

MACADAM is a collection of work that addresses the crisis facing women today. The Kavanaugh hearings was just one of my many launching points. There have been, throughout time, a long record of attacks on women, on our bodies, our aspirations, our voting, reproduction and legal rights.

Granted, feminists made some headway fifty years ago, but as the male-dominated, religious driven, political, corporate, professional, art machine churns forward some of us are watching in horror as we fall, backwards, into a world where male politicians deem women a property of the state. Politicians determined to dictate what happens to our bodies and our livelihood. Where religious cult leaders make every effort to make women subservient.

MACADAM is here to call witness and document our loss. It is a protest. A call to action. To fight for your rights, before you lose them.
