No. 1 'Hoos Savor View From Atop ACC

By Jeff White, Virginia Sports March 11, 2018

BROOKLYN, N.Y. -- On a court strewn with blue and orange confetti, the University of Virginia men's basketball family, past and present, came together in a joyous throng at Barclays Center late Saturday night.

There was UVA center Jack Salt talking to former players Evan Nolte and Will Sherrill. There were Joe Harris and Akil Mitchell embracing their former coaches. There was Justin Anderson being Justin Anderson, smiling from ear to ear and exchanging hugs and handshakes in the celebration that followed No. 1 seed UVA's 71-63 victory over North Carolina in the ACC championship game.

Others on the floor included Virginia's president, Teresa Sullivan, and its new athletics director, Carla Williams, plus the wives and children of the Cavaliers' coaches. In the stands, thousands of UVA fans stood and sang the Good Old Song and then cheered the team as it cut down the net at one end of the court, head coach Tony Bennett snipping the final strand.

"This is the UVA family in a nutshell," said Harris, who plays at Barclays Center for the NBA's Brooklyn Nets. "This is what the program's all about."

The scene won't soon be forgotten by those who witnessed it.

"This is unbelievable," Harris said. "I don't want to say it's a better feeling than when we won it [in 2014], but I'm so happy for the players, coaches, everybody. To have this happen, to have the year that they've had, I'm so happy for them, and I can't wait for the [NCAA] tournament."

Nearly 40 years passed between UVA's first ACC tournament title (1976) and its second (2014). The third came more quickly.

After running away with the ACC regular-season title, the Cavaliers (31-2) remained dominant in Brooklyn. Virginia defeated No. 9 seed Louisville, No. 4 seed Clemson and, finally, No. 6 seed North Carolina to capture the conference tournament.

"I think it speaks to this group and how tough we are," said guard Devon Hall, a fifth-year senior who made the All-ACC second team and the ACC's all-defensive team.

"We've been battling all season, so to be able to grab this [tournament title], I think it's a special, special moment for us."

What sets this team apart, Bennett said, is the players' togetherness. "They're so unified. They're so unselfish."

They're also talented. Not only did the Cavaliers end a string of seven consecutive ACC tourney losses to UNC, which ousted them in the 2015 semifinals and the 2016 championship game, they set a school record for victories in a season.

"Thirty-one wins is a lot," said redshirt freshman forward De'Andre Hunter, "and hopefully we can keep getting more."

What makes the Wahoos' feats more impressive, of course, is that this team began the season unranked and picked to finish sixth in the ACC. UVA is now a consensus No. 1 in The Associated Press poll.

"It just speaks to how bought-in everybody is, from the players [and coaches], all the way down the line," sophomore guard Ty Jerome said. "Everyone's bought in, and everyone believes in their role."

That's been a trademark of Bennett's program in his nine seasons as Virginia's head coach, as his former players will attest. Watching the title game from behind the UVA bench were such alumni as Harris, Anderson, Nolte, Sherrill, Mitchell, Sammy Zeglinski and Doug Browman.

"Those are the guys that have made it possible for us to be where we are today," said Salt, a redshirt junior from New Zealand. "It's so awesome seeing them. Those guys paved the way."

"Family" gets thrown around often in team sports, but that defines the program Bennett has built in his nine seasons as Virginia's head coach.

"You feel love from everyone who's been here," Salt said, "guys that have been here before, guys that are here now. It's a community, and Coach stresses that. It's bigger than basketball. These are relationships you build throughout your four to five years here, and they last a lifetime."

Last summer, Anderson recalled, several alumni had an opportunity to hang out with current players at Bennett's home in Charlottesville.

"We just talked about what it means to be here and what this program represents," said Anderson, a third-year swingman with the Philadelphia 76ers, "and to see these guys carry it out, it's a surreal feeling."

This has been a magical season for the 'Hoos, and there are more chapters to be written. When the NCAA tournament field is announced Sunday night, UVA is a virtual lock to be the No. 1 overall seed.

"We're battle-tested," Jerome said, "on the road, neutral sites, we play in a great league. So we're battle-tested going into March, and that's what you want to be."

Four Cavaliers scored in double figures against UNC: sophomore guard Kyle Guy (16 points), Hall (15), Jerome (12), and Hunter (10), who hit 6 of 8 free throws in the final minute to seal the victory.

"The feeling right now is amazing," Hunter said.

The 6-7 Hunter, playing with both wrists injured, still corralled four rebounds. The last came with five seconds left, after which he triumphantly dribbled out the clock.

"I was going to launch [the ball] in the stands, but I felt like that would be too much," Hunter said, smiling.

The Cavaliers, who defeated the Tar Heels 61-49 on Jan. 6 at John Paul Jones Arena, led for the final 28 minutes and 49 seconds of the rematch. In the second half, UNC ran off seven straight points to cut its deficit to two, but the 'Hoos answered with a 10-3 run during which Guy, the tournament MVP, had three field goals.

"They're really good," UNC head coach Roy Williams said. "We felt like we had to play really, really well, and I don't think we did that."

The Tar Heels, who came in averaging 82.5 points, were playing for the fourth time in four days. They shot 40.8 percent from the floor. The Cavaliers, meanwhile, hit 9 of 17 shots from 3-point range. Hall had three treys, and Guy, Jerome and reserve guard Nigel Johnson (eight points) made two apiece.

UNC scored only two fast-break points and turned the ball over nine times against the nation's No. 1 defense. Virginia had four turnovers.

The Cavaliers are "really tough-minded," Williams said. "They're really intelligent. They realize who they are, and they play to their strengths and stay away from their weaknesses, and as a coach, you have to admire that."

Of UVA's current players, only Hall was also on the 2013-14 team. That makes him the first player in program history to earn two ACC tournament championship rings.

"That's awesome," Hall said when apprised of that distinction. "It feels great."

On one side of the postgame celebration stood UVA assistant coach Brad Soderberg, who played for Bennett's father, Dick, at Wisconsin-Stevens Point. Soderberg, who's in his third season at UVA, has known the younger Bennett for nearly 40 years.

"I've made up my mind," Soderberg said. "I think he's a pretty good coach."

Then he smiled.

Devon Hall has grown spiritually, athletically at UVA

By David Teel, Daily Press

March 10, 2018

The first Saturday in March was quintessential Devon Hall. Late in the afternoon, his versatile game on full display, he led Virginia to an emotional victory over Notre Dame. That evening, in front of family, teammates and coaches, he was baptized at Charlottesville's Northside Baptist Church.

His spiritual and athletic sides long connected, and a primary reason he chose U.Va., Hall could not have scripted more appropriate or rewarding experiences for the day of his final home game.

"Senior night and then my baptism," Hall said. "That day was special."

The same can be said of Hall's season, indeed his five-year career.

"He works," said assistant coach Jason Williford, a staple of Tony Bennett's Virginia staff. "I've been here nine years with Tony, been coaching 18. Have had some kids that worked really hard. Malcolm and him are the two hardest workers I've ever seen. Ever. He's like a machine. He's got a routine. He sticks with it. And it's shown."

Malcolm Brogdon was a first-team All-American in 2016 and the ACC Player of the Year. His No. 15 jersey hangs in the rafters of John Paul Jones Arena.

A fifth-year senior, Hall is not that caliber. But this season he emerged as the most reliable player on the nation's top-ranked team. He is a clutch shooter, inside and out, a lockdown perimeter defender, an outstanding passer and a revered voice in the locker room.

Coaches and media voted Hall second-team All-ACC and to the league's five-man defensive team, quite the leap for a 6-foot-5 guard who began the season with a career scoring average of 5.2 points per game.

But Hall's modest stats belied his value. He entered the starting lineup halfway through his sophomore season, became a defensive stalwart and hasn't relinquished the position. Saturday night's ACC tournament final against North Carolina marks his 87th consecutive start.

"I work on my game every single day," Hall said. "When you work like that every single day, it kind of becomes second nature, and confidence kicks in. I ... always pushed myself, but when you see guys like Malcolm and Joe (Harris) and all those guys that are ahead of you work their butt off, and you see the success they're having, it gives you great confidence in the work you're putting in, and hopefully one day you'll be able to step into that role."

Hall is the Cavaliers' No. 2 scorer (11.9 points per game) and rebounder (4.3 per game). He leads the team's guards in overall shooting percentage (46.2) and 3-point percentage (44.3), and he leads the ACC in assist-to-turnover ratio (3.09-to-1).

But what most gratifies Hall is the team. Virginia (30-2 entering Saturday's game) won the ACC regular season outright, is No. 1 in the national polls and will likely be the No. 1 overall seed in the NCAA tournament bracket revealed Sunday evening.

Could Hall have envisioned this?

"That's a tough question," he said. "I have the utmost confidence in everybody on this team because we play so well together and how united we are. ... When we're playing at a high level, we're a tough team to beat."

A 2013 graduate of Cape Henry Collegiate in Virginia Beach, Hall played for his father, Mark, in high school. Throughout his childhood, he competed against his older brother, also named Mark, in football and basketball.

Eleven months older and considerably stronger, Mark tortured his little brother before developing into a scholarship linebacker at U.Va. The two played in their maternal grandfather's backyard, with a spotlight if necessary, for hours on end and with plenty of cross words.

Devon Hall was a right-handed quarterback and left-handed point guard. He gave up football following the eighth grade, and while Mark excelled in both sports at the local public school, Green Run High, Devon transferred to Cape Henry to focus on basketball.

The older Mark Hall coached his youngest son hard and taught him to value defense. He calls Devon "an old soul" and said he still enjoys his parents' music: Stacy Lattisaw, the Delphonics, the Temptations, Howard Hewett and Johnny Gill.

"I'll bet you Devon can tell you every word to 'The Five Heartbeats,' "Mark Hall said of his son. "We'd actually be watching movies and start singing in the house. His private time is just studying, getting up some shots, sitting back and watching some movies, or going bowling. He keeps it genuine."

Devon Hall's demeanor was evident to the college coaches who recruited him.

"He had a maturity about him, always, in every way he carried himself," said ESPN analyst and former Virginia Tech coach Seth Greenberg. "He had a versatility about him, a toughness about him."

Hall chose Virginia over Virginia Tech, Maryland, Florida, Wake Forest and several others. Among the reasons was Bennett's faith.

"He's made a huge impact on my game and my life," Hall said. "He's a follower in Christ, and so am I. We had that conversation when I was first recruited here. ... Outside of basketball, he's just a great man and somebody who has integrity that I can respect. ...

"He didn't sugarcoat anything. He didn't promise me anything. ... I've never had anything handed to me, so I didn't want a coach who said, 'All right, you're going to have this.' I was willing to come here and work, and Coach Bennett gave me the opportunity. He was very straightforward, and I appreciated that. The staff made me feel like family."

Hall enrolled at Virginia with another point guard, London Perrantes, and coaches soon concluded that Perrantes was better suited for the position. They offered Hall the chance to redshirt, to spend a year as practice fodder while he expanded his game to become an off-the-ball combination guard.

Hall agreed, but the year was trying, as was a redshirt freshman season in which he averaged 10.6 minutes and appeared in only 23 games. Fueled by a belief in himself and Bennett, and comforted by a faith he learned from his late maternal grandmother, Hall endured.

"Of course you get a little bit discouraged when it's not the exact results you want," he said, "but there's always been great people around me, and I've always had a positive mindset about certain stuff. Things happen for a reason, and when you get put in tough situations, it's about how you rebound and come out of them."

Bennett recalls a Virginia Athletic Foundation gathering last spring or summer in Hampton Roads, where he and Hall appeared.

"He just talked about his process," Bennett said, "how challenging it was but how patient he knew he had to be. Redshirting and working and not losing sight of getting better little by little. Getting older. And just how steady he was through that. It was delayed gratification. It was just, 'I'm gonna get better, I'm gonna get better. I see the guys in front of me. They went through this.'

"I remember I got up and said I wish I could tape that and play that to every young person, regardless of whether they're an athlete or not. That's how it works. That's how life is most of the time. I just think he's been, I use the word faithful. He's been faithful to the process. ... He handles success very well and he handles frustration or failure or adversity very well.

"That's why I think he's so steady. He's real unselfish. He has a good way about him, too. I just marvel at that. But his maturity, with his willingness to work and not get too shook if it didn't happen right away, was remarkable in today's day and age."

A two-time ACC All-Academic honoree, Hall earned his bachelor's degree in media studies and will receive a master's from the Curry School of Education. He muses about a career in coaching and/or counseling but first wants to pursue basketball.

Last Saturday against Notre Dame showed why. Hall led Virginia with 17 points and six assists. He made jump shots and penetrated, finishing at the rim with either hand. He also grabbed five rebounds and committed only one turnover.

Then it was time for church.

"I accepted Christ in my life a long time ago," Hall said, "but I'd never been baptized. ... Coach (George) Morris, our team chaplain, and I had a conversation, and he sent me a video so I could learn more about it. ... It was public recognition and me taking the next step in my walk with Jesus. It was a special moment for me and my family and friends."

More moments await in the NCAA tournament, perhaps even the ultimate basketball moment of a championship. Regardless, Hall and U.Va. are each the better for the last five years.

"I've just matured," he said. "I've matured in the classroom, I've matured on the court. I've been able to grow here and (establish) a foundation for life in general. This place has been special to me and always will be. So you just cherish the moments you have."

A Tale of Two Mamadis

By Carolina Newman, UVA Today March 6, 2018

In November 2006, University of Virginia basketball player Mamadi Diane scored the first points in the brandnew John Paul Jones Arena, hitting a three-point jumper that would send the Cavaliers on their way to beating the No. 10 team in the country, the University of Arizona.

More than 4,000 miles away in Conakry, Guinea's sprawling capital city in West Africa, 9-year-old Mamadi Diakite was more focused on the soccer ball, weaving and dribbling among his friends as they played in city streets and parks. The future UVA forward – not yet grown to his full 6 feet, 9 inches – had barely picked up a basketball, and had no idea that he would one day electrify the same arena Diane had just christened.

In a basketball season full of extraordinary storylines and results – the No. 1 'Hoos celebrated the Atlantic Coast Conference regular-season title on Saturday and are hoping for a deep NCAA Tournament run in March – the story of these two Mamadis and the bond they share is as heartwarming as any.

From Strangers to Brothers

Almost 12 years after he hit that first shot in JPJ, Diane again sits in the arena. After a successful basketball career in Europe, he's back on Grounds as a first-year student at UVA's Darden School of Business, honing the business skills he needs to develop his family's Guinea-based enterprise, Consolidated Mining Corporation.

Beside him in the arena's blue bucket seats is Diakite, now 21 and catching his breath after practice with the rest of this year's Cavaliers.

Even sitting with them for just a few minutes, their rapport is evident. Asked to describe his relationship with the elder Mamadi, Diakite looked over at him and grinned.

"That's a brother, right there," he said. "We have this younger and older brother thing going on." The brotherhood began in earnest a few years after after Diakite, who displayed extraordinary raw talent once he finally picked up a basketball, made the move to the United States. He came to the Blue Ridge School, a private all-male boarding school outside of Charlottesville, in 2013 and signed with UVA in 2015 after a competitive recruitment process.

It was an exciting, but tough transition for the young player, who is the youngest of four siblings. His parents and most of his family still live in Guinea. Though he was thrilled with the opportunities the U.S. offered – including the chance to play for a program like UVA – he missed home.

"Guinea is very different from here. It's a Third World country, as they say," Diakite said. "To me, it is a great country. That is where I am from, where I grew up. People are very social, even if there is a lot of poverty."

Because he arrived in the U.S. speaking only French, it took Diakite some time to find in Virginia even a fraction of the social support and sense of community he loved in Guinea.

"At first it was really hard. ... I only spoke basic English. I could tell people I was hungry," Diakite said, chuckling. "I'm hungry" was a pretty important phrase for a high school athlete.

"But I found my way, and hung around some good people who really eased the process for me," he said. Among them was Diane, who, like Diakite, had close ties to Guinea. Though he grew up in Washington, D.C., his father, Mori Diane, is from Guinea and based his business there. Now, the basketball-player-turned-businessman plans to use his Darden education to help his father and brothers grow Consolidated Mining Corporation.

"Guinea is a developing country that has a lot of potential, but they need more people with the expertise to develop the resources that are there," Diane said. "That is something we are trying to bring."

