in the light of how we understand the other relevant passages.<sup>45</sup> It is important to see that the context of the Jesus saying in Mark 10:29–30 (and par.) indicates what is at stake here in the eyes of the evangelists: the discipleship of Jesus. It is not only the radicalism of Jesus' call to the rich young ruler that is to be emphasized as a context for our pericope. It is equally important to see that the validity of the commandment to honour father and mother is acknowledged by Jesus just before he speaks to his disciples about the reward for following him. Each of the synoptics indicates that the "leaving" occurs for the sake of the discipleship of Jesus: for Jesus' name's sake (Matt 19:29); for Jesus' and the gospel's sake (Mark 10:29); for the sake of the Kingdom of God (Luke 18:29). It may be argued that the disciples' leaving everything is not as radical as Jesus' call to the rich young ruler to sell everything and give the proceeds to the poor. We have already seen that the disciples did have a home to return to even after they followed Jesus. This saying has to be seen in the context of a call to discipleship. It concerns priorities; it is addressed to some of the disciples and not to all of them. This saying does not deny the continuing validity of the Fifth Commandment.

6. Some Further "Hard Sayings" of Jesus Concerning the Child-Parent Relationship

There are several sayings attributed to Jesus which affirm that children will rise against their parents. Some have strong similarities, e.g. Mark 13:12 par. Matt 10:21. The verse in Mark reads (RSV): "And brother will deliver up brother to death, and the father his child, and children will rise against parents and have them put to death." There is a variant in Matthew which is more likely a grammatical correction: the majority of the witnesses give the verb "rise" in the third person plural, whereas Codex Vaticanus and some other codices bring the more correct third person singular, because the subject, "children" (a neuter plural in the Greek) would require this. What is striking in this case is that the verse is part of a longer unit which has a parallel in Matthew in a different context: Mark 13:9–13 is part of the “little apocalypse,” whereas its parallel, Matt 10:17–22, occurs in Jesus’ speech concerning the sending out of the disciples. Luke 21:10–19 is a parallel passage (in a speech of Jesus concerning the last days, as in Mark), but in the very parallel to our verse the reference to children rising up against parents is missing. In all three synoptics, the saying is followed by Jesus’ affirmation: “you will be hated by all for my name’s sake.” In Mark and Matthew, Jesus concludes the little unit, but not the speech, with exactly the same words: “But he who endures to the end will be saved.” Luke has a further saying first (“But not a hair of your head will perish”), then the same content as the conclusion in the parallels, but with a different wording: “By your endurance you will gain your lives.” One might argue that the unit stood originally in the apocalyptic speech as in Mark (and Luke), and Matthew transferred it into a different context: Jesus’ speech when he sends out the disciples.<sup>46</sup>

---

<sup>45</sup> See Gerd Theissen, "'Wir haben alles verlassen' (Mc. X 28): Nachfolge und soziale Entwurzelung in der jüdisch-palästinischen Gesellschaft des I. Jahrhunderts n. Ch.," NovT 19 (1977): 161–196. In this article Theissen concedes that from a religious point of view the existence of following Jesus ("Nachfolgeexistenz," 161) is a consequence of meeting the Holy One ("Begegnung mit dem Heiligen"), but his own main task is to show from a sociological perspective that this existence is a variant of social uprootedness ("eine Variante sozialer Entwurzelung").

It is significant that even in Matthew’s context there is an apocalyptic tone to the saying, due to the reference to “enduring to the end” (10:22b). Joachim Gnilka observes that the term “the end” (telos) in Mark 13:12 probably means the end-time, since it is used with this sense in v. 7 already.<sup>47</sup> He also points to 4 Ezra 6.25 as a parallel apocalyptic saying: “And it shall be that whoever remains after all that I have foretold to you shall himself be saved and shall see my salvation and the end of my world.” Gnilka also raises the possibility that Mic 7:6 may stand behind Mark 13:12 and its Matthean parallel.<sup>48</sup> It is possible that the content of the verse is in the background, but its wording is different. The only real parallel in the text of Micah is the verb “rise,” in the third person singular, as it refers to the daughter (in the singular) rising against her mother: “for the son treats the father with contempt, the daughter rises up against her mother, the daughter-in-law against her mother-in-law; a man’s enemies are the men of his own house.”

The saying in Mark is an extremely hard saying as regards children’s behaviour. We have to observe, however, that the context clearly shows that the enmity arises against the followers of Jesus: It is because of Jesus' name that they will be persecuted. This persecution is carried out with such emotion that even family members turn against one another. This does not imply that Jesus' own followers would turn against their parents; rather, Jesus warns his disciples that they will be persecuted by their parents or even by their children. Thus when Jesus speaks here of an enmity between children and parents, he refers to the consequences of discipleship, which are not intended by the disciples, but have to be suffered by them unavoidably. This enmity is described with a reference to apocalyptic circumstances, whether the end would come soon in Jesus' opinion (cf. Matt 10:23, the immediately following verse), or at a non-specified time even in the possibly distant future. Thus hatred is the reaction of some people to the message of Jesus, that is, to the main theme of the mission of his disciples. William Davies and Dale Allison explain the reference to Jesus' "name" in this way: it "explains the persecution as arising from the disciples' identification with Jesus and their confession of him (cf. 1 Pet 4:14; Polycarp, Ep. 8.2; Justin, 1 Apol. 4)."<sup>49</sup> The disciples have to be prepared to suffer this even from their family members; it is not implied that they would behave in the same way toward their persecutors.

<sup>46</sup> So e.g. Luz, Matthäus, 105.

<sup>47</sup> Gnilka, Markus, 192.

<sup>48</sup> Ibid., 191.

Matthew 10:34–36 (par. Luke 12:51–53) is often assigned by scholars to Q, though if it comes from Q, then in the case of these verses Matthew's and Luke's Q-versions were different.<sup>50</sup> The reminiscence of Mic 7:6 raises the possibility that the text was produced by the early Christian community which explained its own situation by this Old Testament verse. However, Ulrich Luz argues that Mic 7:6 played a role also in Judaism in connection with the end-times (cf. m. Sotah 9:15), and Jesus caused schism in his own immediate family (Mark 3:31–35), so one can presuppose Jesus-logia in these verses.<sup>51</sup>

On the surface, it seems that according to this saying it is Jesus who initiates enmity. Matthew 10:34 reads: "Do not think that I have come to bring peace on earth; I have not come to bring peace, but a sword." Verse 35 begins with a repetition of the term "I have come," which may be an editorial strengthening of the parallelism.<sup>52</sup> In v. 35–36 we read: "For I have come to set a man against his father, and a daughter

<sup>49</sup> Davies and Allison, Saint Matthew, 187.

<sup>50</sup> So Luz, Matthäus, 134.

<sup>51</sup> Luz, Matthäus, 135.

<sup>52</sup> So Luz, Matthäus, 134 n. 2.

against her mother, and a daughter-in-law against her mother-in-law; (36) and a man's foes will be those of his own household." It is significant that the Old Testament reference (Mic 7:6) has endtime connotations even in our passage. The immediate context of the quotation, Mic 7:7, refers to looking forward to the God of salvation: "But as for me, I will look to the Lord, I will wait for the God of my salvation; my God will hear me," and the remaining part of the whole of ch. 7 is a consolation with future promises, including a reference to "that day" (Mic 7:12).

The saying concerns the preparation of the disciples for what will happen to them. Although the two chapters, Matt 10 and Luke 12, are not parallels as such (only some parts of them match up), both of them are long collections of sayings concerning discipleship. It can be argued in the case of both that these sayings address the theme of what the disciples have to suffer as a consequence of their decision to follow Jesus. As Darrell Bock has put it: Jesus' remark concerning the division in families "clearly recognizes that people respond differently to the hope he offers."<sup>53</sup> William Davies and Dale Allison also emphasize that 1 En. 100.1–2 and other Jewish parallels (e.g. Jub. 23.16, 19; 4 Ezra 5.9; 6.24; 2 Bar. 70.3) show that "the conviction that the great tribulation would turn those of the same household against one another was clearly widespread."<sup>54</sup> It is possible to argue that Jesus' appearance causes the crisis (as Davies and Allison suggest), but it is also possible to see the enmity within the family as an unavoidable element of the end-time crisis. Once again, one should not interpret this passage in isolation. If we regard the larger context (including Matt 10:21–23), it is more likely that the present passage addresses the theme of the disciples' fate: spreading the gospel of Jesus leads to divisions; this has to be suffered even if the disciples only "initiate" it in the sense that they cannot but preach the gospel of Jesus. To sum up in Donald Hagner's words: "I came to divide," would ordinarily be taken in the sense of purpose, here it is more a way of describing the effect of the coming of Jesus and the proclamation of the kingdom. Response to the message of Jesus and his disciples will be mixed and hence cause dissension among members of the same household."<sup>55</sup>

---

<sup>53</sup> Bock, Luke, 1189.

<sup>54</sup> Davies and Allison, Saint Matthew, 220.

<sup>55</sup> Hagner, Matthew, 292.

There is another passage witnessed to by Matthew and Luke, addressing the issue of the priority of Jesus over against parents. The content is similar but the wording is different in the two gospels. Since the different expressions of the same content will be significant for our exposition, we quote both. Matthew 10:37–38 reads: “He who loves father or mother more than me is not worthy of me; and he who loves son or daughter more than me is not worthy of me; and he who does not take up his cross and follow me is not worthy of me.” Luke 14:26–27 contains one of the most striking sayings of Jesus, often understood as a witness to his radical anti-family ethos: “If any one comes to me and does not hate his own father and mother and wife and children and brothers and sisters, yes, and even his own life, he cannot be my disciple. Whoever does not bear his own cross and come after me, cannot be my disciple.” Although there are some minor textual variations in these verses, both Luke 14:26 and Matt 10:37 are well attested. There is no attempt to bring the wordings closer in the history of the manuscript tradition.

Luke 14:26 and Matt 10:37 are either witnesses of independent traditions or “Lukan” and “Matthean” versions of a common tradition. The latter view is held by scholars who assign the saying to Q.<sup>56</sup> Craig Evans affirms: Luke’s single sentence “may be more original in form” than Matthew’s two sentences beginning with a participial construction (“he who . . .”).<sup>57</sup>

It is important to see that Luke 14:26 is not in the same context in Luke as its parallel in Matthew. The former is located after the Lukan parallel of Matt 22:1–10 and a connecting Lukan verse (14:25, “Now great multitudes accompanied him; and he turned and said to them . . .”). Thus in Luke’s Gospel Jesus spoke this saying to the multitude around him. The Matthean version is part of Jesus’ speech at the sending out of the disciples. The saying concerning the cross (following our saying both in Matthew and Luke with some difference in wording) is a variation of a saying that is repeated by all the synoptics after the pericope concerning Peter’s confession at Caesarea Philippi (Matt 16:24; Mark 8:34; Luke 9:23). François Bovon has suggested that in Luke 14:26–27 we have a parallel to Matt 10:37–38, and that two originally independent sayings were put together in the tradition prior to the time of Matthew and Luke.<sup>58</sup> If this analysis is correct, then neither Matthew nor Luke can be regarded as reporting the original context of the sayings. Whatever the original context, it is a saying concerning the consequences of discipleship; thus the Matthean context on discipleship can illuminate the meaning even if it was Matthew who organized the material in this way.

<sup>56</sup> E.g. Luz, Matthäus, 134.

<sup>57</sup> Evans, Saint Luke, 577.

I accept that Luke 14:26 and Matt 10:37 are parallels. We can find in them the same idea expressed by different idioms: “loves more” in Matthew equals “does not hate” in Luke. The Semitic background of the term “hate” would suggest that it is about a priority and not about emotions in the modern sense. As Craig Evans has put it: “This may be an example of the Semitic expression of preference by means of antithesis—‘I love A and hate B’ meaning ‘I prefer A to B’ (cf. Gen 29:30–32; Deut 21:15; Rom 9:13)—which has been altered, but correctly interpreted, in the Matthaean form (Matt 10:37).”<sup>59</sup> God places second the one whom he “hates” as opposed to the one whom he elects (cf. also Mal 1:2–3). Howard Marshall points to further parallels (2 Sam 19:7; Prov 13:24; Isa 60:15; 1 John 2:9) and translates the term as “to love less”. He adds that the Hebrew original also means “to leave aside, abandon”: “The thought is, therefore, not of psychological hate, but of renunciation.”<sup>60</sup> If a disciple loves Jesus then he should not love his family more than he loves Jesus; he must place his family second after Jesus (in Luke’s words: he must “hate” his family).

The close context within Luke 14:26 also supports this understanding. In this verse, it is affirmed at the end of the list that one has to hate even one’s own life. This cannot mean real hating; it must mean a willingness to sacrifice even one’s own life for the sake of Jesus. As Darrell Bock argues: “The call to ‘hate’ is not literal but rhetorical. . . . Otherwise, Jesus’ command to love one’s neighbor as oneself as a summation of what God desires makes no sense (Luke 10:25–37).”<sup>61</sup> Thus, the saying is about priorities: Jesus must be more important to the disciple than the disciple’s own life. As Luke has many Old Testament allusions, he was probably capable of seeing the meaning of “putting to the second place in preferences” also in the case of miseō. God hated Esau, but nevertheless he made him a nation as well (though he did

<sup>58</sup> Bovon, Lukas, 2:527.

<sup>59</sup> Evans, Saint Luke, 577.

<sup>60</sup> Marshall, The Gospel of Luke, 592.

<sup>61</sup> Bock, Luke, 1284.

punish the nation when it turned against the chosen people) according to the Old Testament tradition (Mal 1:2–3). This tradition was understood as pointing to priorities in election, as Paul witnesses when he cites this passage from Malachi in Rom 9:13.

We have to note that the reference to the disciples' "hating" their relatives occurs only in Luke 14:26 in the canonical gospels. This saying occurs twice in the Gospel of Thomas, 55 and 101. In the latter the need to love one's parents is also expressed. John 12:25 uses the term concerning the necessity of hating one's own life, this being another example of deciding upon right priorities.

The following saying in Luke (14:27) speaks about the necessity of taking up one's cross. It is understandable if the early church applied this saying to all Christians in a spiritual sense, but this latter meaning may not have been the original sense of the saying. Rather, it refers to a readiness for concrete hardships expected by Jesus from some of his disciples. To sum up, I argue that Luke 14:26 refers to the priority of Jesus' call over one's own family ties. It expresses the urgency of the call and does not mean a break with the Fifth Commandment.

7. Conclusion

I have argued that Jesus' (and his first followers') environment affirmed the duty of children to honour their parents. The environment also held that God's priority does not affect the validity of this duty. If we look at the gospel tradition from this angle, it is striking how many passages either confirm or suppose this view as a natural background for everyday life. It remains true that there are radical sayings in the gospels. It is argued here that these sayings (though they are radical indeed) do not force us to conclude that Jesus failed to fulfil the Fifth Commandment.

The texts that witness to tensions in the child-parent relationship can be classified in three groups. First, some of the texts indicate that Jesus' saying is an answer to a challenge, or that the separation within a family is a consequence of the disciples' commitment to Jesus; in other words, it is not Jesus and his disciples who initiate the separation; rather, they suffer it as a consequence of other people's unbelief. Secondly, some texts may be regarded as referring to exceptional cases, i.e. they do not apply to all disciples. Jesus had two kinds of disciples: some were called to become itinerant followers of Jesus, while others did not have to renounce family life. However, even itinerant disciples could return to their families: they did not break off all contacts with them. Thirdly (and often in connection with the previous category), some texts are to be seen in an apocalyptic setting. They refer either to the end time or to the urgency of deciding upon priorities in the present; in neither case do they prescribe the behaviour of all the disciples of Jesus for the present age.

To sum up, the gospel material concerning the child-parent relationship allows us to put together a picture of Jesus and his first followers that corresponds to that found in the environment of the New Testament. Jesus and the early church around the evangelists observed the commandment to love father and mother; they did not break this commandment when they gave priority to God even over parents. Rather, in the area of the child-parent relationship, we can find an indirect evidence of Jesus' claim of being divine in some sense (for example, in the sense of being the "Son of God"), because he expected from his followers the same priority for himself as was expected in the environment of the early Christians only for God: only God comes before parents.

DID JESUS STAY AT BETHSAIDA? ARGUMENTS FROM ANCIENT TEXTS AND ARCHAEOLOGY FOR BETHSAIDA AND ET-TELL

HEINZ-WOLFGANG KUHN

The excavation of et-Tell, a hill close to the northern end of the Sea of Galilee, began in 1987. Since then the directing archaeologist has been the Israeli scholar Dr. Rami Arav, who teaches at the University of Nebraska at Omaha. The arguments for Bethsaida ask critically whether Jesus stayed at Bethsaida (and some of his disciples grew up there), as mentioned especially in the canonical gospels; the arguments for et-Tell evaluate whether et-Tell can be identified with the New Testament Bethsaida.<sup>1</sup> There are currently eighteen universities and colleges from the United States, Europe and Israel taking part in the Bethsaida Excavations Project, founded in 1991 and administrated at the University of Nebraska at Omaha; among them is the University of Munich, the only one in Germany participating in the project. It is my pleasure to be one of the co-directors of the excavations. We are glad to include in our associated staff many specialists, for example for numismatics, pottery restoration, zooarchaeology, geography/geology and Ground Penetrating Radar. A book series entitled Bethsaida is being edited by Rami Arav and also by Richard Freund of the University of Hartford in Connecticut. The volumes contain reports on the excavations and historical arguments. Three volumes have been published so far.<sup>2</sup>

---

<sup>1</sup> My former assistant Dr. Regina Franke of the Munich Institute of Roman Provincial Archaeology, who continued the drawing of the Munich plans of the excavations from 2001–2005, helped me very extensively to prepare the archaeological part of this article; my present assistant in archaeology, Dr. Stephanie Keim, has followed (2006) in her footsteps (see for the Munich plans figure 2). I am very grateful to Dr. Almut Koester (University of Birmingham) for correcting my original English manuscript. My former assistant Dr. Jacob Nordhofen was of great help in preparing the preliminary manuscript; especially my assistant Astrid Stacklies, and also Paul Henke, Nadine Kessler and others participated in the proofreading. The article is based on three lectures I gave at the SBL International Meeting at Cambridge, England, in July 2003, at the Sixth Annual Batchelder Biblical Archaeology Conference at the University of Nebraska at Omaha in October 2004, and at the “Münchener Bibelwissenschaftliche Symposien” in May 2005; cf. Postscript.

<sup>2</sup> Rami Arav and Richard A. Freund, eds., Bethsaida: A City by the North Shore of the Sea of Galilee, Bethsaida Excavations Project 1–3 (Kirksville, MO: Thomas Jefferson

1. Introduction

Et-Tell, which the excavators believe to be Bethsaida, today lies a good two kilometers from the northern shore of the Sea of Galilee and only some hundred meters from an eastern branch of the Jordan river. It is the largest mound on the plain and measures four hundred by two University Press, 1995 [vol. 1]; Kirksville, MO: Truman State University Press, 1999 [vol. 2] and 2004 [vol. 3]); see also Postscript. See also the following books on et-Tell (Bethsaida): Ilona Skupińska-Løvset, The Temple Area of Bethsaida: Polish Excavations on et-Tell in the Years 1998–2000 (Łódź: Łódź University Press, 2006); Monika Bernett and Othmar Keel, Mond, Stier und Kult am Stadttor: Die Stele von Betsaida (et-Tell), OBO 161 (Freiburg, Switzerland: Universitätsverlag, 1998); Fred Strickert, Bethsaida: Home of the Apostles (Collegeville, MN: The Liturgical Press, 1998). See also three dissertations on et-Tell (Bethsaida), of which the first is now accessible electronically: Sandra Ann Fortner, “Die Keramik und Kleinfunde von Bethsaida-Julias am See Genezareth, Israel,” 2008 [cited 17 March 2008]. Online: http://edoc.ub.uni-muenchen.de/8200/1/Fortner\_Sandra.pdf (this dissertation, presented to the University of Munich in 2005, deals only with the Hellenistic-Roman period; p. 7: collection of finds on et-Tell at least until 2000); Carl E. Savage, “Et-Tell (Bethsaida): A Study of the First Century CE in the Galilee” (PhD diss., Drew University, Madison 2007; see Postscript); Toni Gayle Fisher, “A Zooarchaeological Analysis of Change in Animal Utilization at Bethsaida from Iron Age II through the Early Roman Period” (PhD diss., The University of Tennessee, Knoxville, 2005 [p. IV: analysis of “animal bones discovered during excavations from 1995 through 1998 at et-Tell”]). Following on from her intensive participation in the Bethsaida excavations, Monika Bernett wrote a Munich thesis for her “Habilitation,” which is now printed: Monika Bernett, Der Kaiserkult in Judäa: Untersuchungen zur politischen und religiösen Geschichte Judäas von 30 v. bis 66 n. Chr., WUNT 203 (Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2007). The author published the following articles (besides some minor articles and three articles in the Bethsaida volumes [see above]): Heinz-Wolfgang Kuhn and Rami Arav, “The Bethsaida Excavations: Historical and Archaeological Approaches,” in The Future of Early Christianity, ed. B.A. Pearson (Minneapolis, MN: Fortress, 1991), 77–91 (Kuhn), 91–106 (Arav); Heinz-Wolfgang Kuhn, “Zum neuesten Stand der Grabungen auf et-Tell (Bethsaida/Julias),” Welt und Umwelt der Bibel 3.10 (1998): 78–80; idem, “Jesu Hinwendung zu den Heiden im Markusevangelium im Verhältnis zu Jesu historischem Wirken in Betsaida mit einem Zwischenbericht zur Ausgrabung eines vermuteten heidnischen Tempels auf et-Tell (Bethsaida),” in Die Weite des Mysteriums: Christliche Identität im Dialog, ed. K. Krämer and A. Paus (Freiburg: Herder, 2000), 204–240; idem, “Bethsaida und das Neue Testament,” in Leben am See Gennesaret: Kulturgeschichtliche Entdeckungen in einer biblischen Region, ed. G. Faßbeck et al. (Mainz: Philipp von Zabern, 2003), 164–167; idem, “Wo wirkte Jesus in der Gaulanitis? Archäologische und historische Feststellungen zur Gleichsetzung von Betsaida/Julias mit et-Tell in frühromischer Zeit,” in Jesus und die Archäologie Galiläas, ed. C. Claußen and J. Frey, Biblich-Theologische Studien 87 (Neukirchen-Vluyn: Neukirchener, 2008), 149–183 (with 17 figures); this is a partly shortened and partly also enlarged version in German of the present article, which appeared with the permission of the publishing house Brill. The full list can be found on the Web site of the Protestant Faculty of the Munich University: at the moment <<http://www.nt.evtheol.uni-muenchen.de/personen/kuhn/publikationen/index.html>>, sub no. 6 of my “Publikationen”: “Bethsaida, literarisch und archäologisch.”

---

hundred meters. Figure 1 shows an aerial photograph of Bethsaida looking to the east. Josephus identifies Bethsaida in Ant. 18.28 with the city of Julias, to which the village of Bethsaida was elevated by Herod's son Philip, tetrarch of the northern territories east of the Jordan river in the days of Jesus. The statement in Ant. 18.28 about Julia, "the daughter" of Augustus, has been generally interpreted to mean that Bethsaida/Julias was called after the emperor's daughter who was banished in 2 BCE. Independently, the Israeli numismatist, Arie Kindler, and my collaborators and I found that on the basis of coins of Philip<sup>3</sup> Julia must have been Livia/Julia, the wife of emperor Augustus and the mother of emperor Tiberius (against what Josephus seems to say explicitly in Ant. 18.28).<sup>4</sup> Or does Josephus think correctly of Livia/Julia, the wife of the emperor Augustus—as recent research has suggested—when he calls her "daughter of Caesar," since Livia/Julia, who was adopted into the Julian family in 14 CE, is also mentioned in this way in two or three ancient sources of the time?<sup>5</sup> But did Josephus in the same small context refer to the wife of Augustus once as his “wife” and once as his “daughter,” and this half a century after Julia was also called the “daughter” of Augustus? In the other place in Josephus (War 2.167–168), where he mentions Julias in the Gaulanitis in connection with a Julia, it seems more likely that Julia, “the wife of Augustus” (2.167) and the mother of Tiberius (2.168), is indeed meant. The elevating of the “village” Bethsaida to the “city” of Julias took place around 30 CE.

<sup>3</sup> See Kuhn, in Kuhn and Arav, "Bethsaida Excavations," 87–90.

<sup>4</sup> Kindler suggested in 1986 (for precursors see Kuhn, in Kuhn and Arav, "Bethsaida Excavations," 88 with n. 45) in a lecture in Haifa, which he published in 1989 in Hebrew in the Israeli journal Cathedra (reprinted in English translation in 1999: Arie Kindler, "The Coins of the Tetrarch Philip and Bethsaida," in Bethsaida: A City by the North Shore of the Sea of Galilee, ed. Arav and Freund, 2:245–249), that on the basis of coins of Philip the reference to Julia in the Josephus text has to be corrected in favor of the mother of Tiberius (in the translation the numbers of the notes partly do not correspond to the actual notes: nn. 6–9 should be nn. 5–8; n. 5 of an added text is missing; the number for the actual note 9 is lacking in the text). I learned about the Hebrew article of Kindler and of his precursors only in 1992. Our Munich research, after an examination of all Juliae from the Julian-Claudian house in connection with the coinage of Philip, revealed that Livia/Julia, the wife of Augustus, is the only possibility. I published our Munich results of 1989/90 in a short note in 1990: "Bethsaida: Ausgrabung einer Stadt Jesu," in Gesellschaft von Freunden und Förderern der Universität München 68. Jahresbericht 1989 (1990), 27–32: 29; and more explicitly in 1991: Kuhn, in Kuhn and Arav, "Bethsaida Excavations," 87–90. Ya'akov Meshorer later accepted the interpretation of the κτίστῆς-coin of Philip and the relationship to Julias/Bethsaida, named Julias after Augustus's wife and Tiberius's mother Julia (Meshorer writes erroneously "after Augustus' mother Julia"): Ya'akov Meshorer, A Treasury of Jewish Coins: From the Persian Period to Bar Kokhba (Jerusalem: Yad Ben-Zvi Press, 2001), 88. Cf. also several articles of Fred Strickert, e.g. the one mentioned in n. 5 and his book Bethsaida, 91–107.

<sup>5</sup> (1) Velleius Paterculus, Historia Romana 2.75.3 (coniugem Augusti... sacerdotem ac filiam), written around 30 CE; (2) on a marble plaque of "Velleia Livia" in Parma Museo Nazionale, dated around 40 CE (Divi A[ugusti] f... matri Ti. Caesaris); (3) on an inscribed statue base discovered at Aphrodisias (probably belonging to Livia), from around the same time (Σεβαστοῦ θυγατέ[ρα]) (both inscriptions in Elizabeth Bartman, Portraits of Livia: Imaging the Imperial Woman in Augustan Rome [Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1999], 211 [EpigCat. 76 Velleia; see also pp. 123–126, 139; ed.

Two main archaeological periods have been identified: First, Iron Age II, with finds from about 950 BCE (according to the conventional “high chronology”)<sup>6</sup> until the eighth century BCE (Stratum 6 and 5), and secondly, the Hellenistic-Roman period, beginning in the third century BCE and ending at Bethsaida with a catastrophic earthquake in the fourth century CE (Stratum 2).<sup>7</sup> The major earthquake in 363 CE was followed by a massive slope failure which must have cut off et-Tell from the Sea of Galilee, destroying the economic base for the inhabitants.<sup>8</sup>

---

CIL 11, no. 1165] and 210 [EpigCat. 70 Aphrodisias; see also p. 123; ed. AE 1980, no. 877]). See for this interesting suggestion Fred Strickert, “The Renaming of Bethsaida in Honor of Livia, a.k.a. Julia, the Daughter of Caesar, in Josephus, Jewish Antiquities 18.27–28,” in Bethsaida: A City by the North Shore of the Sea of Galilee, ed. Arav and Freund, 3:93–113 (on pp. 98 and 107 and in figures 1 and 3, Strickert mixes up the “Paestum Livia” in the Madrid Museum with the “Velleia Livia” in the Parma Museum [correct on 110 n. 10]; he ascribes to me on p. 96 a homoioteleuton for Josephus, Ant. 18.28 which I did not propose). Strickert rejects correctly on p. 97 the translation “he called it the same name as Julia, the daughter of the emperor” (instead of “he named it after Julia, the daughter of the emperor”); see the expression with the same meaning (a place called “after” a person) in Josephus, e.g. Ant. 5.178.

<sup>6</sup> Israel Finkelstein’s and his followers’ “low chronology” cannot be addressed here (see Israel Finkelstein and Neil Asher Silberman, The Bible Unearthed: Archaeology’s New Vision of Ancient Israel and the Origin of Its Sacred Texts [New York, NY: Touchstone, 2002]; on the palace at Bethsaida [et-Tell] see Israel Finkelstein, “Chronology Rejoinders,” PEQ 134 [2002]: 118–129, at 126–127).

<sup>7</sup> A survey of different strata or levels on et-Tell is given by Rami Arav, “Bethsaida Excavations: Preliminary Report, 1994–1996,” in Bethsaida: A City by the North Shore of the Sea of Galilee, ed. Arav and Freund, 2:3–113, at 14–15; as the end of Stratum 2, which has to be divided into different subperiods, should be considered the earthquake in 363 CE (until 2004 only three coins could have been dated to the fourth century CE, none with certainty after the middle of the century). Stratum 6 (Iron Age IIA) dates, according to Arav (but see his dating below in the Postscript), from 1000–925 BCE and Stratum 5 (Iron Age IIB) from 925–732 BCE (in 733/732 the kingdom of Aram Damascus was conquered by the Assyrian king Tiglath-pileser III, who also destroyed part of the city on et-Tell; cf. regarding et-Tell John T. Greene, “Tiglath-pileser III’s War Against the City of Tzer,” in Bethsaida: A City by the North Shore of the Sea of Galilee, ed. Arav and Freund, 3:63–82).

<sup>8</sup> For more on the earthquake see Heinz-Wolfgang Kuhn, “An Introduction to the Excavations of Bethsaida (et-Tell) from a New Testament Perspective,” in Bethsaida: A City by the North Shore of the Sea of Galilee, ed. Arav and Freund, 2:283–294, at 283

I will not deal with the splendid finds of the Iron Age II period: a palace, regarded as a bit ḥilāni,<sup>9</sup> the city wall with a city gate of about 30 meters in length with chambers and a high place before the entrance of the inner gate. The best information on the magnificent stela of the high place can be found in the monograph of Monika Bernett and Othmar Keel, Mond, Stier und Kult am Stadttor.<sup>10</sup> The finds of the Hellenistic-Roman period are less spectacular, as will be seen later. The Bethsaida Excavations Project is excavating mainly in the three Areas A, B and C. Figure 2 gives the latest Munich plan of Bethsaida. The most striking structures of the Hellenistic-Roman period are two Hellenistic courtyard-houses in Areas B (G–J 36–41) and C (E–I 29–32) and a structure in Area A, which Rami Arav believes to be a small temple of the Roman imperial cult in the first century CE (G–K 51–53).

Regarding the Hellenistic-Roman period of our dig, there are currently three main areas where scholars disagree: first, Jesus' historical activity at Bethsaida, and secondly, the identification of et-Tell with Bethsaida; few scholars question either of these.<sup>11</sup> The third problem, whether there was a temple at Bethsaida in the Hellenistic-Early Roman period, is a topic of lively debate even among the Bethsaida project staff.

A minor unsolved problem is a shard of pottery with an incised cruciform motive,<sup>12</sup> found on May 13, 1994 in the south-east corner of room 4 in the "House of the Winegrower" (Square F 29, Locus C 924, level –166.96 m [sic], basket 9243); the size of the main fragment with the "cross" (considering the convex form of the shard) is about 16 × and 290 n. 5. Information on the geological research can be obtained from the geologists and geographers John F. Shroder Jr. and his colleagues from the University of Nebraska at Omaha and Moshe Inbar from Haifa University: John F. Shroder Jr. et al., "Catastrophic Geomorphic Processes and Bethsaida Archaeology, Israel," in Bethsaida: A City by the North Shore of the Sea of Galilee, ed. Arav and Freund, 2:115–173.

---

<sup>9</sup> See Rami Arav and Monika Bernett, "The bit ḥilāni at Bethsaida: Its Place in Aramaean/Neo-Hittite and Israelite Palace Architecture in the Iron Age II," IEJ 50 (2000): 47–81. A critical response regarding the identification of the building as bit ḥilāni is found in Raz Kletter, "Chronology and United Monarchy: A Methodological Review," ZDPV 120 (2004): 13–54, at 39–40.

<sup>10</sup> See n. 2.

<sup>11</sup> See below in sections 2 and 4.

<sup>12</sup> The incision was done probably before firing, but after drying (further information in ZNW 101 [2010]: 197–198 [see below in the Postscript]). Concerning the origin of the clay, Prof. Yuval Goren, today at the University of Tel Aviv, according to a report of a petrographic analysis, dated March 1, 1993, believes that an origin from Western Galilee is likely; I thank Dr. Sandra Fortner for letting me have this report in 1998 (see Fortner, "Keramik und Kleinfunde," 44).

21 cm.<sup>13</sup> The crucial factor of the cross-shaped mark is the inner circle from which the four apparently equally long arms extend in parallel lines, which are connected at the end (the upper arm is broken off, the lower seems to be shortened). According to the preliminary data of the field diary of May 13, and according to Sandra Fortner,<sup>14</sup> the shard was discovered among almost exclusively Hellenistic and also Late Hellenistic finds. I know of no parallel in the Hellenistic-Roman period (if one does not include “crosses” on synagogue lintels from Naveh in the Hauran, which belong to the third/fourth century CE and are interpreted as flowers).<sup>15</sup> To my knowledge, the closest parallels are found in the Neo-Assyrian period of the ninth century BCE (e.g., on a stone stela of Assurnasirpal II, 883–859 BCE, who wears a necklace with symbols). Christian crosses of the early Middle Ages (e.g., Alemannic crosses and already before them Langobardic crosses in Italy) show a similarity. One of the oldest similar Coptic crosses was found in Egypt and is dated to the fourth century CE.<sup>16</sup> So far I have not been able to explain the origin and meaning of the “cross” on et-Tell.<sup>17</sup>

<sup>13</sup> Measuring vertically and horizontally at the center of a fictive rectangle. A photograph (with a scale) of the shard, combined with two pieces below, is given in Fortner, “Keramik und Kleinfunde,” colour-plate V, together with pl. 71 (for the find see here also catalogue nos. 1322–1323 and pp. 45–46); cf. for other illustrations Strickert, Bethsaida, 150–151; the front cover of the paperback edition of Arav and Freund, Bethsaida 1; Arav, “Preliminary Report, 1994–1996,” 105–106 (19 × 20,7 cm), figure 48; Mark Appold, “Bethsaida and a First-Century House Church?” in Bethsaida: A City by the North Shore of the Sea of Galilee, ed. Arav and Freund, 2:373–396, at 383, figure 4; Andrea Rottloff, “Pilger, Kreuzfahrer und Touristen—Galiläa als Reiseziel von der Spätantike bis in die heutige Zeit,” in Leben am See Gennesaret: Kulturgeschichtliche Entdeckungen in einer biblischen Region, ed. G. Faßbeck et al. (Mainz: Philipp von Zabern, 2003), 187–195, at 194, figure 334b.

<sup>14</sup> Fortner regards “eine späthellenistische Datierung” as “sehr wahrscheinlich” (“Keramik und Kleinfunde,” 45).

<sup>15</sup> Pictures in Rachel Hachlili, Ancient Jewish Art and Archaeology in the Land of Israel, HO, 7. Abteilung 1, 2. Abschnitt, B, Lieferung 4 (Leiden: Brill, 1988), 214, figures b and c; interpretation in Frowald Hüttenmeister, Die jüdischen Synagogen, Lehrhäuser und Gerichtshöfe, vol. 1 of F. Hüttenmeister and G. Reeg, Die antiken Synagogen in Israel, Beihefte zum Tübinger Atlas des Vorderen Orients B 12.1 (Wiesbaden: Reichert Verlag, 1977), 337.

<sup>16</sup> Stela of a tomb with a young man, wearing a cross on his chest, in Emma Brunner-Traut, Hellmut Brunner and Johanna Zick-Nissen (Islam), Osiris, Kreuz und Halbmond: Die drei Religionen Ägyptens, 5th ed. (Mainz: Philipp von Zabern, 1984), 184, 186, no. 153.

<sup>17</sup> But see now my article in ZNW 2010 (quoted below in the Postscript). Cf. my earlier remarks in Kuhn, “Introduction,” 286–287. Strickert, Bethsaida, 149 entitles the relevant chapter: “An Early Christian Cross”; Appold, “Bethsaida,” 373 gives his relevant article the title: “Bethsaida and a First-Century House Church?,” arguing rather for a house church (see the “Conclusion,” 392–393, but see also his later article “Peter

After examining the problem of whether Jesus did indeed stay at Bethsaida, I will deal with the following two aspects: first, the question of archaeological data of the Early Roman period on et-Tell with an emphasis on datable small finds. The second aspect is the problem of the identification of a settlement, which existed in the Early Roman period, with Bethsaida/Julias, especially that of the ancient texts.

2. The Problem of Jesus' Staying at Bethsaida

Bethsaida is mentioned seven times in the canonical gospels. Figure 3 shows the New Testament writings which mention Bethsaida (it appears in the New Testament only in the gospels).

Q is a collection of sayings of Jesus which can be reconstructed from Matthew and Luke, as the majority of New Testament scholars believe. The archetype can be dated around 50 to 70 CE.<sup>18</sup> Two occurrences of Bethsaida in the Gospel of John do not mention Jesus himself working there. A critical evaluation of two further occurrences (the story of the Feeding in Luke and the Healing of a Blind Man in Mark) reveals that the mention of Bethsaida has no historical basis, but was only introduced on the literary level by the gospel writers. As regards the first of these two traditions, the story of the Feeding, which occurs six times in the four canonical gospels, Bethsaida is mentioned only in Luke 9:10. As I have tried to show previously in the volume Bethsaida 1,<sup>19</sup> it is certain that the evangelist called Luke inserted the place-name Bethsaida into his version of the story. The second secondary occurrence appears in Profile: From Bethsaida to Rome,” in Bethsaida: A City by the North Shore of the Sea of Galilee, ed. Arav and Freund, 3:133–148, at 147 n. 18, where he denies any Christian relationship).

---

<sup>18</sup> Were the words of Jesus before the Greek archetype of Q first collected in Aramaic, perhaps even before 50 CE? There may have been several versions of Q in Greek. The writers of the Gospels of Matthew and Luke certainly used Q in somewhat different editions (Q<sup>mt</sup>, Q<sup>lk</sup>). See the edition of Q of the “International Q Project”: James M. Robinson et al., eds., The Critical Edition of Q: Synopsis including the Gospels of Matthew and Luke, Mark and Thomas with English, German, and French Translations of Q and Thomas (Leuven: Peeters, 2000); see also, e.g., Udo Schnelle, Einleitung in das Neue Testament, 6th rev. ed., UTB 1830 (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 2007), § 3.3.

<sup>19</sup> “Bethsaida in the Gospels: The Feeding Story in Luke 9 and the Q Saying in Luke 10,” in Bethsaida: A City by the North Shore of the Sea of Galilee, ed. Arav and Freund, 1:243–256, esp. 246–248. For all problems in Luke, especially Luke 9:10, the woe-saying in Luke 10:13–15 and the so-called Great Omission of Mark 6:45–8:26, see now the important commentary of Michael Wolter, Das Lukasevangelium, HNT 5 (Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2008).

in Mark 8:22, where one finds the name of Bethsaida in the first sentence of the story of the Healing of a Blind Man. The geographical beginning of the story appears to be secondarily added by the evangelist, as I have tried to demonstrate in Bethsaida 3.<sup>20</sup> Besides Mark 6:45, which reports a failed attempt of the disciples to reach Bethsaida by boat, probably based on an older tradition, this finally leaves only the woe-saying in Q 10:13–15. Here I will go into a few details. Let us first see both versions in Matthew and Luke. The differences are highlighted in the table on the next page.

On the whole, Luke is more original than Matthew.<sup>21</sup> Matt 11:20 is a redactional introduction. The addition in Matt 11:23b–24 seems to be a repetition of v. 21b and v. 22 and a re-adoption of Matt 10:15, a verse on Sodom and Gomorrah, which in Luke 10:12 introduces the woe-saying.<sup>22</sup> The five other differences between Matthew and Luke are so small that it is not necessary to discuss them.<sup>23</sup> The differences are the following: (1) Matthew and Luke use a different form of the same verb “to take place”/“to be done”;<sup>24</sup> (2) in the Lucan text “sitting” is added to “in sackcloth and ashes”; (3) Matthew seems to add “I tell you” in the woes on Chorazin and Bethsaida, taking this from the saying on Sodom and Gomorrah in 10:15; (4) Luke says “at the judgment,”

<sup>20</sup> “Bethsaida in the Gospel of Mark,” in Bethsaida: A City by the North Shore of the Sea of Galilee, ed. Arav and Freund, 3:115–131. My co-director and colleague Mark L. Appold argued at the 2007 SBL International Meeting in Vienna that Mark 6:45–8:26 is an early oral Bethsaida Jesus tradition that later entered the Gospel of Mark. Though his arguments were numerous, I was not convinced by the thorough lecture of July 26, titled “An Old Problem in New Light: Bethsaida and a Pre-Markan Tradition.”

<sup>21</sup> The opposite opinion of Bultmann is difficult to understand: Rudolf Bultmann, The History of the Synoptic Tradition, with Corrections and with Additions from the 1962 Supplement, trans. J. Marsh, rev. ed. (Oxford: Basil Blackwell, 1972), 112; orig. edition: Die Geschichte der synoptischen Tradition, 2nd ed., FRLANT 29 (Neue Folge 12) (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1931), 118 and Ergänzungsheft, 2nd ed. (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1962). Against Bultmann also, e.g., Dieter Lührmann, Die Redaktion der Logienquelle, WMANT 33 (Neukirchen-Vluyn: Neukirchener, 1969), for whom Matt 11:23b–24 is secondary (62 with n. 5).

<sup>22</sup> Robinson et al., Critical Edition of Q, 186 n. 2 ask: “Is Matthew 11:23b–24 in Q?”; in their reconstruction at the bottom of pp. 186–187 they do not reproduce Matt 11:23b–24.

<sup>23</sup> The underlying Greek is based on the corresponding text of “The Greek New Testament” from the third edition of 1975 on, and of Nestle-Aland from the 26th edition of 1979 on.

<sup>24</sup> In both cases we have the aorist of γίνομαι: Luke 1st aorist, Matt 2nd aorist.

---

 Luke 10:13–15

(13) Woe to you, Chorazin! Woe to you, Bethsaida! For if the deeds of power done in you had taken place in Tyre and Sidon, they would have repented long ago, sitting in sackcloth and ashes.

(14) But for Tyre and Sidon it will be more tolerable at the judgment than for you.

(15) And you, Capernaum, will you be exalted to heaven? You will go down to Hades.

---

 Matt 11:21–24

(21) Woe to you, Chorazin! Woe to you, Bethsaida! For if the deeds of power done in you had been done in Tyre and Sidon, they would have repented long ago in sackcloth and ashes.

(22) But I tell you that for Tyre and Sidon it will be more tolerable on the day of judgment than for you.

(23) And you, Capernaum, will you be exalted to heaven? You will go down<sup>25</sup> to the Hades. For if the deeds of power done in you had taken place in Sodom, it would have remained until today. (24) But I tell you that it will be more tolerable for the land of Sodom on the day of judgment than for you.

---

Matthew has “at the day of judgment”; (5) Luke has an article before the Greek word for “Hades.”

I now turn to an investigation of the context of the woe-saying (see figure 4). In Luke the woe-saying is part of the commissioning of disciples; in Matthew it is a separate unit. One cannot argue that the woe-saying in the Gospel of Luke is only a secondary interruption and interpretation of an older context, and that therefore the text provides no evidence for the assumption that Jesus ever stayed at Bethsaida.<sup>26</sup> Methodologically it is important to understand that even if the woe-saying were only an interruption of an older context by the redactor of Q, the saying itself could be old and even authentic.

Let us look in detail at the context of the woe-saying in Q, now also taking Matthew into closer consideration. In Luke we find the saying in the context of the commissioning of 70 or 72 (Luke 10:1–20); in

---

<sup>25</sup> Some important manuscripts have the passive of καταβιβάζω (“you will be thrown down”), probably the older reading (see Isa 14:15 HB against LXX).

<sup>26</sup> My co-director colleague Denny Clark argued in this direction in his lecture “Bethsaida in Recent ‘Q’ and Historical Jesus Research” at the Fourth Annual Batchelder Biblical Archaeology Conference at the University of Nebraska at Omaha in October 2002.

Matthew it is found shortly after the commissioning of the Twelve in 9:36–11:1. In Matthew we have a third unit about John the Baptist between the commissioning unit and the woe unit.

The commissioning of disciples is found four times in the Synoptic Gospels: once in Mark (6:6b–13 with their return in vv. 30–31); once in Matthew, following Mark and Q; twice in Luke as commissioning of the Twelve in Luke 9:1–6, 10, following Mark, and as commissioning of 70 or 72 in Luke 10, following mainly Q. But the woe-saying is found only twice: in Matthew 11 after his one commissioning unit and the unit on John the Baptist, in Luke 10 inside his second commissioning unit. We leave aside the commissioning in Mark and in Luke 9, since in their context the woe-saying is missing. It should be noted that in Q the woe-saying (Q 10:13–15) and Jesus' thanksgiving to the Father (Q 10:21–22) doubtless stood close together. This seems to be quite clear from the positions of the woe-saying in the Gospels of Matthew and Luke. In Luke there are only a few sentences between the two units of the woe-saying and Jesus' thanksgiving. First, v. 16, ending the commissioning unit in Luke and also belonging to the end of the commissioning unit in Matthew (10:40). Secondly, the return of disciples in vv. 17–20, which is Luke's final redactional ending of his commissioning unit. In Matthew there is no text in between at all.

To summarize: while the woe-saying in Luke is part of the commissioning unit, we find this unit, independently of Luke, also in Matthew, not far away from the woe-saying. Thus we can suppose for Q that the following three units stood close together:

1. commissioning of disciples
2. woe-saying
3. thanksgiving-saying

Since Luke in 10:16 and Matthew in 10:40 (–42) conclude their mission speeches independently of each other, this must also have been the case in Q.<sup>27</sup> We have left it open whether Q or Luke puts the woe-saying in between the commissioning section. If Luke did so, as seems probable, he not only added the return of the disciples (Luke 10:17–20) after the Q section of their commissioning, but changed the place of the woe-saying, using v. 12 which is found in Matthew's commissioning in 10:15, as the key-saying for the woes. If it is the Sayings Source that is responsible for the position of the woe-saying as found in Luke inside the commissioning,<sup>28</sup> which is unlikely for methodological reasons, the redactor of Q interrupted the commissioning section with the woe-saying,<sup>29</sup> using also the keyword-saying in v. 12 for the starting point of the woes. This v. 12 does not fit so well with the woe-saying that one can assume that the redactor of Q created it. All this, of course, does not prove that the interruption, i.e. the woe-saying, is not old or even authentic. In any case, the woe-saying is surely not a redactional wording, but a tradition taken over by Q, where the commissioning of disciples, the woes and the thanksgiving stood close together. In Q the woe-saying was probably a singular tradition,<sup>30</sup> which stood, as in Matthew, after the commissioning unit and was followed by the thanksgiving unit. But in any event, in our case the interruption of the commissioning in Luke, for which Luke (or less probably the redactor of Q) is responsible, proves nothing regarding the authenticity or the age of the woe-saying, since Q 11:13–15 are without doubt tradition and not merely redaction.

---

<sup>27</sup> "In both Matthew and Luke, Q 10:16 (Matt 10:40) retains its function as the aphorism concluding the mission speech" (John S. Kloppenborg, Q Parallels: Synopsis, Critical Notes & Concordance [Sonoma, CA: Polebridge Press, 1988], 72).

The old question, which I will now discuss, remains whether the woe-saying is an authentic saying of Jesus, or if not, how old this tradition is to be judged. Since I have already published arguments regarding this question on several occasions in English<sup>31</sup> and German,<sup>32</sup> here I will refer in greater detail primarily to two arguments from parallel sayings. First, let me mention briefly only two arguments among others for an old age of the saying. (1) The fact that the saying does not mention the preaching of Jesus, which the later community would certainly do, but only his miracles, marks the reference to Chorazin and Bethsaida as rather old. (2) In the woe-saying, Capernaum is emphasized as a

---

<sup>28</sup> It is harder to explain that Matthew separated the woe-saying from the commissioning than that Luke, using from the Q commissioning the sentence Luke 10:12 par. Matt 10:15 as key-saying, integrated a subsequent saying in Q, the woes, into the commissioning.

<sup>29</sup> For Paul Hoffmann, Luke 10:16 (against Matt 10:40) also shows the original position in Q (Studien zur Theologie der Logienquelle, 3rd rev. ed., NTAbhNS 8 [Münster: Aschendorff, 1982], 286).

<sup>30</sup> Cf. Lührmann, Redaktion, 63: "Das Drohwort selbst dürfte, da sich nicht nachweisen läßt, daß es erst für diesen Zusammenhang geschaffen wäre, ursprünglich isoliert überliefert worden sein."

<sup>31</sup> Kuhn, in Kuhn and Arav, "Bethsaida Excavations," 78; Kuhn, "Bethsaida in the Gospels," 248–251, 254–255; Kuhn, "Bethsaida in the Gospel of Mark," 115–117, 125.

<sup>32</sup> Kuhn, "Jesu Hinwendung," 216; Kuhn, "Bethsaida und das Neue Testament," 164–165.

main place or perhaps the main place for the activities of Jesus, though it is condemned. Its great importance for Jesus does not mean, according to the saying, that Capernaum will have a privileged condition at the last judgment; rather, because of its unwillingness to repent, it will go down to Hades. In the tradition after the death of Jesus, the memory of Chorazin was lost (but is mentioned here) and Capernaum apparently became a main center of Christian activities as an analysis of Mark 1 shows.<sup>33</sup> This means that the saying was either spoken by Jesus himself at the end of his mission there, or it recalls, shortly after his death, his failure in these three places, when Chorazin was not yet forgotten, and Capernaum was not yet an early Christian center.

I now turn to the two arguments against the authenticity which could be brought forth from parallel sayings. One argument was given by Rudolf Bultmann in the second revised edition of his The History of the Synoptic Tradition<sup>34</sup> and was renewed, for example, by Dieter Lührmann in his book on the Sayings Source Q.<sup>35</sup> Bultmann refers to a saying about pagan people who listened to the wisdom of Solomon and the prophecy of Jonah. They are the queen of the South and the people of Nineveh who will condemn the Jewish generation of Jesus according to Q 11:31–32. The wording of Luke 11:31–32 probably comes close to the original wording in Q (the parallel is found in Matt 12:41–42). The Threat against This Generation in Q 11:31–32 reads:

(31) The queen of the South will rise at the judgment with the men of this generation and she will condemn them, because she came from the ends of the earth to listen to the wisdom of Solomon, and see, what is here is greater than Solomon. (32) The men of Nineveh will stand up at the judgment with this generation and condemn it, because they repented at the preaching of Jonah, and see, what is here, is greater than Jonah.

Bultmann believes that this saying belongs to the same later community situation as our saying.<sup>36</sup> For this opinion Bultmann quotes a monograph of Anton Fridrichsen of 1925.<sup>37</sup>

<sup>33</sup> Heinz-Wolfgang Kuhn, "Neuere Wege in der Synoptiker-Exegese am Beispiel des Markusevangeliums," in Bilanz und Perspektiven gegenwärtiger Auslegung des Neuen Testaments, ed. F.W. Horn, BZNW 75 (Berlin: de Gruyter, 1995), 60–90, at 72–82.

<sup>34</sup> See n. 21. For Bultmann's arguments, see also my earlier article "Bethsaida in the Gospels," 249.

<sup>35</sup> Lührmann, Redaktion, 64.

<sup>36</sup> Bultmann, History, 112–113 and 399 (Geschichte, 118 and Ergänzungsheft, 17). Cf. Kuhn, "Bethsaida in the Gospels," 249, 255.

<sup>37</sup> Le problème du miracle dans le Christianisme primitive, Études d'histoire et de philosophie religieuses 12 (Strasbourg: Librairie Istra, 1925), 49–50.

Fridrichsen points out that we have in both cases pagan people as an example, a similar situation at the last judgment and also a similar structure of the two sayings (but this will be correct only in the case of a Matthean priority of the woe-saying); finally Fridrichsen mentions the motive of repentance as a later Christian missionary matter. While the saying about the queen of the South and the people of Nineveh (see the italics in the quotation of the saying) indeed seems to reflect the Christian mission, the woe-saying about Chorazin and Bethsaida is less affirmative about the pagans of Tyre and Sidon. It says only: “they would have repented,” and this should not be turned down, as Fridrichsen does (though in this saying the hypothetical form is, of course, necessary). Further, the saying concerns Jesus’ preaching, while our woe-saying speaks—less mission-like—of his miracles. And finally, the second part of the saying about Capernaum, as it is found in Luke, says nothing about pagan people.

The saying about the queen of the South and the people of Nineveh is no real argument against the authenticity of the woe-saying or an origin close to the historical Jesus. The saying against “this generation” could be of later Christian origin, as the italics in the quotation could suggest. On the other hand, the woe-saying seems to be authentic or at least rather close to Jesus.

There is also another saying that is indeed very close to the woe-saying, referred to also by Bultmann in the same context. Luke’s section on towns in 10:8–12 in his second commissioning has in v. 12, as we have seen, a kind of key-sentence after which the woe-saying follows; in Matthew the verse found in Luke 10:12 is also part of the commissioning unit (10:15). The Threat against Towns in Q 10:12 reads: “I tell you that for Sodom it will be more tolerable on that day than for that town (τῆ πόλει ἐκείνῃ).” Other than the woe-saying the comparison with the people of Sodom is not an independent saying, but part of the commissioning speech (“that town” refers back to the general mentioning of towns in Q 10:8, 10–11). The commissioning in Luke is well composed: (1) On houses 10:5–7; (2) on towns 10:8–12; v. 12 as key-saying for the woes 10:13–15; (3) a “christological” ending 10:16 and (4) finally the return of the disciples in 10:17–20. In Matthew the passage of the return is missing; Luke’s ending 10:16 is also part of Matthew’s ending of the commissioning speech (10:40–42). But in Matthew the woes are, as we have seen, a later separate unit (10:5–7). It seems that Matthew preserved the sequences of the units in more original form and that Luke took the woes from a place after Matthew’s commissioning speech. In any case, the woe-saying is a traditional unit, while the saying about the people of Sodom in the Threat against Towns could have been worded by the original composer of the commissioning speech, perhaps by the author of Q. The Q saying about the people of Sodom is not only dependent on the context, but also much more general and less specific, and cannot be an argument against the woe-saying as an older tradition. The woe-saying may even have been the origin of this saying about the people of Sodom.

I will now sum up the reflections on the three sayings, of which the second and third are less likely to be authentic. The situation behind the woe-saying is apparently much older than Q, belonging to Jesus himself or the time right after his crucifixion. In the saying in question, Capernaum does not yet have a respectable Christian community, a community which we can infer from Mark 1, when we use the method of redaction criticism. Chorazin, which is later never mentioned in the gospel tradition, is not yet forgotten in the woe-saying. Though I have put forward some arguments in previous publications that the saying is authentic, I have also considered that the saying may have been formulated shortly after the death of Jesus.<sup>38</sup> Even in this case we learn something about the activity of Jesus himself from the saying. While the sayings in Q 11:31–32 (against “this generation”) and Q 10:12 (against towns) are more general, the meaning of the woe-saying is that Jesus performed numerous and important miracles in Chorazin and Bethsaida. But this did not bring the people there to repent; even the notorious Phoenician cities of Tyre and Sidon will have a better position in the last judgment than Chorazin and Bethsaida. Since the reference to Chorazin and Bethsaida does not mention the preaching of Jesus like Q 11:31–32 in an indirect way, but only his miracles, the saying seems to be quite old. Though Capernaum is seen as a main place or perhaps the main place for the activities of Jesus, it will nevertheless go down to Hades because of its unwillingness to repent. After the death of Jesus, the memory of Chorazin was all but lost, and Capernaum became a main center of Christian activities, as an analysis of Mark 1 can show (a condemnation at that time is hardly a possibility). This means that the saying either goes back to Jesus himself at the end of his mission there, or it recalls only shortly after his death his failure in three places.

---

<sup>38</sup> Discussed previously in Kuhn, in Kuhn and Arav, “Bethsaida Excavations,” 78. From a rather new book on the authenticity of the Final Judgment Sayings of Jesus in Q I quote here only the result for the saying in question: “The arguments tilt strongly in favor of the authenticity of the Galilean woes, tentatively including Matt 11:23b-24”; see Brian Han Gregg, The Historical Jesus and the Final Judgment Sayings in Q, WUNT 2.207 (Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2006), 127.

3. The Archaeological Data of the Early Roman Period on et-Tell, with an Emphasis on Small Finds

In this chapter the evidence for the habitation of et-Tell in the time of Jesus will be presented. The period in question is mainly the first half of the first century CE, but such a narrow period is hardly detectable. It is reasonable to examine the “Early Roman period” and to exclude, as far as possible, finds whose origins are probably not before the second half of the first century CE. For convenience, the term “Early Roman” will be used here to mark the period from the capture of Jerusalem by the Roman military commander Pompey in 63 BCE until the Bar Kokhba revolt.<sup>39</sup>

First, we should mention the architectural structures that can be dated to the first century CE. No doubt there are plenty of architectural structures in the Hellenistic-Roman period,<sup>40</sup> but speaking specifically about the first century CE is much more difficult, since the Roman houses above the Iron Age inner gate and east of the inner gate could be of around second-century CE origin. Of course, we will know more about their history when a detailed analysis of all the finds, and especially the pottery according to their context, has been made.<sup>41</sup> Since 2003 a wall of about 1.5 m in length in the area east of the Iron Age inner city gate (N 56) has been under discussion, which (among other remnants) Rami Arav believes to be part of the Early Roman city wall,

---

<sup>39</sup> For the first century CE on et-Tell and some time before and after it see a new article and the 2007 dissertation of the Bethsaida co-director Dr. Carl E. Savage: “Supporting Evidence for a First-Century Bethsaida,” in Religion, Ethnicity and Identity in Ancient Galilee: A Region in Transition, ed. Jürgen Zangenberg et al. (Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2007); idem, “Et-Tell (Bethsaida).” In both publications Savage deals with the following items in the same sequence: Coins, Rhodian stamped handles, glass, stone vessels, architecture, oil lamps, ceramics, faunal evidence. In the following I concentrate on architecture and finds that can be dated with some certainty to the Early Roman period and especially, where this may be possible, to the first half of the first century CE.

<sup>40</sup> See now Savage, “Et-Tell (Bethsaida),” 109–113 (“Architecture”).

<sup>41</sup> Fortner, “Keramik und Kleinfunde,” covers the excavations at least through 2000, not including the coins, which were not subject of her research. For new information see especially Savage, “Supporting Evidence,” 196–206; idem, “Et-Tell (Bethsaida),” 76–138; for Savage see also the note before.

constructed by Philip in about 30 CE. Arav mentions for this Locus (1525) “globular cooking pots with triple-ridged rims (the first half of the first century CE).”<sup>42</sup>

Another Roman house was built against the Iron Age inner city wall, partly above the Iron Age palace (see in figure 5). From this Roman structure, Rami Arav, in Bethsaida 2, published two pictures of a shard of “Early Roman fineware” and a grain-threshing device (called by Arav “a flour-threshing device”), which are dated by him to the first century CE.<sup>43</sup> Three other finds can be added to that: (1) a coin of Agrippa I, giving the regnal year 6, which is 42 CE,<sup>44</sup> found in the context of the Roman house in L 43 (Locus 494); (2) a coin of the city of Tiberias, giving the regnal year 13 of the emperor Claudius, which is 53/54, found also in the context of the Roman house in M 43 (Locus 491);<sup>45</sup> (3) the fragment of a Herodian oil lamp, found also in this environment in L 44 (Locus 452).<sup>46</sup>

Two finds may help in the discussion about the proposed Hellenistic-Early Roman temple. One is the figurine “Lady of Bethsaida,” which is, according to my view, probably Hellenistic, and the beautiful lintel, which had been seen on et-Tell even before our excavations began in 1987.

One of the nearest parallels to the so-called “Lady of Bethsaida,” discovered in 1989 in the context of the proposed temple in Square I 52 (Locus 525), is apparently a terracotta figurine in the Staatliche Antikensammlungen in Munich (see figures 6 and 7).<sup>47</sup> The Munich

<sup>42</sup> See Rami Arav, “Bethsaida, 2003,” IEJ 55 (2005): 101–106, at 102–104 with a photograph of this wall on p. 104 (W856, not W855 as on the plan on p. 102); the quotation on p. 103.

<sup>43</sup> Arav, “Preliminary Report, 1994–1996,” 86–88 (figures 32 and 33 and figure 35 on p. 90 respectively).

<sup>44</sup> See the list of Arie Kindler, “The Coin Finds at the Excavations of Bethsaida,” in Bethsaida: A City by the North Shore of the Sea of Galilee, ed. Arav and Freund, 2:250–268, at 258, no. 111.

<sup>45</sup> See the list of Kindler, “Coin Finds,” 259, no. 112; probably not of Agrippa II, see Andrew Burnett et al., From the Death of Caesar to the Death of Vitellius (44 BC–AD 69) (vol. 1.1 of Andrew Burnett et al., Roman Provincial Coinage; London: British Museum Press, 1992), 671. For Meshorer, Treasury, 261, no. 347 it is “under Agrippa II” a “Mint of Tiberias,” “Under Claudius” in the year 13 “= 53 CE.”

<sup>46</sup> See figure 16a and also the photo in Kuhn, “Bethsaida und das Neue Testament,” 166, figure 288.

<sup>47</sup> My former collaborator Dr. Claudia Gruber and I discovered the parallel in the Munich collection in the winter of 2000/2001. Fortner, “Keramik und Kleinfunde,” 29 mentions this figurine. On the “Lady of Bethsaida” see Ilona Skupińska-Løvset, “Terracotta figurines from et-Tell, Bethsaida,” Centre d’Archéologie Méditerranéenne de l’Académie Polonaise des Sciences. Études et Travaux 20 (2005): 261–268 (she writes

terracotta belongs to figurines referred to as “Tanagra style” from a small town about 60 kilometers northwest of Athens, where such figurines were first discovered.<sup>48</sup> The repertoire of these types is dated to the late fourth- and third-century BCE terracotta production, which became enormously popular and was imitated in the east until the first century BCE and especially until the mid-second century BCE.<sup>49</sup> For the Hellenistic period there are further parallels in Asia Minor, but for the Roman period there is no figurine which is equally close to the “Lady of Bethsaida.” Not only the hairstyle should be compared, but also the whole context of the hair with face and cloth. It is important to note that faces of stone are not really comparable with terracotta figurines.<sup>50</sup>

There are reasons for proposing a temple on et-Tell,<sup>51</sup> such as the several decorated stones<sup>52</sup> and some pieces belonging to columns<sup>53</sup> on 267–268: “The best analogy... was supplied” by the author at a conference in 2002); cf. for the figurine also idem, Temple Area, 114 (no. 2), 116.

---

<sup>48</sup> See Latife Summerer, “Tanz der Verschleierten,” in Hauch des Prometheus: Meisterwerke in Ton, ed. F. W. Hamdorf (Munich: Staatliche Antikensammlungen und Glyptothek, 1996), 110–113 with figure 140; especially Jaimee P. Uhlenbrock, “The Hellenistic Terracottas of Athens and the Tanagra Style,” in The Coroplast’s Art: Greek Terracottas of the Hellenistic World, ed. Uhlenbrock (New Paltz, NY: College Art Gallery, 1990), 48–53; Gerhard Zimmer, “Frauen aus Tanagra,” in Bürgerwelten: Hellenistische Tonfiguren und Nachschöpfungen im 19. Jh., ed. Staatliche Museen zu Berlin—Preußischer Kulturbesitz (Mainz: Philipp von Zabern, 1994), 19–28; Reinhard Lullies, “Statuette einer Tänzerin,” in Studies Presented to David Moore Robinson on His Seventieth Birthday, ed. G. E. Mylonas (St. Louis, MO: Washington University Press, 1951), 668–673 and pl. 70. For pictures of the Munich figurine see Summerer, “Tanz,” 110 (figure 140); Lullies, “Statuette,” pl. 70; J. [Ilse] Schneider-Lengyel, Griechische Terrakotten (Munich: Bruckmann, 1936), figure 74.

<sup>49</sup> Friedrich Wilhelm Hamdorf, “Modefrauen,” in Hauch des Prometheus: Meisterwerke in Ton, ed. Hamdorf (Munich: Staatliche Antikensammlungen und Glyptothek, 1996), 104–109 with figure 133, at 109; cf. Eva Töpferwein, Terrakotten von Pergamon (Berlin: de Gruyter, 1976), 184, 194.

<sup>50</sup> Is the hairstyle of women in stone, on coins and on figurines in any way comparable?

<sup>51</sup> According to Arav: see especially “Preliminary Report, 1994–1996,” 18–24; idem, “New Testament Archaeology and the Case of Bethsaida,” in M. Becker and W. Fenske, eds., Das Ende der Tage und die Gegenwart des Heils: Begegnungen mit dem Neuen Testament und seiner Umwelt, AGJU 44 (Leiden: Brill, 1999), 75–99, at 85–87; idem, “The Archaeology of Bethsaida and the Historical Jesus Quest,” in Douglas R. Edwards and C. Thomas McCollough, eds., The Archaeology of Difference: Gender, Ethnicity, Class and the “Other” in Antiquity (Boston, MA: ASOR, 2007), 317–331, at 319, 323–327, 329. Besides Skupińska-Løvset, “Terracotta figurines” and idem, Temple Area, referred below in detail, see now also Excursus 1: “The ‘Temple’ of Bethsaida,” in Savage, “Et-Tell (Bethsaida),” 150–158 and figures 34, 35, 37.

<sup>52</sup> See the preliminary list in Kuhn, “Jesu Hinwendung,” 224 n. 94. Cf. also Skupińska-Løvset, Temple Area, 105–113 (Appendix 1).

<sup>53</sup> See the photo in Sandra Fortner and Andrea Rottloff, “Signale aus der Vergangenheit:

which were partly scattered on the hill (how many were found close to the building in question is not clear).

While the dating of the “Lady of Bethsaida” speaks, according to my present judgment, more for the second century BCE, other finds seem to be arguments for a first-century CE temple.

The most interesting of the decorated stones is a lintel (see figures 8 and 9) which was already known before the Bethsaida excavations began. A picture of the lintel was published by Mendel Nun in 1977 in his book “Sea of Kinneret”<sup>54</sup> and by Bargil Pixner in Biblical Archaeologist 1985.<sup>55</sup> Before 1977, the lintel had been on et-Tell, and before 1985, in the Jordan Park. In 1993, I saw it at the entrance of the later burnt-down restaurant in the Jordan Park.<sup>56</sup> In the summer of 2007 the lintel was lying near the path leading up to the hill from the car park.<sup>57</sup> It has almost escaped notice that the lintel, which is now lying upside down, has two holes on the underside (see figure 9), one for moving the door, the other one for a bolt which was pushed into the lintel.

If there was a pagan temple at Bethsaida before the Roman period, it would have been erected most probably before the eighties of the first century BCE. Since after the Hasmoneans under Alexander Jannaeus, at the end of the eighties of the first century BCE, had taken possession of the Gaulanitis until the reorganization of territories by Pompey, the erection of a pagan temple was certainly not possible. From that time on, et-Tell (Bethsaida) was apparently a place of no importance, until Herod the Great received the Gaulanitis (as the lack Die Rekonstruktion des täglichen Lebens am See in hellenistisch-römischer Zeit am Beispiel der archäologischen Funde aus Betsaida,” in Leben am See Gennesaret: Kulturgeschichtliche Entdeckungen in einer biblischen Region, ed. G. Faßbeck et al. (Mainz: Philipp von Zabern, 2003), 138–146, at 140, figure 232. There are arguments for a temple with which I have great problems, like the theory that the reconstructed pediment, now standing in front of the Byzantine synagogue of Chorazin, belonged originally to the temple at Bethsaida, a theory which Arav still holds (“Archaeology of Bethsaida,” 325–327). When I checked the pediment, I was not convinced; further research is needed.

---

<sup>54</sup> Mendel Nun, Sea of Kinneret: A Monograph (Tel Aviv: Hakibbutz Hameuchad, 1977 [Hebrew]), 21.

<sup>55</sup> Bargil Pixner, “Searching for the New Testament Site of Bethsaida,” BA 48 (1985): 207–216, at 207, figure below.

<sup>56</sup> Pixner, “Searching,” 207: “found at et-Tell and now displayed in the nearby Jordan Park.”

<sup>57</sup> Cf. the photo in Fortner and Rottloff, “Signale,” 140, figure 232.

especially of coins suggests for that period).<sup>58</sup> But a temple of the imperial cult would most likely have been erected when Bethsaida became Julias around 30 CE.

The whorls of the meander of the above mentioned lintel run anticlockwise. There exist very good parallels to the lintel on et-Tell in the combination of meander and rosettes in Hauran temples, a territory which was taken by the Nabataeans at the beginning of the first century BCE.<sup>59</sup> The Hauran parallels are to be dated around the first century CE, surely not to the second century BCE. There are also good parallels in the Golan region which date to the second or third century CE. One finds exactly the same kind of a double meander combined with a rosette at the Hauran temple at Mušannaf, a temple probably for a local god, dated to the first half of the first century CE (see figure 10).<sup>60</sup>

The decorated stones and columns which were found scattered around the hill would seem to indicate the presence of a temple at the site. The more or less recognizable ground plan with a suggested pro-naos, antecella, cella and an opisthodom, also the antae perhaps on both small sides, a stone between them on the eastern side which seems to be part of a pillar, a doorstone found in front of the entrance and finally two incense shovels, one of them complete (apparently in a pit) and close to the building in question (about 10 m away)<sup>61</sup>—all this would fit very well with the interpretation of this structure as a temple on the

<sup>58</sup> Bernett, Kaiserkult, 256.

<sup>59</sup> Manfred Lindner, ed., Petra und das Königreich der Nabatäer: Lebensraum, Geschichte und Kultur eines arabischen Volkes der Antike, (Munich: Delp, 5th ed., 1989), 53; Peter W. Haider et al., eds., Religionsgeschichte Syriens: Von der Frühzeit bis zur Gegenwart (Stuttgart: Kohlhammer, 1996), 176.

<sup>60</sup> Klaus Stefan Freyberger, Die frühkaiserzeitlichen Heiligtümer der Karawanenstationen im hellenisierten Osten: Zeugnisse eines kulturellen Konflikts im Spannungsfeld zweier politischer Formationen, Damaszener Forschungen 6 (Mainz: Philipp von Zabern, 1998), pl. 42a. Exactly the same kind of meander also occurs at a temple for a local god at Selaima (Slim), dated to the end of the first century BCE (see Freyberger, Heiligtümer, pl. 37b).

<sup>61</sup> The data of discovery of this shovel are: Area A, Square G 54, Locus 152, Basket 2660, found May 7, 1996; Arav, "Preliminary Report, 1994–1996," 32: in "a refuse pit" (see on pp. 32–37 the many finds there) "at the level of 167.47 m" (field diary, supervisor Fred Strickert: "167.447" [erroneously three numbers?]; Arav's level is also found in the afterwards produced computer Locus-Report). An incense shovel in a nearby refuse pit (favissa) would fit with the supposed temple. But there remains a small uncertainty: In the computer Locus-Report of Locus 166 (below Locus 152) for May 7 and 8, 1996 one reads only that a pit is "possible" (the field diary for Locus 166 [supervisor Fred Strickert] gives the same information); according to my private diary of July 19, 1997, Dr. Arav was certain that the archaeological context of the shovel was a pit. Cf. the photo with the original context of the shovel in Arav, "Preliminary Report, 1994–1996," 23, figure 15.

highest central level of et-Tell (–166 m),<sup>62</sup> provided the interpretations and suggestions are correct. There seems to be a consensus among scholars that in honour of “Julia,” “Mother of Tiberius,” a small temple of only about 21 x 11 m (the Bethsaida building is about 20 × 6 m) could also have been erected even in Athens,<sup>63</sup> though the dedication of the so-called “South-west temple” on the Agora is only a possibility. If a small local temple had been erected on et-Tell, perhaps in the second century BCE, it might have been later rededicated to Julia-Livia around 30 CE, just as another temple in Greece, near Marathon, was rededicated to Livia-Julia.<sup>64</sup> The Bethsaida building has several floors. It must have been used over a longer period. Two finds that speak for the use of the building in the first century CE are a coin of Philip which was found in the context of the building, and also one of the above-mentioned two Roman incense shovels. This shovel can be dated approximately at least from the second half of the first century CE<sup>65</sup> to the first half of the second century CE.<sup>66</sup> In our case it fits best, in my opinion, in the context of a small Roman temple, rededicated to a member of the Roman imperial family.

Besides considering the ground plan of a freestanding building at the highest point of the center of et-Tell I have argued for a small pre-Maccabean local temple<sup>67</sup> from 2000/2001 on, primarily because of the dating of the little figurine “Lady of Bethsaida,” found in situ, to the

<sup>62</sup> Cf. the published topographical plans, especially Rami Arav, “Bethsaida Excavations: Preliminary Report, 1987–1993,” in Bethsaida: A City by the North Shore of the Sea of Galilee, ed. Arav and Freund, 1:3–63, at 4 (figure 1: July 9, 1991 by J.M. Nielsen); idem, “New Testament Archaeology,” 93 (since I am in possession of a better reproduction of the plan, I want to clarify the height below the marker “Area A”: “–166” and south of it “–167”; in the right corner below one finds “R.A. 1997 ©”).

<sup>63</sup> Rami Arav in an interview with Vered Levy-Barzilai; see the article “Findings Unearthed at the Ancient City of Bethsaida,” in Ha’aretz, 19.05.2004.

<sup>64</sup> V. Vasileios Petrakos, Rhamnous (Athens: Archaeological Receipts Fund, 1991), esp. 29.

<sup>65</sup> See the shovels discovered in Pompeii and Herculaneum: Yigael Yadin, The Finds from the Bar-Kokhba Period in the Cave of Letters (Jerusalem: Israel Exploration Society, 1963), 54, pl. 28 top left and right; Raffaele Liberatore, “Alari e Paletta.—Bronzi Pompeiani,” in Real Museo Borbonico X (Naples: Stamperia Reale, 1834), 1–3 and pl. 64. Of course, a date in the first half of the first century CE is possible for the Bethsaida shovel.

<sup>66</sup> See the shovels from the Bar Kokhba revolt: Yadin, Finds, 48–54, nos. 3–6 with figures 11–15; pls. 15–16.

<sup>67</sup> I published this theory for the first time in 2000 (“Jesu Hinwendung,” 228). Arav—though being somewhat reserved (“we may likely conclude” and “we are still in the process of study”)—still holds the theory of a “Roman imperial temple” “that Philip built at Bethsaida” (“The Archaeology of Bethsaida”; quotations from 323–324 and 327). See also his argument on 329 n. 7 (that “the temple utilized secondary earlier walls”—especially if they belonged to the Iron Age—is, of course, no argument

Hellenistic, pre-Maccabean period. Against this, but along with stratigraphical considerations concerning different pavements, the dating of the decorated lintel of an undoubtedly public building, unfortunately not in situ, to around the first century CE left room for rededicating the temple to the divinely honored Julia.<sup>68</sup>

Of great interest and help is the publication of Ilona Skupińska-Løvset on the Temple Area of Bethsaida in 2006. Prof. Dr. Skupińska-Løvset of the Institute of Archaeology of the University of Lodz headed the Polish excavations on et-Tell in 1998–2000.<sup>69</sup> The main results of this expedition are: (1) The supposed temple was not constructed as “a new Roman temple” of the Imperial cult.<sup>70</sup> Skupińska-Løvset found “five usage levels”: “Three of these levels must be considered Hellenistic, one probably early Roman, one mature Roman or later.”<sup>71</sup> This proposed sanctuary “was erected on the traditional holy place on the debris after the destruction in the VIIIth century BC.”<sup>72</sup> (2) Skupińska-Løvset presents “a new conception of the reconstruction of the sacral area.”<sup>73</sup> For the first time she reconstructs the extension and structure of the area around the supposed sacred building, speaking of a temple within a “temenos,” which extends north of the supposed temple.<sup>74</sup> Although I still have questions about the proposal of a temenos of this kind (cf. the Munich plan in figure 2, going south from I–L 47) I am certain that her theory must be studied carefully. (3) Skupińska-Løvset parallels the suggested Bethsaida temple with the “Phoenician type of against my proposal that the temple was perhaps first erected in the Hellenistic period).

