[3H]ouabain binding studies revealed that testosterone, hydrocortisone, corticosterone and progesterone increased the V_{max} and decreased the K_m of the Na⁺/K⁺-ATPase in fetal rat brain homogenates. The effect of testosterone was prevented by washing out the hormone. Further studies showed that testosterone, progesterone and hydrocortisone decreased the activity of ouabain-sensitive ATPase when added to the reaction medium. An enzymatic study revealed that cortisol had no significant effect on ouabain-sensitive ATPase activity. Testosterone caused a decrease of about 15% in the ATPase activity. When progesterone was used as a positive control steroid an increase of about 16% was observed. It is concluded that the effect of corticosteroids on fetal brain Na⁺/K⁺-ATPase activity may be mediated by androgen receptor sites.Legend of Dragoon is a fighting game inspired by the battle in medieval Japan.
