...For too long the art and music have been very distant...

Now is the time to change that.

“Hearing Art Seeing Sound” is an annual contemporary art and music festival that combines various art forms and presents a platform for new works to emerge. Its unique concept is rooted in collaboration, bringing artists and art disciplines together. This year’s project is fully dedicated to intellectual and cultural exchange between international composers and Armenian visual artists which will take place in Yerevan, Armenia.

Throughout history composers and artists have occupied similar circles of thought, often trying to achieve the same things. Hector Berlioz wanted a direct dialogue to further art, Richard Wagner wanted to combine all arts for the ultimate artistic achievement, and Claude Debussy wanted to approach music like the impressionist painters of time, letting colour become all.

The philosophy of the festival is simple: Produce events, music, and collaborations which transcend borders. We justify our aims through the truth that art is a universal entity which can touch all peoples.

The aim of the project is to bring unity to disparate art forms and experiment in ways of representing of approaching the works.

ABOUT

The festival is organized by “Progressive Art Center”, an international artistic collective, working together to produce art that crosses all borders and disciplines.

Working with artists, composers, musicians, directors, and cinematographers, we aim to create an artistic experience like no other.

We promote the work of musicians, composers, and artists from across the globe.

The organisation aims to cross borders both artistically and politically by striving to create unity across the world's divides and by promoting upcoming talent and celebrating some of the world's unknown gems. It is a group that goes beyond promotion by producing projects, masterclasses, and contemporary art and music events.

The ProArt main team members are: Van Sarkissian, Ben Lunn, and Assel Abilseitova. Being professional musicians ourselves, we understand the demands of today's art scene.

We aim to be a stimulus for the progression of art and to be the producers of the next daring cultural and artistic events.

ENSEMBLE X.Y

Ensemble x.y is a contemporary ensemble based in London that commissions and performs new music in a flexible and ever-changing lineup. Formed in late 2014, Ensemble x.y seeks to add to the music of the 21st Century through commissioning young composers and performing thematically charged programmes that combine newly commissioned works with the often underplayed works of the modern era. This fall, Ensemble x.y head to Dresden to participate in Nachtklang before commencing their yearly series of concerts at prominent London venues, such as St. John's Smith Square and St. Martin-in-the-fields. In 2017, x.y will perform the European premiere of a new work by Lisa Illean, co-commissioned by x.y and Ensemble Offspring.