---

<sup>68</sup> Already before her consecration in 42 CE she was divinely honored in the east of the empire (overlooked by Skupińska-Løvset, Temple Area, 71). See Ulrike Hahn, Die Frauen des römischen Kaiserhauses und ihre Ehrungen im griechischen Osten anhand epigraphischer und numismatischer Zeugnisse von Livia bis Sabina, Saarbrücker Studien zur Archäologie und Alten Geschichte 8 (Saarbrücken: Saarbrücker Druckerei und Verlag, 1994), 34–117, esp. at 62.

<sup>69</sup> Temple Area.

<sup>70</sup> Ibid., 72–73; see also, e.g. 102. See now also the conclusion of Savage, “Et-Tell (Bethsaida)”: “The building [sc. “the temple of Bethsaida”] is likely to have been constructed during the second century BCE” (158).

<sup>71</sup> Temple Area, 102. My own dating of the supposed temple from the Hellenistic period did not depend on the Polish expeditions, but many discussions during the excavations and in other places seemed to show me that Prof. Skupińska-Løvset is not against my time proposal. The basis for my proposal was, of course, much smaller than what she presents now in her book.

<sup>72</sup> Ibid., 101; see also pp. 94–95.

<sup>73</sup> Ibid., 7.

<sup>74</sup> Ibid., see especially 94–98 and 194, figures 38a–c.

sanctuary.”<sup>75</sup> She states that “in the period preceding the Roman Age Phoenician influence reached beyond the Jordan.”<sup>76</sup>

There are still no arguments for another function of the building that fits better than the interpretation as a small temple. A main argument against the proposal of a temple is, in my opinion, the height of the preserved Iron Age wall between chamber 3 and chamber 4 of the gate, which is only about two meters east of the supposed entrance to the presumed temple and confines the space before the entrance to a narrow corridor, certainly not only today.<sup>77</sup> My conclusion: At the moment we can be certain neither of the erection of the building as a temple in the second century BCE nor of its rededication to Livia-Julia—and even less of its erection in her honour. But at present I cannot think of any better explanation than the one that sees in the freestanding building a (perhaps later, in the first century CE, rededicated) small local pre-Maccabean temple.

Leaving aside now the architectural structures and also the question of a Hellenistic-Roman temple, I refer only to coins of the beginning of the first century CE, precisely to the four coins of Philip (4 BCE–33/34 CE)<sup>78</sup> and the one coin of Herod Antipas (4 BCE–39 CE) which were found on et-Tell (see figures 11 and 12). Of course, compared with silver coins these bronze coins (AE) probably remained in circulation for a much shorter period of time. It would be interesting to find out the usual archaeological terminus ad quem for the loss of these coins of Philip and Herod Antipas.

---

<sup>75</sup> Ibid., 101. Cf. also Arav, speaking of the time after Alexander the Great: “At Bethsaida, a larger influx of new settlers arrived, presumably from the thriving Phoenician coast” (“Archaeology of Bethsaida,” 319).

<sup>76</sup> Temple Area, 104. According to Skupińska-Løvset, the Phoenician influence could explain Jesus’ comparison in the woe-saying in Q 10:13–15 with the Phoenician cities of Tyre and Sidon (ibid., 104).

<sup>77</sup> Even if a later floor (i.e. earlier floor in the excavations process) had been much higher than the present floor (which is doubtful according to my information), an explanation for the height of the present floor against the preserved height of the Iron Age wall would be necessary.

<sup>78</sup> Not five coins “in the vicinity of the temple,” as Arav states in an article of 2007 (“Archaeology of Bethsaida,” 325); until 2004/05 only four coins of Philip were found on et-Tell (according to the analysis of all Bethsaida coins until 2004/05 by Kindler), and for the subsequent period until 2008 I know of no coin of Philip found there. Only one of these four coins was found in the context of the “temple” (found 1990 in G 51; the other three coins were found in I 38, I 46 and O 56). Savage, “Et-Tell (Bethsaida),” 75, mentions also in his new list of Bethsaida coins only four coins of Philip. See also the Postscript for coins of 2009.

Keeping the main focus on the Early Roman period, one kind of shard is a most helpful tool for narrowing the chronological framework down to the Early Roman period: stone vessels.<sup>79</sup> Up to now, more than 15 fragments of limestone vessels (lathe-turned or hand-carved), more precisely white chalk vessels, have been found on et-Tell which belong at least for the most part to different cups, bowls and other crockery (see figure 13). Stone vessels are a special feature of Jewish life, since, according to Jewish law, stone vessels did not acquire impurity. As Yitzhak Magen writes in his book of 2002 about stone vessels in Israel/Palestine: They “appear suddenly in the late first century BCE and vanish after the destruction of the second temple and the Bar Kokhba revolt without remaining in use.”<sup>80</sup> Jane M. Cahill, in a paper of 1992 on chalk vessels, even suggested that “their use... was confined primarily, and perhaps solely, to the 1st century C.E.”<sup>81</sup>

Though further research is still needed, Cahill states that at present “these vessels are found almost exclusively at sites known to have been inhabited by Jews.”<sup>82</sup> The extent to which Bethsaida/Julias was Jewish or pagan in the first century is still an unanswered question. According to our excavations and historical information it was definitely Jewish, but perhaps also had a pagan population. Certainly, as the place of Peter, his brother Andrew, and of Philip, whose home was Bethsaida, according to John 1:44 and 12:21,<sup>83</sup> it was not a purely pagan village or city, although we do not know whether Jesus saw the day when the village of Bethsaida was elevated to a city around 30 CE.

---

<sup>79</sup> See now Savage, “Supporting Evidence,” 199–204; idem, “Et-Tell (Bethsaida),” 99–108 (including a list of 11 vessels in figure 19 and table 6). On some limestone vessels from et-Tell see also Fortner, “Keramik und Kleinfunde,” 81–82 and catalogue nos. 1525–1529 (pl. 94 with the limestone vessels is missing).

<sup>80</sup> Yitzhak Magen, The Stone Vessel Industry in the Second Temple Period: Excavations at Hizma and the Jerusalem Temple Mount (Jerusalem: Israel Exploration Society, 2002), 1.

<sup>81</sup> Jane M. Cahill, “Chalk Vessel Assemblages of the Persian/Hellenistic and Early Roman Periods,” in Stratigraphical, Environmental, and Other Reports (vol. 3 of A. de Groot and D. T. Ariel, eds., Excavations at the City of David 1978–1985: Directed by Yigal Shiloh, Qedem 33 [Jerusalem: Hebrew University of Jerusalem, 1992], 190–274, at 231).

<sup>82</sup> Cahill, “Chalk Vessel Assemblages,” 234.

<sup>83</sup> There is no reason to doubt this information; on the contrary, only the names of these three disciples of Jesus have a Greek association: “Philip” (cf. also John 12:20–22) and “Andrew” are Greek names; the name of the brother of Andrew, “Simon,” is also often found among Greeks.

By the way, fragments of other chalk vessels from the earlier Persian/Hellenistic periods, which were only hand-carved (almost always veined chalk, varying from yellow to a reddish-purple colour), have occasionally been reported from the excavations of the City of David and from other sites in Israel/Palestine.<sup>84</sup> But they differ in shape and also in the colour from the hand-carved stone vessels of the Early Roman group, so that they can easily be distinguished.<sup>85</sup> No examples of the Persian/Hellenistic variety have as yet been found on et-Tell.<sup>86</sup>

Of course, cooking pots of many different types were found on et-Tell. The Galilean grooved lip cooking pot has a short neck and a rim with one groove; two examples have already been published in Bethsaida 1 by Toni Tessaro (now Mrs. Fisher).<sup>87</sup> Tessaro already recognized the parallel with cooking pots from Tel Anafa in the Golan which were examined by Andrea Berlin. Berlin writes: "This type is prevalent in the late first-century BCE and first-century CE assemblages throughout Galilee."<sup>88</sup> See figure 14.

<sup>84</sup> See Cahill, "Chalk Vessel Assemblages," 197: "lathes were not used to produce the chalk vessels of this period" (= Persian/Early Hellenistic); Roland Deines, Jüdische Steingefäße und pharisäische Frömmigkeit: Ein archäologisch-historischer Beitrag zum Verständnis von Joh 2,6 und der jüdischen Reinheitshalacha zur Zeit Jesu, WUNT 2.52 (Tübingen: Mohr, 1993), 41.

<sup>85</sup> See the description of Cahill, "Chalk Vessel Assemblages," especially 195, 197, 233 and figure 14 (242); also Roland Deines in a personal communication in Munich on 05.11.2005.

<sup>86</sup> According to the kind information of Carl Savage in July 2005.

<sup>87</sup> Toni Tessaro, "Hellenistic and Roman Ceramic Cooking Ware from Bethsaida," in Bethsaida: A City by the North Shore of the Sea of Galilee, ed. Arav and Freund, 1:127–139, at 130, figure 2 (for 1992 alone she counts 29 rim fragments with one groove); Arav, "Preliminary Report, 1994–1996," 36, table 1 and 2, cat. no. 75.4 without photographs or drawings (5 rim fragments of the type "Early Roman cooking pot with short neck," found in Area A, Locus 152 [cf. Fortner, "Keramik und Kleinfunde," catalogue nos. 738, 755, 777, 778, 786], where the complete shovel of the two incense shovels was discovered); Fortner, "Keramik und Kleinfunde," 40, pls. 41–42, 726–770 and catalogue, lists 45 cooking pots "mit einfach gerilltem Rand" found on et-Tell, two of them belonging to Locus 152 (nos. 738 and 755). The two fragments of cooking pots of Tessaro on figure 14 are apparently missing in the catalogue of Fortner, "Keramik und Kleinfunde."

<sup>88</sup> Andrea Berlin, "The Plain Wares," in Tel Anafa 2.1: The Hellenistic and Roman Pottery, ed. S. C. Herbert, Journal of Roman Archaeology Supplementary Series 10 (Ann Arbor, MI: Kelsey Museum, 1997), IX–244 and pls. 1–94: 86 (dealt with especially on p. 91: "Galilean grooved lip cook pot," with pottery ware nos. PW 211–215); see also David Adan-Bayewitz, Common Pottery in Roman Galilee: A Study of Local Trade (Ramat-Gan, Israel: Bar-Ilan University Press, 1993), 124–129: Kefar Hananya Form 4A (the author suggests on p. 125 as a date: "mid first century BCE to mid second century CE"). A new (in terms of dating the period in question) and more general

“Four large jars, together with a casserole”<sup>89</sup> were found in a cellar (I 30, Locus 948), which seems to indicate a wine storage facility.<sup>90</sup> The casserole belongs to the “Galilean plain rim” type, which has “a short, flaring rim that angles up smoothly” from the “rounded” body, which is “gently carinated above the midpoint” (see figure 15).<sup>91</sup> It can be dated by comparison with Tel Anafa from about the late first century BCE to the early first century CE.<sup>92</sup>

In Bethsaida 2 Arav gives a drawing of another “Early Roman casserole,” again with everted rim. It was found in Area B, in what had been the Iron Age Palace.<sup>93</sup> According to Arav in Bethsaida 2, in Area A further Early Roman casseroles with everted rims were found.<sup>94</sup> At this time I do not have sufficient information about the total number of Early Roman cooking pots and casseroles.<sup>95</sup>

Equally helpful for an exact dating of et-Tell into the Early Roman period are the so-called Herodian oil lamps: It is not necessary to give a description, because this type is very easy to recognize. “The ‘Herodian’ lamps are by far the most common lamps of the 1st century CE.”<sup>96</sup> Two overview on ceramics, including cooking pots and casseroles, found on et-Tell, is given by Savage, “Et-Tell (Bethsaida),” 121–136; cf. also idem, “Supporting Evidence,” 205.

---

<sup>89</sup> Arav, “Preliminary Report, 1994–1996,” 99; Fortner, “Keramik und Kleinfunde,” 39, pl. 26, 521 and catalogue (the four jars here have the numbers 1075, 1088, 1103 and 1104; see 42–43).

<sup>90</sup> See Arav, “Preliminary Report, 1994–1996,” 99. Cf. the 1993 find of fragments of three iron pruning hooks in the kitchen of the courtyard house in Area C, Loci 901 and 911, close to the cellar (Arav, “Preliminary Report, 1987–1993,” 33; Fortner, “Keramik und Kleinfunde,” 70 with pl. 85, nos. 1452–1454 and catalogue).

<sup>91</sup> Berlin, “Plain Wares,” 102. Fortner, “Keramik und Kleinfunde,” 39, pl. 26, 521–523 and catalogue.

<sup>92</sup> Arav dated the finds of the cellar “from the end of the second to the early first century BCE” (“Preliminary Report, 1994–1996,” 99). Adan-Bayewitz, Pottery, 111–119 dates this type found in many places in Galilee from “mid first century BCE to mid second century CE” (p. 119). According to Berlin, “Plain Wares,” 102 this type “first appears” in the “late 1st century BCE–early 1st century CE,” but on p. 96 n. 216 she states that the beginning is “sometime around the middle of the 1st century BCE” and the terminus ante quem is “early 1st century CE.”

<sup>93</sup> Arav, “Preliminary Report, 1994–1996,” 62–63 (pl. VI.9). Fortner, “Keramik und Kleinfunde” does not seem to record a casserole in the former palace.

<sup>94</sup> Arav, “Preliminary Report, 1994–1996,” 36 (cat. no. 76.4; seven rim fragments without photo or drawing); Fortner, “Keramik und Kleinfunde,” 39, pl. 26, 522–523 and catalogue (from Area A two rim fragments of the same type as the casserole in the cellar).

<sup>95</sup> For the finds until 2000 see Fortner, “Keramik und Kleinfunde.”

<sup>96</sup> Renate Rosenthal-Heginbottom, “Imported Hellenistic and Roman Pottery,” in Excavations at Dor, Final Report I B: Areas A and C: The Finds, ed. E. Stern, Qedem Reports 2 (Jerusalem: Israel Exploration Society, 1995), 183–288, at 243; see also Dan

samples from Areas A<sup>97</sup> and B on et-Tell, in fact only the characteristic nozzle fragments, are shown in figure 16.<sup>98</sup> Bethsaida co-director Dr. Carl Savage from Drew University in New Jersey lists in his dissertation of 2007 eleven examples of Herodian oil lamps.<sup>99</sup>

The glass finds from Bethsaida have been worked on by Andrea Rottloff, who presented 177 items of glass found at Bethsaida. Of these, I mention here only the Early Roman drinking beakers. Rottloff discovered fragments of six beakers which are especially typical of the Early Roman period; at least one of them seems to belong “to the earlier or middle first century AD.”<sup>100</sup> Apart from fragments of glass which belong especially to the time of the Flavian emperors and later (from 69 CE on), I know of at least eleven pieces of glass from the first century CE and the Early Roman period, respectively. These fragments are only a selection until 2001.<sup>101</sup>

---

Barag and Malka Hershkovitz, “Lamps from Masada,” in Masada IV: The Yigael Yadin Excavations 1963–1965, Final Reports, ed. J. Aviram et al. (Jerusalem: Israel Exploration Society, 1994), IX-147: 24–58, type C; Noam Adler and Joan Goodnick Westenholz, “Catalogue of Lamps,” in Let There be Light: Oil-Lamps from the Holy Land, ed. J. Goodnick Westenholz (Jerusalem: Bible Lands Museum, 2004), 22–73: 26–29; Yael Israeli and Uri Avida, Oil-Lamps from Eretz Israel: The Louis and Carmen Warschaw Collection at the Israel Museum, Jerusalem (Jerusalem: Israel Museum, 1988), 37–45.

<sup>97</sup> Cf. also the information for Area A in Arav, “Preliminary Report, 1994–1996,” 36 (no. 96.2): “Bow-spouted Herodian oil lamp” (one sample); see also 32–33.

<sup>98</sup> Area A, O 53, Locus 1508, found 27.06.2001; Area B, L 44, Locus 452, found 30.06.1994 (the last one is also mentioned above at the beginning of the chapter; according to original notes of 1994 the place of discovery of this very important find in Area B is given here correctly—also Arav, “Archaeology of Bethsaida,” 321, figure 5—against other statements naming Area A or C). Fortner also has two Herodian oil lamps (Area A, Loci 831 and 526). In Fortner’s drawing the fragment in Locus 831 (no. 280) looks almost identical to the one above in Area B (“Areal A, Locus 831” seems to be an error); see Fortner, “Keramik und Kleinfunde,” 26, pl. 13, 280–281, colour plate III.3 and catalogue.

<sup>99</sup> Savage, “Et-Tell (Bethsaida),” 114–120 (tables 7 and 8: nos. 1–10 and no. 14). Two of them (nos. 8 and 9) are nozzle fragments of Herodian oil lamps found in 2007, published with photo in the Internet; see Rami Arav, “Bethsaida Excavations: The Season of 2007,” n. p. [cited 21 April 2008]. Online: <http://www.unomaha.edu/bethsaida>, page on Area A West, Locus 2035. See also Postscript.

<sup>100</sup> Andrea Rottloff, “Pre-Roman, Roman and Islamic Glass from Bethsaida” (still unpublished), ch. 5.1.1 (see Postscript). I would like to thank Dr. Andrea Rottloff, who wrote her dissertation in Roman Provincial Archaeology at the University of Munich, for giving me her paper in May 2005 and allowing me to quote from it. A preliminary paper was published in the year 2000: “Hellenistic, Roman and Islamic Glass from Bethsaida (Iulias, Israel),” in Annales du 14<sup>e</sup> Congrès de l’Association Internationale pour l’Histoire du Verre, Venezia-Milano 1998 (Lochem, Netherlands: AIHV, 2000), 142–146. Cf. also Kuhn, “Bethsaida und das Neue Testament,” 166, figure 289.

<sup>101</sup> Cf. now Savage, “Et-Tell (Bethsaida),” 94–98.

I close the archaeological evidence for the Early Roman period, and especially the first half of the first century CE, with a bronze fibula or brooch of the so-called Aucissa type. It can be dated mainly to the first half of the first century CE (see figure 17).<sup>102</sup> “Aucissa” is the name of the manufacturer, often found inscribed across the head of the fibula. This type was widely distributed all over the Roman Empire.<sup>103</sup> Typical of this kind of fibula is the combination of the following characteristics: a hinged pin with an arched semicircular bow, a foot ending in a bold ornamental knob, and a head with an ornamented plate.<sup>104</sup>

To sum up: Archaeological structures and numerous kinds of small finds leave no doubt that et-Tell was inhabited during the Early Roman period and certainly also during the first half of the first century CE, though the data, especially until the mid-first century CE, are not as strong and numerous as for the Iron Age or for the Hellenistic period. Future excavations and further research on the finds (from 2001<sup>105</sup> on, the subsequent period not covered by the specific dissertation of Sandra Fortner and from 2007 on, the year in which the more general dissertation of Carl Savage was finished) will certainly enlarge the data for the Early Roman period, which will provide an even sounder basis for discussions.

---

<sup>102</sup> The fibula is identical with the one in Fortner, “Keramik und Kleinfunde,” 65, pl. 81, 1420 and catalogue.

<sup>103</sup> For date and distribution see Emilie Riha, Die römischen Fibeln aus Augst und Kaiseraugst, Forschungen in Augst 3 (Augst: Amt für Museen und Archäologie des Kantons Basel-Landschaft, 1979), 114–115, with parallels pl. 25, 667–668 (the Aucissa fibulae “wurden hauptsächlich von frühaugusteischer Zeit bis in die Mitte des 1. Jahrhunderts getragen” [114]); idem, Die römischen Fibeln aus Augst und Kaiseraugst: Die Neufunde seit 1975, Forschungen in Augst 18 (Augst: Römermuseum Augst, 1994), 101, with parallel pl. 20, 2283; Salvatore Ortisi, “Die früh- und mittelkaiserzeitlichen Fibeln,” in Römische Kleinfunde aus Burghöfe 2, ed. Kommission für Vergleichende Archäologie Römischer Alpen- und Donauländer der Bayerischen Akademie der Wissenschaften, Frühgeschichtliche und Provinzialrömische Archäologie 6 (Rahden, Westfalen: Leidorf, 2002), 9–84, at 29, with parallels on pl. 13, nos. 165–166, 168 (dating the Aucissa fibulae mainly from Augustus to Claudius). A parallel has also been published from Horvat Dafit in the Negev: The Nabateans in the Negev, ed. Renate Rosenthal-Heginbottom, University of Haifa Catalogue 22 (Haifa: Reuben and Edith Hecht Museum, 2003), 28 and 44, figure 66.

<sup>104</sup> On et-Tell (Bethsaida) a fibula of the Alesia type (used until the end of the first century BCE) was also found (both fibulae are published in Fortner and Rottloff, “Signale,” 142, figure 238; see also Fortner, “Keramik und Kleinfunde,” 64–65, pl. 81, 1419–1420 and catalogue).

<sup>105</sup> Because of political reasons, no excavation took place in 2002.

4. The Problem of the Identification of et-Tell, Especially on the Basis of Ancient Texts

The archaeological data for a first-century CE settlement from finds on et-Tell cannot sufficiently prove that this place was elevated to the status of city around 30 CE (though the “founder”-coin of the year 30/31 CE, which Philip minted, makes the elevation of Bethsaida to Julius almost certain).<sup>106</sup> Indeed, we cannot expect such data on et-Tell, since Philip died only about three years after the elevation, and the “large number of settlers” in Josephus,<sup>107</sup> which came with the rank of a city, may be at least partly a literary topos.<sup>108</sup> In any event, the question remains: Was et-Tell Bethsaida? There are sceptics like Jürgen Zangenberg<sup>109</sup> or Shimon Gibson.<sup>110</sup>

With the help of Josephus, it is at least possible to locate Bethsaida very precisely at the northern end of the Sea of Galilee. Occurrences of Bethsaida in the Rabbinical literature support this location.<sup>111</sup> Josephus is much more exact than some scholars recognize. John 12:21, which speaks of “Bethsaida in Galilee,” seems to reflect the political situation under Agrippa II at the end of the first century.<sup>112</sup> I will go into detail only in <sup>106</sup> See among many Meshorer, Treasury, 88.

<sup>107</sup> Ant. 18.28.

<sup>108</sup> Cf. in Kuhn, in Kuhn and Arav, “Bethsaida Excavations,” 79–80.

<sup>109</sup> Jürgen Zangenberg, “Bethsaida,” BAR 26.3 (May/June 2000): 10, 12; but Zangenberg and Gabriele Faßbeck are more cautious in their article “‘Jesus am See von Galiläa’ (Mt 4,18): Eine Skizze zur archäologischen Forschung am See Gennesaret und zur regionalen Verankerung der frühen Jesusbewegung,” in Saxa Loquentur: Studien zur Archäologie Palästinas/Israels, ed. C. G. den Hertog et al., AOAT 302 (Münster: Ugarit-Verlag, 2003), 292 n. 5: “Die Frage, ob die auf et-Tell ergrabenen hellenistisch-römischen Befunde mit dem in der Literatur genannten Ort zu identifizieren sind, ist u.E. noch nicht zweifelsfrei geklärt”; the authors were waiting, as they state, for certain publications by Bennett and Fortner, which are now accessible (see n. 2).

<sup>110</sup> “Bethsaida; Beth Ramtha; Livias-Julias,” in Archaeological Encyclopedia of the Holy Land, ed. Abraham Negev and Shimon Gibson, rev. and updated ed. (New York, NY: Continuum, 2001), 80–81 (Gibson is the editor responsible; the widely scattered authorship of the individual articles is not clear). The article on “Bethsaida; Beth Ramtha; Livias-Julias” confuses in its first part Julius/Bethsaida in the Gaulanitis and Betaramphtha/Livias/Julias in Perea; in the second part it states about et-Tell (Bethsaida): “The Early Roman remains at the site were fairly poor, a fact that weighs against its identification as Bethsaida” (81). This is no longer correct, and the conclusion was anyhow hasty.

<sup>111</sup> See Kuhn, in Kuhn and Arav, “Bethsaida Excavations,” 82; cf. also Richard A. Freund, “The Search for Bethsaida in Rabbinic Literature,” in Bethsaida: A City by the North Shore of the Sea of Galilee, ed. Arav and Freund, 1:267–311.

<sup>112</sup> Cf. Kuhn, in Kuhn and Arav, “Bethsaida Excavations,” 86–87.

relation to two occurrences of Bethsaida in Josephus. Most important is, of course, the wording in War 3.515 that the Jordan river “after the city of Julias (μετὰ πόλιν Ἰουλιιάδα)” runs through the Sea of Galilee (see the fourth section in the quotation below); the next sentence in Josephus makes it clear that “Gennesar” here is the name of the Lake.<sup>113</sup>

After starting from this cave [the famous grotto of Pan at Caesarea Paneas is meant]<sup>114</sup> the Jordan, whose course is now visible, runs through the marshy grounds and swamps of Lake Semechonitis [this is today the Ha-Khula region], then goes on another hundred and twenty stades [this is quite accurate—about 23 kilometers]<sup>115</sup> and after the city of Julias cuts through the middle of [the Lake of] Gennesar, from which, after traversing through a long desert region, it ends by going into the Lake Asphaltitis [this is the Dead Sea].<sup>116</sup>

Neither today nor in the first century CE was et-Tell a place directly on the shore of the Lake. Figure 18 shows two maps based on drawings of John Shroder Jr., Chief Geologist at the University of Nebraska at Omaha, and his colleagues. On the left one finds the present-day situation; on the right the picture shows the results of their research for the first century CE: Here the Sea of Galilee (in dark black) is much closer to et-Tell. The bed of the river and the swampy region are in grey. At the shore of the Lake today are found el-Araj and southeast of it el-Mesadiyeh, where some believed and some still believe Bethsaida can be found. According to Shroder and his colleagues, in the first century CE, et-Tell was much closer to the Lake than today, but even then not at the shore itself.

<sup>113</sup> Josephus writes in the next sentence in 3.516 παρατείνει δὲ τὴν Γεννησάρ ὁμώνυμος χώρα (“it [sc. a beautiful region] extends along [the Lake of] Gennesar, a region with the same name”). Cf. also 3.463.

<sup>114</sup> See War 1.405–406.

<sup>115</sup> See below n. 116.

<sup>116</sup> The quotations of Josephus here and below are based on a comparison of the Greek text between Josephus, ed. and trans. H.St.J. Thackeray et al., 9 vols., LCL (Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press, 1926–1965) and Flavii Iosephi opera, ed. Benedictus Niese (vol. 6 together with Iustus von Destinon), 7 vols. (Berlin: Weidmann, 1885–1895 [= editio maior]); Flavii Iosephi opera recognovit, ed. Benedictus Niese, 6 vols. (Berlin: Weidmann, 1888–1895 [= editio minor]) was not accessible. I compared for Bellum judaicum also Flavii Iosephi opera omnia, ed. Samuel Adrianus Naber, post Immanuel Bekkerum recognovit, 6 vols. (Leipzig: Teubner, 1888–1896), for Life also F. Siegert et al. (Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2001). In War 3.515 all three editions have no difference of any significance.

What does μετὰ πόλιν Ἰουλιάδα in Josephus, War 3.515, translated by “after,” “behind” or “below the city of Julias,” mean? With the help of the Thesaurus Linguae Graecae or Accordance, it is now easier to say something about the use of the Greek language in Josephus.<sup>117</sup> It is to emphasize that Josephus does not say: πρὸς τῇ πόλει Ἰουλιάδι “at the city of Julias.” In fact, Josephus uses πρὸς seven times with dative and πόλις or κόμη, meaning “at,” “besides,” “near,” etc.<sup>118</sup> This is normal usage for Josephus; only once in all his writings does he use μετὰ with πόλις or κόμη.<sup>119</sup> This is the case in the passage in question. This special usage seems to suggest that Josephus means not generally πρὸς (“at”), but specifically μετὰ “after” (normally Josephus uses this preposition with the accusative as a marker of time, e.g. “after the death of” somebody). The conclusion must be that “after” (or similar) is the best translation for this wording in Josephus.<sup>120</sup> This means that between Julias and the Sea of Galilee there was some significant distance. The Jordan river did not run into the Lake at Bethsaida-Julias.

Secondly, besides War 3, there is one more very detailed piece of information in Josephus about Bethsaida-Julias in his Life 398–406. I will not discuss the whole passage, but focus only on one sentence in 399 about the distance from the Jordan river to Julias. Josephus writes:

On receiving information of this (the troops of Agrippa II close to Julias are meant), I sent two thousand soldiers under the command of Jeremia, who set pales (for a camp) a stadium away from Julias close to the River Jordan (ἀπὸ σταδίου τῆς Ἰουλιάδος πλησίον τοῦ Ἰορδάνου ποταμοῦ)...<sup>121</sup>

The meaning is that the soldiers of Josephus built a camp “close to the Jordan river” about 200 m away from Julias.<sup>122</sup> The wording suggests a

<sup>117</sup> I have used “Works of Flavius Josephus in Greek” (version 1.0, 2004) in Accordance: Bible Software (for Macintosh), OakTree Software, 2005.

<sup>118</sup> Six times in Antiquities: 5.64; 6.98,247; 7.305; 8.381; 9.7; once in War: 5.51.

<sup>119</sup> μετὰ with the accusative as marker of a position with the meaning “after” or “behind” in Josephus, e.g. Ant. 3.122: μετὰ δέκα πήχεας (“after [a distance of] ten cubits”).

<sup>120</sup> LCL translates “below the town of Julias.” BDAG, “μετὰ” B I translates in Heb 9:3 the local meaning of μετὰ with “behind the second curtain.”

<sup>121</sup> In the quoted text of Life 399 the edition of LCL, of Siegert et al. and the editio maior of Niese have no difference of any significance.

<sup>122</sup> BDAG, “στάδιον, ου, τό” 1 referring among other occurrences to Josephus (“about 192 meters”); cf. also J. Lust, E. Eynikel and K. Hauspie, “στάδιον, -ου,” Greek-English Lexicon of the Septuagint, rev. ed. (Stuttgart: Deutsche Bibelgesellschaft, 2003), 565 (“the representative—Olympic—stadium was ca. 192 m”). In various ancient Greek units the length is always around 200 m, the Roman unit for a stadium is 185 m; see short distance of about 200 m between Bethsaida-Julias and the Jordan river. This distance fits perfectly with the distance of et-Tell to the eastern arm of the Jordan river. The wording “close to the Jordan river” also seems to indicate that Josephus does not mean a place directly at the shore of the Lake and the mouth of the Jordan river, but a place further away, i.e. to the north of it.

Thus we can be sure that according to a historian and soldier, who knew this region as commander in Galilee and the Gaulanitis during the First Jewish Revolt, the Jordan river entered the Sea of Galilee not “at” Bethsaida, but “after” it, which means a little to the south of it.

The correct localization of Bethsaida on et-Tell and not at el-Araj or el-Mesadiyeh is finally based on three arguments: It is almost impossible to think that Philip elevated a village to a city in the swamp at the northern end of the Sea of Galilee (see also below). A further argument is that there is no evidence for any remains of walls of the Hellenistic-Roman period at el-Araj or el-Mesadiyeh. Other claims are without any archaeological evidence.<sup>123</sup> Finally, the geological results of Shroder and his colleagues show that at the time of Philip the northern end of the Sea of Galilee was much closer to et-Tell. The geological results mean that el-Araj and el-Mesadiyeh were still under water in New Testament times until a catastrophic flood following a massive slope failure by an earthquake probably in 363 CE.<sup>124</sup> But even if one does not accept the modern geological results of two universities in the United States and Israel, it is not possible to argue that Philip elevated some presumed houses of fishermen in the swamp of the northern end of the Sea of Galilee to the status of a city, as stated in the first argument above. The excavations prove that there was a Hellenistic-Roman settlement of some size on et-Tell, which had already been an important city in the Iron Age II.

I will conclude by summing up my arguments. First, Jesus most probably stayed for some time at a more or less Jewish-oriented place called Bethsaida, or perhaps also Julias, located in the more or less pagan

---

Lexikon der Alten Welt, ed. Carl Andresen et al. (Zürich: Artemis Verlag, 1965), 3423–3425.

<sup>123</sup> Cf. Arav, “Archaeology of Bethsaida,” 317–318.

<sup>124</sup> Mendel Nun does not believe in the results of Shroder and his colleagues (Mendel Nun, Der See Genezareth und die Evangelien: Archäologische Forschungen eines jüdischen Fischers, Biblische Archäologie und Zeitgeschichte 10 [Gießen: Brunnen, 2001], 223–229). None of his arguments is convincing.

region of the Gaulanitis. Second, we have enough archaeological data for a settlement in the first century CE on et-Tell. Third, on the basis of geological evidence and evidence from the ancient sources, especially Josephus, Bethsaida, which Philip decided to turn into a city around 30 CE, must have been on et-Tell.

Postscript. Since the last additions to this article were made before summer 2008, I add some new information until April 2010 (besides the stone-by-stone plan of et-Tell [Bethsaida] of 2009 in figure 2): A fifth coin of Philip and a second coin of Herod Antipas (see figures 11 and 12) were found in 2009 and identified by the numismatist Donald T. Ariel (Israel Antiquities Authority) for the Bethsaida Excavations Project.<sup>125</sup>—The number of Herodian oil lamps increased until April 2010 to at least 19 (in the new season of excavations in May/June 2010 three more were discovered in Area A West).—Volume 4 of the Bethsaida series (see n. 2) was published also in 2009 (Kirksville, MO: Truman State University Press).<sup>126</sup>—The dissertation of C. Savage on Bethsaida in the first century CE (see above n. 2) is scheduled to be published in 2010 by Lexington Books, Lanham, MD (the pages I refer to in the dissertation correspond to ch. 4 and excursus 1 = pp. 68–138 and 150–163).—An article by the author, “Bethsaida und et-Tell in frühromischer Zeit: Historische, archäologische und philologische Probleme einer als Wirkungsstätte Jesu angenommenen Ortslage,” which is resp. will be published in two parts in ZNW 101 (2010), 1–32 and forthcoming 174–203 (with together eight plates),<sup>127</sup> gives further details.<sup>128</sup>—The latest Munich plans of the Bethsaida excavations can be seen in the Internet in a German and English version as stone-by-stone plans and as schematic plans.<sup>129</sup>

<sup>125</sup> Both coins were found in Area A West, the one of Philip in Locus 2082. The coin of Herod Antipas was discovered together with two other coins of the emperor Claudius (41–54 CE) in Locus 2151 in a mini-hoard.

<sup>126</sup> The volume contains among other contributions a long article on the city gate (pp. 1–122) by R. Arav (p. 3 dating Stratum 6 from “ca. 950–ca. 850 BCE” and Stratum 5 from “ca. 850–732 BCE”), an older article on glass by Andrea Rottloff (204–251; see above n. 100 [ch. 5.1.1 corresponds to pp. 215–216]), a “Bethsaida Numismatic Survey: Seasons of 1997 through 2000” by Arie Kindler (252–266) and an article on el-Araj by John F. Shroder et al. with the title “El Araj as Bethsaida: Spatial and Temporal Improbabilities” (293–309). See also R. Arav, “Bethsaida (et-Tell),” NEAHL 5:1611–1616.

<sup>127</sup> Including the Munich schematic plans of 2008 (p. 4) and 2009 (p. 176).

<sup>128</sup> E.g. referring to the problem of exact square data (174 n. 1), giving lists of 19 Herodian oil lamps and 16 limestone vessels (figs. 2 and 3; cf. above 2998 and 2995–2996), discussing the proposed Hellenistic–Early Roman temple (23–28; above 2988–2994) and the incised cruciform motive (196–198; above 2977–2978) and also naming some further scholars who doubt the identification of et-Tell with Bethsaida (188 n. 58; cf. above 3000 nn. 109 and 110). The English and the German article of the author complement one another.

<sup>129</sup> <<http://www.nt.evtheol.uni-muenchen.de/personen/kuhn/plaene>>; cited 21 May 2010.

PLATES

Fig. 1. Aerial photograph of et-Tell (Bethsaida) in the summer of 2003, looking to the east (courtesy Bethsaida Excavations Project; photo by Paul Bauman, Canada, for the project)

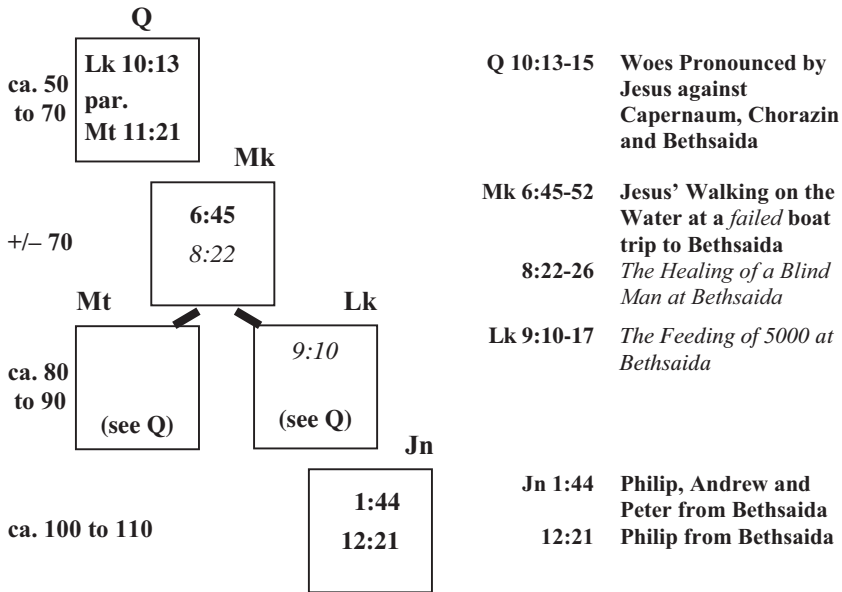

Fig. 3. Bethsaida in the canonical gospels (bold = authentic or older tradition; in italics = gospel redaction)

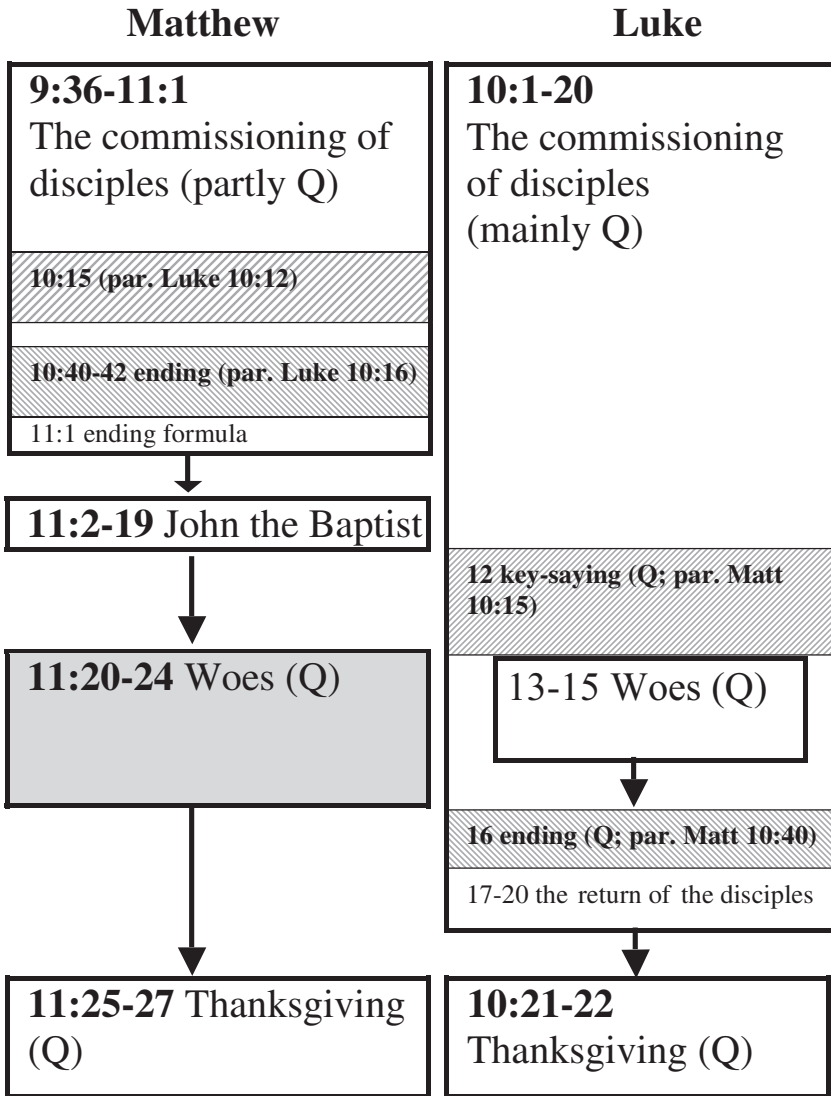

Fig. 4. The Woe-Saying in the context of the Synoptic Sayings Gospel (Q) and Matthew/Luke

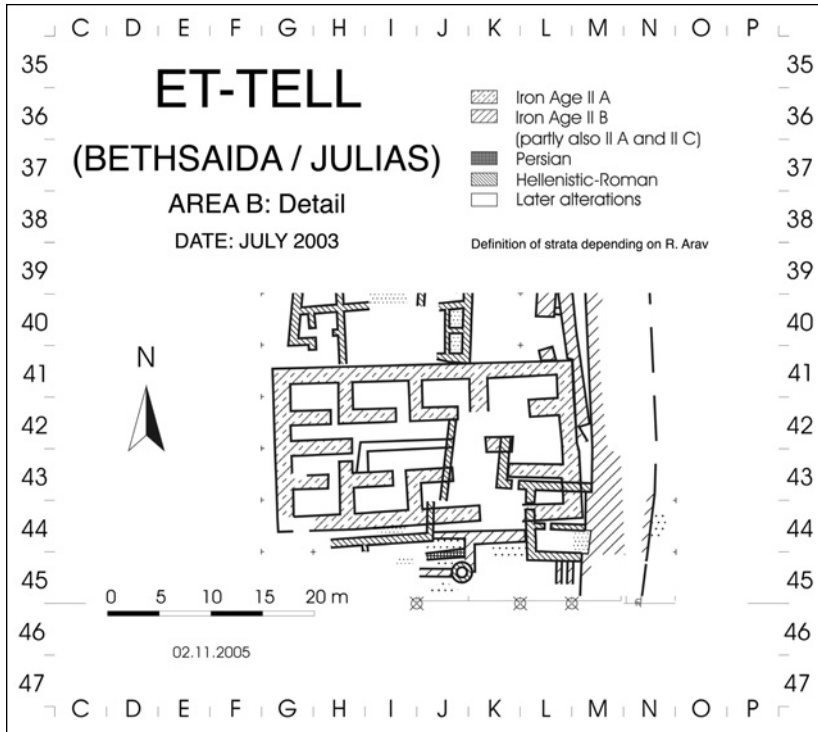

Fig. 5. Site plan, detail of Area B, Roman building at bottom right (L-M/43-45) (© H.-W. Kuhn)

Fig. 6 and 7. Left: Munich Tanagra terracotta (courtesy “Staatliche Antikensammlungen und Glyptothek München”); right: “Lady of Bethsaida” (photo by H.-W. Kuhn)

Fig. 8 and 9. Lintel from et-Tell (Bethsaida) (photos by H.-W. Kuhn)

Fig. 10. Sanctuary in Mušannaf (Nela): architrave, meander with rosette, from: Klaus S. Freyberger, Die frühkaiserzeitlichen Heiligtümer der Karawanenstationen im hellenisierten Osten (Damaszener Forschungen 6; Mainz: Philipp von Zabern, 1998), pl. 42a (detail from photo Peter Grunwald, Berlin, with permission of Klaus Stefan Freyberger, Rom)

Fig. 11. The four coins of Philip and the one coin of Herod Antipas found at et-Tell (Bethsaida) until 2008 (photos by H.-W. Kuhn)

Ruler	Date of Find	Place of Discovery	Metal	Main Picture Preserved obv.	rev.	Date	Mint	Kindler, Bethsaida 2
Philip	1988	Area B, I 38, Locus 301	AE	Tiberius <sup>a</sup>	temple	not before 14 C.E.	Paneas	No. 110 (photo = No. 108!)
Philip	1990	Area A, G 51, Locus 550	AE	Tiberius	temple	ΛΓ = 29/30 C.E.	Paneas	No. 109 (incorrectly assigned to Area B)
Philip	1994	Area A, I 46, Locus 784	AE	Augustus + Livia (Tiberius?)	temple	30/31 C.E. (or from 14 on?) <sup>b</sup>	Paneas	No. 26 (= Augustus)
Philip	2000	Area A, O 56, Locus 433	AE	Augustus	temple	I- = 12/13 C.E.		— <sup>c</sup>
Herod Antipas	1995	Area A, I 48, Locus 858	AE	palm branch	“ΤΙΒΕ/ΡΙΑΣ” in wreath	[ΛΓ] 28/29 C.E.	Tiberias	No. 25 (“33”)

Fig. 12. List of the four coins of Philip and the one coin of Herod Antipas found at et-Tell (Bethsaida) until 2008 (see also figure 11 and Postscript)

<sup>a</sup> Cf. Heinz-Wolfgang Kuhn, in Kuhn and Rami Arav, “The Bethsaida Excavations: Historical and Archaeological Approaches,” in The Future of Early Christianity (ed. B. A. Pearson; Minneapolis, MN: Fortress, 1991), 77–91 + 91–106: 90 n. 61.

<sup>b</sup> See Fred Strickert, “The First Woman to be Portrayed on a Jewish Coin: Julia Sebaste,” JSJ 33 (2002): 65–91: 67–68 thinks of this type as dating from 30/31 C.E. (= one of a complete set of four coins in four denominations with Augustus + Livia [the biggest coin], Tiberius, Livia/Julia and Philip [the smallest]); also Andrew Burnett et al., From the Death of Caesar to the Death of Vitellius (44 BC–AD 69) (vol. 1.1 of A. Burnett et al., Roman Provincial Coinage; London: British Museum Press, 1992), no. 4951. Differently Ya’akov Meshorer, A Treasury of Jewish Coins: From the Persian Period to Bar Kokhba (Jerusalem: Yad Ben-Zvi Press, 2001), 87, 229 (no. 100) dates this type of coin to 14 C.E.: “should thus be dated to 14 C.E., the first year of Tiberius’ reign” (p. 87); but on p. 229 “after 14 C.E.”; more cautiously Ya’akov Meshorer, Herod the Great through Bar Cochba (vol. 2 of Y. Meshorer, Ancient Jewish Coinage; New York: Amphora Books, 1982), 44: from 14 C.E. on. No coin is known for the year 14.

<sup>c</sup> According to Arie Kandler on his card 14/19 of 2000 for the Bethsaida Excavations Project falsely referred to as “Head of Tiberius”.

a.*b.*c.

Fig. 13. Stone vessel fragments found at et-Tell (Bethsaida): a. hand-made, Area A, Square H 56, found in 2000; b. lathe-turned, Area A, Square N 55, found in 1998; c. lathe-turned, Area A, Square H 56, found in 2000 (photos by H.-W. Kuhn)

a.

b.

Fig. 14. Galilean Grooved Lip Cooking Pots: a. from et-Tell (Bethsaida), Area A. Drawing (Locus 712) and photo (Locus 720) from Toni Tessaro, "Hellenistic and Roman Ceramic Cooking Ware from Bethsaida," in Bethsaida: A City by the North Shore of the Sea of Galilee (ed. Rami Arav and Richard A. Freund; Bethsaida Excavations Project 1; Kirksville, MO: Thomas Jefferson University Press, 1995), 130 fig. 2; b. from Tel Anafa. Drawing from Andrea Berlin, "The Plain Wares," in Tel Anafa 2.1: The Hellenistic and Roman Pottery, ed. S. C. Herbert, Journal of Roman Archaeology Supplementary Series 10 (Ann Arbor, MI: Kelsey Museum, 1997), pl. 25, PW 211 (courtesy Andrea M. Berlin and reproduced by permission of the Journal of Roman Archaeology)

a.

b.

Fig. 15. Galilean Plain Rim Casserole: a. from et-Tell (Bethsaida), Area C, Square I 30 (storage cellar), found in 1994 (photo by H.-W. Kuhn); b. from Tel Anafa. Drawing from Andrea Berlin, "The Plain Wares," in Tel Anafa 2.1: The Hellenistic and Roman Pottery, ed. S. C. Herbert, Journal of Roman Archaeology Supplementary Series 10 (Ann Arbor, MI: Kelsey Museum, 1997), pl. 31, PW 266 (courtesy Andrea M. Berlin and reproduced by permission of the Journal of Roman Archaeology)

a.

b.

Fig. 16. Herodian Oil Lamps: Two nozzle fragments found at et-Tell (Bethsaida): a. from Area B, Square L 44, in 1994; b. from Area A, Square O 53, in 2001 (photos by H.-W. Kuhn)

a.

b.

Fig. 17. Fibulae of the "Aucissa" type: a. from et-Tell (Bethsaida), Area A, Square M 54, found in 1997 (photo by H.-W. Kuhn); b. from Augst (Switzerland). Drawing from Emilie Riha, Die römischen Fibeln aus Augst und Kaiseraugst (Forschungen in Augst 3; Augst: Amt für Museen und Archäologie des Kantons Basel-Landschaft, 1979), pl. 25, 668 (reproduced by permission of Alex R. Furger, director of Augusta Raurica, Augst, Switzerland)

Fig. 18. The geographical situation of et-Tell (Bethsaida). Left: Present-day situation since probably 363 CE (shoreline south of el-Araj and el-Mesadiyeh is varying); right: et-Tell in the 1st century CE, can be reached by boat; el-Araj and el-Mesadiyeh still under water. Based on J. F. Shroder et al., "Catastrophic Geomorphic Processes and Bethsaida Archaeology, Israel," in Bethsaida: A City by the North Shore of the Sea of Galilee (ed. Rami Arav and Richard A. Freund; Bethsaida Excavations Project 2; Kirksville, MO: Truman State University Press, 1999), 169, fig. 21 and 170, fig. 22

FLAWED HEROES AND STORIES JESUS TOLD: THE ONE ABOUT A MAN WANTING TO KILL

CHARLES W. HEDRICK

The reign of the Father is like a man wanting to kill a nobleman.
He drew the sword in his house
And pierced the wall, so as to know that his hand would be inflexible.
Then he slew the nobleman.

1. Introduction

A striking feature of Jesus' stories is the number of flawed characters he created in narrative.<sup>1</sup> Seldom<sup>2</sup> are these flawed characters criticized by the narrator within the story. Criticisms, when found, are provided by the evangelists,<sup>3</sup> or the evangelists simply overlook the questionable behavior of protagonists<sup>4</sup> and focus on aspects of the story that allow

---

<sup>1</sup> For example, using the traditional titles for the parables: the Treasure (Matt 13:44 [on Crossan's reading]; Gos. Thom. 109), the Lost Sheep (Luke 15:4-6), the Unmerciful Servant (Matt 18:23-34), the Vineyard Laborers (Matt 20:1-15), the Rich Fool (Luke 12:16b-20; Gos. Thom. 63:1), the Fig Tree in a Vineyard (Luke 13:6b-9), the Prodigal Son (Luke 15:11b-32), the Unjust Steward (Luke 16:1-7), the Unjust Judge (Luke 18:2-5), the Pharisee and Toll Collector (Luke 18:10-13), the Woman and the Jar (Gos. Thom. 97), the Assassin (Gos. Thom. 98), and the Two Sons (Matt 21:28a-30). For Matt 13:44 see John Dominic Crossan, Finding is the First Act; Trove Folktales and Jesus' Treasure Parable (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1979), 93.

<sup>2</sup> In very few instances does the narrative voice of the stories comment positively or negatively on the morality or behavior of characters in the narrative. For the few instances this occurs see: Gos. Thom. 76 (shrewd); Gos. Thom. 8:1 (wise), Gos. Thom. 65 (if one restores "good" and not "usurer"); Matt 22:7 (murderers); Luke 10:33 (compassionate); Matt 25:1-12 (foolish and wise); Luke 12:20 (fool); Luke 15:13 (loose living), 15:17 (came to himself); Luke 18:2 (neither feared God nor regarded man). This list excludes statements made by characters in the story, such as Matt 25:14-28 (21, 23, 24, 26), since they may or may not represent the narrator's own views.

<sup>3</sup> For example, the Unmerciful Servant, Matt 18:35; the Rich Fool, Luke 12:15, 21; the Unjust Judge, Luke 18:6; the Pharisee and Toll Collector, Luke 18:9; the Unjust Steward, Luke 16:8.

<sup>4</sup> For example, the basic unfairness of paying workers the same amount of money for unequal amounts of work performed (Matt 20:1-15), or a father's uneven treatment of his two sons (Luke 15:11-32). And, in particular, see the Unjust Steward (Luke 16:1-7), where the evangelist recognizes that the steward is basically dishonest them to express their own religious and spiritual values, which are not literally found in the story. The stories of Jesus abound with murder, violence, conflict, irresponsibility, and deceit, which the evangelists usually pass over in silence.<sup>5</sup>

The most notable stories featuring violence, physical assault, and murder—in one case multiple murders—are: the Tenants (Matt 21:33b–39 = Mark 12:1b–8 = Luke 20:9b–15 = Gos. Thom. 65),<sup>6</sup> the Samaritan (Luke 10:30b–35), and the (so-called) “Assassin” (Gos. Thom. 98). The last of this group, the Assassin, has seldom been treated seriously as a story originating with Jesus of Nazareth, generally because of its assumed “gnostic character,” although some do think the story originated with Jesus.<sup>7</sup> Nevertheless, in the judgment of many “the gnostic character of the gospel seems fairly well established,”<sup>8</sup> and hence its new parables must also be “gnostic.” Others appear less certain that the sayings of Thomas are overtly gnostic, but are not really sure what to do with this particular story.<sup>9</sup> Many sayings in Thomas not found in the canonical gospels are thought to have originated with Jesus<sup>10</sup>

---

(Luke 16:8), but makes a “silk purse out of a sow’s ear” anyway (Luke 16:8–12). In the Unjust Judge, Luke simply ignores the protagonist and focuses on a minor character, the widow (Luke 18:6–8).

<sup>5</sup> For example, the Planted Weeds (Matt 13:24b–30; Gos. Thom. 57); the Treasure (Matt 13:44); the Lost Sheep (Luke 15:4–6); the Unmerciful Servant (Luke 18:23–34); the Tenants (Matt 21:33–39, Mark 12:1–8, Gos. Thom. 65); the Feast (Matt 22:2–13); the Good Samaritan (Luke 10:30b–35); the Unjust Steward (Luke 16:1–7); the Assassin (Gos. Thom. 98); the Persistent Friend (Luke 11:5b–7).

<sup>6</sup> The multiple murders are in Matthew and Mark. In Luke and Thomas there is only a single murder. The excesses of Mark’s story led C. H. Dodd to reconstruct a more realistic version of the story in response to the argument that the version in Mark was actually “an allegory constructed by the early church.” In Dodd’s reconstruction only one murder occurs—as it does in Thomas. Dodd recognized the earlier version of the story behind Mark’s allegorized version almost twenty-five years before Thomas was published. In the main, Dodd’s reconstruction is almost identical to the version in Thomas (saying 65). See Dodd, The Parables of the Kingdom (New York: Scribner’s, 1936 [originally 1935]), 124–125.

<sup>7</sup> For example see William D. Stroker, “Extracanonical Parables and the Historical Jesus,” in The Historical Jesus and the Rejected Gospels, ed. Charles W. Hedrick, Semeia 44 (Atlanta, GA: Scholars Press, 1988), 101–102.

<sup>8</sup> See, for example, the recent study of all the parables by Arland J. Hultgren, The Parables of Jesus: A Commentary (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2000), 440; see 444–445 for his treatment of the Assassin. The Assassin was not treated in Brandon Scott’s major work on the parables: Hear Then the Parable: A Commentary on the Parables of Jesus (Minneapolis: Fortress, 1989).

<sup>9</sup> Bernard Brandon Scott, Re-Imagine the World: An Introduction to the Parables of Jesus (Santa Rosa, CA: Polebridge Press, 2001), 43, 123.

<sup>10</sup> For the argument that Thomas is independent of the synoptic gospels see Charles W. Hedrick, Parables as Poetic Fictions: The Creative Voice of Jesus (Peabody, MA:

and, in particular, certain parables Thomas shares with the canonical writers in many instances are found to have been less influenced by early Christian allegorical expansion than the canonical versions.<sup>11</sup> Scholars have paid little attention to the parables of the “Assassin” and the Woman and the Jar (Gos. Thom. 97).<sup>12</sup>

Three issues are raised for the historian of Christian origins who sets out to analyze the Assassin as a story originating with Jesus: the general issue of the value of non-canonical Jesus traditions for reconstructing Christian origins; the specific issue of Thomas as a source for reconstructing the personal history of Jesus of Nazareth; and finally the issue of its origin: how to locate the story of the Assassin in relationship to Jesus of Nazareth, if at all. All three issues are inevitably addressed by scholars who study the Jesus tradition, even if only subconsciously.

2. The Value of Non-canonical Jesus Traditions

Do non-canonical Jesus traditions have any value as historical sources for Jesus of Nazareth?<sup>13</sup> The question may not be ignored. Non-canon-

---

Hendrickson, 1994), 238–243; and more recently idem, “An Anecdotal Argument for the Independence of the Gospel of Thomas from the Synoptic Gospels,” in For the Children, Perfect Instruction: Studies in Honor of Hans-Martin Schenke on the Occasion of the Berliner Arbeitskreis für koptisch-gnostische Schriften’s Thirtieth Year, ed. Hans-Gebhar Bethge et al. (Leiden: Brill, 2002), 119–124.

<sup>11</sup> The classic instance is Dodd’s argument that the parable of the Tenants in Mark 12:1b–11 (cf. Matt 21:33b–43 = Luke 20:9b–18) was a Christian allegory adapted from an earlier non-allegorical version of a parable originating with Jesus; see n. 6 above.

<sup>12</sup> They play no role in John Dominic Crossan’s reconstruction of the historical Jesus, for example: The Historical Jesus: The Life of a Mediterranean Jewish Peasant (San Francisco: Harper, 1991). See also Richard Valantasis, The Gospel of Thomas (London: Routledge, 1997), 177–180; Stevan Davies, The Gospel of Thomas: Annotated and Explained (Woodstock, VT: Skylight Paths, 2002), 118–121; Robert W. Funk, Roy W. Hoover, and the Jesus Seminar, The Five Gospels: The Search for the Authentic Words of Jesus (New York: Macmillan, 1993), 523–525. The Woman and the Jar has recently been extensively treated as a parable of Jesus by Brandon Scott; see Scott, Re-Imagine the World, 41–46.

<sup>13</sup> Extensive written material about Jesus of Nazareth exists and much of it dates from the first and second centuries CE: See Robert J. Miller, ed., The Complete Gospels: Annotated Scholars Version (rev. and expanded; Santa Rosa, CA: Polebridge Press, 1992). For the bigger picture see: Wilhelm Schneemelcher and R. McL. Wilson, eds., New Testament Apocrypha: Gospels and Related Writings (Louisville, KY: Westminster/John Knox, 1991). For the large number of Jesus sayings not in the canonical New Testament see William D. Stroker, Extracanonical Sayings of Jesus, ed. Bernard Brandon Scott, Resources for Biblical Study 18 (Atlanta, GA: Scholars Press). And for the large number of early Christian gospels published in the early period see Charles W. Hedrick, “The 34 Gospels,” BR 18.3 (June 2002): 20–31, 46–47.

ical material has always raised the following issue for historians: how well does such information fit with material in the canonical tradition whose general historical reliability has already been favorably vetted by scholars? In principle, every ancient Christian text may tell the historian something about Christianity contemporary with the date of the document and/or possibly about aspects of Christianity even earlier than the date of the document, since late texts may contain early traditions. Therefore, each ancient text (including the canonical gospels) must be analyzed historically and its material evaluated. Historians who study the personal history of Jesus of Nazareth from the perspective of a modern secular historical method<sup>14</sup> are forced to use sources dated to the latter half of the first century (and later) to describe the life and times of a man who lived in the early first century. Thus historians judge these later sources (principally the canonical gospels and certain other non-canonical materials) to contain reliable historical information forty to one hundred years earlier than the text in which it appears.<sup>15</sup> That later texts can contain earlier traditions, however, is true in principle of every ancient text. Each newly discovered document must also be vetted for reliable/unreliable information just as the canonical gospels themselves have been vetted for the past 250 years.<sup>16</sup> Ignoring the non-canonical texts betrays a canonical bias, for the non-canonical texts can at the very least aid the historian in critiquing the canonical tradition.<sup>17</sup> Even very late texts may help the historian evaluate the earlier tradition.<sup>18</sup>

---

<sup>14</sup> Modern historians approach texts in a way similar to Thucydides, the author of the History of the Peloponnesian War, fifth-century BCE Greece; see Rex Warner, Thucydides: History of the Peloponnesian War, rev. ed. (London: Penguin, 1972). In Thucydides' history the gods are not shown as manipulating affairs to secure their desired ends.

<sup>15</sup> These texts are thought to have been composed in the latter half of the first century and later. The earliest complete extant manuscripts of the canonical gospels, however, date from the fourth century.

<sup>16</sup> See the report of the Jesus Seminar on the canonical gospels and the Gospel of Thomas: Funk, Hoover, and the Jesus Seminar, The Five Gospels. For the most recently discovered gospel text see Charles W. Hedrick and Paul A. Mirecki, The Gospel of the Savior: A New Ancient Gospel (Santa Rosa, CA: Polebridge, 1999).

<sup>17</sup> See Hedrick and Mirecki, Gospel of the Savior, 22–23; and Hedrick, “34 Gospels,” 46–47.

<sup>18</sup> See how the late versions of the Fig Tree in a Vineyard (Luke 13:6–9) found in Pistis Sophia (third century) and the Apocalypse of Peter (second century) can be used to inform a discussion of the canonical texts: Charles W. Hedrick, “An Unfinished Story about a Fig Tree in a Vineyard (Luke 13:6–9),” PRS 26.2 (Summer 1999): 169–192.

Even the canonical tradition has its problems, and provides conflicting information. Consider such a simple thing as the last thing Jesus said as he was dying. The texts disagree. Mark and Matthew report his last statement as “My God, My God, why have you forsaken me?” (Mark 15:34 = Matt 27:46). Luke has Jesus say: “Father into your hands I commit my spirit” (Luke 23:46); in John, Jesus says: “It is finished” (John 19:30). In this particular situation, it is simply impossible to know what Jesus said before he died. Mark’s report is the earliest in terms of time, while the reports in Luke and John are easier understood as theologically motivated revisions. In spite of attempts to find controls on the oral transmission of the Jesus tradition so as to ensure the reliability of the tradition in the period from Jesus to the writing of the gospels,<sup>19</sup> traditions passed on orally are subject to significant modifications simply in performing them and/or interpreting them in their transmission.<sup>20</sup> One only needs to read the canonical gospels comparatively to recognize the diverse ways the tradition was transmitted. For example, in several instances, the earliest gospel (Mark) and the latest gospel (John) have preserved the same tradition, but they preserve it in significantly different forms.<sup>21</sup> The simplest way to explain these (significantly different) parallels between John and Mark is that each drew from a common oral source, but performed or interpreted the tradition in ways suitable for their understanding of the story of Jesus.

To judge from the written gospels, Mark’s editors, Matthew and Luke, did not hesitate to “adapt” Mark to suit their own interests.<sup>22</sup> They used some material from Mark but omitted other materials. For example, Matthew significantly expanded (Matt 14:22–33) the Markan story (Mark 6:45–52) of Jesus walking on the water, while Luke omitted it altogether. Both Matthew and Luke omit the healing of the blind man of Bethsaida (Mark 8:22–26). They both use Mark’s story of the healing of the boy possessed by a spirit (Mark 9:14–29), but they

---

<sup>19</sup> For example, see Birger Gerhardsson, “The Secret of the Transmission of the Unwritten Jesus Tradition,” NTS 51 (January 2005): 1–18.

<sup>20</sup> See John Dominic Crossan, In Fragments: The Aphorisms of Jesus (San Francisco: Harper & Row, 1983), 40–66.

<sup>21</sup> For example: the healing of the lame man (Mark 2:1–12 = John 5:2–18); the feeding of the 5,000 (Mark 6:30–34 = John 6:1–15); Jesus walking on the water (Mark 6:45–52 = John 6:16–21).

<sup>22</sup> This point is almost too well known to require justification; but see Charles W. Hedrick, When History and Faith Collide: Studying Jesus (Peabody, MA: Hendrickson, 1999), 48–94. significantly abbreviate Mark's narrative, and in so doing each changes the character of the story in different ways (Matt 17:14–21 = Luke 9:37–43a).<sup>23</sup>

In addition to adapting written sources, the evangelists also used oral tradition. Only by assuming they did utilize oral tradition can one satisfactorily explain the different birth narratives and resurrection appearances in Matthew and Luke, and John's distinctive traditions of Jesus' last meal and baptism. John also omits all exorcism stories, and all of Jesus' parables. Yet both narrative types were surely available to John in the undifferentiated oral tradition, even as Matthew had access to Johannine-type material, as Matt 11:25–27 argues.<sup>24</sup> The same opportunity to select and reject material and flexibility in revising it were also available to any writer who had access to the oral tradition. Hence the historian of Christian origins can ill afford to ignore any early Christian text, even if it contains a portrayal of Jesus differing significantly from the views of second-century orthodoxy. Orthodoxy's view of Jesus is a fragile harmonizing of rather diverse canonical gospels.<sup>25</sup> If the canonical gospels, in spite of their diversity, are found to have traditions passing the rigorous scrutiny of the historian, then any early Christian text, at least potentially, may contain reliable information about Jesus of Nazareth.

3. The Gospel of Thomas: An Independent Source of Jesus Traditions?

With the exception of the Secret Gospel of Mark,<sup>26</sup> scholars have never been more divided over the value of a particular non-canonical gospel

---

<sup>23</sup> I have explained the phenomena in the texts from the perspective of the priority of Mark, but the "adaptation" of one text to another works no matter what explanation is used to explain their literary relationship.

<sup>24</sup> Matthew hardly used John's Gospel as a source and the most cogent way to explain this bit of "Johannine tradition" in Matthew is by its being available to Matthew in the oral tradition.

<sup>25</sup> On this point see Hedrick, When History and Faith Collide, 30–47.

<sup>26</sup> For the literature and the issues see Charles W. Hedrick, "The Secret Gospel of Mark: Stalemate in the Academy"; Guy G. Stroumsa, "Comments on Charles Hedrick's Article: A Testimony"; Bart D. Ehrman, "Response to Charles Hedrick's Stalemate," J ECS 11.2 (Summer 2003): 133–163. Most recently, Scott G. Brown has provided the guild with the first thorough sifting of scholarship on the Secret Gospel since Morton Smith's own study in 1973: Mark's Other Gospel: Rethinking Morton Smith's Controversial Discovery, Studies in Christianity and Judaism 15 (Waterloo, Canada: Wilfrid Laurier University, 2005).

text than they are over the Gospel of Thomas. At least five positions about the relationship of Thomas to the synoptic gospels have emerged in the discussion. Two of these (Thomas is dependent on the canonical gospels; or Thomas is independent of the canonical gospels) reflect general positions in the guild; i.e., most scholars would opt for one or the other position. A third position (Thomas is irrelevant for a study of Jesus) reflects the view of some who work with the literature from a particular religious perspective.

The following two explanations for the relationship of Thomas to the synoptic gospels are not widely held. One scholar argues that Luke's gospel is dependent on sayings formed in Thomas Christianity, a position implying that Luke and Thomas have drawn from the same oral sources. Thus Luke has been influenced by the same religious attitudes that influenced Thomas, and therefore the relationship is not one of literary dependence but one of a shared tradition. The last position is my own: because Thomas contains material that did not come from the canonical gospels, each saying Thomas shares with the canonical gospels is potentially independent of the canonical gospels, until shown to be dependent.<sup>27</sup> Thus the battle over dependency/independency must be waged over each individual saying in Thomas.<sup>28</sup>

Here is a summary of the logic bringing me to this position.<sup>29</sup> In my judgment it is the only responsible position to take regarding Thomas, particularly in the light of the polarization that currently exists over Thomas. In short, each saying must be vetted as to its potential originality with Jesus of Nazareth. Nevertheless, even if one saying in Thomas (or a dozen or more) is found to derive from the canonical gospels, it is not inevitable that all sayings in Thomas came from the canonical gospels, since Thomas most probably represents a collection of collections. The three Greek fragments of Thomas and the complete Coptic version represent different recensions of Thomas. In addition, the presence of sayings in Thomas, clearly not derived from the canonical gospels, argues that Thomas used multiple sources, including oral tradition, since Thomas had access to the same oral materials as the canonical gospels.<sup>30</sup> Indeed, Thomas' reliance on the oral tradition is conclusively shown by its use of Gos. Thom. saying 82: "Whoever is near me is near to the fire and whoever is far from me is far from the kingdom," a saying preserved in two independent versions in four independent ancient sources.<sup>31</sup> Although it is not a part of the canonical tradition about Jesus of Nazareth, saying 82 is likely a saying of the historical man Jesus of Nazareth.<sup>32</sup>

<sup>27</sup> See Hedrick, "An Anecdotal Argument," 113–14.

<sup>28</sup> See Jean-Daniel Kaestli, "L'utilisation de l'Évangile de Thomas dans la recherche actuelle sur les paroles de Jésus," in Jésus de Nazareth: Nouvelles approches d'une énigme, ed. Daniel Marguerat et al. (Geneva: Labor et Fides, 1998), 389. For a similar view see B. Dehandschutter, "L'Évangile selon Thomas: témoin d'une tradition préluccanienne?" in L'Évangile de Luc: Problèmes littéraires et théologiques: Méorial Lucien Cerfaux, ed. Frans Neiryck, BETL 32 (Leuven: Duculot, 1973), 289. I am grateful to John Kloppenborg for calling these references to my attention. Kloppenborg also shares the view that the relationship between Thomas and the synoptic gospels must be argued for each individual saying.

<sup>29</sup> See Charles W. Hedrick, "Thomas and the Synoptics: Aiming at a Consensus," SecCent 7.1 (1989–90): 39–56.

4. "A Man Wants to Kill": Title and Provenance

I use the most neutral term possible to title the narrative; other titles seem pejorative in one way or another. Since the narrative has no ancient title suggesting a strategy for reading it, a neutral modern title protects the ambiguity of the narrative by leaving it open to various reading strategies.<sup>33</sup> The more popular title "The Assassin" suggests that the person in the narrative was associated with some sort of clandestine organization, or that he killed for political reasons or personal gain. In either case the title passes a negative judgment on the man's deed. The same is true of the title "Murderer," a title implying that his deed was unlawful, premeditated, and hence immoral.<sup>34</sup> After analyzing the story, readers may come to view the narrative in that way, but since the narrative might be read in other ways, the issue should not be resolved by a modern title. In any case, readers should be allowed to come to their own conclusions about the actions of the protagonist in the narrative.

<sup>30</sup> See Hedrick, "An Anecdotal Argument," 113–119 (on the issue of the date of Thomas see 114–116), and idem, Parables as Poetic Fictions: The Creative Voice of Jesus (Peabody, MA: Hendrickson, 1994), 236–251.

<sup>31</sup> Hedrick, "An Anecdotal Argument," 119–124.

<sup>32</sup> See for example Bruce Chilton, "The Gospel According to Thomas as a Source for Jesus Teaching," in Gospel Perspectives: The Jesus Traditions outside the Gospels, ed. D. Wenham, vol. 5 (Sheffield: JSOT Press, 1984), 168.

<sup>33</sup> With the exception of the Ap. Jas 8.6–10, no ancient titles for the parables were preserved. And even Ap. Jas. 8.6–10 lists titles only. Precisely what parable each title was intended to evoke in the mind of a reader is uncertain.

<sup>34</sup> At least to judge by ancient Christian standards: cf. for example 1 John 3:11–15.

The most neutral title was an adaptation of the incipit: “A Man Wants to Kill.”<sup>35</sup>

I am arguing that this story, having a flawed protagonist like other flawed protagonists in Jesus’ stories, is a story Jesus told and the story is accessible to modern readers as a first-century Palestinian narrative through historical and literary analysis. Two objections exist to this narrative as a story Jesus might have told: its excessive violence<sup>36</sup> and its preservation in a single non-canonical text. These objections are not convincing. Other stories with violent features exist in the parables corpus and their originality with Jesus has not been successfully challenged for that reason.<sup>37</sup> Similarly, the fact that the story exists in only one version should not be an issue, since many of the parables long held to originate with Jesus are preserved in only a single version. Published explanations of the story generally assume that the story requires a gnostic reading, probably because it is preserved in the Gospel of Thomas.<sup>38</sup> No doubt the story is capable of being read from a gnostic perspective, just as the evangelists could read Jesus’ Jewish stories from a Christian perspective. Readers would do well to remember that not a single Christian was numbered among the peasants who sat at the feet of Jesus at the first hearing of the parables.<sup>39</sup> The final judgment on the character of the story should depend neither on its literary context in Thomas nor on a particular reader’s response, but rather on

---

<sup>35</sup> See Scott, Hear Then the Parable, vii–ix; note that Scott titles the parables by the incipits for the most part.

<sup>36</sup> At least one saying attributed to Jesus (Mark 3:27) describes a violent home invasion in which a strong man (τὸν ἰσχυρόν) is bound and his home plundered; see Stroker, “Extracanonial Parables,” 101.

<sup>37</sup> See Funk and Hoover, The Five Gospels, 510–511. The Jesus Seminar rejected the parable of the Tenants in the canonical gospels (cf. Mark 12:1–8 par.) because of its allegorical features, but accepted the Thomas version of the parable, which lacked the allegorical features. The violence of the story was not an issue. See also Stroker, “Extracanonial Gospels,” 102.

<sup>38</sup> See, for example, the rationale of Michael Fieger, Das Thomasevangelium: Einleitung, Kommentar, und Systematik, NTAbh NF 22 (Münster: Aschendorff, 1991), 249. If that were true, however, we would be forced to read parables that Thomas shares with the synoptic gospels as gnostic parables (for the list see Hedrick, Poetic Fictions, appendix B, pages 252–253). But because we know that these stories have a prior social life in Palestinian Judaism before they were used in a secondary literary context foreign to their original social context, we are justified in reading them against an earlier Palestinian background rather than on the basis of their literary context in the Christian Graeco-Roman gospels or the Gospel of Thomas.

<sup>39</sup> See Hedrick, Many Things in Parables, 10–14, 101; and idem, “Prolegomena to reading Parables. Luke 13:6–9 as a Test Case,” RevExp 94.2 (1997): 179–197.

the nature of the story itself: i.e., how it works as a story, its realism, and the kind of social context best suited to its realism.

5. Reading Strategies for the Story

In the history of parables' interpretation there have been at least seven distinct strategies for reading Jesus' stories.<sup>40</sup> Each strategy is based on certain theoretical assumptions about both the nature of the stories and Christian origins. Every reader of the parables will, deliberately or subconsciously, make certain assumptions that determine a reading strategy. Here briefly are my assumptions: how Jesus used his parables is unknown and we have no hope of ever recovering that datum; the contexts in which we find the parables in the early Christian gospels are literary contexts, provided by a second or third Christian generation. They do not represent the original social contexts for the stories. Comparative frames and interpretative conclusions (promythia and epimythia) are not inside the narrative world of the story but derive from the evangelists' later social and religious contexts. The figurative character of the stories may not simply be assumed; and every interpretation of a story is a particular reader's response.<sup>41</sup>

Here briefly is my strategy for reading a parable. The classic form of what are called "parables" is basically a story: hence, a parable is "a brief, freely invented, narrative fiction, comprised of beginning, middle, and end, dramatizing a common human experience or some incident from nature."<sup>42</sup> While we do not know how Jesus used his stories, early Christians regarded and treated them as repositories of Christian truths. In order to wrest a religious lesson from essentially secular stories, appropriate for their later situation, early Christians treated them figuratively.<sup>43</sup> I assume that his stories work like any story does. Stories are told for the purpose of engaging an auditor, and it is only inside the

---

<sup>40</sup> See the discussion in Charles W. Hedrick, Many Things in Parables: Jesus and His Modern Critics (Louisville: Westminster John Knox Press, 2004), in particular 55–88.

