Peak Vista Provider Educates Future Doctors, Wins Award

Colorado Springs, Colo. – Bradley Stokes, DO, a provider at Peak Vista Community Health Centers (Peak Vista), was recently awarded the 2022 Outstanding Clinical Teacher for Family Medicine Award by the Colorado Springs Branch at the University of Colorado School of Medicine.

Dr. Stokes was selected from a group of other outstanding nominees for his enthusiasm, dedication to teaching, patient care, and mentorship of the students he works with at the University's Colorado Springs Longitudinal Integrated Clerkship (COSMIC).

The COSMIC program places medical students with preceptors to teach them about their respective specialties. Where other programs have their students study alongside the preceptor for month-long rotations, COSMIC places students with their preceptor for a half day each week for an entire year. Dr. Stokes has been serving as a Longitudinal Integrated Clerkship preceptor for three years, with one to two students shadowing him each week.

Dr. Stokes joined Peak Vista in 2018. He currently practices family medicine at the Health Center at Printers Parkway, 340. He was honored during the University's Teaching Award Ceremony in April.
