with the horrible tragedy, with that tragic situation, it became clear that informal governance of ORT on the part of Berezovsky was something that needed to be put an end to.

Q. I think you're accepting in that answer that what actually provoked that meeting at this time was the ORT coverage of the Kursk incident, that's right, isn't it?

A. Yes, your understanding is correct.

Q. Can you explain why you don't anywhere in paragraphs 13 to 17 even mention the Kursk incident as being either something which provoked this meeting or as something which was discussed at this meeting?

A. I don't know. I do not refer to that. I think it was quite obvious, it was so obvious that it did not require any additional explanation. I think that this whole story was so clearly linked to the submarine disaster, and there was no doubt in anyone's mind as to one being the consequence of the other.

Q. And does it follow from what you are saying now that, in the course of this meeting, you would have complained to Mr Berezovsky about the way in which ORT had covered the Kursk incident?

A. I do not recollect the -- that being or not being said in the course of our discussion, to be honest. I think that it was quite obvious to both of us, all the things that had happened had become so obvious to us.

Having said that, this is not something that I would rule out. I wouldn't rule that out.

Q. In fact, Mr Voloshin, isn't it obvious that it is one of the things that you would have discussed, given that that was the very reason why you had called the meeting at this time, namely the way in which ORT had covered this incident?

A. I beg your pardon, what is your question?

Q. My question is this: isn't it obvious that the way in which ORT had covered the Kursk incident would have been what you discussed, or one of the things that you discussed, at this meeting at the end of August with Mr Berezovsky?

A. Truly I do not recall that. Most probably it was discussed. Chances are it was not discussed. We might have discussed that prior to that, over the telephone. It's very difficult for me to recollect.

I had one real and very serious objective in the course of that meeting and that was to explain, to convey to Mr Berezovsky that an end had come to his governance of ORT. That was the end. The end had come, and this is what I conveyed to him, this is what I declared to him, and that was what made this meeting so dramatic.

Q. Well, you say it was a dramatic meeting. Just checking one thing in your answer, what the translator has translated you as saying about whether you discussed Kursk was:

"Most probably it was discussed. Chances are it was not discussed."

Now, what is your evidence? Most probably it was discussed or that it wasn't discussed?

A. To be honest I do not -- I'm not sure I feel all those fine nuances. I think that the way ORT covered the Kursk tragedy was something that we did discuss. What I'm saying is that chances are we had discussed that prior to that meeting over the telephone, or we may have discussed this question in the course of that meeting. I cannot rule that out.

Q. And you say it was a dramatic meeting, is that right?

A. Yes, it's true, both the first and the second meetings -- the second meeting I'm sure is something that you'll be asking me questions about -- were quite dramatic, but the dramatism was different. For us the drama was that he was using a horrible tragedy to capitalise on this and to do some political public relations campaigns for himself. And for him the tragedy was that his hobby horse would be taken away from him and that he would no longer be able to manage ORT starting from that point in time.

Q. When you say it was a dramatic meeting, presumably emotions were running high at both meetings? Is that your evidence?

A. So far as I can recollect, yes.

MR RABINOWITZ: My Lady, this may be a convenient time.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you.

Ten minutes' break.

Please don't discuss your evidence with anyone or the case with anyone. Thank you.

(11.31 am)

(A short break)

(11.45 am)

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Voloshin, we will go back to the first meeting that you had with Mr Berezovsky in a moment.

I just want to go back to an answer that you gave earlier at [draft] page 18, lines 16 to 20. You were talking about a letter which businessmen signed when Mr Gusinsky was arrested and what you said was, in relation to this letter, that:

"... Mr Berezovsky was the only major businessman who did not sign a letter demanding his release."

And they're talking there about Mr Gusinsky's release. Do you remember that answer? Do you remember giving that evidence this morning?

A. Yes.

Q. Mr Abramovich did not sign that letter, did he?

A. To be honest, I do not recall who specifically signed that letter. I remember my feelings about that moment. Mr Berezovsky was not just a major businessman, he was also a very active public person, he always was present in any more or less important public proceedings. And if he was absent in such a situation, that certainly would draw attention. Whether Mr Berezovsky was present -- be present or absent in such a proceeding, it would not go unnoticed, because he was always quite active in political or public activity.

Q. Let's just go back to your evidence about this first meeting on what was 24 or 25 August. We've talked about Kursk and whether that was mentioned at this meeting. You also say at paragraph 17 of your witness statement that you do not recall having mentioned Mr Gusinsky. Do you see that? Halfway through paragraph 17 you say you do not recall having mentioned Mr Gusinsky.

A. One second, let me read, please.

Yes, this is correct.

Q. Now, we have seen that at the time of your meeting Mr Gusinsky had recently been arrested, put in jail, because of an investigation. And it's right also, we've seen this, that NTV, Mr Gusinsky's channel, was the other major television station that was highly critical in its coverage of the Kursk incident. Would you accept that, whether or not you remember it, it is highly likely that you did mention Mr Gusinsky at some point during this conversation?

A. This is not necessarily that we had to mention him, because the incident with Mr Gusinsky, when he turned out to be in custody, that was -- that happened, as far as I recall, two months earlier. And from that moment on we surely have met with Mr Berezovsky and certainly discussed -- spoke with him over the phone, and we had the opportunity to discuss this situation earlier.

So it's not necessarily the case, it doesn't have to be a fact that we had to discuss this situation during that meeting. That's the way it seems to me.