As Diane prepared for his return to Darden and Diakite came to UVA, coaches put the two in touch.

"Mamadi [Diakite] was going through so many transitions – the transition from Guinea to America, from high school to college, and high school basketball to college basketball," Cavalier head coach Tony Bennett said. "Having mentorship from someone who is not only from his part of the world, but who is attended the same university and plays the same sport ... I think that has been really helpful for [Diakite]."

Though Bennett had never coached Diane – he was hired shortly after Diane's last season in 2009 – the coach had no hesitations about asking him to help out the younger athlete.

"Mamadi Diane is one of the nicest, kindest guys I know. I wish I had the chance to coach him," Bennett said. "He has this contagious spirit about him, and he has been so helpful to our program."

The connection between the two Mamadis was even closer than Bennett and his assistant coaches realized at first. Though they had never met, their fathers – Mori Diane and Aboubacar Sidiki Diakite, who works for Guinea's Health Ministry – knew each other professionally and were re-introduced by their sons.

"Guinea is not as big as the U.S., so they already kind of knew each other, or knew of each other," Diakite said.

For him, that sealed the deal.

"Back home, once your parents know each other, you are like family," Diakite said. "You take care of each other and give advice to each other."

That's exactly what Diane has done for his younger namesake. The two get together whenever they can, text when Diakite is on the road during the season and talk about all sorts of issues on and off the court.

Lessons Learned, and Shared

Like any older brother, Diane has tried to teach Diakite a few things he wished he knew as a player under Bennett's predecessor, Dave Leitao. Though he was something of a breakout star during his first three years at UVA, Diane struggled some during his last year and did not get as much playing time as he hoped. It was tough, but he said the struggle taught him important lessons that have shaped how he approaches his work at Darden and how he advises Diakite.

"We talk about keeping a cool head, not getting frustrated when things don't go well – really all sorts of things," Diane said. "For me, it's a lot of stuff I wish I knew when I was his age – that is what I try to focus on. Some of it is basketball, some of it is off the court."

"Anytime that he can, he comes around to see me and gives me advice," Diakite said.

It's exactly the kind of relationship Bennett hopes to see between current and former players, many of whom frequently return to Charlottesville to talk with the coaches and work out with the team.

"You want to build a program where the former players want to return, and I think we have a really good family feel here that keeps that going," Bennett said.

"There are so many lessons you can learn from guys who are now playing in the NBA or overseas and who have been where you are," he continued. "Our team this year is really teachable – they such a great humbleness about them and they really want to learn from the guys that come back."

Sometimes, the teachable moments go far beyond basketball. In addition to X's and O's, Diane and Diakite talk about Diakite's future after basketball. The French major, who red-shirted his first year at UVA, is considering pursuing a master's degree in business during his fifth year and has watched Diane's career at Darden closely.

"Coming to Darden was a big change, but for me it's the next stage of life," Diane said. "I feel like I almost get to live another life. Basketball was my life for so long, and now I can do something else."
"I am looking at doing another degree in economics or commerce," Diakite said. "I know it can be hard

... because of how intense the schedules are, but I like challenges, so we'll see."

Sometimes, the two Mamadis talk about a different sport entirely. Both love soccer, though they disagree about who to cheer for. Diakite is a big fan of Real Madrid, while Diane now lends his support to Madrid's archrival, FC Barcelona.

"I used to like Chelsea, but now, I might go with Barcelona," Diane said, laughing as Diakite groaned and shook his head.

Fortunately, when it comes to basketball, they are in agreement. It's all 'Hoos, all the way, and both men are eager to see what March brings.

Ready for the 'Madness'

Diane made it out to one of the Cavaliers' last home games at JPJ, watching as they beat Georgia Tech, 65-54, two weeks ago. He was impressed with what he saw.

"The difference I saw between UVA and Georgia Tech came down to execution. UVA looked like a team that understood what needed to be done, knew where their spots were and knew how to score," he said. "That is one of the marks of a good team. Before the game, they can tell you where they can get shots on the floor to fall, what will happen during the course of the game and how their offense will run. They can dictate that to the other team before they even step on the court."

Diakite does not start, but has appeared in all 30 games, averaging about 15 minutes of playing time. He has become known for his soaring dunks, swatting shot blocks and – particularly endearing to fans – his excellent facial expressions while cheering on his teammates.

"Mamadi has really given us some nice lifts in the last few games," Bennett said. "He is newer to the game, because he did not grow up playing basketball, and the more experience he gets, the better he gets." Even more importantly, as Bennett, Diane and the rest of the Cavaliers have taught Diakite more about basketball, they have also given him an American version of the family and community he missed in Guinea.

This team, Diakite said, is as close-knit as any he has been a part of.

"We are unified," he said. "We have passion. No matter if you are the best player on the team or not the best player on the team, you give all of your effort, work as hard as you can and try to get the job done. Everyone makes mistakes, but we stay together through the ups and the downs."

He noted that Coach Bennett's famed five pillars – humility, passion, unity, servanthood and thankfulness – remind him of the values he saw lived out in Guinea. It's part of what initially attracted him to UVA.

"I love how nice people are here. ... It was kind of similar to my home country; everyone was very nice and really came together," Diakite said. "And they are all about ethics and having a strong work ethic." Diane agreed and said he was encouraged to find the sense of community at UVA did not change once he took off his basketball uniform.

"As a student at Darden, I still get that sense of attention and familiarity, that welcoming feeling," he said. "I think that speaks a lot to the kind of people that are here."

A Hopeful Sendoff

Before hitting the road for this weekend's ACC Tournament, Diakite and his team got one final – and very voluble – dose of that support on Saturday at JPJ, when Cavalier fans turned out in full force for the team's final home game of the season.

The capacity crowd raised thunderous cheers – especially for fourth-year players Isaiah Wilkins, Devon Hall and Nigel Johnson – as the 'Hoos took down Notre Dame in a tough matchup, winning 62-57. The victory capped an ACC regular-season championship campaign for the Cavaliers, who finished with a record 17 conference wins – four more than runner-up Duke University, the preseason favorite. Afterward, Bennett and the team took a moment to celebrate at mid-court before turning and waving their Afterward, Bennett and the team took a moment to celebrate at mid-court before turning and waving their thanks to a roaring crowd.

"It was so neat to bring all of the seniors together with the whole team, thank the crowd and walk off the court together," Bennett said of the emotional moment.

It was a celebration, of course, but also a send-off. The Cavaliers, ranked No. 1 in the nation, are bound for the ACC and NCAA tournaments, and are hoping to keep their winning streak going as long as they can.

"We have talked about not trying to overcomplicate things, and not getting too concerned about records, rankings and accolades," Bennett said. "We need to have a growth mindset, in terms of trying to improve with each practice, really prepare for the next opponent, and then play to win. That's all you can do – you give your best and then you live with it."

Diakite agreed with his coach.

"It felt really good, but we are still focused," Diakite said of the ACC regular-season championship. "We know there are still a lot of things that need to get done."

For now, all Diane and the rest of the UVA faithful can do is wait, ready to see how much more this year's squad can accomplish and ready to cheer them on, win or lose.

How Tony Bennett Turned Virginia Into College Basketball's Spurs

By Jordan Ritter Conn, The Ringer March 1, 2018

The best team in college basketball might not send a single player to the NBA this June. The most consistent program in the ACC over the past half decade has recruited only one McDonald's All American in that span. The University of Virginia has a coach who once swore he'd never go into the profession, and a collection of players who were chosen, in part, for their ability to cope with losing. Under head coach Tony Bennett, the Cavaliers have built a program that seems to feed on itself, turning midlevel recruits into incubating redshirts into ACC stars. They have forged a culture that perpetuates success, regardless of the individuals on the floor, like college basketball's version of the San Antonio Spurs. They are tough and deep and efficient, among the favorites to win a national championship in April.

Are they boring?

That's how they've been characterized time and again throughout the Bennett era. For the Win: "UVA Basketball Keeps Winning But That Doesn't Mean We Have to Like It." Deadspin: "If You Like Painful Basketball and Dickhead Fans, Root for Virginia." ESPN's Myron Medcalf took it a step further, wondering in 2015, "What if Virginia as a 1-seed is bad for college basketball?" Bennett has said he doesn't care what people think. In 2015, Virginia's president, Teresa Sullivan, weighed in, posing with Virginia mascot Cav Man holding a sign that said, simply, "NOT BORING."

When I bring this up to sophomore guard Ty Jerome, I can almost hear him rolling his eyes through the phone. "To be honest, I wouldn't have anything to say to anyone who thinks that about us," he says. "But for the sake of your question, I'll say this: We are everything that college basketball is supposed to be about. All of our guys have completely bought in. We're focused on the now. We're not worried about the next level, at least not at the moment. This is basketball in its purest form. There are no egos on the court. It's everything you could ever want from this sport."

Evidence of this presents itself one night in late February. From the stands in John Paul Jones Arena, where the Georgia Tech Yellow Jackets are playing on the road at Virginia, one can glimpse the classic tells that a once-competitive basketball game has reached the stage that nearly every UVA game reaches these days — that moment when the opponent falls into dead-legged and heavy-eyed resignation, a pained succumbing to what has been inevitable since the opening tip. Tonight, with about five minutes remaining in the second half, all the signals arise. It's evident in the hands, clutching shorts; in the backs, hunched over. Passes fly inches off target. Jumpers fall pitifully short. The scoreboard still suggests that Georgia Tech has a chance, but anyone watching knows there will be no comeback. Against Virginia, there rarely is.

"You just sense it," senior forward Isaiah Wilkins says of moments like this one.

"We are everything that college basketball is supposed to be about. All of our guys have completely bought in. We're focused on the now. We're not worried about the next level, at least not at the moment. This is basketball in its purest form." —UVA guard Ty Jerome

Redshirt freshman guard De'Andre Hunter says he notices it just after the kind of possession that has become a hallmark of Virginia games. The shot clock drains. A forced jumper goes up. Ball grazes rim. Heads drop. "That," Hunter says, "is when we know we have them right where we want them."

Jerome is more blunt. "Some teams," he says, "almost quit."

Each of these players is speaking generally, not specifically about the game against Georgia Tech. The Yellow Jackets, in fact, fare better than many teams have against Virginia this season, eventually losing 65–54. It could have been much worse. About a month earlier, Virginia held Clemson to 13 points in the second half. Three days after this game, the Cavs will hold Pittsburgh to seven — seven! — points in the first. Virginia is giving up 52.1 points per game, best in the country, and allowing teams to shoot 37.5 percent from the field, which ranks third. According to adjusted defensive efficiency stats measured by KenPom.com, this year's Virginia team has the best defense of any team since the 2001–02 season, which is as far back as the site's data goes. This is not just the best defense in the country — it's one of the best in the recent history of the sport.

Sitting in the press room, minutes after watching UVA clinch the ACC regular-season title against his team, Georgia Tech coach Josh Pastner puts it more directly. "If they continue to stay healthy, I think this is Coach Bennett's year to get to the Final Four," he says. "And possibly win the whole thing.

This season's Cavaliers team is no anomaly. Under Bennett, Virginia has cemented itself alongside Duke and North Carolina among the ACC's and the nation's elite programs. It has won three of the past five regular-season ACC championships, including this season's, and is on track to earn its third no. 1 seed in the NCAA tournament during that span. Per KenPom, UVA has fielded one of the nation's top seven defenses in six of the past seven years. Bennett has built a national powerhouse through selective recruiting, methodical player development, and a sustained culture of valuing team goals over individual ones. He and his staff have consistently turned slow-footed shooters into lock-down defenders and developed middling recruits into NBA mainstays, all while listening to semiannual chatter among opposing fans and reporters who wonder whether the success of such a slow-paced team damages the sport by turning away casual fans who'd rather see a barrage of 3s and dunks.

Bennett has yet to reach a Final Four. After losing three transfers, this year's team started outside the AP Top 25 but has steadily climbed the polls all season, now in its third consecutive week at no. 1. It is now clear: No matter how many players it loses, Virginia should be considered an annual contender. This team may be Bennett's best yet. "Maybe some teams we've had here have had more individual talent," he says, "but this team has a togetherness and a unity that's special. They've come as close to maxing out their potential as any team we've had."

The site NBADraft.net does not project a single player from Virginia's roster to be selected in the 2018 or 2019 drafts. According to the 247Sports composite rankings, the Wahoos' past four recruiting classes have ranked 32nd, 62nd, seventh, and 98th. And yet Virginia has put together perhaps its most impressive regular season of the Bennett era, sitting 26–2 and 15–1 in the ACC, ranking first in both polls, the RPI, and the KenPom rankings. They beat North Carolina and Clemson at home and defeated Duke at Cameron, and with two games remaining, they lead the ACC by three and a half games.

When this year's Cavs are clicking — and they are almost always clicking — they look like a ruthlessly efficient machine. Sophomore guard Kyle Guy probes the paint in search of shots for himself or others. Jerome is liable to shoot the moment he steps across half court. Wilkins serves as the rabid and disruptive spark to the defense while bigs Jack Salt and Mamadi Diakite (a junior and sophomore, respectively) provide garbage buckets and active hands. Senior guard Devon Hall is the steadiest presence on the nation's steadiest team, shooting 45 percent from 3 and 91 percent from the line, and ranking second on the Cavs in scoring, rebounds, and assists. The team lacks a true star, with no player making even the honorable mentions in Sporting News' midseason All America team, and yet it would be unsurprising to see one or more players join Malcolm Brogdon, Justin Anderson, Joe Harris, and Mike Scott as Bennettera players who've carved out roles in the NBA.

It would be even less surprising to see Virginia celebrating a national championship in San Antonio this April. For Bennett, that would be the highlight of a career he never imagined he'd have.

He didn't want to be a basketball coach. Bennett laughs when he says it, talking by phone in late February. "I swore it off; I really did," he says. His father, Dick, was a Wisconsin coaching legend, working his way from coaching a high school freshman team in 1965, to a varsity team in 1966, to the NAIA's Wisconsin—Stevens Point in 1976, to Division I Wisconsin—Green Bay in 1985, and then finally, 30 years after he began coaching basketball in the state, taking over as head coach of the Wisconsin Badgers in 1995. In his fourth season in Madison, he led the Badgers to their first Final Four in 59 years. Bennett's older sister, Kathi, coached the women's teams at Indiana and Northern Illinois. He'd seen enough stress in both his father and his sister's lives to turn himself off from the idea of following their paths.

"I was like, 'Why would you ever want to do that?" he says. "I thought I was going to play for 10 or 15 years in the NBA and then just retire on a beach in Hawaii, and that would be it." After Bennett, a point guard, led his father's Green Bay team to an NCAA tournament berth, Charlotte picked him in the second round of the 1992 NBA draft. After two seasons backing up Muggsy Bogues, a foot injury limited him to only three games in his third year. And after rehab, he signed another pro contract — in New Zealand, with the North Harbour Kings. Says Bennett: "I just kind of thought, 'I'll get healthy over here, and then when I'm ready I'll head back to the NBA."

While Bennett tried to work his way back to full health, his team's management came to him with a proposal: What if he became a player-coach? He gave the idea some thought. He and his wife loved New Zealand. She was working as a youth pastor in a newly founded church, and they were both spending their 20s in one of the most beautiful countries on earth. As long as he got to keep playing when healthy, Bennett reasoned, he could give coaching a shot. Even by international basketball standards, New Zealand was something of a hinterlands, one of the few leagues in the world where the concept of player-coach was still viable in the 1990s. "It wasn't just playing and coaching, either," says Bennett. "I swept floors before practice; I went out to local businesses and tried to get sponsorships. I did a little bit of everything."

"Losing is a truth serum. That's when you really learn about people. If we can lose together, and we can still survive — to me, that's the foundational piece." —UVA coach Tony Bennett

Everything, that is, except play his way back into the NBA. It felt clear to Bennett that his time as a high-level professional basketball player was over, but he came to enjoy the coaching portion of his player-coach responsibilities. "I found myself thinking, 'You know, this isn't so bad,'" he says. "'It's actually kind of enjoyable. It's not as good as playing — definitely not. But it's still competitive. You get to build relationships. And you get to be immersed in the game." Missing home and family, Bennett returned to the States in 1999 to serve as a volunteer assistant for his father's Wisconsin team. Dick Bennett retired in 2000, and new coach Bo Ryan hired Tony as an assistant coach. After three years, though, Dick decided he still wanted to coach, and he took the head job at Washington State. Tony followed. This time, when his father retired for good in 2006, Tony took over for him as head coach.