<sup>41</sup> See ibid., 10–22, 100–104.

<sup>42</sup> Ibid., 9.

<sup>43</sup> See ibid., 1–9, and 36–39. On the secularity of parables, see the comment by Amos N. Wilder, Early Christian Rhetoric: The Language of the Gospel (Peabody, MA: Hendrickson, 1999), 73.

story that discoveries are made. Or in the words of Frank Kermode: “Fictions are for finding things out.”<sup>44</sup>

My strategy is to engage the story as a first-century fiction. If the story does not reflect the social context of first-century Palestine, its origin as a parable of Jesus is thrown into serious doubt. A second issue is the story’s realism—how accurately does the story mimic human life in the first century.<sup>45</sup> The realism of the story acts as a brake on over-creative imaginations, effectively rules out figurative leaps of fancy, and grounds the reader firmly inside the story within the first-century social world of Jesus.<sup>46</sup>

Descriptions of the story must use the language of the story itself. If the idiom changes in the interpretative explanation, then the reader has broken off dialogue with Jesus’ story, and is describing one particular reader’s response to the story.<sup>47</sup> The narrative voice of the stories does not provide resolutions to complications raised in the stories; hence the story is eternally open, soliciting responses from every reader (and originally from every auditor).<sup>48</sup>

6. Analyzing the Story as a First-Century Fiction

6.1. Thomas’s Interpretation

No one has yet proposed a satisfactory explanation for the arrangement of the sayings in the Gospel of Thomas.<sup>49</sup> The immediate literary

---

<sup>44</sup> Frank Kermode, The Sense of an Ending: Studies in the Theory of Fiction (London: Oxford University Press, 1966), 39.

<sup>45</sup> This view is generally accepted in critical New Testament scholarship: see the discussion in Hedrick, Many Things in Parables, 36–44. Craig Blomberg, on the other hand, argues that allegorical features increase the probability that the story originated with Jesus: Craig L. Blomberg, Interpreting the Parables (Downers Grove, IL: Intervarsity, 1990), 21.

<sup>46</sup> For examples of how this method works see Hedrick, Parables as Poetic Fictions, 164–235, and idem, Many Things in Parables, 83–99.

<sup>47</sup> On this point, see ibid., 45–54.

<sup>48</sup> See ibid., 84–85, 95.

<sup>49</sup> See Valantasis, The Gospel of Thomas, 6 for a survey of the literature on this issue, and also Kenneth V. Neller, “Diversity in the Gospel of Thomas: Clues for a New Direction,” SecCent 7.1 (Spring 1989–90): 2–4. Thomas, in short, appears to be a collection of collections that expanded and shrank depending on the proclivities of a particular author/editor/collector. The Greek fragments of Thomas agree neither among themselves nor with the Coptic version from Nag Hammadi: see Harry W. Attridge, “Appendix. The Greek Fragments,” in Bentley Layton, *Nag Hammadi Codices II, 2–7 Together with XIII, 2**, Brit. Lib. Or.4926(1), and P.Oxy. 1, 654, 655. Vol. 1: Gospel context of A Man Wants to Kill seems to be occasioned by a “catch-word” connection with several other sayings that employ the expression “kingdom of the/my Father” (sayings 96–99),<sup>50</sup> but beyond that contextual association readers must rely on Gos. Thom. saying 1 to guide them: “Whoever finds the interpretation of these words will not taste death.” Presumably, a particular understanding of each and every saying must be achieved in order for a reader to qualify for “eternal life.” Since the “authors/collectors” give the reader no further insights, understanding comes intuitively.

6.2. Modern Interpretations

Modern explanations of the story are generally divided between understanding it to conceal some arcane meaning consistent with a gnostic perspective, and/or reading it in the light of the twin stories in Luke 14:28–32 (the Tower Builder and the A King Goes Forth to War)<sup>51</sup> as an admonition to “thorough preparation before action,”<sup>52</sup> or a combination of the two drawing on other passages in New Testament and extra-canonical literature. On the other hand, some do see Gos. Thom. 98, including the two stories in Luke 14:28–32, as a description of the breaking in of God’s reign.

---

According to Thomas, Gospel According to Philip, Hypostasis of the Archons, and Indexes (Leiden: Brill, 1989), 96–102.

<sup>50</sup> Reinhard Nordsieck, Das Thomas-Evangelium: Einleitung, Zur Frage des historischen Jesus, Kommentierung aller 114 Logien, 2nd ed. (Neukirchen-Vluyn: Neukirchener, 2004), 342.

<sup>51</sup> That A Man Wants to Kill is associated in some sense with Luke 14:25–33 is generally accepted by most scholars: Stroker, “Extracanonical Parables,” 102; Joachim Jeremias, The Parables of Jesus, trans. S. H. Hooke, rev. ed. (New York: Scribners, 1963 [German 6th edn]), 196–197; Hultgren, The Parables of Jesus, 444–445; Fieger, Das Thomasevangelium. Einleitung, Kommentar, und Systematik, 248–249; Gérard Garitte and Lucien Cerfaux, “Les paraboles du royaume dans l’Évangile de Thomas,” Mus 70 (1957): 314; R.McL. Wilson, Studies in the Gospel of Thomas (London: A. R. Mowbray, 1960), 97; Funk, Hoover, and the Jesus Seminar, The Five Gospels, 524–525; A. J. B. Higgins, “Non-Gnostic Sayings in the Gospel of Thomas,” NovT 4 (1960): 304–305. Claus-Hunno Hunzinger sees all three parables (Tower Builder, King Goes Forth, and Assassin) as descriptions of the eruption of God’s reign: “Unbekannte Gleichnisse Jesu aus dem Thomas-Evangelium,” in Judentum, Urchristentum, Kirche: Festschrift für Joachim Jeremias, ed. Walther Eltester, BZNW 26 (Berlin: Töpelmann, 1960), 213–217. For a critique of Hunzinger see Higgins, “Non-Gnostic Sayings,” 304–305 and Geraint Vaughan Jones, The Art and Truth of the Parables: A Study in their Literary Form and Modern Interpretation (London: SPCK, 1964), 233–234.

<sup>52</sup> The quote is from Higgins, “Non-Gnostic Sayings,” 304.

Ménard reads the story as a deliberate contrast between an unaware woman who loses the contents of her jar in saying 97 and the alert man in saying 98 (compare sayings 21, 76, 103), who is able to resist the Archon (“the great man”) who is attempting to impede his return through the heavens in the final ascent of the soul.<sup>53</sup> Riley takes the sword in the story as “the (ascetic) will and power of the individual soul, which is tested against the ‘house’ of the body.”<sup>54</sup> Grant reads the story in the light of Luke 14:31: a king evaluates his prospects for success in battle—hence, he concludes, finding the kingdom means counting the cost. “If he is strong enough, he can slay the ‘great man’ (probably the world).”<sup>55</sup>

Cerfaux argues for a christological-soteriological interpretation. The story has two operations: in the first the man puts his sword into the wall and in the second he kills his “powerful adversary.” The first operation that takes place “in his house” is the death of Christ. Christ’s flesh is the curtain (Heb 10:20) and the wall of separation (Col 2:14–15; Eph 2:14–16; Gos. Truth 20:23–33). His cross is the landmark (la limite) apparently successfully marking the separation of his spirit from the flesh, which represents the domain of the evil powers of chaos. Through the victory of the cross the Gnostic accomplishes the second operation: he annihilates the Powers (or the demiurge).<sup>56</sup> Bauer follows the general ideas of Cerfaux but focuses the second act on the perfected Gnostic. The story portrays the perfected Gnostic gaining control of himself/herself (“becoming a king”) by slaying the powers of the flesh in the second operation (killing the powerful man) in the same way that Christ destroyed the power of the demiurge through his death on the cross in the first operation (putting his sword into the wall).<sup>57</sup>

Philippe de Suarez suggests a psychological reading: human beings put the self (le moi) at the center of their lives and aim to dominate others. Little by little they learn that the self must surrender to the

<sup>53</sup> Jacques-É. Ménard, L'Évangile selon Thomas, NHS 5 (Leiden: Brill, 1975), 198.

<sup>54</sup> Gregory J. Riley, Resurrection Reconsidered: Thomas and John in Controversy (Minneapolis: Fortress, 1995), 152. After overcoming the body, the soul can then “overcome the ‘strongman.’” Riley does not identify the strongman.

<sup>55</sup> Robert M. Grant, The Secret Sayings of Jesus: The Gnostic Gospel of Thomas (Garden City, NY: Doubleday, 1960), 182.

<sup>56</sup> Garitte and Cerfaux, “Les paraboles du royaume,” 325–26.

<sup>57</sup> Johannes B. Bauer, “Echte Jesusworte?” in Evangelien aus dem Nilsand, ed. Willem Cornelis van Unnik (Frankfurt am Main: Heinrich Scheffler, 1960), 140–141.

(divine) Self (le Soi), or in terms of the image in the story: the “great man” (the egotistical self) must finally die under the blows of the divine Assassin (God).<sup>58</sup> Kasser explains saying 98 in connection with the story in 97 (the Woman and the Jar), which concerns a lack of foresight. The story (Gos. Thom. 97) warns Gnostics that they risk losing their spirits by accident; and when they arrive at the end of their journey, they perceive their misfortune too late. The good Gnostic, therefore, will be watchful not only to acquire gnosis, but also to preserve it. Saying 98 also has the same theme (lack of foresight), by which Kasser apparently means that in this story (saying 98) foresight is being exercised.<sup>59</sup>

Valantasis finds two ways of reading the story. In the first, he suggests the story offers a bit of proverbial wisdom: if you want to kill a powerful person “practice beforehand” and thereby test your ability before proceeding. In a more esoteric explanation, he interprets the story in the light of Gos. Thom. saying 16 where Jesus claims to have brought violence, enmity, and conflict into the world, and thus sets in motion a struggle against the world: “The seekers, fighting the world and its ways to the end, must test their metal [sic], practice their swings, explore the limits of their ability to do battle, and then proceed to the killing of the world. . . .”<sup>60</sup> Davies reads the story similarly to Valantasis’s first explanation—it has a patently obvious meaning, he says: “one should prepare in advance.” By associating the story with Luke 14:28 and sayings 10, 16a, and 35 in Thomas, Davies concludes that “We may think of Jesus as a man of peace, but he may have thought of himself in much more aggressive ways. . . .”<sup>61</sup> In an unpublished paper, Bruce Malina argues that the story describes an act of revenge in which a weaker party is able to kill someone powerful.<sup>62</sup> Winterhalter takes the

---

<sup>58</sup> Philippe de Suarez, L'Évangile selon Thomas: Traduction, présentation et commentaires (Marsanne: Éditions Métanoïa, 1974), 307. An almost identical reading is offered in Émile Gillibert, Pierre Bourgeois, and Yves Haas, Évangile selon Thomas: Présentation, traduction et commentaires (Marsanne: Collection Métanoïa, 1979), 249; the reading appears to be dependent on de Suarez (see 7). Gillibert was primarily responsible for the commentary (8).

<sup>59</sup> Rodolphe Kasser, L'Évangile selon Thomas: Présentation, commentaire théologique (Neuchâtel, Switzerland: Delachaux & Niestlé, 1961), 109–110.

<sup>60</sup> Valantasis, Gospel of Thomas, 179–180.

<sup>61</sup> Davies, The Gospel of Thomas, 120.

<sup>62</sup> As reported in Stephen J. Patterson, The Gospel of Thomas and Jesus (Sonoma, CA: Polebridge, 1993), 90; Patterson reports that the paper was presented in absentia to the Jesus Seminar on March 2, 1990. Hunzinger (“Unbekannte Gleichnisse Jesu,” 212) considers it a political assassination.

sword to be “the Word”; the man’s hand is his “executive ability”; the wall of the house is the man’s “own consciousness”; the great man is “a symbol of collective error.” Thus, “the Christian warrior is to conquer error . . . in two steps: (1) in her . . . individual psyche and (2) in the collective belief system of the planet.”<sup>63</sup>

Michael Fieger thinks Gos. Thom. 98 is a “genuine gnostic parable.” It issues a call for self-examination and a resolute decision for the kingdom of the Father. One must reject the material “stuff” of the world, which is symbolized by the powerful man. Recognition of one’s own “light particle” comes by freeing oneself from the vexations and passions of the material world. This goal may be realized only by resolute action. In this way a parable about a political murder becomes an example for the Thomas community.<sup>64</sup>

Jeremias associates the story with the Zealots of the first century and describes the murder in the story as a political assassination. The assassin tests himself to see if he has the strength to carry the deed through.<sup>65</sup> Hunzinger thinks Gos. Thom. 98 is an authentic parable of Jesus. Because of the offensive nature of the subject matter of the story, it is incredible to him that any early Christian would have invented and attributed it to Jesus. The story reflects the general situation of the time of Jesus in the violence it reflects (viz. the Zealots; compare Mark 3:27). The story of the Tower Builder and A King Goes Forth (Luke 14:28–32) are also genuine parables of Jesus that should be understood in the context of Jesus’ preaching about the reign of God. These three parables describe God’s act in bringing in his reign. As the protagonist in each parable considers carefully what he is about to do, so God has carefully thought through the ultimate establishment of his reign and there is no doubt that he will bring it to completion.<sup>66</sup> Following Hunzinger, Nordsieck argues that Gos. Thom. 98 is a Jesus parable about the coming of God’s reign. Like the assassin in the story, God’s rule is not realized without careful planning and preparation. Hence followers of Jesus must conscientiously test their strength and capability for the great adventure,

---

<sup>63</sup> Robert Winterhalter, The Fifth Gospel: A Verse-by-Verse New Age Commentary on the Gospel of Thomas (San Francisco: Harper & Row, 1988), 103.

<sup>64</sup> Fieger, Thomasevangelium, 248–249.

<sup>65</sup> Jeremias, Parables of Jesus, 196–197; 74–75, and Nordsieck, Thomas-Evangelium, 343.

<sup>66</sup> Hunzinger, “Unbekannte Gleichnisse Jesu,” 211–217.

the battle with the mighty one (dem Mächtigen), the powers of this world, and with their own individual selves (Ego).<sup>67</sup>

6.3. The Elements of the Narrative: Saying 98

In the history of its interpretation, no one has yet examined the narrative simply as a story, as I do here. This section analyzes the narrative as a brief fiction in the social context of Palestinian antiquity. The narrative is comprised of four periods (a period is a complete sentence).<sup>68</sup>

Period One: A man wants to kill a great man.

Period Two: He drew the sword in his house.

Period Three: He thrust it into the wall, in order to know whether his hand would carry through.

Period Four: Then he slew the powerful (man).<sup>69</sup>

The story proceeds in three movements: situation (period one); complication (periods two and three); resolution (period four).

The reign of the Father is like. Since this phrase is not mentioned inside the narrated story, but is “tagged onto” it as an introductory comparative frame, the phrase is excluded from consideration.<sup>70</sup> Stories constitute separate universes with their own rules and laws, which must be discovered by engagement. Entering the story is like stepping into another dimension apart from the reader’s world and the world of the text in which the story appears. Stories are separated from their literary contexts by thin but generally distinct lines, for the most part. Learning to bring those lines into focus and disregarding everything else best situates a reader for an encounter with Jesus’ poetic vision. If anything comes from Jesus, the story does, and only the story, therefore, is considered in this discussion. The introductory comparative frame actually represents a later interpretation of the story, i.e., how it was understood to work at some point in its transmission.<sup>71</sup>

<sup>67</sup> Nordsieck, Thomas-Evangelium, 342–345.

<sup>68</sup> See Hedrick, Parables as Poetic Fictions, 59–61.

<sup>69</sup> The translation is from A. Guillaumont et al., The Gospel According to Thomas: Coptic Text Established and Translated (Leiden: Brill, 1976), 51. My translation follows in the line-by-line translation below.

<sup>70</sup> Hunzinger recognizes that the introductory formula could be a secondary attachment to the story: “Unbekannte Gleichnisse,” 216.

<sup>71</sup> For the argument that introductory comparative frames, particularly kingdom frames, most likely derive from early Christianity’s frustration with Jesus’ secular

A man wants to kill. Readers know very little about this figure who wants/desires (i.e., has resolved) to kill. We do not even learn until the second sentence that he is male (ΑΥΡΩΛΜ).<sup>72</sup> The sentence is cast in the present tense, but the main verbs of the rest of the narrative are in the perfect. The present tense is not a scribal error (i.e., ΕΥΟΨΩΥ erroneously written for ΕΑΨΟΛΩΥ), but it is written in the present tense by attraction to the opening line “the reign of the Father is like.” Compare saying 97: “the reign of the Father is like a woman who is carrying . . .”<sup>73</sup>

These opening words sound shockingly immoral in the social context of a society formally structured around a religious code prohibiting homicide (Gen 9:5–6; Exod 20:13).<sup>74</sup> He “wants” to kill, meaning he has resolved to do it.<sup>75</sup> But readers are not told if this is a capricious whim, a spur of the moment decision, or if it is a carefully thought out course of action. Obviously, knowing that information would make a difference in how a reader views the protagonist. The narrator also does not tell the hearer/reader<sup>76</sup> the reasons why the man has come to such a shocking decision. Hence, for a curious reader the “situation” is also an unresolved “complication.”

A nobleman. The protagonist in the narrative wants to kill a nobleman, a leading figure in the land, one of the economic elite; the intended victim moves in the highest and most powerful circles.<sup>77</sup> He is scarcely stories, see Charles W. Hedrick, “Parable and Kingdom: A Survey of the Evidence in Mark,” PRS 27.2 (2000): 179–199 (see the conclusion on p. 199).

---

<sup>72</sup> The Coptic word ρΩΗΕ is a default translation for the Greek ἄνθρωπος, which is the generic word for “human being,” in ancient and modern Greek. So also Nordsieck, Thomas-Evangelium, 342, but for a different reason.

<sup>73</sup> See also the opening lines (comparative frames) to sayings 21, 57, 76, 107, 109 and compare sayings 8, 20. The opening lines of Thomas parables without the appended comparative frame use the perfect or imperfect: sayings 9, 63, 64, 65.

<sup>74</sup> These passages are usually understood as a prohibition against unjustifiable homicide, since murderers are to be put to death (Exod 21:12, 14), and in the context of the “Holy War” (Gen 15:3, 1 Sam 15) killing is mandated.

<sup>75</sup> See Walter E. Crum, A Coptic Dictionary (Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1939), 500b.

<sup>76</sup> Readers of the story must never forget they are a secondary “audience”; its first hearers were Palestinian Jews.

<sup>77</sup> The word used to describe the man (ΜΕΓΙΣΤΑΝΟΣ) is generally used in association with kings and leading figures of a nation: 2 Chr 36:18, Isa 34:12, Jer 24:8, Sir 4:10, Dan 5:23, Mark 6:21, Rev 6:15. For other uses see Jer 14:3, Rev 18:23. The translation (RSV) of μεγιστῶσιν in Mark 6:21 as “courtier” is clearly mistaken. Compare the NIV: “leading men.” Nordsieck (Thomas-Evangelium, 342) thinks the word could describe either a physically powerful person (Mächtiger) or a nobleman (Vornehmer). The Coptic ΜΕΓΙΣΤΑΝΟΣ appears to be an inflected Greek form (genitive) of μεγιστῶν, μεγιστῶνος, which the Coptic translator preserved in translating a Greek prototype, the “village bully,” as some have suggested.<sup>78</sup> The slaying of a prominent influential member of society is a bold and risky act, and suggests that the story describes a “political assassination,” but the narrator is silent on the matter.

He drew the sword in his house. The use of the definite article with sword (i.e., the sword) is odd in its specificity. I would have expected ΟΥΧΗΥΕ (a sword)—i.e., any sword to accomplish the deed, or ΤΕΥΧΗΥΕ (his sword) to indicate its relationship to the protagonist. The oddity of the definite article apparently struck Kasser in a similar way and he retroverted into Greek τὴν μάχαιραν αὐτοῦ (<his> sword).<sup>79</sup> The use of the article suggests that the narrator has some specific sword in view and raises the question: where did the sword come from? Was the protagonist wearing the sword at the precise moment the idea about killing struck him—he drew the sword (i.e., the one he was wearing at the time)? Or did he go and fetch the sword for the killing (from somewhere in his house), and then draw it from the scabbard? Thus, a logical gap exists between the first and second sentences, which readers must fill in for themselves.<sup>80</sup> How the gap is filled will affect how readers respond to the narrative. If he is wearing the sword, the act appears spontaneous and capricious. If he must first acquire the sword from some other location in his (own) house,<sup>81</sup> his act appears more deliberate.

The Coptic word CHYƆ translates a variety of Greek words, not all of them appropriate for the action described in the narrative.<sup>82</sup> The reading: ἄνθρωπον μεγιστᾶνος; “a man of nobility.” But compare Kasser’s retroversion into Greek: L’Évangile selon Thomas, 110: μεγιστᾶν.

---

<sup>78</sup> Robert W. Funk, Bernard Brandon Scott, James R. Butts, eds., The Parables of Jesus. Red Letter Edition. A Report of the Jesus Seminar (Sonoma, CA: Polebridge, 1988), 23; Funk and Hoover, The Five Gospels, 525.

<sup>79</sup> Kasser, L’Évangile selon Thomas, 110.

<sup>80</sup> On gaps in narrative see Hedrick, Many Things in Parable, 47–50, and the literature cited there.

<sup>81</sup> The narrator leaves ambiguous where the man is at this moment. Depending on the amount of time one allows for the gap between sentence one and two, “his house” could be the house of the protagonist’s intended victim. In many of the stories about murders and political assassinations in Hebrew Bible the victim is killed in his own house. See for example, 1 Kgs 16:8–12, 2 Kgs 12:19–21, 2 Chr 33:24, 2 Sam 4: 5–7. And if this were the case, the protagonist appears to have rushed into the act completely unprepared for what he is about to do: that is to say, in preparation he does not concern himself with so much as even his ability to succeed until he is in the victim’s own home.

<sup>82</sup> See Crum, A Coptic Dictionary, 379a.

most likely candidate is the μάχαιρα.<sup>83</sup> This weapon is a dagger or small double-edged sword (cf. Heb 4:12; 11:34), which many people carried in a scabbard for protection (cf. the swords carried by the disciples for protection in Mark 14:43–48 par.), but certainly not by everyone (see Jesus' comment that people will need to purchase a sword in the coming time, Luke 22:36–38). Hence this sword or dagger could easily be concealed on one's person, or if one were wearing such a weapon in a scabbard, suspicion of a person's intent would not necessarily be aroused.<sup>84</sup> and pierced the wall. The μάχαιρα, popularly known as an assassin's weapon, is made for thrusting rather than slashing or cutting. Its short two-edged blade and sharp point thrust into an enemy would do more damage than a slash or cut. Hence the protagonist pierces the wall, which must be a sun-dried mud brick wall, or something similar (cf. Matt 6:19–20; Matt 24:43 = Luke 12:39) typical of a peasant's dwelling, rather than stone, customary in the houses of the elite.<sup>85</sup> In small villages of Upper Egypt even today walls of houses are made of sun-dried mud brick, and walls around courtyards are made of mud plastered onto canes. Only such a "soft" wall could have been pierced with a sword; such walls are typical of the lower classes of Palestine in the first century.<sup>86</sup> Hence, a rather large social distance appears to exist between the protagonist, a man evidently of humble status, and the nobleman, who surely would not live in such a poor dwelling; the distance in their social status makes his prospects of actually killing the nobleman seem rather bleak.

---

<sup>83</sup> So Kasser, L'Évangile selon Thomas, 110; Garitte retroverts into Latin with gladium, the short sword used by the Roman soldier: Garitte and Cerfaux, "Les paraboles du royume," 309.

<sup>84</sup> See the discussion in W. Michaelis, "μάχαιρα," in TDNT, ed. Gerhard Kittel and Gerhard Friedrich, trans. Geoffrey W. Bromiley (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1964–76), 4:524–527. Mark J. Fretz, "Weapons and Instruments of Warfare," in ABD, ed. David Noel Freedman et al. (New York: Doubleday, 1992), 6:893–895. J.W. Wevers, "Sword," in IDB, ed. George Arthur Buttrick et al. (New York: Abingdon, 1962), 4:469–470. T.R. Hobbs, "Sword," in Eerdmans Dictionary of the Bible, ed. David Noel Freedman et al. (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2000), 1259–1260.

<sup>85</sup> John McRay, Archaeology and the New Testament (Grand Rapids: Baker, 1991), 76.

<sup>86</sup> John J. Rousseau and Rami Arav, Jesus and His World: An Archaeological and Cultural Dictionary (Minneapolis: Fortress, 1995), 128.

so as to know that his hand would be inflexible (i.e., in carrying out the act).<sup>87</sup> He thrusts the sword into the wall not to test his own resolve, however, but to determine if he has the strength necessary to carry out the killing (i.e., is the strength of his “hand” adequate for the task?).<sup>88</sup> And now the reader knows that the protagonist is not a professional assassin or a professional military man. A professional would surely know whether he was strong enough to kill in such a fashion without having first to test his strength. Only a person unaccustomed to such activity would need to determine whether he could actually kill a person with a sword thrust.

Then he slew the nobleman. The gap between the previous sentence and this one is broad. In the previous sentence the protagonist was in his own home testing his strength to wield the weapon successfully. In this sentence he has already accomplished the deed. In between the two acts lie both time and events that the narrator chooses not to relate. Readers fill the gap as best they can; how they fill it will determine the character of the protagonist (and the nature of the story). Readers are not told exactly when and precisely how the protagonist accomplished the kill. Specific details leading up to the killing are lacking. Did he follow the test of his strength with meticulous and careful planning? Did he stalk the nobleman looking for just the right opportunity enabling him to accomplish his mission and evade capture, or possibly his own death? Was it done by stealth in a night raid on the nobleman’s home? Did he stab him on some busy street during daylight hours and sneak away in the ensuing confusion? But the narrator is silent.

6.4. How Does the Story Work?

The focus of the story falls on periods two and three in which the protagonist tries to reassure himself that he is physically capable of accomplishing the killing. These two periods are bracketed by two gaps in the narrative, which further emphasize the sword thrust into the wall as a major focus of the story.<sup>89</sup> The narrative goes from conception (period one) to successful accomplishment (period four) on the basis <sup>87</sup> The expression is typically used of a speaker’s insistence or persistence (cf. Luke 23:59, Luke 23:5). The protagonist is therefore speaking of his hand’s “persistence” or “resolve”; i.e., that it would have the strength adequate for the task.

---

<sup>88</sup> Compare Jdt 13:7 for a similar concern.

<sup>89</sup> The gaps lie between periods one and two and periods three and four.

of a simple sword thrust into a wall. In other words, the complete absence of expected prudent planning for committing homicide becomes apparent by contrast to this single sword thrust into the wall.

The Tower Builder (Luke 14:28–30) and A King Goes Forth (Luke 14:31–32), on the other hand, are characterized precisely by meticulous planning in the conception stage. The assumption is that a tower builder will carefully estimate the completion of the project against available resources before beginning construction and the king in the war room will vet various battle plans to offset the enemy's superior force before beginning the battle. In Luke's brief narratives readers are not told what the tower builder and the king actually did. They are only told what might happen without careful planning (people will mock the tower builder if he starts and cannot finish, Luke 14:29–30), or what could happen with careful planning (the king averts a military disaster by suing for peace, Luke 14:32). Luke's narratives are cast as conceptions of potential actions and correspond to period one of A Man Wants to Kill. By contrast, A Man Wants to Kill goes from concept to accomplishment with no reasonable planning or forethought.<sup>90</sup> In other words, the story in Thomas is the opposite of the stories in Luke.

Common wisdom insists that in actions whose outcomes are uncertain a prudent person will take certain necessary precautions.<sup>91</sup> "Always look before you leap," says common wisdom, but the protagonist in the Thomas narrative leaps without looking, and is completely successful! And hence the story undermines community wisdom. In Luke's stories one character "sits down and counts the cost" of building; another calls a war counsel to determine strength requirements and battle plans. The Thomas character, on the other hand, is only concerned about one thing: the strength of his hand! Is he physically strong enough or not?

---

<sup>90</sup> Several of the stories about murder and political assassination in the Hebrew Bible feature aspects of reasonable planning in order to ensure that the killer will be able successfully to kill the intended victim. Ehud, for example, conceals his sword when going to kill Gera, the Benjaminite (Judg 3:15–30); Joab pretends to have his sword fall accidentally out of its scabbard to deceive Amasa before he kills him (2 Sam 20:8–10; cf. Josephus, Ant. 7.284); Jael's murder of Sisera was very carefully executed (Judg 4:17–22). In Josephus (Ant. 20.164–165) the killers of the high priest Jonathan concealed their daggers under their garments and pretended to be on their way to worship.

<sup>91</sup> Funk, Scott, and Butts, Parables of Jesus, 63.

The Thomas narrator does not condemn the protagonist either for the taking of human life or for his lack of foresight. On the other hand, the stories in Luke clearly condemn “lack of planning” by the way the story is told—“what man or king would do such a thing?” (Luke 14:28, 31), and community wisdom answers: no one would, since such action lacks common sense. Therefore, the narrative in Thomas describes a man who acts both rashly (without careful forethought) and immorally (the taking of human life without community sanction). And in presenting the story without any criticism of the act or censure of the man, even the narrator is suspect of being without morals and conscience as well,<sup>92</sup> or so a conventional reading of the story in the context of a first-century Palestinian community would suggest. In short, the story cavalierly undermines both religious values and community wisdom.

6.5. Hypothetical Responses of First-Century Jewish Audiences

These hypothetical responses are based on what is generally known about first-century Palestinian Judaism. There are two caveats to be kept in mind, however: (1) the actual social context of first-century Palestine is known by modern scholarship only in the most general way from archaeological artifacts (which the archaeologist’s creative imagination must turn into a living social context) and from very few written records (from which the historian/sociologist reconstructs the social context using texts not originally intended for that purpose); (2) no one ever knows what goes on in the mind of another person.<sup>93</sup> Nevertheless, given what is known about the situation of Jesus’ socio-political world, certain responses do seem almost inevitable.

The narrator betrays nothing as to how the story should be heard, leaving it up to hearers/readers to make of it what they will. Hence, “meaning” depends on what personal baggage hearers/readers bring to the story and the kinds of situations they imagine as contexts for the story. Hearers/readers will, if gracious, confer “meaning” on the story in the nexus between what they bring to the story and the narrative itself.<sup>94</sup> In the final analysis, hearers/readers—not authors/narrators—control the meaning of a narrative unit. At least three kinds of hearers would likely have been present at the first audition of this story, and

---

<sup>92</sup> See Hedrick, Many Things in Parables, 84–85 and 123 n. 12.

<sup>93</sup> See ibid., 94.

<sup>94</sup> Ibid., 45–54.

none of them would have been “Christian” in the sense that the later canonical evangelists were Christian (the evangelists represent the later Graeco-Roman stage of the movement that Jesus began some forty [Mark] to sixty years [John] earlier). Jesus’ first hearers would certainly have been Jews (of Galilee, Judea, or the dispersion); perhaps Samaritans, Romans, Greeks, or others in Palestine on business could also have been among his hearers (cf. Acts 2:7–11). These hearers would have responded to the story in terms of the “fictions” (i.e., mental constructs) by which they understood themselves and made sense of their lives in the world.

On the basis of the literary fictions in terms of which pious Jews and Samaritans understood themselves (both as the people of the same God who shared Torah as sacred Scripture) the story would have been scandalous. It portrays, without qualification or censure, the breaking of one of the most sacred prohibitions of Hebrew and Samaritan Scripture: the apparently unjustifiable taking of human life (Exod 20:13, Deut 5:17, and Gen 9:5–6). The Torah, shared by both groups, recognized a difference between murder and manslaughter. Manslaughter was accidental (Num 35:22–28) and murder was a deliberate act and therefore repudiated and punished (Num 35:16–21). Because the protagonist in the story apparently deliberately decided to commit homicide, he violates Torah, and Jewish and Samaritan piety would have demanded that the act (and the narrator as well) be condemned.

A zealot upon hearing the story could easily have heard it as an authorization to violence in the name of God—perhaps even in terms of “Holy War.” A “zealot,” in brief, was a person characterized by deep piety “rooted in zeal for God and the law.”<sup>95</sup> This hypothetical hearer does not have to be a member of an organized resistance movement, such as those who led armed resistance against the Romans in the period (6–66) before the war with Rome (66–74),<sup>96</sup> but he easily could have been. It is only required that his faith include the following ideas: that Yahweh alone should rule over Israel, and that the Torah should be obeyed.<sup>97</sup> Such a hypothetical hearer could easily be led by hearing the story to associate the nobleman allegorically with the Roman oppressors of Israel and to cast the protagonist as a pious Jew, who acts out of “zeal” to restore the land to Yahweh—heard in this way, the story authorizes “justifiable” violence in the name of God.

---

<sup>95</sup> See the excellent discussion by David Rhoads “Zealots,” in ABD, ed. Freedman, 6:1043–1054.

<sup>96</sup> See Rhodes, “Zealots,” 1046–1047; and Richard A. Horsley with John S. Hanson, Bandits, Prophets, and Messiahs: Popular Movements at the Time of Jesus (San Francisco: Harper, 1986), 190–243. See also the survey article by Morton Smith, “Zealots and Sicarii, Their Origins and Relation,” HTR 64 (1971): 2 (cf. 3, 6, 9) and 18: “From at least Maccabean times many Jews fostered the admiration of ‘zeal,’ and individuals undertook or were thought to be ‘zealots’ on the models of Phineas and Elijah” (Num 25 and 1 Kgs 18:40, 19:10; and add Mattathias, 1 Macc 2:15–28). But these examples are describing the actions of private individuals and the ideal of zeal for God rather than an organized movement.

Early Christians associated many of Jesus’ stories with the reign of God.<sup>98</sup> The idea of Yahweh as a reigning king is deeply rooted in Jewish literature and faith.<sup>99</sup> Hence, Jewish hearers (cf. Luke 23:50–51) could easily have heard the story as a reference to the reign of God—clearly someone heard it that way, since it bears such an introductory comparative frame in Thomas. Heard in such a way, the story describes the ultimate victory of God’s reign through violent means. In short, the story images and epitomizes Matt 11:12 (SV): “Heaven’s imperial rule has been breaking in violently and violent men are attempting to gain it by force.”<sup>100</sup>

I am not arguing that Jesus actually intended the story to be heard in any of these ways, but only that the story is subject to being understood in these ways, and undoubtedly others as well, judging from the history of parables interpretation. Whatever Jesus intended with his stories is lost forever and all we have are the stories.<sup>101</sup>

---

<sup>97</sup> Compare for example the reaction of the priest Mattathias who “burning with zeal for the Torah” killed both the king’s representative who sought to enforce sacrifice and a Jew who stepped forward to make the sacrifice (1 Macc 2:15–28). This homicide was the beginning of the Maccabean revolt. There was at least one zealot attested in the Galilee area: Simon the zealot (Luke 6:15).

<sup>98</sup> Mark may have been responsible for associating the parables of Jesus with the reign of God: see Hedrick, “Parable and Kingdom: A Survey of the Evidence in Mark,” 179–199.

<sup>99</sup> See Norman Perrin, Jesus and the Language of the Kingdom: Symbol and Metaphor in New Testament Interpretation (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1976), 16–32.

<sup>100</sup> In such an understanding of the story, the disciples are cast in the role of “the violent men”; see Nordsieck, Thomas-Evangelium, 344.

<sup>101</sup> See Hedrick, Many Things in Parables, 45–54. Because of its ambiguity and polyvalence every narrative is capable of a variety of reasonable explanations. The story itself limits the range of reasonable readings, however. There can be no final definitive reading of a story of Jesus, because historical circumstances of hearers/readers change, and new readers emerge.

7. Another Reader's Response

I am most struck by the protagonist's naïveté. He literally does no planning at all; thrusting a sword into the wall might have been a good place to begin planning, if he were a "90 lb. weakling." But it is clearly not the place to stop. I imagine that a professional assassin or soldier, upon hearing Jesus' story, would have been amused at what would likely be seen as the actions of a rank amateur. His amusement would last only until the final line of the story, however, for a rank amateur successfully pulls off the killing of an important public figure without prudent planning, which is precisely what a professional would not have done.

I am also struck by the chilling cold-blooded character of the killing, an effect produced by the lack of detail in the story and the absence of a stated motive for the killing. The lack of motive for the killing of the nobleman creates an unresolved complication for readers, since knowing the killer's motive would provide a basis for evaluating the homicide. Without a clear motive the act appears capricious.

For obvious reasons, community wisdom in Judaism cautioned against opposing a powerful figure: "Do not contend with a powerful man, lest you fall into his hands" (Sir 8:1–3 RSV; cf. Sir 4:7). In other words: if you do go against a prominent community figure, you had better be successful, since he has the resources to ruin you.<sup>102</sup> What has driven this protagonist to such a violent irreligious and anti-social act in the face of community wisdom to the contrary? But the narrator is silent. In some ways this is surprising, since the stories of Jesus often (but not always) include an explanation of the protagonist's motivation, or motivation is clear from the story: A farmer sows his field in order to have a crop—that is what farmers do. A man finds a treasure in a field and sells everything to buy the field so as to possess the treasure. A man tears down barns and builds bigger storage facilities to accommodate his bumper crop. A man orders his vintner to cut down a fig tree because it is not bearing fruit. A woman loses a coin and she sweeps her house to find it. A dishonest steward shaves the amounts of bills

---

<sup>102</sup> 1 Enoch would probably offer different advice about opposing the rich and powerful (cf. 1 En. 96.7–8). See John S. Kloppenborg, "Riches, the Rich, and God's Judgment in 1 Enoch 92–105 and the Gospel According to Luke" in George W.E. Nickelsburg in Perspective: An On-Going Dialogue of Learning, ed. Jacob Neusner and Alan J. Avery-Peck, JSJSup (Leiden: Brill, 2003), 2:572–585.

owed to his master so as to obligate people to him when he is dismissed from his job. But motivation for all activity is not always given in Jesus' stories: why exactly does a vineyard owner pay his day laborers in the reverse order of their hiring? Why does a businessman give his steward another opportunity to cheat him? Why is a woman leavening such a large amount of flour? In these stories, as in A Man Wants to Kill, the explanation of motive is an unresolved complication, which frustrates an understanding of the story.<sup>103</sup>

7.1. Exceptions to Prohibitions against Homicide?

In the absence of a stated motive, the story begs the question: is there ever a time when a deliberate homicide could be deemed justifiable even though prohibited legally and morally? What conceivable circumstances would justify the taking of a human life outside the usual socially sanctioned reasons?<sup>104</sup> The answer is: under certain conditions other "justifiable" reasons for killing apparently did exist in ancient Judaism as "exceptions." For example, Jael, the Kenite, murdered the Canaanite Sisera "in cold blood," even though peace existed between their nations. Under the apparent guise of hospitality, she lulled him into relaxing his guard and killed him after he had fallen asleep thinking he was safe (Judg 4:17–22).<sup>105</sup> Even though it was a violation of the prohibitions of Hebrew law, Israelite tradition praised her for the murder (Judg 5:24–31).

Judith, an Israelite, plotted the death of the Assyrian General, Holofernes (Jdt 8:32–36; 9:13–14; 13:16), who was besieging her city. She dressed herself to beguile the Assyrians (Jdt 10:1–8), lied to them (Jdt 10:11–13), eventually got Holofernes drunk (Jdt 12:16–20), and cut off his head while he was in a drunken stupor (Jdt 3:6–10).

---

<sup>103</sup> Motivation is always important for judging the character of a particular act. For example with regard to homicide, Judaism distinguished justifiable, or excusable, homicide, precisely on the basis of motive (Num 35:16–28). Clearly the protagonist in A Man Wants to Kill had a motive (i.e., he wants to kill); something moved him to kill the nobleman, but it is unstated.

<sup>104</sup> In Israel the "socially sanctioned" reasons for homicide were punishment of a murderer, holy war, war, and self-defense. Self defense is found in Exod 22:2 [Hebrew 21:37]; see Dale Patrick, Old Testament Law (Atlanta: John Knox, 1985), 80. Thanks to Victor Matthews for pointing this out to me.

<sup>105</sup> See the discussion in Victor H. Matthews, "Hospitality and Hostility in Judges 4," BTB 21 (1991): 13–21. Matthews argues that this story "contains so many violations of the hospitality code that it can only be concluded that a conscious attempt was made by the writer to justify Sisera's murder by Jael" (15).

Conceiving her deceit and deed to be noble, however, she prayed: “O Lord God of all might, look in this hour upon the work of my hands for the exaltation of Jerusalem” (Jdt 13:4 RSV). And just before she killed Holofernes she prayed: “Give me strength this day, O Lord God of Israel” (Jdt 13:7 RSV). She, like the protagonist in Jesus’ story, was concerned about her physical ability to carry out the killing (and it did take two blows with the sword for her to decapitate Holofernes). Apparently Judith thought her murder of Holofernes had God’s approval (Jdt 13:16–20), and indeed she did receive the praise of her people for the murder (Jdt 15:12–13; 16:6–9).

Moses murdered a man he found mistreating an Israelite slave, one of “his people” (Exod 2:11–14). He is portrayed as knowing it was wrong, since he hoped to conceal his actions (Exod 2:12). While Moses’ motives are not stated, it would appear that the situation he faced evoked in him a willingness to ignore any prohibitions against homicide and kill the Egyptian, an act he knew would require a reckoning (Gen 2:14–15). In the three examples above it appears the killing of non-Israelites under certain circumstances is a tacit exception to the prohibition against homicide.

Abraham (the father of Hebrew faith, Gen 12:1–3) resolved to commit homicide and human sacrifice.<sup>106</sup> He is portrayed (Gen 22) as believing that God required him to sacrifice his son as a test of faith. It appears from the narrative that Abraham fully intended to sacrifice Isaac in order to demonstrate his faith to God (the story does not work otherwise), but at the last moment God’s messenger stopped him (Gen 22:11–12). The later biblical writer extols the incident as an example of Abraham’s devout faith, and Abraham is rewarded for his willingness to break the strict taboos of homicide and human sacrifice (Gen 22:15–18). The point is: though he did not actually violate the code, he is portrayed as fully prepared to do so.

In a modern example Dietrich Bonhoeffer, a German Lutheran minister, was a participant in the conspiracy to assassinate Adolf Hitler.<sup>107</sup> The horrible situation in Germany under the Nazi regime overrode his commitment to pacifism and his aversion to violence, and brought him finally to participate in the murder plot. He reasoned that the guilt accruing to murder would be less than his guilt of inaction in the face of the Nazi horror.<sup>108</sup> After the plot failed he was arrested,<sup>109</sup> and eventually hanged for his participation.<sup>110</sup>

---

<sup>106</sup> Human sacrifice was strictly prohibited by Torah (Lev 18:21; 20:2–3; Deut 12:31; 18:21) and censured by the prophets (Mic 6:7; Jer 7:31; 19:5; 32:33; Ezek 16:20–21; 20:26).

<sup>107</sup> Larry L. Rasmussen, Dietrich Bonhoeffer: Reality and Resistance (Nashville: Abingdon, 1972), 131–148.

If we knew more about the situation, the fictional protagonist in Jesus' story might well take his place among persons in the Jewish and Christian tradition like Jael, Judith, Abraham, Moses, and Bonhoeffer, who have contemplated and/or committed unsanctioned homicide for reasons they thought outweighed the prohibitions against killing. These examples of persons willing to break sacred religious and moral codes in particular situations for reasons they found to exceed the demands of the codes, are not offered to justify the homicide in Jesus' story. They only show that under particular circumstances people, usually law-abiding and religious, can be driven to violate religious and moral codes for reasons they conceive to be "justifiable," though not conventionally legal or moral. Hence, under certain circumstances even homicide can be viewed as an exception to the general moral and religious code. And some homicides committed outside the usual sanctions of Israelite law have been thought to have divine sanction.

Nevertheless, in order to judge the killing of the nobleman in Jesus' story hearers/readers must know more about the killer's motives, and more about the circumstances surrounding the killing. Yet these matters are precisely what the narrator does not reveal, and hearers/readers are left to ponder a story of a poorly planned yet successfully executed homicide without knowing either circumstance or motive. The examples given above show, however, that under some circumstances unsanctioned killing of another human being (i.e., murder) may be conceived justifiable. Hence the situation in Jesus' story, if readers were better informed about its circumstances, could be such an exception; or, on the other hand, it could simply be an egregious flouting of the legal and moral codes, and hence an act with no redeeming moral value. In either case, however, the story reflects an extreme

---

<sup>108</sup> See the evaluation of Bonhoeffer by Renate Wind, A Spoke in the Wheel: The Life of Dietrich Bonhoeffer, trans. John Bowden (Wenheim: Beltz, 1990), 100–101: "Now he [Bonhoeffer] faced the question which was the greater guilt, that of tolerating the Hitler dictatorship or that of removing it. In particular anyone who was not ready to kill Hitler was guilty of mass murder, whether he liked it or not."

<sup>109</sup> Edwin Robertson, The Shame and the Sacrifice: The Life and Martyrdom of Dietrich Bonhoeffer (New York: Macmillan, 1988), 197–220.

<sup>110</sup> Robertson, Shame and Sacrifice, 277.

situation in which an individual without community sanction decides to take a human life.

7.2. The Focal Instance

By the extreme character of its content, the story offends a Judeo-Christian sensitivity to regard every human life as precious and sacrosanct. The story is similar to the series of extreme commands in Matt 5:39b-42, which is incompatible with a natural human tendency to self-defense. Robert Tannehill calls such language the “focal instance,” a type of New Testament idiom evoking a field of situations by stating the most extreme instance in the field.

Because of the tension between normal life and these commands, the attention of the reader does not come to rest in the literal sense of the command. A reader knows that the commands are extreme—even bordering on the ridiculous. According to Tannehill, the extreme nature of the commands indirectly evokes everything up to and including the literal sense. In the focal instance the limits of the literal sense of the command have broken down and one senses the sweep of the field. It is not “just that,” which is commanded, but “even that.”<sup>111</sup>

Similarly Jesus’ story is not just about a homicide; it evokes a field of situations up to and even including homicide. As a focal instance the story evokes the following general questions: is there ever a time when I must challenge even the most sacrosanct laws, morals, taboos, and religious values of my community? Am I ever called upon to risk everything—my standing in society, and even my own life—in radical commitment to some higher value, which recommends itself because a certain set of circumstances causes the higher value to surpass even my most sacred traditions and obligations? But the narrator is silent and hearers/readers are left to ponder a narrative about a deliberate homicide, wondering whether any value can be so significant as to call even them to ignore the legal and moral constraints forming the basis of human society and culture. Because of its extreme character the story “becomes the focal point” for the field of situations evoked by these questions.<sup>112</sup>

---

<sup>111</sup> Robert C. Tannehill, “The ‘Focal Instance’ as a Form of New Testament Speech: A Study of Matthew 5:39b-42,” JR 50 (1970): 380.

<sup>112</sup> Tannehill, “The ‘Focal Instance,’” 380. Tannehill notes that the focal instance is not always a command (385).

7.3. Matthew, Jesus, and the Law

Oddly enough, the earliest Christians portrayed Jesus as a man who acted “outside the law.” Under the influence of his vision of the kingdom of God, Jesus was portrayed as relativizing the obligations of his own Jewish faith. In regard to the prohibition against unjustifiable killing in Israelite law, Jesus is described as saying:

You have heard it said to the men of old, ‘You shall not kill; and whoever kills shall be liable to judgment.’ But I say to you that everyone who is angry with his brother shall be liable to judgment (Matt 5:21–22a RSV).<sup>113</sup>

Matthew is engaged in the same kind of argument found in Didache 3:1–6: to extend the Decalogue’s authority to cover lesser offenses.<sup>114</sup> Pride, jealousy, contentiousness, and passion are to be avoided because they provide the matrix leading inevitably to murder, argues the Didache. Matthew appears to have taken the next logical step and identified the lesser offense, anger against a brother, as equal in seriousness to unjustifiable homicide. Matthew’s rationale is seriously flawed, however. Equating the attitude and the act as equal in seriousness before God may raise the level of the seriousness of anger, but at the same time it lessens the seriousness of murder. In the human community, murder is far more serious than anger, no matter how we think God regards it. Matthew 5:21–22a marginalizes human community obligations in favor of religious community associations.

Jesus’ story about a killing is similar to other shocking sayings attributed to Jesus featuring a radical commitment, which may lead to overturning conventional community morality, and a marginalizing of the obligations of conventional society (Luke 6:20; 6:29–30; 9:60; 14:26; Mark 10:23; Matt 8:20). Living on the margins of society, outside its accepted conventions, not sharing its values, and being unbound by its morality is not a lifestyle to be chosen lightly. Nevertheless, such a picture of Jesus and his earliest followers emerges in the sayings believed to comprise the early Christian Gospel Q.<sup>115</sup> “A Man Wants to Kill” also fits this general picture. The story describes a man almost casually ignoring a law basic to the survival of any society. If human beings cannot be secure in their persons, they live under the law of the jungle; how can society survive, if all act like the protagonist in Jesus' story? The man's casual indifference to the value of the life of the nobleman (whatever his reasons) suggests that in the story he is bound neither by the general conventions of society nor by the strictest understanding of its religious and moral codes. He has cast off all restraints and is acting outside the law.<sup>116</sup> Little wonder that the story was not used by the canonical writers. They generally domesticated the radical edge of Jesus' words by the literary contexts in which they embedded them, as his parables show when read for themselves apart from their literary contexts.<sup>117</sup>

<sup>113</sup> The saying is likely Matthew’s composition; see M. Jack Suggs, “The Antitheses as Redactional Products,” in Essays on the Love Commandment, ed. Luise Schottroff et al., trans. Reginald H. and Ilse Fuller (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1978), 93–107.

<sup>114</sup> My thanks to John Kloppenborg for pointing out this parallel to me.

<sup>115</sup> See the summary description of the radical lifestyle of the Q community in Leif Vaage, Galilean Upstarts: Jesus’ First Followers According to Q (Valley Forge, PA: Trinity Press International, 1994), 103–106.

What can be said about a story that appears to attack the very bedrock of human society? Here is the answer: there may be times to marginalize the morals and values of society, or even times to break its moral codes by radical, or even violent acts, but such an extreme response is not without serious consequences for both the individual and society. Persons honest with themselves, however, will admit that certain situations could drive them outside the norms of society (although perhaps not as far as the protagonist in Jesus' story).

The examples of Moses, Judith, Bonhoeffer, and Jael appear to be exceptions to a strict understanding of the Israelite prohibition against homicide. The demands of the situation took precedence over the prohibitions against the sanctity of human life. In so doing, they may be construed as setting the Hebrew command to "love the neighbor" (Lev 19:18) over the command about the sanctity of human life: "You shall not commit murder" (Exod 20:13; Deut 5:17). In each case (with the exception of Jael), members of the "tribe" were threatened (in Hebrew Bible "neighbor" means "fellow Israelite," Deut 15:3), and thus the killers may be construed as having acted on behalf of the neighbor. Heard against such a background, Jesus' story about a homicide suddenly seems, in itself, neither moral nor immoral. Even though it describes an act (homicide) falling outside the usual conventions of society, under certain circumstances (as these examples suggest), even homicide may be conceived as a “moral” act—or, at least, as the lesser evil of two immoral acts. But since we know neither the circumstances surrounding the homicide in Jesus’ story nor the motives of the protagonist, we simply cannot evaluate the act.

---

<sup>116</sup> A type of "antinomianism," perhaps one of the problems plaguing the Corinthian church: 1 Cor 4:8, 5:1-2, 6:12-20, 10:14-22.

<sup>117</sup> See the discussion in Hedrick, Poetic Fictions, 93-235.

7.4. Love and Unjustifiable Homicide

Early Christians portray Jesus as endorsing the love of neighbor (Matt 19:19; 22:39; Mark 12:31) and the love command even becomes a kind of existential rule in later Christianity, where it appears to be understood universally (i.e., the neighbor is my fellow human being; Rom 13:8–10; Gal 5:13–14; Jas 2:8). It is entirely conceivable that Jesus actually did endorse the philosophy of love of neighbor.<sup>118</sup> What is most characteristic of Jesus, however, is his radicalizing of the Israelite love command. Jesus said: “Love your enemies” (Matt 5:44–43; Luke 6:27.35). Played off against the idea that one should love even one’s enemies, Jesus’ story about a homicide creates a moral dilemma. What does one do when the welfare of tribal members (family and friends) and enemies clash? How is it possible to love them both equally—i.e. to hold both groups in the same high regard, to hold the welfare of both groups as of equal value? In the final analysis such an idea is irrational and absurd, even if idealistic. For in trying to honor the one (viz. loving the enemy), individuals will inevitably break faith with the other (loving the neighbor), or to state it baldly: loving your enemy could get your neighbor killed. Further, if you really loved your enemies would you ever kill anyone?<sup>119</sup> Maybe not, but your love for the enemy could lead to your neighbor’s death caused by your inaction against those who regarded you and your tribe as enemy, regardless of your feelings toward them.

The story appears to correspond to other perplexing sayings of Jesus that provoke a quizzical response from hearers and readers—something like, “Huh? So what exactly am I being asked to do here?”

A camel can squeeze through a needle’s eye easier than a wealthy person can come under God’s reign (Mark 10:25).

---

<sup>118</sup> Why not? Love for a fellow human being is always a good thing; although in its tribal form, it may well result in harm to those not of the tribe.

<sup>119</sup> See Funk and Hoover, Five Gospels, 147. While the one loving “enemies” may no longer regard anyone as an enemy, they themselves could still be regarded as an enemy by others.

Pay the emperor what belongs to the emperor, and God what belongs to God (Mark 12:17 SV).

You must be as sly as snakes and gullible as pigeons (Matt 10:16).

There are castrated men who were born that way, and there are castrated men who were castrated by others, and there are castrated men who castrated themselves because of heaven's imperial rule (Matt 19:12 SV).

If any come to me and do not hate their own father and mother and wife and children and brothers and sisters—yes, even their own life—they cannot be my disciples (Luke 14:26 SV).

Congratulations, you poor! God's domain belongs to you (Luke 6:20 SV).

Blessed are those who go hungry to fill the hungry bellies of others (Gos. Thom. 69:2).

These ambiguous, imprecise, and paradoxical statements leave judgment to hearers and readers, who must try, as best they can, to locate themselves at some reasonable position on the landscape of the saying. For example, how can I be both wise and gullible at once (Matt 10:16)? Must I really hate those dearest to me in order to be a disciple (Luke 14:26)? And if I recognize this saying as hyperbole, how am I supposed to incorporate it practically into my life—where do my obligations to family end and my commitments as disciple begin? What exactly are the limits of my obligations to governing authority (Mark 12:17)? How long must I go hungry in order to feed others (Gos. Thom. 69:2)—particularly if I have abandoned wealth as well (Mark 10:25)? These sayings of Jesus are far from precise in what they expect; they call for moral judgments on the part of hearers/readers. In the same way, Jesus' shocking story about a deliberate homicide calls for some kind of judgment: either provoking moral outrage in the light of the Decalogue prohibition against homicide, or perplexity at such a disregard of a strict reading of the Decalogue.

In the final analysis this story suggests that no absolute rules for moral engagement with society exist in following Jesus; different circumstances often require different responses.<sup>120</sup> The "right thing to do" is often only evident, if at all, after evaluating each individual situation. What is right in one situation could well be wrong in another, even if sanctioned by community, church, and synagogue.<sup>121</sup>

<sup>120</sup> For example, the saying of Jesus, "Render to Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and to God the things that are God's" (Mark 12:17 RSV) is scarcely precise. Individuals must still decide the precise content of what is owed to God and the state.

<sup>121</sup> Joseph Fletcher, Situation Ethics: The New Morality (Philadelphia: Westminster Press, 1966).

The call to “love the neighbor” (Jas 2:8; Rom 13:8–10; Gal 5:13–14)<sup>122</sup> requires one to act on behalf of the other. Well and good! But frequently choices must be made between two courses of action, neither of which may be construed as a moral good in itself. For example, Jesus said: “love your enemy” (Matt 5:44; Luke 6:27), but what does one do in the gray area when a choice must be made between enemies and friends, which is exactly where Bonhoeffer found himself? Perhaps, in the final analysis, Jesus’ dark story about a first-century homicide leaves readers pondering the following moral issue: can it ever be “right” to commit homicide outside the usual sanctions of society? And if homicide is never a moral act, could it at least be judged the lesser evil of two immoral acts? The ethical dilemma raised by this story is simply this: how is it possible to act in love when choosing between the lesser of two evils?

---

<sup>122</sup> See the discussion in Fletcher, Situation Ethics, 69–86; and in Luise Schottroff, “Non-Violence and the Love of One’s Enemies” in Essays on the Love Commandment, ed. Schottroff et al., 9–39.

JESUS AND MAGIC: THE QUESTION OF THE MIRACLES

BERND KOLLMANN

1. Jesus as a Magician in Modern Research

Although the miracles of Jesus were associated with magical practices early in antiquity,<sup>1</sup> the question of a relationship between Hellenistic magic and the miracle narratives has been a neglected aspect for a long time.<sup>2</sup> This situation fundamentally changed in the last three decades. The question to what extent Jesus can be seen as a magician or as a shaman with magical abilities is one of the most controversial issues in present research on the gospel miracle tradition.

In his investigation into Hellenistic magic and the synoptic tradition, John M. Hull showed that the image of Jesus in the gospels, particularly in the narratives of exorcisms and healings, has been deeply influenced by magical beliefs.<sup>3</sup> According to Hull, certain aspects of the gospels are at home in the magical world-view, and a number of details in the miracle tradition reflect the central concern of magic, namely the health and happiness of individuals threatened by hostile powers. While Hull made little attempt to look behind the magical image of Jesus as presented by the early Christian tradition, Morton Smith tried to trace it

---

<sup>1</sup> Christian sources such as Justin, Dial. 69.7; 1 Apol. 30.1 reflect charges that Jesus was a magician (cf. Mark 3:22). Around 178 CE the Platonic Philosopher Celsus in his treatise On the True Doctrine claimed that Jesus was in no way different from marketplace sorcerers who learned magic in Egypt and impressed the people by exorcisms, necromancy, and other miracles effected through trickery (Origen, Cels. 1.6, 28, 38, 46, 68), see Eugene V. Gallagher, Divine Man or Magician? Celsus and Origen on Jesus, SBLDS 64 (Chico: Scholars Press, 1982); Harold Remus, Pagan-Christian Conflict over Miracle in the Second Century, PatMS 10 (Cambridge: The Philadelphia Patristic Foundation, 1983) 104–158.

<sup>2</sup> The categorical statement of Walter Grundmann that the miracles of Jesus “have no connexion with magic, or with magic means and processes” (TDNT 2:302) is a typical example. According to Samuel Eitrem, Some Notes on the Demonology in the New Testament, SO.S 20, 2nd ed. (Oslo: Universitetsforlaget, 1966), esp. 31–35, 30–70, Jesus was forced to employ magical folk medicine (Mark 7:31–7; 8:22–6) only in moments of spiritual weakness, instead of effecting healings through charismatic words.

<sup>3</sup> John M. Hull, Hellenistic Magic and the Synoptic Tradition, SBT 2.28 (London: SCM, 1974), esp. 61–115.

back to the historical Jesus. Under the impression of the Secret Gospel of Mark, Smith offered a sketch of Jesus as a magician who practiced a secret nocturnal baptism, taking his disciples along on an ecstatic ascent into heaven which gave them special powers like his own.<sup>4</sup> In his later publication Jesus the Magician, Smith attempted to give a coherent picture of Jesus' life following the career of a magician, portraying him in all the fundamental aspects according to the ancient polemics as presented by Celsus and the rabbinic literature.<sup>5</sup> Assuming suppressed evidence, Smith regards the traces of magic in the gospel tradition as the tip of an iceberg, since older magical material was censored and eliminated by the writers of the gospels. Smith seems to view Jesus as a higher-class magician who preferred to command a "familiar spirit" instead of employing rituals and spells. In general, however, he evaluates magic negatively and classifies Jesus as one of the marketplace sorcerers whose illusory miracles were produced by tricks and the help of demons.

Eugen Drewermann, whose concept of depth psychology as a tool for the interpretation of religious tradition marked the beginning of a new debate on the gospel miracles, avoids the term magic with its negative connotations and speaks instead of a shamanism that is closely related to certain forms of magic. Jesus is regarded as a shaman whose healings of a remarkable number of sick persons are completely acceptable from the psychological point of view.<sup>6</sup> To Drewermann, the biblical miracles do not substantially differ from those of figures such as Orpheus, Pythagoras, Empedocles, or modern medicine men. Like these miracle workers, Jesus is seen as a shaman in a primitive society whose miraculous healings caused harmony of body and soul, effecting a

---

<sup>4</sup> Morton Smith, Clement of Alexandria and a Secret Gospel of Mark (Cambridge: Harvard University Press, 1973) 220–251. Stephen C. Carlson, The Gospel Hoax: Morton Smith's Invention of Secret Mark (Waco: Baylor University Press, 2005), and Peter Jeffery, The Secret Gospel of Mark Unveiled: Imagined Rituals of Sex, Death, and Madness in a Biblical Forgery (New Haven: Yale University Press, 2006), claim that the Secret Gospel of Mark is a hoax. However, this is not the end of the debate.

<sup>5</sup> Morton Smith, Jesus the Magician (San Francisco: Harper and Row, 1978).

<sup>6</sup> Eugen Drewermann, Tiefenpsychologie und Exegese, 3rd ed. (Olten: Walter, 1992), 2:43–309. See also the interpretation of the miracle stories in idem, Das Markusevangelium (Olten: Walter, 1987); idem, Das Matthäusevangelium, 4th ed. (Olten: Walter, 1990).

reintegration of the individual into the unity of the universe.<sup>7</sup> Shamanism is thought to be the pure and true form of religion that needs to be rediscovered in order to displace rationalistic theology and to heal the psychosomatic desperation of our times.

John Dominic Crossan has made the most serious attempt to establish a picture of the historical Jesus as a magician.<sup>8</sup> He is convinced that Jesus saw the kingdom of God not as an apocalyptic event in the imminent future but as a mode of life in the immediate present. Unlike Smith he evaluates magic as a positive phenomenon of social protest and states that the almost schizoid position of a colonial people has to be considered in order to understand Jesus' exorcisms. Thus "colonial exorcisms" with symbolic revolutionary implications and meals with social outcasts formed the centre of Jesus' activities. In the eyes of Crossan, Jesus provided a social program of magic and meal or miracle and table, designed to force individuals into unmediated physical and spiritual contact with God and one another.

Contrary to the view of Smith, Drewermann, and Crossan, Geza Vermes draws a sharp parting line between Jesus and the magicians,<sup>9</sup> putting Jesus' miracle-working in a charismatic pattern set by the prophets Elijah and Elisha. In Second Temple Judaism, holy men such as Honi the circle drawer and Hanina ben Dosa were true heirs of this old charismatic line. Although Jesus was said to have cast out many demons, no rite was mentioned in connection with these achievements. In accordance with the miracle activities of the holy men, Jesus' supernatural abilities did not derive from magical techniques and secret powers but from immediate contact with God. In consequence, Vermes is convinced that Jesus was not a professional exorcist but a genuine charismatic and the paramount example of the early Hasidim. John P. Meier, dealing at some length with the question whether Jesus should be labeled a magician,<sup>10</sup> claims a sliding scale of miracle and magic.

---

<sup>7</sup> Drewermann, Tiefenpsychologie und Exegese, 2:141–188. In the case of Mark 4:35–41, Drewermann assumes shamanistic foreknowledge of the weather, cf. ibid. 165–169.

<sup>8</sup> John Dominic Crossan, The Historical Jesus: The Life of a Mediterranean Jewish Peasant (San Francisco: Harper, 1991), 303–353.

<sup>9</sup> Geza Vermes, Jesus the Jew: A Historian's Reading of the Gospels (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1973), 58–82. See also Jan A. Böhner, "Jesus und die antike Magie," EvT 43 (1983): 156–175, esp. 172–175.

<sup>10</sup> John P. Meier, A Marginal Jew: Rethinking the Historical Jesus (New York: Doubleday, 1994), 2:537–552.

The “ideal type” of the miracle worker is situated at one end of the spectrum, the “ideal type” of the magician at its other end. Meier sees an objective basis for designating Jesus’ supposed wonders as “miracles” instead of “magic,” even though in a few cases magical traits are present in the miracle stories.

While Vermes and Meier argue against a closer relationship between Jesus and magic, other scholars admit that some of the techniques he employed were magical, without actually making him a magician. In his investigation of magic in early Christianity, David E. Aune makes a distinction between the typical magician and magical activities that may constitute important aspects of the role of such figures as the shaman, the sage, the prophet, and the messiah.<sup>11</sup> Although Aune is convinced that Jesus in fact made use of techniques which must be regarded as magical, it does not seem suitable to him to regard Jesus as a magician. Both historically and sociologically, those magical activities he displayed could more appropriately be subsumed under the role of messianic prophet. Graham H. Twelftree<sup>12</sup> on the one hand states that Jesus’ techniques as an exorcist have clear parallels in the magical world. The material remains of ancient magic help us to see that while Jesus appeared to use the methods of a powerful charismatic figure, he was operating with the rationale of the exorcists of ancient magic. On the other hand, Twelftree claims that Jesus was different from most exorcists of his time and refuses the view that Jesus’ contemporaries charged him with magic. There were traditions in which exorcisms relied on special techniques and others in which exorcisms relied on the personal force of the exorcist. In the eyes of Twelftree, Jesus in general represented a type of exorcist who healed predominantly on the basis of his outstanding personality, and not through mechanical devices as the majority of the ancient exorcists did. According to Peter Busch, the discussion of Jesus’ relationship with magic has to consider the difference between the perspective of the outsiders and the perspective of those professionally involved in magic. Although the miracles of Jesus could be associated with magic in the view of contemporaries, the ancient magicians would not have accepted Jesus as a colleague since he was no representative of professional magical learning that required widespread rituals and was not limited to healing.<sup>13</sup> In the eyes of Tom Holmén, Jesus himself would not have considered any of his deeds to be based on magic. However, the way he dealt with the problem of sin and guilt in his healings, never consistently demanding the use of the means of atonement in a way that would have been considered appropriate, provoked suspicions that they were magical in nature.<sup>14</sup>

---

<sup>11</sup> David E. Aune, “Magic in Early Christianity”, ANRW II 23.2 (1980): 1507–1557, esp. 1523–1539.

<sup>12</sup> Graham H. Twelftree, Jesus the Exorcist: A Contribution to the Study of the Historical Jesus, WUNT 2.54 (Tübingen: Mohr-Siebeck, 1993), esp. 143–165, 190–207; idem, “Jesus the Exorcist and Ancient Magic”, in A Kind of Magic: Understanding Magic in the New Testament and its Religious Environment, ed. Michael Labahn and Bert J. L. Peerbolte (London: T&T Clark, 2007), 57–86.

This overview of the history of research shows that the topic “Jesus and magic” is still an open question. The following considerations intend to take a look at the relationship between the Jesus of the gospels and the magical or shamanistic patterns attested in both the Greco-Roman and the Jewish world.

2. Greek Magicians and Shamans

For a long time, scholars used to define magic as a decadent cultural phenomenon which employed manipulative techniques and was easily separable from religion. Recent studies on magic and religion prefer relative instead of absolute definitions and describe magic as a locative term that places certain individuals and their practices beyond the boundaries of socially acceptable behavior. According to a broad range of classical sources,<sup>15</sup> magic is a practice used to fulfill human desires, wishes, and needs with the help of deities, demons, and the powers of nature. Magic primarily aims at healing, divination, and control of nature, but also at the acquisition of love, wealth, success, and fame. The most important techniques employed by magicians are incantations, prayers, sacrifices, and sympathetic rituals. In the classical Greek era, the high esteem magicians enjoyed as wise men increasingly turned into a negative view where the practitioner of magic, the magos or goēs, came close to the sorcerer and fraud.<sup>16</sup> Modern research on the nature and function of magic has demonstrated that magic and science, as well as magic and religion, are so closely intertwined that it is impossible to draw sharp distinction lines between them. Ancient magic is related to sciences such as astronomy, alchemy, and pharmacy. Moreover, magic as a form of worship of deities cannot be separated from religion. The difference between being labeled a divine man or a magician largely depends on success, social reputation, and conformance with the dominant institutions.<sup>17</sup>

<sup>13</sup> Peter Busch, “War Jesus ein Magier?“, Zeitschrift für Neues Testament 7 (2001): 25–31; cf. idem, Magie in neutestamentlicher Zeit, FRLANT 218 (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 2006), 160–162.

<sup>14</sup> Tom Holmén, “Jesus and Magic: Theodicean Perspectives to the Issue,” in A Kind of Magic: Understanding Magic in the New Testament and its Religious Environment, ed. Labahn and Peerbolte, 43–56, esp. 52–56.

<sup>15</sup> Cf. Herodotus, Hist. 1.107, 120; 7.19, 37, 113, 191; Hippocrates, Morb. Sacr. 1.39–40; Plato, Alc. 1.122A; Pliny, Hist. Nat. 28.226–229; 259–260; 30.1–18; Apollonius of Tyana, Ep. 16–17; Apuleius, Apol. 26; PGM IV 2081–2087, 2449, 2453.

In view of the negative reputation of magicians as frauds, quacks, and charlatans, several historians of religion prefer the term shamanism instead of mageia and goēteia. Shamanism is a modern religious phenomenon first discovered in Siberia and Inner Asia. In primitive societies, shamans are highly respected mediators between humanity and heaven. They act as priests, bringing offerings to the gods, and as medicine men, seeking the souls of sick persons believed to have left the body or to have been taken away by demons. They also operate as guides of the dead, conducting their souls to their new abodes in the beyond. Besides the control of familiar spirits, the main technique of shamanism is the magical flight of ecstasy during which the soul in trance separates from the body and travels through the celestial or subterranean world.<sup>18</sup> The phenomenon of shamanism can be traced back to magicians in antiquity who acted as healers, purifiers, and seers.<sup>19</sup>

<sup>16</sup> Cf. Fritz Graf, Magic in the Ancient World (Cambridge: Harvard University Press, 1997), 20–35.

<sup>17</sup> Cf. Aune, “Magic,” 1510–1516; Alan F. Segal, “Hellenistic Magic: Some Questions of Definition,” in Studies in Gnosticism and Hellenistic Religions, ed. Roelof van den Broek and Maarten Jozef Vermaseren, EPRO 91 (Leiden: Brill, 1981), 349–375; Georg Luck, Arcana Mundi: Magic and the Occult in the Greek and Roman Worlds (Baltimore: The Johns Hopkins University Press, 1985), 3–9. However, with regard to syncretism, the coercion of deities, and the neglect of ethical issues, several forms of magic imply a questionable practice of religion, cf. especially the curse tablets with their harmful purposes (John G. Gager, Curse Tablets and Binding Spells from the Ancient World [New York and Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1992]).

<sup>18</sup> Cf. Mircea Eliade, Shamanism: Archaic Techniques of Ecstasy (New York: Bollingen Foundation, 1964); Margaret Stutley, Shamanism: An Introduction (London and New York: Routledge, 2003); Walter Sommerfeld, “Schamane/Schamanin/Schamanismus”, RGG 4th ed., 7:864–5.

<sup>19</sup> Eric Robertson Dodds, The Greeks and the Irrational (Berkeley: University of California Press, 8th edn, 1973), 135–178; Walter Burkert, “ΓΟΗΣ: Zum griechischen ‘Schamanismus’,” Rheinisches Museum NF 105 (1962): 36–55; Luck, Arcana Mundi, 11–13. However, there is little secure evidence for direct links between shamanistic practices in modern Asia and ancient Greece.

Epimenides, who predicted earthquakes and similar plagues and, as a ritual purifier, averted them by sacrificing to the gods,<sup>20</sup> represents the prototype of the Greek magician with shamanistic abilities. In the case of Pythagoras, Walter Burkert convincingly demonstrated that the miracle tradition portraying him as a magician or shaman belonged to the oldest and most reliable strata in the history of Pythagoreanism.<sup>21</sup> Pythagoras developed a theory of metempsychosis. The main elements of the Pythagoras legend are closely connected to this doctrine. Pythagoras not only claimed supernatural knowledge of the soul's prior incarnations but also claimed to send his own soul on journeys to the beyond. This evoked the legend of his magical flights, enabling him to appear in different places at the same time. The old traditions of Pythagoras's descent to Hades provide evidence that he conducted the souls of the dead to the subterranean world and investigated the fate of his contemporaries' souls during their migration from one incarnation to another. Such a reminiscence of the soul's previous lives, including a revelation of trespasses during prior existences, was the precondition of ritual purification connected to music therapy. Pythagoras employed lyre-playing and incantation-singing for healing purposes in order to restore the original harmony of body and soul. In his metempsychosis doctrine, Pythagoras presumed incarnations of the soul in any kind of body, including plants and animals. He was thus believed to have talked to animals and other elements of the natural world, a behavior typical for shamans. He was also thought to have achieved knowledge of forthcoming natural events that enabled him to predict earthquakes and similar catastrophes.<sup>22</sup>

Empedocles acted on the borderline between Pythagorean shamanism and scientific medicine. He has provided us with testimony regarding his miracles and his divine status, believing that he had united

---

<sup>20</sup> Diogenes Laertius 1.110; Iamblichus, Vit. Pyth. 28.135–136. Epimenides (seventh century BCE) claimed that his soul had passed through many incarnations and that he sent it on migrations from his body (cf. Diogenes Laertius 1.114). In consequence, he was seen as a divine man (Plato, Leg. 1.642D).

<sup>21</sup> Walter Burkert, Lore and Science in Ancient Pythagoreanism (Cambridge: Harvard University Press, 1972), 120–165. Cf. Christoph Riedweg, Pythagoras: His Life and Influence (Ithaca: Cornell University Press, 2005).

<sup>22</sup> The most important miracle traditions are Apollonius Paradoxographus, Hist. Mir. 6; Aelian, Var. Hist. 2.26; Porphyrius, Vit. Pyth. 23–29; Iamblichus, Vit. Pyth. 13.60–62; 28.134–143. For Pythagoras's music therapy, see Porphyrius, Vit. Pyth. 30; 33; Iamblichus, Vit. Pyth. 15.64; 25.110–111.

in himself the functions of both seer and physician, and therefore claiming divinity.<sup>23</sup> Empedocles shared the Pythagorean doctrine of metempsychosis and was convinced of his soul's prior incarnations in human beings, plants, and animals. According to the last fragment of his Physics, Empedocles was able to teach medical skills as well as the shamanistic abilities of controlling natural events and calling back the dead souls from Hades.<sup>24</sup> Such employment of both medicine and magic produced the famous reanimation of an apparently dead woman who had neither pulse nor breath.<sup>25</sup>

Apollonius of Tyana is the main representative of divine men who authenticated their divinity through miracles in New Testament times.<sup>26</sup> He wrote a biography of Pythagoras and completely fits the magical pattern as established by Epimenides, Pythagoras, and Empedocles. The pre-Philostratean biography by Moiragenes presented Apollonius as an impressive magician and philosopher in conflict with the Stoic Euphrates who had criticized his magical achievements and seems to have charged him with sorcery. Obviously, Moiragenes depends on the epistolary tradition that reflects this conflict and offers a good deal of reliable information about Apollonius and his self-perception as a magician.<sup>27</sup> According to Philostratus's Life of Apollonius, magical healing and the calling up of dead souls constituted an important part of his activity. Further, Apollonius was credited with the shamanistic abilities of

---

<sup>23</sup> Empedocles, frg. 102; 132–133, according to M.R. Wright, Empedocles: The Extant Fragments (New Haven and London: Yale University Press, 1981). Cf. Spiro Panagiotou, "Empedocles on his Own Divinity," Mnemosyne 4.36 (1983): 276–285.

<sup>24</sup> Empedocles, frg. 101. Empedocles also wrote a treatise on medicine (Diogenes Laertius 8.77).

<sup>25</sup> Diogenes Laertius 8.60–62. Empedocles developed a scientific theory of respiration that seems to have enabled him to diagnose apparent death and to restore the breathing mechanism. Probably this medical reanimation was accompanied by a shamanistic descent in the underworld in order to bring back the woman's soul.