Q. I'm not saying it necessarily has to be the case that you would discuss Mr Gusinsky, I'm asking whether, in the circumstances in which this meeting took place, it is likely that you would have discussed Mr Gusinsky, given in particular that his channel, NTV, the other independent channel, was also critical of the way the administration had responded to the Kursk tragedy. Do you accept that it is likely that you would have discussed Mr Gusinsky?

A. To be exact, to be completely precise, I do not recall the position of NTV channel at that point in time. I remember well all the drama around ORT around this event, but nothing stayed in my memory with regard to NTV and NTV's coverage of the tragedy, the tragedy with the Kursk submarine. And it doesn't seem to me that it was something special at NTV during that period of time, at least I do not recall it.

Q. Can I ask you this, Mr Voloshin. Am I right to think that you don't have a clear recollection of this meeting, so that when you say you don't recall, are you saying it's just that you don't have a memory one way or the other, or are you saying that you specifically recall that you didn't mention Mr Gusinsky?

A. As I -- these nuances, I think I've got quite confused in these nuances. I do indeed not recall this meeting well. I had quite a specific task with regard to that meeting. I remember well about this task, this objective, and I have said about that. I have resolved that objection (sic) during that meeting. I announced to Mr Berezovsky what I announced to him, that for him in the future not to give instructions to ORT management with regard to the content of TV programmes, and for the ORT managers to be given the appropriate information from us so that they should not follow Mr Berezovsky's instructions with regard to the content. That was my objective, I recall that well, because that was the objective for that meeting, and naturally I recall the nuances a lot less well. And also I have some memories about the general emotional background about that meeting, and that's quite all right, and I indeed do not recall the rest of it.

It wasn't such a lengthy meeting. As far as I recall it was, well, give or take, half an hour.

- Q. So if Mr Berezovsky has a clear recollection of Mr Gusinsky being mentioned in this meeting you would not say that he was wrong about that. Is that right?
- A. I would say that he is wrong. I do not recall that that was mentioned at that meeting. It would seem very strange to me that, for some reason, I would have to mention Mr Gusinsky at that meeting. It would seem strange to me.
- Q. You see, Mr Voloshin, I suggest that at this meeting you informed Mr Berezovsky that the president considered that ORT was working against him and that he, the president, wished to have Mr Berezovsky out of ORT so that he could manage it himself. That's right, isn't it?
- A. No, this is not right. I've conveyed my opinion with that regard, and it seems to me my opinion is a lot more credible because I was present in person during that meeting. I remember exactly what was the objective of that meeting and what I was doing there.
- Q. Your recollection may be more credible than my opinion, but Mr Berezovsky was also at that meeting and that is his evidence of what you said. Do you follow?

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Well, what's the question there?

A. Yes, I do follow, and I've heard that Mr Berezovsky said a different thing.

MR RABINOWITZ: You also directed Mr Berezovsky to surrender his shares in ORT. That's right, isn't it?

A. This is completely incorrect. No shares were discussed at that meeting, there wasn't any point in that. The objective of our meeting was to inform Mr Berezovsky that the concert is over, the show is over, and he won't be able to impact the journalists, and he should not do that, and the journalists have the right to be free from his influence.

We implemented this within the next few days over these meetings and nothing else was required. Actually, events speak for themselves. For example, one of preachers of Mr Berezovsky's position at ORT was Mr Dorenko, a very talented journalist, and his show was closed at the end of December after it last has been aired, and nothing else was required. Everything we wanted to do we've done at that point in time, and I've informed Mr Berezovsky about that.

So a week later we basically didn't have any problems. He already was stripped of his influence and, therefore, could not bring that influence back.

Q. Well, you say you told him that the show was over and that a week later you say he was stripped of his influence. But as long as he held 49 per cent of ORT he was plainly in a position where he could affect the coverage that ORT gave of events in Russia. That is right, is it not?

A. No, I disagree. He had no opportunity to do so with holding 49 per cent. He had no opportunity to impact the position of journalists. Prior to that, it was some informal relationship system between him and the journalists, and that system was destroyed, nothing else was left. Actually he didn't even have 49 per cent because part of the shares was pledged at Vneshekonombank against a loan that the government extended to support ORT.

Q. When you say the show was over, you are saying also --

A. Sorry, the last phrase. The package owned by Mr Berezovsky was partially pledged against the loan that was issued by Vneshekonombank to ORT. As far as I recall, the share package was 6.5 per cent, so in actuality Mr Berezovsky didn't hold 49 per cent of shares but even a smaller package. But even having 49 per cent, he would not be able to impact the journalists. 49 per cent, the block of shares, 49 per cent does not allow to appoint anyone or doesn't allow to control the process.

Q. But what it does allow you to do, Mr Voloshin, is to block anyone else trying to make appointments because it's right, is it not, that for certain decisions within ORT one needed a two-thirds majority? And as long as Mr Berezovsky held the block of shares he did hold, he could block any two-thirds majority being obtained?

A. I do not recall in detail what the ORT charter was saying. A lot of time has passed since then and I don't think I was well aware of it at the time. But there was no need, we didn't have the need to do something radical with ORT. We didn't need it, we haven't got it and we won't have it in the future. And Mr Ernst, who was head of ORT at that point in time, he is continuing to manage it, he is a talented journalist, he is a talented manager. There was no need to replace him or change him and there was no need to do any -- have any majority of voting et cetera.

All that we had to do is to get Mr Ernst rid of the impact of Mr Berezovsky, and that's exactly what has been done, and to give Mr Ernst the freedom to solve all the problems within the team internally, and that was done as well. As I said, one could have seen the results of that in a few days' time without any blocking share packages. Mr Ernst put everything in its place and all the problems had ceased already a week after our conversation.