The Cougars won 26 games in Bennett's first year, tying a school record. "My father took all the bullets, rebuilding that program," says Bennett. "By the time I took over, we'd rebuilt it to a point where we had a chance." After three seasons as head coach in Pullman, Bennett took the job at UVA in 2009. He inherited a team that had won 10 games the previous season. Just as striking, he inherited a team that played at the 89th-fastest adjusted tempo of Division I's 344 teams. Bennett immediately slowed the pace. "Playing this way," and here Bennett is referring not only to the pace of play but also to his offensive and defensive systems, "is such a team-oriented way to play. It's something I've seen have a lot of success." In Bennett's first year, Virginia ranked 316th in adjusted tempo.

"I really wanted to buy in, but it was hard for me," says Wizards forward Mike Scott, one of the holdovers from previous coach Dave Leitao's regime. "I was so used to getting out in transition, so it was hard playing the way he wanted." For a stretch, Bennett started walk-on Will Sherrill over Scott, in part to prove that he would sit talent in favor of players who bought in to the principles he valued. Early in his career, says Scott, "I was a selfish player. But that whole experience was really good for me. The way he pushed me — that's what helped me to play at the next level. I had to learn how to be a great teammate."

When Bennett looked across the country (and beyond) for his earliest recruiting classes, he kept an eye open for the skills that college coaches everywhere covet. He wanted shooters and bangers, athletes and ball handlers. He didn't contend for the services of one-and-done players, but he wasn't morally opposed to them, either. He did, however, have one unique requirement, something he'd learned from his father when watching him rebuild programs at three different schools.

"I always think to myself about a player, 'Can I lose with you?" says Bennett. "Losing is a truth serum. That's when you really learn about people. If we can lose together, and we can still survive — to me, that's the foundational piece."

Evan Nolte stretches his legs out at a picnic table just outside of Ace Biscuit & Barbecue on a warm February afternoon. He digs into a sausage-and-egg biscuit topped with gravy, and he smiles. "I love this place," he says. He is talking about the biscuit joint, but also about Charlottesville, a town where he spent five years of his life. He's in town today to watch his former team and return to the school he helped win two ACC championships and reach an Elite Eight. He got that chance because he could shoot and pass and grab the occasional rebound. And, as much as anything, because Bennett deemed him a player with whom he could lose.

"It just felt different here," says Nolte, remembering his recruiting process. A four-star recruit from Georgia, he had offers from Oklahoma, Ohio State, Georgia Tech, and many others. "Even though Bennett had just gotten here, it felt like there was a togetherness among the team that I didn't really feel other places." This word — togetherness — came up time and again in my interviews with current and former players. Says Jerome: "We get breakfast together. We get dinner together. When something goes wrong, we fix it together. We lose together, and we win together. That's just who we are."

No basketball game, though, has ever been won over a team meal. Virginia's success is built on the way it plays. As much as anything, it's built on the pack-line defense. Bennett's signature system runs on heavy ball pressure and well-positioned, tightly compacted help defense, with off-ball defenders perfectly calibrating their own place in the "gap." The post is often doubled. Passing around the perimeter is not only tolerated — it's welcomed. But the tightness of the "pack" — the four off-ball defenders — makes penetration and passes into scoring positions in the paint almost impossible for an offense to come by. "Everyone has to be completely bought in to the concept of playing team defense," says Bennett. "You have to ask about your players, 'Do they have the heart for it?""

Bennett has coached several excellent one-on-one defenders. Brogdon won the NABC Defensive Player of the Year. Anderson became a first-round pick on the strength of his defensive versatility. On this year's team, Wilkins serves as the perfect anchor in the pack line, active and relentless and capable of protecting the rim when the system breaks down. One fact, though, is often overlooked regarding Bennett's system: To play at UVA, you don't have to arrive on campus as a good defensive player. In fact, you can be borderline incompetent.

"Coming out of high school," says Nolte, "I was a terrible defender. Just terrible. I didn't even realize that Virginia was a team where defense was such a big part of their identity." Says Harris, now on the Brooklyn Nets: "I was just a shooter. That was it. I had no idea how to properly defend guys who are elite."

"If you think winning is boring, you need to stop playing whatever sport you're playing. What could be less boring than winning games, doing it the right way, playing with your boys, your brothers, with these coaches and leaders and mentors who are changing your life?" —Former UVA player Justin Anderson

A player can arrive as a poor defender. But until he improves, he'll never see time on the floor. When players first get to Charlottesville, early in their first summer of practices before their freshman year, they are often shell-shocked. "Honestly," says Jerome, "there are moments where you're like, 'Seriously? Two and a half more hours of defense today?' Everyone loves the system. We're 100 percent bought in. But it's human nature to think, 'This? Again?'"

Most painful: the three-on-three closeout drill. Three offensive players scatter around the perimeter, one in each corner and another at the top of the key. Three defenders cluster together underneath the basket. A coach throws the ball to an offensive player chosen at random, and from there, they play three-on-three. Maybe it doesn't sound like much. But when a player is sprinting from underneath the basket to where a dead-eye shooter is standing, or trying to cover the gap on a floor that can feel like acres of space, it's easy to get beat. "You have to be in a dead sprint closing out if you want any chance," says Nolte. "It exaggerates the amount of space you have to cover." And when the offense scores, the defense stays on. Sometimes for possession after possession, until they're begging for a lucky miss, a sloppy pass, any kind of break. "When I first got there, I would just pray — pray — that the offense would miss," says Anderson, now with the Philadelphia 76ers. "By the time I left, though, it was one of my favorite drills."

In time, and in the system, lax defenders like Nolte become solid, and talented defenders like Anderson become elite. "The crazy thing," says Nolte, "is that one-on-one, I couldn't guard a single guard in the ACC. But in the pack line, I made a lot of impact. It's just being in the right position. It's effort. It's shocking to me that more teams don't play that way. Like, you don't have to have Kawhi Leonard to be a great defensive team. You can do it even with someone like me on the floor."

Virginia's defensive consistency has pushed it to the top of the ACC. UVA is 7–7 against Duke and North Carolina over the past five seasons. "You realize very quickly," says Nolte, "defense is how you beat the Dukes and Carolinas of the world. You're never going to have more offensive firepower than them." (Anderson has a broader take: "We beat those teams because we were just better than them. Period. We didn't care if someone was supposed to be a top-five pick. They're going to see five jerseys in front of them at all times. They're going to see a level of toughness and soundness they've never seen. It doesn't matter how talented you are. When we're clicking, we can beat anyone in the country.")

On the other end, the Cavs run the mover-blocker offense, a motion system developed by Bennett's father. Players are divided between "movers" (scorers) and "blockers" (screeners) who make cuts and screens depending on how they read the defense, rather than according to clearly defined sets. KenPom ranks Virginia as the 38th most efficient offense in the country. They are, however, slow, often bleeding the shot clock until they find a look to their liking. This is where the criticisms of Virginia's style often arise. "The only thing we're doing on offense is trying to get a good shot," says Nolte. "It just speaks to how disciplined we are that we take that much time."

After the Georgia Tech game, Diakite sits in a media room surrounded by reporters, reflecting on one of his best performances of the season. He had nine points on 4-of-4 shooting in 15 minutes, and after, he spends a few moments talking through the work he's done on his jumper, on his post game, on his cuts to the basket. A few seconds in, though, he stops, almost embarrassed, as if catching himself.

"But I don't forget," he says. "Defense always comes first."

UVA will likely enter the NCAA tournament among the field's favorites. This year's team has a wider range of offensive playmakers, and even without the individual defensive brilliance of players like Brogdon or Anderson, they might play better team defense than any group Bennett has had. Their captains include a redshirt senior (Hall), a true senior (Wilkins), and a redshirt junior (Salt). "For those guys, it's like they started working for a company in an entry-level position," says Bennett. "They started as redshirts, or as guys who didn't play much. They had to be role players. When those guys get into a position of leadership, there's a sense of ownership that you can see in a powerful way. This team is theirs. And their unselfishness and unity is what has made this team come as close as any to maxing out its potential."

While Bennett and the players keep talking about reaching their ceiling and remaining together and playing the right way, others, who have more distance, can reflect on the arc of the Cavaliers program. Among the Bennett-recruited players currently on NBA rosters — Brogdon, Anderson, Harris, and London Perrantes — not a single one arrived in Charlottesville as a top-45 recruit. Only Anderson was selected in the first round. All, with the exception of recent G League call-up Perrantes, have carved out roles for themselves at the game's highest level.

"The reason we've gotten to the next level is that Coach Bennett taught us how to guard," says Harris. "It's the same with all of us: Malcolm, Justin, Mike, me. When people are evaluating you, they trust you a little more when you're coming from Coach Bennett's program. They know what they're gonna get."

""You don't have to have Kawhi Leonard to be a great defensive team. You can do it even with someone like me on the floor." —Former UVA player Evan Nolte"

The former players let their minds drift back to those moments like the one late in the second half against Georgia Tech, when the opponent begins to give in, when the lights go out.

Says Harris: "It's exciting."

Says Anderson: "It's hilarious."

Nolte, though, likes to imagine other moments, long before the final minutes arrive, when opposing players look on their calendars and see the game that's coming next. "You just know," he says, "they're looking at it, and they're saying to themselves, 'Oh, we have to go to Virginia? Man.'" He leans forward, shakes his head, and grins.

"Like, 'Virginia? Really? Shit."

And now that they're a few years removed, the ex-Cavs have also gained perspective on the notion that their team is boring. Nolte, for one, has no patience for it. "What we did was just play defense, and people were upset because we were so good at it," he says, shrugging. "That's it." There is another team, in another league, with a self-sustaining culture of winning with a rotating cast of team-oriented players, a team that was, for many years, called "boring." Perhaps Virginia will follow the model set in San Antonio: Win enough games over enough years, and eventually you become cool.

"If you think winning is boring, you need to stop playing whatever sport you're playing," Anderson says. "What could be less boring than winning games, doing it the right way, playing with your boys, your brothers, with these coaches and leaders and mentors who are changing your life?"

Anderson thinks back on the nights when his UVA teams bent opponents to their will, much as this season's version has done time and again. "You walk away at the end of the night from an arena on the road that's completely quiet, or from JPJ [John Paul Jones Arena in Charlottesville] that's going crazy it's so loud — if you're an 18-, 19-, 20-year-old kid, that's supposed to be boring?

"No. That's not boring to us. That's the time of our life."

Bennett joins select company with UVA's outright ACC title

By David Teel, Daily Press February 24, 2018

Eighty-two coaches have led ACC men's basketball programs since the league's 1953 inception. That's full-timers only, interims not included.

Six of those men have steered their teams to at least three outright regular-season conference titles. Frank McGuire, Vic Bubas, Dean Smith, Mike Krzyzewski, Roy Williams and, as of early Saturday evening, Tony Bennett.

Bennett joined the select group when Virginia suffocated Pittsburgh 66-37 to clinch its third solo first-place finish in the last five seasons. U.Va. (26-2, 15-1 ACC) leads second-place Duke (24-5, 12-4) by three games with two regular-season dates remaining.

For those younger and/or not historically inclined, I'll background the others in a moment. First, a few thoughts on Bennett.

He's the lone member of the group not associated with perennials Duke or North Carolina. He's the only one not inducted into the College Basketball Hall of Fame and/or Naismith Memorial Basketball Hall of Fame. And unlike the others, he's yet to guide a team to the Final Four.

But give him time. At 48 and only 12 years into his head-coaching career, three at Washington State and nine at U.Va., Bennett may only be approaching his prime.

Moreover, consider what he inherited in 2009.

Sure, Virginia had reached 16 NCAA tournaments, including the 2007 edition, and two Final Fours. But the Final Fours were in 1981 and '84, and the Cavaliers had finished above .500 in the ACC only seven times in the previous 25 seasons. Heck, their most recent Final Four group went 6-8 in the league AND lost its first game in the ACC tournament.

Now consider what the others inherited.

North Carolina was reeling from the first back-to-back losing ACC seasons in its history when Williams, a UNC graduate and former Tar Heels assistant coaching at Kansas, took over for Matt Doherty in 2003. But Carolina wasn't far removed from 1998 and 2000 Final Fours under Bill Guthridge, and 1995 and '97 Final Fours on Smith's watch.

UNC promoted Smith from assistant to head coach in 1961 when McGuire resigned over university system reforms adopted to address a college basketball point-shaving scandal. But the program McGuire left behind had won or shared five of the previous six ACC regular-season titles and had capped an undefeated 1957 season with a triple-overtime conquest of Wilt Chamberlain and Kansas for the national championship.

McGuire arrived at UNC in 1952 from St. John's, which had just lost the NCAA final to Kansas. The Tar Heels were fresh off two straight losing seasons, but that was a blip for a program long accustomed to success.

Duke had not endured a losing season since 1929 when it hired N.C. State assistant coach Bubas in 1959 to replace Harold Bradley. The Blue Devils had made three consecutive NCAA tournaments when Krzyzewski, a Bob Knight protégé then coaching at Army, took over for Bill Foster in 1980.

In short, even with a three-year-old John Paul Jones Arena as a recruiting lure, Bennett faced the most difficult challenge.

As promised, quick snapshots of the other five legends:

- McGuire coached North Carolina to a pair of outright ACC regular-season titles and South Carolina yes, kids, the Gamecocks used to compete in the ACC to one. His New York roots and St. John's experience created a recruiting pipeline for his ACC programs, and among his most notable Big Apple signees were Lennie Rosenbluth at UNC and Bobby Cremins at USC.
- Duke reached three Final Fours and won four outright ACC regular seasons in Bubas' decade as coach. His Blue Devils lost the 1964 NCAA final to undefeated UCLA, John Wooden's first national championship.

- Smith remains the gold standard of consistency. His Tar Heels finished no worse than third in the ACC for 33 consecutive seasons, from 1965 until his 1997 farewell. Moreover, they advanced to an unrivaled 13 straight Sweet 16s from 1981-1993. Smith's teams won 12 outright ACC regular seasons, reached 11 Final Fours and earned two national championships. He also coached United States collegians to Olympic gold in 1976.
- Krzyzewski's 1,094 career victories are an NCAA men's record. On his watch, Duke has won 10 outright ACC regular seasons, reached a dozen Final Fours and raised five national title banners. Oh, and he also coached the U.S. to three Olympic gold medals.
- Williams guided Kansas to four Final Fours before returning to North Carolina, where his teams have won seven outright ACC regular seasons, reached five Final Fours and won three national championships.

Each of the five is enshrined in the College Basketball Hall of Fame, all except Bubas in the Naismith Hall.

Whether or not Bennett joins them, he's an exceptional coach on an equally exceptional run.

Stats can't measure De'Andre Hunter's importance to Virginia basketball

By Gene Wang, The Washington Post February 23, 2018

CHARLOTTESVILLE — De'Andre Hunter ranks no higher than fourth on the Virginia men's basketball team in any major statistical category. A better measure of his importance to the nation's top-ranked team could be found during a pivotal moment of its signature victory.

The redshirt freshman had just made a twisting layup to put Virginia ahead to stay late in the second half against Duke when he landed awkwardly. Though the Cavaliers were on the verge of their first victory at Cameron Indoor Stadium since 1995, a collective hush fell over the bench as Hunter lay on the court clutching his right ankle.

An MRI exam the next day revealed no structural damage, much to the relief of the Cavaliers, who have gone from unranked to No. 1 in both major polls thanks in no small part to Hunter's contributions. As several ACC coaches have attested, they go well beyond 8.9 points and 3.2 rebounds per game.

"He's really good, and obviously that's a credit to Virginia and their development," said Georgia Tech Coach Josh Pastner, who has been on the losing end of both games to the Cavaliers this season, including 65-54 on Wednesday night. "I think he's a big X-factor and a big key for them."

As Virginia (25-2, 14-1) enters Saturday's road game against Pittsburgh (8-21, 0-16), the 6-foot-7 guard-forward has parlayed versatility into indispensability. Coach Tony Bennett has made Hunter a matchup headache for virtually every team in the ACC, playing him at off-guard, small forward and power forward. The moves create mismatches that allow the contender for ACC sixth man of the year to dribble by slower-footed post players for layups and to shoot over shorter defenders.

