There are a staggering 1.8 million people behind bars in the United States, a number so big it can make mass incarceration seem abstract. But mass incarceration is a local problem, driven by more than 3,000 county-run jails and local justice systems and nearly 18,000 police departments.

This fact sheet will help you understand who is locked up in your county prison and how this impacts your community.

193 people were in the Centre County prison on a typical day in 2021.

311 people from Centre County were in state prison at the end of 2016.

Jails are primarily funded by county-level taxpayer dollars and used to lock up people who are awaiting trial but have not been convicted of the charges they are facing. The vast majority of people in jail are simply too poor to pay bail. Some jails also hold people serving shorter prison sentences, and many jails rent beds to the state prison system or federal authorities—like U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE). In Pennsylvania, jails are called “county prisons” and are run by an appointed warden.

Prisons are primarily funded by state and federal tax dollars and hold people serving sentences of more than a year. Prisons are run by state departments of corrections and are managed by superintendents. Fewer than 9 percent of incarcerated people are held in private prisons.
Public health
Jails have revolving doors, often churning the same people in and out. Even before COVID-19, jail stays led to worse physical and mental health outcomes. In 2021, during the COVID-19 pandemic, the prison population decreased 22 percent from 2019. This decline shows that Centre County can quickly reduce its prison population.

Cost
In 2005, Centre County spent more than $7.8 million in taxpayer dollars to expand the county prison to 328 beds. Prison costs continue to make up a sizable portion of the county budget. Every dollar spent is one that could have gone to critical community needs.

Pretrial detention
112 people were detained pretrial on a typical day in 2021. Many are sitting in county prison simply because they cannot pay bail.

Rising incarceration
On an average day in 2021, 193 people were being held in the county prison, 55 percent of the total capacity. The 180 percent increase in incarceration since 1990 does not necessarily reflect an increase in serious crime. In 2021, during the COVID-19 pandemic, the prison population decreased 22 percent from 2019. This decline shows that Centre County can quickly reduce its prison population.

Admissions to state prison
- Total prison admissions

Increase in state prison admissions
The number of people sent to state prison from Centre County has risen 267 percent since 1990.

Note: Prison admissions reflect current sentencing practices more clearly than does the prison population. This is because the prison population, which includes people serving long sentences, changes more slowly in response to reforms.
Agencies using the county prison (2021)

40% People held for Centre County

78 People held for other counties

Cashing in on incarceration

On a typical day, 40 percent of people being held in the county prison fill beds “rented” to other agencies. The county gets paid a per diem to incarcerate or detain them.

Most counties charge fines and fees for court costs and prison stays. This further traps people in cycles of poverty.

Racial disparities in criminalization (2020)

Black people are 5% of the county population...

...but 10% of the county prison population.

Understanding disparities

Racial disparities begin with who gets stopped by the police and multiply throughout the legal system. When charged with similar offenses as white people, Black people are more likely to be detained pretrial, convicted, and given harsher sentences.⁶ Seemingly “color-blind” policies may still disproportionately impact communities of color.⁷

People of every race and ethnicity are incarcerated at higher rates than they were in 1970. The county’s white incarceration rate has grown 81 percent since 1990. Latinx people are also overrepresented in the nation’s jails, yet common misclassification of ethnicity leads to distorted, lower estimates of Latinx incarceration.⁸

Women in the county prison

In Centre County, the rate of women’s incarceration is growing much more rapidly than men’s.

Locking up loved ones

Two-thirds of women in jail across the country are mothers of young children.⁹

More than half of all people who are in jail because they couldn’t make bail are parents to young children.¹⁰

Nearly half of adults in the United States have had an immediate family member in jail or prison.¹¹
Each of these officials makes decisions that lead to criminalization and incarceration in your community:

Police and the sheriff  →  decide who gets stopped, who gets arrested, what they’re charged with, and whether or not they’re booked into jail.

Prosecutors  →  decide who gets diverted and who gets prosecuted and on which charges. They also make bail recommendations, control most of the evidence in a case, offer plea bargains, and make sentencing recommendations.

Probation and parole officers  →  decide supervision rules and requirements, what costs people under supervision must shoulder, and whether to reincarcerate someone for inability to meet those requirements.

Judges  →  decide who gets released or detained pretrial and who must pay a money bond to secure freedom. A judge or jury determines whether someone is found guilty and selects the terms of a sentence.

City, county, and state legislators  →  decide spending priorities for the community, control the purse strings that fund each of these systems, and enact local policies. State legislators write the criminal code, determining what constitutes an offense.