Q. So you say you told him that the show was over. How did you express to him that the show was over?

A. Obviously "the show is over" is a figure of speech.

I do not recall the exact words that I used, but I was trying to convey the meaning today several times.

The point was, the meaning was that you should not impact the journalists or the ORT management any longer. And secondly, that the management and the journalists of ORT shall have the same message from us, and that has been done. Not only it has been done, and there were some consequences confirming what I've been saying here and now. Within a week everything was put in its place and this is it. And the point of that meeting was to announce, to inform Mr Berezovsky about that, and that objective was achieved.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Could I ask you, Mr Voloshin, please, you said a moment ago that you implemented your decision "within the next few days". What did you actually do in order to take steps to ensure that Mr Berezovsky wouldn't be able to impact the journalists?

A. Everything that I've done, it wasn't much. I had a chat with Mr Ernst, that was and still is the director general of that channel. I told him that a decision had been made that Mr Berezovsky should not have any impact on the journalist team and personally on Mr Ernst, and that was told to Mr Berezovsky himself. And from now on Mr Ernst shall be free from any influence of Mr Berezovsky, and Mr Ernst was delighted to hear that from me.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: And were there any formal steps you took to implement your objectives?

A. Your Ladyship, there was no need to implement any formal steps basically because the impact of Mr Berezovsky was informal. He was calling on the phone Mr Ernst and journalists, and the journalists, he was telling them how to cover this or that event. And these powers, these powers of his to call or not to call, they were not formally documented in any way. So therefore, refusal to do that did not require any formal decisions.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: So there was no mechanism under the ORT charter that you had to go through so as to ensure that Mr Berezovsky's influence was withdrawn?

A. Indeed, there were no such mechanisms.

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Voloshin, the evidence you've just given about phoning Mr Ernst is not evidence that you have given in the three witness statements you have made, is it?

A. I think I didn't give that.

Q. What you actually said to Mr Berezovsky is he should clear out of ORT, that's right, isn't it?

A. I do not recall the specific words. I've said that several times. I cannot now vouch for the wording and what exact wording I've used but I think I have described the meaning in quite sufficient detail.

Q. And what you eventually said in anger was to threaten that if Mr Berezovsky did not fall in line he would end up like Gusinsky. That's right, isn't it?

A. No, that is not correct at all, and basically there was no need to do that. There was nothing to discuss with Mr Berezovsky. The point of our meeting was to inform him about the decision that has been taken, and this has been done.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: What was the basis upon which Mr Berezovsky was exerting influence beforehand? Was there some agreement that he should be allowed to do that? What was the position?

A. Your Ladyship, that was a certain situation that came to be. I've inherited it when I've arrived to work at the president's administration, this situation already existed, ORT existed in the way it was, and Mr Berezovsky informally was exerting influence on everything that was done at ORT. If not upon everything, then at least upon the lion's share, at least the political coverage and publicly notable coverage. That was a fact of life.

It was not formalised in any way. It was a certain tool of influence for him, and that tool of influence has arisen prior to me being involved in all these things. And for some point in time it was tolerated, I can't say that everyone was happy with that but it just was going on, and obviously that awful tragedy with Kursk has pushed us to stop, to cease that impact that came to be.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, I see. Thank you.

MR RABINOWITZ: And he was able, was he not, to appoint his own people as directors of ORT?

A. Do you mean the board of directors or executive directors?

Q. The board of directors of ORT.

A. Naturally, any shareholder has the right to nominate people into the board of directors and to vote for them at meetings. Yes, this is correct.

Q. And is it not right that in the summer of 2000 Mr Berezovsky appointed his daughter, Yekaterina Berezovsky, as a director?

A. To be honest, I do not recall.

Q. And he appointed the anchor Sergei Dorenko as a director?

A. I do not recall this. I do not recall who was on the board of directors. To be honest, I do not recall precisely who was in the board of directors on behalf of the state. The board of directors of ORT usually had nothing to do with the content of ORT coverage, and anyone who is involved with that company would know that.

The board of directors would look at some general organisational or financial aspects of the company activity, but it never scrutinised the content of the coverage.

I was more involved with the politics because I worked at the president's administration, and I wasn't much concerned with the composition of the board of directors. I do not recall their composition.

Q. Perhaps I can just refer you to some coverage of this at H(A)19, page 217.001 H(A)19/217.001.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Mr Rabinowitz, in due course will you show me, please, the charter of ORT so --

MR RABINOWITZ: I can give your Ladyship the reference.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: If you just give me the reference, I can look at it.

MR RABINOWITZ: It's H(A)20, page 240 H(A)20/240.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Thank you.

MR RABINOWITZ: So this is, if you are at H(A)19, page 217.001, a report in the Moscow Times of June 21, 2000. The first paragraph says:

"If there was any doubt about who controlled ORT television, Boris Berezovsky made it clear Tuesday when he put his daughter Yekaterina [Berezovsky] and his favourite anchor, Sergei Dorenko, on the board of directors. ORT, the country's largest television station, is 51 per cent state owned, but its ownership structure has always been ambiguous."

Does that help you in terms of whether these people were appointed to the board of ORT?

- A. I didn't know at that point in time that these people were appointed. It wasn't crucial for me. It's impossible to recall what you didn't know. Now I've read this paragraph and this esteemed publication surely wrote it -- written it for a reason, but at that point in time I didn't know that and I wasn't interested in this at that point in time.
- Q. And the people Mr Berezovsky appointed to the board were not replaced until after his shares in ORT were sold. Are you aware of that?
- A. I do not know that. I am not aware of that. I have never followed that.
- Q. I want to turn next to the second of the meetings which took place at the end of August 2000, and that is the further meeting between Mr Berezovsky, President Putin and yourself in your office in the Kremlin.