One such tactical decision proved especially beneficial during a 59-44 victory over Syracuse on Feb. 3 at the Carrier Dome, among the most inhospitable venues in the country for opposing teams.

With Hunter handling the ball in the high post against the Orange's vaunted zone defense, Virginia repeatedly got to the rim with little resistance in the second half. Hunter finished with 15 points, five rebounds and a career-high six assists, feeding forwards Isaiah Wilkins and Mamadi Diakite for layups and dunks.

All Syracuse Coach Jim Boeheim could do during his postgame news conference was hang his head when talking about breakdowns in defending Hunter, who revealed he grew up a Syracuse fan but soured on the Orange when he wasn't offered a scholarship.

"I think I'm getting better and better," said Hunter, a native of Philadelphia heading back to play in his home state for the first time in his college career. "Early in the season I was kind of tentative and not too aggressive, and my teammates kind of got on me for that, so as the season went on, I just tried to get more and more aggressive and help the team in any way possible."

Miami Coach Jim Larranaga, much to his displeasure, got his first in-person look at Hunter's scoring ability last week. Hunter's 22 points, his most in an ACC game, included 10 in a row late in the second half on the way to a 59-50 win in Coral Gables, Fla. Hunter's scoring binge came after the Hurricanes had gotten within four.

Time and again in the game, Hunter provided a clutch basket when Miami had threatened to take the lead, prompting Larranaga to reply unequivocally when asked if he could pinpoint the reasons for the loss.

"Yeah, they had De'Andre Hunter," Larranaga said. "He was the answer to every one of the questions we presented to them."

Hunter's fearlessness was never more emphatically on display than when facing the Blue Devils. On multiple occasions, he drove deep into the lane for layups against Duke's twin towers of Marvin Bagley III and Wendell Carter Jr., both projected NBA lottery picks, in collecting 12 points.

Three weeks earlier during a 61-49 win against North Carolina, Hunter gathered a loose ball by the baseline midway through the second half, dribbled to the basket and elevated with Tar Heels guard Joel Berry II leaping to challenge the shot.

Hunter dunked on the reigning Final Four most outstanding player, drawing some of the most raucous applause this season at John Paul Jones Arena.

It was only Hunter's second game playing at the stretch-four in Bennett's smaller lineup, but he finished with 10 points in a triumph signaling Virginia's initial emergence as contender for ACC supremacy.

Seven weeks later, the Cavaliers are assured of the top seed in the ACC tournament and at least a share of a third regular season championship in five years under Bennett even without their top two scorers from last season.

It's hardly a coincidence, according to teammates, that the addition of Hunter in the lineup coincides with Virginia's ascent to the top of the Associated Press rankings for the first time since 1982 and to No. 1 in the KenPom.com advanced analytics ratings for much of this season.

"In games he's improved tremendously," starting center Jack Salt, a senior, said of Hunter. "In practice, in the summer, in pickup, he was doing the exact same thing, so I mean it's nothing new to us, but it's definitely new to people seeing games."

De'Andre Hunter showing a lot of skills (and patience) at Virginia

By Mike Jensen, The Philadelphia Inquirer February 14, 2018

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. — His role demands patience. De'Andre Hunter's entire Virginia basketball career has demanded it. The second half began Saturday against Virginia Tech — John Paul Jones Arena packed, 14,623 capacity, ESPN GameDay on hand, students poised to explode, the Cavs ready to jump to the top of the national rankings — and Hunter sat on Virginia's bench for more than eight minutes after halftime.

"I mean, just got to be ready for the moment," Hunter said after the game. "Be ready. When you're in there, produce."

The lessons began last season. The new guy from Friends' Central was red-shirted as a freshman. Patience. In this current climate of college hoops, the one-and-done era, sitting for one is asking for sacrifice

"I specifically talked to him about my position," Virginia assistant coach Jason Williford said. "I played here. I played 36 total minutes as a freshman. Red-shirting, it's not a bad thing."

Still a tough sell.

"A hard pill to swallow," Williford said. "He swallowed it."

Even the start of this season, playing time was sporadic. Then Virginia started to play some more small ball, which meant time for a 6-foot-7 wing player who isn't looked at as a primary ball-handler but has all these skills. Virginia is reaping rewards. You could argue that Hunter is, too, as his playing time has increased as the Cavaliers have climbed the national polls.

Other guys might start, but let's cut to the chase: The 6-7 red-shirt freshman from Northeast Philadelphia could be Virginia's most talented two-way player. Not down the road. Right now.

On a team that dictates games defensively — demanding patience from opponents — Hunter, from the Lawncrest section of Northeast Philadelphia, is often asked to guard an opponent's most explosive guard. A Virginia Tech guard had gotten hot. Hunter was sent in to guard him. He cooled down. Meanwhile, forwards usually guard Hunter and sometimes have issues keeping him in front of them. The other guys switch to zone, and Hunter moves into the high post, an instant zone-busting matchup problem since he might face up and shoot, drive to the hoop or get a pass to a teammate down on the baseline.

Like Mikal Bridges at Villanova, taking the slower lane into college hoops traffic has proven beneficial. Hunter's game now fits neatly into Virginia's concepts. Cavs coach Tony Bennett trusts him. Once Hunter got out there in the second half against Virginia Tech, he never came out.

"I thought he was our best defender when we put him on [Virginia Tech's Justin Robinson] there," Bennett said after that game. "His length and his ability to do a good job laterally I thought really gave us a lift."

Hunter slowed a hot shooter and made some big offensive plays of his own, getting the game into overtime. As it happened, the Cavs couldn't hold an OT lead, missing free throws, and Virginia Tech pulled off a big upset.

More patience required.

To the surprise of Virginia's own locker room, the Cavs moved up to the top spot in the Associated Press rankings despite the loss, becoming the first team to hit No. 1 directly off a loss, Virginia getting to the top for the first time since 1982, the Ralph Sampson era.

Tuesday night at Miami, the Cavaliers quieted any critics of whether they deserved to be on top. Hunter got in the second half more quickly, did his thing defensively again, often guarding freshman Lonnie Walker. The game stayed close, and a late Cavs run decided things, Hunter right in the middle of it.

Guarding Walker outside, Hunter got a hand on the ball as Walker started a move. There was a scramble on the floor and a tie-up, possession to Virginia. Hunter hit a three-pointer at the other end.

"This kid is going to be absolute star in the ACC," ESPN analyst LaPhonso Ellis said.

A couple of minutes later, Hunter drove for a full-extension dunk in traffic.

"Hunter punches the basket," Rece Davis said on ESPN.

"Wow," Ellis said. "Explodes to the rim."

Hunter added some free throws, hit a three-pointer, was fouled and made it a four-point play. A six-point Virginia lead turned into a 15-point lead in a little more than five minutes, with Hunter scoring 13 points. He finished with 22 points in 30 minutes.

Talking last week, Hunter said he used his freshman year sitting out to think about his future — "definitely got stronger, learned the defensive system. My offensive versatility got better. I was more wing-oriented, I guess, in high school. My low post game has gotten a lot better."

In the high post against a zone, "I'm just trying to get [a defender] off balance, using my jab steps and fakes."

Early in the season, playing time still to be earned, "I was staying ready. I knew we had a lot of games left."

What was the message from his coaches?

"The same thing, telling me to stay ready," Hunter said.

A chicken and egg question: Did Hunter get more time because of his improved play or did his play improve because of increased time? Let's assume yes and yes.

"He's got a skill set," Williford, the assistant coach, said. "He's got an ability to shoot it and handle it. He can post up. He's a good all-around player, and Tony really loves completeness. That's the first thing he says. He really fits who we are."

High school stars rarely have to show much defensive prowess, so sitting out last season was helpful. "We threw him in a lot of our close-out drills, our breakdown drills," Williford said. "He got a lot of those reps. A lot of that after practice. You learn the terminology. You're watching the film. He gradually got better and better."

They'd been convinced when they began recruiting him. Williford remembers a game when Hunter, playing for the Philly Pride travel team, held his own with Miles Bridges, now a Michigan State star.

"I remember getting a call," Williford said. "Tony was like, 'We have to get him."

It wasn't easy, waiting to see the court.

"You know, he's not the most talkative kid, so you never know where his mind is," Williford said. "He just looks at you, 'Yeah, I got you. I got you.' It was always a process."

Now, the outside world is doing the talking about a player worth waiting for.

Hoos No. 1: First top ranking in 35 years sparks memories for UVa

By Doug Doughty, Roanoke Times February 12, 2018

As fate would have it, in Virginia's first appearance atop the men's basketball rankings since 1982, the Cavaliers will be going face-to-face with their history.

UVa's opponent Tuesday night will be a University of Miami team coached by Jim Larranaga, who was a Virginia assistant when the Cavaliers received their first No. 1 ranking in the winter of 1980-81.

"I'm one of the few people from that group who are still alive and breathing," Larranaga said. "Everybody else is retired."

He won't be the only tie to the Virginia teams that were ranked No. 1 in 12 polls over a three-year span, 1980-83. The Cavaliers' traveling party to Miami will include Jimmy Miller, the analyst on UVa radio broadcasts.

Miller was a junior at Virginia when the Cavaliers were ranked No. 1 for the last time in December, 1982.

"One of my favorites," said Larranaga when informed of Miller's impending arrival.

Miller was still in high school in Princeton, West Virginia, when UVa was ranked No. 1 for the first time in a poll released the last week in January 1980.

The Cavaliers moved up from No. 2 after beating Ohio State in a nationally televised game on Super Bowl Sunday.

"I was actually being recruited by both schools," Miller said Monday. "I remember watching that game and thinking, 'Oh, my God, these guys are men and I'm just a skinny high-school kid."

That game was billed as a showdown between two of the nation's premier big men, the Cavaliers' 7-foot-4 Ralph Sampson and the Buckeyes' Herb Williams.

CBS basketball analyst Clark Kellogg was on that team, as were 6-11 Granville Waiters, a future seven-year NBA player, and Art Schlichter, also the quarterback on the Buckeyes' football team.

After he was helped to the locker room with an early ankle injury that left the fans gasping, Sampson returned to the floor with a splint on his ankle and finished with a career-high 40 points in an 89-73 victory.

Many consider that to be the best game of Sampson's college career, and the Cavaliers were ranked No. 1 for four weeks (a stretch of seven games) until they were beaten by Notre Dame on a desperation heave by Orlando Wooldridge at the Rosemont Horizon in Chicago.

Virginia had gone 22-0 to start the season and had a 27-game winning streak dating back to its run to the 1981 NIT championship.

Sampson, who divides his time between his hometown of Harrisonburg and California, did not attend Saturday's game between then-No. 2 Virginia and visiting Virginia Tech, but was well aware of the stakes.

Since previously No. 1-ranked Villanova had lost to St. John's earlier in the week, Sampson was avidly following the Cavaliers' quest for the top spot.

"I didn't think we could lose the game [Saturday] and still be ranked No. 1," Sampson said Monday.

Yet, that's exactly what happened. Virginia Tech gave UVa fits from start to finish and prevailed 61-60 in overtime.

Sampson wasn't alone in his assessment, but when the NCAA men's basketball tournament committee released its first projection of the postseason seedings Sunday, Virginia was listed as the No. 1 seed in the South Regional as well as the No. 1 overall pick.

In addition, Virginia also was ranked No. 1 this week by the Ratings Statistical Index (RPI) used by ESPN, and by statistician Ken Pomeroy.

"I think the Duke win still resonates," said ESPN analyst Seth Greenberg, referring to UVa's 65-63 win over then-No. 4 Duke on Jan. 27 in Durham. "The Duke win and [UVa's] consistency."

Greenberg was an assistant coach at Virginia for one year in the 1980s, when the Cavaliers reached the Final Four without having been ranked in the regular season.

That followed the Sampson years, during which Virginia never was ranked lower than eighth in a 49-week span, including a total of 12 weeks at No. 1.

"You have to put those things behind you," said Terry Holland, who was UVa's head coach from 1974-90 and later served as athletic director. "At the same time, you're succeeding in the present, which is hard for you.

"You don't want to try to be No. 1. Hell, you want to win the national championship."

Maybe that's why UVa media contact Erich Bacher reported that Bennett was concentrating on game preparations Monday and would not have a comment on the ranking.

After three weeks at No. 2, Virginia received 30 votes for first place, followed by Michigan State with 21 and previous poll-topper Villanova with nine.

Buzz Williams, the head coach at Virginia Tech, didn't seem offended Monday when he was asked about UVa's elevation to the top spot. The Hokies' victory Saturday followed a 78-52 loss to UVa in an early January meeting in Blacksburg.

"There was no motive relative to what [the Cavaliers] would be ranked after our game," Williams said. "I think that's all in the opinion of others.

"I think that they're good enough to win a national championship. I have the utmost respect for Coach Bennett. Entering Saturday, they'd lost one game so I would say that was good enough to [be] No. 1."

Guy rarely leaves the floor for Cavaliers

By Sam Blum, Daily Progress February 12, 2018

Before Kyle Guy became the energizer bunny this season — most recently playing all 45 minutes in Saturday's overtime loss to Virginia Tech — it'd been nine years since a Virginia player completed an entire game without coming out.

Looking back on it two days later, head coach Tony Bennett acknowledged Monday that his 3-point shooter could have used a one- or two-minute breather.

"It doesn't mean he doesn't need a rest or doesn't get a little fatigued," Bennett said after explaining how Guy is built like a cross country runner. "...I probably should have tried to give him a minute or two here or there."

The reason for that, Bennett said, was more to give him a restart mentally — allow him to watch the game from the bench. But instead, Guy never came out, shooting his way to a 5-of-21 night that was easily his worst and most voluminous game of the season.

He'll be right back out there, likely playing nearly every minute when No. 1 Virginia (23-2, 12-1 ACC) faces Miami (18-6, 7-5 ACC) at 9 p.m. on Tuesday night at the Watsco Center in Coral Gables, Florida.

Guy has played 87.4 percent of the team's minutes in conference play. No Cavalier has played more in the Bennett era. Players like Malcolm Brogdon and London Perrantes came close.

"If I was coach, I probably would have took my ass out a long time ago," Guy said on Saturday after the Virginia Tech loss. "Excuse the language, but you can quote me on that."

Guy is one of the quickest players on the team. His offense is reliant around his ability to run, break off of screens, create space with his speed and beat opponents off the dribble. It's his identity.

Not taking Guy out strays away from the strategy that UVa employed with him earlier in the season. When he had a career-high 29 points against VCU on Nov. 17, Guy came out with around five minutes left.

"They said they wanted to give me a minute," Guy said at the time. "So I just went with that and just got my mind right. And they told me that the ball was going to be coming to me the last three minutes. I just tried to make the most of it."

He eventually scored eight points in the final three minutes to lead Virginia to the win. Recently, that minute hasn't been given to Guy as much. Part of that may be because of a severe decline in the use of backup Nigel Johnson, who played just five minutes in his first game back from a three-game suspension. A shorter bench, especially at the guard spot, means more minutes for Guy and Ty Jerome.

Bennett said his players rarely ever ask for a breather. Most won't ever say they're too tired or need to come out. With Guy, at least, that's probably true. But his game is so reliant on his speed and quick bursts that a minute here or there might help.

But regardless of his minutes total, Guy's speed and motor provide UVa with a dynamic that not every team has in its back pocket, and the Cavaliers plan to use it a lot.

"I think sometimes, guys, they can go, they can run," Bennett said. "He's lighter on his feet, you watch how he moves and he covers a lot of ground. Some guys, they're built, they're almost like distance runners ... they can run five miles and hardly break a sweat. Kyle is just one of those. He can go."

Why Isaiah Wilkins decided not to stay quiet when he struggles

By Andrea Adelson, ESPN February 9, 2018

If there is one constant about Isaiah Wilkins, it is the way he plays: relentless hustle on defense, unselfish awareness on offense, the consummate team player holding everything together for No. 2 Virginia.

But there are some days Wilkins does not want to hold everything together. Some days, he wants to stay in bed in his darkened bedroom. Some days, he wants to escape inside himself, to be left alone. On days when these feelings hit, Wilkins becomes a study in contrasts: the ultimate "glue guy," going through moments when he feels as if he is coming unglued.

