

Summer Specials & Skin Care News

Greetings!

When you live in New England, summer can't come soon enough. When it's hot, more skin surface tends to be exposed at a time when the dangers of the sun's harmful rays are at their peak. Remember to cover up as much as possible and always wear your sunscreen. You know fashion and you can make it work.

Under that sunscreen, there are many more ways to feel good about the skin you're in other than taking the risk of a deep tan. One is smooth, luxurious legs. While our laser hair removal procedures work best on those with light skin and dark hair, waxing is the preference of many with darker skin and blonde hair. Check out our waxing special.

We even have a treatment to peel away the unsightly dead skin cells that have been piling up under your tootsies all winter to reveal the healthier, more beautiful feet to show off in those new sandals.

Check out all of our Summer Specials & Savings and make your appointment today!

The History of HAIR REMOVAL

Women of ancient Egypt removed all of their body hair, including that on their heads, with tweezers, pumice, beeswax and sugar-based waxes.

During the Roman Empire, the lack of body hair was considered a sign of the classes. In the Middle Ages, Queen Elizabeth 1 led the fashion of removing it from the face, but not the body.

In 1880, Gillette created the first modern day razor for men. It would be another three decades before the Milady Decolletée, a razor specifically marketed for women, would appear.

Wax strips made their debut in the 1960s and the first laser hair removal methods hit the market soon after. And while electrolysis had been around for nearly a century, it became more reliable and safe in the 1970s. The decade also saw a resurgence in the removal of bikini area hair as that swimsuit fad gained popularity.

Today, most women rely on some form of hair removal in their everyday beauty routines, whether it's tweezing, shaving, waxing, laser, or depilatory. Improvements in time-honored procedures like waxing and new laser technologies continue to make hair removal one of the most popular beauty services available.

We offer both and a special on wax hair removal this Summer.