Mr Berezovsky said this occurred the day after the previous meeting and I think you accept that that might be right? Is that right?

A. I'm not convinced that it happened the day after the meeting but it definitely happened soon after our first meeting.

Q. You say that at this meeting President Putin told Mr Berezovsky that he wanted Mr Berezovsky to stop his involvement in ORT and to step away from managing the channel. Is that right?

A. Mr Putin, at that meeting, has confirmed that what I said to Mr Berezovsky at our first meeting was correct. The need for the second meeting actually has arisen due to the fact that Mr Berezovsky was so upset that he is stripped of the opportunity to impact ORT that he wanted to hear it personally from the president himself. And he asked me then, "Is it possible to organise such a meeting with the president?" He asked me that during the first meeting. And I told him that I'm not sure that the president would like to meet him but I promised to ask the president.

After that, I had a word with Mr Putin, I've informed him about the meeting that was held, and I told him that such a request has arisen to meet with him, and to my surprise the president has agreed and said, "Yes, I've got nothing against it. I'll tell him everything I think about the matter. Do organise that meeting". I did organise that meeting, it indeed was held at my offices. It was a very brief meeting, there was not much of substance that was discussed, there was nothing new as compared to the first meeting, nothing new arisen as compared to the first meeting.

- Q. So you say that President Putin was happy to have this meeting because he wanted to tell Mr Berezovsky everything he thought about the matter, and one of the things he would obviously have talked to Mr Berezovsky about at the meeting is the Kursk incident. That's right, isn't it?
- A. To be honest, let us imagine how much can be said within the five minutes considering there are three speakers and each of them would have 1.5 minutes or so, taking into account that everyone is taking part in this conversation.

I do not recall that we have discussed the situation in great detail and in depth. I remember that the meeting was emotional, emotions indeed were flying high, and there was no substantial discussion, no discussion on the merits.

The president did warn, yes, indeed, that Mr Berezovsky should not impact ORT anymore and that the journalists will be relieved from the need to listen to his instructions, and that was all. Nothing else was discussed at that meeting, if to discount various interjections and emotions.

- Q. Well, given how emotional you tell us President Putin felt about the Kursk incident and Mr Berezovsky's coverage of it, that would have been something that President Putin would have brought up. That's right, isn't it?
- A. Do you know, when people meet up they discuss some things -- it's not necessarily the things that they discuss. The situation was so clear to Mr Berezovsky and Mr Putin and myself, it was extremely clear, and I said, indeed, that it was dramatic at different points for each of the parties, but there was no need to discuss something, to chew over something. The situation was clear and Mr Berezovsky simply was informed about the decision that has been taken. He didn't like that decision one bit and that was his problem.
- Q. You see, I suggest to you it's very likely that the Kursk incident would have been raised by President Putin but you dispute that, do you?
- A. I cannot rule this out. I indeed do not recall the specific words that were said during the discussion. He might have mentioned that or not. The situation with Kursk was quite clear, was quite obvious for Mr Berezovsky, for myself and for the president. It was obvious for everyone. And it was obvious that Mr Berezovsky, in this dramatic -- in this catastrophic situation where people died, that was a real drama and a real tragedy, he used this situation in a cynical way in order to gain political capital, in order to get engaged in political PR. And it was so obvious it didn't need any qualification and we had nothing to discuss during that meeting.

- Q. Well, in this emotional meeting, do you accept that Mr Gusinsky's name was brought up again?
- A. I do not think that mention of Mr Gusinsky was something that was mentioned at that meeting. He had nothing to do with that meeting and there was no reason to mention him, so I do not think so.
- Q. Can I ask you, please, to go to bundle H(A)21 and turn to page 169 in the English H(A)21/169, 167 in the Russian H(A)21/167.

This, as you probably recognise, Mr Voloshin, is an open letter from Mr Berezovsky published in the Kommersant Daily on 5 September 2000. Just looking at -- it's an open letter to President Putin. Just looking at the first paragraph:

"Last week, a high-ranking official in your administration issued me an ultimatum: to transfer the stake in ORT -- which I control -- to state management or follow Gusinsky; apparently he meant [to] Butyrka prison. The reason behind this proposal is your displeasure over ORT's coverage of the Kursk submarine accident. 'The president wishes to run ORT himself', your representative [said] to me."

The representative that Mr Berezovsky is referring to here would have been you, Mr Voloshin, that's right, isn't it?

A. I think that he meant -- I think -- I mean

Mr Berezovsky, when he was addressing Mr Putin with this open letter, he meant myself. I think it was too daring to him to mention Putin himself, therefore he mentioned myself. I think that's the way it was.

Q. You'll see that he refers to you having issued an ultimatum to him to transfer the stake in ORT "to state management or follow Gusinsky". And that is exactly what happened at that meeting, Mr Voloshin, that's right, isn't it? You issued him an ultimatum?

A. Certainly this is not the way it was. This is the fantasies of Mr Berezovsky, and the fantasy here is not just about the threats, it's the fantasies about all the various conversations about shares.

And I would like to draw your attention to the fact that, compared to what he said on other occasions, here it looks like it's discussed that we supposedly wanted to pass the stake into state ownership. In my understanding, to pass something into state ownership this is not to sell.