"It's just tough, just a lot going on inside of my head," Wilkins said in a recent interview. "I feel like I live inside of my head a lot. There's a lot going on upstairs. Don't really feel like doing things. ... Kind of feel hopeless, like, 'What's the point?'"

Wilkins is not embarrassed to talk about this struggle, about the years he has battled clinical depression and anxiety. When he decided in October to open up about his inner turmoil with local reporters, his mother cried with pride and relief.

Before he became a star at Saint Mary's and a player of the year candidate, Jock Landale spent a year in the Australian bush ... and didn't touch a basketball.

These are often the most difficult subjects for anyone to share, let alone male athletes. Mental illness comes attached with a stigma, suggesting those who suffer from it are somehow weaker and feebleminded. Wilkins understands all this, and that is why he wants to keep talking. Because he believes talking is the only way to begin reversing centuries-old stereotypes about the way men should behave.

In 2014, the NCAA published "Mind, Body and Sport: Understanding and Supporting Student-Athlete Mental Wellness." In a study of 19,733 student-athletes, 21 percent of males reported depression over a 12-month span, while 31 percent felt anxiety.

The National Alliance on Mental Illness reports young adults ages 18-25 are 60 percent more likely to have depression than people age 50 or older.

In 2015, the National Center for Health Statistics found nearly 9 percent of men had daily feelings of anxiety or depression, but less than half took medication or saw a therapist for these feelings.

The NCAA has put together a guide entitled "Managing Student-Athletes' Mental Health Issues" with resources for help.

"There are times when I'm struggling, but if I speak out and somebody sees my story, they can maybe do something with it," Wilkins said.

"I'm just trying to spread a little light to it because I know it's such a tough subject to speak on and a lot of people don't want to talk about it. So if somebody can maybe use me or talk with me, it can be positive."

Wilkins went through his fair share of adversity growing up. Robin Collins (now Wilkins) had her son, Isaiah, when she was 16. Unable to care for a child on her own while she was still in high school, her parents stepped in to help raise him. The man Isaiah calls Granddad, James Taylor, became the one male figure on whom he could always depend.

Isaiah and his granddad quickly bonded over sports. Taylor first introduced Isaiah to baseball, and eventually coached him. Isaiah became an excellent pitcher with a mean fastball, but his friends in the neighborhood loved basketball, and soon Isaiah started to play, too. Nearly every day, Isaiah would place his small hand in Taylor's hand, look up and nearly burst into tears. Isaiah thought he would never get any bigger.

While he was still in elementary school, his mother married Dominique Wilkins. The NBA legend soon adopted Isaiah and the couple had two more children; the youngest, Jolie, was born with spina bifida, a birth defect that affects the spinal cord.

Basketball became a common thread for Isaiah and Dominique, though they could not be more different as players. Unlike his slam-dunking stepdad, Isaiah thrived on the defensive end, relishing the opportunity to grab a rebound or block a shot.

At home, though, everything was far from rosy. Dominique was gone for long stretches during the NBA season and left Robin to adjust to her new high-profile lifestyle mostly alone. Though Robin had struggled with anxiety most of her life, she says it grew as her relationship with her husband deteriorated. She began abusing painkillers.

Isaiah had a difficult time managing what was happening at home, so he moved back in with his grandparents at age 15. Soon, his own depression and anxiety surfaced. Wilkins remembers moments in high school when he stepped outside class to breathe into a brown paper bag to relieve his panic attacks. He felt lost and alone and coped the best way he could -- turning up the volume on his music, or finding solace with a basketball in his hands.

"Just because it looks pretty, because it's handsome, whatever it is, doesn't mean it's perfect," Robin said. "The truth is, you don't know how many people are really struggling."

Robin and Dominique divorced while Isaiah was still in high school. Taylor took Isaiah on his official visit up to Virginia, where he felt most at home. After Isaiah left for Virginia, the depression and anxiety came in waves. Robin recalls getting a phone call from him, either his freshman or sophomore season.

"Mom," he told her, "something's wrong."

"What's wrong?" she said.

"Something's wrong."

"I felt it over the phone," Robin says. "Because I know that feeling. There is nothing physically wrong, but you just want to crawl out of your skin. I told him, 'We can do this. I've done it. We can do it.'"

Wilkins has clinical depression, which includes feelings of worthlessness or guilt, restlessness, fatigue, impaired concentration and a depressed mood most of the day. He began seeing a therapist at Virginia, and when he is going through a bad day, he knows he can discuss his feelings with family, teammates and coaches.

"Sometimes, every day is an uphill battle," Wilkins said. "It's tough, because as an athlete, you have a lot of different responsibilities, and you're not really allowed to say, 'I'm struggling, I don't really want to get out of bed,' because you have these things that are keeping you in school. If I could give a message I would say, even if you're doing well, seek out therapy. It helps. I think guys around the team can help, too."

Wilkins does not have bad days every day. They come and go. But when he does have a bad day, he has asked to be treated normally.

"Basketball serves as a safe haven for me," he said. "Everything feels OK when I am on the court. I don't think it's a secret inside our family here that I struggle. Everybody does an amazing job reaching out to me and checking on me, and I really appreciate it."

Wilkins credits teammate Jack Salt for being especially supportive.

"There's definitely a bad stigma that's associated specifically with male sports, but your mind is so important in athletics. You can be the most talented athlete, but if you don't have a good head set, you're not going to get anywhere," Salt said. "For him and me, we just talk, say what's on our mind, and I think that helps the team. If you go a little further than just talking about physical aspects of the game and go into mental things of how you're feeling -- some people think that's stupid and that's the stereotype that's out there, but hopefully that will be gone soon and people will continue to open up and be real with each other."

This past August, Wilkins decided to take a more regular role with local schoolchildren as a way to reach out and share his story. He has a group of six fourth-graders he tries to mentor on a weekly basis, when anything is up for discussion.

Coach Tony Bennett says he often gets emails from people in the community, with photos of Wilkins sharing a special moment with a child.

"We showed [the team] a video about trying to figure out what your gift is and then every day using it," Bennett said. "Isaiah, he's a guy that knows what his gift is on the court, but he understands his [other] gift, and he does try to give it away. Those are the things, as a coach, you step back and say, 'That's going to last.'"

On the court, Wilkins' approach to playing defense on the best defensive team in the country has drawn raves from coaches, teammates and opponents. His importance as the "glue guy" became clear around this time last season, when Wilkins came down with mono-like symptoms that turned into double pneumonia. He pushed through it and played, until he no longer had the energy to do much at all. Wilkins sat out the team's second-round NCAA tournament game against Florida that Virginia lost 65-39.

In all, Wilkins lost between 30 and 35 pounds, and it took months before he regained his strength, weight and shape. Despite recent back troubles, Wilkins has started every game this season for a Virginia team that has steamrolled opponents with stellar defense.

Unsurprisingly, Wilkins leads the team in rebounds and blocks and ranks second in steals. Granddad texts him after every game, usually with a brief message to let him know he watched. When they see each other, Taylor will always put his hand up.

"Now put your hand up," he tells Wilkins. "When I grow up, I want to be just like you."

"If anybody could play the film back of what life was really like for him ..." Robin said before pausing. "The idea that he's willing to embrace the truth of, 'yes, I struggle with anxiety, yes, there's still dark days, nothing is perfect.' ... It's humbling to think that we're some middle America family, and I have a kid who has a heart of gold and the fight of a tiger."

Sophomore guards learned quickly, and now Virginia basketball is on fast track

By Gene Wang, Washington Post January 30, 2018

CHARLOTTESVILLE — During the summer before their first year at Virginia, Kyle Guy and Ty Jerome were participating in a two-on-two drill when then-teammate Marial Shayok sprinted by and dunked over Guy, who had been woefully out of position.

"That's when Kyle knew: 'Man, I've really got to play defense here,' "Jerome said.

Said Guy, smiling mischievously: "I'm not going to lie. I was excited and thought I was going to buy in right away, but once we started practice, I was like, 'Man, this stuff sucks.'"

The humbling moment served as an awakening for the players who entered the program as accomplished scorers in high school and now constitute two-thirds of Virginia's starting backcourt. The sophomores have earned the trust of Coach Tony Bennett for their unwavering attention to his defensive blueprint.

The second-ranked Cavaliers (20-1, 9-0 ACC) have won 12 in a row heading into Wednesday night's game against visiting Louisville (16-5, 6-2) after announcing themselves as NCAA tournament title contenders this past weekend with a 65-63 victory over No. 4 Duke at Cameron Indoor Stadium.

Thanks to significant contributions from Guy and Jerome, Virginia remained the lone unbeaten team in the conference in securing its first triumph at the storied venue since Jan. 14, 1995. The Cavaliers had lost their previous 17 contests there but limited the highest-scoring team in Division I (90.3 points per game) to 22 points in the first half.

Guy and Jerome combined for 30 points, with a sequence in the final minutes that underscored a poise beyond their years.

With his team nursing a two-point lead with 1:35 left in the second half and the decibel level at a fever pitch, Jerome stole a full-court pass from Blue Devils guard Trevon Duval intended for Marvin Bagley III. Had Jerome not been properly aligned defensively, Bagley's path would have been uncontested to the rim for the tying basket.

Then with 39 seconds to play, Jerome swished a three-pointer from well beyond NBA range before Guy sealed the outcome by making both ends of a one-and-one, capping a performance in which he helped limit Grayson Allen, Duke's second-leading scorer, to five points, nearly 10 below his average, on 2-for-8 shooting.

"When we miss a shot on offense, we're not very worried about it because we know our defense is going to make up for it," Guy said. "Most teams sort of feed off energy for hitting shots, and we sort of do it when we're making other teams miss."

But even as Guy continues to flourish defensively, his scoring touch remains.

The 6-foot-2 off-guard leads Virginia in points (15.2) and has reached double figures in nine of the last 10 games, including the past six in a row. His 57 three-pointers are first on the team, and he's third in three-point percentage (41.3) among Cavaliers players with at least 35 attempts.

Guy has more than doubled his scoring average from last season, when he started six games and played 18.6 minutes per game. This season Guy leads the Cavaliers in minutes (30.9), including playing the entire game against Syracuse on Jan. 9 in a 68-61 win at John Paul Jones Arena.

He's scored in double figures 17 times this season after 13 such games as a freshman. Guy also has twice as many steals (26) to this point than during all of 2016-17.

Jerome's scoring average (9.5) is up by more than five points from last season during which he served as protégé to then-starting point guard London Perrantes.

The Cavaliers needed every one of Jerome's career-high 31 points, including 6 for 9 from three-point range, to outlast Boston College, 59-58, on Dec. 30 in their ACC opener. Jerome also made two free throws with 53 seconds to play.

His steady ballhandling has been invaluable as well. Virginia is averaging 9.2 turnovers, the fewest in the ACC, and committed five against the Blue Devils for its lowest total this season.

"I think when I got here, my instincts were fine, and I figured out the concepts of everything real quick," said Jerome, who leads Virginia with 31 steals. "But my one-on-one slides needed a lot of work, and of course they still do, but they've definitely gotten better."

Directly attributable to the development of Jerome and Guy, according to Bennett, has been Virginia's three-point bump in overall scoring from last season, even as the Cavaliers continue to lead the country in scoring defense while seeking their third ACC regular season championship since 2014.

With nine games left until the conference tournament, Virginia owns head-to-head tiebreakers over Duke and Clemson, in third and fourth place, respectively, in the ACC, each a game behind the second-place Cardinals in the loss column. The Cavaliers will face Louisville again on the road on March 1.

"They couldn't score last year," Jay Bilas, ESPN's lead men's college basketball analyst, said of the Cavaliers. "Their two guards who are doing so well this year, Ty Jerome and Kyle Guy, were just freshmen. They didn't have Virginia habits on both ends of the floor. They were kind of learning their way around, so they were looking to avoid making mistakes, and now they're attacking, and doing it Virginia's way."

Stop it with 'Virginia wins ugly.' The truth is, Virginia can win it all.

By Barry Svrluga, Washington Post January 27, 2018

DURHAM, N.C. — What we know now, for sure, is what we might have suspected before tip-off Saturday afternoon at Cameron Indoor Stadium: There are no limits to what the men's basketball team from Virginia can accomplish this spring. That guarantees nothing, of course, and there could be a night when a shot doesn't fall or a call goes the wrong way. But, man, watch these Cavaliers play defense as if their dinner and dessert depended on it, and it doesn't take much to dream a bit.

The last time Virginia won at Cameron Indoor Stadium, precisely zero of the current Cavs had been born and Coach Tony Bennett was finishing out the last of his three on-again, off-again seasons as an NBA guard. That was 1995.

And now we have this: a Virginia team that came to Duke with a better record (19-1 vs. 18-2) and a higher ranking (second vs. fourth) and still was an underdog.

Presenting Cavaliers 65, Blue Devils 63.

"As everybody will tell you," Bennett said, "it's one conference game in the middle part of the year."

No, Tony. Not everyone will tell you that. I won't tell you that. What I will tell you: If your team can win at this place against this team, it can win on any court against anybody — in any month, be it March or (yikes) April. Your team can be a joy to watch, too, and this was not a win at Georgia Tech or Wake Forest. This Duke team has lottery-style talent falling out of its shorts.

"My guys played their hearts out," Duke Coach Mike Krzyzewski said.

And Virginia still won.

So we can — and should — chalk this up to Bennett's coaching because in preparation, in execution, in in-game adjustments, he is clearly a star. He has a habit, whether it's on a made bucket or a missed shot, to point to the defensive end of the court, to make sure his team gets back.

But by this point, in his ninth season in Charlottesville, that is the Cavaliers' way of life. It is their oxygen. In Marvin Bagley III and Wendell Carter Jr. and Gary Trent Jr. and Grayson Allen, the Blue Devils boast at least four players who could score 20 in a given game. Duke's output before facing Virginia: 91.7 points per game, best in the country.

And yet Saturday at halftime, Duke had managed just 22 points, had committed eight turnovers, had clanked all seven of its three-pointers.

"We weren't perfect defensively," Bennett said, and he's right. But that also gives you a sense of what the standards are.

About talent: Duke, by this point in the program's arc, is the same as Kentucky. Players come for a couple semesters, then they depart for the NBA regardless of whether they hung a banner or laid an egg. Allen is a senior, but other than that, only three Duke minutes Saturday went to non-freshmen. Another similar (better?) class will roll into Cameron next year. So the expectations remain, even if the faces are rarely the same.

The Cavaliers, they hear that stuff, and they don't disagree with the assessment of, say, Bagley's ability. How could you when he went for 30 points and 14 rebounds, when he leads the ACC in both scoring and rebounding?

Still.

"We're talented, too," Virginia senior Devon Hall said. "Just like they are."

There's an edge to that answer, for sure. Because the Cavaliers are so disciplined — they turned the ball over just five times Saturday — and because they are defined by defense, it's easy to dismiss them as a product of Bennett's system. That has to be true, to a certain extent.

But stop telling them they win because of how they're coached, not who they are. Stop telling them they win - don't say it - ugly.

"It definitely gets, not under our skin, but it's annoying," said sophomore guard Kyle Guy, who led four Cavs in double figures with 17 points, who hit a massive three-pointer with just more than three minutes to go and who iced the game by hitting both ends of a one-and-one with six seconds left. "An ugly win is a win."

This wasn't one of those. In the first half, Virginia's offense picked apart Duke's man-to-man defense — clearly the Blue Devils' weakness — to the point that Krzyzewski had to switch to zone for almost the entirety of the second half. For years, the Blue Devils' signature move, when a run is rolling and Cameron is rocking, is to slap the floor — annoying an entire nation, except those in blue. The signal: Everybody guard your guy. Here comes a stop.

On Saturday, after Duke had eliminated all of what had been a 13-point Virginia lead, Allen went back on defense, slapped the floor — and dropped into that zone.

"It was a good move on their part," Bennett said of the zone.

Sure. It's what a team full of freshmen has to do to survive. But it's worth pointing out that at no point did Virginia have to morph its defense. Eight more Duke turnovers followed in the second half. The Cavs played their man.

"I was a freshman once," Guy said, "and you're not really prepared for this pressure that we put on the ball."

