Oakland, CA—Daily, children of all ages and backgrounds are faced with social challenges, increasingly. Moreover, as puberty evolves to adolescence, acceptance is critical and positive self awareness is fundamental. Statistics suggest that one out of 4 kids is bullied.

Mykah Montgomery, as mother to Mylaan, her precocious and shy adolescent daughter, came into the knowledge that along with these life lessons is the challenge of social acceptance. Mylaan fancied tails from 4-8 years of age—all tails-- and her fascination with them prompted her mother to share their story.

The Little Girl Who Wanted a Tail is a book about just that. Coupled with an original song composed by Montgomery, their desire is to address and eradicate the feeling of being “different” despite any childhood preoccupations and pastimes, thus the title of their single, “Different,” performed by Mylaan.

Statistics also suggest that young males in our urban communities who do not read by 3rd grade are more likely to pursue lifestyles that lead to prison sentences.

Isaiah Wants to Read is a book that encourages children, especially young boys, to enjoy reading. An excerpt from the book reads, “Why does Isaiah like to read? I know other kids who don’t feel the need. Read a book, they’d say. Uh -uh, no way! They’d rather use video games, or go outside and play. Sure, Isaiah likes video games, and he likes to play, but reading is even more fun, he’d say. Reading should not feel like a punishment or something you have to do. It can be fun and exciting when you find books that were made just for you.”