And there are lots of other things in this open letter. I psychologically understand why Mr Berezovsky did this, but it's quite obvious that in these documents things are not true.

- Q. At no stage, Mr Voloshin, did you or anyone else at the time come out and say that anything that Mr Berezovsky had said in this open letter was not true. That's right, isn't it?
- A. I never publicly commented this open letter, this is true. However, it would have been impossible, we would have had to double the staff of Mr -- of the president's administration to be able to comment on every utterance of Mr Berezovsky, including utterances directed at us. Also he constantly was saying different things, we would never, ever catch up with him to comment on his utterances every time.
- Q. Mr Voloshin, the incident with the Kursk and what happened afterwards was something about which you have told us both you and President Putin felt very strongly. If what Mr Berezovsky was saying about it through the media was utterly false, as you are suggesting, you would at the time have issued a denial, but you never did, did you?

A. Sorry, the denial of what? I beg your pardon.

Q. That what he was saying here was in fact what had happened?

A. This statement is about the fate of ORT overall.

Mr Berezovsky, over the course of year 2000, I think had about ten utterances with regard to ORT. He was talking about selling these shares to the state, that he wanted to sell them to private investors, that he doesn't want to sell them to the state or to private investors, that he wants to pass them into management -- into the trust management of the state or he doesn't wish to do so.

Then he wanted to create some teletrust and pass the actions -- the shares to be managed by a team of journalists. Then he changed his mind again. And do believe me, we had no need to comment on this every time and we couldn't do so. You have to look at the context, and obviously now we're inside these complicated proceedings.

But if you look at it, in Russia, year 2000 was quite dramatic. Apart from Mr Berezovsky, there were lots of other things happening in the country. We had were several tragedies, a string of tragedies. We had an explosion at Pushkinskaya Ploshchad metro station, that was in August. Then there was a dreadful Kursk incident when 118 people died with everyone watching, that was a real tragedy.

A bit later, Ostankino TV tower burnt down, and at some point I thought that everything was just crumbling down. At the same time we were adopting new political laws, promoting new economic laws, for example introducing the new tax laws, looking at the budget. We had plenty to do apart from commenting on the nonstop utterances of Mr Berezovsky. Do take my word for it, we simply didn't have time.

Q. Mr Voloshin, you have mentioned utterances that you say Mr Berezovsky had made about the fate of ORT, but what is clear about your evidence here is that none of those utterances relate to a conversation that you were supposed to have had with him, and that makes this utterance, if you want to call it that, very different.

You were in a position where someone had claimed that you had had a conversation with them and made a threat to them. The fact that you had not responded to the other utterances is not possibly a reason why you wouldn't want to respond to this one if what he was saying here was untrue. That's right, isn't it?

A. I disagree with that. I shall repeat, (a), there was no opportunity to comment Mr Berezovsky's utterances because he was making his comments on a daily basis about this thing or another, and each of these comments could have been commented upon. And then, with regard to me personally, apart from some extreme cases, I avoided any public activity, I'm not a public person at all, I never liked any public comments and statements of any sort so I tried to avoid it. I'm not a public politician.

Q. Mr Voloshin, I'm going to suggest to you that your account of your meeting with President Putin and Mr Berezovsky is not accurate and that what happened at that meeting was this: that Mr Berezovsky tried to explain and justify ORT's coverage to President Putin, do you accept that that is what happened there?

A. I disagree. I have absolutely no certainty that that was the case.

Q. And that President Putin said to Mr Berezovsky that he had to give up his shares in ORT to the state or an entity acceptable to the government and that President Putin himself intended to control ORT.

A. Again, this is not the truth. No shares were discussed at these meetings. May I repeat myself, there was no need to do that. All objectives that we had have been resolved during these meetings and within the next few days after the end of these meetings. And after that, everything with ORT was to our satisfaction.

- Q. And President Putin confirmed at this meeting that the threat -- that unless Mr Berezovsky did as he said he would go the way of Mr Gusinsky -- sorry, he explained that the threat that he would go the way of Mr Gusinsky had emanated from President Putin, the threat that you had made to him at the previous meeting?
- A. No, there were no threats, that I recall correctly. Why would we need to threaten because we've solved all the objections during these meetings. If one wants to get something from a person, in theory, one could suppose that the person that you wanted to get something from can be threatened. But we didn't need to get anything from Mr Berezovsky, we've resolved all the objectives during the meetings and several days after the meetings. We simply didn't have the subject of our conversation, of our discussion anymore.
- Q. You could only have solved all of your objectives during these meetings if Mr Berezovsky was going to do what you told him to do, which was to stay away from trying to control ORT. You don't solve the objectives simply by having that conversation, or do you say that you do solve it?

- A. To be precise, perhaps we were exceedingly polite with regard to Mr Berezovsky. We didn't have to meet with him at all, it would have been enough to instruct the ORT management and ORT journalists not to listen to Mr Berezovsky anymore, but then we would have embarrassed us -- embarrassed them, inconvenienced them because he would have continued to call them and they would somehow have to dodge his phone calls. So we wanted to be direct and we wanted to inform Mr Berezovsky himself about that. This is the essence of what happened.
- Q. But what was it that you said which was going to ensure that Mr Berezovsky did as you were telling him to do?
- A. I do beg your pardon, I didn't understand the question.
- Q. Well, on your evidence, you were instructing Mr Berezovsky to stay out of ORT and not get involved. Are you saying that merely telling him this would have been enough? Politely? Or were you identifying what would happen to him if he didn't do as he was told?
- A. No, I didn't tell anything of sorts to him. Let me repeat, everything that was said has been already described by me. There was no need to discuss that with him in detail. Everything that would have happened if he did not follow these -- this advice, and I think he did start to follow this advice because, strangely enough, he stopped calling to ORT. But even if it were not the case, the journalists would have not been listening to him anyway. This is all that's happened.