So halfway through the ACC season, Virginia is 9-0 in conference play with a three-game lead. But this isn't uncharted territory. The Cavaliers were a No. 1 seed in 2014, a No. 2 in 2015, a No. 1 in 2016. Their critics will say that despite that success, Bennett's teams have advanced past the Sweet 16 only once and have not reached the Final Four. Not yet.

"We can be as good as we want to be," Guy said.

Bennett would second that notion. But he is, too, of the belief that such success is fragile, that a win at Duke is followed by a home game against Louisville, and couldn't the Cavs lose that one?

But he also clearly likes his team. Before the season, Duke was ranked first nationally, Virginia not ranked at all. But why place limits or labels on what the Cavs can do if they keep developing like they have these past three months?

"Can we just keep that idea of our unity, our synergy, the whole being greater than the sum of the parts?" Bennett said. "I think that's so big. Because we have really good parts. And there's talent, and I don't think our players sometimes get enough credit for their talent. But there is a synergy or a chemistry that when they're right, it's even better."

On Saturday afternoon, when Bagley scored a meaningless bucket just as the horn sounded, a Cameron crowd that had been jacked up only 10 minutes earlier melted into murmurs.

And then a funny thing happened: The Cavaliers, they didn't stream onto the floor. They didn't tackle each other. They didn't have to be calmed down and regain their decorum.

No, there were some hugs and high-fives. But then the Virginia men's basketball team fell into the handshake line and congratulated Duke on a fiery, fun game.

This is a team that knew what happened Saturday was possible. This is a team that knows the next two months are filled with even greater possibilities. Let the mind wander. There are no limits.

The secret behind Virginia's suffocating defense? Meet the pack line

By Dana O'Neil, The Athletic January 26, 2018

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. — The story goes that as the final seconds ticked away and Wisconsin was headed toward yet another win, assistant coach Brad Soderberg glanced over at Dick Bennett and saw a tear leaking from his boss's eye. Alarmed, Soderberg asked what could possibly be wrong.

"It doesn't get any better than that kind of defense," Bennett replied.

Tony Bennett erupts in laughter after delivering the punchline. He is in his office, suit jacket off and tie loosened, retelling the story just minutes after his second-ranked Virginia team had bisected, dissected and essentially eviscerated Clemson with a defensive performance that surely could make a grown man weep. Eleven minutes into Tuesday night's game, the Tigers were on pace to score 74 points. They finished with 36.

For the record, Tony did not well up during the game. He does admit, albeit sheepishly, that he can almost — almost — understand his father's emotions. "You can feel it," he says of his happy commiseration. "I get it. When you see your guys work hard like that, absolutely you can feel it."

Plenty have felt Virginia's vice grip this season, albeit with less warm fuzzies about the experience. Clemson became the 10th team this season that failed to reach the 50-point plateau against the Cavaliers, and the Tigers are one of six teams (along with UNC Greensboro, Austin Peay, Savannah State, North Carolina and Georgia Tech) that have suffered the statistical nightmare of finishing with more turnovers than made field goals in a game (19 to 15 in Clemson's case). So good were the 'Hoos, Tigers coach Brad Brownell found himself reaching for comparisons that, on his campus at least, are nearly blasphemous. "It's a little like Clemson football," Brownell said after the 61–36 defeat. "We raise hell on third down, now. Don't get a third down. You're gonna get a delay of game penalty if you do. That's probably the only thing we didn't get tonight is a delay of game penalty."

This is not a new concept, Virginia playing good defense. Tony Bennett took the job in 2009, and outside of his first two years, the Cavaliers have ranked in Ken Pomeroy's top 25 for adjusted defense. In five of the last seven years, they have finished in the top five. It's a style that is both wildly successful (Virginia has won two of the past three regular-season ACC titles) and roundly abhorred. Non Wahoos the nation over have screeched at the Cavaliers' scheme, holding their noses at the stench of scores it creates. Virginia listened to those critics and responded this year with a defense that is more unforgiving than ever. The Cavs' adjusted defense of 81.5 is the lowest of the KenPom ranking era, which dates to 2002. Pomeroy cautions that mid-season numbers tend to rise, and on Saturday, Virginia is sure to be tested when it plays at Duke. The Blue Devils are as addicted to offense as the Cavs are to defense.

But odds are, the numbers won't change substantially because Virginia won't change significantly. Tony sees no need to. What others see as stubbornness, he considers a steadfastness rooted in results. If anything the makeup of this team has convinced the coach to double down on his defensive mindset, its success coming in a season when most everyone assumed Virginia would be rebuilding (the Cavaliers weren't even ranked in the preseason) and in an era when offense is all the rage. The Golden State-ization of the game, coupled with the NCAA's intent on freedom of movement to generate more scoring, was meant to kill Virginia. Instead it has only made the Cavaliers stronger.

He was not lulled to sleep while his father spun bedtime stories of great ball-screen defenders and defensive slides. Salt and pepper shakers were not moved around the dinner table to mimic the pack line. Heck, the pack line, as a thing, didn't even exist until a marketing person at Championship Productions, desperate for a catchy title to sell instructional videos, coined it. "I think they heard me saying, 'We gotta pack it in more." Dick Bennett says. "So I guess it's accurate."

The patriarch of the pack line, Dick did not bequeath it to his son any more than Tony lapped it up like Bennett family folklore at his father's knee. In truth, Dick would have been happy if his son didn't coach — he still can't watch Tony's games live or on television — and Tony only adopted his father's tenets after coming to the painful truth that all children eventually accept about their parents. "He was right," Tony says.

Dick jokes that he was essentially a football player masquerading as a basketball coach for 50 years, his reliance on defense borne as much out of his own inability as anything. Recruited for baseball and football to Ripon (Wis.) College, he scored playing time on the basketball court only because he could defend. When he became a coach, he figured if that logic could get a lunk like him on the floor, surely it would serve a team well. He was never an Xs and Os genius, he insists, adding he was just smart enough to copy everyone else's good ideas and patch them into something he could call his own. "It started with Mr. Henry Iba; he played that way," Dick says. "Lou Henson played that way. Coach (Bob) Knight came along, and I applied his principles. There's not much new in the game. This isn't new."

It is, however, effective. Dick had a knack for taking moribund programs and turning them into winners, applying the same hoops physics at tiny Mineral Point High School and the University of Wisconsin and all points in between. He would use defense early to stem the tide until better players came along, realizing long before KenPom the importance in limiting points per possession. Rather than abandon his philosophies when he upgraded the talent, Dick merely plugged the more skilled players into the system, making the defense that much more difficult to beat.

Tony was not exactly an immediate disciple. As a player on Dick's Wisconsin-Green Bay team from 1988-92, he greeted his father's relentless coaching with the typical passive-aggressive insouciance teenagers reserve for their parents. Tony told his father he had a "green light to push me," but with Dick, green runs chartreuse. The demanding coach would snap when Tony missed shots in drills, and Tony would respond by intentionally missing more shots, his feigned indifference growing in direct proportion to his father's outrage.

Years later when he became a head coach, first at Washington State, Tony intended to do it his way. He would take some of his father's principles, yes, but he'd also mix in what he picked up in a three-year NBA career and from a stint overseas, even try to mimic things he'd seen in games on TV. His team would be a hybrid, mixing zone defense with man, even pressing on occasion. Though he was careful to couch his ideas as a suggestion, not an edict, Dick cautioned his son he was trying to do too much, that the surest path to success was the simplest. Tony brushed off the advice. But three weeks into that first season, he realized his scattershot game plan was a rudderless disaster. "I was like, Dang it. He was right again," Tony says.

Known as a sharpshooter in Indiana, where he earned the state's 2016 Mr. Basketball, Kyle Guy figured that, on a scale of one to 10, he was about a five when it came to defense. He knew he'd have to be better at Virginia but arrived buzzword-y ready to "buy in" as soon as he set foot on campus.

At his first practice, a summer drill as the Cavaliers prepped for a trip to Spain, Marial Shayock zipped by Guy on a two-on-two closeout drill and dunked. In a flash Guy had two realizations. First, he was more like a two when it came to defense, and second, "Oh, my God. This stuff sucks."

"This stuff sucks," is a common refrain from new Wahoos during their first few weeks of practice, an indoctrination ritual that generally includes that closeout drill. The rule for the drill is simple: You don't leave the floor until you get a stop. In the first few weeks of his freshman season, Isaiah Wilkins figures he averaged about six possessions before he could finally take a break. Devon Hall isn't even sure of the number. "I'm not going to lie to you," he says. "I kept thinking, Am I even any good at basketball?"

There would be no pat on the back from their coach. Tony's coaching motto — he borrowed it from someone, though he can't remember who — is that you coach defense with an iron fist and allow for some freedom on offense. That means there is no such thing as good enough or close enough, no compensating standards for effort. The same man who practiced feigned indifference to his father now says he is unapologetically unforgiving with his demands on his players. The secret sauce to Virginia's defense is much like the man who created it —painstaking, mind-numbing and occasionally demoralizing repetition. Dick got his first coaching job in 1965; he didn't reach the NCAA Tournament until 1990, when as the point guard his son took him and his Green Bay team there. "It really is like my dad," Tony says of his approach. "It's being stubborn with your team, chipping away and pounding the rock, keep doing it over and over again and slowly you get better."

The concepts, as Tony and Dick echo in separate conversations, are far from revolutionary. Essentially the pack line is a combo gap defense that pressures the ball. The defender guarding the opponent with the ball applies intense pressure while his teammates fall in behind an imaginary line, about 16 feet from the basket — in a pack, if you will. Ideally the ball pressure forces dribble penetration into the pack and subsequent kick-outs prove futile thanks to the immediate and relentlessly recurring ball pressure.

The defense is far from static and is, in Dick's estimation, even better than he could have imagined. His son is a tinkerer with an overactive mind, always looking for a tweak that suits a game plan or a shift as the season wears on. He watches a good deal of film, but more he says to "study with my eyes" as opposed to breaking things down, and he treats analytics with the same detached curiosity. He values information, but wants useful, specific numbers, not an inundation of every statistical nuance. "We are not the Oakland A's," Tony says, referring to the Moneyball approach that made analytics popular. And contrary to popular belief, Virginia practices are not 98 percent defense and a couple of free throws. Tony estimates it's 55-45, in favor of defense.

It all sounds easy in theory. It is not, which is why 351 Division I teams aren't trying to run the pack line. "It's a hard defense to play because it's not a knockout defense," Tony says. "You have to be really continuous." Against Clemson the Cavaliers looked like whirling dervishes, constantly flashing to the ball and then retreating to the pack, arms flailing in chronic action. The effect is like being pecked to death by a dull-beaked chicken, a slow and tedious erosion of an opponent's offense until it is a withering shell of itself. "You can definitely see the frustration," says Ty Jerome, a 6-foot-5 sophomore guard. "Teams just stop running their offense. When you keep teams out of transition and off the glass, you take away the majority of their offense. Then you take away the ball-screen, and it's just demoralizing."

The rewards come in the particulars of all of those clanked Clemson shots and turnovers — Jerome somehow flicking away an entry pass even as he chased his player across the paint; Mamadi Diakite coming from what seemed like the other side of campus to block what appeared would be a wide-open 3-pointer, and a standing ovation from the crowd midway through the second half, not after a swished 3 but following Clemson's fourth turnover in five possessions.

Last March, the Cavaliers lost three players in the span of two days; Darius Thompson, Marial Shayock and Jarred Reuter all opted to check out of Virginia. The departures raised more than a few eyebrows, feeding the critics who believe that Tony's system can't survive in the current climate. Players not only don't want to play that style, the argument goes, but they'll also flat-out refuse if it hurts their draft stock.

The problem with this line of thinking is that four of his players are on NBA rosters, including Joe Harris, whose game is surging with the Brooklyn Nets, and Malcolm Brogdon, last year's Rookie of the Year after being taken with the 36th pick in the draft by the Milwaukee Bucks. Then there's the fact that in the last four years the 'Hoos are 105-26 with two ACC titles and this year, at 8-0 in the league, are off to their best start since Ralph Sampson wore a Virginia uni in 1981. Such facts in the wave of fake-news fluff are the sort of things players feed off of. "We let 'em talk," says Guy. "We like being different." Tony takes a more stoic approach. He coaches the way he does because he believes it suits him, it suits the type of players he can recruit to academically rigorous Virginia and it suits the type of players he wants to recruit to his program.

He also believes in its effectiveness, seeing the results manifest themselves time and time again but perhaps never more clearly than this season. The three departed players accounted for 18.9 points per game last year. Mix in the graduation of London Perrantes, and Virginia said goodbye to nearly half of the 66 points per game it averaged, turning the reins over to six guys who essentially had thrived as long-term role players. Yet Virginia has dropped exactly one game, to West Virginia, and is winning by an average of 17.5 points per game.

The criticism does, however, sting Dick. Not for himself. Now 74, he stopped worrying about what people thought of him ages ago, but he worries about Tony, or more worries that he invited the howlers into his son's house. "Did I do that to him?" he wonders. Tony knows that his father frets. He also knows that no matter how many times he tells him not to worry, he won't stop.

And if Dick is indeed to "blame" for the critics, he's also responsible at some level for his son's $2 million annual salary and his place among the most respected coaches in the game. Just last week Syracuse coach Jim Boeheim, who knows a thing or two about defense, said of his ACC rival, "He's clearly the best defensive coach in the country the last few years."

Now there's a sentiment that ought to bring a tear to the eye.

Does Virginia have the defense of the decade? It's possible

By John Gassaway, ESPN Insider January 26, 2018

Posting a piece saying that Virginia plays excellent defense might seem like the ultimate "well, duh" exercise, but keep an open mind, please. This season Virginia is playing really, really excellent defense.

The Cavaliers are holding conference opponents to 0.83 points per possession. Not only have we never seen a number that low from this or any other team over the past decade in ACC play, Tony Bennett's defense is extraordinary and possibly historic even when controlling for strength of schedule.

As has been excitedly pointed out on numerous occasions this week, the Cavaliers currently show the best number for adjusted defensive efficiency in the 17 seasons of Division I data compiled by KenPom. In other words, this "defense of the decade" discussion is at least plausible.

Basically, Isaiah Wilkins, Devon Hall, Kyle Guy, Ty Jerome, Jack Salt & Co. are putting up the kind of advanced numbers that one would expect when a defense holds a top-25 opponent like Clemson to 13 second-half points. What might be even more interesting, though, is the particular way in which Virginia is playing defense in 2017-18. Bennett hasn't been content to rest on his defensive laurels and has introduced at least one large wrinkle.

For starters, consider that, relative to each season's league average, this is Bennett's worst defensive rebounding team in ACC play to date. You're reading that correctly, worst. Thus far, the Cavaliers have pulled down 68 percent of their conference opponents' missed shots, a number that actually has improved over the past three games.

Being sort of bad or at least mediocre at defensive rebounding isn't exactly the approved method for playing some of the best bottom-line defense the sport has seen in the last decade, but that is precisely what's taking place in Charlottesville. Giving up more offensive boards to opponents hasn't much mattered, for two reasons: First, Virginia is outstanding at forcing misses inside the arc. ACC opponents are converting just 42 percent of their 2-point tries. That figure is six full percentage points better than what UVa recorded in conference last season, not to mention six percentage points lower than this season's league average. Second, Virginia is forcing far and away the highest rate of turnovers of Bennett's tenure. Naturally, no one thinks to call this team "Press Virginia" because the Cavaliers' conference games are played at a slower than customary tempo. Then again, maybe that pace is helping create turnovers and not a bug.

In retrospect, maybe we should have seen that Virginia's pace probably possesses an intrinsic nuisance value (a bit like the Syracuse zone) when flung up against opponents totally unaccustomed to an opponent looking and playing this way. Even before this season, UVa showed a rate of turnovers forced that suspiciously and consistently outperformed the ACC average. But they've taken takeaways to an entirely new level this season. Opposing offenses have coughed up the ball on 25 percent of their offensive trips. Couple that with a tempo dialed in at 60 possessions per 40 minutes, and you can see that opponents are put under enormous pressure to make every single scoring opportunity count.

In effect, an opponent's going to get, on average, just 45 chances to score in a game against Virginia. Opposing offenses simply have little or no experience playing within such a constricted window of opportunity, and it shows. (By the way, I will not rest until I see "45 CHANCES" on UVa warm-up gear.)

