

In Loving Memory of

Wayne and I met when on a blind date when I was a junior in high school, and he was serving in the Air Force. We dated for a few years and were married in 1972--and off to the adventure of a 49 year-plus marriage. He tried so hard to make it to our 50th anniversary in May. Life has been very good and sometimes terribly difficult, but he remained committed to us and the promise of eternal life as a family.

One thing I knew from the beginning was that he loved this country and the constitution. He respected the constitution and the rule of law. For those that knew him, he was unapologetically Republican, firmly supporting the platform, particularly the abortion stance. Whether you agreed with him or not, you knew where he stood.

He successfully started and succeeded in several businesses. He held Level III certifications in several methods of non-destructive methods and was well known for his integrity and ability to solve complicated problems in testing dilemmas. To the school counselor that told him he would never amount to anything, you were dead wrong and most definitely in the wrong job.

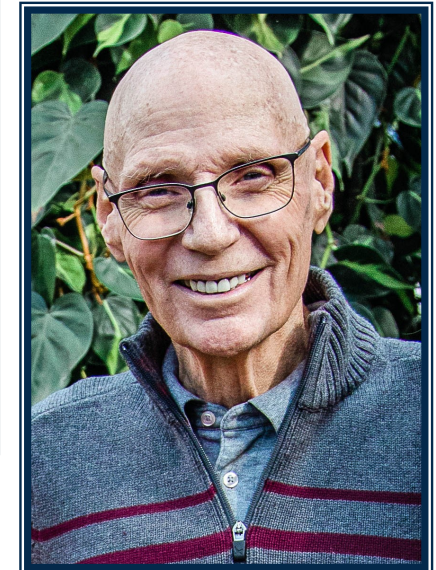

Wayne was a devoted son, brother, husband, father, and grandpa moving heaven and earth to see us cared for. Earlier in his career he often worked an 80-hour week to see to the customer's needs. Through his career he traveled the states and many countries. But despite that, he tried to be there for his kids' activities.

Our life hasn't been perfect, betrayal from some closest to him broke his heart but didn't break him. We have learned very important lessons and grown closer as a result. He loves the gospel and has loved serving in several bishoprics as finance clerk for more than 27 years. He never broke the confidential nature of this calling, believing that he was serving the Lord and handling sacred money.

Wayne loved serving people and sharing his blessings. Nobody but the Lord truly understands the depth of his generosity to others.

There is so much that I could say about Wayne, but where can I start? I've been mad at him and so grateful other times for this man I married. I will miss him beyond measure—I was supposed to go first. I know I will go on—I can do hard things knowing the Lord has a plan. Sometimes I don't like the answers to my prayers, but I know I've been heard.

To the countless people that have supported us during this time, we see you—you are the angels sent by the Lord in answers to prayers. Thank for you for everything, Lynda

"...please know that grief is the natural by-product of love. One cannot selflessly love another person and not grieve at his suffering or eventual death. The only way to avoid the grief would be to not experience the love; and it is love that gives life its richness and meaning."

(Lance B. Wickman, Oct. 2002)