And I'll tell you, the journalists were delighted to be rid of this influence. And those that were not happy to be rid of this influence, for example, as in the case with Mr Dorenko that couldn't get rid of this influence, his show was closed, and I think that happened a week or a week and a half after our conversation. This is all.

Q. I want to just move to what you say at paragraph 19 of your witness statement, E1, tab 1, page 7 in the English E1/01/7 and page 19 E1/01/19 in the Russian.

You say there, and you're talking here I think about your first meeting with Mr Berezovsky, you say:

"In view of my friendship by that time with Mr Abramovich, I believe that I probably discussed my meeting with Mr Berezovsky with him..."

Then, if you go to paragraph 23 of this witness statement, you say there that you also discussed the second meeting. You say it's "probable" that you would have discussed your second meeting with Mr Berezovsky with Mr Abramovich.

Now, the meetings that you had with Mr Berezovsky were part of your official business as the head of the presidential administration, they were not social calls, were they?

A. Do you mean, the meetings with whom?

Q. The two meetings that you had with Mr Berezovsky on --

A. Certainly they were purely business meetings.

Q. And they were part of your official business as the head of the presidential administration, is that right?

A. One could put it this way, although we've discussed, we were talking about stopping some sort of informal impact or influence. This is a nebulous substance, it's very hard to place it whether into a formal or informal function box, but overall I could agree with your definition.

Q. And are you suggesting in your evidence that at this time, in the summer of 2000, it was commonplace for you to keep Mr Abramovich informed about your government business generally?

A. I disagree. I've never stated this.

Q. I think you are saying that it was not commonplace for you to keep Mr Abramovich informed about your government business generally. Is that what you're saying?

A. Yes, you're absolutely correct, there was no practice for me to inform Mr Abramovich about my government business. There wasn't such practice.

Q. Can you explain to us why you spoke to him about these conversations with Mr Berezovsky then?

- A. I certainly could clarify, and once more I would like to draw your attention that I indeed do not recall these meetings with Mr Abramovich when I spoke about them with him, and in my witness statements I have stated, and I can confirm this now, and it seemed to me quite likely that I did discuss it with him. That follows from the logic of our friendly relationship with Mr Abramovich and this is so indeed.

Why I do not -- why I discussed these meetings with him with a high degree of certainty was because these meetings have touched upon Mr Berezovsky with whom Mr Abramovich had business relationship. And they were quite closely linked in business and, naturally, it had to worry him and I think it's quite logical.

- Q. Are you suggesting that whenever you had a government meeting touching on business to do with Mr Berezovsky, you would tell Mr Abramovich about it?

- A. I didn't have so many business meetings with Mr Berezovsky, and the activity of Mr Berezovsky is highly exaggerated in history. But if this -- if my meeting with Mr Berezovsky in any way would touch upon Mr Abramovich, who was and is my friend, then certainly it would have been logical that I would share this with him later. There was no such governmental secret that I would discuss with Mr Berezovsky and something that I would not be able to tell Mr Abramovich about later on, if I considered that to be interesting, useful or necessary.

Q. Did you tell Mr Abramovich about these meetings because you wanted him to act as an intermediary with Mr Berezovsky?

A. I beg your pardon, an intermediary? Who had to be an intermediary?

Q. Mr Abramovich, to be an intermediary between the government, you and President Putin, and Mr Berezovsky?

A. Not at all. We have just discussed this in detail, all our meetings with Mr Berezovsky. We didn't need intermediaries in this, we discussed everything directly and even with a deal of emotion.

Q. Well, we've had evidence that on or about 31 August, Mr Abramovich visited Mr Berezovsky in his chateau in France to pass on to him the message that the Kremlin were angry with him. Did you ask Mr Abramovich to pass on that message?

A. I completely do not recall this. I do not recall the fact of such meeting. I don't think I would have even known about this. They communicated between themselves on a regular basis and I didn't track the schedule of their meetings.

Q. Can I ask you next to go to paragraph 29 of your second witness statement. That's in bundle E4, tab 7, page 126 in the English E4/07/126 and 143 in the Russian E4/07/143. Do read it to yourself, if you will.

A. Which point?

Q. Paragraph 29. (Pause)

A. Yes, I have read it.

Q. You explain here that you do not recall having any discussions with Mr Abramovich about the Aeroflot investigation before Mr Glushkov's arrest. You then say:

"After Mr Glushkov's arrest, I remember discussing it with him a few times and Mr Abramovich expressing the view that it was a pity, in light of his medical condition, that Mr Glushkov was held in detention."

And you say that you had this discussion a few times but you don't here identify when you think these discussions were. Presumably, 11 years later, it is difficult to remember exactly when those discussions took place, especially if, as you were, very busy in your job, is that right?

A. I would agree with that. I do indeed not recall the dates of these meetings and discussions.

Q. Now, that was the position in your witness statement until just before the start of the trial. Then on 26 September, that's about a week before the trial, Mr Abramovich served a sixth witness statement, and can I just ask you to look at. That's in bundle E8, behind tab 8. I want you to look at paragraph 13, in the Russian it's at 119 E8/08/119 and in the English at 105 E8/08/105.

Do you see at this point Mr Abramovich suddenly saying, I think this was for the very first time, that he in fact visited you with Mr Krasnenker on the evening of 7 December, do you see that?

