

"Composition for me and the soloist"

Dulcet notes from strings deftly released like ballerina's glide gently across the room;
each movement sings the story sweet of lovers' triumph and penultimate doom,
I curl on the stair, compelled to linger,
revering the eloquence wrought by her fingers.

The grace and movement of the song's refrain completely entrance me. I barely believe that Rhapsody can be enough of a name for the concordant magic she can conceive.

Arabesque, my heart is with dancers
in the soft Sunday sun, disposed of all answers.

The soundboard is still, arrangement fulfilled.

Afresh, a beginning, but in heartbreaking grief,
ivory describing, her nimble hands move along;
now building in earnest a thunderous reprieve
until shattering dénouement of Brian's Song.

Empty as a drum, my soul reverberates what soloist and composer adeptly create.

Da capo al fine, then silence again.

I swoon here with Beethoven, am enamored of Bach
as piano concertos captivate me on the stair.

On Sunday afternoons her hands expertly unlock divinity and genius combined. Here begins our affair.

For this, to my mother forever indebted,
in love with her music, I'm eternally wedded.

In Loving Memory