<sup>26</sup> Cf. Ewen Lyall Bowie, "Apollonius of Tyana: Tradition and Reality," ANRW II 16.2 (1978): 1652–1699; Maria Dzielska, Apollonius of Tyana in Legend and History (Rome: L'Erma di Bretschneider, 1986).

<sup>27</sup> Cf. D. H. Raynor, "Moeragenes and Philostratus: Two Views of Apollonius of Tyana," CQ 34 (1984): 222–226. In Ep. 16–17, Apollonius converts the charge of magic into a compliment, claiming to be a Pythagorean magician who is of a godly nature. Ep. 52 praises music, medicine, divination, and knowledge about demons as the benefits of Pythagoreanism. Ep. 23 deals with Pythagorean medicine as a godly enterprise, focusing on the care for the soul as the better part of the living being. This is consistent with the information that Apollonius taught the Pythagorean metempsychosis doctrine (Philostratus, Vit. Apoll. 3.19.23; 6.21.43; 7.7.4) simultaneous presence in different places, of friendship with animals, and of prediction of plagues.<sup>28</sup>

Alexander of Abonuteichos was the last of the outstanding magicians in antiquity.<sup>29</sup> His success was based on a synthesis of Pythagoreanism and the Asclepius cult. Alexander studied under a public physician whose medical knowledge came from Apollonius of Tyana. Later, he established a sanctuary of Glycon, the reborn Asclepius, in Abonuteichos where he acted as a prophet of the god. He claimed to be both a son of Podaleirius and a reincarnation of Pythagoras, while the opponents of magic classified him as a quack and a fraud. Alexander's oracles included healing instructions and predictions of plagues and earthquakes. For healing purposes, Alexander employed medicine as well as shamanism, prescribing remedies, and revealing the fate of the soul during its incarnations.<sup>30</sup>

In addition to the traditions regarding these prominent figures, magical texts on papyri and metal sheets constitute an important source of information on ancient magic. The discovery of the Greek magical papyri from Egypt is particularly invaluable for the understanding of magical rituals in antiquity, as they provide spells, recipes, and instructions for procedures of every kind.<sup>31</sup> The texts are of diverse origin and nature and offer many insights into the phenomenon of magic as well as into the techniques of professional magicians. Most of the material dates from late antiquity but probably reflects practices that can reach back to earlier times. The fact that the magical papyri from Greco-Roman Egypt contain divine names as well as entire passages of Jewish origin and nature poses an interesting problem. Obviously this material, including the famous exorcism formula PGM IV.3019–3078, originated with Jewish magic and was later adopted by pagan magicians.

In summary, we find a fixed pattern of magic and shamanism in the Greco-Roman world that flourished over many centuries and had its

---

<sup>28</sup> Cf. Philostratus, Vit. Apoll. 3.51 (magical flight); 4.10; 8.26 (simultaneous epiphanies); 1.20; 4.3; 5.42 (friendship with animals); 4.10; 6.43 (prediction of plagues).

<sup>29</sup> For a critical approach to Lucian's portrayal of Alexander as a fraud, see Otto Weinreich, "Alexandros der Lügenprophet und seine Stellung in der Religiosität des II. Jahrhunderts n. Chr.," NJahrb 47 (1921): 129–151; Christopher P. Jones, Culture and Society in Lucian (Cambridge: Harvard University Press, 1986), 133–148.

<sup>30</sup> Cf. Lucian, Alex. 22; 34; 43.

<sup>31</sup> For an overview, see Hans Dieter Betz, "Introduction to the Greek Magical Papyri," in idem, ed., The Greek Magical Papyri in Translation including the Demotic Spells (Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1986), xli–liii.

main representatives in Pythagoras, Empedocles, Apollonius, and Alexander of Abonuteichos. All of them developed a doctrine of metempsychosis, revealed the prior fate of the soul by undertaking shamanistic journeys to the beyond, and understood healing essentially as a purification and restoration of the soul. According to the belief in the soul's reincarnation in any kind of body, these magicians were credited with talking to animals and plants. Their life in harmony with nature seems to have enabled them to predict earthquakes, plagues, and the storms. As authorities in questions of the soul's fate and of nature's function, they saw themselves in a privileged relationship with the deities and claimed a godly nature, while the enemies of magic radically degraded them as quacks and frauds.<sup>32</sup> Before turning to the question of how Jesus fits this pattern it is useful to have a look at magic and shamanism in the Jewish world.

3. Magic in Ancient Judaism

Although magical rites can be traced back to pre-exilic times, the beginnings of a developed Jewish magic are to be found in the Second Temple period. At this time, Judaism was directly confronted with Hellenism and was forced to clarify its attitude towards magical practices that included the danger of syncretism and the improper use of the name of God in incantations. The legitimacy of magic seems to have been a matter of controversial debate in certain Jewish circles. In this context, the book of Tobit is one of the oldest and most impressive documents of a well-reasoned Jewish magic. The archangel Raphael, as a representative of God, reveals the art of expelling demons by smoke. Following Raphael's instructions, Tobias burns the liver and the heart of a fish to cause their smoke to banish the wicked demon Asmodeus to the Egyptian desert (Tob 8:1–3). The removal of evil spirits by the smoke of burning fish derives from Egyptian magic.<sup>33</sup> By that time this ritual had been integrated into Jewish religion after being subjected to a process of theological reflection and legitimation.<sup>34</sup> In contrast to the common Jewish belief that the human knowledge of magic came from fallen angels acting against God,<sup>35</sup> the book of Tobit claims that it was God's own will to send his angel to earth in order to teach humanity the art of magic. Inserted into a framework of monotheism and prayer (Tob 8:4–8), pagan magic became adaptable to Jewish religion and was no longer perceived as dangerous.

<sup>32</sup> Cf. Heraclitus (Diels-Kranz FVS 22B) frg. 81 (Pythagoras as the chief of swindlers); Diogenes Laertius 8.59 (Empedocles as a fraud [γοητεύων]); Dio Cassius 77.18.4 (Apollonius as a fraud [γοήης]); Lucian, Alex. 6 (Alexander as a fraud [γοήης]).

<sup>33</sup> The closest parallels are found in the Fourth Book of Cyranides, where the burning of the mouth and the bones of fish is recommended against demons (Cyr 4.13.2–3; 4.55.4), see Dimitris Kaimakis, Die Kyraniden, BKP 76 (Meisenheim: Hain, 1976), 252, 283.

The first outstanding Jewish magician in the Hellenistic period was Honi the circle drawer who died around 65 BCE during the struggle between Aristobulus II and Hyrcanus II. Like Epimenides, Honi was believed to have taken a nap of seventy years.<sup>36</sup> According to both Josephus and the rabbinic tradition, Honi performed a rain miracle,<sup>37</sup> using shamanistic power over the forces of nature. After the failure of a conventional prayer for rain, Honi succeeded by applying magic.<sup>38</sup> He produced the miracle by drawing a magical circle around himself and pronouncing an oath by the name of God not to move until the rain fell. The self-enclosure in a circle was a common magical technique that gave protection against demons or hostile powers.<sup>39</sup> Honi's action implied a coercion of God and a profanation of God's name since he employed an incantation of refusal to leave the magical circle until God effected the rain miracle. For these reasons, Simeon ben Shetah, who was a key figure in the early history of the Pharisees and a determined

---

<sup>34</sup> See Bernd Kollmann, "Göttliche Offenbarung magisch-pharmakologischer Heilkunst im Buch Tobit", ZAW 106 (1994): 289–299; Loren T. Stuckenbruck, "The Book of Tobit and the Problem of 'Magic'," in Jüdische Schriften in ihrem antik-jüdischen und urchristlichen Kontext, ed. Hermann Lichtenberger and Gerbern S. Oegema (Gütersloh: Gütersloher Verlagshaus, 2002), 258–269.

<sup>35</sup> Cf. 1 En. 7.1; 8.3; Ps. Philo, L.A.B. 34.1–4.

<sup>36</sup> Cf. b. Ta'an. 23a. Epimenides allegedly slept in a cave for 57 years (Apollonius Paradoxographus, Hist. Mir. 1; Diogenes Laertius 1.109).

<sup>37</sup> Josephus, Ant. 14.22–25; m. Ta'an. 3:8; b. Ber. 19a. Honi passed on his secret knowledge in weather magic to his grandsons Abba Hilkiah and Hanan (b. Ta'an. 23a–b).

<sup>38</sup> On Honi as a magician, see William Scott Green, "Palestinian Holy Men: Charismatic Leadership and Rabbinic Tradition," ANRW II 19.2 (1979): 619–647, esp. 634–638; Crossan, Jesus, 142–148. Vermes, Jesus, 69–72, however, claims that Honi was a Hasid whose supernatural abilities did not derive from secret magical powers but from immediate contact with God.

<sup>39</sup> Before his shamanistic descent to Hades, Menippus was enclosed in a magical circle (Lucian, Men. 7). In a manner similar to Honi's action, PGM III.273–275 recommends the magical circle after the failure of a conventional prayer. See also the self-enclosure of the injured wrestler Democrates in a magical circle, providing protection against the attacks of his adversary (Aelian, Var. Hist. 4.15).

enemy of magic, considered decreeing a ban of excommunication against Honi. This act was prevented only by the occurrence of the miracle that in the eyes of contemporaries legitimated Honi's magical techniques and proved his close relationship with God.

In Jesus' time, the Essenes were seen as experts in magical healing. According to Josephus, they used "writings of the ancients" to investigate medicinal roots and stones.<sup>40</sup> In ancient magic, certain stones served as amulets for healing purposes. Close parallels to the scriptures of the Essenes dealing with healing roots and stones exist in Egyptian and Babylonian magic. Around 200 BCE the Pythagorean magician Bolos of Mendes wrote a book concerning the powers of stones.<sup>41</sup> The astrological manual of Nechepso-Petosiris contained instructions "for healing of the whole body and all the diseases according to the zodiac by stones and herbs".<sup>42</sup> A great number of recipes for healing by means of stones and roots are collected in the First Book of Cyranides.<sup>43</sup> The Babylonian Jew Zacharias produced several books attributing humanity's destiny to the influence of stones and containing magical cures against illness.<sup>44</sup> Special circles of the Essenes apparently owned such magical manuals and studied them for healing purposes.

The Dead Sea Scrolls contain much evidence of the application of magic against demonic possession. In the recasting of Gen 12:10–20, the Genesis Apocryphon ascribes the illness of Pharaoh to an evil spirit. Abraham is portrayed as a miracle worker who expels the demon through prayer, laying on of hands and rebuking. These expansions of the biblical story appear to reflect magical techniques that were actually

---

<sup>40</sup> Josephus, War 2.136. For the Jewish interest in magical stones, see Wis 18:24; Ps.Philo, L.A.B. 25.12.

<sup>41</sup> Suda s.v. Βῶλος Μενδησιος, cf. Max Wellmann, Die ΦΥΣΙΚΑ des Bolos Demokritos und der Magier Anaxilaos aus Larissa I, APAW.PH 1928.7 (Berlin: Akademie der Wissenschaften, 1928); Matthew W. Dickie, Magic and Magicians in the Greco-Roman World (London: Routledge, 2001), 117–122.

<sup>42</sup> Cf. Martin Hengel, Judaism and Hellenism: Studies in their Encounter in Palestine during the Early Hellenistic Period (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1974), 1:241. The famous Roman physician Galen examined and verified the healing power of one of the stones recommended by Nechepso (Galen 12.207), cf. Campbell Bonner, Studies in Magical Amulets Chiefly Graeco-Egyptian (Ann Arbor: The University of Michigan Press, 1950), 54.

<sup>43</sup> Kaimakis, Kyraniden, 21–111; Maryse Waegeman, Amulet and Alphabet: Magical Amulets in the First Book of Cyranides (Amsterdam: J. C. Gieben, 1987).

<sup>44</sup> Pliny, Hist. Nat. 37.169, cf. Jacob Neusner, A History of the Jews in Babylonia (Leiden: Brill, 1965–1970), 1:10.

used in Qumran.<sup>45</sup> Moreover, people afflicted by evil spirits were cured through the recitation of psalms. The document 11Q5 states that David was responsible for composing 4050 psalms, including four songs “for making music over the stricken.”<sup>46</sup> This seems to be an allusion to the very fragmentary scroll 11Q11, which contains three apocryphal psalms with incantation formulas, at least one of them mentioning David, and the canonical Psalm 91. In rabbinic literature, Psalm 91 is well known as the “song for the stricken” or “song referring to the evil spirits.”<sup>47</sup> The apparent purpose of 11Q11 was the banishing of demons that caused insanity.<sup>48</sup> These practices remind us of the Pythagorean music therapy, restoring the harmony of body and soul.<sup>49</sup> Like 11Q11, the documents 4Q560 and 8Q5 were used for exorcism purposes.<sup>50</sup> Since these incantation texts are not specific products of the Qumran community, but probably were brought there from elsewhere, the magic implied in the documents was typical for larger parts of Palestinian Judaism in those days. Another group of texts contains apotropaic hymns which were composed by the Qumran community itself and aimed at protecting against evil spirits; presumably, these were to be recited in the case of danger.<sup>51</sup>

<sup>45</sup> 1QapGen XIX, 10–XX, 34, cf. David Flusser, “Healing through the Laying-on of Hands in a Dead Sea Scroll,” IEJ 7 (1957): 108–109; André Dupont-Sommer, “Exorcismes et guérison dans les écrits des Qoumran,” VTSup 7 (1960): 246–261, esp. 248–252.

<sup>46</sup> 11Q5 (= 11QPs<sup>a</sup>DavComp) XXVII, 9–10.

<sup>47</sup> y. Erub. 10:26c; y. Sabb. 6:8b; b. Seb. 15b; Midr. Ps 91:1, cf. Dennis C. Duling, “Solomon, Exorcism, and the Son of David,” HTR 68 (1975): 235–252, esp. 238–239; Karl E. Grözinger, Musik und Gesang in der Theologie der frühen jüdischen Literatur, TSAJ 3 (Tübingen: Mohr-Siebeck, 1982), 166–170.

<sup>48</sup> Cf. Émile Puech, “11QPsAp<sup>a</sup>: Un rituel d’exorcismes. Essai de reconstruction,” RevQ 14 (1990): 377–403; idem, “Les deux derniers Psaumes davidiques du rituel d’exorcisme: 11 QPsAp<sup>a</sup> IV 4–V 14,” in The Dead Sea Scrolls: Forty Years of Research, ed. Devorah Dimant and Uriel Rappaport, SDJ 10 (Leiden: Brill, 1992), 64–89; James A. Sanders, “A Liturgy for Healing the Stricken (11 QPsAp<sup>a</sup> = 11Q11),” in The Dead Sea Scrolls Vol. 4 A: Pseudepigraphic and Non-Masoretic Psalms and Prayers, ed. James H. Charlesworth (Tübingen: Mohr-Siebeck, 1997), 216–233.

<sup>49</sup> See also Ps.Philo, L.A.B. 60.1–3 where David plays an apocryphal psalm on his harp to rebuke the demon that troubled Saul (cf. 1 Sam 16:14–27).

<sup>50</sup> Cf. Esther Eshel, “Genres of Magical Texts in the Dead Sea Scrolls,” in Die Dämonen. Demons, ed. Armin Lange et al. (Tübingen: Mohr-Siebeck, 2003), 395–415, esp. 396–403; especially on 4Q560, Joseph Naveh, “Fragments of an Aramaic Magic Book from Qumran,” IEJ 48 (1998): 252–261.

<sup>51</sup> 4Q444; 4Q510; 4Q511; 6Q18; cf. Eshel, “Magical Texts,” 406–411. In the case of 4Q510, 511, the exorcisms were conducted by a sage (maskil) who seems to have been an outstanding magician within the community.

In the first century CE the exorcist Eleazar was the paramount example of a professional Jewish magician. Thanks to the eyewitness report of Josephus,<sup>52</sup> much is known about his practices. Josephus states that Salomon not only uttered 3,000 proverbs and 1,005 songs, but also composed incantations by which illnesses were relieved, and left behind forms of exorcisms by which demons were driven out. Josephus gives an account of an exorcism performed by Eleazar which he observed in the presence of Vespasian, thus providing an example of Salomon's magical power up to his own days. Eleazar held up to the nose of the possessed man a ring containing under its seal a root prescribed by Solomon and thus drew out the demon through the nostrils. The closest parallels to Eleazar's magical ring are the sympathetic healing instructions in the First Book of Cyranides recommending rings and stones enclosing roots for the cure of possession and epilepsy.<sup>53</sup> Eleazar completed the expulsion of the evil spirit with an act of anti-demonic protection. Reciting Solomon's name and incantations Solomon composed, Eleazar conjured the demon never to return and commanded him to overturn a cup of water as a sign for the successfully completed expulsion.

Josephus observed Eleazar using a magical manual allegedly composed by Solomon. This handbook included prescriptions of rings with healing roots, and poems with incantation formulas containing Solomon's name. To these facts we may add some presumptions. In Qumran, Solomon is associated with the exorcisms, since one of the incantations in 11Q11 mentions his name (I, 3). In the Testament of Solomon, combining Jewish and Christian elements, the demon Orniat is captured by means of a magical ring and the formula "Come, Solomon calls you" (T. Sol. 1.9–11). The magical papyrus of Paris contains a genuine Jewish incantation formula for healing purposes with an adjuration of the evil spirit "by the seal that Solomon placed on the tongue of Jeremiah, and he spoke."<sup>54</sup> Further, the Book of Mysteries which claims to have been disclosed to Solomon describes a magical ring containing a white herb for protection against demons.<sup>55</sup> Such Jewish incantation formulas and magical recipes associated with Solomon might have been part of the magical handbook used by Eleazar. The possibility even exists that Eleazar's manual was the Book of Remedies which is also said to have been composed by Solomon.<sup>56</sup> Eleazar was not an isolated phenomenon within first-century Palestinian Judaism, but Josephus' outstanding example of magicians using instructions in the tradition of Solomon's wisdom.<sup>57</sup>

---

<sup>52</sup> Josephus, Ant. 8.42–49, cf. Dennis C. Duling, "The Eleazar Miracle and Solomon's Magical Wisdom in Flavius Josephus's Antiquitates Judaicae 8.42–49," HTR 78 (1985): 1–25; Roland Deines, "Josephus, Salomo und die von Gott verliehene τέχνη gegen die Dämonen," in Dämonen ed. Lange et al., 365–394.

<sup>53</sup> Cyr I.13.16–22 (If the magician presents a ring of the Nemesis stone with a bit of plant enclosed under it to a possessed person, the demon will immediately admit his presence and flee); I.17.15–17; I.19.9–17, cf. Waegeman, Amulet and Alphabet, 103–109, 135–140, 151–159. Galen gives a scientific explanation for the healing power of the root of the peony worn as an amulet in order to cure epileptic convulsions: "It was now logical (to assume) either that certain particles of the root fell out, were sucked in by inspiration, and did thus heat the affected part—or that the air itself was tempered and changed by the root" (Gal II.859–860), cf. Owsei Temkin, The Falling Sickness; A History of the Epilepsy from the Greeks to the Beginnings of Modern Neurology, 2nd ed. (Baltimore: The Johns Hopkins University Press, 1971), 25. See also the Baaras root mentioned by Josephus, War 7.180.

In summary, there was a highly developed Jewish magic at the time of Jesus.<sup>58</sup> Magical practices were not limited to healing, but also covered control of nature, as the example of Honi and his successors demonstrates. The magical rites designed for healing purposes were primarily related to the miraculous wisdom of David and Solomon. Certain manuals used by Jewish magicians provided a combination of pagan, probably Egyptian, pharmacological practices and Jewish psalms with incantation formulas to be recited for the treatment of demoniacs in

---

<sup>54</sup> PGM IV.3039–41. For the background and the meaning of this incantation forcing demons or dumb demoniacs to speak, see Wilfred Lawrence Knox, "Jewish Liturgical Exorcism," HTR 31 (1938): 191–203, esp. 195–196; Daniel Sperber, "Some Rabbinic Themes in Magical Papyri," JSJ 16 (1985): 93–103, esp. 95–99.

<sup>55</sup> Cf. Mordechai Margalioth, Sepher Ha-Razim: A Newly Recovered Book of Magic from the Talmudim Period (Jerusalem: Yediat Achronot, 1966), 103; Michael A. Morgan, Sepher Ha-Razim: The Book of the Mysteries, SBLPS 11 (Chico: Scholars Press, 1983), 75–76.

<sup>56</sup> Cf. David J. Halperin, "The Book of Remedies, the Canonization of the Solomonic Writings, and the Riddle of Pseudo-Eusebius," JQR 72 (1981/82): 269–292.

<sup>57</sup> In the case of Hanina ben Dosa, who also lived prior to the destruction of the temple, we cannot be sure that he applied magic. Crossan, Jesus, 148–156, portrays him as a magician who is "rabbinized." However, according to the oldest strata of the tradition, Hanina ben Dosa produced charismatic healings through prayer (m. Ber. 5:5; b. Ber. 34b; cf. b. B.Qam. 50). Only in later expansions of the legend is he credited with shamanistic abilities such as talking to demons and performing rain miracles (b. Pesah. 112b; b. Ta'an. 24b). Early traces of shamanism are present in Hanina's mastery of a poisonous snake (t. Ber. 3:20) which evokes the Pythagoras legend (Apollonius Paradoxographus, Hist. Mir. 6; Iamblichus, Vit. Pyth. 28.142).

<sup>58</sup> The Syrian exorcist from Palestine (Lucian, Philops. 16) is an outstanding example of a Jewish magician in the second century CE; cf. Menahem Stern, Greek and Latin Authors on Jews and Judaism (Jerusalem: Israel Academy of Sciences and Humanities, 1974–1984), 2:221.

order to threaten the evil spirits and to restore the harmony of the soul. We now have to ask how the miracles of Jesus fit into this framework.

4. The Miracles of Jesus in the Logia Strata of the Gospels

While Jesus' teaching centers on the parables, miracles form the core of his activity. Jesus certainly impressed even his opponents above all with exorcisms and healings. Different traditions and genres reflect the remembrance of Jesus' miracles. Some of the most important pieces of material have been preserved in the old Logia strata of the gospels.<sup>59</sup> Empedocles and Apollonius provided us with testimony regarding their miraculous work and their divine status. Similarly, the gospel tradition contains authentic sayings of Jesus which associate the miracles with characteristic features of his message and personality. In contrast to Empedocles and Apollonius, Jesus does not claim to be a divine man or a magician with a superhuman nature, but relates his miracles closely to God's eschatological restoration of his kingdom.

Luke 11:20 is one of the most significant verses relating to our theme, stating that "if it is by the finger of God that I cast out demons, then the kingdom of God has come upon you." With regard to the unique link between the expulsion of demons and the presence of the kingdom of God, the logion can claim "the highest degree of authenticity which we can make for any saying of Jesus."<sup>60</sup> The "finger of God" seems to be a direct reference to Exod 8:15, indicating that Jesus, like Moses and Aaron, was empowered by God. The War Scroll from Qumran offers a close parallel to the expulsion of demons by the finger of God, stating that at the end of days the mighty hand of God shall bring down the army of Satan and the angels of his kingdom.<sup>61</sup> Luke 11:20 offers an unusually clear insight into Jesus' self-perception as a miracle worker. While God effects the expulsion of demons, Jesus thinks of himself as God's instrument and medium through which the power of the kingdom becomes operative.<sup>62</sup> The double parable of the divided kingdom and the divided house (Mark 3:23–26) follows the same line of argumentation, providing Jesus' defense against the accusation of being allied with Beelzebul, the lord of demons.<sup>63</sup> Since the devil would never destroy his own kingdom, he can be ruled out as the power behind the miracles of Jesus. The only other possible source of the successful exorcisms is God. As a consequence of God's casting out demons through Jesus, the kingdom of God which Jewish eschatology expected for the end of the days had already arrived.<sup>64</sup>

---

<sup>59</sup> For a more profound analysis of the material, see Bernd Kollmann, Jesus und die Christen als Wundertäter: Studien zu Magie, Medizin und Schamanismus in Antike und Christentum, FRLANT 170 (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1996), 174–201; 239–254.

<sup>60</sup> Rudolf Bultmann, The History of the Synoptic Tradition, 2nd ed. (New York and Evanston: Harper & Row, 1968), 162. In comparison to Matthew's "by the spirit of God," Luke 11:20 provides the more original version of the saying. Both the (questionable) criterion of discontinuity and the criterion of coherence argue for the authenticity of Luke 11:20, while nothing points in the direction of an early Christian creation (cf. Meier, A Marginal Jew, 413–422).

A look at Luke 10:18 and Mark 3:27 helps us to understand this unique belief in the present fulfillment of eschatological salvation caused by the departure of demons. According to Luke 10:18, Jesus saw Satan like lightning falling from heaven.<sup>65</sup> The saying implies a former presence of Satan in heaven that had come to its end. In Jewish tradition, Satan was thought to sit in heaven as an accuser of humankind before God.<sup>66</sup> A heavenly war against the devil and his demons at the end of

<sup>61</sup> 1 QM I, 14–15. See also the adjuring of demons by the hand of God (SHR VI:35–6).

<sup>62</sup> Thomas W. Manson, The Sayings of Jesus (London: SCM, 1949), 86.

<sup>63</sup> Mark 3:22 probably refers to the charge of the use of demonic powers in order to achieve miracles and implies an accusation of magic, cf. Stephen D. Ricks, "The Magician as Outsider in the Hebrew Bible and the New Testament," in Ancient Magic and Ritual Power, ed. Marvin Meyer and Paul Mirecki, RGRW 129 (Leiden: Brill, 1995), 131–143, esp. 140.

<sup>64</sup> In Luke 11:20, ἔφθασεν (has come) means a real arrival and presence of the kingdom of God. In the eyes of Jesus, the coming of the kingdom was a dynamic development that had already started (Luke 11:20; 17:21). Although the complete arrival in power was still forthcoming (Mark 9:1; Luke 6:10), this process was inexorably activated and would automatically come to its fulfillment (Mark 4:26–32). Cf. Jürgen Becker, Das Heil Gottes, SUNT 3 (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck und Ruprecht, 1964), 199–209; Hartmut Stegemann, "Some Aspects of Eschatology in Texts from the Qumran Community and in the Teachings of Jesus," in Biblical Archeology Today, ed. Jamit Amitai (Jerusalem: Israel Exploration Society, 1985), 408–426, esp. 413–420.

<sup>65</sup> The authentic saying of Jesus, which was inserted into Luke's composition 10:17–20, describes not just Satan's symbolic dethronement, but a real fall from heaven to earth (cf. T. Sol. 20.12–17), see Samuel Vollenweider, "Ich sah den Satan wie einen Blitz vom Himmel fallen (Lk 10,18)," ZNW 79 (1988): 187–203, esp. 192–194; D. Crump, "Jesus, the Victorious Scribal-Intercessor in Luke's Gospel," NTS 38 (1992): 51–65, esp. 53–55.

<sup>66</sup> Job 1:6–12; Jub. 1.20; 48.15,18; 1 En. 40.7.

the days was expected to lead to their dethronement and fall. This final defeat of the evil powers was closely related to a restoration of the kingdom of God over all his creation as in the days of paradise.<sup>67</sup> Contrary to the common belief in a future war against the devil, Luke 10:18 states that the fall of Satan had already happened. The saying refers to a vision experienced by Jesus in the past. Although the date of the vision is unknown, we may assume that Jesus, watching Satan's fall, decided to separate from John the Baptist. This event fits the pattern of a vocation-vision that marked the beginning of Jesus' own independent activity including exorcisms and healings.<sup>68</sup> The parable of the strong man (Mark 3:27), which regards the dethronement of Satan as the precondition for casting out demons, confirms this hypothesis. The binding of the strong man alludes to the Jewish tradition of the devil's eschatological binding by God, weakening the demons who lost their master.<sup>69</sup> As a result of Satan's dethronement, his kingdom can be invaded and plundered by expelling the demons. The exorcisms of Jesus, empowered by God, are "rearguard actions" in God's battle against the evil. This battle has already been won, since the ruler of the demons has been bound and thrown out of heaven.<sup>70</sup>

Healings on Sabbath are an important consequence of Jesus' eschatological thinking. Several norm miracles in the gospels reflect the charge of breaking the Sabbath.<sup>71</sup> These compositions either are based

---

<sup>67</sup> Cf. As. Mos. 10.1 ("And then his kingdom shall appear throughout all his creation, and then Satan shall be no more, and sorrow shall depart with him"); T. Dan 5.10–12; Jub. 23.29 ("And all of their days they will be complete and live in peace and rejoicing and there will be no Satan and no evil [one] who will destroy, because all of their days will be days of blessing and healing"). According to 2 Apoc. Bar. 73.1–3, with the restitution of the kingdom "health will descend in dew, and illness will vanish... and nobody will again die untimely."

<sup>68</sup> Ulrich B. Müller, "Vision und Botschaft: Erwägungen zur prophetischen Struktur der Verkündigung Jesu," ZTK 74 (1977): 416–448, esp. 427–429; Gerd Theissen and Annette Merz, Der historische Jesus (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck und Ruprecht, 1996), 196–198. See also Paul W. Hollenbach, "The Conversion of Jesus: From Jesus the Baptizer to Jesus the Healer," ANRW II 25.1 (1982): 196–219. However, Meier, Marginal Jew, 492–493, argues against this hypothesis.

<sup>69</sup> See T. Levi 18.12 ("And Beliar shall be bound by him, and he shall grant to his children the authority to trample on wicked spirits"), where originally not the messianic high priest but God is the acting subject of Beliar's binding (Jürgen Becker, Untersuchungen zur Entstehungsgeschichte der Testamente der zwölf Patriarchen, AGJU 8 [Leiden: Brill, 1970], 297–298). Cf. the binding of demons in 1 En. 10.4; 13.1; Jub. 10.7, 11.

<sup>70</sup> Werner Georg Kümmel, Promise and Fulfillment: The Eschatological Message of Jesus, SBT 23 (Naperville: A. R. Allenson, 1957), 108–109.

<sup>71</sup> Mark 3:1–6; Luke 13:10–17; 14:1–6; John 5:1–18; 7:19–23; 9:1–47.

on independent sayings by Jesus thematically related to Sabbath healings, or have provided a suitable framework to incorporate the Sabbath sayings. In Mark 3:4, to do good and to save life is valued more highly than the demands of the Sabbath commandment. In other Sabbath sayings we find deductions following the principle a minori ad maius. Logia such as Matt 12:11 and Luke 13:15 state that if an animal may be rescued or fed on the Sabbath day, still greater was the reason to help a man or a woman. Moreover, if the circumcision to be practiced on the seventh day has to be performed on a Sabbath and concerns only one part of the body, an even greater reason exists to permit the healing of an entire person (John 7:22–3). The Jewish halachah permitted the healing of sickness on Sabbath only when a person was in danger of dying.<sup>72</sup> Jesus' need of legitimacy and justification reflected in his Sabbath sayings leads us to the conclusion that he violated the Sabbath commandment by healing sick persons who were not mortally ill. This infringement of the Sabbath halachah<sup>73</sup> was rooted in the conviction that the circumstances of creation according to Gen 1–2 had to be regarded as superior to the demands of the Sinai torah. The creation of humanity occurred before the constitution of the Mosaic Law and was therefore of higher value than the Sabbath commandment.<sup>74</sup> According to the common Jewish belief at the time of Jesus, Sabbath symbolizes an anticipation of redemption. The Sabbath possesses eschatological holiness and provides a foretaste of the world to come, which will be all Sabbath.<sup>75</sup> Since there will be no suffering in the coming

<sup>72</sup> m. Yoma 8:6; m. Sabb. 18:3; 22:6; Mek. Exod 31:13.

<sup>73</sup> Several scholars argue that Jesus did not break the Sabbath law; see David Flusser, Jesus (New York: Herder and Herder, 1969), 48–50 (“healing by words was always permitted on the sabbath, even when the illness was not dangerous”); Ed P. Sanders, Jesus and Judaism (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1985), 266 (“no work was performed”); Frederick J. Murphy, The Religious World of Jesus (Nashville: Abingdon, 1991), 332. However, t. Sabb. 7:23 seems to forbid exorcisms on Sabbath, and in general we cannot be sure that Jesus performed his Sabbath healings only by words, since the present framework of the Sabbath sayings is not original.

<sup>74</sup> See also Mark 2:27, where humankind and its needs are said to be of a greater value than the observance of the Sabbath. The well known Jewish parallel, “The Sabbath is given to you, but you are not surrendered to the Sabbath” (Mek. Exod 31:13), spoken in order to justify the healing of illnesses without danger to life on the Sabbath, shows that Mark 2:27 might originally have referred to healings or exorcisms on the Sabbath. In a similar way, Jesus' prohibition of divorce, a violation of Deut 24:1, is based entirely on the conviction that the situation of Gen 1 justifies an infringement of the law (Mark 10:6–7).

<sup>75</sup> m. Tamid 7:4; b. Ber. 57b; Midr. Ps 92:2; Mek. Exod 31:13. See Eduard Lohse, “σάββατον,” TDNT 7:1–34, esp. 8; Theodore Friedman, “The Sabbath: Anticipation of kingdom of God, sickness and Sabbath are not compatible. For these reasons, the Shammaites even forbade praying for the sick and visiting them on the Sabbath.<sup>76</sup> Jesus, however, drew different conclusions from the eschatological significance of Sabbath by acknowledging the problem of sickness. In order to restore the Sabbath as the day created before the fall of humanity and the coming of evil, he did perform healings and exorcisms on that day, contrary to common practice.<sup>77</sup>

Jesus was not the only Jewish miracle worker with an awareness of standing on the threshold of a new world. Striking analogies to Jesus' anticipation of divine eschatological deliverance through miracles are present in the actions of the Jewish sign prophets mentioned by Josephus as frauds and false prophets.<sup>78</sup> Consistent with the eschatology of Jesus, they were influenced by the pattern "as it was in the days of old... so now it will be." In contrast to Jesus' references to Gen 1–2, the sign prophets had their biblical roots in the exodus tradition. The signs and wonders promised by them did not imply a restitution of God's reign over his creation according to the situation before the fall of humanity, but a reiteration of the exodus miracles leading to political liberation from the Romans. The miracles had the auxiliary function of confirmation signs and were intended to prove the legitimacy of the message, as was required of a true prophet in Judaism.<sup>79</sup> Jesus refused the demand for a miraculous sign from heaven (Mark 8:11–12) and rejected the expectation that he might be an eschatological prophet or a political

---

Redemption," Judaism 16 (1967): 443–452; Samuele Bacchiocchi, "Sabbatical Typologies of Messianic Redemption," JSJ 17 (1986): 153–176.

<sup>76</sup> Cf. t.Sabb. 16:22; b. Sabb. 12a–b.

<sup>77</sup> For this presence of eschatological deliverance in the Sabbath healings, see Christian Dietzfelbinger, "Vom Sinn der Sabbatheilungen Jesu," EvT 38 (1978): 281–298; Berndt Schaller, "Jesus und der Sabbat," Fundamenta Judaica, STUNT 25 (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 2001), 125–147, esp. 146–147; Lutz Doering, Schabbat. Sabbathalacha und -praxis im antiken Judentum und Urchristentum, TSAJ 78 (Tübingen: Mohr-Siebeck, 1999), 441–478.

<sup>78</sup> See Martin Hengel, The Zealots: Investigations into the Jewish Freedom Movement in the Period from Herod I until 70 A.D. (Edinburgh: T&T Clark, 1989), 229–255; Paul W. Barnett, "The Jewish Sign Prophets—A.D. 40–70: Their Intentions and Origin," NTS 27 (1981): 679–697; Richard A. Horsley and John S. Hanson, Bandits, Prophets, and Messiahs: Popular Movements at the Time of Jesus (San Francisco: Harper & Row, 1985), 160–172; Rebecca Gray, Prophetic Figures in Late Second Temple Jewish Palestine. The Evidence from Josephus (New York and Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1993), 112–144.

<sup>79</sup> See Fritz Stolz, "Zeichen und Wunder. Die prophetische Legitimation und ihre Geschichte," ZTK 69 (1972): 125–144; Franz Josef Helfmeyer, "תּוֹתָא," TDOT 1:167–188, esp. 183–185.

leader in the battle for liberation. Although outsiders compared him with the sign prophets (Acts 5:36), Jesus hardly established a specific pattern of Jewish prophecy attested by miracles.<sup>80</sup>

5. Magical or Shamanistic Techniques in the Gospel Miracle Stories

The various strata of the tradition which have preserved the memory of Jesus' miracles offer different pictures. The saying tradition accentuates the characteristic feature of the present kingdom of God and is not interested in miracle techniques. The narrative tradition in contrast does not reflect the eschatological framework of the miracles but provides detailed information about the way Jesus worked miracles. Although New Testament form criticism has proven that the requirements of the primitive Christian church considerably influenced the image of Jesus in the narrative tradition, the historical value of the miracle stories needs to be underlined.

Exorcism narratives report the casting out of a demon from a possessed person. The battle between the miracle worker and the evil spirit is one of the characteristic motifs. According to the Markan miracle tradition, Jesus rebuked (ἐπετίμησεν) the evil spirits.<sup>81</sup> The verb ἐπιτιμᾶν (to rebuke) is the Greek equivalent of the Hebrew or Aramaic term רעג. Although threats to the demon are a regular part of the ancient exorcism ritual,<sup>82</sup> the technical term ἐπιτιμᾶν appears in reference to the expulsion of demons neither in the Hellenistic miracle stories nor in the Greek magical papyri.<sup>83</sup> On the other hand, the verb רעג, presumably derived from Zech 3:2, is commonly employed in Jewish

---

<sup>80</sup> Barnett, "Sign Prophets," 690, however, claims that such a pattern developed by Jesus was "in some way a causal factor in the rise of the Sign Prophets." See also Sanders, Jesus and Judaism, 172, who is inclined to put Jesus "closer to Theudas than to Honi or the magicians of the PGM, but that is because there is other evidence which leads us to think of Jesus as an eschatological prophet, not because the miracles make him one."

<sup>81</sup> Mark 1:25; 9:25.

<sup>82</sup> Lucian, Philops. 16; Philostratus, Vit. Apoll. 3.38 (a letter with threats to the demon); 4.20 (Apollonius speaks to the demon as a master to his impudent servant); cf. Gerd Theissen, The Miracle Stories of the Early Christian Traditions (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1983), 63–64.

<sup>83</sup> Howard C. Kee, "The Terminology of Marks's Exorcism Stories," NTS 14 (1967/68): 232–246, esp. 240–242.

miracle traditions to signify the threatening of evil spirits.<sup>84</sup> Apparently, the biblical use of the term ἐπιτιμᾶν in view of Jesus' exorcisms depends on רַעַל and is a Semitism of high historical value. The Markan exorcism stories do not tell the exact way the evil spirits were menaced. In ancient Judaism, the formula "May the Lord rebuke (רַעַל) you, O Satan" (Zech 3:2) was frequently recited in order to cause the departure of evil spirits.<sup>85</sup> The power to rebuke demons is ascribed to God while the magician acts as his spokesman. Although the assumption that Jesus might have used this biblical formula cannot be proven, it would fit the fact that Jesus like other Jewish exorcists acted as the agent of God (Luke 11:19–20).

In the exorcism narratives, the words Jesus uttered to the demons primarily work as commands of departure, forcing them to leave the sick person.<sup>86</sup> This is the usual form of exorcism in the magical papyri where the order "come out" (ἐξελεθε) is addressed to the evil spirits in a number of incantation formulas.<sup>87</sup> At least one of them is of Jewish origin.<sup>88</sup> According to the Talmud, Rabbi Simeon ben Yose expelled a demon named Ben Temalion with a similar command of departure.<sup>89</sup> In addition to the command of departure, Jesus' exorcism formula in Mark 9:25 includes a prevention of the demon's return. The synoptic saying tradition attests to Jesus' notion that a demon, once expelled from a person, might attempt to return and that precautions should be taken to avert this eventuality.<sup>90</sup> The practices of the Jewish magician Eleazar, who adjured the demon never to come back to repossess the

<sup>84</sup> 1QapGen XX, 29; SHR II.181–185. See also Joseph Naveh and Shaul Shaked, Amulets and Magic Bowls: Aramaic Incantations of Late Antiquity (Jerusalem: Magnes; Leiden: Brill, 1985), amulets nr. A 2:8.11; 9:2.4; 14:9.

<sup>85</sup> Zech 3:20; Jude 9 = As. Mos.; Vit. Ad. 39; b. Ber. 51a; b. Quidd. 81b.

<sup>86</sup> "Come out (ἐξελεθε) of him," Mark 1:25; 5:8; 9:25.

<sup>87</sup> PGM IV.1242–1244: "Come out, daimon, whoever you are, and stay away from him"; PGM IV.3013: "Come out from NN"; PGM V.158 "Come out and follow."

<sup>88</sup> PGM IV.3019–78 is a Jewish exorcism formula that got into the hands of Egyptian magicians; cf. Adolf Deissmann, Light from the Ancient East (London: Hodler & Staughton, 1927), 256–264; Knox, Exorcism, 191–203; Kollmann, Jesus, 156–160. PGM V.96–171 contains several references to Jewish tradition, cf. Reinhold Merkelbach and Maria Totti, Abrasax: Ausgewählte Papyri religiösen und magischen Inhalts, 4 vols., PapCol 17,1–4 (Opladen: Westdeutscher Verlag, 1992–1996), 2:153–170.

<sup>89</sup> b. Mei'l. 17b: "Ben Temalion leave her, Ben Temalion leave her." Cf. Markham J. Geller, "Jesus' Theurgic Powers: Parallels in the Talmud and Incantation Bowls," JJS 28 (1977): 141–155, esp. 141–142.

<sup>90</sup> Matt 12:43–45/Luke 11:24–26.

exorcised person,<sup>91</sup> supply the most significant parallel to Mark 9:25. The exorcism formula PGM IV.1227–1264 is likewise aware of the danger of demons returning and recommends wearing an amulet for protection.

In the narrative about the Gerasene demoniac (Mark 5:1–20), Jesus is credited with further exorcism techniques. The demon is forced to tell his name and to leave with a sign of physical violence. Both practices are well documented in ancient magic. The Jewish exorcism by the seal of Solomon aims at making the demon speak, since the knowledge of his character, name, and provenance gives the miracle worker a hold upon him.<sup>92</sup> For the same reasons, the Syrian exorcist from Palestine interrogated the spirit about how and when he had entered the body of the demoniac.<sup>93</sup> The author of the very fragmentary incantations of 11Q11 addresses the object of his exorcism, apparently a group of evil spirits, with the question of who they are (II, 1–2). Moreover, Mark 5:13 emphasizes the departure of the demons, pointing out their destructive power outside human beings. Similarly, Eleazar commanded the demon to overturn a cup of water as proof of his departure from the possessed person, while Apollonius forced the evil spirit to destroy a statue.<sup>94</sup>

Some of the synoptic healing traditions also indicate a magical context. In narratives such as Mark 7:31–37 and 8:22–26, Jesus acts on the borderline between medical and magical cure. In both cases, the public is first removed, then the healing is produced by practices deriving from magical folk medicine, and finally those cured are not permitted to make the miracle known to others. This procedure can be associated with the commands of secrecy in the magical papyri which try to prevent a desecration and transmission of powerful techniques.<sup>95</sup> In the cure of the deaf mute, the releasing of the tongue (Mark 7:35) implies that it was bound by a demon.<sup>96</sup> Jesus spits on his hand and touches the tongue of the dumb man. Antiquity attributed magical powers to

<sup>91</sup> Josephus, Ant. 8.47. For “I command you” (ἐγὼ ἐπιτάσσω σοι) in Mark 9:25, see PGM VII.331; IV.1038.

<sup>92</sup> PGM IV.3037–3041. According to Campbell Bonner, “The Technique of Exorcism,” HTR 36 (1943): 39–49, esp. 41–44, the main point is to break the silence.

<sup>93</sup> Lucian, Philops. 16.

<sup>94</sup> Josephus, Ant. 8.47. Philostratus, Vit. Apoll. 4.20

<sup>95</sup> Cf. Theissen, Miracle Stories 68–69.

<sup>96</sup> Ancient curse tablets command the demons to bind the tongue of enemies; cf. Deissmann, Light from the Ancient East, 304–307. Dumbness caused by demons is also implied Plut. Mor. 438b; PGM XIII.242–244.

spittle. The idea in Mark's story is to reduce the demon that binds the tongue by magical means to a state of weakness.<sup>97</sup> The healing is accompanied by sighing, a practice well known in the magical papyri.<sup>98</sup> Mark 5:24–34 is another miracle narrative which displays elements of magic. The woman suffering from a permanent menstrual flow believes she physically has to touch Jesus in order to be healed. Thus she draws near Jesus in the crowd, touches his cloak, and is immediately cured of her illness.

The so-called nature miracles of the gospels are influenced by the shamanistic motifs of friendship with animals and mastery of nature. Mark 1:13 credits Jesus with the ability to live in peace with the wild beasts, just as Pythagoras did. In Mark's account of the calming of the storm (Mark 4:35–41), Jesus appears as a magician endowed with the shamanistic ability to influence the weather. According to common belief at the time of Jesus, wind and waves are controlled by demons. Therefore the verbs used in reporting the miracle are well known in the exorcisms. Jesus rebuked the wind and commanded the sea to be quiet. In Jewish parallels to Mark 4:35–41, the action of the miracle worker is limited to a prayer to God who causes the calming of the storm.<sup>99</sup> By contrast, Jesus acts on his own authority and with the help of a power that dwells in him, just as Greek magicians do. Pythagoras is reported to have checked violent winds and calmed the waters of rivers and seas, so that his companions could easily cross them.<sup>100</sup> Empedocles allegedly stopped a storm cloud from overwhelming the people of Acragas and was known as "the averter of winds."<sup>101</sup> Persian magicians calmed a storm with sacrifices and incantations to the wind.<sup>102</sup>

---

<sup>97</sup> In the case of Mark 8:22–26, the spittle therapy is medicine rather than magic. In ancient medical sources (Pliny, Hist. Nat. 28.37.76; Marcellus Empiricus, Med. 8.43.166; Paulus Aegineta 7.3), spittle is attested as a remedy for inflamed, bleeding or flowing eyes, and for roughness of the eyes or cataract. Paulus Aegineta gives a scientific explanation of its healing power, ascribing dispersing and disinfecting qualities to spittle. This healing technique is also well attested in Talmudic traditions (y. Sabb. 14:14d; b. Sabb. 108b; y. 'Abod.Zar. 2:40d; b. 'Abod.Zar. 28a; y. Sota 1:16d).

<sup>98</sup> PGM IV.2492–2493; XIII.945, cf. Martin Dibelius, From Tradition to Gospel (London: Nicholson and Watson, 1934), 85–86; Campbell Bonner, "Traces of Thaumaturgic Technique in the Miracles," HTR 20 (1927): 171–181, esp. 172–174.

<sup>99</sup> Cf. Pss 107:23–32; T. Napht. 6.1–10; b. BM 59b.; y. Ber. 9:13b.

<sup>100</sup> Iamblichus, Vit. Pyth. 28.135. See also PGM XXIX.

<sup>101</sup> Clement of Alexandria, Strom. VI.30.1; Iamblichus, Vit. Pyth. 28.136.

<sup>102</sup> Herodotus, Hist. 7.191.

Furthermore, the ability to walk across the sea ascribed to Jesus in Mark 6:45–52 was also associated with Greek divine men and magicians.<sup>103</sup>

In conclusion, the Markan miracle narratives clearly portray Jesus as a magician. Almost all elements of Jesus' techniques have counterparts in ancient magic. To be sure, we always have to consider the possibility that the primitive Christian church adjusted the image of Jesus to ancient magicians and portrayed him according to their practices. Especially in the nature miracles, the Easter faith is the fundamental presupposition for attributing to Jesus magical or shamanistic abilities. However, the thesis of the Religionsgeschichtliche Schule that most of the miracle stories derive from Hellenistic Christianity outside Palestine cannot be maintained. Since most of the magical techniques in the gospel miracle stories can be traced back to the Jewish world of Jesus, a far greater degree of historicity must be assumed than is usually conceded.<sup>104</sup> Precious reminiscences of the historical Jesus regarding exorcisms and therapies have been woven into the gospel narratives.

Since Jesus was credited with certain supernatural abilities in the pre-Markan strata of the miracle narratives, the history of the tradition resembles that of remarkable ancient magicians and shamans. Like Moses, Pythagoras, and Apollonius, Jesus is highly respected in the Greek magical papyri,<sup>105</sup> while he is charged with sorcery and deception by the critics. In accordance with ancient biographies of these outstanding magicians and divine men, the gospels working as "reverse aretalogies" reduce the significance of the miracles.<sup>106</sup> They partly serve as apologies defending Jesus against outsiders' charges that he was merely a magician, and against his admirers' grave misunderstanding that he was merely a wonder-worker. The Gospel of Mark qualifies the demonstration of divinity through miracles by the motif of misunderstanding and by the image of the miracle worker as a powerful teacher. The Gospel of Matthew reduces or eliminates most of the magical techniques

<sup>103</sup> See, for example, the Hyperborean magician (Lucian, Philops. 16).

<sup>104</sup> Cf. Barry L. Blackburn, Theios Aner and the Markan Miracle Tradition, WUNT 2.40 (Tübingen: Mohr-Siebeck, 1991).

<sup>105</sup> PGM IV.1232–1233; 3019–3020; cf. PGM XIa (Apollonius); VII.795 (Pythagoras); XIII (Moses).

<sup>106</sup> Jonathan Z. Smith, "Good News is no News: Aretalogy and Gospel," Map is not Territory, 2nd ed. (Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1993), 191–207.

ascribed to Jesus in the Markan miracle tradition.<sup>107</sup> It is written partly to neutralize earlier attacks on Jesus' magical achievements and to replace the Gospel of Mark which portrays Jesus as both teacher and magician. Similarly, Philo, Philostratus, and Iamblichus intend to cleanse their heroes Moses, Apollonius, and Pythagoras of the charge of practicing magic and wish to discourage their readers from consulting earlier biographies which unduly stressed magical abilities.<sup>108</sup>

6. Conclusions

Our knowledge of the relation between Jesus and magic is limited. The authentic sayings of Jesus do not provide information about his healing techniques. Moreover, the extent to which the magical motifs in the miracle stories can be traced back to the historical Jesus is disputable. However, little doubt exists that Jesus' general way of healing was magical. Surely the author of the Hippocratic treatise On the Sacred Disease would have condemned Jesus as one of the magicians whose healing techniques were not based on scientific medicine but assumed the intervention of the divine in natural processes.<sup>109</sup> In sharp contrast to scientific medicine, Jesus, like most of his contemporaries, shared a world view with ancient magicians. In the world of Jesus, the devil was believed to be the cause of evil. The idea that demons empowered by the devil were responsible for all sickness had deeply penetrated into Jewish thought. Therefore, Jesus was convinced that illnesses, such as epilepsy and mania, could be eliminated through the expulsion of the wicked spirits. According to the gospel narratives, which are of higher

---

<sup>107</sup> Hull, Hellenistic Magic, 116–141; Otto Böcher, "Matthäus und die Magie," in Studien zum Matthäusevangelium, ed. Ludger Schenke (Stuttgart: Katholisches Bibelwerk, 1988), 11–24; Dieter Trunk, Der messianische Heiler, HBSt 3 (Freiburg: Herder, 1994).

<sup>108</sup> While the pre-Philonic tradition thought of Moses as a magician (Artapanus, FGrHist IIIC.726.3; Strabo 16.2.39) or fraud (Lysimachus and Apollonius Molon, according to Josephus, Apion 2.145), Philo portrays him as a lawgiver and prophet whose friendship with God enabled him to perform miracles (Vit. Mos. 1.156). Philostratus's Life of Apollonius, claiming that the miracles did not derive from magic but from wisdom (Vit. Apoll. 4.44; 8.7.9), should be understood as a reaction against Moiragenes' view of Apollonius as a magician (Vit. Apoll. 1.2–3). Similarly, Iamblichus intends to neutralize of the older tradition (cf. Vit. Pyth. 1.2; 32.216) since prior biographies like that by Apollonius of Tyana probably portrayed Pythagoras as a magician. Cf. Kollmann, Jesus, 287–306.

<sup>109</sup> Hippocrates, Morb. Sacr. 1.39–40.

historical value than often presumed, he applied magical techniques for these purposes.

The phenomenon of shamanism overlapping with magic is less suitable to grasp the significance of Jesus' miracles, although in the light of the Easter faith Jesus was credited with shamanistic abilities. Nature miracles typical for Honi and for Greek shamans are not mentioned in the reliable strata of the saying tradition. Jesus did not develop a theory of metempsychosis, the presupposition of every kind of shamanistic healing. Moreover, he did not preach vegetarianism as the logical consequence of the shamanistic belief in the soul's reincarnation in animals. Outstanding Greek shamans such as Pythagoras and Empedocles revealed secret knowledge fundamental to human destiny that made them think of themselves as immortal mediators between heaven and earth. Jesus saw himself as God's agent in the process of eschatological fulfillment without claiming a divine status. He did not primarily care for the individual fate of the soul but saw healing within the universal framework of the restitution of the kingdom of God.

Regarding Jesus as a magician does not imply a derogation. Modern research on the nature and function of magic clearly prefers a definition of magic as a relative term that locates certain miracle workers beyond the boundaries of socially acceptable behavior. The traditional distinction between miracle as an aspect of religion on the one hand, and magic on the other hand has become fragile. The strict dichotomy between manipulative magic and supplicative or charismatic miracle does not exist. Up to a certain point, magic and miracle involve the same sort of practices. The dividing line between charismatic and magical miracle is primarily a matter of social convention. Aspects that make magic a questionable form of religion, such as the application of magical abilities for harmful or dubious purposes, are absent from the miracles of Jesus.

Although Jesus appears to have used magical techniques and can therefore be seen as magician in a wider sense, he does not fit the magical patterns common during his time. According to ancient sources becoming a magician was not easy. The initiation lasted a long time and included doctrines as well as rituals that were very widespread.<sup>110</sup>

---

<sup>110</sup> Cf. Graf, Magic, 89–90: Pankrates spent twenty-three years in a secret chamber in order to become a magician. Cyprian lived ten years with the priests of Memphis who taught him magic.

It is doubtful whether Jesus had the chance to undergo a ritual instruction in order to acquire secret knowledge of magical rites and tools. The ancient Jewish and pagan sources labeling Jesus a magician claim that he produced his miracles employing hidden techniques which he had learned in Egypt. The tradition of magical training in Egypt is a common motif, attributed to almost every outstanding miracle worker in antiquity.<sup>111</sup> In the case of Jesus, it developed from the legendary tradition in Matt 2:13–21 and rested on Jesus' identification with the Jewish sorcerer Ben Stada who imported magical prescriptions from Egypt tattooed on his body and was stoned to death.<sup>112</sup> There is no reliable evidence that Jesus ever went to Egypt. John the Baptist, the only teacher of Jesus we know of, can also be ruled out in our search for the roots of Jesus' healing activities since he did not perform any miracles (John 10:41). Moreover, for Greek magicians healing constituted only a small part of their professional life. Outstanding representatives of magical art, such as Pythagoras, Empedocles, and Apollonius, claimed to control nature and to predict catastrophes. The Greek magical papyri from Egypt provide many insights into the role of the magician as religious functionary who operated as a crisis manager and had remedies for almost everything that troubled mankind. In contrast, the miracles actually performed by the historical Jesus were limited to healing and did not include practices for causing damage or getting rid of enemies. Widespread rituals of the kind we find in the magical papyri are absent from the gospel tradition.

The lack of connecting links to contemporary Jewish healing magic is perhaps most surprising. No evidence is available that Jesus used healing stones and roots as the Essenes did. Unlike the Qumran community and Eleazar who owned magical manuals, Jesus did not employ incantations and psalms allegedly composed by David or Solomon for exorcism purposes. Several remarkable links exist with charismatic movements in ancient Judaism. Regarding God as the power behind the exorcisms, Jesus places himself on a level with other Jewish healers (Luke 11:19). His main technique of exorcism was the well known rebuking of the wicked spirits possibly by reciting Zech 3:2 (frequently documented in ancient Judaism). Like Honi, Jesus came into conflict with the Pharisees. With the sign prophets, he shared a concept of anticipated eschatological salvation through miracles. However, given the entire framework of his miracle work Jesus does not fit into any of the traditional patterns. A vision of Satan's falling apparently activated his exorcism and healing activities without any magical initiation. Unlike his contemporaries, Jesus was convinced that the destruction of evil and the restoration of God's new world, usually expected for the end of days, had already started. In this eschatological process, he thought of himself as God's instrument, eliminating what remains of evil and restoring the Sabbath as the day that was created before the fall of humanity. Operating within an overarching context of salvation history and partial realizations of the kingdom of God, Jesus was a magician of a special kind.<sup>113</sup>

---

<sup>111</sup> Cf. Diodorus Siculus 1.69.4–5; Philostratus, Vit. Apoll. 1.2; Diogenes Laertius 8.3; Iamblichus, Vit. Pyth. 4.18–19; Ps.-Clement, Hom. 2.22.3.

<sup>112</sup> t. Sabb. 11:15; y. Sabb. 12:13d, cf. Johann Maier, Jesus von Nazareth in der talmudischen Überlieferung, EdF 82 (Darmstadt: Wissenschaftliche Buchgesellschaft, 1978), 203–218.

---

<sup>113</sup> I am grateful to my wife Christine Wyatt for revising the style of this article.

JESUS AND THE GREEKS:
A SEMIOTIC READING OF JOHN 12:20–28

JOSEPH PATHRAPANKAL

Interpreting beyond borders has become a fundamental and indispensable need of our times in all branches of knowledge. In Christian theology it focuses on the emerging trans-border biblical and theological interpretation of basic issues that constitute the faith and praxis of the church which are transmitted through the centuries. Hence liberation studies, subaltern studies, post-colonial studies as well as diasporic studies have all come up in contemporary literature as part of this new branch of the discipline.<sup>1</sup> We do not want to confine the topic of our present study to any one of these newly emerging studies; but we still hold the view that this is a study which goes beyond the borders of established biblical hermeneutics. Since this study is a contribution to the fourth volume of the Handbook of the Study of the Historical Jesus, concentrating on concrete issues about the historical Jesus recorded in the gospels, it is supposed to be related to the narratives which are found in these gospels. But that does not mean that the study has to be only about the historical data as described in the gospels, because the gospels are not mere biographies of Jesus. They are more documents of faith, as well as reflections on faith. That is the reason why the gospels are understood more as a kerygmatic history, i.e. history in the form of a proclamation, containing a consequent challenge to the readers. This is not to deny the historical character of the gospel narratives, nor is it an attempt to demythologize the gospel accounts along the Bultmannian lines. Rather, it means that we have to remain within the historical and also go beyond the historical towards the message that transcends the historical and reach out to the challenge the narratives bring before us. It seems that the present state of our globalized world and the current trend of thinking and reflection in our contemporary society call for such a movement towards that which lies beyond.

---

<sup>1</sup> Interpreting beyond borders, ed. Fernando F. Segovia (Sheffield: Sheffield Academic Press, 2000), 11–34.

1. The Challenge of a Pluralistic World

This observation is particularly important in the context of our pluralistic world. Here pluralism means the acceptance of the other as the other with all its uniqueness, not as something opposed to oneself or as an extension of oneself, but as something with its own inalienable qualities and characteristics. Pluralism also denotes the concept of the one and the many, the one as basic to all things, coordinating the many, and the many as coordinated to the one, thereby creating harmony and peace among the many. Hence pluralism means difference and also distinction, but it is not divisiveness. As a result, a pluralistic world does not mean a divided world. Once pluralism is accepted as a basic reality of this world and its historical process at all levels, it becomes easier for all to see the legitimacy of the other to exist and operate at various levels of life, and also the positive role pluralism plays in enriching the world. It is this richness of pluralism that reveals the beauty of our human community as a whole, because God has created a world characterized by its own pluralism at various levels. It is this variety and pluralism that give beauty to the entire environment in which we live and relate to each other. As a result of these developments, world religions are also beginning to experience that their future does not any more consist in isolation, but rather in their openness to other religions. Those who are involved in the study of religions are also becoming more and more convinced that any attempt on their part to dominate or monopolize in the realm of religion is self-defeating. There is no more question of religious absolutes. Equally excluded is the tendency to establish one's own religion as something normative for the whole of humankind. In fact, the most important challenge that the churches face in our times is the challenge of religious pluralism. Hence religious pluralism deeply affects the church's self-understanding and her mission in the world. There is no more question of understanding Christianity and the church in terms of uniqueness, exclusivism and superiority over other religions.

It follows from the above observations that there is need of a new look at what is meant by religious identity. Does religious identity mean one's absolute commitment to a religion in such a manner that it has no place for accepting and appreciating the values of other religions? After centuries of hatred and mistrust, religions are now discovering a new dimension of dialogue and a complementary approach, through which every religion tries to recognize and appreciate the positive values in other religious traditions. So also every religion feels the need of coming out of its ghetto mentality and becoming open and tolerant towards other religions. Religions are also trying to understand that they have a common patrimony and also a common task to fulfill as well as a common goal to achieve. If we look through the early history of the church, it becomes clear that the broad outlook of some of the Fathers of the church about Christianity was gradually lost sight of through the interventions of interested theologians during the following centuries, who tried to establish their own views and make Christianity a ghetto religion. We have the sublime teaching of several Fathers of the Church, such as Irenaeus and Justin, who taught that the eternal Logos was present and active in every human heart. All those who followed their inner guidance and their genuine conscience could arrive at salvation. Justin even said that all who live according to the Logos are basically Christians. But once Christianity became the official religion of the West through the conversion of Constantine, this broad outlook of Christianity on the followers of other religions was completely removed. Christianity then grew into a religion of domination and intolerance towards other religions. "No salvation outside the Church" became the standard doctrine of the church. Consequently, many steps were taken to make people belonging to other religions in other parts of the world become the members of the church as the only way for them to arrive at salvation.

Jesus Christ is very often presented as the Founder of Christianity. But if we objectively analyze his person and work, it would become clear that he is not the founder of a religion like many other founders. Jesus of Nazareth had to carve out a new group of followers from the very religious reality of which he was a member in every aspect. But he never tried to make it a new religion out of the parent religion, much less a new sect. It is true that the group comprising of his disciples was called the "sect of the Nazarenes" (Acts 24:5) by some others, similar to the sect of the Sadducees (Acts 5:17), and this had far-reaching consequences for the future of the Christian movement, when Stephen had to step in and fight for its trans-sectarian characteristics. But for the New Testament writers themselves Jesus was far from being the founder of a religion or the leader of a sect. For the author of the Acts of the Apostles, the Christian movement was the Way (ἡ ὁδός) (Acts 9:2). Hence he has Paul make a solemn declaration of this conviction in his self-defense before Felix, where his own conviction about the Way is contrasted with the prevailing thinking about the sect among others. Paul tells Felix: “This I admit to you, that according to the Way, which they call a sect, I worship the God of our ancestors, believing everything laid down according to the law or written in the prophets” (Acts 24:14). In fact, Jesus of Nazareth inaugurated a new way of living the vertical and horizontal dimensions of religion without at the same time founding a new religion.

A recent work of John P. Meier about Jesus as a marginal Jew<sup>2</sup> has raised several interesting observations about the so-called religious identity of Jesus of Nazareth and his relation to Judaism as a whole. Since Jesus was born and brought up in the territory of Galilee, which was technically known as the Galilee of the Gentiles (Matt 4:15), he could not and did not belong to the category of those for whom the Law of Moses was the ultimate norm and controlling factor of religious identity. The Jews living in this area were surrounded by a fair number of Greeks and were also exposed to a considerable amount of Hellenistic culture and world vision. Consequently, these Jews would adhere only to the basics of their religion and religious practices. More than that, they were also prepared to see and appreciate goodness and virtue not only among their fellow humans, but also among the followers of other religious traditions. So it was quite natural that Jesus could appreciate goodness and a meaningful faith in the centurion who went to Jesus seeking healing from him for his servant who was lying paralyzed at home: “Truly, I tell you, in no one in Israel have I found such faith. I tell you, many will come from east and west and will eat with Abraham and Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom of heaven, while the heirs of the kingdom will be thrown into the outer darkness, where there will be weeping and gnashing of teeth” (Matt 8:11–12). Hence, Jesus was also spontaneous in offering him his service and he healed his servant.

The same can be said about Jesus’ attitude towards the Samaritans who were, in general, disliked by the Jews. In the parable of the Good Samaritan, it is a Samaritan who turns out to be the ideal person, for he proves by his action what it means to be a neighbor in the true sense of the word. As a Jew, Jesus should have hated him; but as one with a capacity to transcend the merely human dimensions, he praised him and presented him as an example for the Jewish scholar who had approached him with the question: "Who is my neighbor?" For Jesus it was not an issue of dealing with an academic question, but of putting things into action. So Jesus said: "Go and do likewise!" (Luke 10:37). The same truth is once again affirmed in the story of the ten lepers, one of whom was a Samaritan, and he came back to thank Jesus for the favor he had received (Luke 17:11-19). The story of Jesus meeting the Samaritan woman and through her the whole community of the Samaritans is yet another challenging story in the Gospel of John. In his discussion with the Samaritan woman, Jesus spells out his profound convictions about what religion and worship mean. In fact, this story encourages us to approach the challenge of religious identity in our times with an open mind (John 4:21-24). What Jesus told the Samaritan woman could be understood as an epitome of religion and worship, not only for the Jews and the Samaritans of his times, but also for the followers of all religions, then as well as now. This could be summarized as follows: In the past, the followers of various religious groups had their own ways of worshipping God, often in the context of rivalry and competition. But from now on, religion itself, and worship in particular, have to assume a new meaning and a new expression. Worship is no more to be localized and monopolized by a few people who think that they are the privileged and authorized ones, from whom all others have to learn and practice the essentials of worship. Rather, worship must be the exercise of the freedom of the spirit for all humans wherever and wherever they are. All that happened in the past in the history of Judaism and Samaritans was the expression of rivalry and competition, either with one claiming superiority over the other, or with one condemning the other as false and illegitimate. The time has now come for all to rise up from such a religious enslavement and inaugurate a new era of worship in the power of the genuine operation of the spirit of God, which encompasses the universe of faiths and religious traditions.

---

<sup>2</sup> John P. Meier, A Marginal Jew (New York: Doubleday, vol. 1, 1991; vol. 2, 1994; vol. 3, 2001; New Haven: Yale University Press, vol. 4, 2009). Other similar works are: Geza Vermes, Jesus the Jew (London: SCM, 1973) and Jesus and the World of Judaism (London: SCM, 1983); Jesus’ Jewishness, ed. James H. Charlesworth (New York: Crossword, 1991).

Official Judaism would have regarded such a teaching as nothing less than heresy, and the meaning of what Jesus told the Samaritan woman was much more crucial than what is contained in his saying about the Temple of Jerusalem: "Destroy this temple; and in three days I will build it again" (John 2:19). In fact, Jesus had to get involved in a prophetic task far greater than that was assigned to the prophet Jeremiah: "Today I appoint you over nations and over kingdoms, to pluck up and to pull down, to destroy and to overthrow, to build and to plant" (Jer 1:10). Jesus of Nazareth had a prophetic task of destroying and overthrowing certain inbuilt ideologies about religion and religious identity, and this was also part of his mission of inaugurating the kingdom of God as a universal situation of vertical and horizontal relationship. Biblical exegetes are called upon to explore this aspect of the ministry of Jesus of Nazareth in a more radical manner during these changed times of human history. It is more a question of broadening the dimensions of their theological reflection and hermeneutical fields. "Widen the space of your tent, extend the curtains of your home. Do not hold back! Lengthen your ropes, make your tent-pegs firm, for you will spread out to right and to left" (Isa 54:2-3): it is in these words that Deutero-Isaiah exhorted the returned exiles to go out of their introverted world vision and enlarge the horizons of their thinking. This exhortation is very much applicable to the theologians and exegetes of our times who are also challenged to go out of their centripetal world of theological reflection to the wider world of God. In our global village, it is only natural that the world of theologians and exegetes draws closer and shares their concerns and problems; and this will add beauty and meaning to their theological ministry.

2. The New Hermeneutical Task

The present study is also an attempt to explore the capacity of biblical texts to shape, revise and confirm readers' expectations. This too is an important aspect of hermeneutical enquiry in our times insofar as the text of the Bible is allowed to respond to the context and situation of the present, with the result that new and relevant meanings consonant with its original meaning can be derived from such re-readings. In fact, in the field of biblical studies we now have a new challenge of a more contextual understanding of the Bible. We would therefore call it a contextual interpretation of biblical texts. What is proposed here is something different from the study of the original context of the biblical text, which we would call the "author context." Contextual understanding here means the transcending of the original context as well as the Sitz im Leben of the biblical text, so that the biblical text is made to speak anew to the context of the reader and the interpreter. Here it is a question of what may be called a 'situational context' of the reader and the interpreter. It means that the biblical text, as the inspired Word of God, is to be further interpreted by successive generations of readers in their own respective social, cultural and religious situations without at the same time losing sight of the original context as well as its original meaning.<sup>3</sup> It means that the biblical text has not only a past history accessible to us through textual and historical criticism, but also an openness to the present and to the future, which far surpasses the criteria and the issues of the past. In fact, very often the objectivism of the historical critical method prevents us from appreciating the role the reader and the interpreter have in establishing the total meaning of the text, and it often remains blind to the authentically new meaning and challenge that a text may acquire as it is read in ever new situations.<sup>4</sup> It means that the biblical text has a life of its own as it moves through history, assuming new dimensions and connotations as it relates itself to new contexts in the ongoing process of history. It also means that the inner meaning of a biblical text is not exhausted by what was intended by its author or by what the text in fact says: it is also what the readers today understand as part of the dynamic meaning of a particular text within their own historical, cultural and religious context. As a result, the interpretation of biblical texts, which have a strong bearing on the faith and praxis of the church, is to be re-examined, re-read, re-interpreted and re-applied, taking into account the changed historical, cultural and religious contexts of our contemporary society. This can be understood as an important synchronic principle of biblical interpretation that is being discussed, mainly in the religiously and culturally pluralistic situations of our times. It is also related to the new demands of the actualization of biblical text that are being applied in biblical interpretation. This is particularly so because the Bible is the Word of God, which is entrusted to the church as the source of its life and vitality. This Word of God has within itself a dynamism which allows it to take on new meanings and new horizons of ideas through its encounter with new contexts in a pluralistic world.<sup>5</sup>

---

<sup>3</sup> Cf. Joseph Pathrapankal, "Interpretation of the Word: God's Word, the Human Word and the Interpreter's Word," in Text and Context in Biblical Interpretation (Bangalore: Dharmaram Publications, 1993), 1-16.

<sup>4</sup> Cf. E. Krentz, The Historical Critical Method (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1975); G. Meier, The End of the Historical Critical Method (St. Louis: Concordia, 1977); P. Stuhlmacher, Historical Criticism and Theological Interpretation of Scripture (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1977).

<sup>5</sup> "Hermeneutics is the task of always coming back to the text under new circumstances and in new situations and it is always a re-reading of scriptures and of ourselves, our world, our society and our history" (Joseph Pathrapankal, "Editorial," Journal of Dharma 5 [1980]: 2).

3. The Context of the Johannine Story

It is against the background of the above considerations that we now analyze John 12:20–28, which is a unique narrative in the Johannine theology because of the significant manner in which this story is presented, and also on account of the extraordinary message it gives to the readers of the Gospel of John. Coming as it does as the last public appearance of Jesus before he departed and hid himself from the people (John 12:36b), the story is to be seen as the conclusion of the Book of Signs, the last and decisive sign in it being the raising of Lazarus back to life (John 11:1–44). This concluding event of the earthly ministry of Jesus resulted in many Jews believing in him (John 11: 45; 12:11), while some others reported the fact to the Pharisees and made them aware of the seriousness of the matter. Thereby the scene was set for the Jewish authorities to take a decision to do away with Jesus because he was a real threat to the wider interests of Judaism. The triumphant entry of Jesus into Jerusalem worsened the matter still. Just as Caiaphas, the high priest, made a prophetic statement about the larger meaning of the death of Jesus, so too the Pharisees unintentionally announced the universal significance of Jesus: “the whole world has gone after him” (John 12:19). Hence Jesus emerged as one who had to be eliminated for the greater cause of Judaism. It is at this juncture that the story of the Greeks seeking Jesus is introduced.

The story we analyze here is about some Greeks who had gone to Jerusalem for worship in the Temple and had also listened to the teaching of Jesus in the Temple area. They were religiously well-disposed persons from the “Galilee of the Gentiles” (Matt 4:15) who could appreciate the religious practices of Judaism and had come to Jerusalem to take part in the Jewish festival. As was the case with the Temple police who confessed to the Jewish authorities about the unique and extraordinary teaching of Jesus: “Never has anyone spoken like this” (John 7:46), so also these Greeks were fascinated by the authentic and challenging teaching of Jesus on vital issues of religion. Hence it was only natural that they wanted to personally meet Jesus. As a concluding event of this major section of the gospel, it seems that this story has its own theological and pedagogical purpose. In fact, it is in this story that Jesus emerges in the most sublime and transcendent dimensions of his understanding of religious identity, as we shall try to explain below:

Now among those who went up to worship at the festival were some Greeks. They came to Philip, who was from Bethsaida in Galilee, and said to him, "Sir, we wish to see Jesus." Philip went and told Andrew; then Andrew and Philip went and told Jesus. Jesus answered them, "The hour has come for the Son of Man to be glorified. Very truly, I tell you, unless a grain of wheat falls into the earth and dies, it remains just a single grain; but if it dies, it bears much fruit. Those who love their life lose it, and those who hate their life in this world will keep it for eternal life. Whoever serves me must follow me, and where I am, there will my servant be also. Whoever serves me, the Father will honor. Now my soul is troubled. And what should I say—'Father, save me from this hour?' No, it is for this reason that I have come to this hour. Father, glorify your name." Then a voice came from heaven, "I have glorified it, and I will glorify it again" (John 12:20–28).

Raymond E. Brown, in his elaborate commentary on John,<sup>6</sup> has referred to the general theological meaning of this scene. According to him, the coming (italics in the original) of the Gentiles is so theologically important that the writer never tells us if they got to see Jesus, and indeed they disappear from the scene in much the same manner that Nicodemus slipped out of sight in ch. 3. Brown then refers to the "awkwardness" of the whole narrative and suggests that a "poorly known incident from early tradition" was used as the basis for theological adaptation. So he concludes that "there is nothing intrinsically improbable in the basic incident." The issue seems to be not so much whether the event itself happened, as Brown suggests, but rather the theological significance of the narrative. In a certain sense, the story is also a sign as well as a paradigmatic event with a profound theological meaning and message. The raising of Lazarus to life encouraged many Jews to believe in Jesus. In a similar manner, the Greeks from Galilee who had come to Jerusalem to worship in the Temple also show signs of their readiness not only to listen to Jesus but also to have a personal experience of his magnificent personality. Their option to transcend their loyalty to their own religion and their readiness to appreciate the religious worship of Judaism in Jerusalem enabled them to see a new meaning in the very religiosity of the person of Jesus of Nazareth. At the same time, being Gentiles, they had their own apprehensions about whether Jesus would welcome them or not.

---

<sup>6</sup> Raymond E. Brown, The Gospel according to John (London: Geoffrey Chapman, 1971), 1:470.

4. The Dynamics of the Narrative

Johannine narratives, in general, are known for the inner dynamics and dramatic turn of events, which add to the challenge and beauty of these narratives. At the same time, the evangelist is sure of guiding the readers to accept the inner message of these narratives. This is especially true of the signs performed by Jesus at various stages of his ministry, starting from the first sign performed at Cana in Galilee (John 2:1–11). In our story also, the Greeks proceed very cautiously in preparing the background for realizing their objectives. As they would do anywhere else, they tried to make use of native acquaintance and went to Philip who had a close relationship with Jesus. He was very much active during the ministry of Jesus (6:5, 7; 12:21–22; 14:8–9). It was also Philip who had persuaded Nathanael to follow Jesus (John 1:45–51). Since Philip was not quite sure of how Jesus would react to this request of the Greeks, he told Andrew, also his fellow townsman and the brother of Peter, so that together they could persuade Jesus, in case he had some reservations about the whole issue. It is true that there are other cases of Gentiles meeting Jesus in the synoptic gospels. The Roman officer of Capernaum came to Jesus with a request to cure his servant who was ill (Matt 8:5–13). The Canaanite woman approached Jesus with a request to heal her daughter (Matt 15:21–28). But here the context is different. What is involved here is what we may call a religious dialogue. The Greeks were willing to listen to Jesus, provided he was prepared to receive them. We do not know from the gospel itself whether they ever met Jesus at all. What we can notice here is the prevailing anxiety even among the Galilean Jews about the antipathy between the Jews and the Gentiles, especially because the event was taking place in Jerusalem, the heart of Jewish orthodoxy. So the evangelist also wants to introduce the initial stage of the story in such a manner that what later happens is almost an anticlimax of the entire proceedings. The two disciples go to Jesus and propose to him the request of the Greeks. This sets the stage for Jesus to speak and act in such a manner that here we have one of the most beautiful self-revelations of Jesus of Nazareth about understanding religious identity and inter-religious relationship.