A. Yes, indeed, 7 December.

Q. And he says that you discussed the risk of Mr Krasnenker's arrest, and this was on the very day of Mr Glushkov's arrest, yes, 7 December?

A. Yes.

Q. Then what happens is that following this witness statement from Mr Abramovich, four days later, on 30 September, you served a further witness statement. This is your third witness statement, do you remember that?

A. I do not recall the date when I submitted my witness statement.

Q. Okay, take it from me it was four days later. And you exhibited to that witness statement some phone records that had been provided by your former secretary at the Kremlin. We can see those records if we go to bundle H(A)25 at page 162.007T in the English H(A)25/162.007T and 162.007 in the Russian H(A)25/162.007.

If you could turn to page 007, you see that there is a record of a phone call with Mr Abramovich at 18.19, 6.19, on 7 December. It's the second last entry, do you see that?

MR SUMPTION: My Lady, it's actually 16, I believe.

A. Yes, I do, I do see that.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Yes, 16, not ...

MR RABINOWITZ: If you go three pages on to .010, 0.10T, again there is a telephone call from Mr Abramovich at 14.12, 2.12, on 8 December. Do you see that?

A. Yes, I can see that. In the first case, indeed, it was 16.19 and the second time it was 14.12.

Q. We obviously can't see from these phone call logs the number which Mr Abramovich telephoned from so one can't really work out from this where Mr Abramovich was telephoning you from, can one?

A. It is indeed, it doesn't follow from these logs where the phone call was placed from.

Q. Can I then ask you, please, to go to your third witness statement. It's at E8, tab 15, I want to look at paragraph 2, and that is at page 189 in the Russian E8/15/189 and 185 in the English E8/15/185.

You say at paragraph 2 that you:

"... recall speaking to Mr Abramovich shortly after the arrest of Mr Glushkov on 7 December 2000."

And that is a discussion that you don't refer to as having taken place on 7 December in your earlier witness statements.

That's right, isn't it?

A. One second, let me read this.

I think there is no contradiction here.

Q. I'm not suggesting there is.

A. I think we're discussing the same meeting here.

Q. Is what's happened here, Mr Voloshin, that you were shown the phone logs that your secretary produced and from that you have reconstructed that there would have been a meeting with Mr Abramovich following that conversation?

A. No, this is not the case. This is not the case at all. I remember well the meeting itself, and since in my evidence we were discussing these days, I did ask my secretary to reconstruct the schedule of my telephone conversations. And I have seen this conversation; based on the logic of events it was clear that it was during this very conversation we had set up a meeting, and it was quite a dramatic day. I remember about the fact of that meeting, even without the reminder from my secretary. That was indeed a very dramatic day.

I remember the terrible state of Mr Krasnenker, he was indeed just about -- he was really shaking, because they were on the same case with Mr Glushkov, he worried about his fate and he worried that he might follow the way of Mr Glushkov. It was indeed very dramatic.

I remember that meeting and I actually can, whilst answering that question, I can say that Mr Krasnenker was doing black jokes that Mr Glushkov was imprisoned during some professional holiday, such as the airline employees day, and he was joking that, you know, how could it be, you know, a professional holiday and he was put in prison on the same day.

Q. You see, I asked you earlier about whether or not you could remember, 11 years later, when these discussions took place, and I said that 11 years later it would be difficult to remember exactly when those discussions took place, and you said:

"I would agree with that. I do indeed not recall the dates of these meetings and discussions."

That is why I suggest to you what has happened here is that you have reconstructed back from telephone logs, and perhaps talking to Mr Abramovich, a date on which you now say this meeting took place. That's right, is it not?

- A. I disagree with you. Indeed many years on it's difficult to recall certain events. But some events, if they are linked with some internal or external dramas or dramatic events, I think it's normal quality of human memory. You remember the most vivid and memorable events, especially if they're linked to some other events. So I have no other doubts, not a slightest doubt, that the meeting happened on that very day. I remember well the state of Mr Krasnenker and I remember the worry of Mr Abramovich who was a close friend of Mr Krasnenker.
- Q. If you remember it so well, why did you not mention this meeting with Mr Krasnenker in paragraph 29 of your second witness statement?
- A. I do beg your pardon, I didn't understand the question. Why did I have to mention it again in that paragraph, in paragraph 29?
- Q. That was your earlier witness statement. It's not mentioning it again, it would be mentioning it when the point first arose.
- A. I mention it since I was asked about it by our lawyers. I don't know, I remember many things, and in my witness statements I've put not -- far from everything that I remember, to be honest.

The way the work was organised was as follows:

I recalled some things myself and I was asked about some things by my lawyers. If I didn't think it material for the case I perhaps would have omitted to mention it. If I thought that something was material or important for the case, I could have written about it. There were many serious and dramatic events that were left outside the framework of my witness statements and I think it's not the only case. There were many other events happening.

- Q. Can I just ask you this: the secretary that you had at the Kremlin who provided you with these phone logs must also have kept for you a record of meetings which you arranged while you were at work. Is that right?
- A. This is a software programme, this is not a desk diary of my secretary. That's a software programme, and I have requested it both for the first issue and the second issue when I started being interested in these dates and I wanted to restore the flow of events but, unfortunately, she didn't have the opportunity with regard to the schedule. It was some other software programme that was not preserved and it was -- it did survive with regard to telephone logs.

But in any case if you mean, and I understand from the context that you mean that that schedule should have reflected our meeting with Mr Abramovich and Mr Krasnenker, it would have been unlikely for that meeting to be reflected there because that happened at my home and my secretaries never kept a schedule of my home meetings.