Seeing a pack-line program forcing turnovers like this has to be little short of terrifying for other teams. Since the pack-line's inception, the implicit bargain presented by the scheme to opponents was, "Yes, it's going to be a pain to face but at least you'll get a lot of bites at the scoring apple." If on the other hand it turns out that defenses really can keep opponents out of the paint and lead their conference in takeaways, that will be a very big thing indeed.

Bennett is of course a defensive magician, but a healthy share of credit here has to go to his players. The defense played by Wilkins, for example, has inspired unique levels of adulation from UVa fans and corresponding measures of apprehension and foreboding from opponents. Yet during his team's already infamous second half of defense against Clemson, the 6-foot-7 senior was on the floor for just three minutes. The Tigers still scored just 13 points against this "short-handed" D.

Does Virginia have the defense of the decade? Maybe. One break the Cavaliers have caught this season is the presence of 14 other ACC teams that, so far, have made just 34 percent of their 3-pointers in conference play. It also hasn't hurt that North Carolina and Notre Dame are simultaneously having their worst (though of course still very good) seasons on offense in the past four years. Lastly, veterans of the 2015 Virginia team like Justin Anderson, Malcolm Brogdon, Anthony Gill and Darion Atkins would probably point out that, by a hair, they actually had the better per-possession defense in ACC play relative to that season's league average.

That being said, it's still January, a rather important road date at Duke looms Saturday and this season's Cavaliers definitely have an opportunity to earn defense of the decade honors. It's 2018, and Virginia really does play excellent defense. Even more excellent than you would assume.

The most irreplaceable player in the country? Meet Virginia's Isaiah Wilkins

By Kerry Miller, The Athletic January 11, 2018

The most irreplaceable player in college basketball isn't Marvin Bagley III, Deandre Ayton or Miles Bridges. It isn't a star from No. 1 Villanova nor reigning national champion North Carolina. It isn't even Oklahoma's Trae Young, though the freshman guard is undoubtedly a must-watch-whenever-possible sensation.

Rather, it's a little-known player from the Virginia Cavaliers who is averaging 6.7 points and 7.3 rebounds per game.

Senior power forward Isaiah Wilkins is nowhere to be found in the top 10 of Ken Pomeroy's Player of the Year standings. And his name probably won't pop up in the various NPOY rankings posted around the web.

Sports Reference knows better, though.

That gold mine for sports data has a statistic called Box Plus/Minus. If you're familiar with wins above replacement in Major League Baseball or value over replacement player in the NBA, it's a similar concept. The site's definition of the stat is: "A box score estimate of the points per 100 possessions a player contributed above a league-average player, translated to an average team."

In other words, if you were to replace a player with Joe Average Jump Shooter, how much of an adverse effect would it have on the team?

In the case of Wilkins, it would have a bigger impact than for any other player in the country. Entering play on Jan. 3, Wilkins was leading the nation with a Box Plus/Minus of 16.2, narrowly edging out Young (15.6), the Wooden Award favorite from the Sooners, who is leading the nation in points and assists per game. Wilkins has since slipped into fourth place after three tough ACC games, but he is still tied with Cincinnati's Gary Clark for the national lead in defensive rating.

This is no two-month fluke, either. Wilkins ranked fifth nationally in Box Plus/Minus last year, and he was 15th in the country during the 2015-16 season. If you sum up his marks from the past four seasons, Wilkins has the second-highest career Box Plus/Minus since Sports Reference began tracking the stat in 2010-11.

"To be real with you, I don't even know what (Box Plus/Minus) means," Wilkins says. "But it's cool, I guess. As long as we're winning games, it's cool with me."

Wilkins also unofficially leads the nation in modesty, but how in the world does no one outside of John Paul Jones Arena seem to know who he is?

"He's the ultimate glue guy," says Virginia senior guard Devon Hall. "He's the guy who does everything that nobody notices, and pretty much the guy we need on the floor at all times. That became his role pretty quickly, because he does everything that nobody really takes stats of."

Basketball analysts have used the term glue guy so often that it has lost all meaning, but Wilkins is the quintessence of it. He holds the Cavaliers together. Coach Tony Bennett also calls him "Mr. Fix It," "The Security Blanket" and "The Air Traffic Control Guy," because of the way he's always moving, pointing and talking on defense.

Everything Virginia does on both ends of the floor revolves around Wilkins in ways that never show up in the box score. If the Cavaliers are facing a man-to-man defense, he is constantly setting off-ball screens, freeing up Kyle Guy and the rest of the shooters for open looks. If the opponent switches to a zone, Wilkins can flash to the high post where he's a triple threat with the ball in his hands. Regardless of the defense, when the shot goes up, he fights for the offensive board, frequently tipping the ball out to the perimeter for a second-chance opportunity.

Most important, Wilkins is the heart and soul of Virginia's vaunted pack-line defense. "He's one of the best team defenders I've ever had," Bennett says. "He loves defending. It's almost like a chess match for him."

There aren't many 6-foot-7 power forwards who can body up a big man in the paint on one possession, stick with a shooter on the perimeter on the next and then draw a charge as a help defender on the third. However, that's just another night at the office for Wilkins. It's only because he's more interested in forcing contested shots rather than swatting them into the fifth row that people don't appreciate his impact on defense.

Wilkins's favorite player is Draymond Green. "He plays with a lot of intensity and a lot of passion," Wilkins says. "I definitely look up to guys like that." He also mentions Dennis Rodman as a hustle guy he tries to emulate. But if you'll forgive the blasphemy of comparing a Cavalier to a Blue Devil, it's hard not to see a lot of Shane Battier, a three-time NABC Defensive Player of the Year, in Wilkins. They're the same size, and they are two of the best at communicating on defense, moving their feet and drawing charges.

Asked if there is anywhere he believes Wilkins could improve over the final three months of his college career, Bennett pauses for about 10 seconds before saying, "Stay healthy. Don't get sick at the end of the year again. Take his vitamin C, get his rest and wash his hands a lot."

Bennett is referring to the mysterious upper respiratory illness that plagued Wilkins over the final few weeks of the 2016-17 season. He battled through it for a few games, but by early March, he had nothing left in the tank. If you can't get a grip on his value added while on the floor, you can certainly see what happens when he's not at full strength. Virginia looked like a shell of its former self while getting just 19 total minutes out of Wilkins in its final three games. The Wahoos lost by 13 to Notre Dame in the ACC tournament, squeaked by UNC-Wilmington in the first round of the NCAA Tournament and then got manhandled by Florida in the second round, 65-39.

If Wilkins is anywhere close to 100 percent this March, Virginia, which is 15-1 and 4-0 in the ACC, has a shot to reach the Final Four for the first time since 1984. And if he barely shows up in the box score along the way, so be it.

"I would say that I'm pretty much willing to do whatever it takes to win," Wilkins says. "Some nights it's scoring. Some nights it's rebounding, defending and other things like that. I'm just here to do whatever. I think I can do a little bit of everything and kind of hold things together for us."

For Wilkins, others always come first. On the court, that means diving for loose balls and providing tireless help defense. Off the court, it's reading to sick children in the hospital and doing things for the underprivileged in the community. Selfless is just who he is.

His coach loves talking about Isaiah the basketball player, but there's so much joy and respect in Bennett's voice when he talks about Isaiah the human being.

"People don't see what he's about when the cameras aren't there," Bennett says. "Isaiah has done a number of things to bring unity and less divisiveness in our city. He just wants to make a difference, and I stand in awe of that. He's a warrior with a servant's heart. That will be the memory I will take with me to my grave about Isaiah, all my time with him and what he's meant to me and this program."

Woody: Virginia's Cavaliers find success in saying, "We're happy to pass"

By Paul Woody, Richmond Times-Dispatch January 3, 2018

Virginia coach Tony Bennett stresses unselfishness and making the extra pass to his players. He says that formula usually gives his teams the chance to succeed.

Pass after pass after pass after pass.

Then, someone takes a high-quality shot.

That's the offense for the Virginia Cavaliers basketball team.

If Virginia's football team was as efficient with its passing attack and as in control defensively, it would rip and roar through the ACC and be in the conversation for the championship playoffs every year.

But these things take time.

When Tony Bennett arrived at Virginia in 2009, things weren't all milk and honey, candy and cake, surf and turf or steak and eggs for the Cavaliers.

Now, opponents know the Cavaliers aren't just hungry to win, but also have an appetite to play as Bennett insists they play.

Opponents know they need to lace up their sneakers, bend their knees and be ready to slide, slide, switch, slide and watch out for the fundamentally sound pass as well as the backward, over-the-head pass in heavy traffic in the paint.

The Cavaliers share the ball. And in this era of "Look at me, mom, I'm on SportsCenter" basketball, none of the Cavaliers seem to care who scores or shoots the most.

On Wednesday night in Cassell Coliseum, the Cavaliers had four players in double figures, another with 9 points and a 26-point victory over Virginia Tech.

The Cavaliers had 30 field goals and 18 assists. And eight players had double-figure minutes.

The moral to this story is stay in your lane as a player, do what the coaches ask, remember why you were recruited and you'll get the playing time you earn, the touches you deserve and at the end of the game, everyone goes home happy, especially Bennett.

"I don't think you'll find a coach who isn't looking for a player who will share the ball," said Bennett. "Of course you want them to be aggressive and use their strengths, but that's (make the extra pass and the right pass) so important. We have an unselfish team. We try to play the best way to give ourselves a chance. Guys have had great success individually in college, and after. You can do that."

Specifically, Malcolm Brogdon was ACC player of the year and defensive player of the year in his final season, 2015-16, at Virginia. He was NBA rookie of the year for the 2016-17 season.

"I think our guys understand," said Bennett. "I always say, 'Don't have amnesia or an identity crisis.' We've got to know how we have to play to give ourselves a chance against teams on the road in our league. That's always sharing the ball, being aggressive and playing good defense. That's part of the formula for us."

That formula has served Bennett and the Cavaliers well in recent years. It's very early in the 2017-18 season, but so far there's no reason to think the Cavaliers' formula will fail them this year.

The Cavaliers do what they do. Opponents try to take Virginia out of its game, often by applying full-court pressure to force the pace. It's a sound strategy, but it comes with risks.

Virginia Tech used the press to make Virginia play faster than the Cavaliers prefer.

Check that box for the Hokies.

On the other hand, a number of possessions against the press ended up as easy baskets for Virginia.

"We work hard on ballhandling, sureness, passing, catching and playing out of traps," said Bennett. "You play against the teams we do in this league ... you've got to get used to it."

When freshmen arrive in Charlottesville, they have to adjust to the idea that Bennett stresses defense first, last and always.

However, there's rarely a problem with being unselfish on offense. Bennett and his staff do their work on the front end and recruit players who will make the extra pass without thinking about individual scoring totals.

"Absolutely," said redshirt senior Devon Hall. "Coach Bennett and his staff are good about recruiting guys who want to come and play alongside other guys who want to share the ball and be selfless.

"That's why I think we work so well together. And Coach Bennett has given us freedom to be aggressive, and I try to stay aggressive as possible and not lose any confidence. Attack, attack, attack."

That attitude will be essential on Saturday when the No. 8-ranked Cavaliers serve as the hosts to North Carolina.

North Carolina is the defending national champion. But the Tar Heels lost at home to Wofford in December, opened the ACC with a four-point victory over Wake Forest and lost at Florida State on Wednesday.

It remains to be seen just who the Tar Heels are this season.

There's never any question who the Cavaliers are. They're the team that will make pass after pass after pass without giving a thought to who takes the shot.

Diakite's Impact Growing for Cavaliers

By Jeff White, Virginia Sports December 15, 2017

CHARLOTTESVILLE -- He thought college basketball would be easier. Mamadi Diakite admits that now, as he nears the midpoint of his third year at the University of Virginia.

He arrived at UVA in the summer of 2015, and after a redshirt year during which he gained weight and strength and started to learn head coach Tony Bennett's system, the 6-9 Diakite expected to be significant contributor in 2016-17.

That didn't happen.

"Before I started playing [at UVA], I thought I would come and dominate everyone, because I knew I was athletic enough to do some amazing things," Diakite said after a recent practice at John Paul Jones Arena. "But the [ACC] slapped me in the face. I was a little surprised how fast it was going at first, and how physical it was."

On a team that advanced to the NCAA tournament's second round last season, Diakite averaged 3.8 points, 2.6 rebounds, 1.2 blocked shots and 14 minutes per game. He had some memorable moments -- Diakite totaled nine points, six rebounds and block in a career-high 29 minutes in UVA's season-ending loss to Florida -- but often looked lost on the court.

"Last year, I had a lot of ups and downs," said Diakite, a native of Guinea. "Some games it would be really hard for me. I didn't know what's going on. It was too much, and then school and the language barrier [made it more difficult]. But I've locked in and learned a lot throughout the summer, and that has helped me a lot.

"Coming into this year, I knew what I was kind of going to face, and so I got ready for it. I'm still not completely where I want to be yet, but I'm getting there slowly."

Diakite, who turns 21 next month, came to the United States in January 2014 and enrolled at Blue Ridge School, about 20 miles north of Charlottesville. He has yet to start a game this season, but he's averaging 6.6 points, 4.1 rebounds and 19.6 minutes per game for No. 16 Virginia (8-1), which hosts Davidson (4-3) at 2 p.m. Saturday at JPJ. He's shooting 62.5 percent from the floor and 75 percent from the line.

In the Wahoos' most recent game, a 68-61 loss at then-No. 18 West Virginia on Dec. 5, Diakite had nine points, five rebounds, two blocks and two steals in 29 minutes. He also kept the Mountaineers from blowing the game open early, scoring five straight points after UVA fell behind 7-0.

"Mamadi's coming," associate head coach Ron Sanchez said. "It's all coming through experience. He's made some mistakes and he's learning from those mistakes.

"To his credit, he is a student of it. He watches his films, he watches his mistakes, and he tries to make improvements on that. The positive plays definitely outnumber the negative plays."

When Diakite (pronounced Dee-ah-key-tay) enrolled at UVA, he weighed only 190 pounds. (He's now closer to 230.) Moreover, he had not played nearly as much basketball growing up as his new teammates had.

"Besides the few games at Blue Ridge and the few AAU games that he played, that's really all the only organized basketball he knows," Sanchez said.

Bennett said: "If you look at his `basketball age,' it's real young."

UVA's coaches have been able to help Diakite "understand the game and teach him the fundamentals of the game," Sanchez said. "Because you can run and jump with any team, but at the end of the day it's about him developing and maximizing his talents as a player, and I think as much as we needed him and we wanted him to be here, he needed us and wanted us to help him become a better player as well."

Since the graduation of big men Anthony Gill and Mike Tobey, who were seniors in 2015-16, most of the Cavaliers' scoring has come from the perimeter. There's been a void inside that Diakite is trying to help fill this season.

"Last year I was more of a pick-and-pop jump-shooter," he said. "I know I still can do that, but this year I'm more preoccupied with how to make the team better, and that's me looking [to score around the basket] and of course get offensive rebounds."

Sanchez said: "It's not just the post moves. It's taking care of the ball better and making good decisions at the end of a move, when you don't have a shot, and I think Mamadi's getting the feel for playing in traffic, around [defenders'] hands. The really good players can play around traffic, and that's a big thing for him."

Diakite said: "I'm someone who's willing to do anything Coach wants. Since the beginning, I've told him that I'm willing to do anything for the team to win."

Off the court, Diakite is majoring in French, with a Global Culture and Commerce minor that's offered through the anthropology department.

When he came to the U.S., Diakite spoke four languages fluently, including French, and began learning English in earnest when he enrolled at Blue Ridge.

In his major, he's taken classes on the French-speaking culture in Africa.

"It's not an easy language," Diakite said of French, "but I keep learning."

He's living this school year with five teammates: Devon Hall, Justice Bartley, Ty Jerome, Jay Huff and De'Andre Hunter. Like Hall in 2013-14 and Diakite in 2015-16, Huff and Hunter redshirted last season.

Huff, a highly skilled 7-1 forward, has played in only five games this season, but he's already a fan favorite at JPJ. Bennett said this week that he gets asked more about Huff than anyone else on the team.

Diakite has preached patience to Huff, who on Nov. 13 made 7 of 8 shots and scored 16 points in his UVA debut.