The reaction of Jesus to the request of the two disciples constitutes the central message of the story. It would appear that Jesus must have been sad and disappointed about the protocol that was arranged for such a visit between him and the Greeks. Jesus said in very brief words:

“The hour has come for the Son of Man to be glorified” (John 12:23). It is doubtful whether Philip and Andrew ever understood the meaning of what Jesus said in such succinct words. It is clear that for John, unlike the synoptic gospels, glory is not the final exaltation of Jesus through his resurrection; rather, it is the glory of his passion and death leading to resurrection. Hence the passion is the beginning of that glorification as well as the moment of his being lifted up from the basically earthly and human condition of his incarnate existence. Hence the passion was for Jesus a moment of transcending the limitations of his human and earthly condition, which for him was his being a Jew with all that it meant for any Jew of his times. But Jesus did not want his Jewish identity to become in any way a limiting and controlling factor as well as a stumbling block for his elevated and transformed human nature to operate beyond the barriers of his own religion. Jesus had already demonstrated this transcendence on several occasions during his earthly ministry, as is clear from numerous sayings and stories in the gospels. Here at the last stage of his earthly ministry Jesus has reached the decisive moment, the real hour. Thereby he was trying to reach out to every human person beyond the barriers of caste, color and creed.<sup>7</sup> The coming of the Greeks provided this decisive opportunity for Jesus to demonstrate his radical attitude towards religious identity and his readiness to transcend its limiting dimensions. The passion and death of Jesus on the cross are moments of his being lifted up from the earth. It was an act of his transcending the limitations of his human condition. His human nature was transformed by his divine nature.

5. The Parable of the Grain of Wheat

It is this inner liberation of Jesus that is explained through the parable of the grain of wheat falling into the earth and dying and thereby giving life and vitality to a new wheat plant growing out of it which bears much fruit (John 12:24). A grain of wheat that refuses to die remains alone and in course of time disintegrates and loses itself. Whatever be the reason that prompted its isolated and individualized existence, the outcome is that it is lost for ever. But a grain of wheat that is ready to part with its individualized existence becomes a source of life for many other grains. If it was one seed that died, it now gave birth to hundreds of similar seeds. What Jesus says here about the grain of wheat losing itself in order to gain its fuller meaning is expressed in the synoptic gospels through the concepts of “finding and losing,” “hating and keeping” as well as “losing and finding”: Mark writes: “Whoever wants to save his own life will lose it; but whoever loses his life for me and for the gospel will save it” (Mark 8:35). Matthew has the same message: “Those who find their life will lose it, and those who lose their life for my sake will find it” (Matt 10:39; 16:25). Luke also emphasizes this teaching in the context of the prediction of the passion: “For those who want to save their life will lose it, and those who lose their life for my sake will save it” (Luke 9:24). It means denying oneself, taking up the cross and following Christ (Mark 8:34).

---

<sup>7</sup> Cf. Joseph Pathrapankal, “Jesus and the Greeks: Reflections on a Theology of Religious Identity,” in Critical and Creative: Studies in Bible and Theology (Bangalore: Dharmaram Publications, 1986), 71–84.

It is important to note that Jesus took this example from the nature around us and through that he wanted to show that it is something basic to the very law of nature. Although these statements are in themselves paradoxical, ultimately they imply a law of life at various levels, both religious and secular. Likewise Jesus demonstrated his readiness to die to his own limited religious identity in order to become available also to the Gentiles who came in search of him. It is this death which Jesus later explains in terms of his being lifted up from the earth (John 12:32). It is clear that this bold approach to one’s own identity is against the basic tendency of all humans because all want to love their life and every aspect of that life, whether cultural, religious or social. The result is that ultimately they all lose the very life they want to safeguard. But those who are ready to part with the many selfish concerns of life will discover that through their very losing them they were gaining more. Thereby they arrive at the very meaning of life at a higher level. This is precisely what Jesus did for himself, thereby establishing a new attitude towards one’s life and identity for the sake of the whole of humankind.

As the conclusion of the parable of the grain of wheat Jesus adds: “Whoever serves me must follow me, and where I am, there will my servant be also” (John 12:26). Jesus wants all those who follow him to be ready to undergo such a kenosis in the realm of religious identity. All those who claim to be the disciples of Jesus must have the courage to transcend the limitations and particularities of their identity, social, cultural and even religious. That is the only way in which they can be where Jesus himself is. Jesus adds: "My Father will honor anyone who serves me." The Father wants them too to have a share in the glory which he has given to the Son. The honour the Father gives is the awareness he gives to them that they are not prisoners of their own identity. It is a sharing in the glory which Jesus has achieved through his redemptive death. No one can attain this glory all of a sudden; the disciples of Jesus have to work for it and experience its challenge day after day. Jesus experienced the fullness of that glory through his death after he had gradually exercised his transcending capacity during his earthly ministry on various occasions. His followers have to do the same in order to share in that glory and the honour which the Father will impart to them.

But the entire scene under discussion was a very challenging and demanding one for Jesus, and it will be so also for all his followers. Hence John 12:27 gives us a glimpse into a new predicament of the personality of Jesus, as he was getting ready to face the hour of his passion and death. Hence Jesus expressed his perplexity: "Now my soul is troubled. And what should I say—'Father, save me from this hour?' No, it is for this reason that I have come to this hour. Father, glorify your name" (John 12:27–28). These words show that Jesus was visibly disturbed and confused about his forthcoming fate; he was troubled in his innermost person. He was tempted to say "No" to the Father. No less than in the synoptic gospels, the Johannine Jesus is also fearful in the face of the awful struggle of the hour of his passion and death which he was going to face. Jesus struggles with the temptation to cry out to his Father to save him from that hour. But all of a sudden he triumphs and overcomes the temptation by submitting himself to the Father's total plans. His main and only goal is to glorify the Father's name. Then a voice from heaven came: "I have glorified it, and I will glorify it again" (John 12:28). The Father of Jesus is one who is committed to establish a new principle of God-human relationship, for which the attitude and action of Jesus are decisive. Even if it means sufferings and a painful death, it is important that Jesus goes through it, thereby making it possible for all humans to be related to each other, not on the basis of caste, colour and creed, but on the basis of the very dignity of the human person.

6. The Trans-historical Message of the Story

The story of Jesus and the Greeks, which we have analyzed above, is not just one story among the many others which happened during the earthly ministry of Jesus. It is a semiotic and paradigmatic story which has a message for every religious person, especially for Christians living in multi-religious contexts. The attitude the members of a religion should have towards their own religion and towards the followers of other religions is symbolically presented in the attitude of Jesus towards the Greeks. In the prevailing context of Jews avoiding, depreciating and even hating the Gentiles, Jesus sets the example of reaching out to the Greeks and accepting them as fellow pilgrims in the journey of life. This specific story of the Greeks wanting to meet Jesus, and Jesus taking this as an opportunity to reveal his radical attitude towards his own religious identity, has an inbuilt message which is brought out through another important saying of Jesus: "When I am lifted up from the earth, I will draw all people to myself" (John 12:32). For Jesus, his death was a moment of transcending the limitations and barriers of his human conditions. Consequently, this story with its inner message can serve as a corrective to some passages in the Bible which have in the past prompted Christians to develop a negative attitude towards the followers of other religions, such as 1 Cor 10:20–21 and 2 Cor 6:14–18.

It is clear that the context in which the author of the Fourth Gospel wrote this story did not have this additional significance it now has in our multi-religious situations. At the same time, we cannot exclude such a meaning. On the other hand, we have to say that it is included in the fuller meaning of this narrative. As we have tried to establish in the beginning of this study, a biblical text can also have a reader meaning beyond its author meaning, especially in these times when we have to live in entirely new situations, especially within the growing context of religious pluralism. It is becoming more and more clear that religious pluralism is a fact belonging to the very plan of God, which is to be accepted and respected by all.<sup>8</sup> In fact, the ever-growing religious pluralism in the world is a blessing and a challenge, not a burden we have to put up with. This healthy approach to the understanding of the Bible and biblical narratives is based on the conviction that the Word of God committed to writing is something living and active and that it can penetrate into every subtle area of human reality and open up new horizons of meanings as it encounters new historical and cultural situations (Heb 4:12). The same principle can be applied to other passages of the Bible with reference to other newly evolving situations. In order to arrive at this depth meaning of biblical texts there must emerge a new dialogue between the reader and the text, by which a new contextualized and situational meaning arises, namely, a meaning that is basically of the biblical text, not against the author-meaning and the text-meaning, but rather a meaning beyond and above them. It is the result of a creative and dialogical encounter between the reader and the text. Thereby the text begins to speak anew to the readers, and the readers react to the claims of truth made on them by the text. Consequently, there is a mutual and reciprocal openness of the reader and the text. The text is open to the questions the readers pose and the readers are open to the truth claims of the text. This truth can be said to be the further illustration of the basic meaning of the text as intended by the author.<sup>9</sup>

---

<sup>8</sup> "The religious life of mankind from now on, if it is to be lived at all, will be lived in a context of religious pluralism": Paul F. Knitter, No Other Name? (New York: Orbis Books, 1985), 2–7: Cf. W. C. Smith, The Faith of the Other Men (New York: Harper & Row, 1981), 11.

7. A New Focus on Christology

The above reflections on how Jesus of Nazareth understood his own religious identity as a Jew and how he was prepared to transcend it for the sake of the better and greater cause of the kingdom of God invite us to develop a new attitude and approach to the question of how we have to understand the Christian doctrine of the uniqueness and universality of Christ. It seems that the ongoing confrontation among theologians between the traditional Christian approach to the significance of Christ in terms of exclusivism and the newly developed concepts of inclusivism and pluralism have contributed very little for a meaningful Christology. The attempts made by some theologians to focus on a few biblical passages, such as Acts 4:12 and 1 Tim 2:5, where the uniqueness and universality of Christ for salvation are said to be positively affirmed, do not lead to any meaningful conclusion because here we have the faith proclamations of the early believers, not metaphysical statements.<sup>10</sup> It seems that the real significance of Christ is to be discussed not in an apologetic manner as a defense of faith in relation to other religions, but rather as a doctrine which has its own basis and rationale in the writings of the New Testament, which are the primary documents of our knowledge about Christ. The gospels and the other writings of the New Testament present the significance of Jesus Christ from a perspective of experience which their writers inherited from the early Christian communities. This experience is based on the fact that Jesus was totally committed to the cause of the kingdom of God with its universal perspectives, a commitment which he sealed through his death and resurrection. It is this universal and transcendent aspect of the message preached by Jesus, realized in his life, death and resurrection, experienced and understood by his immediate followers, that stands at the center of the New Testament kerygma. Jesus of Nazareth had to broaden the horizons of the religious thinking that was current in Judaism and also among other henotheistic religious traditions of his times.

---

<sup>9</sup> Cf. Paul Ricoeur, Interpretation Theory: Discourse and the Surplus Meaning (Forth Worth: Texas Christian University Press, 1976), 29–37.

What Paul F. Knitter has formulated about the whole issue of christological discussions in our times seems to offer a healthy approach to Christology in the context of religious pluralism: "If Christians, trusting in God and respecting the faith of others, engage in this new encounter with other traditions, they can expect to witness a growth or evolution such as Christianity has not experienced since its first centuries. This growth will paradoxically both preserve the identity of Christianity and at the same time transform it. Such paradox is no mystery; we are acquainted with it in our personal lives as well as in nature."<sup>11</sup> It seems that the defenders of the absolute uniqueness of Christ are somehow victims of what L. Swidler calls a kind of "boastful hybris" which is creeping into Christian claims of superiority. As opposed to this, what Jesus presents about his personality is his ultimate kenosis. The true meaning of Christ's kenosis is not that he was first divine and then he became human in order once again to regain his divinity (Phil 2:6–11). The basic issue is that Jesus of Nazareth also rejected that kind of humanity which refuses to empty itself, so that by becoming perfectly selfless and altruistic he could become the instrument of God's compassion and love for the whole of humankind.<sup>12</sup>

---

<sup>10</sup> Cf. Joseph Pathrapankal, "The Significance of Jesus Christ in the Context of Religious Pluralism: A Biblical Critique," in What does Jesus Christ Mean? The Meaningfulness of Jesus Christ amid Religious Pluralism in India, ed. Errol D'Lima and Max Gonsalves (Bangalore: NBCLC, 1999), 107–137.

<sup>11</sup> Knitter, No Other Name? 230.

What, then, is the substance and criterion of religious identity? Is it a question of being everything else except being oneself? It should be said that the true criterion of religious identity is being oneself and at the same time growing out of oneself to reach out to others. In other words, a Christian has to be a Christian and s/he has to be fully aware of her/his Christian identity and be sure of safeguarding that identity. But her/his being a Christian should not hinder her/him at any given moment from acknowledging and appreciating the authentic reality in other religious traditions. Nobody should be a slave of one's own religion and a prisoner of one's own religion and religious identity. All should have the courage and the freedom to exercise their religious identity with tolerance and appreciation of other religious traditions. Religions are only means; they are not an end in themselves. This is true of all religions. There is something divine in all religions; but there are also many things human in all religions. To confuse the human with the divine would be a mistake. The religion of Israel was constituted by God through the various historical events which became the basic framework of that religion. But in the course of its history it became overshadowed by many human realities. Jesus was born and brought up as a member of this religion, characterized by its legalism and formalism on the one hand, and a lack of inner richness on the other hand. Being a member of that religion, Jesus tried to establish his religious identity by going and growing out of that restricted identity whenever and wherever he found it necessary. The many stories we have in the gospels are proof of this approach of Jesus, e.g. the criticism of Jewish regulations such as the Sabbath rest, or the appreciation and recognition of the followers of other religions for their profound faith. This is true of all the gospels. The story of the Greeks seeking to meet Jesus and Jesus responding to them in a very positive manner forms the climax of this transcending character of understanding religious identity in the theology of John. As the concluding story of the Book of Signs, the story reveals the meaning of the death of Jesus as a glorification and also as his being lifted up from this earth so that he could thereby draw all humans to himself. In this sense the story of Jesus and the Greeks is a paradigmatic and semiotic story which has a message for every religious person, especially for all Christians, living in our ever-growing multi-religious contexts.

---

<sup>12</sup> Cf. J. S. Samartha, One Christ—Many Religions (New York: Orbis Books, 1991), 155.

JESUS AND THE SYNAGOGUE<sup>1</sup>

GRAHAM H. TWELFTREE

The synagogues of first-century Palestine are important to both Jews and Christians. For Jews they are important because it is out of them that Judaism sprang. These synagogues are also important to Christianity. For example, the synoptic gospels portray Jesus as habitually attending synagogues in the Galilee to speak and, frequently, to heal people there.<sup>2</sup>

In a recent explosion of studies,<sup>3</sup> there is considerable debate about the place and date of the origin of the synagogue.<sup>4</sup> More directly relevant to this chapter are the issues of the existence of synagogue buildings in first-century Palestine, as well as whether synagogues functioned primarily as communal or as religious institutions. Further, since local influences are now seen to have been crucial in shaping the synagogue, there is decreasing confidence that what can be known about the synagogues in one part of the ancient world can be applied uncritically to understand them in another.<sup>5</sup> Moreover, doubts have been raised about

---

<sup>1</sup> I am particularly grateful to Paul V. M. Flesher, Susan Haber and Anders Runesson for their careful reading of and comments on an earlier draft of this chapter, and to Rodney C. Platt Jr. for help with proofreading.

<sup>2</sup> Mark 1:21/Luke 4:33; Mark 1:29/Luke 4:38; Mark 1:39/Matt 4:23/Luke 4:44; Mark 3:1/Matt 12:9/Luke 6:6; Mark 6:2/Matt 13:54/Luke 4:16; M: Matt 9:35; L: Luke 4:15, 20, 28; 13:10; John 6:59; 18:20.

<sup>3</sup> See Lee I. Levine, The Ancient Synagogue, 2nd ed. (New Haven, CT: Yale University Press, 2005), 9–17; idem, “The First-Century Synagogue: Critical Reassessments and Assessments of the Critical,” in Religion and Society in Roman Palestine, ed. Douglas R. Edwards (New York and London: Routledge, 2004), 70–102, at 70–71; James F. Strange, “Synagogue,” in Encyclopedia of the Historical Jesus, ed. Craig A. Evans (New York and London: Routledge, 2008), 612–616.

<sup>4</sup> Joseph Gutmann, “The Origin of the Synagogue: The Current State of Research” (1972), in The Synagogue: Studies in Origins, Archaeology, and Architecture, ed. idem (New York: Ktav, 1975), 72–76; Rachel Hachlili, “The Origin of the Synagogue: A Re-Assessment,” JSJ 28 (1997): 34–47; Donald D. Binder, Into the Temple Courts, SBLDS 169 (Atlanta, SBL, 1999); Anders Runesson, The Origins of the Synagogue, ConBNT 37 (Stockholm: Almqvist & Wiksell, 2001); The Ancient Synagogue from Its Origins until 200 C.E., ed. Birger Olsson and Magnus Zetterholm, ConBNT 39 (Stockholm: Almqvist & Wiksell, 2003); and the methodological discussion by Anders Runesson, “The Origins of the Synagogue in Past and Present Research—Some Comments on Definitions, Theories, and Sources,” ST 58 (2004): 60–76.

<sup>5</sup> Lee I. Levine, “The First Century C.E. Synagogue in Historical Perspective,” in ed. Synagogue, Olsson and Zetterholm, 1–24.

whether Jesus ever had any thing to do with the synagogues<sup>6</sup> and it has been suggested he would have been excluded from them if he had attempted to attend.<sup>7</sup>

Given the state of flux in synagogue studies, it behoves students of the historical Jesus to pay close attention to aspects of these discussions, as well as, from time to time, to reassess our understanding of the relationship between Jesus and the synagogue and what that can tell us about him.<sup>8</sup> Therefore, the purpose of this chapter is to set out what we can know about the synagogue in the time and place of the ministry of the historical Jesus so that, in conjunction with an examination of the gospel data, this information can be used to help shed light on Jesus through understanding his relationship with the synagogue.

In setting out what we know about the synagogue in the time and place of Jesus we are able to take into account an inscription, archeological evidence and literary sources. We need to exercise considerable care and restraint in using data from the New Testament for it is likely that early Christian experiences of the synagogues in the Diaspora have been projected chronologically back and cross-culturally into the period and experience of Jesus and his followers in Palestine.<sup>9</sup> The same or greater care is to be exercised in relation to the rabbinic literature<sup>10</sup> so that we will make only very limited and cautious use of it. In this exercise, at times, just as important as the evidence we discover will be the evidence we do not find about the synagogue. Before subjecting the gospel data to critical scrutiny we will attempt to establish otherwise what can be known about the synagogue in the time and place of the historical Jesus.

---

<sup>6</sup> Jürgen Becker, Jesus of Nazareth (New York: de Gruyter, 1998), 29–30. See the discussion by James D. G. Dunn, “Did Jesus Attend Synagogue?” in Jesus and Archeology, ed. James H. Charlesworth (Grand Rapids, MI and Cambridge, UK: Eerdmans, 2006), 206–222.

<sup>7</sup> Bruce Chilton, Rabbi Jesus (New York: Image/Doubleday, 2002), 16, 21.

<sup>8</sup> Cf. Dunn, “Synagogue?” 206–222.

<sup>9</sup> Cf. Paul V. M. Flesher, “Palestinian Synagogues before 70 C.E.: A Review of the Evidence,” in Ancient Synagogues, 2 vols., ed. Dan Urman and Paul V. M. Flesher (Leiden: Brill, 1995), 1:27–39, at 32.

<sup>10</sup> Stuart S. Miller, “On the Number of Synagogues in the Cities of ’Eretz Israel,” JJS 49 (1998): 51–66.

1. The Synagogue in First-Century Palestine

Even though E. P. Sanders called it a “remarkably ill-informed and often incoherent” paper,<sup>11</sup> in it H. C. Kee sparked an intense debate by championing the view that, in first-century CE Palestine, as well as in the Diaspora, the word συναγωγή<sup>12</sup> was used for informal gatherings or assemblies of people but not for formal meetings or for buildings.<sup>13</sup> However, a review of the evidence shows that it is incontestable that, as well as private dwellings which may have been used for meetings, there were synagogue buildings where Jews assembled formally, including in areas familiar to Jesus. Further, though limited, the evidence is such that we can draw some conclusions about who was using these buildings and for what purposes.

An Inscription

The only inscription available to us in the debate about the existence and function of the synagogue meetings and buildings in pre-70 CE Palestine is the Theodotus inscription (CIJ II 1404).<sup>14</sup> It reads:

<sup>11</sup> E. P. Sanders, Jewish Law from Jesus to the Mishnah (London: SCM, 1990), 341 n. 28.

<sup>12</sup> For the variety of Hebrew, Greek and Latin terms used for the English word “synagogue” see Martin Hengel, “Proseuche und Synagoge: Jüdische Gemeinde, Gotteshaus und Gottesdienst in der Diaspora und in Palästina,” in Tradition und Glaube: Das frühe Christentum in seiner Umwelt, ed. Gert Jeremias et al. (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1971), 157–84.

<sup>13</sup> Howard C. Kee, “The Transformation of the Synagogue after 70 CE: Its Import for Early Christianity,” NTS 36 (1990): 1–24; idem, “Defining the First Century CE Synagogue: Problems and Progress,” NTS 41 (1995): 481–500, reprinted (with slight revisions) in Evolution of the Synagogue, ed. idem and Lynn H. Cohick (Harrisburg, PA: TPI, 1999), 7–26. See also Richard E. Oster, “Supposed Anachronism in Luke–Acts’ Use of ΣΥΝΑΓΩΓΗ: A Rejoinder to H. C. Kee,” NTS 39 (1993): 178–208; Howard C. Kee, “The Changing Meaning of Synagogue: A Response to Richard Oster,” NTS 40 (1994): 281–283; K. Atkinson, “On Further Defining the First-Century CE Synagogue: Fact or Fiction? A Rejoinder to H. C. Kee,” NTS 43 (1997): 491–502.

<sup>14</sup> See Raymond Weill, La Cité de David; Compte rendu des fouilles exécutées à Jérusalem, sur le site de la ville primitive, campagne de 1913–14, 2 vols. (Paris: Geuthner, 1920), 1:186–90; G. M. FitzGerald, “Theodotus Inscription,” PEFQS 53 (1921): 175–181. Most recently, and on the significance of the epigraphic evidence, see John S. Kloppenborg, “The Theodotus Synagogue Inscription and the Problem of First-Century Synagogue Buildings,” in Jesus and Archeology, ed. James H. Charlesworth (Grand Rapids, Mich.: Eerdmans, 2006), 236–282, at 252 and nn. 55 and 65, a shortened and revised form of John S. Kloppenborg, “Dating Theodotos (CIJ II 1404),” JJS 51 (2000): 243–280.

Theodotos son of Vettenus priest and synagogue leader (ἀρχισυνάγωγος) son of a synagogue leader (ἀρχισυν[αγώ]- γ[ου]) grandson of a synagogue leader (ἀρχισυν[α]γώγου) built the synagogue (τὴν συναγωγὴν)<sup>15</sup> for reading the law and for teaching commandments and the guest room and the bedrooms and the water fittings for a lodging for those in need from afar which his father founded with (καί) the presbyters and Simonides.<sup>16</sup>

Most critical for our purposes is the date of this inscription.<sup>17</sup> To begin with, the inscription could not have been brought from another geographical area<sup>18</sup> for it is fashioned from local limestone. The particular archeological context of this discovery<sup>19</sup> is the eastern slope of the City of David where Yigal Shiloh found nothing in the immediate area that dated later than the Herodian period,<sup>20</sup> and also the debris in the area after 70 CE inhibited construction; for most of the ensuing Roman period it was largely outside the built-up municipal area.<sup>21</sup> Also, the historical setting helps us in that the inscription must come from before the fall of Jerusalem when there were some wealthy priestly families in the city, and when they thought it worthwhile adding accommodation and bathing facilities for Greek-speaking pilgrims.<sup>22</sup> Further, paleographically the inscription probably belongs to the first century of our era.<sup>23</sup>

Also important for our purposes, the inscription is likely to have been

<sup>15</sup> Kloppenborg, "Dating Theodotos," 244 and Kloppenborg, "Theodotus Synagogue," 252 translates this "assembly hall."

<sup>16</sup> Cf. the translations by Rainer Riesner, "Synagogues in Jerusalem," in The Book of Acts in Its First Century Setting, vol. 4, ed. Richard Bauckham, The Book of Acts in Its Palestinian Setting (Grand Rapids, MI; Eerdmans and Carlisle, UK: Paternoster, 1995), 179–211, at 193; Kloppenborg, "Dating Theodotos," 244 and Levine, Ancient Synagogue, 58.

<sup>17</sup> See esp. Kloppenborg, "Theodotus Synagogue," 253–277.

<sup>18</sup> As thought by Théodore Reinach, "L'inscription de Théodotos," RÉJ 71 (1920): 46–56, at 55–56.

<sup>19</sup> See the summary by Riesner, "Synagogues," 195–198, cf. 211 for a map of the excavation areas in Jerusalem—City of David.

<sup>20</sup> Yigal Shiloh, Excavations at the City of David I (1978–1982) (Jerusalem: Institute of Archeology, Hebrew University of Jerusalem, 1984), 9.

<sup>21</sup> See Jane M. Cahill and David Tarler, "Excavations Directed by Yigal Shiloh at the City of David, 1978–1985," in Ancient Jerusalem Revealed, ed. Hillel Geva (Jerusalem: Israel Exploration Society, 1994), 31–45, at 42.

<sup>22</sup> So Sanders, Law, 341 n. 28.

<sup>23</sup> See Kloppenborg, "Dating Theodotos," 276–277. A fragment of a dedicatory inscription with lettering comparable to the Theodotus inscription has been found near the southern wall of the Temple area that can be dated from the twentieth year of Herod the Great (18/17 BCE). See Benjamin Isaac, "A Donation for Herod's Temple in Jerusalem," IEJ 33 (1983): 86–92.

discovered in the vicinity of what was a synagogue,<sup>24</sup> for it was found in a cistern with other finely worked stones and parts of columns that had been deposited in an orderly fashion as if for later use.<sup>25</sup> Rosettes and simple geometric patterns adorn some of these stones as at the Gamla synagogue.<sup>26</sup> Also, since the inscription mentions water fittings, it is notable that nearby the site of discovery there are three ritual baths and a little basin which could have served as a storage pool for the baths (cf. m. Miqv. 1:7; 4:4). Thus it is reasonable to maintain that the inscription was discovered near a synagogue and to conclude with Riesner that it is “very probable that we have here the remains of the synagogue mentioned in the Theodotus inscription.”<sup>27</sup>

The significance of this inscription for us, along with the associated architectural remains, is that not only do we have solid evidence of an elegant synagogue building with ritual baths and rooms for accommodating foreign Greek-speaking travellers in Palestine in the early first century, but also that the building existed two generations before the inscription, i.e. around the turn of the era.<sup>28</sup> With the current question in scholarship regarding who ran the synagogues in first-century Palestine,<sup>29</sup> it is notable that we learn here that the ἀρχισυνάγωγος was a wealthy priest, and had been so for three generations.<sup>30</sup> On the basis of the paternal Roman name Vettenus, suggesting he was a freedman coming from the Diaspora and therefore conservative and that Theodotus was interested in the synagogue for teaching, perhaps it could be said that he was a Pharisee.<sup>31</sup> But Theodotus could just as easily be a Sadducee or of no particular party.<sup>32</sup> However, since this is a

<sup>24</sup> Riesner, “Synagogues,” 197.

<sup>25</sup> See the description by Riesner, “Synagogues,” 197. However, the pieces would seem to have only limited, perhaps sentimental, value. The obvious question is whether the pieces were deposited quickly for safe keeping in 70 CE when the city was destroyed.

<sup>26</sup> Riesner, “Synagogues,” 197–198; Chaim Ben-David, “Golan Gem: The Ancient Synagogue of Deir Aziz,” BAR 33.6 (2007): 45–51, at 50 (picture).

<sup>27</sup> Riesner, “Synagogues,” 198, following Weill, La Cité de David, 1:9. So also Hillel Geva, “Jerusalem: The Second Temple Period,” in NEAEHL 2:717–724, at 723.

<sup>28</sup> Cf. Riesner, “Synagogues,” 200.

<sup>29</sup> Cf. Stuart S. Miller, “The Rabbis and the Non-Existent Monolithic Synagogue,” in Jews, Christians, and Polytheists in the Ancient Synagogue, ed. Steven Fine (London and New York: Routledge, 1999), 57–70.

<sup>30</sup> It cannot be assumed that the ἀρχισυνάγωγος is hereditary, for successive generations could have been elected to the position. See n. 89 below and the discussion in Bernadette J. Broonen, Women Leaders in the Ancient Synagogue (Chico, CA: Scholars Press, 1982), 25.

<sup>31</sup> So Martin Hengel, Between Jesus and Paul (London: SCM, 1983), 18.

<sup>32</sup> E. P. Sanders, Judaism: Practice and Belief, 63 BCE–66 CE (London: SCM, 1992), 177.

semi-public synagogue<sup>33</sup> or association synagogue of Diaspora Jews, he is at least likely to come from a particular group of Jews.<sup>34</sup> In any case, it was primarily the priests who remained the teachers in the first century.<sup>35</sup> The inscription further tells us that the building functioned as a place for reading the law and teaching the commandments, as well as an inn for Jews from the Diaspora. However, there is no mention of prayer, which is understandable given the proximity of the Temple.<sup>36</sup> In the use of πρεσβύτεροι a governing or leading body is implied and the mention of Simonides without a title indicates that there could have been, if not leaders,<sup>37</sup> at least significant people associated with the synagogue who bore no title. The inscription itself is an example of using a synagogue to give ongoing recognition to benefactors to the institution.

Archeological Evidence

For possible synagogues in pre-70 CE Eretz Israel we have the archeological remains of buildings at Gamla, Herodium, Masada, Modi'in, Qumran and, perhaps, Capernaum.<sup>38</sup> That the building at Gamla and the Zealot reconstructions of the buildings at Herodium<sup>39</sup> and

---

<sup>33</sup> On the terms "semi-public" and "public synagogues" used in this chapter to distinguish between synagogues such as this one and those of the Essenes from those used by the whole Jewish community, see Runesson, Origins, 213–232.

<sup>34</sup> See Runesson, Origins, 228, 314–316.

<sup>35</sup> See the discussion of the evidence by Sanders, Judaism, 170–176.

<sup>36</sup> Cf. Paul V. M. Flesher, "Prolegomenon to a Theory of Early Synagogue Development," in Judaism in Late Antiquity, ed. A. Avery-Peck and J. Neusner, Part 3, Vol. 4: Where We Stand: Issues and Debates in Ancient Judaism, The Special Problem of the Synagogue (Leiden: Brill, 2001), 121–153, at 146, citing Lee I. Levine, "The Second Temple Synagogue: The Formative Years," in Levine, The Synagogue in Late Antiquity, 7–31 (19–21). Cf., e.g., Josephus, Life 277.

<sup>37</sup> Cf. Brooten, Women Leaders, 25, 230 n. 98.

<sup>38</sup> For other candidates, such as Qiryat Sefer and Jericho, see Levine, Ancient Synagogue, ch. 3; Runesson, Origins, 181–182; James F. Strange, "The Synagogue as Metaphor," in Judaism in Late Antiquity, ed. Avery-Peck and Neusner, 93–113; Peter Richardson, "An Architectural Case for Synagogues As Associations," in Synagogue, ed. Olsson and Zetterholm, 90–117; James F. Strange, "Archaeology and Ancient Synagogues up to about 200 C.E.," in Synagogue, ed. Olsson and Zetterholm, 37–62, reprinted in Judaism in Late Antiquity, 483–508; Levine, "First-Century Synagogue," 84–89.

<sup>39</sup> See Joseph Patrich, "Corbo's Excavation at Herodium: A Review Article," IEJ 42 (1992): 241–245, at 243, followed by Binder, Temple, 184, who also suggests that the Sicarii who held Herodium from c. 66–71 CE and were cut off from Jerusalem, had ample opportunity and motive to develop a synagogue.

Masada<sup>40</sup> as well as at Modi'in<sup>41</sup> were synagogues is clear from their having benches along three or four walls and miqva'ot nearby<sup>42</sup> and from their floor plans, which are more or less identical to those in later buildings identified as synagogues by inscriptions.<sup>43</sup>

Although there is nothing particularly religious about any of these buildings—no obvious place for the Torah shrine, no religious art or inscriptions<sup>44</sup>—the discovery of the Ezekiel scroll at Masada in the room adjacent to the building suggests that reading the prophets as well as the Torah may have been part of the meetings there.<sup>45</sup> Also, the discovery of fragments from Genesis, Leviticus, Psalms and the Songs of the Sabbath Sacrifice, Sirach and Jubilees in the vicinity of this synagogue suggests that they too were used in the meetings. That the building at Gamla, including an adjoining study room<sup>46</sup>—the only one securely identified as a synagogue in the pre-70 CE Galilee-Golan region<sup>47</sup>—is the only public building so far known to have existed in the town, and the fact that the internal plan is reminiscent of Hellenistic public halls (bouleuterion or ecclesiasterion),<sup>48</sup> suggests that at least this synagogue

<sup>40</sup> G. Foerster, "The Synagogues at Masada and Herodium," Eretz Israel 11 (1973): 224–228 (in Hebrew) abridged in Ancient Synagogues Revealed, ed. Lee I. Levine (Jerusalem: The Israel Exploration Society and Detroit: Wayne State University Press, 1982), 24–29.

<sup>41</sup> See Levine, "First-Century Synagogue," 86–87.

<sup>42</sup> Runesson, Origins, 177. The link between the baths and the synagogue was probably one of practical convenience rather than ritual necessity. That is, synagogue and bath were located together as a matter of convenience so that individuals could use the miqveh to attend to ritual purity on a regular basis. However, those attending the synagogue did not regularly bathe before entering. For, as Susan Haber has pointed out, we have no literary evidence that ritual washing was required in relation to the synagogue, and it is difficult to imagine how large groups of people attending meetings at a synagogue could be accommodated by one miqveh. See Susan Haber, "Common Judaism, Common Synagogue? Purity, Holiness and Sacred Space at the Turn of the Common Era," in Common Judaism Explored: Second Temple Judaism in Context, ed. Adele Reinhartz and Wayne McCready (Minneapolis: Fortress, 2008), 63–77. I am grateful to the author for the opportunity to see her paper prior to publication.—For reservations about the Herodium and Masada being synagogues see Flesher, "Palestinian," 1:34–38.

<sup>43</sup> Strange, "Synagogue," 615.

<sup>44</sup> Lee I. Levine, "Archeology and the Religious Ethos of Pre-70 Palestine," in Hillel and Jesus, ed. James H. Charlesworth and Loren L. Johns (Minneapolis: Fortress, 1997), 113.

<sup>45</sup> See Binder, Temple, 178–179.

<sup>46</sup> Shmaryahu Gutman, "Gamala," in NEAEHL, 2:469–463, at 461–462.

<sup>47</sup> Danny Syon, "Gamla: Portrait of a Rebellion," BAR January/February (1992): 21–37, at 32; Z. Ma'oz, "The Synagogue of Gamla and the Typology of Second-Temple Synagogues," in Ancient Synagogues Revealed, ed. Lee I. Levine (Jerusalem: The Israel Exploration Society and Detroit: Wayne State University Press, 1982), 35–41, at 35–37.

<sup>48</sup> On the architectural models for the synagogue see G. Foerster, "Architectural was a public building and first and foremost a communal institution.<sup>49</sup> Notably, these buildings have no structure that would have been used as a speaker's platform. Instead, focus is on the central area which was well lit by clerestorial windows. Surrounded by columns, limited vision suggests that hearing was more important than seeing and that declaiming the sacred text and discussions rather than single presentations featured in meetings.<sup>50</sup>

At Qumran we could expect there would be a semi-public synagogue in the light of Philo's report of the Essenes (Prob. 81–82).<sup>51</sup> Since one of the rooms (room 4) contained seating benches on all four walls, it was most probably a place of assembly.<sup>52</sup> However, the small size of the room means that probably only the elite could have met there.<sup>53</sup> On the other hand, in room 77, the largest room in the complex, a paved area in one corner served as a base for a wooden platform used by a leader.<sup>54</sup> Thus it is reasonable to suppose that IQS V, 2–5 (“They shall eat, pray, and deliberate together”) could describe the synagogue-like functions of this room.<sup>55</sup> With two rooms likely to serve such functions, it is reasonable to suppose that, so far as non-sectarian documents reflect the thinking of those at Qumran, the terms “house of worship” (CD XI, 21–23), “house of the Torah” (CD XX, 10, 13) and “house of meeting” (IQM III, 4) would indicate the purpose of meetings or gatherings, as much as a particular room.<sup>56</sup> In any case, given the nature of the community the synagogue could only be for semi-public or even private synagogue meetings.

---

Models of the Greco-Roman Period and the Origin of the ‘Galilean’ Synagogue,” in Ancient Synagogues Revealed, ed. Lee I. Levine (Jerusalem: The Israel Exploration Society and Detroit: Wayne State University Press, 1982), 45–48, and Strange, “Archaeology and Ancient Synagogues,” 488–489.

<sup>49</sup> So Levine, Ancient Synagogue, 55.

<sup>50</sup> Cf. Ma'oz, “The Synagogue of Gamla,” 40; Strange, “Archaeology and Ancient Synagogues,” 490–492; Strange, “Synagogue,” 615.

<sup>51</sup> Since the closest genre and contents parallels to IQS are the statutes of Hellenistic associations, Matthias Klinghardt, “The Manual of Discipline in the Light of Statutes of Hellenistic Associations,” in Methods of Investigation of the Dead Sea Scrolls and the Khirbet Qumran Site, ed. Michael O. Wise et al. (New York: New York Academy of Sciences, 1994), 251–270, at 252, presumes what was a religious association rather than a cenobitic “sect” at Qumran to be a synagogue community.

<sup>52</sup> Runesson, Origins, 179.

<sup>53</sup> Ibid., 179.

<sup>54</sup> R. de Vaux, Archeology and the Dead Sea Scrolls (Oxford: Oxford University Press for the British Academy, 1973), 11.

<sup>55</sup> So Runesson, Origins, 180–181.

<sup>56</sup> That these are not references to the Temple in Jerusalem see, e.g., Daniel K. Falk, Daily, Sabbath, and Festival Prayers in the Dead Sea Scrolls (Leiden: Brill, 1998), 136, 233, 243–245.

At Capernaum, the foundations of the late-fourth- to mid-fifth-century synagogue are the base of the walls of a first-century CE building.<sup>57</sup> The earlier building was probably for public use, since it is constructed of basalt rather than uncut stone and beaten-earth floors.<sup>58</sup> That it is possibly a public synagogue<sup>59</sup> is suggested by a number of factors: it is the only large (24.4 × 18.5 m)<sup>60</sup> building in the village of about 15 acres; several column drums (probably from this building) were discovered beneath the later building and the later building (a synagogue) used the walls of the earlier one as foundations; this is significant because synagogues of the later period were built on earlier ones, since these were considered sacred.<sup>61</sup> That this building has no associated miqveh need not count against its being a synagogue, for it was sited by the shore of the lake.<sup>62</sup>

Literary Sources

Here we have evidence from the New Testament, the Dead Sea Scrolls, Philo and Josephus. (a) In the New Testament one place that might be relatively free of anachronism in relation to the synagogues—because of its apparently unnecessary detail—is Acts 6:9. Luke mentions τῆς συναγωγῆς (singular) of the Freedmen in Jerusalem.<sup>63</sup> The most natural reading of the text is that this semi-public synagogue involves Cyrenians, Alexandrians, and others from Cilicia and Asia. The reasonableness of Luke's statement is seen in that the Theodotian inscription belongs to a synagogue accommodating foreign travellers in Jerusalem,<sup>64</sup> and rabbinic sources agree that there was a synagogue of the Alexandrians in Jerusalem.<sup>65</sup>

<sup>57</sup> Note Virgilio C. Corbo, The House of St. Peter at Capernaum (Jerusalem: Franciscan, 1969); Stanislaw Loffreda, "Capernaum: The Synagogue," NEAEHL 1:291–295, 296 and those cited; Stanislaw Loffreda, Recovering Capharnaum, 2nd ed. (Jerusalem: Franciscan Printing, 1993).

<sup>58</sup> See the summary discussion by Binder, Temple, 186–193.

<sup>59</sup> See Loffreda, Recovering Capharnaum, 48.

<sup>60</sup> Strange, "Synagogue," 614. Cf. Loffreda, "Capernaum: The Synagogue," 1:292.

<sup>61</sup> Binder, Temple, 192 citing Rachel Hachlili, Ancient Jewish Art and Archaeology in the Land of Israel (Leiden: Brill, 1988), 148–149; cf. Loffreda, "Capernaum: The Synagogue," 1:292.

<sup>62</sup> Cf. Susan Haber, n. 40 above.

<sup>63</sup> That only one synagogue is intended see, e.g., Colin J. Hemer, The Book of Acts in the Setting of Hellenistic History, WUNT 49 (Tübingen: Mohr, 1989), 176.

<sup>64</sup> On the speculation that the synagogue of Acts 6:9 is the Theodotian synagogue see the discussion by Riesner, "Synagogues," 205.

<sup>65</sup> See t. Meg. 2:6, 12, 17; j. Meg. 3:1:III D.

(b) From the Dead Sea Scrolls, what is most interesting to us is the material which is applicable to the Essenes—known to us only in Palestine<sup>66</sup>—who lived in the towns and villages. It can be gathered from the Scrolls that the worship of the Essenes included praise to God, confession, blessings, prayers, a sacred communal meal and hymns.<sup>67</sup> However, Heather McKay has argued that in the Judaism of the period there is no evidence that the general population was expected to be involved in worship nor that there was any distinctive Sabbath worship until well after our period.<sup>68</sup> At least the evidence from the Scrolls points in another direction. In particular, from 1QS VI, 2–5, which says that a priest shall always be present at gatherings, it can be assumed that both clergy and laity were involved in any worship.<sup>69</sup> Further, 4Q504, a non-sectarian document, clearly identifies songs for use on the Sabbath (4Q504 1–2 VII, 7:4). And there is a clear distinction between the petitionary prayers for the weekdays and the strictly doxological prayers for the Sabbath.<sup>70</sup> Thus we could expect that, at least among the Essenes across Palestine, distinctive Sabbath praise-orientated worship took place involving the general membership, as well as clergy. Along with the discovery of fragments of the Torah near one of the large rooms, the non-sectarian Damascus Document<sup>71</sup> referring to a house of the Torah (CD XX, 10, 13, see above) probably shows that Essene gatherings also involved the reading of the Torah (cf. Philo, Prob. 81).

Further, for those who used προσευχή for the synagogue,<sup>72</sup> there is the implication that it was a venue—either during the week or on the

<sup>66</sup> Josephus, War 2.124; Philo, Prob. 75–76; Hypoth. 11.1.

<sup>67</sup> Cf. Geza Vermes, The Complete Dead Sea Scrolls in English (London: Penguin, 1997), 80–81.

<sup>68</sup> Heather A. McKay, Sabbath and Synagogue (Boston: Brill, 2001). See the detailed critical discussion by Pieter W. van der Horst, “Was the Synagogue a Place of Sabbath Worship Before 70 CE?” in Jews, Christians, and Polytheists in the Ancient Synagogue, ed. Steven Fine (London: Routledge, 1999), 18–43, at 23–37.

<sup>69</sup> Cf. Binder, Temple, 466 n. 46.

<sup>70</sup> So E. Glickler Chazon, “On the Special Character of Sabbath Prayer: New Data from Qumran,” Journal of Jewish Music and Liturgy 15 (1992–1993): 1–21, esp. 12.

<sup>71</sup> See CD XII, 19, 23; Geza Vermes, The Dead Sea Scrolls: Qumran in Perspective (London: SCM, 1982), 97.

<sup>72</sup> The earliest evidence (third century BCE Egypt) for προσευχή being used for Jewish buildings see William Horbury and David Noy, Jewish Inscriptions of Graeco-Roman Egypt (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1992), nos. 22 (esp. pp. 36–37) and 117 (esp. p. 202). Also Philo, Flacc. 41, 45, 47, 48, 49, 53, 122; Legat. 132, 134 137, 138, 152, 156, 157, 165, 191, 346, 371; Josephus, Life 277, 280, 293; Apion 2.10; See Hengel, “Proseuche und Synagoge,” 157–83; Irina Levinskaya, “A Jewish or Gentile Prayer House? The Meaning of ἱεροσέyxη,” TynBul 41 (1990): 154–159. For a more nuanced and recent discussion on Josephus, Ant. 14.257–258 in particular see Stephen Catto, “Does προσευχὸς ποιεῖθαι, in Josephus’ Antiquities of the Jews 14.257–58, mean ‘Build Places of Prayer’?” JSJ 35 (2004): 159–168.

Sabbath—not only for spoken prayers but also for worship with singing. For in the Jewish tradition “prayer” could be expected to involve both speaking and singing,<sup>73</sup> a point confirmed when taking into account what has just been noted about Essenes referring to songs for Sabbath use.<sup>74</sup> Further to the point that worship took place in synagogues, Pieter van der Horst notes the corroborating evidence from L.A.B., a document that may have been written in Palestine at the turn of the first century,<sup>75</sup> saying that, “You shall not do any work on it [the Sabbath], . . . except to praise the Lord in the congregation of the elders” (11.8).<sup>76</sup> This shows that, at least for some Jews, a Sabbath gathering involved worship.

(c) From Philo we learn that on the seventh day the Essenes “proceed to sacred places which they call synagogues” (Prob. 81). These “sacred places” (ἱεροῦς . . . τόπους) could be buildings or open spaces for meetings; but they are certainly not gatherings of people.<sup>77</sup> In any case, from the plural συναγωγῶν<sup>78</sup> we can suppose that Philo is not (only?) referring to a synagogue at Qumran but to synagogues of the Essenes across Palestine where their members lived,<sup>79</sup> at least in Jerusalem (which he had visited, Prov. 64), perhaps including in an Essene quarter,<sup>80</sup> and north west Judea (cf. Josephus, War 2.567), for example.

For at least some Essenes, worship in their semi-public synagogues was probably a substitute for that at the Temple. It is true that there is no evidence at Qumran of an altar or any sacrificial activities,<sup>81</sup> and Philo says the Essenes show themselves devout not by sacrificing animals but by “resolving to sanctify their minds.”<sup>82</sup> This might lead us

<sup>73</sup> Johannes Herrmann, “εὐχομαι, κτλ.,” TDNT 2:775–808 (785) notes that פָּרַחַת (“prayer”) is often a parallel for שָׁרַח (“sing”) in the Psalter, citing Pss 54:2; 55:1; 61:1; 84:8; 86:6; 102:1; 143:1. We can add that, in the cases of Pss 54, 55 and 61 stringed instruments are expected as accompaniment.

<sup>74</sup> See van der Horst, “Worship,” 23–37.

<sup>75</sup> See Howard Jacobson, A Commentary on Pseudo-Philo’s Liber Antiquitatum Biblicarum, 2 vols. (Leiden: Brill, 1996), 1:199–211.

<sup>76</sup> van der Horst, “Worship,” 18–23.

<sup>77</sup> Cf. Oster, “Anachronism,” 190–191.

<sup>78</sup> In Philo συναγωγή occurs in Post. 67 (x2) and Agr. 44 (x2) each citing Num 27:16–17; also Prob. 81; cf. QG 2.66; QE 1.19.

<sup>79</sup> Philo, Hypoth. 11.1; Prob. 76, 85 mentions their living in homes as they did not at Qumran (see above). Cf. Josephus, War 2.124.

<sup>80</sup> See Bargil Pixner, “An Essene Quarter on Mount Zion,” Studia Hierosolymitana 1 (1976): 245–84 and idem, “Jerusalem’s Essene Gateway: Where the Community Lived in Jesus’ Time,” BAR 23.3 (1997): 22–31, 64, 66.

<sup>81</sup> See the discussion by William Wesley Grashman, Priestly Synagogue (PhD dissertation, University of Aberdeen, 1985), 425–426 reported by Binder, Temple, 464. On the general unlikelihood of sacrificial activity in synagogues, see Levine, “First-Century Synagogue,” 76.

<sup>82</sup> Philo, Prob. 75. Cf. 1QS VIII, 8–9; IX, 4–5.

to conclude that the Temple still had a place for them. However, the Scrolls themselves say that their community was the sacrifice offered to God (1QS VIII, 4–5; 4Q265 frg. 7:2). Also, the Damascus Document uses language for Essene worship which is characteristic of the biblical terminology for the Jerusalem temple-cult.<sup>83</sup> Moreover, since there was probably an Essene synagogue in Jerusalem,<sup>84</sup> it shows that at least some Jerusalemites and, we can probably assume, others elsewhere in Palestine had developed the idea of a place of prayer, worship and study of the Law apart from the Temple.

Philo gives the impression that the Essenes go to the synagogue only on the Sabbath or, at least, that the Sabbath is the focus of attention, as he does when he says elsewhere that the Jews go to their “prayer houses” (προσευχαί) “mainly” (μάλα) on the Sabbath (Legat. 156). In any case, in the Essene Sabbath meetings Philo says: “There, arranged in rows according to their ages, the younger below the elder, they sit decorously as befits the occasion with attentive ears. Then one takes the books and reads aloud and another of especial proficiency comes forward and expounds what is not understood” (Prob. 81–82).<sup>85</sup> Elsewhere he describes this interpretation as allegorical (Contempl. 28). That the worship event involved singing is strongly suggested when Philo says that not only do they have the writings of men of old, but “they do not confine themselves to contemplation but also compose hymns and psalms to God in all sorts of metres and melodies which they write down with the rhythms necessarily made more solemn” (Contempl. 29). Even though this describes a sectarian situation, it is likely to be more widely representative of synagogue meetings for, apart from the singing, it is reminiscent of what is found in Luke 4:16–21 and Acts 13:14–16. Also, it is similar to a general description of synagogue meetings Philo gives elsewhere: “some priest who is present or one of the elders<sup>86</sup> reads

<sup>83</sup> Annette Steudel, “The Houses of Prostration CD IX, 21–XII, 1—Duplicates of the Temple (1),” RevQ 16 (1993–1995): 49–68, at 56 and nn. 38–41.

<sup>84</sup> Cf. Josephus, Ant. 13.311–313; 15.373–376; 17.347.

<sup>85</sup> Cf. Philo Contempl. 28; Luke 4:20–21; Acts 13:15. It is puzzling that there is no reference in the Scrolls to the public reading of Scripture. Perhaps, in the light of the ongoing study of Scripture at Qumran or due to an aversion to imitate other synagogues, like the Samaritans, the people at Qumran did not have such public readings. See Levine, Ancient Synagogue, 64. More likely, in view of the mention of a house of Torah (CD XX, 10, 13), such reading was taken for granted, a point supported by Philo’s observation that the books were read aloud in the Essene meetings in the towns (Philo, Prob. 81–82).

<sup>86</sup> On the difficulty of pinpointing the function of the elder see Levine, Ancient Synagogue, 432–434.

the holy laws to them and expounds them point by point till about the late afternoon, when they depart having gained both expert knowledge of the holy laws and considerable advance in piety” (Hypoth. 7.13; cf. Mos. 2.215–216).

The difference between activity associated with the sectarian and public synagogues is probably that the Essenes gave more attention to ritual purity<sup>87</sup> and, observing a different calendar,<sup>88</sup> would have been celebrating in their synagogues at different times to other Jews. However, this may not have been significant in the social landscape of Palestine for if, as Philo (Prob. 75) and Josephus (Ant. 18.21) tell us, there were only 4,000 Essenes spread across the country, their synagogues are likely to be few in number and, for the most part, small in size (perhaps in homes) and only semi-public.

(d) To Josephus we are also greatly indebted for literary evidence of public synagogues and their function in Palestine in the time of Jesus.<sup>89</sup> It is possible that, writing at a later time, Josephus could be taken as referring anachronistically to buildings as synagogues.<sup>90</sup> However, we have seen that archeological evidence shows there were public (and semi-public) synagogues in the time and place of Jesus; and as a native Palestinian Jew, Josephus was writing his Jewish War in the 80’s CE<sup>91</sup> as an eyewitness.

When Josephus mentions “temples (ἱεροί)<sup>92</sup> set on fire” among the depictions on the floats or moving stages in Titus’s triumphal procession into Rome (War 7.144), this suggests that there was a significant number of synagogues in Palestine. Since this passage is most probably describing the parade depicting events in the first part of the war (cf. 7.139–148), we can infer that Galilean synagogues are depicted.<sup>93</sup>

<sup>87</sup> E.g., Josephus, War 2.129, 150; CD-A XII, 21–22 and note the ritual baths at Khirbet Qumran at loc. 48–50, 56, 58, 68, 71, 85, 91, 138. See Joseph M. Baumgarten, “The Essene Avoidance of Oil and the Laws of Purity,” RevQ 6 (1967–69): 183–192 and the discussion by Jodi Magness, The Archeology of Qumran and the Dead Sea Scrolls (Grand Rapids, MI: Eerdmans, 2002), ch. 7.

<sup>88</sup> See 11QT XIII, 9–XXX, 2 and Yigael Yadin, The Temple Scroll (New York: Random House, 1985), 84–87.

<sup>89</sup> Oster, “Anachronism,” 189–190.

<sup>90</sup> Kee, “Response,” 282.

<sup>91</sup> Cf. Shaye J. D. Cohen, Josephus and Galilee and Rome (Leiden: Brill, 2002), 84, 89, 90, 180.

<sup>92</sup> Since it is in the plural, this is not to be confused with the Jerusalem temple which is mentioned subsequently (War 7.148). For the use of ἱερόν for synagogue see Wolfgang Schrage, “Συναγωγῆ, κτλ,” TDNT 7:798–855 (808 and n. 50) and Levine, “Second Temple,” 13.

<sup>93</sup> Cf. Binder, Temple, 124–25.

Also, to gain an insight into the number of synagogues and how they were viewed we can note that in War 4.408 Josephus describes the Sicarii who had taken possession of Masada making night raids into the surrounding area, initially for supplies. But on hearing of the fall of Jerusalem the raids became more vicious and widespread, falling upon “synagogues (ἱεροί) and cities” throughout Judea. It is not possible to gauge whether Josephus means that these synagogues are sacred, since no distinction is made between the synagogues and the cities that are destroyed.<sup>94</sup> On the other hand, from his report of Jews being greatly provoked by some young men bringing an image of Caesar into the synagogue at Dor we learn from Josephus that there was a synagogue building there and that it was considered sacred by both Jew and Gentile (Ant. 19.299–311).<sup>95</sup>

From what Josephus says about buildings and meetings in Tiberias we also learn something of the nature and function of the public synagogue. He says that at Tiberias there was “a meeting of everyone in the prayer [house]” (συνάγονται πάντες εἰς τὴν προσευχήν, Life 277) to discuss his military leadership. Immediately we see that, in first-century Palestine, synagogue meetings had a civic or communal as well as prayer function. This particular meeting included Jesus, son of Sapphias, the leader (ὁ ἄρχων, 294), earlier said to be “at that time leader of Tiberias” (ἄρχων τότε τῆς Τιβεριάδος, 134, cf. 66–67).<sup>96</sup> From this we can suppose that his leadership is not simply over meetings in the synagogue but that he is the Jewish community leader who probably convoked the synagogue meeting (271).<sup>97</sup> The leader could determine which individuals entered the building (294) and order the townspeople

<sup>94</sup> Against Binder, Temple, 125–26.

<sup>95</sup> See the discussion by Levine, Ancient Synagogue, 66–67, who also notes that “In contradistinction to the Jews living in the interior of Judea, those living in coastal areas as well as in the Diaspora ascribed to their synagogues a degree of sanctity, perhaps influenced by the ubiquitous pagan temples” (77).

<sup>96</sup> From the use of τότε (“then,” “at that time”) and from later evidence—especially CII 744 (third century CE, Ieos, Ionia): “Ioses, the head-for-life (διὰ βίου) of the synagogue”; CII 766.3 (first century CE, Akmonia, Phrygia): “Klados, the head-for-life (διὰ βίου) of the synagogue” and Baruch Lifshitz, Donateurs et fondateurs dans les synagogues juives, Cahiers de la Revue Biblique 7 (Paris: J. Gabalda et Cie, 1967), no. 85 (third century CE, Cyprus): “[so and so], five times head of the synagogue, son of Ananias, twice archon”—it is likely that we have a hint that this is an elected position. See the discussion of this and other evidence by Brooten, Women Leaders, 25 who recognizes “the temptation to take one piece of evidence as applying to all places and for the entire period in question.” See also n. 28 above on the Theodotus inscription.

<sup>97</sup> On the difficulty of defining the role of the ἄρχων see Levine, Ancient Synagogue, 427–428.

to withdraw, leaving only the council to deliberate (300). Josephus says the council numbered 600 (cf. War 2.641; Life 284) and, from what he says earlier, included “ten leading men,” perhaps with Capella as the leader (69).<sup>98</sup> Not surprisingly, the prayer house is said to be a large building (μέγιστον οἶκημα) capable of accommodating a huge crowd (277). The use of οἶκημα—which can mean a “building” (Ant. 14.455; Apion 1.198), but also a “room” or “apartment”<sup>99</sup>—could imply that, although large, it was not very different from other buildings.<sup>100</sup>

Although this particular meeting takes place on a Sabbath morning it is not a worship event but was called by those who wanted to discuss deposing Josephus as a military leader. Nevertheless, perhaps as did all such gatherings, the meeting started with τὰ νόμιμα<sup>101</sup> ποιούντων καὶ πρὸς εὐχὰς (perhaps to be understood as some formalities or readings and prayers, Life 295). That Jesus the leader stands and begins to question Josephus during these formalities and prayers suggests that although all might have been engaged in them they were carried out silently and privately.<sup>102</sup> Josephus says the meeting broke off at noon, the time it was customary to take the midday meal on the Sabbath (279).<sup>103</sup> If not generally all day, which is the impression both Philo (Hypoth. 7.13) and elsewhere Josephus give (Apion 1.209), then it was in the afternoon (cf. m. Meg. 3:6) until evening that the synagogue was used for worship and prayer.<sup>104</sup> In any case, Josephus says the building was not only used on the Sabbath for, by 7:00 a.m. over the following two days,<sup>105</sup> the people are reassembled for further discussions (Life 280). One of these meetings was said to be for a “public fast” (πανδημεί νηστείαν, 290). Josephus gives the impression that all of the meetings were such that anyone could speak in them.<sup>106</sup>

<sup>98</sup> On the relationship between Capella and the leading ten see Steve Mason, Life of Josephus (Leiden: Brill, 2001), 59 n. 351.

<sup>99</sup> War 1.420; 2.129; 7.287, 290, 290; Ant. 8.134, 137, 138; 14.463; 20.46, 189; Life 277.

<sup>100</sup> See Miller, “Number,” 56–57.

<sup>101</sup> On τὰ νόμιμα see Steve Mason, Flavius Josephus on the Pharisees (Leiden: Brill, 2001), 100–103.

<sup>102</sup> Cf. Sanders, Law 73–74.

<sup>103</sup> In Apion 1.209 Josephus says that, on the Sabbath, Jews “pray with outstretched hands in the temples (ιεροῖς) until the evening.”

<sup>104</sup> Cf. Josephus, Ant. 14.269–261 (and Philo, Flacc. 122–124), on which see the discussion by Flesher, “Prolegomenon,” 127.

<sup>105</sup> Possibly 9:00 a.m. See Mason, Life, 123 n. 1182.

<sup>106</sup> Cf. Sanders, Law, 80 notes the corroborating evidence of the New Testament: Mark 1:14–15; 6:1–5; Acts 13:15; and Paul’s instructions about prophesying and exhorting in Christian worship.

In his story of the event which sparked the war with Rome, Josephus says the Jews in Caesarea had “a synagogue adjoining a plot of ground” (συναγωγὴν ἔχοντες παρὰ χωρίον, War 2.285) and “when the Jews assembled at the synagogue...” (τῶν Ἰουδαίων εἰς τὴν συναγωγὴν συναθροισθέντων, 2.289). These statements make most sense if the word συναγωγή refers to a public building rather than to the gathering of people, and that it belonged collectively to the people.<sup>107</sup> That this is a significant structure, not a private dwelling, is clear from the willingness of Jewish “notables” (οἱ δυνατοί) and John the tax collector to offer eight talents of silver<sup>108</sup> to stop a building going up next to the synagogue (2.287). That “one of the Caesarean mischief-makers had placed beside the entrance [of the synagogue] a pot, turned bottom upwards, upon which he was sacrificing birds” (War 2.289) was probably intended to desecrate the synagogue. The success of this action is seen in that the Jews not only withdrew from the synagogue but also took their copy of the Law from a spot they deemed desecrated (2.291).<sup>109</sup>

In relation to the Diaspora, Josephus also tells us that Julius Caesar permitted the Jews “to contribute money to common meals” (Ant. 14.214).<sup>110</sup> This raises the question whether the synagogue was the focus of charitable activity in Palestine before 70 CE. We know from Josephus that in each city Essenes appointed one of their members to provide clothing and other necessities for travellers (War 2.125). Also, given that the synagogue was the focus of Jewish life and that later the synagogue was the focus of charitable activity,<sup>111</sup> we can assume it was so in Palestine before the fall of Jerusalem.<sup>112</sup>

We can note here that healing, charity of a different kind, might also have taken place in pre-70 Eretz Israel synagogues. Much later, in the fourth-century Diaspora, John Chrysostom lamented that Christians sought healing in the synagogues (Adv. Iud. 1.6.2; 8.6.6).<sup>113</sup> However, the situation earlier in Palestine is unclear to us. Apart from the synagogue as the focus of charitable activity, and the general reputation of <sup>107</sup> So Oster, “Anachronism,” 189. Josephus uses συναγωγή of the meeting place of the Jews in Antioch (War 7.43–44) as well as in Dora (Ant. 19.299–305).

<sup>108</sup> Eight talents = 48,000 denarii or a day’s wages. See Binder, Temple, 156 n. 3.

<sup>109</sup> Brought to my attention in private correspondence by Susan Haber.

<sup>110</sup> At Ant. 16.164 the synagogue is referred to as a banqueting hall (ἀνδρών).

<sup>111</sup> E.g., t. Ter. 1:10; t. B. Bat. 8:14; b. Šabb. 150a. Cf. Justin, Apol. 1.67 for the practice reflected among Christians.

<sup>112</sup> Corroborative evidence of this conclusion is found in the daily distribution Luke reports in Jerusalem in the early days of the church (Acts 6:1–6).

<sup>113</sup> Cf. Robert L. Wilken, John Chrysostom and the Jews (Berkeley, CA: University of California Press, 1983), 83–94.

the Jews as healers,<sup>114</sup> as well as only a possible link between prayers for the sick and the synagogue in the Tosefta (t. Šabb. 16:22), we have no direct evidence.

Summarizing the Results so Far

There is no doubt that public synagogue buildings existed throughout pre-70 CE Palestine. There was also probably more than one semi-public synagogue in Jerusalem,<sup>115</sup> as well as an unknown number across the country belonging to the Essenes.<sup>116</sup> These few so far identified, or which can reasonably be supposed to have existed across Palestine, are a long way short of even the relatively modest numbers in ancient reports,<sup>117</sup> let alone the hundreds rabbinic sources claim to have existed even in Jerusalem<sup>118</sup> in our period of interest. Of course, even taking into account the exaggerations glorifying the rabbinic past,<sup>119</sup> archeological work is unlikely to uncover the remains of even all the stone purpose-built structures, let alone those originally constructed for some shared or other purpose, or made of less durable material.<sup>120</sup> Therefore, given both the significance of the home in the life of faith for the Jews, as well as the way the early Christians are depicted as meeting in homes,<sup>121</sup> it could reasonably be conjectured that, if virtually all communities had a synagogue,<sup>122</sup> many (perhaps most) synagogue meetings were held in private homes<sup>123</sup> or buildings that had once been private homes (cf. m. Ned. 9:2), especially in smaller communities or among sectarian Jews.

<sup>114</sup> See, e.g., Levine, Ancient Synagogue, 409.

<sup>115</sup> Miller, "Rabbis," 59 notes that "only rarely have archeologists uncovered more than a single structure in a given town."

<sup>116</sup> Levine, "Ethos," 113 suggests that "In Jerusalem a synagogue probably had somewhat greater religious significance, since many communal needs were met in other ways."

<sup>117</sup> A Bordeaux pilgrim who visited Jerusalem in 333 CE and Epiphanius, later in the century, report the existence of seven synagogues in the city. See "Itinerarium Burdigalense," Corpus Christianorum (Series Latina) 175 (1965): 592.6–7 (page 16). Cf. F. E. Peters, Jerusalem (Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1985), 125–126, 145.

<sup>118</sup> Cf. j. Meg. 3:1:III D; b. Ketub. 105a.

<sup>119</sup> Cf. Miller, "Number," 54–55.

<sup>120</sup> In less affluent areas we could expect synagogues to have been constructed of fieldstones and mud, with thatched roofs. Cf. Jonathan L. Reed, Archeology and the Galilean Jesus (Harrisburg, PA: TPI, 2000), 132.

<sup>121</sup> For the earliest years see e.g. Rom 16:5; 1 Cor 14:16; 16:19; Phlm 2.

<sup>122</sup> So also Sanders, Law, 341 n. 25.

<sup>123</sup> Cf. Miller, "Rabbis," 60; Carsten Claussen, Versammlung, Gemeinde, Synagoge (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 2002), 298, 304.

It was once agreed that the Pharisees dominated the synagogue<sup>124</sup> so that it was an institution competing with the Temple dominated by the Sadducees.<sup>125</sup> It is now a matter of debate as to who ran the synagogues.<sup>126</sup> Initially it is to be observed that the centre of interest of the Pharisees was Jerusalem.<sup>127</sup> Also, apart from John 12:42 (notably, written late in the first century),<sup>128</sup> the early sources tell us nothing of a relationship between the Pharisees and the synagogue.<sup>129</sup> More particularly, we have already seen that the Theodotian synagogue in Jerusalem was run by a priest. At Tiberias the leader of the synagogue was Jesus son of Sapphias, who appears to be a community leader, and Philo says a priest or elder present in an Essene synagogue reads and expounds the law (Hypoth. 7.13). Again, slender though this evidence be, it does not favour the view that it was the Pharisees who dominated the synagogues in pre-70 CE Palestine.<sup>130</sup> In fact, not only does the evidence from even a little later than our period suggest that the Pharisees did not find the synagogues congenial and that they looked askance at practices there,<sup>131</sup> but also, our evidence supports the view that the synagogue was a community-run institution,<sup>132</sup> with two of our sources indicating the leadership of priests.<sup>133</sup>

Some synagogues were only semi-public, or would have had limited appeal, as with the Theodotian synagogue, the synagogue of the Freedmen in Jerusalem (Acts 6:9) and those of the Essenes—particularly those maintaining celibacy (cf. Josephus, War 2.160–161). On the other hand,

<sup>124</sup> E.g., Kee, "Transformation," 12–14.

<sup>125</sup> R. Travers Herford, The Pharisees (London: Macmillan, 1924), 88–103.

<sup>126</sup> E.g., Miller, "Rabbis," 57–70.

<sup>127</sup> See Lee I. Levine, The Rabbinic Class of Roman Palestine in Late Antiquity (Jerusalem: Yad Izhak Ben-Zvi, 1989), 23; Sanders, Judaism, esp. 448–451.

<sup>128</sup> R. E. Brown, An Introduction to the Gospel of John, ed. Francis J. Moloney (New York: Doubleday, 2003), 206–215.

<sup>129</sup> So Lester L. Grabbe, "Synagogues in Pre-70 Palestine: A Re-Assessment," JTS 39 (1988): 401–410, reprinted in Ancient Synagogues, ed. Urman and Flesher, 1:17–26, at 23.

<sup>130</sup> More generally on the Talmudic traditions' inflated view of rabbinic influence in Jewish society, see Martin Goodman, State and Society in Roman Galilee, A.D. 132–212 (Totowa, NJ: Rowman & Allanheld, 1983), 93–94, 111–118.

<sup>131</sup> See the discussion in Levine, Ancient Synagogue, 472–473.

<sup>132</sup> E.g., Lee I. Levine, "The Sages and the Synagogue in Late Antiquity: The Evidence of the Galilee," in idem, Galilee in Late antiquity (New York: Jewish Theological Seminary of America, 1992), 201–222; E. P. Sanders, "Common Judaism and the Synagogue in the First Century," in Jews, Christians, and Polytheists, ed. Fine, 1–17, at 13.

<sup>133</sup> So also Levine, Ancient Synagogue, 44, 136. Cf. 528 n. 56 on the lack of consensus on the role of the priests in the synagogue.

since the synagogue was centrally located and sometimes the only large building in a town, as well as sometimes being the object of derision and attack against the Jews (cf. Josephus, War 2.289), we have clear indications that there were public synagogues, which were seen by all sides as the focus of the life of the Jewish community<sup>134</sup> and attracting involvement from across the Jewish community.<sup>135</sup>

In ancient life it is not possible to distinguish religious and social spheres. Accordingly, we can expect that these functions coexisted in the synagogue.<sup>136</sup> The religious aspects—limited to the reading of the Torah and its interpretation, and also worship or prayers<sup>137</sup> (said or sung)—may have dominated the Sabbath meetings.<sup>138</sup> Nevertheless, in so far as our slender evidence permits us to draw conclusions, it is likely that public synagogues were used primarily for community activities, including on the Sabbath; for fasts, communal meals,<sup>139</sup> and political and council meetings, at which, probably, anyone could speak. The description Josephus gives of a weekday meeting beginning with “formalities (or readings) and prayers” (Life 295) both confirms the relatively limited liturgy as well as the overlap between the religious and the communal aspects of a synagogue.<sup>140</sup>

From the evidence we have discussed there is no direct evidence that there were primary schools associated with the synagogues from which Jesus could have received his elementary education. A directive—for the widespread appointment of school teachers—that is probably to be attributed to Jesus ben Gamaliel the High Priest (fl. 63–65 CE), assumes that at least some primary education already existed (b. B. Bat. 21a).<sup>141</sup> That this education took place in the synagogue or one of

<sup>134</sup> See the discussion by Flesher, “Prolegomenon,” 140–143.

<sup>135</sup> Cf. Flesher, “Palestinian,” 1:30.

<sup>136</sup> Against Levine, “The First Century C.E. Synagogue,” 9–10, who argues that, regarding the first century CE, the archeological remains highlight the communal dimension of the building and the literary sources the religious dimension.

<sup>137</sup> Cf. Flesher, “Prolegomenon,” 127, against Levine, Ancient Synagogue, 163–164 and those cited.

<sup>138</sup> Cf. Lee I. Levine, “The Development of Synagogue Liturgy in Late Antiquity,” in Galilee through the Centuries, ed. Eric M. Meyers (Winona Lake, Ind.: Eisenbrauns, 1999), 123–144 (124–129).

<sup>139</sup> From the importance of communal meals to Jesus, and the fact that they are mentioned among the Essenes (Philo, Prob. 86), it can be fairly certain that the communal meals which, according to Josephus, Julius Caesar permitted the Jews to continue (Ant. 14.214–215) were known in pre-70 CE Palestine.

<sup>140</sup> There is just a hint in Josephus, War 2.287 (see above) that the synagogue may have been used as a bank, as it was in the Diaspora. See Flesher, “Prolegomenon,” 131.

<sup>141</sup> See Emil Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ, ed.

the adjoining rooms<sup>142</sup> is quite likely, since these statements assume a formal setting and the synagogue was, at times, the only public building in a Jewish community.<sup>143</sup> Since we have no evidence of any kind of separate schools in Jewish society for children or adults, and neither Philo nor Josephus—who boast of all Jews knowing the Law—mentions any other form of education (such as a bet midrash) apart from the public reading of Scripture in the synagogues, it is reasonable to suppose the synagogues functioned as schools.

For this education to have been accessible to Jesus there would need to have been a synagogue at Nazareth. So far, apart from the New Testament (Luke 4:16), no such evidence of a synagogue has come to light.<sup>144</sup> Nevertheless, even with Nazareth's modest population,<sup>145</sup> consisting almost exclusively of Jews,<sup>146</sup> it is probable that there was more than one synagogue in the town.<sup>147</sup> Perhaps Josephus's words: "should anyone of our nation be questioned about the laws, he would repeat them all more readily than his own name" (Apion 2.178), allow us to assume that this education was dominated by, if not entirely concerned with, the Torah.<sup>148</sup>

The relationship between the synagogue and the temple was variously understood, though not in terms of direct rivalry.<sup>149</sup> For example, although there is no evidence of any sacrificial activity at Qumran, one of the rooms probably functioned as a place of worship. Also, the description of the Theodotian synagogue and its proximity to the Temple give no hint of its being seen as a substitute for the Temple. Further, even though we have seen the synagogue had a level of recognized sanctity, we have also found nothing to support the view that

---

Geza Vermes et al. (Edinburgh: T&T Clark, 1979), 2:418–419. Cf. m. Šabb. 1:3; m. Ketub. 2:10.

<sup>142</sup> In relation to Gamla see Syon, "Gamla," 32.

<sup>143</sup> On the disputed value of the attribution of public schooling to Simeon b. Shata see, e.g., Schürer, History, 2:418.

<sup>144</sup> Reed, Archeology, 131–132 notes that "The modest architecture and scant building projects from the earlier [Roman] period leave little evidence... [and there] is no evidence of any public structures from the Early Roman Period" (131).

<sup>145</sup> Eric M. Meyers and James F. Strange, Archeology, the Rabbis and Early Christianity (Nashville: Abingdon, 1981), 56 argue for 1,600 to 2,000 people, but James F. Strange, "Nazareth," ABD 4:1050, argues for a maximum of about 480 at the beginning of the first century CE.

<sup>146</sup> See Meyers and Strange, Archeology, 57.

<sup>147</sup> See John P. Meier, A Marginal Jew: Rethinking the Historical Jesus (New York: Doubleday, 1991), 1:277 and 308 n. 137.

<sup>148</sup> Cf. Schürer, History, 2:419.

<sup>149</sup> So also Levine, Ancient Synagogue, 44.

in the time and places familiar to Jesus the synagogue attained a level of sanctity rivalling the Temple.<sup>150</sup>

Our evidence has given hints of architectural variety across the synagogues. Also the Theodotian inscription with a priest as the leader and Josephus with a town leader overseeing matters relating to the synagogue show the variety in organization and leadership.<sup>151</sup> We have also seen an example of an archon excluding people from a meeting. We can only agree with those who have noted that we have no evidence of any organizational links between synagogues, even in such a small region as Eretz Israel; each community and synagogue—large or small—was autonomous.<sup>152</sup>

Before we are able to use this data to shed light on our understanding of the historical Jesus and his relationship with the synagogue we need to attempt to recover from the gospels what can be known about the relationship of the historical Jesus with the synagogue.

2. The Gospel Data

The synagogue is mentioned in relation to Jesus, or his attitude towards it, in a number of places in the gospels.<sup>153</sup> However, a critical examination of this material shows that many references cannot be traced back to the earliest traditions about Jesus.<sup>154</sup> This is most easily seen in the two references in the Fourth Gospel. First, John 6:59: “He said these things while he was teaching (διδάσκων) in the synagogue<sup>155</sup> at Capernaum,” which assumes Jesus has been teaching the Jews (οἱ Ἰουδαῖοι). However, this verse is concluding a discourse within a dispute (μάχομαι, 6:51–52) that begins in what appears to be a meeting between the crowd (ὁ ὄχλος) and Jesus in the open air beside the sea at Capernaum

<sup>150</sup> Too generalizing is Levine, Ancient Synagogue, 43–44 citing Shaye J. D. Cohen, “The Temple and the Synagogue,” in The Temple in Antiquity, ed. Truman G. Madsen (Provo, Utah: Religious Study Center, Brigham Young University, 1984), 151–174.

