

LITTLE QUEEN

the little princess, was acting Esther, the Queen. With the assurance of an only, cherished child, accustomed to homage for her beauty, she was playing the part with regal poise. And each mother, seated among her own children, murmured with just tribute: "What a little beauty! What a little darling!"

It was to the lighted synagogue that the Gainsborough's search finally led them. And into the midst of this audience, the distraught mother and father burst. Esta's clear, shrill voice rang out: "If it please the king, let it be granted to the Jews that are in Shushan to do tomorrow also according unto this day's decree."

In voice and manner the little princess was indeed among her own people. And Esta's mother and father, restraining themselves from rushing forward to rescue their lost child, sank into a back seat and waited until Queen Esther had saved her people from destruction and Haman was hung (off stage) and Mordecai elevated to the highest honors.

Then, with tears streaming down her face, Esta's mother followed by her father, pressed forward through the throng which surrounded the child. She had to wait while the girls and boys, cheering their little queen, offered Esta their candy and presents. Suddenly Esta saw her mother and father coming toward her. A wail of despair came from her lips.

Sarah, the guardian of the coat, stood forward to defend her. "You can't take her away," she shouted, shielding Esta. "You can't take her away. She's our queen. She belongs to us."

Mrs. Gainsborough placated the irate Sarah. "We don't want to take her away. Won't you let her own mother and daddy kiss and congratulate her? We're proud of our daughter."

As her mother bent over her, Esta murmured. "Oh, Mama, I enrolled in the Hebrew school and the teacher spelled my name, Esther!"

"HE DID"

The officer of the law picked his way through the rapidly growing crowd and picked up the slightly battered victim of a passing motorist. He pulled out his notebook and grabbing the poor man's arm, said gruffly, "You say you didn't see the license number but could you swear to the driver?"

The bleeding one spattered forth a few teeth and replied solemnly, "I did; but I don't think he heard me."