"Last year was similar for me," Diakite said. "I was sometimes on the bench. It wasn't something easy for me to handle, and I would always ask myself, `Why am I on the bench? What can I do so I can't be on the bench, because I love playing?'

"I've been telling him that his day will come. He just has to be patient and keep learning. I know it's not easy, but before the light comes, you've got to go through a lot of darkness. He's getting there. He's a wonderful kid, has great skill for his height, 7-foot-1 and can shoot the ball, can put the ball on the floor and finish around the rim. It's just [a matter of] him fitting in the program."

Diakite has benefited from the counsel of former UVA basketball player Mamadi Diane, a 2009 graduate who's back on Grounds as a first-year student in the Darden School of Business. Diane's father, Mori, is from Guinea and is close with Diakite's father.

"We have that brotherhood going on," Diakite said of his relationship with Mamadi Diane. "We text. We chat. We talk to each other."

In a VirginiaSports.com article published last month, Diane said he's trying to instill in Diakite the importance of "resilience and hard work, having him understand that all he has is this moment.

"It may seem long while he's here day to day. He's got class, he's got study hall, he's got practice. But it's just the snap of a finger, and he'll be 30 like I am, so [Diakite needs] to really cherish the moment, work as hard as he can, and have no regrets during his time here."

Diane, who played for Bennett's predecessor, Dave Leitao, at UVA, has "been leading me as a brother throughout this whole college [experience], day after day," Diakite said.

"He tells me what I should do in order to [earn] the coaches' trust. You've got to be a hard worker. You've got to be someone who takes care of stuff off the court. We sometimes spend time together. We go out and grab dinner, breakfast or lunch.

"He talked to me about his past and said how thankful he is, first, for UVA giving him a scholarship and playing here and earning a degree. And he's kind of jealous, because I'm playing with Coach Bennett, and he thinks Coach Bennett is a great coach, and he thought if he played with Coach Bennett he would have gone farther than he did.

"So he told me to take advantage of this opportunity. It's a big opportunity for me."

Diakite remains a work in progress, but his lapses are becoming less frequent, his playing time is increasing, and he has two-plus seasons of eligibility remaining at UVA.

"It's exciting," Sanchez said. "He's fun to work with, because he's physically gifted, and he's a willing learner. He's a joy to be around, and he wants to get it right."

Devon Hall the 'Crock Pot' on UVA's basketball team, says coach Tony Bennett

By Mike Barber, Richmond Times-Dispatch December 13, 2017

When most people think of Crock Pots, they think of comfort food. A pot roast or chili. Maybe jambalaya.

Virginia basketball coach Tony Bennett says he thinks of his senior captain, Devon Hall.

"He's the, what do you call it, the Crock Pot? The slow cooker?" Bennett said. "He's just improved every year, a little better. Added to his offense, added to his defense, added to his strength and conditioning, added to his mental approach."

Hall's game has been slowly stewing over five years at UVa. He redshirted as a true freshman in 2013-14 and has seen his playing time and scoring go up each year since. This season, the No. 16 Cavaliers (8-1) need his role to expand even more — especially offensively. And so far, Hall has been cooking.

Hall, a 6-foot-5, 211-pound Virginia Beach native, has scored in double figures in six of the team's first nine games, including the past four. In five of those games, he's been either Virginia's leading or second-leading scorer.

The 19 points he put up in the last game, a road loss to now-No. 11 West Virginia, matched his career high, set earlier this season in a win over Austin Peay.

"I think he can do a little bit of anything," said Isaiah Wilkins, a senior forward and fellow captain. "He's a competitor. He's been this way since I've known him, since I've been here. Now, he's getting the chance to showcase it."

Against West Virginia, with leading scorer Kyle Guy in a first-half shooting funk, Hall — who can also play forward — kept UVa. in the game with tough drives to the basket, absorbing contact and scoring.

"I was just trying to play aggressive and be downhill," Hall said.

He scored 11 of his 19 points in the first half, while Guy — a sophomore guard who leads U.Va. with a 16.8-point average — went 0 for 6 from the floor.

"He's very, very consistent, one of the most consistent on the team," said Guy. "And he put on a spectacular stat line."

Bennett said Hall has worked on his finishes at and near the rim since last season, and it's been one of his most obvious areas of improvement. Bennett said he's seen Hall putting in extra work on taking off with 2 feet, perfecting a floater in the lane

"He works like a madman on his finishing," said Bennett. "He got some nice bounces against West Virginia, but he's really worked hard. ... I watch him. He works on the shots that he's trying to get in games. He's trying to, at times, play off two feet more. We've kind of tried to add certain things to his game."

Through nine games, Hall has averaged 12.6 points, second to only Guy. After that? Virginia hasn't had a consistent No. 3 scorer, getting points from Wilkins (7.9 ppg.), sophomore guard Ty Jerome (7.3), sophomore forward Mamadi Diakite (6.6) and redshirt freshman forward De'Andre Hunter (5.9), among others.

It's possible, based on matchups, that trend will continue all season, Bennett said.

"That third scorer, at different times it's been different guys," said Bennett. "I don't know if it's one guy every time. I'd love to say this is our third scorer or these are the guys, consistently. One of our strengths is, it could be different guys at different times."

Virginia has had only three scorers average in double figures over a season three times in Bennett's tenure. In 2010-11, Mike Scott, Mustapha Farrakhan and Joe Harris did it. In 2014-15, Malcolm Brogdon, Justin Anderson and Anthony Gill did it, and in 2015-16, Brogdon, Gill and London Perrantes did it.

Last season, only Perrantes averaged double-digit points.

A third double-figure scorer this season might be hard to come by, but at least the Cavaliers know they a solid No. 2 guy in Hall.

"He's remained patient and his role has slowly increased each year," said Bennett. "That's how it usually is. When people can see that and they're willing to wait for it, usually some good things will happen."

Another gear: Johnson adds element of speed to Virginia's methodical approach

By Sam Blum, Cavalier Insider December 12, 2017

When teams lined up to take a free throw against Nigel Johnson's high school team — Broad Run — they wouldn't keep players in the lane to try and grab the rebound.

Instead, the opposition stood back, where Johnson waited beyond the 3-point line. They knew, the second the outlet pass went to him, he'd be ahead of the pack, lightning quick to the basket.

In high school, Johnson was a player, in large part, defined by his speed. He played at two different high schools, first at Broad Run then at Riverdale Baptist for his senior year, and both coaches said Johnson was among the fastest players they have ever coached. The programs that wanted him, wanted him for his speed.

"From 3-point lane to 3-point lane, he was the fastest player I've ever coached," said Broad Run head coach John Costello.

"He's very, very quick," added Riverdale Baptist head coach Lou Wilson. "Very explosive. He brought such a speed and intensity to the game. We've had quite a few guys with some quickness and athleticism. I would say Nigel is right up there."

So that all begs the question: How did one of the game's fastest players end up at a Virginia program that runs, unequivocally, the slowest offense in college basketball?

Johnson played at Kansas State in his first two seasons. He then transferred to Rutgers, and played there after sitting out a season. This year, he's the first-ever graduate transfer for head coach Tony Bennett.

His mixture into UVa's offense and defense is far from perfect. Johnson's shooting thus far (33.9 percent) leaves much to be desired, though Bennett hopes and believes that will come around. He's shown flashes — an eight-assist game against Lehigh and a 12-point, three-rebound, three-assist night against Rhode Island. He's only turned it over seven times and has been very good at doing exactly what he was brought here to do — and that's to use his God-given speed.

"We thought we needed some quickness," Bennett said. "... We needed some athleticism on the perimeter. You think defensively, 'Ok we're going against a really quick guy who can slide and keep him in front, put pressure on the ball.' That's always a big part. That's important.

"Then [he is] a guy who can break down this guy defensively and touch the paint in the half-court. ...

And in the full-court, who can get us some transition buckets and do things that his athleticism can do."

Bennett started recruiting Johnson almost immediately after he announced his intention to graduate from Rutgers and transfer for his final year of eligibility. He didn't promise Johnson anything, as opposed to other coaches that did. He said that there were minutes and points to be had if Johnson was able to earn them.

Bennett and assistant coach Jason Williford first visited his parents, Sidney and Catrice Johnson, before traveling to New Jersey to speak with Nigel face-to-face. The two had developed a rapport when Johnson was in high school. Now they were going to make it a partnership.

The family lives in Northern Virginia. Not only was there an opportunity to contribute. There was a chance for Johnson to play in his home state for a perennial Top 25 program. He saw himself as a fit because the UVa coaches that recruited him pitched him that fit.

"When the Virginia coaches reached out to him, that was definitely one the main things that they talked to him about, the ability to play fast and his defense," Catrice Johnson said. "Virginia was one of the first [to contact him].... I thought they were coming after him pretty aggressively."

Nigel Johnson has played in pretty much every tough road environment known to college basketball. It's comes with the territory of playing in three of the Power-5 conferences. Allen Fieldhouse in Kansas? Check. WVU Coliseum? Check, three times. At Tennessee, at Texas, at Wisconsin, at Miami, at Indiana. Everywhere around the country.

He played for two high school teams, and now three colleges. He's no stranger to adjusting, to playing for different coaches and different offenses. There have been reasons each time. In high school, he switched to move up a level in competition as tried to draw Division I interest. Kansas State was very far from home. His family rarely saw him play in-person. At Rutgers, the coach who recruited him, Eddie Jordan, was fired after his transfer year.

"Nigel, he's always been super confident in what he's been able to do and what he's done," Sidney Johnson said. "He's had a lot of big games on a lot of big stages. There were other schools that promised him to have a seriously heavy role. But I think, at the end of the day, Nigel wanted to be in a successful culture. ... And he knew he could add to his skill set and his talents."

The need for a graduate transfer at Virginia made sense. The Cavaliers lost a huge chunk of scoring, had open scholarships and a need for experience.

Bennett views Johnson as a scorer, even if his shots in this offense haven't always looked like they're in the flow. As the point guard, he's taken the second-most shots on the team in relation to the minutes that he plays — shooting nearly a quarter of UVa's attempts when on the court. He only had 12 assists in the first seven games.

It can be an odd sight for a team that often looks like a well-oiled machine on offense and defense. Then there's Johnson, experienced enough to get significant minutes, but not experienced enough with UVa's style to play it perfectly.

After Virginia's blowout win over Lehigh, Isaiah Wilkins was chuckling as he told the media room that he loved former UVa point guard London Perrantes, but that "he was not the fastest dude." A comment made to elicit laughter but with a serious undertone.

It came just minutes after Virginia's final three buckets came on alley-oop dunks in transition, all within 39 seconds of each other. For a moment, college basketball's slowest team looked like the Harlem Globetrotters.

"I think it showed his versatility, where he can score or pass, and he rebounded pretty well too," guard Kyle Guy said. "So, when he can get in transition and make plays, that's when he is at his best."

Jay Huff soaring through the air to catch Johnson's pass, dunking while getting fouled. Mamadi Diakite taking a pass, one-handed from Johnson and finishing with authority. Johnson said after the game that he wasn't even thinking of scoring, just enjoying his role in that momentary spectacle.

Johnson doesn't change Virginia's identity, which is one of the most steadfast in the game. But he can change it in the moment. He can make it a spectacle. He can add something that it didn't have. And that's why he's on the team.

"I haven't been yet told to slow it down," Johnson said. "I feel like they've got pretty good trust in me...Most times I'm going to push it and that's what they want me to do."

Ratcliffe: Salt's impact goes beyond the stats

By Jerry Ratcliffe, Daily Progress November 28, 2017

If there's one thing Jack Salt understands, it's being physical. That's exactly what the big, sledgehammering Kiwi brought to Monday night's 49-37 Virginia win over visiting Wisconsin in the Big Ten-ACC Challenge.

While he took only two shots (made both of 'em), finished with four points, eight rebounds, and a blocked shot, Salt's impact is seldom revealed statistically.

Virginia's 6-foot-10, 250-pound junior center from New Zealand is strictly a role player in Tony Bennett's system, a role Salt embraces. On this particular evening, against a Wisconsin program that mirrors his own, Salt's assignment was simple: don't allow the Badgers' Ethan Happ to go wild.

The 6-10, 235-pound Happ is being hyped as the nation's best all-around player. He entered Monday's game as the only major conference player in America averaging at least 18 points, nine rebounds, and three assists per game.

While Happ, touted as a preseason All-American candidate for the Badgers, finished with 14 points, eight rebounds, and no assists, most of his damage came in the second half (10 points, seven boards) after Wisconsin trailed significantly.

It was a matchup that Salt had eagerly looked forward to engaging.

"[Happ's] a great player, a back-to-the-basket big, and I like going against back-to-the-basket bigs because you can get more physical with them if their back is toward you," Salt said. "Against face-up bigs, you've got to keep your hands out. But back-to-the-basket bigs, you can get this arm bar in there. I enjoyed it."

Arm bar, indeed.

Granted, Salt didn't take on Happ one-on-one. Anyone who knows Bennett Ball knows his philosophy on bigs. Never let an opposing post player beat you is the premise of Bennett's Wisconsin-bred, Virginia-owned defensive culture.

Happ is just another in a long line of opposing big men who get doubled in the post every time they touch the rock. Any time the big Badger wandered into the paint, he was surrounded by Salt and Mamadi Diakite. Sometimes, even Isaiah Wilkins joined the party.

"That's their role. They understand their role and that's the mark of a good team," said Wisconsin coach Greg Gard, who was once on the same staff with Bennett. "Not everybody is going to get 17 points a game. But to have those other guys buy into what their role is going to be ... you have to have those role guys."

Both Salt and Diakite have totally bought in. Together, they contributed eight points, 13 rebounds, two blocked shots, and a lot of bruises for the Badgers.

Salt was extremely physical, but did not foul out. In fact, early in the game, he swatted D'Mitrik Trice's shot into the John Paul Jones Arena stands, followed by an icy staredown.

"I don't know [where the stare came from], that just came over," Salt said later. "I don't get many of those. I was happy to get it."

The New Zealander was everywhere, once, going completely topsy turvy in trying to grab a rebound. Wilkins was collateral damage, taking Salt's foot to the head in the process.

"That was a pretty weird feeling," Salt said. "I was up in the air and my legs were over my head. I kicked Isaiah in the head, but he's all right now."

For a brief moment, Wilkins wasn't sure and let Salt know about it.

"[Wilkins] said, 'Damn, Jack,'" Salt recalled. "I said, my bad, I didn't mean to, I was upside down."

In between blocks, baskets and being upside down, Salt was busy blowing up screens, hitting the boards hard, and denying Happ or anyone else who ventured down low. He and Diakite grabbed half of UVa's 14 offensive rebounds, something that Bennett has been emphasizing.

"Coach is always telling me there are offensive rebounds to get," Salt said. "I feel like I'm able to get some of those. I've been trying to go after them a bit more."

One of his two baskets was a resounding, two-hand slam that thrilled the sellout crowd.

"It's always good to get a few buckets," Salt said. "I don't usually score too much. I just try to be confident and ready if that pass does come my way."

Both Devon Hall and Kyle Guy, the Cavaliers' top scorers on the night with 16 and 17 points, respectively, agreed that they're more confident passing the ball inside this season as opposed to last because they believe UVa's bigs are more effective in making plays. They both also thanked Salt and Diakite for the offensive rebounds and tip-outs, which gave both the scorers more opportunities to do just that.

Gard said he has studied Virginia's Pack Line defense frame-by-frame and hasn't been able to find any gaps or holes in the coverage. Add the physical play inside, and the Cavaliers are most difficult to beat.

"You ask anybody in the ACC, how do you combat [Virginia's] double-team [in the post], and they'll tell you that you've got to score on the back side of it," Gard said. "Because [Virginia] is going to make it very hard on the catch for that individual post player. There's not going to be a whole lot of one-on-one. As you saw, if there wasn't two guys there, a guy coming to trap, there's a third guy nearby at the same time."

One of the reasons the Wahoos are 7-0 and suddenly in the AP Top 25, where they should have been all along.

Oh, and note to opponents. Don't go picking on any Wahoos smaller than you like one of the Badgers did against Ty Jerome on Monday night. Salt darted between with the quickness that your best bouncer would envy.

"I've just got my teammates' backs no matter what," Salt said. "These are my brothers. I'm out there every night for them."