<sup>151</sup> Levine, “The First Century C.E. Synagogue,” 18.

<sup>152</sup> E.g., Levine, “The First Century C.E. Synagogue,” 19–20.

<sup>153</sup> Mark 1:21, 23/Luke 4:33; Mark 1:29/Luke 4:38; Mark 1:39/Matt 4:23/Luke 4:44; Mark 3:1/Matt 12:9/ Luke 6:6; Mark 6:2/Matt 13:54/Luke 4:16; Mark 12:39/Matt 23:6/Luke 20:46; Mark 13:9/Matt 10:17/Luke 21:12; Q: Luke 11:43/Matt 23:6; M: Matt 6:2, 5; 9:35; 23:34; L: Luke 4:15, 20, 28; 7:5; 12:11; 13:10; John 6:59; 18:20.

<sup>154</sup> Cf. Becker, Jesus, 29: “Most of the statements that put Jesus in the synagogue are redactional.”

<sup>155</sup> That συναγωγή is anarthrous does not mean it should be translated “assembly,” for the article is often dropped following a preposition; so Rudolf Schnackenburg, The Gospel According to John (New York: Crossroad, 1982), 2:455 n. 186.

(6:24–25). As this is an instance of the Fourth Gospel giving the scene at the end of a story (1:28; 8:20),<sup>156</sup> it is reasonable to assume that this is an editorial statement.<sup>157</sup> In John 18:20, the only other reference to the synagogue in the Fourth Gospel, Jesus says that he has always taught openly, i.e. in the synagogue and in the Temple. The similarity of this statement to that in Mark 14:49 (“Day after day I was with you in the Temple teaching”) is striking and may be an example of dependence on Mark or Markan traditions.<sup>158</sup> And since Mark does not mention the synagogue at this point, and the reference in John is in the singular (ἐν συναγωγῇ<sup>159</sup>)—perhaps intended to refer back to 6:59—this looks like an editorial note by the Fourth Evangelist.<sup>160</sup>

Of the gospel writers it is Luke who has the most references to Jesus and the synagogue, many of them taken up from Mark (see n. 145 above) and some from Q (see below). Of the six remaining references in Luke there can be little confidence in their connection with the Sitz im Leben of the historical Jesus. The first three are from the story of Jesus in the synagogue at Nazareth. (1) The statement, “he taught in their synagogues” (Luke 4:15),<sup>161</sup> is part of a summary for which Luke has used Mark 1:14, 28, 39.<sup>162</sup> (2) Luke 4:20 says: “The eyes of all in the synagogue were fixed on him.” As well as the grave doubts about the historicity of Luke’s story of Jesus preaching in the Nazarene synagogue (4:16–30),<sup>163</sup> the introduction (4:16), and indeed perhaps more of the

<sup>156</sup> Rudolf Bultmann, The Gospel of John (Oxford: Blackwell, 1971), 234 n. 1.

<sup>157</sup> Cf. C. K. Barrett, The Gospel According to St John (London: SPCK, 1978), 300; also E. Haenchen, John 1 (Philadelphia: Fortress, 1984), 196 following A. Loisy, Le quatrième évangile (Paris: Picard & Fils, 1903, 2nd edn, 1921), 244.

<sup>158</sup> Cf. John and the Synoptics, ed. Adelbert Denaux (Leuven: Leuven University Press, 1992), viii; Richard Bauckham, “John for Readers of Mark,” in The Gospel for All Christians, ed. idem (Grand Rapids, MI: Eerdmans, 1998), 147–171.

<sup>159</sup> On the anarthrous συναγωγή see n. 155 above.

<sup>160</sup> E.g., Barrett, John, 528.

<sup>161</sup> Against Gerd Petzke, Das Sondergut des Evangeliums nach Lukas (Zürich: Theologischer, 1990), 77, the phrase ταῖς συναγωγαῖς αὐτῶν cannot be taken to reflect the later perspective when Jewish and Christian meetings were distinguished, since this would be out of character with Luke’s emphasizing the Jewish orientation of redemption and locating the missions of Jesus and the early Church in the Jewish synagogues. See Joel B. Green, The Gospel of Luke, NICNT (Grand Rapids, MI: Eerdmans, 1997), 205 n. 11.

<sup>162</sup> See, e.g., Rudolf Bultmann, History of the Synoptic Tradition (New York: Harper & Row, 1976), 113; Martin Dibelius, From Tradition to Gospel (Cambridge: Clarke, 1971), 31–32; J. Delobel, “La rédaction de Lc., IV, 14–16a et le ‘Bericht vom Anfang,’” in L’Évangile de Luc, ed. F. Neiryck (Gembloux: Duculot, 1973), 203–223, esp. 214–216. For a brief outline of alternative views see Joseph A. Fitzmyer, The Gospel According to Luke, 2 vols. (Garden City, NY: Doubleday, 1981 and 1985), 1:526–527.

<sup>163</sup> See the discussion by Meier, Marginal, 1:270–271 and esp. 303 n. 93.

passage (e.g., 4:22, 24),<sup>164</sup> is probably modelled on Mark 6:1–6a,<sup>165</sup> so that this reference to the synagogue is dependent on Mark. (3) The reference to the synagogue in Luke 4:28 (“all in the synagogue were filled with rage”), along with the passage in which it occurs (4:28–30), shows little sign of being more than a free creation by Luke,<sup>166</sup> the mention of the synagogue being dependent on the setting taken from Mark 6:1–2. Even though it may not be possible to trace this pericope and the references to the synagogue back to the historical Jesus, it remains useful as corroborative evidence of first-century practices associated with the synagogue (see above).

(4) Luke’s Q-story of the healing of the centurion’s slave may have arisen in the reports of the witnesses of the historical Jesus (Matt 8:5–13/Luke 7:1–10).<sup>167</sup> However, the mention of the synagogue (“it is he who built our synagogue,” Luke 7:5) is most likely from Luke’s hand, for it comes in a section (7:3–6) telling of the delegation to Jesus which is easier to explain as an addition to Luke than as an omission from Matthew.<sup>168</sup>

(5) The material including Luke 12:11 (“When they bring you before the synagogues...”) is probably from Q (par. Matt 10:19–20). A variant of this tradition, dependent on Mark 13:11 and repeated in Luke 21:14–15, confirms that Luke has added the mention of the synagogues, perhaps from Mark 13:9.<sup>169</sup> In any case, the saying relates to his followers rather than to Jesus himself.

(6) The reference to the synagogue in Luke 13:10 (“he was teaching in one of the synagogues on the sabbath”) comes in a story that is likely to echo an event in the life of the historical Jesus.<sup>170</sup> However, once again, the origin of particular details is not easily determined, not least because only Luke reports this story. Added to our difficulty, the synagogue setting of this story fits Luke’s agenda of portraying the synagogue not only as a place where the religious devotion of Jesus and his followers is expressed but, at the same time, as a place where their

<sup>164</sup> Fitzmyer, Luke, 1:526.

<sup>165</sup> See, e.g., Dibelius, Tradition, 110; Bultmann, History, 32; Fitzmyer, Luke, 1:526.

<sup>166</sup> See the discussion in R.C. Tannehill, “The Mission of Jesus According to Luke IV 16–30,” in Jesus in Nazareth, ed. E. Grässer et al., BZNW 40 (Berlin: de Gruyter, 1972), 51–75, at 61.

<sup>167</sup> Graham H. Twelftree, Jesus the Miracle Worker (Downers Grove, IL: IVP, 1999), 296, 422 n. 33.

<sup>168</sup> Fitzmyer, Luke, 1:649.

<sup>169</sup> Cf. Nolland, Luke 9:21–18:34, 680.

<sup>170</sup> Twelftree, Miracle, 296–97.

missions are challenged or rejected.<sup>171</sup> Tipping the balance in favour of seeing Luke as responsible for the synagogue setting of this story (13:10 and 14–17) is the fact that the synagogue ruler reprimands the crowd (13:14), not Jesus, and it is “the Lord” (ὁ κύριος, 13:15), not “Jesus,” who answers, so that an early church origin of this part of the story seems quite likely.

In Matthew, as in Luke, a number of the references to the synagogue have been taken from Mark (see n. 145 above). Of the remaining references that are unique to Matthew,<sup>172</sup> two have to do with Jesus’ attitude to the synagogue. First, Matt 6:2: “So whenever you give alms, do not sound a trumpet before you, as the hypocrites do in the synagogues and in the streets, so that they may be praised by others. Truly I tell you, they have received their reward.” Even if Matthew has not created this ex nihilo,<sup>173</sup> it contains so many Mattheanisms<sup>174</sup> (including συναγωγή / -αί)<sup>175</sup> that, at best, Matthew has probably rewritten catechetical material.<sup>176</sup> Thus we are most probably dealing with material that has its origin after the time of Jesus. Similar conclusions are to be reached concerning Matt 6:5: “And whenever you pray, do not be like the hypocrites; for they love to stand and pray in the synagogues and in the street corners, so that they may be seen by others. Truly I tell you, they have received their reward.” The beginning of this statement and the mention of standing to pray probably rely on Mark 11:25. The phrase “in the street corners” is unique in the New Testament, but adding it to “in the synagogues” completes a characteristic Matthean parallel (cf. Matt 6:2). The remainder of the verse takes up or echoes 6:2.<sup>177</sup>

<sup>171</sup> Cf. Joel B. Green, “Jesus and a Daughter of Abraham (Luke 13:10-17): Test Case for a Lucan Perspective on Jesus’ Miracles,” CBQ 51 (1989): 643–654, at 649–651, who argues for an early ambivalence towards the synagogue early in Luke’s gospel. However, that ambivalence can be traced only in relation to the followers of Jesus. Through the story in question, in Luke’s gospel, the synagogue remains a place both of devotion and of positive and effective ministry for Jesus.

<sup>172</sup> Matt 6:2, 5; 9:35; 23:34.

<sup>173</sup> For the view that Matthew has created this material see R. H. Gundry, Matthew (Grand Rapids, MI: Eerdmans, 1982), 102.

<sup>174</sup> See Ulrich Luz, Matthew 1–7 (Edinburgh: T&T Clark, 1989), 345 n. 10 for details.

<sup>175</sup> Συναγωγή / -αί and with αὐτῶ or ὑμῶν are to be counted among Matthew’s favourite words. See Gundry, Matthew, 648.

<sup>176</sup> Cf. W. D. Davies and D. C. Allison, The Gospel According to Saint Matthew, 3 vols. (Edinburgh: T&T Clark, 1988), 1:575.

<sup>177</sup> Cf. Gundry, Matthew, 103.

A third saying at Matt 9:35 has to do directly with Jesus and the synagogue: "Then Jesus went about all the cities and villages, teaching in their synagogues, and proclaiming the good news of the kingdom, and curing every disease and every sickness."<sup>178</sup> However, since this has been created by Matthew, relying on Mark 6:6b<sup>179</sup> and possibly Q (Luke 8:1),<sup>180</sup> we are taken no further back towards the historical Jesus than Matthew's creativity.

The final verse mentioning the synagogue in Matthew ("I send you prophets, sages, and scribes, some of whom you will kill and crucify, and some you will flog in your synagogues and pursue from town to town," 23:34) is probably taken up from Q (Luke 11:49).<sup>181</sup> However, it has also been shaped in the light of Matt 10:17 (with the word συναγωγαί coming from Mark 13:9) so that the suffering of Jesus is seen to be mirrored in his followers.<sup>182</sup>

Q probably mentioned the synagogue only once. Reconstructed, the reference included at least the following statement: "Woe to you Pharisees for [you?] love the seat of honour in the synagogues" (Luke 11:43; cf. Matt 23:6–7).<sup>183</sup> Mark has a similar saying: "Beware of the scribes, who like...to have the seats of honour in the synagogues" (Mark 12:38–39), which forms part of what has long been argued to be a pre-Markan controversy collection.<sup>184</sup> Regardless of which saying is likely to be the more original,<sup>185</sup> given that at this point neither Mark nor Q is dependent on the other,<sup>186</sup> the double attestation lends weight to the view that such a saying may go back to Jesus.<sup>187</sup> Further,

<sup>178</sup> Matt 6:2, 5; 23:34 concern the followers of Jesus.

<sup>179</sup> See the discussions in Davies and Allison, Matthew, 2:143–144.

<sup>180</sup> See H. Schürmann, Das Lukasevangelium: Erster Teil: Kommentar zu Kap. 1, 1–9, 50, HTKNT (Freiburg: Herder, 1969), 447; for the contrary view, Fitzmyer, Luke, 1:695–96.

<sup>181</sup> Cf. James M. Robinson et al., The Sayings Gospel Q in Greek and English (Leuven: Peeters, 2001), 114–15.

<sup>182</sup> Cf. Davies and Allison, Matthew, 316.

<sup>183</sup> See the discussion in Harry T. Fleddermann, Mark and Q (Leuven: Leuven University Press, 1995), 186–89.

<sup>184</sup> See the discussion and assessment in M. J. Cook, Mark's Treatment of the Jewish Leaders (Leiden: Brill, 1978), 34–51.

<sup>185</sup> See the discussion by Harry T. Fleddermann, "A Warning About the Scribes (Mark 12:37b–40)," CBQ 44 (1982): 52–67, at 60.

<sup>186</sup> Luke 11:43 is not dependent on Mark 12:38–39 (nor vice versa): see I. Howard Marshall, "How To Solve the Synoptic Problem: Luke 11:43 and Parallels," in The New Testament Age, ed. William C. Weinrich (Macon, GA: Mercer University Press, 1984), 2:313–225, at 322.

<sup>187</sup> Cf. Bultmann, History, 113; Dibelius, Tradition, 236–37.

since this saying is consistent with Jesus giving praise to humility and condemning the opposite, it is reasonable to take it as reflecting a saying of the historical Jesus.<sup>188</sup>

We can now turn to consider the other references to the synagogue in Mark. His initial reference is part of the setting of the first miracle story in the gospel: “They went to Capernaum; and when the Sabbath came, he entered the synagogue and taught” (Mark 1:21). Although there are clear signs that Mark wrote this introduction,<sup>189</sup> he may have taken the setting of Capernaum from the introduction to the following narrative complex if he added this story to it.<sup>190</sup> In any case, Mark shows no special interest in Capernaum (1:21, 2:1; 9:33) and Q has Capernaum as the focus of Jesus’ Galilean ministry.<sup>191</sup> Further, even if “synagogue” may be a word favoured by Mark,<sup>192</sup> the synagogue is so entwined in the story (1:23) that the setting is likely to be original to it. In turn, the core of the story itself—a demonic confronts Jesus while he is in the Capernaum synagogue, there is a dialogue between Jesus and the demoniac who is healed, and the crowd is amazed—is likely to have its origins in the eyewitness accounts of Jesus, so that it is reasonable to conclude that when Jesus was in the public synagogue at Capernaum a demoniac confronted him and was healed.<sup>193</sup>

Even if the next reference to the synagogue (Mark 1:29, “As soon as they left the synagogue, they entered the house of Simon and Andrew, with James and John”) is due to Mark’s redactional activity, it would add no new information to our knowledge of Jesus and the synagogue for it is dependent on the previous story. The following reference (“And he went throughout Galilee, proclaiming the message in their synagogues and casting out demons,” Mark 1:39) is widely thought to be from Mark’s hand<sup>194</sup> and so can be of little interest to us.

<sup>188</sup> Davies and Allison, Matthew, 3:275.

<sup>189</sup> Robert A. Guelich, Mark 1–8:26 (Dallas, TX: Word, 1989), 55 cites “the thematic (Jesus’ teaching, crowd’s astonishment, role of scribes), lexical (εἰσπορευεσθαι, εὐθους, διδασχῆ), and stylistic (dual use of related verbs, impersonal plural, historical present, periphrastic, γάρ-explanatory) characteristics of Mark.”

<sup>190</sup> So Guelich, Mark 1–8:26, 55.

<sup>191</sup> Matt 11:23/Luke 10:15; cf. Matt 8:5/Luke 7:1. John 6:59 may be dependent on Markan traditions.

<sup>192</sup> E. J. Pryke, Redactional Style in the Marcan Gospel, SNTSMS 33 (Cambridge, UK: Cambridge University Press, 1978), 137.

<sup>193</sup> Graham H. Twelftree, Jesus the Exorcist (Tübingen: Mohr and Peabody: Hendrickson, 1993), 57–71.

<sup>194</sup> Cf. Guelich, Mark 1–8:26, 70.

Mark's story of a man's withered hand being cured begins: "Again he entered the synagogue" (Mark 3:1/Matt 12:9/ Luke 6:6). Elsewhere I have argued for the basic historicity of this story (Mark 3:1–6).<sup>195</sup> However, there is sufficient evidence to suggest that Mark is responsible for this opening statement which includes the mention of the synagogue.<sup>196</sup>

In Mark, the story of Jesus' so-called rejection at Nazareth begins: "He left that place and came to his hometown, and his disciples followed him. On the Sabbath he began to teach in the synagogue" (Mark 6:1–2/Matt 13:54/Luke 4:16). Once again, there are clear and considerable signals of Mark's creativity here.<sup>197</sup> Also, as well as possibly being responsible for the creation of the story as a whole,<sup>198</sup> it is more than likely that Mark has also given this story its synagogue and Sabbath setting. In any case, it is not a story of Jesus being rejected—that is how the story is told in Luke 4.

The final mention of the synagogue in Mark is 13:9: "As for yourselves, beware; for they will hand you over to councils; and you will be beaten in synagogues; and you will stand before governors and kings because of me, as a testimony to them" (Matt 10:17 par. Luke 21:12). This saying so obviously reflects the life of the early church that we are unable to place any confidence in its telling us about Jesus' attitude to the synagogue.<sup>199</sup>

<sup>195</sup> Twelftree, Miracle, 295.

<sup>196</sup> "Again" (πάλιν) is often used in Mark's introductions to link a story back to a previous one (in this case the synagogue in Capernaum of 1:21). See, e.g., 2:13; 3:20; 4:1; 5:21; 7:31; 8:1; 10:1, 10, 32; 11:27. So, Guelich, Mark 1–8:26, 84. It is a word favoured by Mark: Matthew 17 times; Luke 3; Mark 28. See also John C. Hawkins, Horae Synopticae (1909; Eugene, OR: Wipf & Stock, 2004), 13. Pryke, Style, 137 proposes that 25 of Mark's uses appear in redactional material.

The singular "he entered" (εἰσῆλθεν) rather than "they entered" (εἰσῆλθον) not only stands in tension with the previous story (cf. Mark 2:23) but also maintains the solitary mission of the Markan Jesus until after his choosing apostles "to be with him" (3:14). See also Guelich, Mark 1–8:26, 84.

<sup>197</sup> Pryke, Style, 14 and those he cites. Note: ἐξέρχεσθαι (Mark 1:26, 28, 35; 2:12, 13; 4:3; 6:1; 8:27; 9:26; 11:11; 14:68. See Pryke, Style, 136); ἐκεῖθεν (see also Mark 7:24; 10:1, and 9:30 with καί); ἔρχεται (V. Taylor, The Gospel According to St. Mark [London: Macmillan, 1959], 44; Hawkins, Horae Synopticae, 34); διδάσκειν (Hawkins, Horae Synopticae, 12; Pryke, Style, 136); the phrase ἀκολουθοῦσιν αὐτῷ οἱ μαθηταί which supports the theme of the disciples being with Jesus (e.g., 3:14) yet it plays no part in the story itself; the use of ἤρξατο with the infinitive (notably διδάσκειν; see also Mark 4:1; 6:34; 8:31); also these two verses are similar to Mark 1:21–22 (see above).

<sup>198</sup> See Erich Grässer, "Jesus in Nazareth (Mark VI.1–6a): Notes on the Redaction and Theology of St. Mark," NTS 16 (1969–70): 1–23, esp. 11.

<sup>199</sup> Cf. Ernst Haenchen, Der Weg Jesu (Berlin: Töpelmann, 1966), 441 followed by Craig A. Evans, Mark 8:27–16:20, WBC 34B (Nashville, TN: Thomas Nelson, 2001), 310.

Results

This historical-critical examination of the gospel data that mention the synagogue in relation to Jesus has established firm if remarkably meagre results: (1) Jesus was critical of those who sought honour in the synagogues (Q/Luke 11:43; Mark 12:38–39) and (2) while attending the Capernaum synagogue Jesus healed a demoniac (Mark 1:23–27). Other results or implications will emerge as we seek a synthesis of what we have so far discovered.

3. A Synthesis

Since public synagogues—the buildings and the meetings—were the focus of the community in which Jesus grew up and lived, he would have been intimately familiar with them as well as with at least the buildings of semi-public synagogues. In a town the size of Nazareth there may have been more than one modest public synagogue building. In these public buildings, under the supervision of priests or community leaders, children—including Jesus—received their Torah-dominated education. People also met there on various days of the week, but especially on the Sabbath, for meetings, for public fasts, shared meals, to arrange charity, perhaps pray for the sick, as well as to worship and to hear the sacred books read and interpreted by a priest or an elder. It is highly unlikely that Jesus would have been excluded from these synagogues.<sup>200</sup> Even if he was once accused of being a mamzer, after the marriage of Mary and Joseph such a stigma would no longer be significant.<sup>201</sup> In any case, even the semi-public Theotodian synagogue was probably not exceptional in welcoming outsiders (cf. Acts 6:9)—and since synagogues were locally organized, even if Jesus was excluded from one he is likely to have been able to find a welcome in another. Moreover, from our examination of the New Testament data we have no evidence that Jesus was either rejected by the synagogue or that he abandoned it.<sup>202</sup>

On careful examination the gospel traditions contain surprisingly little information about the historical Jesus and his relationship with the synagogue. This is most probably not because he had little or nothing to do with the synagogue.<sup>203</sup> First, as a member of the community he could be expected to frequent the synagogue. Secondly, in seeking an audience, perhaps on almost any day, the synagogue would have been the most obvious venue, but not simply as a place to preach but also to debate (cf. Josephus, Life 277)<sup>204</sup> and to perform healings. Keeping in mind that the synagogue was not an institution antagonistic to Jerusalem or the Temple, this could not be construed to mean that Jesus was setting himself up over against the holy city.

<sup>200</sup> Chilton, Jesus, 16, 21.

<sup>201</sup> See the discussion by Scot McKnight, “Calling Jesus Mamzer,” JSHJ 1 (2003): 73–103.

<sup>202</sup> Pace, e.g., Michael Grant, Jesus (London: Weidenfeld and Nicholson, 1977), 87, 119.

Nevertheless, what does seem fairly certain from the gospel traditions is that Jesus was critical of those who used the synagogue as a venue for seeking honour. On the one hand, this attitude would not have endeared him to the influential members of his community. Yet, on the other hand, there is no evidence that Jesus set himself over against or was in conflict with the synagogue as an institution.<sup>205</sup>

We can also be fairly confident of the reliability of the report that at least one of the miracle stories in the gospel traditions was set in a public synagogue. In that the public synagogue was the focus of the community, including a place where the needy and sick could be found, this is to be expected, and he is likely to have performed many of his miracles of healing in these synagogues. After his Jordan experience of the Spirit and a subsequent conviction of the arrival of the Kingdom or powerful presence of God—discovered after an initial experiment in healing in a synagogue (cf. Mark 1:21–28)—it can be expected that he would frequent public synagogues where people gathered<sup>206</sup> so that he could “win all to eschatological restoration.”<sup>207</sup> If his healings caused amazement (cf. Mark 1:27) it would not have been because he was successful. Although we would go beyond the evidence if we said more than that it is possible that healings had taken place in the synagogues in the time and place of Jesus, he himself acknowledged the success of his contemporaries in exorcism (Matt 12:27 par. Luke 11:19). Thus,

---

<sup>203</sup> Contra Becker, Jesus, 29–30.

<sup>204</sup> Though portraying a Diaspora setting; see Acts 17:1–2.

<sup>205</sup> So also Richard A. Horsley, “Synagogues in Galilee and the Gospels,” in Evolution, ed. Kee and Cohick, 46–69, at 64 citing, for the contrary view, Kee, “Transformation,” 15–24, and Elizabeth Struthers Malbon, Narrative Space and Mythic Meaning in Mark (San Francisco: Harper & Row, 1968), 131–136.

<sup>206</sup> Cf. Paula Fredriksen, Jesus of Nazareth (New York: Knopf, 1999), 196; Dunn, “Synagogue?” 220.

<sup>207</sup> Ben F. Meyer, The Aims of Jesus (London: SCM, 1979), 242.

the amazed response was probably because of the manner and scale of his success.<sup>208</sup>

At least from his relationship with the synagogue he would have been neither an outsider nor marginalized in his community.<sup>209</sup> That so many stories of Jesus originally circulated without mention of a synagogue as a setting is probably because this was initially a matter of no consequence or, perhaps, an assumption that reports of his healing and teaching would have come from a synagogue. On the other hand, that so many references to the synagogue were subsequently introduced is probably to be explained by the early Christians in the more Hellenized world reading back into the Jesus tradition their experience of the importance of the synagogue as a focal point of interaction with others, preaching and teaching, as well as success and rejection.<sup>210</sup>

---

<sup>208</sup> Further see Graham H. Twelftree, "The Miracles of Jesus: Marginal or Mainstream?" JSHJ 1 (2003): 104–124 and idem, "Jesus the Exorcist and Ancient Magic," in A Kind of Magic. Understanding Magic in the New Testament and its Religious Environment, ed. Michael Labahn and Bert Jan Lietaert Peerbolte, Library of New Testament Studies 306 (London: Sheffield Academic, 2007), 57–86, esp. 81–85.

<sup>209</sup> More broadly on the use of this term in relation to Jesus see Meier, Marginal, 1:6–9.

<sup>210</sup> Cf. Bruce D. Chilton, God in Strength (Sheffield: JSOT, Press, 1987), 136.

JESUS AND THE TEN WORDS

HERMUT LOEHR

1. Introduction

We have good reason to state<sup>1</sup> that contemporaneous sources reveal a certain knowledge of the concept and contents of the Ten Words (= Decalogue; Hebr.: עֲשׂוֹת הַדְּבָרִים; Gr.: οἱ δέκα λόγοι<sup>2</sup>) in Second Temple Judaism and early Christianity.<sup>3</sup> Therefore the question has to be raised if and in which way Jesus of Nazareth made use of this core text of the biblical tradition during his earthly ministry. The inquiry is part of the more general and much discussed problem of Jesus' attitude towards the (Jewish) Law.<sup>4</sup> What did Jesus in fact know of the Law? Did he make distinctions between different parts of the Law? Did he

---

<sup>1</sup> Cf. my article: "Der Dekalog im frühesten Christentum und in seiner Umwelt," in Judentum und Christentum zwischen Konfrontation und Faszination, ed. W. Kinzig and C. Kück, Judentum und Christentum 11 (Stuttgart: Kohlhammer, 2002), 29–43. The evidence of the sources does not allow for the thesis proposed by K. Berger and U. Kellermann that the Decalogue had to be rediscovered in Jewish Alexandria; cf. K. Berger, Die Gesetzesauslegung Jesu: Ihr historischer Hintergrund im Judentum und im Alten Testament. Teil I: Markus und Parallelen, WMANT 40 (Neukirchen-Vluyn: Neukirchener Verlag, 1972), 138, 258; U. Kellermann, "Der Dekalog in den Schriften des Frühjudentums. Ein Überblick," in Weisheit, Ethos und Gebot: Weisheits- und Dekalogtraditionen in der Bibel und im frühen Judentum, ed. H. Graf Reventlow, BThSt 43 (Neukirchen-Vluyn: Neukirchener Verlag, 2001), 147–226.

<sup>2</sup> Cf. Exod 34:28; Deut 4:13; 10:4. The (feminine) noun δεκάλογος was used for the first time in the second-century Christian letter of Ptolemy to Flora 5.3. Whether this neologism shows a marked awareness of the Ten Words as a separate textual unit cannot be determined with certainty.

<sup>3</sup> It is beyond the scope of this article to provide once more a list of the citations and allusions to the Ten Words in the literature and archaeological remnants of the time. This has been done recently and quite exhaustively by Kellermann, "Dekalog" 147–226. Also worth studying is D. Sängler, "Tora für die Völker—Weisungen der Liebe: Zur Rezeption des Dekalogs im frühen Judentum und Neuen Testament," Weisheit, ed. Reventlow, 97–146. Shorter: G. Stemberger, "Der Dekalog im frühen Judentum," JBTh 4 (1989): 91–103.

<sup>4</sup> A clear epistemological distinction has to be made between Jesus' attitude to the Law and Jesus' attitude to the Law (or νόμος) as the early Christian sources conceived it. For the latter approach cf. my "Jesus und der Nomos aus der Sicht des entstehenden Christentums," in Der historische Jesus, ed. J. Schröter and R. Brucker, BZNW 114 (Berlin: de Gruyter, 2002), 337–354. Cf. also the detailed analysis by W. R. G. Loader, Jesus' Attitude towards the Law: A Study of the Gospels, WUNT 2.97 (Tübingen: Mohr/Paul Siebeck, 1997).

distinguish between more theological and more ethical commandments or prohibitions? Did he make different uses (cf. the different usus legis in the Christian theological tradition) of the Law? Answers to all these questions could help us to locate Jesus more precisely in the history of thought of Second Temple Judaism.

There is no direct way to answer their question and no eye-witness-account has come down to us (so far) of the earthly life of Jesus. The extant sources which inform us of him, i.e. of some aspects of his life—the canonical and extra-canonical gospels and gospel-fragments, some sparse notices in other parts of early Christian and Jewish literature—do this in retrospect. To reach solid historical ground in this situation necessitates: (a) to examine the relevant material with the instruments of historical criticism<sup>5</sup> and (b) to reconstruct the general background of the time which is the context of Jesus' relation to the Ten Words.

2. Learning the Ten Words

To start with the latter point demands that we first ask in which way a first-century Jew from a small village or town in Galilee like Jesus could have gained knowledge of the Decalogue.

The first, most obvious and least speculative answer to this question would be: by reading and studying the Torah. The Decalogue recurs twice in the Pentateuch. So every public or private lecture of the Torah could come across this text which, simply by virtue of its position,<sup>6</sup> signals its outstanding importance to the attentive reader or listener. However, it remains doubtful whether a piece of text, which could have been only a smaller part of a sabbatical lecture, could be learned by

---

<sup>5</sup> In my opinion this means that we cannot trust our sources without further critical (not sceptical) examination; pace R. Swinburne, "Evidence for the Resurrection," in The Resurrection: An Interdisciplinary Symposium on the Resurrection of Jesus, ed. S. T. Davis et al. (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1998), 191–212, who stipulates (192): "that memory as such, all memory, is to be trusted in the absence of positive counter-evidence that is untrustworthy." The task of the historian is to separate authentic memory from intentional constructions for some ideological or other aim. And even if such intentional shaping of the historical account cannot be argued for, there remains the task of testing the reliability of the author's memory, by internal and external comparison and by reflections on the general historical probability of the narration.

<sup>6</sup> In both the Sinai and the Horeb pericope the Decalogue precedes other collections of laws—explicitly (Exod 20:19; Deut 5:23–33) and implicitly (Exod 20: the Bundesbuch Exod 20:22–23:19; the Privilegrecht Exod 34; Deut 5: the deuteronomic laws); and it is uttered as God's direct speech (Exod 20:1; Deut 5:4, 22).

heart just by hearing it in the synagogue—whether in Nazareth<sup>7</sup> or in Capernaum—or in the Temple service.

For the Temple service, which could have been attended by Jesus several times (cf. Luke 2:41–42), we know from the Mishnah of a regular recitation of the Decalogue (m. Tam. 5:1; s. p. 219).

Unfortunately our information about the service outside the Temple in pre-70 Palestinian synagogues is very fragmentary.<sup>8</sup> So we cannot know for certain whether there was a regular (triennial?) lecture cycle or special lectures for the feasts. To this day, the Decalogue according to Exod 20 is part of the Torah lecture on Shavuoth.

It is also difficult to prove that in Second Temple Judaism a catechetical or proselyte instruction including the Ten Words existed. In fact there is literary evidence for various series of commandments and prohibitions recalling the Decalogue, especially the so-called social commandments. As their literary function is to communicate elementary theological and ethical teaching to the Jewish or the interested pagan reader, one can think of the instruction for youngsters or converts to Judaism as the original Sitz im Leben for those series. Possibly, for example, the narrative setting of the Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, inter alia the moral instruction recalling the Ten Words given by the father to the sons, had its parallels in the everyday life of ancient Judaism,<sup>9</sup> and the Decalogue may have had a prominent part in it. We know from notices

---

<sup>7</sup> For first-century evidence for a synagogue in Nazareth cf. Mark 6:2 pars. Matt 13:54; Luke 4:16. For Capernaum cf. the short overview by C. Claußen, Versammlung, Gemeinde, Synagoge: Das hellenistisch-jüdische Umfeld der frühchristlichen Gemeinden, SUNT 27 (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck und Ruprecht, 2002), 180f.

<sup>8</sup> Cf. C. Perrot, “The Reading of the Bible in the Ancient Synagogue,” in Mikra: Text, Translation, Reading and Interpretation of the Hebrew Bible in Ancient Judaism and Early Christianity, ed. M. J. Mulder and H. Sysling, CRINT 2.1 (Assen: Van Gorcum, 1988), 137–159.

<sup>9</sup> Cf. K. W. Niebuhr, Gesetz und Paränese: Katechismusartige Weisungsreihen in der frühjüdischen Literatur, WUNT 2.88 (Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr/Paul Siebeck, 1987), 238: “In erster Linie waren für diese Art der Gesetzesunterweisung vermutlich die Oberhäupter der jüdischen Familie zuständig, entsprechend dem Gebot der Tora, Dtn 11,18–21.” We would have to suppose, then, that being their children’s first teachers parents were more likely to rely on oral tradition than on written Torah. Cf. C. Hezser, Jewish Literacy in Roman Palestine, TSAJ 81 (Tübingen: Mohr/Paul Siebeck 2001), 69: “Since only fathers who knew letters and were knowledgeable of the Torah themselves would have been able to teach Torah to their children, in the first two centuries, when few opportunities for an elementary education outside the home existed, children’s basic instruction in the Torah would have been restricted to certain educated circles.” With regard to Deut 11:18–21, the problem is discussed in Sif. Dev. 46 (Finkelstein, 104).

We should not forget, moreover, that, e.g., the deathbed scenes in TestXII are ideal ones which probably did not correspond to everyday experience.

in the works of Flavius Josephus<sup>10</sup> and Philo of Alexandria<sup>11</sup> that the Torah was the main object of instruction of younger children. But unfortunately the contemporaneous sources are silent about a regular instruction concerning in particular the Decalogue.<sup>12</sup> Nevertheless textual evidence from Second Temple literature shows that and how the Decalogue was directly used in (literary) paraenesis. Evidence include, Let. Aris. 168, Pseudo-Phocylides 3–8 and Philo's De decalogo, a writing which might have been used as a proselyte catechism.<sup>13</sup>

Another hint is given by the phylacteries (tefillin) found among the Qumran texts. Some, but not all economy<sup>14</sup> of them contain—contrary to later rabbinic regulations<sup>15</sup>—the Ten Words in the version of Deuteronomy 5.<sup>16</sup> Used primarily for apotropaic reasons and certainly not read regularly, these tefillin nevertheless testify to a considerable use of the Decalogue in everyday life, though perhaps of a religious elite.<sup>17</sup> Since they were intended to contain words of prayer, they show that the Decalogue was probably recited in the Qumran community in the hour of prayer. A notice in the work of Jerome,<sup>18</sup> which attributes the use of the Ten Words in tefillin to the Pharisees at the time of Jesus, may indicate that this practice was not limited to the religious group who left their traces in the Qumran texts.

Possibly the Decalogue also formed part of the public cult at the Jerusalem temple. This could be derived already from the Hebrew Bible, especially Psalm 50 (cf. v. 7) and 81:9ff. The assumption is sup-

<sup>10</sup> Cf. Apion 1.60; 2:178, 204.

<sup>11</sup> Cf. Legat. 115, 210.

<sup>12</sup> The Theodotos inscription from Jerusalem (CIJ II 332) which may date back to the first century CE gives ΕΙΣ (Δ)ΙΔΑΧ(Η)Ν ΕΝΤΟΛΩΝ as one of the usages of the newly erected building.

<sup>13</sup> This suggestions was made by Berger, Gesetzesauslegung, 261. He applies the same suggestion to the passages L.A.B. 11.1–13; 25.7–13 and 44.6f. (265). With regard to the literary context, this seems to me far less certain than in the case of Philo.

<sup>14</sup> Cf. 4Q130–133.

<sup>15</sup> Cf. S. C. Mimouni, Les chrétiens d'origine juive dans l'antiquité, Présences du judaïsme (Paris: Albin Michel, 2004), 95–97, who cites m. Sanh. 11:3; s. also Sif. Dev. wa'ethanan § 34 (Finkelstein 60f.); Sif. Dev. § 35 (Finkelstein 62); Jerome, Comm. in Ezek. 24:15 (ed. Glorie, CChr.SL vol. 75, 330).

<sup>16</sup> Cf. 1Q13; 4Q128; 4Q129; 4Q134; 4Q137; 4Q139; 4Q142; 8Q3; XQphyl 3. The phylactery 5Q8 was not opened and read by the editor J. T. Milik, cf. DJD vol. III, 178; 4Q147 and 148 were not deciphered; s. DJD vol. VI, 79. It seems that the Decalogue formed, together with Deut 6:4–6, one of the four texts contained in one group of the Qumran tefillin. This reminds of the partition of texts in the Nash Papyrus.

<sup>17</sup> Cf. L. H. Schiffman, "Phylacteries and Mezuzot," Encyclopedia of the Dead Sea Scrolls (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2000), 2:675–677: 677.

<sup>18</sup> Cf. Jerome, Comm. in Matth. 23:5 (PL 26, 174).

ported by the evidence of the Mishnah: m. Tam. 5:1<sup>19</sup> stipulates that the Decalogue is to be recited before the daily whole-burnt offering by the priests on duty.

The famous Nash Papyrus, first published in 1903<sup>20</sup> and dated to the second century BCE by William F. Albright,<sup>21</sup> contains a version of the Decalogue combining Exodus 20 and Deuteronomy 5 and showing some proximity to the Septuagint version. It might be a trace of public recitation of the Ten Words outside the Temple service.<sup>22</sup> Other experts have suggested that the papyrus was a text for a mezuzah, comparable to examples from Qumran such as 4Q149 with a mixture of Exod 20:7–12 and Deut 5:11–16 (Deut 5:27–29 and 10:12–20 in the mezuzah 4Q151),<sup>23</sup> or intended for instruction.<sup>24</sup> The addition of the introductory phrase “My people, children of Israel” (Hebr./Aram.: בְּנֵי יִשְׂרָאֵל<sup>25</sup> עִמָּא viz. עָמִי) in the rendering of Exod 20:2 in the targumic tradition<sup>26</sup> may also hint at a liturgical usage of the passage.<sup>27</sup> And in a Sabbath prayer which could stem from the early Jewish-hellenistic synagogue and which is preserved in the seventh book of the Apostolic Constitutions, the Decalogue is mentioned in the invocatio to God:

You gave to them a Law, ten oracles uttered by your voice, and engraved by your hand (Const. Apost. 7.36.13).

<sup>19</sup> For a discussion of the questions of historicity of this passage, see my article cited in n. 1.

<sup>20</sup> Cf. S. A. Cook, “A Pre-Massoretic Biblical Papyrus,” Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology 25 (1903): 34–56.

<sup>21</sup> Cf. W. F. Albright, “A Biblical Fragment from the Maccabean Age: The Nash Papyrus,” JBL 56 (1937): 145–176.

<sup>22</sup> Cf. F. C. Burkitt, “The Hebrew Papyrus of the Ten Commandments,” JQR 15 (1903): 392–408; idem, “The Nash Papyrus,” JQR 16 (1904): 559–561; W. F. Albright, On the Date of the Scrolls from “Ain Feshkha and the Nash Papyrus,” BASOR 115 (1949): 10–19 (photograph of the papyrus, 11).

<sup>23</sup> In accordance with later rabbinic usage, the texts Deut 6:4–9 and 11:13–21 were probably contained in the mezuzot 4Q150; 4Q152; 4Q153.

<sup>24</sup> Cf. N. Peters, Die älteste Handschrift der Zehn Gebote (Freiburg i.Br., 1905), 9 (non vidi); S. Krauss, Talmudische Archäologie, Grundriß der Gesamtwissenschaft des Judentums (reprint Hildesheim: Georg Olms, 1966 [Leipzig, 1912]), 3:209 with notes (341 n. 63, reference to y. Meg. 4:5 fol. 75b).

<sup>25</sup> Not in Tg. Neof. I.

<sup>26</sup> Cf. Tg. Ps.-Jonathan; Tg. Neof. I ad loc. MS Paris Bibliothèque Nationale Hébr 110 has עִמָּא בֵּיתָא יִשְׂרָאֵל (Biblia Polyglotta Matritensia II, 150–151).

<sup>27</sup> Cf. I. Elbogen, Der jüdische Gottesdienst in seiner geschichtlichen Entwicklung (Hildesheim: Georg Olms, 2nd reprint of the 3rd edn, Frankfurt a.M., 1931), 1995, 188, 192; M. McNamara, The New Testament and the Palestinian Targum to the Pentateuch, Analecta Biblica 27 (Rome: Pontifical Biblical Institute, 1966), 138 with n. 38 (further evidence from the targumim).

So in the beginnings of Jewish synagogue worship in the Second Temple period, the Decalogue could have been part of the texts read out to the congregation. Later on, the role of the Decalogue in synagogue worship was highly disputed. In Palestinian synagogues the Ten Words were removed from the liturgy “because of the antipathy / arguments of the minim.”<sup>28</sup>

To sum up the evidence adduced, we can say that the Ten Words played a significant, if not prominent, part in the religious life of Second Temple Judaism. Apart from the individual’s study of the Bible, which presupposes a developed skill in reading the Hebrew or Greek texts,<sup>29</sup> one could come across the Decalogue in instruction at home or in school and in worship. Coming to a conclusion, we might say that the most probable way for the ordinary man to learn the Ten Words in first-century Palestine would have been by repeatedly hearing them.<sup>30</sup>

---

<sup>28</sup> Cf. E. E. Urbach, “The Role of the Ten Commandments in Jewish Worship,” in The Ten Commandments in History and Tradition, ed. B.-Z. Segal and G. Levi, Publications of the Perry Foundation for Biblical Research (Jerusalem: Magnes Press, 1990), 161–189: 168–169, who cites the relevant sources. In the Yerushalmi the saying runs: “because of the statement of the minim that they might not say: Only the ten words were given to Moses at Sinai” (y. Ber. 1:5 [3c]). For a comprehensive discussion of the saying cf. Mimouni, Les chrétiens, 93–95. The earliest rabbi referred to in this context is R. Nathan (140–165 CE). This may point to the Jamnia period; cf. W. D. Davies, The Setting of the Sermon on the Mount (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1964), 281.

b. Ber. 12a shows that in Babylonian Jewry of the third or fourth century attempts were made to reintroduce the Decalogue into the synagogue prayer. The idea that the Ten Words comprise the totality of the Torah found its way into medieval midrashim; cf. E. E. Urbach, The Sages: Their Concepts and Beliefs, Publications of the Perry Foundation in the Hebrew University of Jerusalem (Jerusalem: Magnes Press, repr. 1987), 1:362–364.

<sup>29</sup> Whether Jesus of Nazareth was able to read cannot be said with certainty. The scene described in Luke 4:16–30, especially v. 17, presupposes this skill, but we should not build too much on it. John 7:15 is not concerned with the question of literacy, but with that of knowing the Scriptures. The general impression of the Jesus movement given by the sources is that of an illiterate group. For a more optimistic view of Jesus’ ability to read cf. J. P. Meier, A Marginal Jew: Rethinking the Historical Jesus 1: The Roots of the Problem and the Person, Anchor Bible Reference Library (New York: Doubleday, 1991), 268–278.

<sup>30</sup> As a parallel from Roman education we may adduce Cicero’s statement that as a boy he learnt the “Twelve” (i.e. the Law of the Twelve Tablets) by heart (discebamus enim pueri duodecim ut carmen necessarium), cf. Cicero, De legibus 2.23.59–60. S. F. Bonner, Education in Ancient Rome: From the Elder Cato to the Younger Pliny (London: Methuen, 1977), 88 with n. 118.

3. Jesus and the Ten Words According to Early Christian Sources

3.1. The Direct Quotations

Direct quotations of the Ten Words in the mouth of Jesus occur in Matt 5:21 (Exod 20:13 = Deut 5:17); 5:27 (Exod 20:14 = Deut 5:18); 15:4 par. Mark 7:10 (Exod 20:12 = Deut 5:16) and 19:18f. pars. Mark 10:19; Luke 18:20 (Exod 20:12–16 = Deut 5:16–20).

Comparing the textual traditions, we observe that the series of commandments in Matt 19:18 follows the sequence of the Masoretic text of both Exodus 20 and Deuteronomy 5 against that of the Septuagint version. In Matt 15:4 and 19:18, the text differs from both MT and LXX in reading no possessive pronoun behind πατέρα and μητέρα, while Mark 7:10 and Exod 20:12 MT, Deut 5:16 MT/LXX, 4QDeut<sup>n</sup> IV, 7, Papyrus Nash l. 16, 4Q129 l. 8, 1Q13 fragm. 15, 4Q137 l. 23, 4Q139 l. 9 read “your father and your mother,” and Mark 10:19/Luke 18:20 and Exod 20:12 LXX have no pronoun after “mother.” Instead of the negation οὐ with the future tense of Exod 20:12–16 = Deut 5:16–20 LXX,<sup>31</sup> Mark 10:19/Luke 18:20 have μή with the aorist tense.<sup>32</sup> If Matthew read Mark, we would have to interpret the change from the aorist to the future tense in Matt 19:18–19 as a correction of the wording towards the Greek text of the Scriptures.

In the Jesus tradition (or elsewhere in the New Testament and other early Christian sources) the Decalogue is never quoted completely. Moreover, all quotations of parts of the Decalogue combine this text with other commandments of the Torah. The notion of the Ten Words as a separate textual unit seems to have been a restricted one.

In the first two antitheses of the Sermon on the Mount, which are Matthean Sondergut,<sup>33</sup> two commandments of the Decalogue appear in a series of other prescriptions which were “told” (Gr.: ἐρρέθη). These are taken from Deut 24:1–4; Num 30:3/Deut 23:22; Exod 21:24/Lev 24:20/Deut 19:21 and Lev 19:18. In Matt 15:4/Mark 7:10, the fifth<sup>34</sup>

<sup>31</sup> Cf. also Philo, Decal. 36.

<sup>32</sup> Cf. Jas 2:11.

<sup>33</sup> Matt 5:25–26 could have been taken from Q, cf. Luke 12:(57)58–59. It is more difficult to be certain that Matt 5:29–30 (cf. 19:8–9 par. Mark 9:43, 45, 47) was part of Q; Luke has no parallel. Whether the antitheses (or some of them) formed a pre-Matthean textual unit, is not certain. Cf. U. Luz, Das Evangelium nach Matthäus (Mt 1–7), EKK 1.1 (Zürich: Benziger Verlag/Neukirchener Verlag, 1985), 244–250 for a short overview.

<sup>34</sup> In counting the commandments we follow Philo, Decal.

commandment is combined with the stipulation Exod 21:17/Lev 20:9. And in Matt 19:18–19 pars., the Decalogue series is again completed by the love commandment taken from Lev 19:18.

So while the Decalogue and its parts are certainly adduced as exemplary or even pivotal for the moral demands of the Torah, its combination with other commandments shows that exactness, completeness, or exclusiveness of the quotation were not judged decisive for the argument. With this selective use of the Decalogue, Jesus, as he is portrayed in the synoptics, is in the middle between the rare exact quotation of the Decalogue in Second Temple literature outside the Bible (as in Philo, Decal., L.A.B. 11 and 44,<sup>35</sup> the Papyrus Nash and the Qumran tefillin and mezuzot), and the frequent occurrences of free citation or paraphrase (Ps.-Phocylides 3–8; Let. Aris. 168; Josephus, Ant. 3.91) or supposed allusion to it in other texts (Wis 14:22–31; Ps.-Menander 9–15; Philo, Hypoth. 7.1–9; Josephus, Apion 2.190–192; 2 En. 10.5; Apoc. Abr. 24.5–8).

The citations of the Decalogue in the New Testament are never introduced as parts of a written text. It fits well into the context of the Sermon on the Mount that the scriptural passages cited are marked with the phrase “you heard that it was said” (Gr.: ἠκούσατε ὅτι ἐρρέθη; in v. 21 and v. 33 the text adds: τοῖς ἀρχαίοις).<sup>36</sup> This is not only apt with regard to the supposed illiteracy of the addressees, but it also underlines the contrast of the words formerly said (at Mount Sinai or in the instruction of the Jewish home) with the proclamation of Jesus’ new oral message. While in Mark 10:19 pars. no introductory phrase is used, in Mark 7:10–11 the things “Moses said” are in contrast with those “you said.” Matt 15:4–5 even sharpens this contrast by replacing “God” with “Moses.”

Though Jesus, as he is described in our sources, never contradicts directly the Decalogue, its authority seems relative. This is evident in the antitheses of the Sermon on the Mount, in which Jesus juxtaposes his own commandments to those of the Torah, thus intensifying the obligation, but in two cases (Matt 5:31–32, 38–42) also openly contradicting the Torah. With regard to the Decalogue, the prohibition of killing (Matt 5:21) is radicalized by even forbidding anger against the “brother” and by the call to reconciliation. The sixth commandment (Matt 5:27) is interpreted in such a way that a lustful glance is already regarded as adultery. Thus the wording of the commandment is respected, but at the same time it becomes apparent that a merely literal understanding of it would not be sufficient to seize the “better justice” (Matt 5:20). With the use of ἐπιθυμῆν, the text alludes to the tenth commandment, which could be understood as the basis of the prohibition and the ratio of the whole Decalogue,<sup>37</sup> perhaps already in the Old Testament,<sup>38</sup> but certainly in Second Temple Judaism<sup>39</sup> and in early Christianity.<sup>40</sup>

<sup>35</sup> Even in Philo, Decal., the Decalogue is never quoted completely (Decal. 36 cites only three commandments by way of example).

<sup>36</sup> It is interesting to note that the text uses this somewhat distanced introductory formula and thus does not present the texts taken from Scripture as directly addressed to (and valid for?) the contemporaneous generation. The gospel redaction seems to think of a mixed (not exclusively Jewish) audience of the Sermon on the Mount (cf. Matt 4:25).

Outside the antitheses, the pericope on the korban conflict (Mark 7:1–23 par. Matt 15:1–20) juxtaposes the commandment of God and the traditions of the Scribes and the Pharisees. Though the fifth commandment is confirmed, I cannot see that the text aims at an admonition to keep this commandment. The same is true for Matt 19:16–22: the commandments kept by the young man are certainly valid, but, nevertheless, there is something lacking to perfection (cf. 19:21: εἰ θέλεις τέλειος εἶναι).<sup>41</sup>

3.2. Further Evidence

Only five of the Ten Commandments are quoted explicitly (commandments 6 to 10 according to Philo’s counting), while the first four do not occur in the mouth of Jesus.

Closer examination shows, however, that the first tablet of the Ten Words also plays a certain role in the Jesus tradition, even if not quoted <sup>37</sup> It may be noted that also a pagan listener or reader could understand ἐπιθυμία as the basic fault of human existence; see Maximus of Tyre, Dialex. 24:4a; Ps.-Lucian, Cynicus 15, and the title of Martha C. Nussbaum’s analysis of Hellenistic ethics: The Therapy of Desire: Theory and Practice in Hellenistic Ethics, Martin Classical Lectures, New Series 2 (Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1994).

<sup>38</sup> Cf. D. N. Freedman, The Nine Commandments: Uncovering a Hidden Pattern of Crime and Punishment in the Hebrew Bible (New York: Doubleday, 2000); H. Sivan, Between Woman, Man and God: A New Interpretation of the Ten Commandments (London: T&T Clark, 2004), 208–211.

<sup>39</sup> Cf. Tg. Neof. I Exod 20:17; Tg. Neof. I Deut 5:21; Tg. Neof. I Gen 3:6; b. Shab. 145b–146a; b. Yeb. 103b; b. AZ. 22b; see S. Lyonnet, “‘Tu ne convoiteras pas’ (Rom. vii 7),” in Neotestamentica et Patristica: Freundesgabe O. Cullmann, NovTSup 6 (Leiden: Brill, 1962), 157–165.

<sup>40</sup> Cf. Rom 7:7–8.

<sup>41</sup> In the version of the Gospel of the Nazarenes (Ps.-Origen, Comm. in Matth. 15:14, interpolation in the Latin text) of this scene, the fulfillment of the love commandment (Lev 19:18) is given priority.

explicitly. This is to say that the separation of two sets of commandments and their respective addressees, which has its place in Jewish thought,<sup>42</sup> is not decisive for the Jesus tradition.

Instead of the first commandment, in Matt 22:37–40 pars. Jesus adduces Deut 6:5 as the highest commandment and, together with Lev 19:18, as the conclusion of the whole Law and the Prophets. Subsuming the Law under two main commandments or virtues is not alien to Jewish literature of the time<sup>43</sup> and has a parallel in the pagan idea of two main virtues, those of εὐσέβεια and δικαιοσύνη.<sup>44</sup>

As we have seen above, m. Tam. 5:1 testifies to the existence of the Shema prayer including Deut 6:4–5 already in the Second Temple Period, but it is uncertain whether the enumeration of the Shema in the Mishnah passage after the Decalogue shows a historical development and shift of importance.<sup>45</sup> The most obvious reason for citing Deut 6:5 (only Mark 12:29 has the introduction Deut 6:4 which gave the name to the whole Shema prayer) in Matt 22:37, rather than the first of the Ten Words, is the verbal linkage to Lev 19:18 made possible by the word ἀγαπήσεις.<sup>46</sup>

In the story of Jesus' temptation by the devil (Matt 4:1–11 par. Luke 4:1–13), the former answers the last temptation by citing the commandment Deut 6:13/10:20 (Matt 4:10/Luke 4:8).<sup>47</sup> Though the citation and its context (Deut 6:4–25)<sup>48</sup> are close parallels to the first commandment, in the temptation story the opposition is not between the One God of Israel and other gods, but between God and the devil.

<sup>42</sup> For the idea of the two tables of the covenant containing not the whole Decalogue each (as in Deut 4:13; 5:22; 9:9–15; 10:1–5; less explicit on this point are Exod 31:18; 32:15–16, 19; 34:1, 4, 27–29), but the two parts of the Decalogue, cf. Philo, Decal. 50–51, 106–107.

In Pes. R. 21.2–3 (Ulmer, 436–439), the question whether the social commandments are addressed to the nations is controversial between the emperor Hadrian and R. Joshua b. Hananiah. For Justin, Dial. 19.6, the prescription of the Sabbath (together with the circumcision, the food laws, the sacrifices, and the institution of the Temple) was a reaction to the people's disobedience. The social commandments are a natural law; cf. Dial. 93.1.

<sup>43</sup> Cf. Let. Aris. 128–132; Jub. 37.7; T. Dan 5.3; T. Jos. 5.2, 7.6; T. Benj. 3.3; Philo, Decal. 50, 106f.; Spec. 2.61–63, Virt. 95; Her. 168, 172; Josephus, Apion 2.206, 291. See also Berger, Gesetzesauslegung, 142–165.

<sup>44</sup> Cf. A. Dihle, Der Kanon der zwei Tugenden, Arbeitsgemeinschaft für Forschung des Landes Nordrhein-Westfalen. Geisteswissenschaften 144 (Cologne: Westdeutscher Verlag, 1968).

<sup>45</sup> This is the hypothesis proposed by Urbach, Sages, 1:19–21.

<sup>46</sup> This linkage can also be seen in the Hebrew text.

<sup>47</sup> The textual form of the quotation is that of the Codex Alexandrinus.

<sup>48</sup> In Matt 4:7/Luke 4:12, Deut 6:16 is cited.

John 10:33 is the only verse in the Fourth Gospel which uses the noun βλασφημία, while the verb βλασφημεῖν occurs once in v. 36. This can be interpreted as an allusion to the high priest's statement in Mark 14:64 par. Matt 26:65.<sup>49</sup> While βλασφημία and βλασφημεῖν have a range of meanings,<sup>50</sup> in the context of the Passion narrative the accusation is built on Lev 24:16<sup>51</sup> (cf. Exod 22:27; Num 15:30f.) and is a reaction to Jesus' confession in the preceding verse. This confession is not blasphemy in the strict sense,<sup>52</sup> but the positive answer to the high priest's question together with<sup>53</sup> the self-identification with the coming of the "Son of Man." The words provoke the high priest's reaction and the death sentence uttered by the Sanhedrin. This is not because of messianic expectation in general,<sup>54</sup> but because of Jesus' claim to be the Messiah. I cannot see that Jesus is condemned only for his prophecy of sitting at God's right hand and thus sharing divine authority.<sup>55</sup> It is the Johannine allusion and interpretation of this scene in John 10 which clearly sees God's uniqueness involved.

To decide on the historicity of the synoptic account is notoriously difficult. Apart from the thorny question of the legal procedure, the combination of three christological titles has led exegetes to see post-Easter Christian theology at work.<sup>56</sup> But this argument loses its strength

<sup>49</sup> Cf. H. Thyen, Das Johannesevangelium, HNT 6 (Tübingen: Mohr/Paul Siebeck, 2005), 501. In Luke 22 the verse is omitted.

<sup>50</sup> Cf. C. A. Evans, Mark 8:27–16:20, WBC 34B (Nashville: Thomas Nelson Publishers, 2001), 453–455.

<sup>51</sup> Cf. Exod 22:27; Num 15:30–31 and Str-B 1:1008–1012 for the history of interpretation.

<sup>52</sup> For the Mishnah, blasphemy in the strict sense involved the name of God, thus the third commandment; cf. m. Sanh. 7:5. But also the Jewish tradition after 70 CE had a wider notion of blasphemy; cf. Str-B 1:1013–1017.

<sup>53</sup> It is against the intention of the narrative to make a distinction between titles which would have been acceptable for the Sanhedrin and others which would not. Already the high priest's question in Matt 26:63/Mark 14:61 is intended to provoke an answer which could lead to condemnation. All three titles—"Messiah," "Son of God," and "Son of Man"—had their place in Jewish messianology, though questions of chronology, esp. concerning the "Son of Man," are highly controversial.

<sup>54</sup> While one can conjecture that the (Sadducean?, cf. Acts 5:17; Josephus, Ant. 20.199) high priest on duty would not be very open to messianic hopes, we cannot be sure whether this was the position of the whole Sanhedrin. For the composition of the council cf. E. Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ (175 B.C.–A.D. 135), ed. G. Vermes et al. (Edinburgh: T&T Clark, 1979), 2:210–218.

<sup>55</sup> Pace M. D. Hooker, The Son of Man in Mark: A Study of the Background of the Term "Son of Man" and its Use in St Mark's Gospel (London: SPCK, 1967), 172–173.

<sup>56</sup> Cf. U. Luz, Das Evangelium nach Matthäus (Mt 26–28), EKK 1.4 (Zürich: Benziger Verlag/Neukirchener Verlag, 2002), 197.

when we notice that a messianic claim, and not theology modified by christology, is at stake.

In John 10, both parties make reference to the Scriptures. While the Jews combine their accusation of blasphemy with an allusion to Lev 24:15–16, Jesus answers with the help of Ps 82:6.<sup>57</sup> The psalm verse probably had a polytheistic background.<sup>58</sup> The problem was still in view when in Second Temple Judaism, the expression אֱלֹהִים viz. θεοί was no longer understood of “gods,” but of angels, Melchizedek, the Judges, or the people gathered at Mount Sinai.<sup>59</sup> In the Fourth Gospel, Jesus shows, by referring to the psalm, that his self-understanding as “son of God” (and his way of addressing God as his “father”; cf. John 5:18) is not against the Scriptures. On the contrary, the Scriptures’ promise is fulfilled in Jesus, who was sent and sanctified by God (10:36). Far from being a parody of Jewish exegesis, the proof from Scripture is adduced for a christological purpose. The problem of the relation of christology to traditional biblical monotheism is obviously treated in a subtle way. The point is not that Jesus is not “God” or “God-like,” but that he does not make himself God-like (cf. 5:18; 19:7).<sup>60</sup> The solution offered in John 5 and 10 makes no direct appeal to the first commandment or the Shema. As the pericopes are formed by Johannine theology and may react to contemporary Jewish-Christian discussions of christology, it is difficult to reach sound historical conclusions with regard to the pre-Easter Jesus.

The occurrence of the second commandment in the Jesus tradition is not obvious. Explicit conflicts, e.g. with the Roman authorities about the veneration of pagan deities or their images, are absent from our texts, although other sources of the time have something to tell concerning that matter.

An allusion to such conflicts can be found in Mark 13:14. The expression τὸ βδέλυγμα τῆς ἐρημώσεως implicitly refers to the Danielic vision (cf. Dan 9:27; 11:31; 12:11) and its historical background in Maccabean <sup>57</sup> As J. H. Neyrey, “‘I said: You are gods’: Psalm 82:6 and John 10,” JBL 108 (1989): 647–663, esp. 655–659, showed, later Jewish exegesis connected Ps 82:6–7 with the idea of the acceptance and fulfillment of the Torah, which led Israel to holiness and immortality. As John 10:35 also stresses a “word of God,” the midrashic tradition may help us to understand the pericope.

<sup>58</sup> Cf. H.-J. Kraus, Psalmen. 2. Teilband. Psalmen 60–150, 7th ed., BKAT 15.2 (Neukirchen-Vluyn: Neukirchener Verlag, 2003), 734–739.

<sup>59</sup> Cf. A. Hanson, “John’s Citation of Ps 82 Reconsidered,” NTS 13 (1967): 363–367.

<sup>60</sup> As John 1:1.18; 20:28 show, the Fourth Gospel sees a unity of God and Logos, viz. the Son.

times (cf. 1 Macc 1:54; 6:7), but at the same time points to political and religious conflicts in first-century Judaea, which may have involved, on the Jewish side, the second commandment.<sup>61</sup> In Matt 24:15, the reference to Daniel's prophecy is made explicit, whereas in Luke 21:20 the expression mentioned is left out.

The pericope on the tax coin (Mark 12:13–17 pars. Matt 22:15–22 / Luke 20:20–26; diff. Matt 17:24–27) seems to allude clearly to the second commandment. Jesus points to the image (Gr.: εἰκών) and the inscription (Gr.: ἐπιγραφή<sup>62</sup> stamped on the coin. It is a (surely ironic!) argumentation with the help of the image, not openly against it. Both the theoretical possibility of God's image stamped on the coin and its practical impossibility and religious inacceptability contribute to the wit of the argument.

We can grasp the religious impact of the scene more distinctly when we envisage the image and inscription stamped on the coin mentioned (according to Mark 12:15 pars. a "denarius"). If we assume that Jesus was shown a specimen of the actual coinage of the time, then the most probable candidate would be a silver denarius issued by the Roman emperor Tiberius and minted in Lyons<sup>63</sup> showing, on the one side, the image of the emperor with a laurel and the inscription:

TI(berius) CAESAR DIVI AVG(usti) F(ilius) AVGVSTVS and, on the verso, the female person (the Emperor's mother Livia?)<sup>64</sup> sitting on a throne with scepter and olive twig, and the inscription:

PONTIF(ex) MAXIM(us)<sup>65</sup>

The religious implications of the image, the symbols and the inscription are evident. So when Jesus, by looking at the coin and answering the Pharisees' and Herodians' question, seems to separate the political and the religious spheres and to acknowledge also the rights of the former one, at the same time this implies a strong opposition against <sup>61</sup> Cf. Josephus, War 2.169–177, 184–203.

<sup>62</sup> The fact that the inscription is explicitly mentioned shows that its content is essential for the understanding of the scene.

<sup>63</sup> Cf. H. St J. Hart, "The coin of 'Render unto Caesar...'" (A note on some aspects of Mark 12:13–17; Matt. 22:15–22, Luke 20:20–26), in Jesus and the Politics of His Day, ed. E. Bammel and C. F. D. Moule (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1984), 241–248.

<sup>64</sup> For various attempts to identify the figure cf. C. H. V. Sutherland, Coinage in Roman Imperial Policy. 31 B.C.–A.D. 68 (London: Methuen, 1951), 84 n. 8.

<sup>65</sup> Cf. C. H. V. Sutherland, Roman Coins (Freiburg: Office du Livre, repr. 1974), 144 (photograph), 147 (description).

the religious ambitions of the Emperor. By interpreting the image on the coin as a mere sign of its owner, Jesus ironically emphasizes a secondary aspect of the problem and intentionally overlooks the implicit postulate of religious reverence.<sup>66</sup>

It is almost certain that the fourth antithesis, Matt 5:33–36, is concerned with the third commandment,<sup>67</sup> although that text is not cited directly, and the name of God is not mentioned, either. Near parallels to the pericope, especially to the opening v. 33, can be found not only in the Old Testament (cf. Lev 19:12; Ps 24:4),<sup>68</sup> but also in Jewish literature of the Second Temple period,<sup>69</sup> where the problem of the oath is also explicitly connected with that of the misuse of the name of God.<sup>70</sup>

The synoptic scenes focusing on the Sabbath commandment (Mark 2:23–28 pars.; 3:1–6 pars.; Luke 13:10–17; 14:1–6)<sup>71</sup> are not just about Sabbath halakhah (that is: interpretation of the fourth commandment for practical purpose), but they seem to diminish the authority of the Torah commandment itself as against other aspects or principles. Whereas in Mark 3:1–6 pars.; Luke 13:10–17; 14:1–6, it is for the well-being of a human being (not to rescue a life from imminent danger!)<sup>72</sup> that Jesus ignores the prohibition of working, in Mark 2:23–28 pars. no such concern can be detected.<sup>73</sup> Jesus' question in Mark 3:4 builds

<sup>66</sup> This implication is seen by F. F. Bruce, "Render to Caesar," in Jesus, ed. Bammel and Moule, 249–263: 263. He restricts its significance, however, to the time and situation of later Jesus followers.

<sup>67</sup> Philo, Decal. 82–95 explains the commandment as a prohibition of oath; cf. Spec. 4.40.

<sup>68</sup> Cf. W. H. Schmidt, H. Delkurt and A. Graupner, Die Zehn Gebote im Rahmen alttestamentlicher Ethik, EdF 281 (Darmstadt: Wissenschaftliche Buchgesellschaft, 1993), 80–81 with notes.

<sup>69</sup> Cf. Ps.-Phocylides 16; Sib. Or. 2.68; Philo, Spec. 2.2–28.224; see also Did. 2.3.

<sup>70</sup> Cf. Philo, Decal. 82–95, esp. 93; Spec. 4.40; CD XV, 1; Josephus, Ant. 3.91; see also Pes. R. 22.4–6 (Ulmer 520–525). Str-B 1:326–327 adds evidence from the targumic tradition.

Matt 23:16–22 comes back to the question of oaths. As the text cannot be read as an admonition for the readers of the Gospel, there is no contradiction to Matt 5:33–37; cf. U. Luz, Das Evangelium nach Matthäus (Mt 18–25), EKK 1.3 (Zürich: Benziger Verlag/Neukirchener Verlag, 1997), 329.

<sup>71</sup> Mark 1:29–31 par. Luke 4:38–41 seems to take place on the Sabbath day, but is not a Sabbath conflict. In Matthew's version of the story (Matt 8:14–17), there is no marked link to the Sabbath problem. Mark 6:1–6 par. Matt 13:53–58 diff. Luke 4:16–30 tells us about a few healings which possibly took place on the Sabbath day. No stress is laid on this point. Matt 24:20 diff. Mark 13:18 presupposes Jesus' respect for the Sabbath commandment. The verse probably reflects, however, the position of a Jewish-Christian group. For the difficulties in harmonizing this verse with either Jesus or a Jewish-Christian group or the position of the redactor, cf. Luz, Matthäus, 3:428–429.

<sup>72</sup> But cf. Mark 3:4, where the situation is interpreted by Jesus as a matter of good or ill and life or death.

<sup>73</sup> The assumption that the disciples were starving to death and therefore plucked rhetorically on a fundamental and evident alternative, which seems to leave neither choice nor room for Sabbath rest as a third option. While the introductory formula with ἔξεστιν could be typical of a halakhic discussion concerned with the Sabbath commandment,<sup>74</sup> the continuation of the question is a reductio ad absurdum of the argument. In terms of jurisprudence one could call this a permission to break the Sabbath for healing which is extended beyond imminent danger to life.<sup>75</sup> Jesus would thus appear as an authority recommending a more liberal Sabbath halakhah. Basically, however, it seems to be an appeal to an ethical and religious common sense which is available for everyone.

Jesus' question in Luke 13:15; 14:5 par. Matt 12:11, which might remind us of Sabbath regulations in the Damascus document<sup>76</sup> and its Qumran version,<sup>77</sup> rhetorically establishes the common ground for his argumentation, but not the matter of dispute. Jesus makes appeal to the (alleged) common Sabbath praxis of his audience, which might or might not have been recommended by the legal and religious authorities.

In Mark 2:23–28, Jesus answers a halakhic question with a (badly chosen) example from the Haggadah. As David Daube<sup>78</sup> and Alan Watson have pointed out,<sup>79</sup> in terms of later Jewish jurisprudence this the grains has no probability at all. In addition to Mark's account, Matt 12:1 mentions the disciples' being hungry. But there is no text from contemporaneous Jewish Sabbath halakhah which regards being hungry as a sufficient reason to break the commandment. Luke 6:1 adds the notice of the disciples' rubbing the ears of corn which could be interpreted as work or as preparation of food. Whether the halachic discussion between R. Judah and other sages in b. Shabb. 128a can be adduced as a parallel is not certain; cf. B. Schaller, Jesus und der Sabbat, FDV 3 (Münster: Institutum Judaicum Delitzschianum, 1994), 9–11.

---

The phrase ὁδὸν ποιεῖν in Mark 2:23 has suggested the idea that the disciples, in the author's view, might have gone too far in a literal sense. But what about the Pharisees who are witnessing the scene? No stress is laid on the question of the Sabbath way in the pericope under scrutiny.

<sup>74</sup> Cf. L. Doering, Schabbat: Sabbathalacha und -praxis im antiken Judentum und Urchristentum, TSAJ 78 (Tübingen: Mohr/Paul Siebeck, 1999) 450 n. 297 with reference to Mark 2:24; Josephus, Ant. 13.252 and John 5:10.

While there is evidence for a technical usage of "rescue of life" (Hebr. פְּקוּיֹת נַפְשׁוֹ) in Jewish sources on Sabbath halakhah from the Second Temple period onwards (cf. Str-B 1:623–629; 2:5,533–534; Doering, Schabbat, 566–567 with notes), "doing the good" is, as far as I know, not a technical term.

<sup>75</sup> In this extension of the Sabbath halakhah to healing beyond imminent life danger, Schaller, Jesus sees the historical kernel of the tradition on Jesus and the Sabbath.

<sup>76</sup> CD XI, 5–6 and CD XI, 13.16.

<sup>77</sup> 4Q265 frg. 7 l. 4–5 and 4Q265 fragm. 6 l 5–7; cf. t. Shab. 14 (15):3; b. Shab. 128b.

<sup>78</sup> Cf. D. Daube, The New Testament and Rabbinic Judaism, JLCR 2 (London: Athlone Press, 1956), 68–71.

<sup>79</sup> Cf. A. Watson, Jesus and the Law (Athens, GA: University of Georgia Press, 1996), 38.

would be a very uncommon and unprofessional argument. It is, however, doubtful whether such a rule for valid argumentation had already gained general acceptance in first-century Judaism.<sup>80</sup>

The pericope in its final (redactional) form<sup>81</sup> cannot be understood, in my opinion, without acknowledgement of the messianic aspect of the argumentation. The action of Jesus is compared to that of King David (which, according to the biblical account,<sup>82</sup> did not take place on a Sabbath day). It is not necessary to see here priestly functions attributed to Jesus.<sup>83</sup> In vv. 27–28, which are built upon a word-play with “man” and “son of man,”<sup>84</sup> the concern for human need is set against the commandment of the Torah, an opposition which certainly would not be acceptable to the Pharisees involved in the scene. Although it is generally justified to see Jesus’ message concerned with the coming kingdom of God, I cannot see a specific reference to this in the Sabbath scenes.<sup>85</sup>

The Fourth Gospel mentions Jesus’ healings on the Sabbath day in three instances (John 5:1–18; 7:21–23; 9, especially vv. 13–17). In John 5 it is not only the healing which is incriminated (v. 16) but also Jesus’ advice to the lame man to take his bed and go (vv. 8–10). While this point is criticised by “the Jews,” it is the narrator himself who explicitly states that Jesus broke the Sabbath (v. 18: ἔλθεν<sup>86</sup> τὸ σάββατον), a statement which is repeated in different words by the Pharisees in

<sup>80</sup> Cf. Daube, New Testament, 69 (70: reference to y. Yom. 8:4 fol. 45b).

<sup>81</sup> The co-existence of two distinct Jesus logia in vv. 25–26 and 27–28 has provoked a plurality of hypotheses concerning the development of the pericope; see R. A. Guelich, Mark 1–8:26, WBC 34A (Dallas: Word Books, 1989), 119–120.

<sup>82</sup> In later Jewish tradition the event could be dated to a Sabbath day, cf. Yalq. to 1 Sam 21:5 (§ 130) b. Men. 95b; cf. L. Ginzberg, The Legends of the Jews (Baltimore: The Johns Hopkins University Press, repr. 1998), 6:243.

<sup>83</sup> The comparison made in Matt 12:5–6 is not between Jesus and the priests, but the Temple.

<sup>84</sup> Schaller, Jesus, 16–20 argues for a non-christological understanding of the word-play and adduces convincing parallels from Jewish literature. In the Marcan context, however, the “son of man” in v. 28 is best understood in terms of christology. The title is used for the first time in Mark 2:10.

<sup>85</sup> Doering, Schabbat, 424, who sees here the decisive difference to the Jewish Sabbath halakhah, fails to give the evidence.

<sup>86</sup> It is not compulsory nor even recommended by the context to understand the verb in the more fundamental sense of “to dissolve; to abolish”; cf. S.-O. Back, Jesus of Nazareth and the Sabbath Commandment (Åbo: Åbo Akademi University Press, 1995), 151 n. 18. Such fundamental statements belong to a later period of Christian literature, cf. Barnabas 2.5–6; Actus Petri cum Simone 1 (Lipsius/Bonnet, 1:45); Passio Sanctorum Apostolorum Petri et Pauli 1 (Lipsius/Bonnet, 1:118); Acta Philippi 2.10 (15) (Bovon/Bouvier/Amsler, 53).

John 9:16: Jesus “does not keep (Gr.: οὐ τηρεῖ) the Sabbath.” These basic statements about Jesus’ relation to the Sabbath are without parallel in the synoptic tradition. In John 7:22–23, Jesus compares his Sabbath healing to the Jewish practice of circumcision on the Sabbath day with reference to the episode of John 5 and using a conclusion a minori ad maius. This argumentation seems to subscribe to the logic of the Law and its interpretation. In the context of the gospel we must, however, understand this utterance as an argumentatio ad hominem, not as a fundamental statement about Jesus and the Torah. Already in the prologue, it is made clear that the Law and Moses are not on the same side or the same level with Jesus Christ (John 1:17). In speaking of “the Jews” (70 times) together with “their Law,” the Fourth Gospel and the Johannine Jesus take a remarkable distance to the Jewish tradition while using it repeatedly.<sup>87</sup>

There is only one example in the Jesus tradition in which a commandment of the Decalogue (viz. its substance) serves as the main argument in a dispute: In the discussion on divorce (Mark 10:2–12 par. Matt 19:3–9; cf. Luke 16:18–19 par. Matt 5:32; John 4:16–19), Jesus explicitly reduces the problem to that of adultery, thus making reference to the Decalogue.<sup>88</sup> While this holds true for the synoptic tradition and, more implicitly, also for John 4, our earliest testimony to Jesus’ saying on divorce, 1 Cor 7:10–11, does not use the category of adultery. So Paul does not stress the relation of the logion to the Decalogue, although this background may have been evident to the author (and his readers in Corinth?) as well.

