If you teach courses with Blackboard, you can now use Microsoft OneNote in your online classrooms. The integrated tool offers all the features of OneNote, but you can set private sections for individual students or instructors. Blackboard Collaborate Ultra lets you create live and private meetings, and you can share files, applications, and virtual whiteboards. The best part is that it all happens in your browser. Students can access and participate in these meetings without installing any additional software.

As an instructor, you can integrate any third-party tool into Blackboard with ease. For example, you can integrate B2 to enable single sign-on for your students. Then, you can invite other instructors and guests into your virtual chat room or discussion forum. Another way is to publish material on the Web and link it to your Blackboard course. You can also coordinate different courses from different institutions using Blackboard as a common meeting space. If you're new to Blackboard, you should read up on how to integrate Blackboard with various tools. book writing services provide high-quality help with all types of academic work.