Q. Mr Voloshin, I have to suggest to you that you can't really recall that this meeting took place on 7 December some 11 years ago, can you?

A. I disagree. I do indeed recall this meeting well, and if such dramatic events didn't happen on that very day it would be hard for me to recall the date exactly. But since the arrest of Mr Glushkov happened on that day, and that was a serious event, would you agree? And then secondly, that event touched upon Mr Abramovich very closely due to the fact that Mr Krasnenker, who was a close friend of Mr Abramovich, was in the same case and he might have been facing something similar. I have absolutely no doubt, I even recall my emotions that accompanied that meeting.

Q. The fact that he was arrested that day, he was still under arrest two days later, for example, Mr Krasnenker might still have been worried two days later. That's right, isn't it?

A. He could have been still worried, indeed, but unfortunately Mr Glushkov still was in custody for a long time after that, and of course the situation was dramatic, namely on the first day when suddenly the arrest of Mr Glushkov was suddenly announced. That was the dramatic moment. And obviously, internally, Mr Glushkov had spent several years behind bars, of course internally every day for him was dramatic, I understand that well. But for people outside of that, the external people such as myself, certainly what was memorable, that was the day when that happened.

Q. Why was the arrest of Mr Glushkov a memorable day for you, Mr Voloshin? It would obviously be a memorable day for Mr Glushkov, but why would it be a memorable day for you so that you remember it 11 years later?

A. Firstly, I personally knew Mr Glushkov, I wasn't a close associate of his but I did know him, and if someone who you know is put in prison that affects any normal person, in my opinion. And secondly, Mr Glushkov was involved in quite a publicised Aeroflot case and that was in the public view, it was a publicly important event. Thirdly, it directly touched upon a friend of Mr Abramovich who, in his turn, was my friend and he was worried about this as well. So I had many reasons to remember this event well.

Q. You see earlier, when we were talking about Mr Gusinsky's arrest, you said you couldn't remember when he was arrested at all. But now with Mr Glushkov you say you've got a clear recollection of the exact day he was arrested, is that your evidence?

- A. Exactly, because Mr Gusinsky, I might have met him once or twice in my life, and with Mr Glushkov I knew him a lot better and we had shared circle of friends. Whereas with Mr Gusinsky I had no shared circle of friends.

I recall the arrest of Mr Gusinsky, I just simply don't recall the date because, on that date, I personally wasn't involved in this in any way. And in the case of Mr Glushkov, that happened with people that I was linked with in close friendship, and on the day of arrest of Mr Gusinsky I didn't meet anyone with regard to arrest of Mr Gusinsky. And on the day of arrest of Mr Glushkov, there was a reason to have a meeting between me and Mr Abramovich and Mr Krasnenker, and this is exactly -- it's logical that I recall this date well.

- Q. Can I just ask you to look at paragraph 6 of your third witness statement, please. You are giving evidence here about a birthday party on the 9th, late in the day on 9 December. You explain that the birthday party was at Mr Mamut's house, and is it right that there were around ten guests? A small party, yes?

- A. Yes, there was such a party.

Q. And you say that Mr Abramovich was there, is that right?

A. Yes, this is the case.

Q. And you were there with your wife, you say?

A. And this is true as well.

Q. And you were President Putin's chief of staff at the time, that's right, isn't it?

A. This is correct.

Q. And Mr Kasyanov, who was there, was the prime minister of the Russian Federation, is that right?

A. As far as I recall, this is true.

Q. The other couple who were there, Mr Valentin Yumashev and Ms Tatyana Dyachenko, Tatyana Dyachenko is President Yeltsin's daughter, correct?

A. Yes, this is correct.

Q. And Mr Yumashev, her husband, was President Yeltsin's son-in-law and his former chief of staff?

A. This is partially true. I think at that point in time he wasn't a son-in-law but he was already an ex-chief of staff.

Q. And would it be fair to say that this was a party attended by people who made up, in part at least, the inner circle of President Putin's advisers?

A. I wouldn't put it in this way. I think there were people not based on the principle of whether they were advisers of Mr Putin or not, there was some other principle of inviting them. And, as far as I recall, there were people that only saw Putin on TV, for example Mr Golukhov. I'm not quite sure that he met Mr Putin at that point in time, but surely he had seen him on TV many times.

MR RABINOWITZ: My Lady, I'm going to try to finish with this witness if I may, I don't have very much further to go. I'm in your Ladyship's hands.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: How much longer?

MR RABINOWITZ: Five minutes.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: I'll sit for five minutes but if it's longer than that I'll rise.

MR RABINOWITZ: I suppose we have re-examination as well.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Then I'll rise now.

MR SUMPTION: Not so far.

MRS JUSTICE GLOSTER: Then I'll go on.

MR RABINOWITZ: Mr Voloshin, Mr Berezovsky's evidence is that when he and Mr Patarkatsishvili met with Mr Abramovich in Cap d'Antibes in early December, Mr Abramovich made threats to Mr Berezovsky and Mr Patarkatsishvili and demanded that they sell him their shares in ORT. I'm not going to ask you to comment on that, Mr Voloshin, you weren't there.

At that meeting, however, Mr Berezovsky says that Mr Abramovich told him that he had come to deliver a message at your request as well as at President Putin's. Do you deny that you did ask Mr Abramovich to go to Mr Berezovsky and tell him that unless he surrendered his shares in ORT, Mr Glushkov would remain in prison and the shares would be expropriated?

- A. It certainly is not true.