4. The Pre-Easter Jesus and the Ten Words

Approaching the question of historicity, we have to make a distinction between the general attitude towards the Ten Words which is attributed to Jesus in our sources, and the exact form and wording of the logia presented in the narratives.

---

<sup>87</sup> The formulation occurs in the mouth of Jesus in John 8:17; 10:34; 15:25; see also 7:19, 23, 51; 8:5; 18:31; 19:7. J. Augenstein, “‘Euer Gesetz’—Ein Pronomen und die johanneische Haltung zum Gesetz,” ZNW 88 (1997): 311–313 shows that the Johannine expression itself is not anti-nomistic or anti-Jewish. The positive relation to the Scriptures and Jewish traditions in John should not lead us to overlook the conflict between Johannine Christianity and Judaism which lies behind the gospel. It is conflict between two closely related groups. For other possible references to the Ten Words in John, see J. G. van der Watt, “Ethics and Ethos in the Gospel according to John,” ZNW 97 (2006): 147–176, esp. 152–157.

<sup>88</sup> But note that the pericope in its present context would be quite pointless if the Pharisees, who ask the question, had themselves no idea of a principle lying behind or even contradicting the stipulations of the Torah concerning divorce.

With regard to the latter question it has to be repeated that, in a very simple and formal sense, no sayings of the “historical”<sup>89</sup> Jesus, whose preferred language most probably was Aramaic,<sup>90</sup> have been passed down to us. But we do come across reflections and traditions of Jesus’ own deeds and words in our sources. Radical scepticism would not be justified. On the other hand, the needs and interests of the early Christian writers, who tell us about Jesus, undoubtedly contributed considerably to the picture they draw of Jesus’ theology and ethics. The early Christians did not just remember Jesus for remembrance’ sake, but they saw a strong relation between their own time and problems and the way of life and faith Jesus showed to his followers. In seeing their lives as formed by Jesus’ words and deeds, they consciously or unconsciously formed the life of Jesus according to their opinions and needs. Different situations and communities may have contributed to the tradition of just one scene or logion, although our ability to make exact distinctions between the different shapes and levels of the tradition is rather limited, especially when we have no mutually independent sources testifying to the same event.<sup>91</sup> In this situation—which is not at all exceptional in the study of antiquity!—the task of the historian is to investigate the probability of the picture which the sources draw. Such investigations cannot start from a presupposed picture of the pre-Easter Jesus, but they have to argue for the inherent plausibility of the informations given in the sources.

With regard to the former question, i.e. the general attitude of Jesus towards the Ten Words revealed in our sources, we can isolate four main characteristics:

- a. The sources presuppose Jesus’ knowledge and acceptance of the Ten Words as normative for everyday life.
- b. No special stress is laid in Jesus’ words on the Ten Words as the most important part of the Law, as the main rule or a catechism of Judaism.

---

<sup>89</sup> For methodological and theological reasons I prefer the expression “pre-Easter Jesus” to “historical Jesus.”

<sup>90</sup> Cf. Meier, Marginal Jew, 1:255–268.

<sup>91</sup> Whether Mark and the hypothetical source Q are independent of each other is a matter of dispute. It seems to me to be beyond doubt that John knew one or more of the synoptics.

- c. In the extant sources of early Christianity, Jesus never contradicts a commandment of the Decalogue directly, but he debates and even stipulates their interpretation and extension.
- d. Apparent conflicts on the Ten Words which seem to touch the substance of the rule arise only with regard to the Sabbath commandment.

A few concluding comments concerning the historical plausibility of these points may be added:

- a'. Jesus' knowledge of the Decalogue, as shown in the sources, is part of the broader theme of Jesus' knowledge of and relation to the Scriptures of Israel. While it is obvious that each of the gospels has an individual approach to the subject, it can be said that for all four canonical gospels the theme is an important aspect of christology. This fact may raise historical suspicion with regard to the narratives, but our investigation has shown that knowledge of the Ten Words is far from impossible for a first-century Jew, even if he was illiterate.
- b'. Our analysis of the extant sources has shown that the Ten Words could be understood as a prominent, but not isolated, part of the Torah in Second Temple Judaism. In the literature of the period, the Decalogue is not singled out as the only relevant prescription made by God to his people. But contrary to later tendencies in Jewish thought, an effort to minimize the special importance of the Decalogue cannot be discerned either. Jesus' attitude towards the Ten Words, as it is depicted in the sources, fits very well into this overall picture.
- c'. Apart from the Sabbath commandment, Jesus never extends his interpretation of the Decalogue to the limits or beyond. While in Mark 7:9–13 par. he criticizes a certain halakhah, in the antitheses of the Sermon on the Mount he spells out the positive intention of two of the prohibitions of the Decalogue in a radical manner, while a third commandment is probably in view. In addition to this, Jesus seems to ask for the internal thoughts and motivations which, in his opinion, are also aimed at by the Decalogue. In the context of the First Gospel this attitude towards some commandments of the Torah fits well into the general picture drawn of Jesus as God's representative. It is thus part of Matthew's christology. Nevertheless, the quest for the basic and positive ethical intentions of the Law or some parts of it is not without parallels in Second Temple Judaism. With respect to this tendency, the historian is justified in interpreting the message of the Jesus movement as one of several attempts to put the Law into practice in everyone's everyday life in Palestine and outside the Temple courts in the first century CE.<sup>92</sup>

Jesus' Jewish opponents, as they are depicted in the Fourth Gospel, see an open conflict between his claim to authority and the first commandment. This picture, which may have been influenced by post-Easter Jewish-Christian controversy, does not allow us to draw any confident conclusions with respect to the pre-Easter Jesus. Early Christian theology laid stress on the conviction that belief in Jesus Christ does not contradict traditional monotheistic faith. The most probable conjecture is that Jesus himself held on to the first commandment and saw no conflict with his self-understanding.

- d'. While a fundamental opposition of Jesus to the Sabbath commandment is never spelled out clearly in the early sources, it is the Sabbath halakhah (together with some aspects of the halakhah concerning purity, the food laws and the korban practice) which is a matter of conflict between Jesus and some of his contemporaries. The position Jesus takes may be called "a-halakhic."<sup>93</sup> The fact that the Sabbath conflicts are not described as a fundamental conflict about the Torah/Nomos as such speaks, in my eyes, in favour of historical reliability.<sup>94</sup>

Our examination of Jesus' attitude towards the Ten Words leads us to a better understanding of why Christianity held on to the Ten Words<sup>95</sup> while other parts of the prescriptive Torah were dropped as irrelevant: In the collective memory of the church, Jesus, the Christ, was remembered as knowing and respecting the Ten Words. Historical inquiry casts no fundamental doubt on this way of commemorating Jesus.

---

<sup>92</sup> Needless to say, this is not all that can be said about the Jesus movement and its message.

<sup>93</sup> Cf. Doering, Schabbat, 424.

<sup>94</sup> Examinations of the reliability of the early Christian accounts on Jesus should be aware of the fact that, in any case, our sources are not—and do not intend to be—verbatim reports.

<sup>95</sup> Cf. W. Rordorf, "Beobachtungen zum Gebrauch des Dekalogs in der vorkonstantinischen Kirche," in The New Testament Age: Essays in Honor of Bo Reicke, ed. W. C. Weinrich (Macon: Mercer, 1984), 2:431–442.

JESUS AS MOVING IMAGE: THE PUBLIC RESPONSIBILITY OF THE HISTORICAL JESUS SCHOLAR IN THE AGE OF FILM

CLIVE MARSH

The use of film in theology and biblical studies is a relatively recent phenomenon (half a century old). How could it be otherwise, when film itself is little more than a century old? Compared with the history of the study of the Bible, and even of the interface between study of biblical texts and the arts, this is a mere moment. Analysis of the impact of the use of film in theology and in biblical and religious studies, however, is in its infancy. We are still largely at the stage of discovery. Imaginative approaches, from many different perspectives, to the exploration of film in theology, religion and biblical studies, jostle for position across the academy, overlapping with widespread use of film, for multiple purposes, throughout religious and cultural life. It has been like this since the 1970's.<sup>1</sup> However, whilst gospel texts are illustrated by, and compared with, scenes from The Greatest Story Ever Told, The Last Temptation of Christ or The Passion of the Christ, much else goes on besides. And some of it will be going on in biblical studies classrooms, even if left unexamined in that particular location.

Psychologists use film to help clients open up their lives as part of their therapy; youth workers use film to raise issues, emotional, political and developmental, on the part of young people; media lecturers use film to expose dominant cultural themes; ministers of religion show films to engage their congregations and to get a point across. What may count as 'abuse' in the midst of all this is sometimes difficult to determine. Film studies scholars and film critics occasionally throw up their hands in horror at what goes on, if they are aware of it at all, in religion departments and in churches. But film-watching and film-using continues, and will continue to do so, for purposes well beyond what films may have been intended for. In the case of the films with a religious subject-matter, furthermore, what such films actually do is very difficult to control. This is why they are recognized as so potentially dangerous.

---

<sup>1</sup> Though there are one or two earlier explorations, Neil Hurley's Theology through Film (New York: Harper and Row, 1970) was something of a first. In biblical studies, Barnes Tatum was teaching "A Cinematic Quest for Jesus" with Henry Ingram from the mid-1970's (W. B. Tatum, Jesus at the Movies: A Guide to the First Hundred Years [Santa Rosa: Polebridge Press, 1997], vii). Ronald Holloway, Beyond the Image: Approaches to the Religious Dimension in the Cinema (Geneva: WCC, 1977) was comprehensive in its sweep through the possibilities opened up by careful scrutiny of what films could do. John R. May's published work began to appear shortly after that. For recent bibliographies, see S. Nolan, "Film and Religion," in Mediating Religion: Conversations in Media, Religion and Culture, ed. J. Mitchell and S. Marriage (London: T&T Clark, 2003), 369–374 and Cinéma Divinité: Religion, Theology and the Bible in Film, ed. E. S. Christianson et al. (London: SCM, 2005), 331–346.

In defence of such use, psychologists, media lecturers and religious leaders may respond: "But we are only responding to how films actually work." Indeed, whatever the intention of their makers, films frequently achieve much more than the entertainment of the audiences for whom they were made.<sup>2</sup> Even an intent to educate, shock, stimulate, or move viewers emotionally may not work out quite as planned. Despite the emergence of a critical perspective on the use of film, though, in biblical and religious studies we remain at the discovery stage. The realization that scenes from Monty Python's Life of Brian can unlock particular students' critical abilities vis-à-vis gospel texts remains more the norm than, say, a psycho-cultural or psychoanalytic reading of what may be going on for a viewer of The Passion of the Christ in a Western multiplex.<sup>3</sup> A fully interdisciplinary approach to the use of film in biblical, religious and theological studies has yet to emerge.

This chapter acknowledges that such interdisciplinary work is beginning. Its main purpose, however, is to consider what is entailed when the Jesus story is watched rather than read. What are Jesus-films doing to those who view them? And does, or should, the study of Jesus-films in any way affect the work of historical Jesus researchers and biblical scholars? In the context of this analysis, the complex, but limited, role to be played by the biblical scholar becomes apparent.

Jesus is a "moving image" in three senses. All of these senses are accentuated through the experience of watching portrayals of Jesus in film. The first and most obvious way of understanding Jesus as a moving image is the fact that he appears—portrayed by actors—as apparently literally moving on cinema screens. Second, images of Jesus “move” in so far as they change and develop through time. As the history of art shows, not all images attempt to be historically accurate. Nor do all seek to offer a theological interpretation of his life. Some are explicitly about relating his life, teaching and influence to a particular people or group (and he is thus portrayed as Maori, Black or whatever). Jesus’ moving image is therefore always being adapted for a variety of purposes to new contexts. Third, Jesus’ image moves people. Viewers of his image can be emotionally affected by what they see. “Seeing” happens in many dimensions.<sup>4</sup> Attention to viewer-reception of Jesus images thus requires analysis of how emotional reactions function within the context of aesthetic and/or ethical response, and within the framework of whatever ‘cognitive worlds’ are operative for viewers.<sup>5</sup>

---

<sup>2</sup> Sometimes, of course, entertainment may not be the sole aim, or at all a motive, for making a film (e.g. Gibson's making of The Passion of the Christ), though this is admittedly unusual.

<sup>3</sup> In other words, critical examination of the "film-viewing experience" (as appears, for example, in Crossan's and Goodacre's contributions to Jesus and Mel Gibson's "The Passion of the Christ", ed. K. E. Corley and R. L. Webb [London: Continuum, 2004]) is a new phenomenon in biblical studies.

All of these three senses of “Jesus as moving image” need examining with respect to the experience of watching Jesus-films. Only then will it be possible to consider what possible role a historical Jesus scholar might play in the task of assessing what filmic images of Jesus are actually doing to those who view them.

1. Jesus as “Moving Image”: Experiencing a Screened Jesus

First, then, we turn to the most obvious sense of Jesus as “moving image”: films about Jesus are made.<sup>6</sup> The concept of a cinematic “moving image”

---

<sup>4</sup> “The act of seeing involves more than the eyes; it incorporates the fullness of the human senses in an orchestrated process of intellect and vision” (D. Apostolos-Cappadona, “On Seeing The Passion: Is There a Painting in This Film? Or Is This Film a Painting?” in Re-Viewing the Passion: Mel Gibson’s Film and Its Critics, ed. S. B. Plate [New York: Palgrave Macmillan, 2004], 97–108, at 99).

<sup>5</sup> By “cognitive world” I mean the mental framework, or belief structure or system, within which people live and on the basis of which they make sense of the world and choose to act. Psychologists also use the term “schema.”

<sup>6</sup> An accepted list of the main Jesus-films has now almost attained canonical status: The King of Kings (1927), King of Kings (1961), The Gospel According to Saint Matthew (1964), The Greatest Story Ever Told (1965), Jesus Christ Superstar (1975), Jesus of Nazareth (1977), Monty Python’s Life of Brian (1979), The Last Temptation of Christ (1988), Jesus of Montreal (1989), and (presumably now) The Passion of the Christ (2004) would appear on all lists. The first nine are examined in R. C. Stern, C. N. Jefford and G. Debona, Savior on the Silver Screen (Mahwah: Paulist Press, 1999). Tatum, Jesus at the Movies, considers eight of the ten (not Life of Brian or The Passion), though he does reflect briefly on the latter in “The Passion in the History of Jesus Films,” in Jesus and Mel Gibson’s “The Passion of the Christ”, ed. Corley and Webb, 140–150. Tatum also adds From the Manger to the Cross (1912), Intolerance (1916), Ben-Hur (1959), Godspell (1973), and John Heyman’s Jesus (1979)—the only non-commercial film included—in his study. Lloyd Baugh, Imaging the Divine: Jesus and Christ-Figures in Film (Kansas is instructive, for a fundamental deception may be at work here that turns film into an illusionistic and thus a deceptive, untrustworthy medium. As is often noted, cinematic images move only because the machinery moves them. In fact, the images are all still. The “movement” is therefore all part of film’s functioning as an illusionistic medium. Watching films about Jesus, it could therefore be argued, merely feeds off the illusionistic nature of the medium, in turn perpetuating the theological illusion of Jesus’ continued existence. The “life-like” portrayal on screen thus panders to the wish-fulfilment of believing cinema-goers. More than is the case with other historical figures, because of the theological traditions in which Jesus has been located and the cultural impact which has resulted, screen versions of Jesus perpetuate a cognitive illusion too. We do not believe that Jesus is in the cinema. But the “bringing to life” of the figure of Jesus does more than any other medium, perhaps, to encourage people to believe things which should not be believed. For film itself asks us to suspend disbelief in order to enjoy the medium in the first place.

As far as the basic question about “moving images” is concerned, however, Gregory Currie has offered a good case against “Perceptual Illusionism”—the view that on-screen images do not really move. With recourse to what he calls “cinematic motion,” Currie points out that though the images projected are indeed still, they move in so far as they are projected to different parts of a screen.<sup>7</sup> We know, therefore, that a City: Sheed and Ward, 1997), examines Rossellini’s The Messiah (1975), alongside seven of the canon in Part One of his book (The King of Kings receives only brief mention in his opening chapter), but he includes Godspell. Jesus of Montreal is treated separately as a “transition film” to Part Two of the work, where he considers Christ-Figure films. Other surveys of Jesus-films include P. Malone, Movie Christ and Antichrists (New York: Crossroad, 1990); R. Kinnard and T. Davis, Divine Images: A History of Jesus on the Screen (New York: Citadel Press, 1992); W. R. Telford, “Jesus Christ Movie Star: The Depiction of Jesus in the Cinema,” in Explorations in Theology and Film, ed. C. Marsh and G. Ortiz (Oxford: Blackwell, 1997), 115–139. R. Zwick, Evangelienrezeption im Jesusfilm: Ein Beitrag zur intermedialen Wirkungsgeschichte des Neuen Testaments (Würzburg: Seelsorge/Echter Verlag, 1997), and R. Walsh, Reading the Gospels in the Dark: Portrayals of Jesus in Film (Harrisburg, PA: Trinity Press International, 2003) are biblical in focus. Zwick considers Pasolini’s Matthew, Rossellini’s Messiah, Zeffirelli’s Jesus and Stevens’ King of Kings. Walsh examines five of the canon of ten (Jesus of Montreal, Godspell, Il Vangelo secondo Matteo, King of Kings, and The Greatest Story Ever Told). Adele Reinhartz, Jesus of Hollywood (New York: Oxford University Press, 2007), and J. L. Staley and R. Walsh, Jesus, the Gospels, and the Cinematic Imagination: A Handbook to Jesus on DVD (Louisville: Westminster John Knox Press, 2007), are further useful works on the Jesus-film genre, but appeared too late to be considered fully in this study.

---

<sup>7</sup> Gregory Currie, “Film, Reality and Illusion” in Post-Theory: Reconstructing Film

horse or a train (or Jesus) is not really “there.” We also know that the movement, such as it is, is created mechanically by the movement and projection of still images. But the positioning of the images changes; they do move across the screen. We may call this an “illusion” of movement if we wish.<sup>8</sup> The main point, however, is that the imagination of the viewer combines with this “cinematic motion” to enable film as a medium to work. This does not necessarily mean that what film presents is cognitively misleading. All that is being identified is the way that the medium works. It is being recognised that the viewer contributes to this process. And whether Currie’s case is accepted or not, it is one thing to talk about visual perceptions in a cinema, and quite another to talk about beliefs based on those perceptions. Perceptual Illusionism, if it occurs at all, has no direct link with Cognitive Illusionism.

Nevertheless, new interpretative challenges have arisen with the arrival of the Jesus-film. For the first time—some 1800 years after Jesus’ earthly life and 1500 years after the first artistic portrayals of Jesus emerged—Jesus began to be portrayed as a moving image in a mass-produced form of popular culture.<sup>9</sup> He could appear as fully human, walking and talking in the context of ordinary human interactions. As the history of the cinematic portrayal of Jesus has shown, film has sharpened awareness of aspects of the task of interpreting Jesus as a human figure. First, the “life-likeness” of cinematic portrayals suggests that film will emphasize the humanity of Jesus. Film presents the scandal of particularity—“God, contracted to a span, incomprehensibly made man”—in the starkest of forms. Positively expressed, it provides the opportunity for directors and viewers to explore belief in the presence of God in frail, limited human form.

The scope for wrestling theologically with the humanity of Jesus has, however, arguably not been fully exploited. The medium of communi-

---

Studies, ed. David Bordwell and Noel Carroll (Madison: University of Wisconsin Press, 1996), 325–344, esp. 334–339.

<sup>8</sup> And Currie is clearly not too worried if this part of his argument is not accepted. But he does want to counter the view that Perceptual and Cognitive Illusionism inevitably go together. His conclusion is clear: “. . . the concept of illusion is in fact entirely irrelevant to understanding the nature and function of film” (Currie, “Film, Reality and Illusion,” 341).

<sup>9</sup> Jesus had, of course, been portrayed in drama. The viewer/performer relationship in drama is, however, different from that experienced by the viewer in relation to film. Theatre raises some similar issues to what is now discussed, but the particularity of theatre (you know the actor is not Jesus) uses the imagination of the spectator in a different way. Film invites greater suspension of disbelief and the imagination can be even more engaged.

cation through which Jesus' humanity can be made most apparent in fact becomes one in which that humanity is rendered unusual, even freakish. Film demands facial close-ups and interactions with others. Yet in many Jesus-films Jesus rarely smiles or gets cross.<sup>10</sup> His awareness of God is too easily portrayed through his looking skywards or in the form of upward eye-movements.<sup>11</sup> Jesus is not quite human enough, and divinity thus becomes a distortion of the human rather than its potential transformation or completion.

Second, the need to cast an actor (never, of course, an actress) in the part of Jesus accentuates the maleness of Jesus. Film develops the emphasis evident throughout much Christian art upon a male individual to a considerable degree. There is little room for ambiguity in the portrayal of Jesus. Male actors play the lead role. Christian history and theology has long emphasized Jesus as an individual, and often solitary, saviour figure.<sup>12</sup> The "moving pictures" portrayal of Jesus thus leads, strangely, to further isolation of the individual, even though there is scope for locating Jesus more and more in the context of social interaction.<sup>13</sup> In film, Jesus is clearly an individual male, but his detachment from those around him is often more apparent than his similarity to other human beings. In a drive, it seems, to express divine "otherness," the filmic portrayals of Jesus too easily stifle his humanity. Furthermore, the fact that Jesus-films accentuate the saviour as isolated male leads may contribute to the perpetuation of the easy association of deity and maleness. Again, then, the potential of a medium to enable <sup>10</sup> As Baugh notes, this is one reason why Scorsese's Jesus (played by Willem Defoe) in The Last Temptation of Christ is so striking and fresh, even if, in Baugh's view, Scorsese's attempt is unsuccessful (Baugh, Imaging the Divine, 55–56).

---

<sup>11</sup> And in this respect Jesus-films have remained constrained by the conventions of Western art.

<sup>12</sup> Again, the history of art provides more than a mere background. Film-watchers are already used to seeing Jesus as an abandoned, crucified figure. The portrayals by El Greco (1541–1614), or more recently by Craigie Aitchieson (1926–), of the detached, solitary figure come immediately to mind.

<sup>13</sup> There are exceptions, as I shall show below with reference to Jesus of Montreal and The Last Temptation of Christ. But the point stands in general terms. On the limits of Scorsese's achievement, see Baugh, Imaging the Divine: "If Kazantzakis devotes much time to the relationships of Jesus with most of his disciples, thus creating a complex and vibrant community in which Jesus lives and matures in his vocation, Scorsese in effect reduces this community to one disciple, Judas, and gives Jesus an almost exclusive, and fundamentally unbalanced, relationship with his betrayer" (53). For further comment on the relationship between Judas and Jesus in The Last Temptation of Christ, see W. R. Telford, "The Two Faces of Betrayal: The Characterization of Peter and Judas in the Biblical Epic or Christ Film," in Cinéma Divinité, ed. Christianson et al., 214–235, esp. 231–232.

exploration of the intertwining of human and divine—which a full and adequate exploration of the doctrine of incarnation requires—appears not to be fulfilled. The opportunity to present and explore Jesus as a human being in terms of a social world is rarely taken up adequately in film versions of his life.

It is nevertheless important to recognize, third, that Jesus-films are influential in churches and cultures throughout the world. They bolster, challenge or distort the faith of some, remind others why they are not religious, and inform, entertain and provoke viewers who might have few explicit religious interests at all. They fit, if sometimes uneasily, into an identifiable genre (“biblical epic” or “religious film”).<sup>14</sup> And they do their work as films in continuity with the way in which the figure of Jesus already exerts a major cultural and religious influence.

All explorations of Jesus recognize they are interpretations of a historical figure. Given the broader cultural impact of Jesus, however, they are also aware that they are dealing with a figure who, in Hal Childs’ words, functions as “...a projection of the self...a symbol, or fantasy, of a potential of the conscious personality that comes from being itself.”<sup>15</sup> Childs claims further that: “...the influence of ‘the Christ,’ in terms of the presence of an unconscious archetype, is inescapable for anyone who approaches Jesus.”<sup>16</sup> The appearance of so important a projection, symbol, fantasy or archetype in a medium so popular and, frankly, entertaining as film raises a number of new questions, or old questions in new forms.<sup>17</sup> What is happening when Jesus-films are viewed in the cinema? Is this still entertainment? What might the way films work tell us about what is happening between image and viewer when any Jesus image is looked at? What other, as yet unforeseen, challenges are brought by the mass-produced nature of the moving images of Jesus

---

<sup>14</sup> The challenge to a film director would be to try and create a Jesus-film which was more of a “biopic” than a biblical epic.

<sup>15</sup> Hal Childs, The Myth of the Historical Jesus and the Evolution of Consciousness (Atlanta: Society of Biblical Literature, 2000), 155.

<sup>16</sup> Childs, The Myth, 171.

<sup>17</sup> Perhaps the real challenge has only been post-1968, as explicit religious authority still exerted a considerable influence on Jesus-films until then, and continues to do so more implicitly (on this, see e.g. Tatum, “The Passion in the History of Jesus Films,” 142). As Carl Dyke notes, this hidden pressure exerts influence even on such seemingly scandalous films as Monty Python’s Life of Brian which, in religious and theological perspective, proves conservative and, in its direct portrayal of Jesus, does not subvert the formulae of the biblical epic: Carl Dyke, “Learning from The Life of Brian: Saviors for Seminars,” in Screening Scripture: Intertextual Connections between Scripture and Film, ed. G. Aichele and R. Walsh (Harrisburg, PA: Trinity Press International, 2002), 229–250.

which films convey?<sup>18</sup> How are religious traditions, Christianity especially, to respond to the evident impact of such images?

This first sense of Jesus as moving image—the fact that Jesus-films exist at all—invites us, then, to look afresh at what happens between “text” and receiver in the process of “reception.” Viewers undoubtedly bring material from the cognitive worlds (belief systems, worldviews, schemas) within which they live. But the process of interacting with images in the context of film-watching is more complex still. It is not merely cognitive.<sup>19</sup> In the case of Jesus-films, viewers are suspending their disbelief about one form of representation (Jesus is not “really there”) and one form of movement (the pictures move only because the projector makes them move) in their process of responding to what the film offers. Jesus-films are likely to be stimulating much more than by the mere transfer of cognitive knowledge from film to viewer (e.g. about first-century history, the Bible, or Christian belief).<sup>20</sup> The interaction between text and viewer thus demands, especially when the interaction occurs in a communal context (e.g. a cinema), attention to the multiple ways in which the figure of Jesus per se functions in human culture. Historical enquiry alone is inadequate to do justice to the task of interpreting Jesus and Jesus-films. Even historical and theological enquiry together will not suffice.

This first meaning of Jesus as moving image thus takes the interpreter of Jesus deep into questions about how the image of Jesus functions in human culture. “Jesus” is an historical figure who has been “mythicized.” Films purporting to present him either as a historical figure, or even in the form in which he is presented in one or more of the gospels, do not raise questions only about theology, or about the adequacy of any form of religious (esp. Christian) orthodoxy. The movement of still images to create “cinematic motion” invites analysis of how perceptual stimulus and entertainment, as well as religion, participate in the task of interpreting Jesus.

Furthermore, the appearance of Jesus as a figure in a mass medium of popular entertainment poses the question of how ethical and philo-

---

<sup>18</sup> I.e. aspects of the Jesus-film which raise questions going beyond those raised by theatre in which actors play Jesus.

<sup>19</sup> A comprehensive exploration of the many dimensions of reception is Torben Grodal, Moving Pictures: A New Theory of Film Genres, Feelings and Cognition (Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1997).

<sup>20</sup> Though this may occur too. People might be stimulated to learn things about first-century Palestine and the gospel stories through Jesus-films.

sophical stimulus and cultural development occur in an age of declining support for organized religion. It has also been noted that a medium which might be expected to prove an ideal means through which to portray a human Jesus ends up rarely doing so. In fact the opposite has often been the case.

2. Jesus as Developing Image

A second meaning of the term “Jesus as moving image” is that of the existence of multiple Jesus images. There are many films about Jesus. Beyond film, there are many other images of Jesus visual and verbal—millions, in fact—to be found both across Christian history and in the world today. To talk of “the image of Jesus” is therefore misleading. For we can only ever deal with images of Jesus, or “an” image of Jesus.<sup>21</sup>

This is a commonplace observation even for a historian. Awareness that there was only one historical figure does not lead to the assumption that there can only be one true account of that person’s life.<sup>22</sup> History-writing thrives on the fact that narrative accounts of “what happened” or “who a person really was” are always contestable. Push that observation beyond historical research, however, and it becomes still more telling. Images of Jesus are created for all sorts of reasons: religious, theological, devotional, ethical, psychological, sociological, political.<sup>23</sup> The result is a plethora of images which may not be unhistorical, yet which are doing more than to represent Jesus as a past historical phenomenon, and therefore rarely purport to be “simply historical.” “Jesus” is therefore a moving image because the range of images discloses that Jesus is constantly in movement, changing, adapting to new circumstances, serving the different needs of those who create them. He inevitably reflects, for example, the many geographical contexts and ethnic backgrounds out of which images are produced. This now commonplace observation has

---

<sup>21</sup> Or in Ernst Troeltsch’s memorable phrase, “the infinitely concrete and yet infinitely variegated picture of Jesus” (“The Significance of the Historical Existence of Jesus for Faith,” in Ernst Troeltsch: Writings on Religion and Theology [London: Duckworth, 1977], 182–207, at 194). Troeltsch was here referring only to what happens in Christianity, but his observation is just as applicable further afield.

<sup>22</sup> Even accepting that different philosophies of history immediately come into play here and the degree to which one should search for, and can have any hope even of partially attaining, a measure of objectivity in what a historian concludes would be disputed between historians (and thus, in our case, between historical Jesus scholars).

<sup>23</sup> For exploration of such interests, see my “Diverse Agendas at Work in the Jesus Quest” in Vol. II of this Handbook.

been the focus of many studies in cultural history and in the interface between theology and culture.<sup>24</sup>

The moving image of Jesus is therefore a site of permanent negotiation between the dangerous memory of the past historical figure and whatever drives the interpreter who fashions an image of Jesus to create that image in the first place. A quintessentially post-modern word—in the sense that it implies flux, constant instability, lack of fixed markers, unstable or non-existent “truth”—the concept of “negotiation” draws attention to incomplete understanding and to the limited nature of any image of Jesus. In the words of one theorist: “Negotiated meaning is at once both historical and dynamic, contextual and unique.”<sup>25</sup> To negotiate an image of Jesus thus entails fashioning an image of a past figure, in a new historical context, whilst reflecting consciously and unconsciously many other concerns. As a “site of struggle,” Jesus images thus function as a location for the negotiation of basic meanings and purposes in human living, predicated upon the task of narrating the life of a past figure. Wenger’s words are again useful:

By living in the world we do not just make meanings up independently of the world, but neither does the world simply impose meanings on us. The negotiation of meaning is a productive process, but negotiating meaning is not constructing it from scratch. Meaning is not pre-existing, but neither is it simply made up.<sup>26</sup>

This could easily be an account of how “tradition” works. There is always a “given” at work somewhere when the task of negotiating meaning is undertaken. In the task of interpreting Jesus, there is always some form of “given” existing in the form of past accounts (gospels, a harmonized historical or history-like account of his life, or at the very least historical data). Equally, because of the de facto function of the figure of Jesus across human cultures—as projection, symbol, fantasy or archetype—there is also a “given” of meaning at work. Those who

---

<sup>24</sup> To cite some of the most well-known: J. Pelikan, Jesus through the Centuries (New Haven: Yale University Press, 1985); Faces of Jesus: Latin American Christologies, ed. J. M. Bonino (Maryknoll: Orbis, 1985); A. Wessels, Images of Jesus (London: SCM Press, 1990); Faces of Jesus in Africa, ed. R. Schreier (Maryknoll: Orbis, 1991); J. R. Levison and P. Pope-Levison, Jesus in Global Contexts (Louisville: Westminster/John Knox Press, 1992); Asian Faces of Jesus, ed. R. S. Sugirtharajah (Maryknoll: Orbis, 1993); and V. Küster, The Many Faces of Jesus: Intercultural Christology (London: SCM, 2000).

<sup>25</sup> E. Wenger, Communities of Practice (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1998), 54.

<sup>26</sup> Wenger, Communities, 53–54.

interpret Jesus invariably have interests additional to the historical when narrating (or making a film about) his life.<sup>27</sup> “Jesus” will, to put it bluntly, always have something to do with a person’s perception of goodness, truth, justice.

“Goodness,” “truth” and “justice” are themselves contested concepts. They do not easily deliver precise, “transcendental” meanings. That they are concepts which signify values worthy of working towards is not in dispute. But life still has to be lived in the light of partial, working definitions. It is no different with the images of Jesus to which exploration of such concepts are related. As Troeltsch saw clearly, Christians work and re-work images of Jesus in a manner which interweaves historical recollection of a past historical figure (though in not too precise a form), and the needs and aspirations of identifiable but historical, embodied and thus limited communities of believers. This is no less true of all interpreters of Jesus, whether religiously interested or not.

Images of Jesus in film therefore participate, as do all Jesus images, in a complex field of negotiation. They accept their responsibility to interpret a historical figure. They reflect the circumstances of their origins. They serve multiple interests and purposes. They engage in the task of clarifying what it means to live a “good” life.

3. Jesus as Emotionally Influential Image

There is, however, a third sense in which Jesus is a “moving image.” Jesus moves people emotionally. Exploration of the figure of Jesus thus takes interpreters not only beyond historical research. It takes them beyond solely cognitive considerations too. Having a faith and living within a religious tradition entail both living within a particular cognitive framework and ordering one’s life in terms of that framework. But it is not simply a cognitive exercise. Being religious affects the whole person who chooses to live in this way: their ethical convictions, aesthetic sensibilities and emotional dispositions. This observation is crucial in identifying how the figure of Jesus functions within religion, especially Christianity.<sup>28</sup> When a religious believer reacts to an image of Jesus, it <sup>27</sup> Indeed, the historical interest may, of course, play a minimal role. For the purposes of this article, however, I am assuming that an historical interest will always be present.

---

<sup>28</sup> Especially, though not exclusively, given that a number of world religions hold the figure of Jesus in high regard. On this, see e.g. C. Bennett, In Search of Jesus: Insider and Outsider Images (London: Continuum, 2001), and the relevant articles on different is neither simply a historical interest which is at work, nor cognitive factors alone. Believers receive confirmation of existing convictions and stimulus to fresh insight, but experience an emotional connection with the figure around whom their life is oriented and in relation to whom their commitments are worked out.

It should not, however, be thought that it is only in the context of explicit religious faith than such non-cognitive factors operate when the figure of Jesus is encountered. The cultural function of the figure of Jesus means that religion-like responses to Jesus operate throughout society more generally. In the context of watching films about Jesus, indeed, religion-like responses to Jesus are especially prominent. It is in this realm of analysis of “viewer-response” that the way in which films work—as a medium of the moving image—and religious response to the figure of Jesus come close together. Through being a medium which depends heavily on the evocation of emotional response, Jesus-films incorporate, but move beyond, purely cognitive interaction with the figure of Jesus.<sup>29</sup>

The fact that film as a medium works in both cognitive and non-cognitive ways is apparent to any regular cinema-goer, and confirmed by film analysis. Recognition that film works in this way explains both why it is treated so suspiciously and why it is so powerful, influential and entertaining a medium.<sup>30</sup> Psychoanalytical approaches to film have emphasized the degree to which viewers may be unaware of the nature and extent of film’s impact upon them. Film’s social and cultural function as entertainment also means that as a form of popular culture it religions’ treatment of the figure of Jesus in Jesus in History, Thought and Culture: An Encyclopedia, ed. J. L. Houlden, 2 vols. (Santa Barbara: ABC-CLIO, 2003 = Jesus: The Complete Guide, London and New York: Continuum, 2005).

---

<sup>29</sup> I have explored the importance for theology of recognizing the emotional impact of films in Cinema and Sentiment (Milton Keynes: Paternoster Press, 2004), though not with respect to Jesus-films.

<sup>30</sup> The use by the Nazis of film is often quoted as an example. Leni Riefenstahl created awe-inspiring films which had the effect of inspiring viewers to become “lost” as individuals in the overwhelming power of Nazism. The effect of film-watching coalesced with the ideology the film promoted. On this, see e.g. E. S. H. Tan and N. H. Frijda, “Sentiment in Film Viewing,” in Passionate Views: Film, Cognition and Emotion, ed. C. M. Plantinga and G. M. Smith (Baltimore and London: The Johns Hopkins University Press, 1999), 48–64, esp. 62–63.

is deemed a dangerous, mind-numbing medium. Such criticisms have come from within both sociology and psychology.<sup>31</sup>

Approaches to film which are critical of psychoanalytical approaches have, however, been more positive about the emotional impact of film. Viewers may be less duped than is often supposed in the way they interact with the films they watch. The therapeutic function which film-watching can have means that viewers actively “work with” the emotional responses they have (whether intended by film-makers or not) within the act of watching. Furthermore, though films entertain, not all films seek only to entertain. And films which intend to entertain, and which viewers themselves view as escapism, often achieve more than directors or viewers expect.<sup>32</sup> Both those who make films and those who watch, in other words, cannot predict exactly what films do to people once viewers’ life-experience and personalities are brought into contact with actual films. The emotions, ethical and political standpoints, aesthetic sensibilities, philosophical outlooks, religious backgrounds, social and ethnic origins of viewers—a mixture of cognitive and non-cognitive factors—are all at work when people watch films.

What do such considerations entail for the study of Jesus-films? Responses to The Passion of the Christ may not be the most reliable indicator of responses to Jesus-films in general. As many responses suggest, those who experienced the strongest, positive, life-transforming reactions to the film may already have had a considerable religious background to the film with which to work.<sup>33</sup> A strong emotional

---

<sup>31</sup> This view was especially supported within the Frankfurt School for Social Research, the views of which are summarized in, for example, D. Strinati, An Introduction to Theories of Popular Culture (London and New York: Routledge, 1995), ch. 2 or G. Lynch, Understanding Theology and Popular Culture (Oxford: Blackwell, 2005), ch. 4.

<sup>32</sup> The task of gathering detailed empirical data from film-watchers in this important area of “viewer response” is still in its early stages. A small scale study undertaken by Charlotte Haines Lyon (funded by Epworth Fund of the Methodist Church in Great Britain, and supported by the Ster cinema chain) in the UK and Ireland in the Summer of 2004 provided evidence of some stark disjunctures between what viewers believe they go to cinemas for (“pure escapism, nothing else”) and what they themselves record films do to them, both cognitively and non-cognitively. On this, see C. Marsh, “On Dealing with What Films Actually Do to People: The Practice and Theory of Film Watching in Theology/Religion and Film Discussion,” in Reframing Theology and Film: New Focus for an Emerging Discipline, ed. R. K. Johnston (Grand Rapids: Baker Academic, 2007), 145–161. There is also more work to be done on exploring divergences between how regular cinema-goers respond immediately after viewing a film and when invited to respond, say, two or three months later about a number of films watched over a period of time.

<sup>33</sup> There are, for example, many web-sites of a Christian origin which enable people to discuss their responses to the film. One such (www.TheLife.com) has a message response to the stark presentation of the violence done to the body of Jesus may thus have been located within a religious sensibility already attuned to questions of the self-involvement of God in the world, or the extent of God's love. Such a background prevents a response to the violence as "pornography," a reaction felt by many viewers, religious and non-religious alike.<sup>34</sup> It is, however, beyond doubt that when analyzing responses to The Passion of the Christ, we are not dealing solely with the cognitive aspects of belief.

This is not a recent phenomenon, of course. Franco Zeffirelli's Jesus of Nazareth was a deeply influential film in Western culture throughout the late 1970's and 1980's following its release as a TV film at Easter 1977. Using extracts from the film in teaching during the 1990's, it became apparent to me when conducting training events in church contexts how important the film had been for the spiritual development of a generation of British Christians.<sup>35</sup> The complexity of film as a medium in conveying the Jesus story also became apparent. In the relative informality of church training events, with a wide cross-section of people present, and without some of the constraints which a more formal academic setting might have presented, aspects of Jesus as emotionally moving image came to light which rarely surface in discussions about christology.

---

board containing many appreciative reactions, including this statement (from "rosebud," posted May 22, 2005): "... it reminded me of how thankful I need to be... for the many things that God has done in my life." The use of the word "remind" is significant here. By contrast, to viewers not already immersed in the religious imagery displayed, the impact may be quite different, even if no less emotional. Kenneth Turan of the Los Angeles Times is recorded as declaring the film to be "so narrowly focused as to be inaccessible for all but the devout," whilst Peter Travers of Rolling Stone describes it as "powerfully moving and fanatically obtuse in equal doses" (both quotations from <http://www.rottentomatoes.com>).

<sup>34</sup> Examples can again be found on the <http://www.rottentomatoes.com> web-site (accessed 16 August, 2005). "Gibson seems determined to prove that Jesus suffered more than anyone who has ever lived, a tiresomely literal argument at best, an exercise in sadomasochistic bullying at worst" (James Verniere, Boston Herald). "Lost in a labyrinth of stomach-churning pugilism, the spectacle is a hefty cross for the audience to bear" (Phil Villarreal, Arizona Daily Star). "If Jesus actually received the amount of punishment dished out in this film, he would have been dead three times over before arriving at Calvary" (Jeffrey Westhoff, Northwest Herald, Crystal Lake, Il.). And most directly, Rick Groen of the Globe and Mail remarks that the film is: "So obsessively and so graphically bloody-minded that it comes perilously close to the pornography of violence."

<sup>35</sup> For studies of the film see, e.g., Baugh, Imaging the Divine, 72–83, Stern et al., Savior on the Silver Screen, 197–229, Tatum, Jesus at the Movies, 135–145, and Zwick, Evangelienrezeption, 212–263 and 452–467.

Robert Powell's Jesus had, for example, proved sexually attractive for many women viewers.<sup>36</sup> This caused complications for some in their faith journeys, for they had supposed such feelings were off-limits and that Jesus had somehow to be supposed to be asexual. It was, then, the filmic portrayal which had caused the feelings to be had and the related questions to be raised in a way in which no still from the history of Christian art had prompted.<sup>37</sup>

Emotional involvement with Powell's Jesus was not confined to sexuality, however. His rather mystical portrayal of Jesus clearly presented to some viewers an ideal of the spiritual life. References to his "beautiful blue eyes" overlapped with his sexual allure, but also pointed to a "haunting" quality in the portrayal of Jesus. This echoed the kind of responses reported to still images of Jesus by such artists as Warner Sallman and Heinrich Hofmann in North America or, in the UK, Herbert Beecroft.<sup>38</sup> Such images could affect faith development in positive ways, cultivating a spiritual intensity and an appropriate otherworldliness which provided comfort and support and was worthy of emulation.<sup>39</sup> Negatively, of course, the haunting quality could also be intimidating. Rather than evoking a disposition to be emulated, the piercing eyes of such a Jesus could reflect a pursuing, judgmental God.<sup>40</sup> Allied to <sup>36</sup> Possibly for some men too, of course, though I have no experience of this being declared in the contexts of the sessions I led.

<sup>37</sup> This is not to say that this could not have happened in response to still images from the history of art. I merely record what was reported in classes I taught. It is worth noting that these discussions were occurring after the appearance of Scorsese's The Last Temptation of Christ (1988). It was this film above all which provoked widespread public discussion about Jesus' sexuality due to the "dream sequence" in that film, in which Jesus is portrayed as having turned his back on the option of a fulfilled sexual life and domestic happiness in order to fulfil his religious vocation. There was clear evidence from the discussions in the sessions I led in the 1990's that the feelings and thoughts experienced by some women participants in response to Zeffirelli's film had not been expressed and reflected upon at the time. In other words, Scorsese's film enabled important discussions about Jesus and sexuality to be begun.

<sup>38</sup> On Sallman, see e.g. Icons of American Protestantism: The Art of Warner Sallman, ed. D. Morgan (New Haven: Yale University Press, 1996), and idem, Visual Piety: A History and Theory of Popular Religious Images (Berkeley: University of California Press, 1998), esp. ch. 4. See also idem, "Protestant Visual Piety and the Aesthetics of American Mass Culture," in Mediating Religion: Conversations in Media, Religion and Culture, ed. J. Mitchell and S. Marriage, 107–120. On Powell's portrayal see esp. Baugh, Imaging the Divine, 81–82 and Stern et al. Savior on the Silver Screen, 214.

<sup>39</sup> On what popular devotional images can and do achieve, see e.g. Morgan, Visual Piety, 45, 122–123, 126, 133–134, 141–142 and 150–151. Morgan refers to the "talismanic and protective power these items [such as Sallman's Head of Christ] were believed to possess" (172).

<sup>40</sup> This is certainly an emotion which many evangelical Protestants I have met report in response to the summoning up of a memory of Beecroft's image of Jesus "The Lord

the otherworldliness of this emotional impact of Powell's Jesus is the fact that Jesus of Nazareth can be accused of detaching Jesus from his immediate social and political world.<sup>41</sup>

A third aspect of the emotional impact of Powell's Jesus upon viewers—male and female—concerns the fact that it is Powell's Jesus. As all commentators on Jesus-films acknowledge, the difficulty of casting Jesus—though long an issue for those organizing Passion Plays—is taken to new heights by the mass medium of film. Baugh expresses this especially well:

Putting a well-known, popular star in the robes of Jesus may ensure profits at the box-office, but it creates major problems for the image of the Jesus thus created: an actor with well-known precedents in the intense psychological dramas of Ingmar Bergman inevitably embodies a Jesus full of existential angst; a good-looking blond teenage heart-throb becomes a California-surfer Jesus, the New York-bred, -trained and -accented method actor creates a confused, neurotic Jesus.<sup>42</sup>

Furthermore, it is not only prior work which creates difficulties. The fact that Powell moved on to act (in the late 1990's) in a sitcom (The Detectives on BBC TV in the UK) has meant a major confusion for viewers for whom his face "is" that of Jesus.

In terms of the emotional response of a viewer of a Jesus-film, then, the problem of casting poses very sharply indeed the question of exactly what (or whom) one is having an emotional reaction to. This is in many ways no different from what has been the case throughout the history of Christian art: viewers of images of Jesus may have been reacting to the devotional image of Jesus held by a particular artist, translated from a mental image to visual form.<sup>43</sup> The difference is that in film we are dealing with an actual person portraying Jesus.<sup>44</sup> Films present in a stark turned upon Peter... and Peter remembered" in churches from their childhood. Indeed, through its link with Peter's denial, the visual image almost appears designed to evoke guilt in those who view it. Morgan notes whilst the positive responses to Sallman's Head of Christ came mainly from women, the negative responses came mostly from ordained men (Visual Piety, 198–199).

---

<sup>41</sup> As noted in Tatum, Jesus at the Movies, 144.

<sup>42</sup> Baugh, Imaging the Divine, 5.

<sup>43</sup> Recognizing also the fact that paintings were sometimes produced on demand (on commission). I have explored to a limited extent how the demands of the art market, the artist's integrity and background and the task of interpreting the gospels interweave in "Rembrandt the Etcher: Mission and Commission as Factors in New Testament Interpretation," Biblical Interpretation 6.3/4 (1998): 381–409 (reprinted in Beyond the Biblical Horizon: The Bible and the Arts, ed. J. Cheryl Exum [Leiden: Brill, 1999], 123–151).

<sup>44</sup> Except, of course, when Jesus appears in cartoon form, or as a puppet (e.g. in The Miracle Maker).

form the question of what occurs between viewers (their life-histories, psychological make-up, and worldviews), moving images, the context of viewing and the historical, aesthetic and theological traditions in which all responses to Jesus occur.

They therefore take, we may say in summary, the emotional element contained within viewer-response to Jesus images to a new level. Concerns about religious cognition—what is believed, and to be believed, theologically, about Jesus?—as well as adherence to gospel narratives and historical accuracy have never been far away in Jesus-films. But how viewers feel during and after watching Jesus-films is at least as important as what they are processing mentally. This feature of the way that films work cannot be neglected when Jesus-films are studied.

4. And What is the Historical Jesus Scholar to Do?

In a Handbook for the Study of the Historical Jesus, the task of historical Jesus scholars in response to the many images of Jesus which have begun to appear in film over the past century or so might seem clear. They are to be the sober voices who police the imaginative portrayals of Jesus dreamed up by scriptwriters and directors fired up by a whole range of interests and motives. At the very least, they must be amongst the cultural commentators who point out when films are resting more on gospel narratives than seeking historical accuracy, or on extra-biblical texts, when purporting to be either following canonical gospel texts or known historical data. For if it is Jesus, the first-century historical figure from Nazareth, who is supposedly being portrayed in film, then it is historical Jesus scholars who must fulfil their moral and cultural responsibility and be at the forefront of discussions about what can and cannot be known about that Jesus.

The role of historical Jesus scholars might seem, obviously, to be that played by the diverse contributors to Jesus and Mel Gibson's "The Passion of the Christ."<sup>45</sup> As a team of scholars they have together critically examined Gibson's film with respect to what it purports to be, and the image of Jesus it presents. Crossan and Goodacre take different sides as to whether the film might be considered commendable. The heart of the collection of essays, however, is a series of studies of particular aspects of the film (i.e. how does the film handle Judas, Satan, women, Jewish leaders, Pilate, the various trials and the Passion). The film receives about one-and-a-half cheers in the book. The extent to which Gibson is, in fact, profoundly dependent upon the nineteenth century text The Dolorous Passion of Our Lord Jesus Christ by Anne Catherine Emmerich is well brought out.<sup>46</sup> But the main criticism of the film, summarized by the editors in their final contribution, is that the film presents itself as something which it is not: an “accurate” rendering either of the Jesus of history or of the content of the gospels.<sup>47</sup> In presenting this clear conclusion, the contributors have therefore fulfilled their responsibility as New Testament scholars: they have made clear to the public what can and cannot be regarded as reliable (historically, or with respect to the canonical gospels) about Gibson’s films.

---

<sup>45</sup> Jesus and Mel Gibson's "The Passion of the Christ," ed. Corley and Webb.

So far, so good; and I wholly agree with the conclusion that Corley and Webb draw about Gibson’s film. But although their collection of essays is a good example of what Historical Jesus Research can contribute to the task of studying Jesus in the age of film, I am not sure it says enough. There is more to be said about how historical Jesus scholars must engage with how Jesus is presented and explored in contemporary culture. There is also something to be said to historical Jesus scholars about what the study of the figure of Jesus entails, and this may make uncomfortable hearing for some of those who contribute to Historical Jesus Research. In this section of the chapter I shall develop both these points.

What must be teased out about what Historical Jesus Research may be called upon to consider when handling Jesus-films? First, the complex functioning of Jesus-films sharpens an interpreter’s attention to the meaning of the term “image.” Historical Jesus scholars may be able to undertake their work in the knowledge that they work primarily with narrative sources and verbal images of Jesus.<sup>48</sup> But Jesus-films, like all visual art, remind biblical scholars of the interpretative, imaginative, constructive aspect of their enterprise.

Robert K. Johnston, in defending the extra-biblical embellishments of the gospel texts in Gibson’s The Passion of the Christ, suggests that some of its portrayal of violence is “biblically congruent.”<sup>49</sup> Whether he <sup>46</sup> Esp. in Robert L. Webb’s essay “The Passion and the Influence of Emmerich’s The Dolorous Passion of Our Lord Jesus Christ,” in Jesus and Mel Gibson’s “The Passion of the Christ,” ed. Corley and Webb, 160–172.

<sup>47</sup> Corley and Webb, “Conclusion: The Passion, the Gospels and the Claims of History,” in Jesus and Mel Gibson’s “The Passion of the Christ,” ed. Corley and Webb, 173–7.

<sup>48</sup> Primarily narrative sources (gospels and literary fragments), though also archaeological finds (buildings and artefacts), as recent work by Reed and Crossan confirms.

<sup>49</sup> Johnston, “The Passion as Dynamic Icon,” 63.

is accurate in this judgment, and whether or not the implied meaning of the violence is theologically defensible, are not the issue here. The concept of “congruence” is applicable both historically and biblically to the task of interpreting Jesus. The interpreter—even the historical Jesus researcher—has to come up with some sort of “image” (even if not necessarily a “Life” of Jesus). Such an image must make sense of “hard evidence” and make judicious use of what we may call “soft” (always disputable) evidence. Such evidence is then located within an imaginative construal of Jesus’ person/life so that we can see “what Jesus was getting at.” Even when the historical concern is uppermost in the interpreter’s aim, then, there is still a role for the imagination.

Second, historical Jesus researchers are thus made starkly aware of their particular, but limited, place within the multi-disciplinary discipline which is biblical studies. Biblical scholars working out of a history, archaeology or classics institutional context may well home in on the figure of Jesus as a past figure in his socio-political and socio-economic context. This might be deemed as “pure” a form of Historical Jesus Research as you can get.<sup>50</sup> By contrast, biblical scholars operating within the world of religious studies may be looking at Jesus as a figure in the history of religion, or in the psychology or sociology of spirituality, or as a figure in media or culture. In such an institutional context, the “historical Jesus” may be accepted more readily as a mental construct even whilst a distinction between “Jesus as he was” and “what has been (and always is) done with Jesus” is maintained.

Different again are the biblical scholars working in seminaries and theological colleges rather than universities. Their Historical Jesus Research need not be less “historical” in its quest for maximum objectivity about the past, and no less attentive to the psychological and sociological factors present in religion, but their theological interests are explicit and need not be bracketed off from their work.

Historical Jesus Research might appear to belong best in the first of those three institutional contexts. However, it must occur in direct relation to the exploratory and creative work undertaken on gospel texts. As has long been recognized, these texts are not “history” in the modern sense, and serve a variety of purposes. Likewise, the diverse interests which arise in relation to Historical Jesus Research demand that many scholars in different disciplines and in various institutional locations participate in the interpretative task. Pure Historical Jesus Research does not exist.<sup>51</sup> Biblical scholars whose interest might therefore not be primarily “historical”—in the sense of discovering Jesus as he was—may nevertheless have something to offer to Jesus Research by virtue of their work on the gospel texts.

---

<sup>50</sup> Though most scholars working in such contexts would avoid using the word “pure,” “objectivity” is still something to be aimed for, even if recognized to be unattainable.

The imaginative element and the limited place that historical research plays in the task of interpreting the figure of Jesus together serve as a reminder, third, of the narrative element in historiography. The task of trying to “get at” Jesus of Nazareth historically demands that the historian construct a narrative. One need not be a self-confessed post-modern historian to acknowledge the truth of this observation. Jesus-films are thus different from what Historical Jesus Researchers are up to only in degree, not in kind. Historical Jesus researchers therefore do well not simply to bring a check-list of “known historical data” about Jesus to Jesus-films in order to tick (or cross) boxes accordingly. “Historical congruence” may demand that imaginative leaps have to be made. In the case of Jesus-films these will be visual, dramatized leaps too. What we see on screen may not be able to be linked with a biblical text or a known historical fact about Jesus. But it may make perfect sense of what we do know and what is present in the gospels, and as such contribute to our understanding of who Jesus was.<sup>52</sup>

A good example of this is Robert L. Webb’s comment on the ninth of the twelve flashbacks built into the screenplay of The Passion of the Christ (“Mary catches the child Jesus as he falls, and helps him up”). Webb writes:

Jesus as a growing boy would naturally have hurt himself falling, and Mary would naturally have done what mothers around the world do for their children when they fall. So while there is no explicit historical data [sic] to support this flashback, it is a realistic and reasonable conjecture.<sup>53</sup>

The “would haves” in that statement indicate just how easy it could be to become fanciful, rather than necessarily imaginative, in undertaking a historical task. And Webb himself recognizes that one purpose of this flashback is to emphasize the role of Mary in the Jesus story. It is legitimate for any historical Jesus researcher to ask what such a scene

---

<sup>51</sup> In the same way as: “There is no innocent eye”: Diane Apostolos-Cappadona, “On Seeing The Passion,” 100.

<sup>52</sup> Understanding rather than “knowledge,” should the latter be confined to cognitive awareness of empirical data. But here we confront also the question of different definitions of “knowledge”!

<sup>53</sup> Webb, “The Flashbacks in The Passion,” 56.

actually adds to our knowledge of Jesus. It could, however, be argued that this particular example of imaginative embellishment stresses the human development of Jesus, something which the paucity of material in the gospels about Jesus' early life and the pressure of Christian theological interpretation run the risk of obscuring.<sup>54</sup>

If Jesus-films are different only in degree from what historical Jesus researchers are up to, this applies also to their difference from religious and theological interpretations of the life of Jesus. This fourth insight is also of relevance to historical Jesus researchers, however. For it reminds them again of the many frameworks of interests within which their historical work is undertaken. It is now clear that despite its past usefulness the framework of the "Jesus of history/Christ of faith debate" is inadequate to describe what is going on when people try to interpret Jesus. An example from film illustrates this point well.

Denys Arcand's Jesus of Montreal (1989) is called a "transition" film in Lloyd Baugh's study of Jesus and Christ-figures in film.<sup>55</sup> By this he means that the film contains the best elements of a Jesus-film (there is a Passion Play within the film), and a film which presents a Christ-figure in the form of the contemporary actor, Daniel Coulombe (played by Lothaire Bluteau). Arcand's provocative film is a satire on consumerism and the power of media. It interweaves two narratives. One is the contemporary story of a hastily-assembled theatre group, gathered together by the out-of-work actor, Coulombe, at the request of Father Leclerc. Leclerc wants them to revise a Passion Play he had written some years earlier for performance at the shrine of which he is warden. The second narrative is the Passion Play itself. Much of the film's effectiveness depends upon the way in which the two stories relate to each other. The characters, Daniel (Jesus) especially, begin to experience in their contemporary lives things that (must have) happened to Jesus and his first-century followers. This is not, then, an "updating" of the Jesus story, but a discovery in contemporary form of the dynamics which (must have) surrounded the Jesus movement.

For the purposes of this present essay, the way in which the Passion Play is presented is of particular interest. Daniel and his troupe are portrayed as doing their historical homework. In order to revise the script of the Passion Play, they investigate what contemporary scholars are saying about Jesus as a historical figure. Whether or not this part of the film accurately portrays the latest finds of Historical Jesus Research is not here the issue.<sup>56</sup> It is more important to note that within the film's plot structure there is interplay between exploration of the Jesus of history and the actors' life-experience. To this interplay is added the further dimension of what the viewer can "see," i.e. the way in which characters in modern-day Montreal mirror those who gathered around Jesus.

---

<sup>54</sup> And bearing in mind that Infancy gospels tend to go in the opposite direction, accentuating how astonishing Jesus' divine powers were in early life.

<sup>55</sup> Baugh, Imaging the Divine, 113–129.

The film thus suggests the possibility that reflection on life-experience alongside knowledge and exploration of the (hi)story of Jesus can enable a better understanding of Jesus the historical figure. This is offered as an aspect of the film narrative and becomes part of the viewing experience.

For the viewer, the modern-day story does not simply illustrate the gospel narrative. Its juxtaposition with the Passion Play invites the viewer to re-think the meaning of gospel stories about Jesus. For example, when Daniel is taken to the top of a Montreal skyscraper by lawyer Richard Cardinal (Remy Girard) and tempted with the possibility of celebrity, wealth and power, the viewer "gets the point" by seeing an analogy with the Matthean or Lukan temptation narrative.<sup>57</sup> But the juxtaposition causes the biblical narrative to be read in a new light: less about the testing of vocation alone, and as much about the power of the lure of economic reward.

It is helpful to explore this film as a "transition film," as Baugh does, for Jesus of Montreal offers two narratives in one film. It is both a Jesus-film and a Christ-figure film. As a Jesus-film it is underdeveloped, for as viewers we never see the whole Passion Play, only fragments. As a Christ-figure film, it is challenging but incomplete because there is much criticism of the institutional church throughout the film and its handling of resurrection is unsatisfactory for any orthodox Christian understanding. It is thus mainstream and orthodox neither in its Historical Jesus Research (for the Jesus-film) nor in its theology (in presenting its Christ-figure). It is for this reason, though, that it also reveals the limitations of the Jesus of History/Christ of Faith framework for understanding how Historical Jesus Research relates to theology.

---

<sup>56</sup> This question is addressed, e.g., by M. Willett in "Jesus the Subversive: Jesus of Montreal and Recent Studies of the Historical Jesus," Centerquest Adult Resource 7 (July, 1991): 13–20, and R. Zwick, "Entmythologisierung versus Imitatio Jesu: Thematisierungen des Evangeliums in Denys Arcand's Film Jesus von Montreal," Communicatio Socialis 23.2 (1990): 17–47.

<sup>57</sup> This is clearly a point at which Arcand does draw on other gospels, even though he sought to be largely working with the Gospel of Mark. On exploration of the film in relation to Mark's Gospel, see Walsh, Reading the Gospels in the Dark, ch. 3.

Jesus-films show how the (potentially) ethically transformative figure of Jesus may work within culture whether or not theological orthodoxy accompanies an exposition of his life and/or teaching. Neither concern for some form of historical accuracy nor concern for what theology has traditionally been interested in about Jesus can be ignored when Jesus is presented. But mere data will not be enough, and mere orthodoxy will not be enough. The Jesus-film as a genre exposes the fact that the Jesus story retains persuasive power for many purposes; but it must be interestingly narrated. Telling a “good version of the Jesus story” may, then, be less about pandering to the needs of the box-office or being entertaining (though these aspects of film-making are not to be ignored).<sup>58</sup> A version of the Jesus story will be “good” if it reflects Jesus’ own apparent purposes and makes clear in the telling why the story of his life merits re-narration. The Jesus-film thus suggests that it is good for any interpreter to make it clear in their interpretation why the storyteller has any interest in the historical Jesus in the first place.

The Jesus of History/Christ of Faith debate has thus been displaced by a more complex phenomenon: that of a cultural Jesus who is constantly being re-interpreted to serve many needs and purposes. This Jesus demands continual re-narration in a variety of forms—verbal and visual. He is a figure who lived a defined, limited, short historical life, but his life and memory are the property not of historians and theologians alone.

Building on the three ways in which Jesus as “moving image” is to be understood, I have suggested, then, that Jesus-films offer four insights about Historical Jesus Research. These are: the fact that it is images of Jesus that are produced; that historical research has a limited place within a variety of disciplines; that attention to narrative is crucial in historiography; and that “historical” accounts of Jesus are different only in degree from “religious,” “theological” or other “interested” versions of his life. Beyond these four insights, what do the findings of this chapter suggest needs to be said to historical Jesus researchers themselves? One final comment suggests itself. If historical Jesus research is never “pure,” because historical research is always “interested,” and if watching films about Jesus is—when cinema is at its best—a multi-sensory experience, then scholars are issued with a challenge. The task of interpreting Jesus should be seen as an exercise, an experience even, which affects the whole person of the interpreter. Emotions are roused by Jesus-films. But things do not rest there. Viewers are challenged not merely to be “moved” by Jesus-films any more than they are simply to “think about” (mentally process) what they see.<sup>59</sup> Devoting attention to the emotional impact of film does, however, highlight the fact that wrestling with the meaning of a historical figure is not a dispassionate undertaking. This applies to scholars who engage with the figure of Jesus no less than viewers who watch Jesus-films.

---

<sup>58</sup> The film industry is precisely that—an industry, and major financial backing has to be found for any project undertaken.

If interpretation really is a “whole person experience,” scholars are invited to consider what Historical Jesus Research actually demands of them. They must reflect on their own historicity (material well-being, physical context, embodiedness, ethnicity, sexual orientation, political inclinations). Even if they do not necessarily declare the result of this in their published Jesus Research, they are advised to take note of how it influences them.<sup>60</sup> Otherwise, to use Crossan’s already famous words, Jesus Research would indeed become “a safe place to do autobiography and call it biography.”<sup>61</sup> The experience of watching Jesus-films invites scholars to do the necessary work on themselves as scholars, so that who they are contributes to their interpretive task, without distorting inappropriately what they conclude about Jesus. It is a continuous task, because Jesus is a continually moving image, and historical research plays its part within the inter-disciplinary venture of interpretation. The historical Jesus scholar cannot be exempt from the task of going public about why the historical Jesus needs to be studied. If he needs to be studied historically, then he needs to be studied historically for some purpose, and individual scholars take up a range of interests as they undertake the task as objectively as possible. Jesus-films begin at a different point (with a gospel or a novel to be filmed, or a director’s vision). But the broad cultural task of interpreting (and using) the figure of Jesus in many ways demands that film directors, historical Jesus scholars (and many others) stay talking to one another around the same table.

---

<sup>59</sup> And they may be “moved” in different directions, of course, as the respective responses of Crossan and Goodacre indicate (in Corley and Webb eds., Jesus and Mel Gibson’s “The Passion of the Christ,” 8–44).

<sup>60</sup> Though some may choose to be open about their background, interests and commitments, of course. John Dominic Crossan and Halvor Moxnes are examples of scholars who have reflected on the way their own lives may have informed their work, whilst nevertheless seeking to be as objective as they can.

<sup>61</sup> The irony being that the less the “whole person” dimension of historical enquiry is respected, the less “objective” it might have a chance of being.

JESUS' "MAGIC" FROM A THEODICEAN PERSPECTIVE

TOM HOLMÉN

1. Introduction

The study of the theme 'Jesus and magic' has above all been confused by the difficulty of determining what can be regarded as magic. For example, some scholars think that the miracle and exorcism activity of Jesus puts him neatly in the category of magic practitioners,<sup>1</sup> for Jesus simply does the things that magicians do.<sup>2</sup> Other scholars, again, consider such a conclusion ill-founded. In their view, there may have been certain technical similarities between Jesus' activity and magical practices of the time,<sup>3</sup> but the similarities remain much too superficial to justify characterizing Jesus as a magician.<sup>4</sup>

Quite apart from attempts at historical categorization, disagreement on what can be considered magic blurs even the assessment of the question whether Jesus was ever branded a magician by his contemporary adversaries. According to some experts, Jesus' wonder-working activities would probably have prompted his critics to charge him with

---

<sup>1</sup> M. Smith, Jesus the Magician (San Francisco: Harper & Row, 1981), 94–139; J. D. Crossan, The Historical Jesus: The Life of a Mediterranean Jewish Peasant (San Francisco: Harper, 1991), 137–167, 303–353. See also D. E. Aune, "Magic in Early Christianity," ANRW II 23.2 (1980): 1507–1557 (1523–1439). However, although Aune regards the wonder-working activities of Jesus as magical practices, he thinks that "historically and sociologically, the most appropriate designation for the role which Jesus assumed is that of messianic prophet" (1527; cf. also 1538–1539).

<sup>2</sup> Smith, Jesus the Magician.

<sup>3</sup> Such as touching, the use of saliva, and authoritative commands; see Aune, "Magic in Early Christianity," 1523–1539.

<sup>4</sup> G. Twelftree, Jesus the Exorcist: A Contribution to the Study of the Historical Jesus, WUNT 2.54 (Tübingen: Mohr, 1993), 190–207; J. P. Meier, A Marginal Jew: Rethinking the historical Jesus. 2: Mentor, Message and Miracles, Anchor Bible Reference Library (New York: Doubleday, 1994), 537–552; G. Theissen and A. Merz, Der historische Jesus: Ein Lehrbuch (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1996), 276–277; J. D. G. Dunn, Jesus Remembered, Christianity in the Making 1 (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2003), 689–694; B. Kollmann, Jesus und die Christen als Wundertäter: Studien zu Magie, Medizin und Schamanismus in Antike und Christentum, FRLANT 170 (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1996), 314–315.

magical practices.<sup>5</sup> In fact, these scholars point out, the accusations that Jesus was in league with Beelzebul<sup>6</sup> and was a deceiver who was leading people astray<sup>7</sup> amount to a charge of black magic or sorcery.<sup>8</sup> Other scholars, however, do not agree with this estimate, but think that no charge of magic can be discerned in the gospel tradition.<sup>9</sup> Instead, they suggest, the fact that “Jesus could be accused by his opponents of using the power of the prince of demons without any talk about ‘magic’ surfacing . . . simply underlines the point that there was no inextricable link between the two.”<sup>10</sup>

In general, I am not primarily interested in achieving an historical classification of Jesus vis-à-vis the practice of magic. The label of ‘magic’ / ‘magician’ was a social classifier<sup>11</sup> and, as rightly pointed out for instance by J.Z. Smith,<sup>12</sup> it has remained such.<sup>13</sup> In my view, however, the labels ‘magic’ / ‘magician’ and ‘miracle’ / ‘miracle worker’ can both be used as social classifiers, although in opposite ways. That is, ‘magic’ can be used to endow something with a negative value, ‘miracle’ with a positive one. Therefore, to my mind, scholarship does well to concentrate on unearthing and on trying to account for the views of, on the one hand, Jesus himself vs. his opponents and, on the other, his <sup>5</sup> G. N. Stanton, “Jesus of Nazareth: A Magician and a False Prophet Who Deceived God’s People?” in Jesus of Nazareth: Lord and Christ: Essays on the Historical Jesus and New Testament Christology: Festschrift I. H. Marshall, ed. J. B. Green and M. Turner (Grand Rapids, Eerdmans, 1994), 164–180 (178); N. T. Wright, Jesus and the Victory of God, Christian Origins and the Question of God 2 (Minneapolis: Fortress, 1996), 440.

<sup>6</sup> Mark 3:22–26; par. Matt 12:24–26/Luke 11:15, 17–18; cf. also John 7:20; 8:48, 52; 10:20.

<sup>7</sup> See, e.g. Matt 27:63–64; Luke 23:1–14; John 7:40–52.

<sup>8</sup> Stanton, “Magician and a False Prophet?”; Wright, Victory of God, 189–191, 440; Dunn, Jesus Remembered, 458, 689.

<sup>9</sup> Twelftree, Jesus the Exorcist, 198–204, 207; Meier, A Marginal Jew, 2:551–552.

<sup>10</sup> Meier, A Marginal Jew, 2:574.

<sup>11</sup> A. F. Segal, “Hellenistic Magic: Some Questions of Definition,” in Studies in Gnosticism and Hellenistic Religions: Festschrift G. Quispel, ed. R. van den Broek and M. J. Vermaseren, Etudes préliminaires aux religions orientales dans l’Empire romain 91 (Leiden: Brill, 1981), 349–375, at 369–370; J. Neusner, “Introduction,” in Religion, Science, and Magic: In Concert and in Conflict, ed. idem et al. (New York: Oxford University Press, 1989), 3–7, at 4–5; F. Graf, Magic in the Ancient World, Revealing Antiquity 10 (Cambridge: Harvard University Press, 1997), 20–60.

<sup>12</sup> J. Z. Smith, “Trading Places,” in Ancient Magic and Ritual Power, ed. M. Mayer and P. Mirecki, Religions in the Graeco-Roman World 129 (Leiden: Brill, 1995), 13–27 (16).

<sup>13</sup> See also H. Remus, Pagan-Christian Conflict over Miracle in the Second Century, Patristic Monograph Series 10 (Cambridge: Philadelphia Patristic Foundation, 1983), 52–54; Meier, A Marginal Jew, 2:539–540.

followers vs. their critics. To state this otherwise we can also speak of a subject oriented or 'emic' approach instead of an 'etic' or outsider's perspective.<sup>14</sup> Or, as A. Segal puts it:

The most interesting question for scholarship is to define the social and cultural conditions and presuppositions that allow such charges [sc. of magic] and counter-charges to be made.<sup>15</sup>

Consequently, the aim of this article is not to weigh the accuracy of the scholarly claims that Jesus was or was not a magician, i.e., to arrive at an historical categorization of Jesus. Instead, by taking a more modest (though perhaps not less meaningful) approach, I shall focus on the question of whether some of Jesus' deeds should be seen as having invited charges of magic from his contemporaries. My discussion thus moves on the 'emic' level and my elementary task is to try to ascertain whether a charge of magic was directed against Jesus. In the course of doing so, however, I will present some viewpoints about the 'conditions and presuppositions' (cf. Segal) of this charge which will also allow some brief comments on how Jesus himself saw his activity.

In pursuing the task I shall present a perspective which, I hope, has something new to offer in tackling the question about Jesus and magic; at any rate, this perspective leads to a new way of looking at Jesus and magic in connection with the theme of forgiveness. This perspective is contemporary thinking about theodicy. It is of course true that theodicy does not immediately come to mind as a framework for assessing the deeds of Jesus or the issue of magic. Therefore, to understand the relevance of this perspective, we must first consider the theodicean principle of 'action—consequence.'

---

<sup>14</sup> See e.g. N. Jardine, "Etics and Emics (not to Mention Anemics and Emetics) in the History of the Sciences," History of Science 42 (2004): 261–278.

<sup>15</sup> Segal, "Hellenistic Magic," 370. See also the insightful discussion in A. M. Reimer, Miracle and Magic: A Study in the Acts of the Apostles and the Life of Apollonius of Tyana, JSNTSup 235 (London: Sheffield Academic Press, 2002), 3–14. Cf. also a short presentation of four theories on which a study of magic can be based: S. E. Porter, "Magic in the Book of Acts," in A Kind of Magic: Understanding Magic in the New Testament and its Religious Environment, ed. M. Labahn and B. J. Liertaert Peerbolte, European Studies on Christian Origins (London: T&T Clark, 2007), 107–121, at 108–115.

2. The Action—Consequence Principle in Jesus' Context

2.1. A Theodicean Principle

The principle of action—consequence denotes the idea that goodness / good deeds will lead to happiness while wickedness / wicked acts will cause one to suffer. The idea was shared by almost all people of antiquity and considered an indispensable element of their thinking about theodicy: If there is a just god who cares for human beings, his dealings with people will follow the action—consequence principle.<sup>16</sup> In other words, for good or ill, god(s) will see to it that ‘you reap what you sow.’<sup>17</sup> The claim here is not that the action—consequence principle would necessarily or always be found as an inherent element in human actions. On the contrary, the idea of divine providence, which was held almost universally in antiquity,<sup>18</sup> naturally posits god(s) as engaged in upholding the principle.<sup>19</sup>

The following examples will illuminate the great importance of this principle in various religious-philosophical spheres.

The principle was deeply rooted in the heart of Israelite belief, the covenant:

I the Lord your God am a jealous God, punishing children for the iniquity of parents, to the third and the fourth generation of those who reject me, but showing steadfast love to the thousandth generation of those who love me and keep my commandments.<sup>20</sup>

<sup>16</sup> R. C. Cover, “Sin, Sinners: Old Testament,” ABD 6 (1992): 31–40, at 38–39; J. Krašovec, Reward, Punishment, and Forgiveness: The Thinking and Beliefs of Ancient Israel in the Light of Greek and Modern Views, VTSup (Leiden: Brill, 1999), 785–792.

<sup>17</sup> Gal 6:7. For further instances of Jewish and Greco-Roman applications of this metaphor, see R. N. Longenecker, Galatians, WBC 41 (Dallas: Word Books, 1990), 280. See also n. 61 below.

<sup>18</sup> A notable exception: the Epicureans.

<sup>19</sup> I share Y. Hoffman’s critique of some aspects included by K. Koch in his concept of “Tat-Ergehen-Zusammenhang”; see Y. Hoffman, “The Creativity of Theodicy,” in Justice and Righteousness: Biblical Themes and Their Influence, ed. H. G. Rewentlow and Y. Hoffman, JSNTSup 137 (Sheffield: JSOT Press, 1992), 117–130; see also, for example, B. Janowski, “Die Tat kehrt zum Täter zurück,” ZTK 91 (1994): 247–271; P. D. Miller, Sin and Judgment in the Prophets: A Stylistic and Theological Analysis, SBLMS 27 (Chico: Scholars Press, 1982), 122–137. For Koch’s exposition of his views, see for instance idem and J. Roloff, “Tat-Ergehen-Zusammenhang,” in Reclams Bibellexikon, ed. K. Koch et al., 4th ed. (Stuttgart: Philipp Reclam jun., 1987), 493–495; K. Koch, “Is There a Doctrine of Retribution in the Old Testament?” in Theodicy in the Old Testament, ed. J. L. Crenshaw, Issues in Religion and Theology 4 (London: SPCK, 1983), 57–87.

<sup>20</sup> Exod 20:5–6. These words seal the covenant agreement. See also e.g. Exod 34:7;

In fact, sustaining this order was a criterion for the true God, a criterion false gods did not meet:

Whether one does evil to them [sc. false idols] or good, they will not be able to repay it. They cannot set up a king or depose one. Likewise they are not able to give either wealth or money; if one makes a vow to them and does not keep it, they will not require it.<sup>21</sup>

Further, a Hittite text tells about a god:

He/she [a deity] it is who always vindicates just men, but chops down evil men like trees, repeatedly striking evil men on their skulls...until he/she destroys them.<sup>22</sup>

Nearer to Jesus' time, we find for instance this statement in Cicero's De Natura Deorum (3.85):

Destroy this, and everything collapses; for just as a household or a state appears to lack all rational system and order if in it there are no rewards for right conduct and no punishments for transgression, so there is no such thing at all as the divine governance [moderatio] of the world if that governance makes no distinction between the good and the wicked.

Of course, the harsh reality of life many times suggested that the principle did not quite hold true. This experience was a constant cause for struggle. In Seneca's celebrated tractate De Providentia, he seeks to "plead the cause of the gods" (1.1) by attempting to answer the question why "men who are good...labour and sweat and have a difficult road to climb" while "the wicked...make merry and abound in pleasures" (1.6).

Judaism also knew this struggle:

I saw the prosperity of the wicked. For they have no pain; their bodies are sound and sleek. They are not in trouble as others are; they are not plagued like other people....All in vain I have kept my heart clean and washed my hands in innocence. For all day long I have been plagued, and am punished every morning.<sup>23</sup>

---

Lev 26:39; Num 14:18; Deut 5:9–10; Pss 103:17–18; 105:8; Jer 32:18–19; Tob 3:3–5. Cf. Deut 7:9–10; 24:16; 2 Kgs 14:6; 2 Chr 25:4; Jer 31:29–30; Ezek 18.

<sup>21</sup> Ep Jer 6:34–35. See also for example Ps 82:1–4. Cf. also Deut 32:39; 1 Sam 2:2–10; Jer 10:2–16.

<sup>22</sup> According to H. A. Hoffner, "Theodicy in Hittite Texts," in Theodicy in the World of the Bible, ed. A. Laato and J. C. de Moor (Leiden: Brill, 2003), 90–107 (96–97).

<sup>23</sup> Ps 73:3–5, 13–14. See also e.g. Jer 12:1; Job 21:7–8; Eccl 7:15; 8:14; Hab 1:13; 4 Ezra 4.23. The sentiment was universal. See e.g. R. K. Williams, "Theodicy in the Ancient Near East," in Theodicy in the Old Testament, ed. Crenshaw, 42–56.

The apparent deviations from the principle which were manifest in real life were indeed acknowledged and often even accompanied by a complaint against the covenant God. Nonetheless, he was never ultimately pictured as unjust, nor was the ultimate validity of the action—consequence principle surrendered.<sup>24</sup> For instance, the book of Ecclesiastes concludes with an editorial statement which seems to take back previous utterances that in deep frustration had almost given up the principle:<sup>25</sup>

Fear God, and keep his commandments; for that is the duty of everyone. For God will bring every deed into judgment, including every secret thing, whether good or evil.<sup>26</sup>

These references must suffice here,<sup>27</sup> since the point is clear: the action—consequence principle should be regarded as one factor that is operative in the background when Jesus proclaims his message in word and deed. The healings of Jesus would have provoked thoughts in accordance with the principle, thereby eliciting questions about human guilt and suffering and the acts of the just God. Before studying gospel texts, we need to consider how the action—consequence principle links theodicy with magic.

2.2. The Principle as a Link between Theodicy and Magic: A Deviation from the Principle

As I have noted, the harsh experiences of life could challenge the validity of the action—consequence principle. Often—or at least sometimes—bad things appeared to happen to good people and vice versa, thus calling God's justice into question. This observation created an enduring theodicy problem and kindled an abundant philosophic and theological discussion.<sup>28</sup> A host of explanations were generated to solve the appar-

---

<sup>24</sup> J. H. Charlesworth, "Theodicy in Early Jewish Writings," in Theodicy in the World of the Bible, ed. Laato and de Moore, 470–508, at 507–508.

<sup>25</sup> A similar tension can be observed elsewhere in the book as well. Compare Eccl 2:26; 3:17; 8:10–12 with Eccl 2:14; 7:15; 8:12–13; 8:14; 9:2.

<sup>26</sup> Eccl 12:13–14.

<sup>27</sup> For a detailed exposition, see my forthcoming Theodicy and the Cross of Christ: A New Testament Inquiry. See also the major study by Krašovec, Reward, Punishment, and Forgiveness, passim.

<sup>28</sup> In Judaism, the covenant belief greatly aggravated the problem; J. Bowker, Problems of Suffering in Religions of the World (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1970), 7–14; J. L. Crenshaw, "Introduction: The Shift from Theodicy to Anthropodicy," in Theodicy in ent deviations from the principle.<sup>29</sup> One particular type of deviation concerns us now: deliberate thwarting or getting rid of suffering that results from wrongdoings, i.e. averting the punishment for one's sins. I shall consider the issue mainly from the Jewish perspective.

'Why do the wicked prosper?' was the emphatic question voiced by religious minds generation after generation. Obviously, the wicked would try to avoid the consequences of their actions. Ideas of God as almighty and all-seeing would then be evoked to discourage the wicked. They would not be able to flee the just God. However, there was also a legitimate way to escape suffering punishment for one's sins: appealing to God's forgiveness. In other words, when wishing to cause a particular exception to the action—consequence principle, namely a default of punishment for misbehavior, one could hope that God would out of mercy exempt one from the proper consequences of one's doings.<sup>30</sup> In this way, since it was God's forgiveness that was involved, what would otherwise have been deemed a violation of the action—consequence principle could be regarded as acceptable. In fact, Yahweh's divinity and holiness could even be given as the reason why forgiveness sometimes took priority over the action—consequence principle.<sup>31</sup> The famous passages Isa 43:24–25; 63:9 and Jer 31:20 present Yahweh as suffering a kind of conflict within himself, since his justice and love demand diverging treatment of the people.<sup>32</sup>

---

the Old Testament, ed. idem, 1–16, at 5. In other respects, scholars refer to the Greco-Roman discussion under the title of divine providence (e.g. Seneca, Plutarch).

<sup>29</sup> An excellent systematic arrangement of a wide variety of views can be found in A. Laato and J. C. de Moor, "Introduction," in Theodicy in the World of the Bible, ed. Laato and de Moor, vii–liv (xxx–liv). See also, e.g. Bowker, Problems of Suffering, 12–24.

<sup>30</sup> Lev 4, 16; see also e.g. Ps 103:3; Isa 43:24–25; Jer 31:20. On the theme of forgiveness in general, see, for example, J. S. Kselman, "Forgiveness: Old Testament," ABD 2 (1992): 831–833; J. H. Charlesworth, "Forgiveness: Early Judaism," ABD 2 (1992): 833–835; C.-H. Sung, Vergebung der Sünden: Jesu Praxis der Sündenvergebung nach den Synoptikern und ihre Voraussetzungen im Alten Testament und frühen Judentum, WUNT 2.57 (Tübingen: Mohr, 1993), 2–183. On the righteous and the sinners and the dynamics of forgiveness, see M. Winninge, Sinners and the Righteous: A Comparative Study of the Psalms of Solomon and Paul's Letters, ConBNT 26 (Stockholm: Almqvist & Wiksell International, 1995), 181–208.

<sup>31</sup> See Hos 11:8–9.

<sup>32</sup> For the problems of interpretation and theological implications, see G. Hoas, "Passion and Compassion of God in the Old Testament: A Theological Survey of Hos 11,8–9; Jer 31,20, and Isa 63,9+15," SJOT 11 (1997): 138–159; P. S. Fiddes, The Creative Suffering of God (Oxford: Clarendon, 1988), 19–25. Cf. also Krašovec, Reward, Punishment, and Forgiveness, 469: "victory of God's love over the postulates of the law of retribution."

Obviously, knowing how to get a share of divine forgiveness was of crucial importance. Much was at stake simply because this knowledge would help one to get free from punishment. However, the knowledge was also crucial in respect to gauging whether God had indeed sanctioned a lack of retribution. For understandably, people would not have been eager to see wrongdoers exempt from the due outcome of their misdeeds. Although Yahweh was self-evidently the absolute controller of the divine pardon,<sup>33</sup> the Torah mentioned some ‘triggering factors,’ such as sacrifice and remorse.<sup>34</sup> Clearly, some ambivalence was always involved in judging their efficacy and appropriateness. We may recall for example Isaiah’s and Jeremiah’s warnings against careless trust in sacrifices, and Jonah’s dissatisfaction with God’s decision to be merciful with the repenting city of Nineveh.<sup>35</sup>

A key question is: Were there any alternatives to the divine pardon in causing the exception to the action—consequence principle and averting bad things which result from doing bad? Let me make this more specific by means of an example related to healing, which is clearly relevant to the present essay. There was a wide-spread and long-prevailing conviction that ailments of various kinds were a form of punishment resulting from one’s misdoings.<sup>36</sup> As M.L. Brown correctly notes, the idea that punishment for sins often took the form of diseases does not mean that these were always automatically regarded as the

<sup>33</sup> Cf. Exod 33:19.

<sup>34</sup> See, e.g. E. P. Sanders, Judaism: Practice and Belief 63 BCE–66 CE (London: SCM Press, reprint 1994), 103–118, 251–257, 270–278.

<sup>35</sup> See Isa 1; Jer 7; Jon 4. Cf. also e.g. Prov 21:27; Amos 5:21–24; 2 En. 45.3; Sir 34:19.

<sup>36</sup> See, e.g. Exod 15:26; 23:25; Lev 26; Num 12:1–15; Deut 28:21–22, 27–28; 2 Chr 21:12–19; 26:16–21; Ps 38:1–11; 103:3–5; Prov 3:7–8; Isa 53:3–5; Sir 38:9–10, 15; 1 En. 95.4; T. Reu. 1.6–8; Acts 12:21–23; 1 Cor 11:30; Jas 5:12–16; Rev 2:22. See also J. Z. Baruch, “The Relation between Sin and Disease in the Old Testament,” Janus 51 (1964): 295–302; G. Vermes, Jesus the Jew: A Historian’s Reading of the Gospels (New York: Macmillan, 1973), 59–68; E. S. Gerstenberger and W. Schrage, Leiden, Kohlhammer-Taschenbücher 1004; Biblische Konfrontationen (Stuttgart: Kohlhammer, 1977), 30–31; G. Fohrer, “Krankheit im Lichte des Alten Testaments,” in idem, Studien zu alttestamentlichen Texten und Themen (1966–1972) (Berlin: de Gruyter, 1981), 172–187 (177–182); H. C. Kee, Medicine, Miracle and Magic in New Testament Times, SNTSMS 55 (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1986), 26; P. Gerlitz, “Krankheit I,” TRE 19 (1990): 675–680 (677–678); J. Scharbert, “Krankheit II,” TRE 19 (1990): 680–683, at 682; M. L. Brown, Israel’s Divine Healer, Studies in Old Testament Biblical Theology (Grand Rapids: Zondervan, 1995), 236–237, 239–242; A. Jeffers, Magic and Divination in Ancient Palestine and Syria, Studies in the History and Culture of the Ancient Near East 8 (Leiden: Brill, 1996), 231.

effects of personal sin.<sup>37</sup> As I have remarked above, it often appeared that innocent people were suffering; but this state of affairs was always experienced as problematic with respect to the notion that God is just. Therefore, at least for outsiders, it was easy to assume some guilt on the part of the ailing persons.<sup>38</sup> In general, for a sick person to get well it was imperative to settle accounts with God, to obtain divine pardon.<sup>39</sup> Everywhere in the Jewish tradition, then, it was ultimately the Lord who healed the sick.<sup>40</sup>

Was there any alternative to the divine pardon? Besides appealing to God's forgiveness, could anything else cause the particular kind of exception to the action—consequence principle that we have in mind here? In the case of healing, one might suggest medicine. Early Judaism attests to a turn from the older, rather negative attitude towards physicians to a more favorable and trusting position. However, despite the acceptance of the use of drugs and medicines, the atonement for sins through the appropriate means was still regarded as essential for healing.<sup>41</sup> Medicine could not be regarded as replacing the request for God's forgiveness when a person was suffering from ailments.

For this reason, in the case of healing, there was only one clear alternative to appealing to the divine pardon, viz. magic.

A number of sources make it clear that the alleviation of suffering—which was different in its forms and in relation to its causes, but often also caused by ailments<sup>42</sup>—was one of the major reasons why people engaged in magic.<sup>43</sup> Magical arts were widely known and practiced in antiquity; they were also known in the Old Testament and in early Judaism. While some religious-cultural traditions embraced magic specifically as a way given by god(s) for human beings to get rid of

<sup>37</sup> Brown, Divine Healer, 133–135, 229.

<sup>38</sup> Cf. the case of Job. See the discussion of John 9 in section 4 below.

<sup>39</sup> Baruch, "Relation between Sin and Disease," 298–300; Brown, Divine Healer, 239–240.

<sup>40</sup> Exod 15:25–26; Pss 103:2–3; 107:20; Job 5:18; Hos 6:1; Sir 38:10; Tob 13:14–15; Wis 16:12–13; Kee, Medicine, Miracle and Magic, 12–21; Scharbert, "Krankheit," 682–683; Brown, Divine Healer, 237–238.

<sup>41</sup> See, e.g. Sir 38:9–15; Vermes, Jesus the Jew, 60–61; see further Kee, Medicine, Miracle and Magic, 19–26.

<sup>42</sup> Kee, Medicine, Miracle and Magic, 114–115; Jeffers, Magic and Divination, 230–235; P. Schäfer, "Magic and Religion in Ancient Judaism," in Envisioning Magic: A Princeton Seminar and Symposium, ed. idem and H. G. Kippenberg (Leiden: Brill, 1997), 19–43, at 34.

<sup>43</sup> Kee, Medicine, Miracle and Magic, 112; J. A. Scurlock, "Magic: Ancient Near East," ABD 4 (1992): 464–468, at 465–466; F. Graf, "How to Cope with a Difficult Life: A View of Ancient Magic," in Envisioning Magic, ed. Schäfer and Kippenberg, 93–114.

suffering,<sup>44</sup> others were more doubtful.<sup>45</sup> In a modern critical reading, the Old Testament view of magic may appear ambiguous. The Old Testament proclaims a ban on magical practices but includes neutral and positive references to means that seem no different from magic to an outside observer.<sup>46</sup> Accordingly, the viewpoint represented by modern scholarly definition(s) of magic (entailing an ‘etic’ approach) naturally results in seeing magic as an indigenous and integral part of Old Testament religion.<sup>47</sup> Irrespective of this, however, the Judaism at the turn of the eras, like early Christianity (thus, now viewing things on the ‘emic’ level), regarded magic—or better, what they perceived as magic—as unambiguously proscribed by the God of the Scriptures.<sup>48</sup> This is the ultimate reason why the label ‘magic’ or ‘magician’ could function as a pejorative designation in Jesus’ time.<sup>49</sup>

In Jesus’ Jewish context the only legitimate procedure to bring about the exception to the action—consequence principle that we have been discussing here, viz. a release from punishment, was the appeal for divine pardon. While it was known and believed that magic could also

---

<sup>44</sup> See E. F. Sutcliffe, Providence and Suffering in the Old and New Testaments (London: Thomas Nelson and Sons, 1953), 22–25; Scurlock, “Magic,” 465; Graf, Magic in the Ancient World, 92–96; A. Loprieno, “Theodicy in Ancient Egyptian Texts,” in Theodicy in the World of the Bible, ed. Laato and de Moor, 27–56, at 32–33. Cf. 1 En. 7, 8.

<sup>45</sup> For example, “official” Greek and Roman thought generally rejected magic; H.-D. Betz, “Magic in Greco-Roman Antiquity,” Encyclopedia of Religion 9 (1987): 93–97 (95); Aune, “Magic in Early Christianity,” 1518–1519. Nevertheless, the magical arts teemed; see H.-J. Klauck, The Religious Context of Early Christianity: A Guide to Graeco-Roman Religions, trans. B. McNeil (Minneapolis: Fortress, 2003), 209–231; U. Riemer, “Fascinating but Forbidden? Magic in Rome,” in A Kind of Magic: Understanding Magic in the New Testament and its Religious Environment, ed. Labahn and Lietaert Peerbolte, 160–172.

<sup>46</sup> Betz, “Magic in Greco-Roman Antiquity,” 98; J. K. Kuemmerlin-McLean, “Magic: Old Testament,” ABD 4 (1992): 468–471; Schäfer, “Magic and Religion,” 27–33.

<sup>47</sup> Thus, for example, in the recent study of Jeffers, which takes its point of departure in the “magic mentality” of the Semites (Jeffers, Magic and Divination, 4–16).

<sup>48</sup> Editorial staff, “Magic” EncJud 11 (1978) 703–707, at 704; Segal, “Hellenistic Magic” 371; Schäfer, “Magic and Religion” 27, 33–34. Exod 22:17; Lev 19:26; Deut 18:9–12; Isa 47:9–15; Ezek 13:17–23; Mal 3:3–5; 1 En. 7, 8.

<sup>49</sup> See, for instance, J. Neusner, “Science and Magic, Miracle and Magic in Formative Judaism: The System and the Difference,” in Religion, Science, and Magic: In Concert and in Conflict, ed. idem et al., 61–81, elaborating the “emic” point of view. Compare the statement: “Moses and Aaron are not called magicians, but they do the things that magicians do” (Neusner, “Science and Magic, Miracle and Magic,” 66) with that of M. Smith. Schäfer’s article (“Magic and Religion”) is a good example of how the change of point of view makes all the difference. From a scholarly perspective, it is quite clear to Schäfer that magic had an important foothold in the Old Testament (27–33). In estimating the ancient Jews’ standpoint on the issue, however, he is equally clear about their strict denial of the presence of magic (32–33).

be used to bring about the same effect, and could for example result in healing, this was clearly an unacceptable pursuit. I turn now to the gospel texts and the Jesus tradition, where I shall first review some teachings that are suspicious from the perspective of the action—consequence principle.

3. Suspicious Theodicy in the Teaching of Jesus

My treatment of the Jesus tradition cannot pursue a systematic analysis of authenticity, i.e., a verification of the historicity of the variegated information provided by the tradition.<sup>50</sup> Nonetheless, I shall attempt to relate the claims that will be put forward to the historical Jesus as well.

The Jesus tradition contains a number of teachings that would appear suspicious with regards to theodicy thinking. The issue of theodicy is reflected most explicitly in some sayings, e.g. in the beatitudes.

Blessed are you who are poor, for yours is the kingdom of God. Blessed are you who are hungry now, for you will be filled. Blessed are you who weep now, for you will laugh.<sup>51</sup>

These utterances go against what would have been the most obvious line of theodicy thinking. The blessed ones are not those living in happiness, but those who endure travails.<sup>52</sup> The difficulty is, however, quite easy to overcome by means of a deeper theodicean reflection which was well known at that time. For example, the fact that trouble was often the lot of good and righteous people could be explained by referring to the reward in the afterlife.<sup>53</sup> Still, it is noteworthy that Matthew tends to spiritualize the hardships of the blessed by calling them “the poor in spirit” and “those who hunger and thirst for righteousness.”<sup>54</sup> Matthew is perhaps not perverting the original (i.e. Lukan) unqualified “poor”

---

<sup>50</sup> Considerations of space do not allow me to make a detailed analysis. For one model of authentication, see T. Holmén, “Authenticity Criteria,” in Encyclopedia of the Historical Jesus, ed. Craig A. Evans (New York: Routledge, 2008), 43–54.

<sup>51</sup> Luke 6:20–21.

<sup>52</sup> Cf. e.g. Deut 33:26–29; Ps 128; Pss. Sol. 15.7, 8.

<sup>53</sup> See, for instance, Dan 12:1–3; 2 Bar. 21.11–25; 44.11–15; 1 En. 38–39; Sib. Or. 4.179–190; R. J. Faley, The Cup of Grief: Biblical Reflections on Sin, Suffering and Death (New York: Alba House, 1977), 77–88; Bowker, Problems of Suffering, 26–32. Accordingly, the beatitudes affirm that the hungry will be filled and the weepers will laugh.

<sup>54</sup> Matt 5:3, 6.

since this term can also connote the idea of meekness.<sup>55</sup> Still, “the addition does... shift the emphasis from the economic to the religious sphere.”<sup>56</sup> Thus, the theodicy suggested by the beatitudes, although it might not be properly called bewildering, nonetheless displays a somewhat surprising attitude.

Greater puzzlement with respect to theodicean thinking is presented by the first verses of Luke 13, which relate two fateful disasters. Some people had been killed by a pagan overlord while they were bringing offerings to God.<sup>57</sup> Others, again, had abruptly been struck dead by the random cause of a falling tower.<sup>58</sup> Such exceptional calamities would normally have been seen as indicating that the people in question had drawn the wrath of God upon themselves in some special way.<sup>59</sup> For, naturally, the just God would repay each person according to his or her deeds.<sup>60</sup> Correspondence between the sin and the punishment was central to the expected justness of the Divinity.<sup>61</sup> Contrary to this, the theodicean viewpoint put forward by the Jesus of the text loosens the action—consequence principle by suggesting that the graveness of the punishment need not always be in proportion to the deeds committed.<sup>62</sup> Such thinking apparently lumps grave and petty sinners

<sup>55</sup> See Pss 9:18–19; 22:25–27; 40:18.

<sup>56</sup> W. D. Davies and D. C. Allison, The Gospel According to Saint Matthew. Volume One: Introduction and Commentary on Matthew I–VIII, ICC (Edinburgh: T&T Clark, 1997), 444. Likewise, satisfied hunger (or thirst) is an image of the eschatological salvation of the righteous who are oppressed; see Ps 22:25–27; Isa 41:17–18; 49:10; 55:1.

<sup>57</sup> One explanation of such a drastic injustice would have been that God found the sacrifices (and thus their offerers) unacceptable; see e.g. Amos 5:21–24; Isa 1:11–17; Prov 15:8; 2 En. 45:3; Sir 34:19. The mingling of the sacred blood of the sacrifices and the unclean blood of the killed human beings was an idea especially appalling to Jews; cf. Spec. 3.90–91.

<sup>58</sup> The sudden and fateful death corresponds to what was often seen as the inevitable end of wicked people. See, e.g. Ps 73:16–19, which describes the abrupt termination of the lives of the godless.

<sup>59</sup> I. H. Marshall, The Gospel of Luke: A Commentary on the Greek Text, NIGTC 3 (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1978), 553; F. Bovon, Das Evangelium nach Lukas. 2. Teilband: Lk 9,51–14,35, EKKNT 3 (Neukirchen-Vluyn: Neukirchener Verlag, 1996), 376. This follows the concept of “measure for measure”; D. L. Bock, Luke Vol. 2: 9:51–24:53, Baker Exegetical Commentary on the New Testament 3b (Grand Rapids: Baker Books, 1996), 1206.

<sup>60</sup> 1 Kgs 8:39; 2 Chr 6:30; Neh 6:14; Ps 62:13; Prov 24:12; Ezek 36:19; Sir 16:12; 35:24; 1 En. 95.5.

<sup>61</sup> J. Barton, “Natural Law and Poetic Justice in the Old Testament,” JTS 30 (1979): 1–14. For the multifaceted correspondence between sin and judgement, see Miller, Sin and Judgment, 7–110. Cf. also the principle of poetic justice (Barton, “Poetic Justice,” 9–14) in e.g. Hos 8:7; 10:13; Pss 7:15–17; 9:16; 57:7; Job 4:8; 15:35; Prov 1:17–18; 5:22; 14:32; 22:8; 26:27; 28:10; Eccl 10:8–9; Est 7:10; 9:1; Dan 6:24; Wis 11:16; 12:23; Sir 27:25–27; Tob 14:10. See even Exod 20:5; Num 32:23; Job 8:4; Prov 10:24.

<sup>62</sup> J. Nolland, Luke 9:21–18:34, WBC 35b (Dallas: Word Books, 1993), 718–719.

together in anticipation of mutual doom.<sup>63</sup> Would not God be more discriminating?

Some of the so-called parables of reversal are similarly confusing with respect to thinking about theodicy.<sup>64</sup> In the parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus in Luke 16:19–31, the words of Abraham to the rich man who after his death finds himself in Hades come close to the theodicean view which we have seen in the beatitudes:<sup>65</sup>

Child, remember that during your lifetime you received your good things, and Lazarus in like manner evil things; but now he is comforted here, and you are in agony.<sup>66</sup>

More puzzling theodicy can be found in the parable of the Pharisee and the Publican in Luke 18:10–14. Many of the caricaturing elements of the parable can be discarded as secondary amendments.<sup>67</sup> The parable's vindication of the publican upon his appeal to God for forgiveness is not surprising; rather, without the caricaturing features, it is the picture of the Pharisee who thanks God for the good life he is leading that begins to provoke questions of theodicy. The Pharisee has followed the guidance of the Torah<sup>68</sup> and, at first, everything seems to hit the mark. Now, for once, it has become manifest already within the present worldly life that goodness / good deeds will lead to happiness. Now, for once, God has acted clearly and indisputably according to the action—consequence principle and given a person the good life he has promised in his justice to all who pay heed to his will. But then it appears, as the parable's comments on the Pharisee continue, that all this is somehow completely wrong! The publican is justified, not the Pharisee.<sup>69</sup> It seems—and indeed this may be the upshot of all the Jesus

<sup>63</sup> Cf. Luke 13:3 (ὁμοίως), 5 (ὡσαύτως).

<sup>64</sup> For the label and the relevant parables, see J. D. Crossan, In Parables: The Challenge of the Historical Jesus (New York: Harper & Row, 1973), 53–78.

<sup>65</sup> J. A. Fitzmyer, The Gospel according to Luke (X–XXIV), AB 28 (Garden City, NY: Doubleday, 1985), 1127–1128, 1133.

<sup>66</sup> Luke 16:25.

<sup>67</sup> See T. Holmén, Jesus and Jewish Covenant Thinking, BIS 55 (Leiden: Brill, 2001), 118–125.

<sup>68</sup> See the tithing liturgy of Deut 26. The paraphrase of the liturgy in Ant. 4.242–243 intriguingly increases the parallelism with Luke 18:10–14. See C. A. Evans, "The Pharisee and the Publican. Luke 18:9–14 and Deuteronomy 26," in The Gospels and the Scriptures of Israel, ed. idem and W. R. Stegner, JSNTSup 104 and Studies in Scripture in Early Judaism and Christianity 3 (Sheffield: Sheffield Academic Press, 1994), 342–355.

<sup>69</sup> For example, J. Jeremias, Die Gleichnisse Jesus, 10th ed. (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1984), 141 wants to understand (Luke 18:14) exclusively: "This one was justified, not the other." However, "more justified than the other" is also possible, which would mean that the Pharisee is not completely condemned. Cf. H. Kruse, "Die 'dialektische Negation' als semitisches idiom," VT 4 (1954): 385–400, at 392; traditions we have now reviewed—as if the proper theodicean state of affairs should not be welcomed.

In addition, there are some broad, sweeping statements in the Jesus tradition that seem to turn the action—consequence principle completely upside down: “The tax collectors and the prostitutes are going into the kingdom of God ahead of you” (Matt. 21:32); “I tell you, many will come from east and west and will eat with Abraham and Isaac and Jacob in the kingdom of heaven, while the heirs of the kingdom will be thrown into the outer darkness” (Matt. 8:11–12); and finally, “but many who are first will be last, and the last will be first” (Mark 10:31).

What we can learn from these short examples is that the Jesus tradition, and probably to some extent also the authentic teaching of Jesus, put forward ideas that would have appeared curious from a theodicean point of view. The existence of such teachings of Jesus, then, would have enhanced people’s sensitivity to seeing similar curiosities manifested by his deeds as well. I shall now turn to consider some features of the deeds that possibly, perhaps even probably, would have preoccupied the minds of Jesus’ contemporaries.

4. Healings Suspected of Magic because of a Suspicious Theodicy?<sup>70</sup>

I shall begin with some remarks on the healing story in John 9. I realize that the story does not present an original compositional whole.<sup>71</sup> The current shape of the story does, however, illustrate what I believe can hold true even with respect to the historical healing activity of Jesus.

The story opens by mentioning a man who has been blind from birth. Jesus’ disciples pose a question which actualizes a problem of theodicy: who had sinned, the man or his parents? The disciples’ question plausibly reflects the contemporary understanding of the action—consequence

---

H. Klein, Barmherzigkeit gegenüber den Elenden und Geächteten: Studien zur Botschaft des lukanischen Sondergutes, Biblich-Theologische Studien 10 (Neukirchen-Vluyn: Neukirchener Verlag, 1987), 66–67.

<sup>70</sup> The following discussion will not consider Jesus’ exorcisms. See the remarks in section 6 below.

<sup>71</sup> See e.g. C. H. Dodd, Historical Tradition in the Fourth Gospel (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1963), 181–188; J. Roloff, Das Kerygma und der irdische Jesus: Historische Motive in den Jesus-Erzählungen der Evangelien (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1970), 135–141; R. Bultmann, Das Evangelium des Johannes, 21st ed., Kritisch-exegetischer Kommentar über das Neue Testament 2 (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1986), 250; Meier, A Marginal Jew, 2:694–698; M. Labahn, Jesus als Lebensspender: Untersuchungen zu einer Geschichte der johanneischen Tradition anhand ihrer Wundergeschichten, BZNW 98 (Berlin: de Gruyter, 1999), 373–374.

principle.<sup>72</sup> Since the man had always been blind and it was accordingly rather difficult to ascribe the sin, ultimately causing the blindness, to the man himself, the Torah passage quoted at the beginning of this article (Exod 20:5–6) became relevant. For some, it would have been easier to see the consequences of sin as having been transferred from the parents to their child.<sup>73</sup>

Somewhat like the opening verses of Luke 13 reviewed above, Jesus' answer to the disciples' question here rescinds the consistent application of the action—consequence principle. However, this time, according to Jesus, the evil that has come to pass is in no proportion whatsoever to the deeds committed: there is no sin that would have led to the man's blindness.<sup>74</sup> The important point to observe now is that the ensuing healing is unobjectionable only if we assume the truth of Jesus' estimation of the theodicy of the situation. While modern readers might perhaps feel inclined to embrace Jesus' estimation, for his contemporaries the view that no sin was involved would have made God suspect of a grave injustice. It would thus have been an unlikely interpretation of the situation, to say the least.<sup>75</sup> For them, therefore, the healing fails to acknowledge the problem of sin and guilt.

Before making any further comments, let us consider another healing story. The healing of a paralyzed man in Mark 2:1–12 also contains elements that a tradition-critical analysis may deem secondary in terms of their provenance.<sup>76</sup> My point is again that the story serves to

---

<sup>72</sup> Brown, Divine Healer, 241. See, for instance, Lev 26:14–16 and Deut 28:27–28, both of which mention inter alia blindness as resulting from transgressions against the covenant stipulations. See further C. A. Evans, “‘Who Touched Me?’ Jesus and the Ritually Impure,” in Jesus in Context: Temple, Purity, and Restoration, ed. B. Chilton and C. A. Evans, AGJU 39 (Leiden: Brill, 1997), 353–376, 370–374, discussing some Targumic texts which suggest that the blind and the lame (cf. Mark 2 dealt with below) were especially regarded as sinners. See also Lev 21:17–23; 2 Sam 5:8. Cf. also Lev 22:18–24; Deut 15:21.

<sup>73</sup> See the references in note 20 above. This idea was in fact common in antiquity. Gen 25:22–23 had inspired rabbis to generate speculations about the possibilities of the fetus to sin in the womb; Gen. R. 63:6; see also Ruth R. 6:4. See also Wis 8:19–20; T. Naph. 2:2–4.

<sup>74</sup> John 9:3; cf. Luke 13:2–3.

<sup>75</sup> Dodd, Historical Tradition, 187 (commenting on both John 9 and Luke 13) correctly notes: “The interlocutors tacitly assume the principle that suffering, under the dispensation of a just Providence, must be retribution for sin.”

<sup>76</sup> See e.g. H.-W. Kuhn, Ältere Sammlungen im Markusevangelium, SUNT 8 (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1971), 53–57; H.-J. Klauck, “Die Frage der Sündenvergebung in der Perikope von der Heilung des Gelähmten (Mk 2,1–12 parr)”, BZ 25 (1981): 223–248, at 225–236; H. Hendrickx, The Miracle Stories of the Synoptic Gospels, Studies in the Synoptic Gospels (San Francisco: Harper & Row, 1987), 106–121; J. Marcus, Mark 1–8: A New Translation with Introduction and Commentary, AB 27 (New York: Doubleday, 1999), 218–224.

highlight some questions that can be relevant to the historical healing activity of Jesus.

Contrary to the healing story in John 9, here in Mark 2 Jesus' statements are consistent with the action—consequence principle. The connection between sin and the defect in question is evident in the words he addresses directly to the paralyzed (“son, your sins are forgiven”), in his comments on the unspoken thoughts of the scribes (“the Son of Man has authority on earth to forgive sins”), and in the subsequent healing itself. Contrary to John 9, it is evident in Mark 2 that Jesus seems to acknowledge the problem of sin and guilt. However, as the present form of the text suggests, although Jesus apparently thinks that the problem is not only acknowledged but also adequately dealt with by what he says and does, all do not concur. For some, Jesus' dealings remain questionable. Obviously, there is no sign or mention of the use of any of the means of atonement, which would have been necessary to indicate that this issue was subordinated to God's authority.<sup>77</sup>

The general historicity of Jesus' healing activity need not be doubted. No matter what origin or role in Jesus' ministry one ascribes to the healings, they form an integral part of the tradition and are nowadays regarded as one of the most reliable facts about Jesus.<sup>78</sup> Naturally, this statement is not an automatic endorsement of the authenticity of every individual healing tradition. Accordingly, I have uttered some reservation vis-à-vis the healing stories of John 9 and Mark 2. However, the features under inspection are not tied up with these precise traditions (although they are most recognizable here), but are well conceivable elsewhere too. As a comment on both John 9 and Mark 2, I would now like to pose three questions and bring them to bear on the historical level of Jesus' work as well.

(1) Did Jesus of Nazareth sometimes—by explicit denial or otherwise—appear to ignore the problem of sin and guilt when healing people? In my view, even if the direct statement of John 9:3 is deemed inauthentic, he probably did. There are numerous and widely attested healing narratives which through silence seem to bypass the question about the sin and guilt of the people who are cured.<sup>79</sup> There is no reason to think that this feature is entirely a secondary construction.

<sup>77</sup> Cf. Mark 2:7.

<sup>78</sup> Cf. B. L. Blackburn, “The Miracles of Jesus,” in Studying the Historical Jesus: Evaluations of the State of Current Research, ed. B. Chilton and C. A. Evans, NTTTS 19 (Leiden: Brill, 1994), 353–394, at 392; J. H. Charlesworth, “Jesus Research Expands with Chaotic Creativity,” in Images of Jesus Today, ed. idem and W. P. Weaver, Faith and Scholarship Colloquies 3; Valley Forge: Trinity Press International, 1994), 1–41, at 12–13; C. A. Evans, Jesus and His Contemporaries: Comparative Studies, AGJU 25 (Leiden: Brill, 1995), 213.

(2) When he practiced healing, did Jesus sometimes seem to deal with the problem of sin and guilt in a way that would have been deemed inadequate by those who regarded themselves as capable of and/or responsible for gauging such issues? It is not difficult to answer this question. Apart from the story of Mark 2, there is virtually no clear evidence that Jesus ever focused on the problem of sin and guilt when healing. Thus, if he never focused on the problem, this second question is inessential and we need only consider the first and the third questions. But if he did focus on sin and guilt when healing, all evidence suggests that he never consistently demanded the use of the means of atonement in the way that would have been regarded as appropriate.<sup>80</sup>

Hence, to summarize likely answers to these questions: Many times in Jesus' reported healings the problem of sin, reflecting the theodicean principle of action—consequence, seems to have been either ignored or solved in a way that to many of his contemporaries would have appeared inadequate.<sup>81</sup> This sentiment would have been strengthened by the suspicious-looking theodicy of some of Jesus' teachings.

(3) With the third question, we come to the central point of the present study. The fact that people were healed through Jesus' activity constituted visible and indisputable evidence that the kind of deviation from the action—consequence principle that was discussed in section 2.2. above had indeed taken place. Since, as was commonly believed, there was an intimate bond between sin and sickness, the healings obvi-

---

<sup>79</sup> Matt 8:5–13 (John 4:46–54); Mark 1:29–31; 3:1–5; 5:22–24, 35–42; 5:25–34; 7:31–35; 8:22–25; Luke 13:10–17; 14:1–6; John 11:1–44. I have discounted instances where Jesus' exorcism activity is reported (see note 70 above).

<sup>80</sup> Healings which pay attention to the question of sin but which do not seem to deal with it in a proper manner: Mark 2:1–12; Jn 5:1–14. In addition, Luke 7:11–15 might be included.

<sup>81</sup> In fact, "many times" in this case means "almost always." Only in Mark 1:40–45, 10:46–52 and Luke 17:11–19 do we find a mention of remorse and/or sacrifice. Cf. the phrase "have mercy on me/us" in Mark 10:47 and Luke 17:13. In Mark 1:40–45 and Luke 17:11–19, again, Jesus sends the lepers to the priests and in Mark he even orders the healed man to sacrifice. This appears to be according to the law, which proscribes the following: "Thus [referring to various purification rites and sacrifices] the priest shall make atonement on his behalf and he shall be clean" (Lev 14:20). However, in the two stories the lepers are in fact already cured and cleansed before they get to the priests for the sacrifice (cf. Mark 1:42; Luke 17:14). The stories thus render the priestly purification and the sacrifices offered to God futile: merely pragmatic reasons require that the procedure of sacrifice be undertaken. The procedure was needed for the integration of the lepers into the ordinary social and religious life of the community.

ously attested to the fact that through Jesus' deeds people were getting rid of the suffering that sins had caused them. The question is: If those who viewed Jesus more critically could not or would not regard the healings (and the deviation from the action—consequence principle) as having taken place in the only legitimate way possible, viz. by appealing to God's forgiveness, what alternative interpretations could account for the things that evidently had happened?

I believe that the closest (if not the only) alternative was the idea that magic was involved.

5. Jesus' Perspective on His 'Magic'?

I sum up the conclusions so far in the form of a suggestion: the fact that some of Jesus' deeds appeared to revoke the action—consequence principle in an illegitimate way, i.e. in a way not being based on the appeal to God's forgiveness, opened the way to suspicions that they were magical in nature. This outcome would corroborate the scholarly interpretations that have suggested that the deeds were indeed labeled as magic by some contemporary people.

However, the 'emic' approach of the present study means that the outcome does not qualify as a historical categorization of Jesus. It cannot be translated into a scholarly claim that Jesus was a magician. Instead, it lends support to the scholarly view that Jesus' critical contemporaries accused him of magic. Moreover, to make the 'emic' approach more complete we would need to inquire into Jesus' own view of the issue, i.e. how Jesus himself regarded his startling deeds vis-à-vis the art of magic. The opinion of the critical contemporaries should not be allowed to stand for Jesus'.<sup>82</sup>

I will now attempt to complement the 'emic' viewpoint arrived at so far by adding Jesus' perspective to the picture. I will offer only some brief suggestions, mainly based on the conditions and presuppositions<sup>83</sup> that the specific perspective on theodicy employed in this study has brought to light.

First, some general remarks. The label 'magic' / 'magician' was a social classifier and dependent on a highly subjective assessment. Likewise, it was a highly pejorative label. In principle, therefore, despite the label he was given, Jesus himself may not have seen any of his deeds as based on magic. Further, while we cannot exclude as altogether impossible the idea that a religious first-century Jew would have openly consented to being branded a magician, such a consent must be termed exceptional. These general considerations call our attention to the striking fact that there are no discernible signs of Jesus' acceptance of the label, although the tradition does relate his acquiescence in the Pharisees' claim that he was breaking the Sabbath.<sup>84</sup>

---

<sup>82</sup> See the pertinent remarks of S. R. Garret, "Light on a Dark Subject and Vice Versa: Magic and Magicians in the New Testament," in Religion, Science, and Magic: In Concert and in Conflict, ed. J. Neusner et al., 142–65, at 146.

<sup>83</sup> See the reference to Segal ("Hellenistic Magic," 370) n. 11 above.

More specifically, we can state that the opposite seems to be the case, viz. that we find traces of Jesus' rejection of the charge of magic. To my surprise, one of the clearest allusions to magic in the Jesus tradition has featured rather seldom in scholarly discussions: Jesus' words about the finger of God in Luke 11:20 (par. Matt 12:28).<sup>85</sup> Since these words must be taken as referring to Exodus 8 and to the Egyptian magicians who could not compete with the true God,<sup>86</sup> they can only mean: "I am not a magician, but God is working through me." The reference thus betokens just what was suggested above: Jesus had been accused by some people of practicing magic. It also reveals his firm rejection of such an accusation.

This conclusion seems clear, but it is not unproblematic. Much of the discussion in the present study has sought to narrow down the number of alternative interpretations Jesus' contemporaries could choose from in their endeavor to understand what was happening in Jesus' startling deeds. In this respect, our investigation of the thinking about theodicy thinking at that period has indicated that magic would have been the most obvious, or even perhaps the only possible interpretation. The question is: How did Jesus view his deeds, in particularly his healings, if he did not conceive of them as magic? In the light of the particular

---

<sup>84</sup> Cf. Mark 2:23–26 and Jesus' reference to David who "ate the bread of the Presence, which it is not lawful for any but the priests to eat." See S.-O. Back, Jesus of Nazareth and the Sabbath Commandment (Åbo: Åbo Akademi University Press, 1995), 82–86.

<sup>85</sup> Most scholars regard the Lukan phrasing, i.e. "finger," as original, over against Matthew's "Spirit"; see, for example, Meier, A Marginal Jew, 2:410–411; M. Labahn, "Jesu Exorzismen (Q 11,19–20) und die Erkenntnis der ägyptischen Magier (Ex 8,15): Q 11,20 als bewahrtes Beispiel für Schrift-Rezeption Jesu nach der Logienquelle", in The Sayings Source Q and the Historical Jesus, ed. A. Lindemann, BETL 158 (Leuven: Peeters, 2001), 617–633, at 619–629; cf. J. D. G. Dunn, Jesus and the Spirit: A Study of the Religious and Charismatic Experience of Jesus and the First Christians as Reflected in the New Testament (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1997), 44–46.

<sup>86</sup> H. C. Kee, "Magic and Messiah," in Religion, Science, and Magic: In Concert and in Conflict, ed. Neusner et al., 121–141, at 139; Labahn, "Jesu Exorzismen," 629–631; see also Dunn, Jesus Remembered, 460.

perspective of this essay, only two solutions to this enigma exist, both somewhat extraordinary: Either Jesus would have regarded the action—consequence principle as not being (fully) valid, or he would have seen his work as occurring within a framework of God’s forgiveness that did not (always) require sin to be dealt with in the normal acceptable and/or perceivable way.<sup>87</sup> Can we make any reasonable decision between these two? At least some clues to an answer may be within reach.

Basically, it is easier to attribute to Jesus some particular view of forgiveness rather than to posit that he compromised God’s justice (which would be the implication of the substantial loosening of the action—consequence principle).<sup>88</sup> Unless something unambiguously speaks against this presumption, we should stick to it. Here, we must return to the teaching traditions discussed in section 3 above, for they do indeed seem to undermine the presumption: God would let both undeserved good and undeserved bad come to people.

Naturally, good happening to bad people could be explained as resulting from forgiveness. One particular tradition, the maxims Luke attaches to the command to love one’s enemies, appear to state this bluntly:

For he [the Most High] is kind to the ungrateful and the wicked. Be merciful, even as your Father is merciful.<sup>89</sup>

But forgiveness, even an exceptional form of it, cannot explain those traditions which picture bad happening to good people. The scaring and abrupt deaths of those bringing offerings to God and those killed by the tower give the impression that God approves undeservedly harsh punishments (Luke 13). Lazarus does not seem to have deserved his miserable life (Luke 16). And, according to Jesus, the blind man had had no guilt at all (John 9).<sup>90</sup> Do these examples suffice to eliminate the

---

<sup>87</sup> These solutions do not apply generally, i.e. in respect to the contemporaries of Jesus in their endeavor to get an approving grasp of Jesus’ healings. Jesus’ contemporaries cannot be thought to have collectively rescinded the action—consequence principle, nor can they be regarded as having generally recognized (and accepted) a new understanding of forgiveness behind Jesus’ activities.

<sup>88</sup> In other words, I find the solution based on the loosening of the action—consequence principle much more extraordinary than that building on some particular view of forgiveness.

<sup>89</sup> Luke 6:35–36. Matthew also combines the command to love one’s enemies with a similar maxim, “for he [God] makes his sun rise on the evil and on the good, and sends rain on the righteous and on the unrighteous” (Matt 5:45), but appeals then to God’s perfection (5:48).

<sup>90</sup> We can perhaps accept this saying of Jesus in John 9:3 as contributing to the teaching tradition, although the story also incorporates a healing.

explanation in terms of divine forgiveness, by suggesting that Jesus had in fact compromised the action—consequence principle?

The few examples of bad happening to good people that we have pointed out here cannot prove that Jesus himself questioned the principle, especially because the relevant traditions also offer reasons for each individual exception to the principle (or what appears to present an exception). Second, we do not need to trace the origin of all suspicious theodicy found in the teaching traditions back to Jesus' own view of forgiveness. For if we confine ourselves to Jesus' healings, the forgiveness solution works without problems.<sup>91</sup>

We have therefore three alternatives: compromising the action—consequence principle, practicing magic, and working within a specific framework of forgiveness. I believe that the third alternative can explain how Jesus himself saw his healing activity (most clearly, he did not see himself as working as a magician). In the present article, the primary argument in favor of this choice has been the obvious improbability of the other solutions. The strength of this argument, however, is based on the fact that the specific perspective of the article has given us good reasons to limit the alternatives precisely to these three. Hence, while the label of magic would be appropriate on the lips of people critical of Jesus' healings, forgiveness is the best suited to express Jesus' own understanding of the issue. Since however it was not universally perceivable or acceptable, this form of forgiveness would not have been able to deflect the suspicions.

6. Conclusion

The theodicean perspective adopted in this study corroborates earlier scholarly evaluations and shows that Jesus was indeed accused by some of his contemporaries of using magic when he performed healings. Since Jesus himself did not consent to this accusation, but explicitly rejected it, the theodicean perspective also indicates that a distinct understanding of forgiveness was being operative in Jesus' healings, as he himself understood them.<sup>92</sup>

---

<sup>91</sup> In other words, healings are by definition of the type "good happening to bad."

<sup>92</sup> It is impossible here to pursue further the question of how exactly Jesus understood this forgiveness was. But some important clues are discernible precisely in the fact that the form of forgiveness cherished by Jesus would not have been normally perceivable and/or acceptable. If it had not been not distinct (different) and particular, it would be

One final qualification. This discussion has not considered Jesus' exorcisms. In the Judaism of Jesus' time, illnesses were often connected with demons. In some such cases, the traditionally upheld bond between sin and sickness became blurred. Through being possessed by an evil spirit, a person could meet with an illness that was not a result of his or her wrongdoings. The model proposed by the present article is not applicable in such instances but, in my view, remains valid in other contexts.<sup>93</sup> Despite the belief in the activity of evil spirits, sin retained a role in explaining ailments in two ways: (a) diseases and defects were not always seen as connected with spirit possession;<sup>94</sup> (b) culpability could be regarded as a part of the problem, alongside the activity of the spirits.<sup>95</sup> Jesus' exorcisms may have inspired the accusation that he was in league with the prince of demons. However, this does not rule out other kinds of denunciations in other types of situations.<sup>96</sup> difficult to explain why the form of forgiveness in question was not perceived/accepted by people more generally.

---

<sup>93</sup> See e.g. the references in nn. 79–81 above. According to G. H. Twelftree, Jesus reserved exorcist language and technique for the removal of demons. "He does not rebuke sickness"; Twelftree, "Jesus the Exorcist and Ancient Magic," in A Kind of Magic: Understanding Magic in the New Testament and its Religious Environment, ed. Labahn and Peerbolte, 57–86, at 82.

<sup>94</sup> See G. Theissen, Urchristliche Wundergeschichten: Ein Beitrag zur formgeschichtlichen Erforschung der synoptischen Evangelien, SNT 8 (Gütersloh: Gütersloher Verlagshaus Mohn, 1974), 94–102; U.B. Müller, "Krankheit III," TRE 19 (1990): 684–686, at 684–685.

<sup>95</sup> Kee, Medicine, Miracle and Magic, 21–26; J. J. Rousseau, "Jesus, an Exorcist of a Kind," in Society of Biblical Literature 1993 Seminar Papers, ed. E. H. Lovering, SBLSP 32 (Atlanta, GA: Scholars Press, 1993), 129–153, at 142, 150.

<sup>96</sup> This article is based on a paper read at the joint meetings of the Society of Biblical Literature International and the European Association of Biblical Studies in Groningen summer 2004. A shorter and earlier version of the article was published as "Jesus and Magic: Theodicean Perspectives to the Issue," in A Kind of Magic: Understanding Magic in the New Testament and its Religious Environment, ed. Labahn and Lietaert Peerbolte, 43–56.

JESUS' "RHETORIC": THE RISE AND FALL OF "THE KINGDOM OF GOD"

JAMES M. ROBINSON

It may seem inappropriate to speak of the rhetoric of an Aramaic-speaking, unlettered blue-collar worker, a peasant from a Galilean village. The nearest Jesus came to writing was to scratch in the ground while waiting to see if anyone would consider oneself so free from sin as to cast the first stone at the woman taken in adultery. But even this story is a secondary addition to the New Testament, first attested in the fifth century.

The evangelists themselves wrote more than half a century after Jesus' public ministry. By that time the original disciples, made up largely of illiterate peasants and fishermen, had been replaced by second-generation Christians, at least a few of whom were educated enough to write the gospels in Greek. They would unconsciously have conceived of Jesus more like themselves than was actually the case—the first in the long line of those who imagine Jesus in their own image. The result was a Jesus learned in the scriptures. But such a Jesus probably did not exist in reality.

When one turns to the oldest layer of sayings ascribed to Jesus in the Sayings Gospel Q, instead of scribal learnedness in the Hebrew scriptures one finds a village peasant's acute and devout insight into nature. Indeed, he learned about God everywhere, for he saw it all: Sunshine and rain-showers sent to the bad as well as the good;<sup>1</sup> the contrast of a speck to a beam;<sup>2</sup> a tree known by its fruit (figs from thorns? grapes from thistles?);<sup>3</sup> houses built on rock or sand;<sup>4</sup> a reed shaken by the wind;<sup>5</sup> sheep among wolves;<sup>6</sup> the dust on one's feet;<sup>7</sup> the lamp on a lamp-stand;<sup>8</sup> the killing of sparrows worth only a dime a dozen;<sup>9</sup> the

---

<sup>1</sup> Q 6:35.

<sup>2</sup> Q 6:41–42.

<sup>3</sup> Q 6:43–44.

<sup>4</sup> Q 6:47–49.

<sup>5</sup> Q 7:24.

<sup>6</sup> Q 10:3.

<sup>7</sup> Q 10:11.

<sup>8</sup> Q 11:33.

<sup>9</sup> Q 12:6.

hairs on your head;<sup>10</sup> ravens and lilies that do nothing, trusting in God to care for them;<sup>11</sup> God clothing so beautifully the grass of the field, there today and tomorrow thrown into the oven;<sup>12</sup> the flame-red evening sky pointing to good weather, but a flame-red morning sky pointing to wintry weather;<sup>13</sup> the tiny mustard seed or pinch of yeast becoming all out of proportion to the insignificant beginning;<sup>14</sup> salt becoming insipid;<sup>15</sup> the one lost sheep and the ninety-nine left in the mountains;<sup>16</sup> the flash of lightning;<sup>17</sup> vultures circling around a corpse.<sup>18</sup>

In fact, a saying in Q made the same distinction I am making between Jesus and Jewish scholars:<sup>19</sup>

I praise you, Father, Lord of heaven and earth, for you hid these things from sages and the learned, and disclosed them to children.

Jesus seems to have taught primarily by telling stories (what we call parables), and repeating memorable one-liners, like “turn the other cheek.” So modern theologians have had to focus on the only thing they could get, namely one rhetorical metaphor, “the kingdom of God,” ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ θεοῦ.

A stock in trade in our discipline is that, since Jesus did not define what he meant by the kingdom of God, it must have been so common in his day as to need no explanation. His illiterate, Aramaic-speaking audiences would have known what he was talking about, so he did not need to explain.

Everybody of course believes that the high God one worships rules everything. The Hebrew scriptures are full of it. So when we turn to Jesus’ favorite rhetorical metaphor, ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ θεοῦ, we find Jewish literature of the time full of it, right?

Wrong! It is almost non-existent! For when we focus more pedantically on ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ θεοῦ, the situation seems to be as follows:

---

<sup>10</sup> Q 12:7.

<sup>11</sup> Q 12:24, 27.

<sup>12</sup> Q 12:28.

<sup>13</sup> Q 12:54–55.

<sup>14</sup> Q 13:18–19, 20–21.

<sup>15</sup> Q 14:34–35.

<sup>16</sup> Q 15:4–5a, 7.

<sup>17</sup> Q 17:23–24.

<sup>18</sup> Q 17:37.

<sup>19</sup> Q 10:21.

1. The Kingdom of God in Early Judaism

The Septuagint never ever makes use of the metaphor ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ θεοῦ!<sup>20</sup> The nearest it comes is included in the following short list:

Ps 22:28, "the Lord's (is) the kingdom," τοῦ κυρίου ἡ βασιλεία<sup>21</sup>

Ps 45:6, "the scepter of your kingdom," ἡ ῥάβδος τῆς βασιλείας σου<sup>22</sup>

Tob 13:1, "his kingdom," ἡ βασιλεία αὐτοῦ<sup>23</sup>

Wis 10:10, "kingdom of God" (without articles), βασιλεία θεοῦ<sup>24</sup>

Dan 3:33 bis, "his kingdom," ἡ βασιλεία αὐτοῦ,<sup>25</sup> plus "(is an) eternal kingdom," βασιλεία αἰώνιος<sup>26</sup>

Theodotion's Greek translation of Daniel provides one further instance:

Dan 4:34 bis, "his kingdom," ἡ βασιλεία αὐτοῦ<sup>27</sup>

Greek sapiential Jewish literature of the period has ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ θεοῦ two further times: The Sentences of Sextus 311; Philo, De Specialibus Legibus 4.164.<sup>28</sup>

The use of ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ θεοῦ in the Pseudepigrapha is similarly minimal. There is only one instance of "the kingdom of God," ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ θεοῦ,<sup>29</sup> and one occurrence of "kingdom of the heavens," ἡ βασιλεία τῶν οὐρανῶν.<sup>30</sup> Now the Pseudepigrapha are a collection of Jewish texts from around the time of Jesus that is about as large as the whole of the New Testament.<sup>31</sup> So this limitation to one instance

<sup>20</sup> Edwin Hatch and Henry A. Redpath, A Concordance to the Septuagint and the other Greek Versions of the Old Testament (including the Apocryphal Books) in three volumes (Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1897; reprint Grand Rapids, Mich. Baker Book House, 1987), 192–194.

<sup>21</sup> Ps 21 (actually 22):28, NRSV "dominion belongs to the Lord."

<sup>22</sup> Ps 44 (actually 45):6, NRSV "Your royal scepter."

<sup>23</sup> Tob 13:1, "his kingdom."

<sup>24</sup> Wis 10:10, NRSV "the kingdom of God."

<sup>25</sup> Hatch and Redpath, Concordance, Dan 3:33 = NRSV 4:3, "His kingdom... his sovereignty."

<sup>26</sup> Hatch and Redpath, Concordance, Dan 3:33 = NRSV 4:3, "His kingdom is an everlasting kingdom."

<sup>27</sup> Hatch and Redpath, Concordance, Dan 4:34 = NRSV 4:34, "...his kingdom endures from generation to generation."

<sup>28</sup> Burton L. Mack, "The Kingdom Sayings in Mark," Foundations & Facets Forum 3, no. 1 (March, 1987): 3–47: "2.2 Wisdom and the kingdom of God," 13–17.

<sup>29</sup> Pss. Sol. 17.3.

<sup>30</sup> 2 Bar. 11.2.

<sup>31</sup> Albert-Marie Denis, Concordance grecque des Pseudépigraphes d'Ancien Testament (Louvain-la-Neuve: Université catholique de Louvain, 1987), vii: "La dimension de la

each of kingdom of God and kingdom of heaven is striking. Where is the metaphor that is supposed to be so common that every peasant knows what it means?

This rapid survey of Jewish texts around the time of Jesus produces the surprising result that the metaphor barely existed, at best isolated in such scattered texts that neither Jesus nor other villagers in Galilee would have known them. Perhaps Jesus never defined the metaphor simply because he was not a professor.

2. The Kingdom of God in Early Gospels

The following statistical survey of early Christian usage shows that the metaphor ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ θεοῦ suddenly emerges in full force in collections of Jesus' sayings, as really the only thing approaching theological language in his vocabulary; but then, apart from the gospels, it rapidly fades from prominence. One could refer to this odd statistical phenomenon as the rise and fall of the kingdom of God.

The distinctions within the database are not important for our present purposes: Often the complete metaphor ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ θεοῦ occurs, but at times it is reduced to just ἡ βασιλεία, where the context makes it clear that the reference is to God rather than to some human ruler. And sometimes the metaphor is modified to ἡ βασιλεία τῶν οὐρανῶν (distinctive of Matthew), ἡ βασιλεία σου (in the Lord's Prayer), ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ πατρὸς (prominent in the Gospel of Thomas), or ἡ βασιλεία αὐτοῦ. None of these fluctuations alters materially the basic insight into the sudden emergence of references to God's kingdom in sayings ascribed to Jesus.

Let me summarize the striking data for references to God's kingdom in the five Gospels containing most of the sayings of Jesus: Q, Thomas, Mark, Matthew, and Luke:

Q, 12 occurrences; Thomas, 20 occurrences; Mark, 13 occurrences; Matthew, 29 occurrences not taken from Q or Mark, plus 11 taken over from Q and 8 from Mark, a grand total for Matthew of 48 occurrences; Luke, 12 occurrences not taken over from Q or Mark, plus 13 taken over from Q and 7 from Mark, a grand total for Luke of 32 occurrences.

---

Concordance (134,000 mots) est comparable à celle du Nouveau Testament (137,000 mots)."

The total in these five gospels is 86 separate occurrences, not counting borrowings from Q and Mark, or, including such borrowings, 125 occurrences. Thus the vast majority of references to God's kingdom at the time of Jesus are to be found in sayings ascribed to him in these five gospels.

There is really only one historical explanation for the sudden explosion of kingdom language between the rare usage in Judaism and the rare usage in Christianity, apart from the five gospels that use Jesus' language: ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ θεοῦ must have been a frequent metaphor used by Jesus. For when one turns to sayings of Jesus, the statistics are dramatically different. For suddenly "the kingdom of God" is everywhere!

2.1. The Gospel of Thomas

Let me begin with the Gospel of Thomas, for here the references to God's kingdom are the most dense for any single text in existence. It occurs 20 times in this short tractate of 114 sayings. Here are the specifics: In the Coptic translation, "of God" does not occur, though the reference is to God's kingdom. Instead, "of heaven" occurs twice, "of the Father" 6 times, "of my Father" once, and in the other instances God is implied. In the Greek fragments "of God" occurs twice where it is absent from the Coptic translation, suggesting that "of God" was probably much more common in the Greek original. The Coptic translator weeded out "of God," perhaps since in Gnosticism "God" could refer to the known bad God as well as to the unknown good God.

2.2. The Sayings Gospel Q

"The kingdom of the God," ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ θεοῦ, occurs 12 times in the Sayings Gospel Q.<sup>32</sup> In addition, Q once reads "your kingdom," ἡ βασιλεία σου,<sup>33</sup> once "his kingdom," τὴν βασιλείαν αὐτοῦ.<sup>34</sup> Thus there are a total of 14 references to God's kingdom in the Sayings Gospel Q.

Half of the Q sayings, 6 out of 12, are among the 20 instances in the Gospel of Thomas.

<sup>32</sup> Q 6:20; 7:28; 10:9; 11:20; 11:52; 13:18; 13:20; 13:28; 16:16; 17:20; 17:20; 17:21.

<sup>33</sup> Q 11:2b.

<sup>34</sup> Q 12:31.

2.3. The Q Sayings in other Gospels

Matthew replaces “the kingdom of the God,” ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ θεοῦ, with “the kingdom of the heavens” in 8 of the 12 Q cases,<sup>35</sup> once retains Q’s “the kingdom of the God,” ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ θεοῦ,<sup>36</sup> and in 3 cases does not have the Q saying as such.<sup>37</sup> Once Matthew may even replace Q’s “of him” with “of the God,”<sup>38</sup> and once follows Q in reading “the kingdom of you.”<sup>39</sup>

Luke retains “the kingdom of the God,” ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ θεοῦ, in 11 of these 12 Q cases,<sup>40</sup> but once changes “the kingdom of the God,” ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ θεοῦ, to read “the key of the knowledge,”<sup>41</sup> much like the Gospel of Thomas, which reads “the keys of knowledge.”<sup>42</sup> Luke once reads with Q simply “the kingdom of him,”<sup>43</sup> once follows Q in reading “the kingdom of you.”<sup>44</sup>

The Gospel of Thomas has 6 of the Q instances, reading “the kingdom of the heavens” in 2 of these cases,<sup>45</sup> “the kingdom of the Father” in one case,<sup>46</sup> “will know the kingdom” in one case,<sup>47</sup> and both “the kingdom” and “the kingdom of the God,” ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ θεοῦ, in one Saying.<sup>48</sup>

Mark shares only one instance of “the kingdom of God,” ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ θεοῦ, with Q.<sup>49</sup> In the Gospel of Thomas, the same parable uses “the kingdom of heaven.”<sup>50</sup>

<sup>35</sup> Matt 5:3 from Q 6:20; Matt 11:11 from Q 7:28; Matt 10:7 from Q 10:9; Matt 23:13 from Q 11:52; Matt 13:31 from Q 13:18; Matt 13:33 from Q 13:20; Matt 8:11 from Q 13:28; Matt 11:12 from Q 16:16.

<sup>36</sup> Matt 12:28 from Q 11:20.

<sup>37</sup> Q 17:20; 17:20; 17:21.

<sup>38</sup> Matt 6:33 from Q 12:31.

<sup>39</sup> Matt 6:10 from Q 11:2b.

<sup>40</sup> Luke 6:20; 7:28; 10:9; 11:20; 13:18, 20, 28; 16:16; 17:20 bis, 21.

<sup>41</sup> Luke 11:52.

<sup>42</sup> Gos. Thom. 39:1.

<sup>43</sup> Luke 12:31.

<sup>44</sup> Luke 11:2b.

<sup>45</sup> Gos. Thom. 20; 54.

<sup>46</sup> Gos. Thom. 96:1.

<sup>47</sup> Gos. Thom. 46:2.

<sup>48</sup> Gos. Thom. 3:1, 3.

<sup>49</sup> Mark 4:30 and Q 13:18.

<sup>50</sup> Gos. Thom. 20.

2.4. The Kingdom of God in Mark

"The kingdom of God" ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ θεοῦ, occurs 13 times in Mark spoken by Jesus,<sup>51</sup> and once by the evangelist himself.<sup>52</sup> Matthew replaces "the kingdom of the God," ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ θεοῦ, with "the kingdom of the heavens" in 6 of these 13 Markan cases.<sup>53</sup> Once Matthew substitutes "the kingdom of him,"<sup>54</sup> once "life,"<sup>55</sup> once "the kingdom of my Father,"<sup>56</sup> and once Matthew retains Mark's "the kingdom of the God," ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ θεοῦ.<sup>57</sup> Matthew lacks completely the Markan verse in 3 cases.<sup>58</sup>

Luke retains "the kingdom of the God," ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ θεοῦ, in 7 of these 13 Markan cases.<sup>59</sup> Luke lacks completely 6 of these cases.<sup>60</sup>

2.5. The Kingdom of God only in Matthew

Matthew has additional instances of "the kingdom of heaven," once spoken by John,<sup>61</sup> 24 times by Jesus.<sup>62</sup> Matthew has 5 instances of "kingdom" with "of heaven" understood,<sup>63</sup> 3 with "his" (Jesus'),<sup>64</sup> one with "of their Father."<sup>65</sup>

<sup>51</sup> Mark 1:15; 4:11; 4:26; 4:30; 9:1; 9:47; 10:14; 10:15; 10:23; 10:24; 10:25; 12:34; 14:25.

<sup>52</sup> Mark 15:43.

<sup>53</sup> Matt 4:17 from Mark 1:15; Matt 13:11 from Mark 4:11; Matt 13:31 from Mark 4:30; Matt 19:14 from Mark 10:14; Matt 18:3 from Mark 10:15; Matt 19:23 from Mark 10:23.

<sup>54</sup> Matt 16:28 from Mark 9:1.

<sup>55</sup> Matt 18:9 from Mark 9:47, where in Mark 9:43, 45 "life" is also used in parallel sayings.

<sup>56</sup> Matt 26:29 from Mark 14:25.

<sup>57</sup> Matt 19:24 from Mark 10:25.

<sup>58</sup> Mark 4:26; 10:24; 12:34.

<sup>59</sup> Luke 8:10 from Mark 4:11; Luke 13:18 from Mark 4:30; Luke 9:27 from Mark 9:1; Luke 18:16 from Mark 10:14; Luke 18:17 from Mark 10:15; Luke 18:24 from Mark 10:23; Luke 18:25 from Mark 10:25.

<sup>60</sup> Mark 1:15; 4:26; 9:47; 10:24; 12:34; 14:25.

<sup>61</sup> Matt 3:2.

<sup>62</sup> Matt 5:10; 5:19; 5:19; 5:20; 7:21; 7:21; 8:12; 13:19; 13:24; 13:44; 13:45; 13:47; 13:52; 16:19; 18:1; 18:4; 18:23; 19:12; 20:1; 21:31; 21:43; 22:2; 24:14; 25:1.

<sup>63</sup> Matt 3:23; 9:35; 13:19; 13:38; 25:34.

<sup>64</sup> Matt 13:41; 16:28; 20:21.

<sup>65</sup> Matt 13:43.

2.6. The Kingdom of God only in Luke/Acts

Luke only has “the kingdom of the God,” ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ θεοῦ, 13 times,<sup>66</sup> “the kingdom of him” once,<sup>67</sup> “the kingdom of me” once,<sup>68</sup> and “kingdom” once.<sup>69</sup>

In Acts, Luke has “the kingdom of God,” ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ θεοῦ, 6 times,<sup>70</sup> “the kingdom” twice.<sup>71</sup>

3. The Kingdom of God in the Rest of the New Testament

After this outpouring of the metaphor of God’s kingdom in the five gospels primarily responsible for sayings that go back to Jesus, it is remarkable to note the way the metaphor recedes in the rest of the New Testament. By way of summary: The Gospel of John adds only 5 instances, to which Paul adds 8, the Deutero-Pauline Epistles 5, Hebrews one, James one, Revelation one. That is to say, the rest of the New Testament, where the language of Jesus is largely absent, adds only 18 occurrences. This means that in the 246 Nestle-Aland pages of the synoptic gospels God’s kingdom occurs 93 times, whereas in the remaining 334 pages only 18 times.

The detailed statistics follow:

The Gospel of John has “the kingdom of God,” ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ θεοῦ, twice,<sup>72</sup> “my kingdom,” ἡ βασιλεία μου, three times.<sup>73</sup>

Paul has “the kingdom of God,” ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ θεοῦ, 2 times,<sup>74</sup> “kingdom of God,” βασιλεία θεοῦ, three times,<sup>75</sup> “God’s kingdom,” θεοῦ βασιλεία, once,<sup>76</sup> “the kingdom,” ἡ βασιλεία, once,<sup>77</sup> “his own kingdom,” ἡ ἑαυτοῦ βασιλεία, once.<sup>78</sup>

The Deutero-Pauline Epistles have “the kingdom of God,” ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ θεοῦ, 2 times,<sup>79</sup> “the kingdom of Christ and God,” ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ

<sup>66</sup> Luke 4:43; 8:1; 9:2, 60; 9:11; 10:11; 13:29; 14:15; 18:29; 19:11; 21:31; 22:16, 18.

<sup>67</sup> Luke 1:33; 6:62; 9:60; 10:11; 13:29; 14:15; 18:29; 19:11; 21:31; 22:16; 22:18.

<sup>68</sup> Luke 22:30.

<sup>69</sup> Luke 22:29.

<sup>70</sup> Acts 1:3; 8:12; 14:22; 18:8; 28:23; 28:31.

<sup>71</sup> Acts 1:6; 20:25.

<sup>72</sup> John 3:3, 5.

<sup>73</sup> John 18:36.

<sup>74</sup> Rom 14:17; 1 Cor 2:20.

<sup>75</sup> 1 Cor 6:10; 15:50; Gal 5:21.

<sup>76</sup> 1 Cor 6:9.

<sup>77</sup> 1 Cor 15:24.

<sup>78</sup> 1 Thess 2:12.

<sup>79</sup> Col 4:11; 2 Thess 1:5.

Χριστοῦ καὶ θεοῦ, once,<sup>80</sup> "his kingdom," ἡ βασιλεία αὐτοῦ, once,<sup>81</sup> "his heavenly kingdom," ἡ βασιλεία αὐτοῦ ἡ ἐπουράνια, once.<sup>82</sup>

Hebrews has "your kingdom," ἡ βασιλεία σου, once, quoting Ps 45:6.<sup>83</sup>

James has "heirs of the kingdom," κληρόνομοι τῆς βασιλείας, once.<sup>84</sup>

Revelation has "the kingdom of our God," ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ θεοῦ ἡμῶν, once.<sup>85</sup>

4. The Kingdom of God in the Second Century

Throughout the second and following centuries, "the kingdom of God" ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ θεοῦ, continues only the insignificant role it had in the bulk of the New Testament. What rose to prominence so dramatically in the case of sayings ascribed to Jesus fades from view equally rapidly.

The usage of kingdom terminology in the second century has been analyzed by E. Ferguson, where detailed documentation is available. Here only his basic conclusion needs to be cited:<sup>86</sup>

The overwhelming usage of "kingdom" in second-century Christian literature is eschatological. G.W.H. Lampe states that although the variety of meanings given the phrase "kingdom of God" in patristic literature is great, commonest of all is the idea of the kingdom as a present spiritual reality. This may be true for patristic literature as a whole, but it is clearly wrong for the second century, where the meaning is rare. The kingdom is almost uniformly future, heavenly, and eternal.

The earliest non-canonical documents set the pattern of a predominantly futuristic understanding of the kingdom.

Ferguson does note one striking exception, the Gospel of Thomas:<sup>87</sup>

The Gospel of Thomas (Coptic) presents a bold contrast to the view of the kingdom found thus far. Aside from sayings and parables similar to those in the Synoptics on the kingdom (sayings 22, 54, 57, 96–99, 107,

<sup>80</sup> Eph 5:5.

<sup>81</sup> 2 Tim 4:1.

<sup>82</sup> 2 Tim 4:18.

<sup>83</sup> Heb 1:8.

<sup>84</sup> James 2:5.

<sup>85</sup> Rev 12:10.

<sup>86</sup> E. Ferguson, "The Terminology of Kingdom in the Second Century," Studia Patristica vol. 17, ed. Elizabeth A. Livingstone (Oxford: Pergamon, 1982), 669–676, at 670.

<sup>87</sup> Ferguson, "The Terminology of Kingdom in the Second Century," 672.

109, of which only 99 sounds possibly future, although 57 could have an eschatological element), this collection explicitly rejects the heavenly view of the kingdom in favor of a present, pervasive but invisible power (3, 113). To use modern terminology, the kingdom is existential, not eschatological.

That is to say, the Gospel of Thomas fits into the first-century usage!

There is another Nag Hammadi tractate that also fits into the first-century usage, though not mentioned by Ferguson, namely a dialogue of the Risen Jesus with James and Peter: The Apocryphon of James, Nag Hammadi Codex I (the Jung Codex), Tractate 2. There are 13 references to the present kingdom, 2 as the kingdom of God, 8 as the kingdom of heaven, 3 simply as the kingdom.

5. The Kingdom of God in Jesus' Own Usage

Of course not all the instances of the kingdom of God in Q, Thomas, Mark, Matthew, and Luke go back to the historical Jesus. Many were added by the disciples and evangelists. But when one turns to the question of what kingdom sayings may well go back to Jesus, there tends to be considerable agreement.

Helmut Merklein perhaps qualifies as the leading authority on Jesus' use of the metaphor kingdom of God, thanks to his two books devoted to this topic, each reprinted in three editions.<sup>88</sup> He reached the following conclusion, to quote the latest:<sup>89</sup>

The logia or texts in which "God's 'basileia'" appears as an active, dynamic entity may belong to the oldest way of speech, from the point of view of the history of tradition (and thus most likely to be authentic). Alongside the parables (Mark 4:26–29 [the parable of the seed growing secretly]; 4:30–32 par Matt 13:31–32, Luke 13:18–19 [the parable of the mustard seed]; Luke 13: 20–21 par Matt 13:33 [the parable of the leaven] and the first beatitude [Luke 6:20b par Matt 5:3]), the type of sentence attested especially in Q is to be counted, which connects the ‘basileia’ as subject with a verb of motion (Luke 10:9 par Matt 10:7; Luke 11:2 par Matt 6:10; Luke 11:20 par Matt 12:28; Luke 16:16<sup>ba</sup> par Matt 11:12a; cf. Mark 1:15; 9:1).

<sup>88</sup> Helmut Merklein, Die Gottesherrschaft als Handlungsprinzip: Untersuchung zur Ethik Jesu, FzB 34 (Würzburg: Echter, 3rd edn, 1984); idem, Jesu Botschaft von der Gottesherrschaft: Eine Skizze, SBT 111 (Stuttgart: Katholisches Bibelwerk, 3rd edn, 1989).

<sup>89</sup> Helmut Merklein, Jesu Botschaft von der Gottesherrschaft: Eine Skizze, 3rd ed., 23: "Zur traditionsgeschichtlich ältesten (und damit am ehesten authentischen) Sprechweise dürften die Logien beziehungsweise Texte gehören, in denen die "'basileia' Gottes" als eine aktiv-dynamische Größe erscheint. Dazu ist neben den Gleichnissen (Mk 4,26–29.30–32 par; Lk 13,18f.20f par Mt 13,31f.33) und der ersten Seligpreisung (Lk 6,20b par Mt 5,3) der vor allem in Q belegte Satztyp zu rechnen, der die 'basileia' als Subjekt mit einem Verbum der Bewegung verbindet (Lk 10,9 par Mt 10,7; Lk 11,2 par Mt 6,10; Lk 11,20 par Mt 12,28; Lk 16,16ba par Mt 11,12a; vgl. Mk 1,15; 9,1)."

Heinz Schürmann summarized with approval Merklein’s position:<sup>90</sup>

H. Merklein, Handlungsprinzip, speaks of the kingdom “standing out” [i.e. future] and “standing in” [i.e. present] “in Jesus,” and rightly distances himself from those who do not deny its “standing in,” but want to see, after all, only “signs” of the coming kingdom as present.

That is to say, the kingdom is present in more than sign only. In response Merklein pointed out with satisfaction that Schürmann came “to a similar result with regard to the ipsissima verba in the Q tradition.”<sup>91</sup>

If one may move to the other end of the theological spectrum, Burton Mack accepts as the most likely candidates for authenticity precisely the same four from the Sayings Gospel Q that Merklein had proposed: Q 10:9; 11:2; 11:20; 16:16.<sup>92</sup>

Q 10:9: And cure the sick there, and say to them: God’s reign has reached unto you.

Q 11:2: When you pray, say: Father—may your name be kept holy!—let your reign come:

<sup>90</sup> Heinz Schürmann, “Das Zeugnis der Redenquelle für die Basileia-Verkündigung Jesu: Eine traditionsgeschichtliche Untersuchung,” in Logia: Les Paroles de Jésus—The Sayings of Jesus, ed. Joël Delobel, BETL 59 (Leuven: Peeters and Leuven University Press, 1982 [1983]), 121–200, at 185 n. 265: “H. Merklein, Handlungsprinzip, 166, redet von ‘Aus-Stand’ und ‘Ein-Stand’ der Basileia ‘in Jesus’ und setzt sich mit Recht ab von denen, die den ‘Einstand’ derselben nicht leugnen, aber als gegenwärtig doch nur ‘Zeichen’ des kommenden Reiches sehen wollen...”

<sup>91</sup> Cited by Helmut Merklein, Jesu Botschaft von der Gottesherrschaft: Eine Skizze, 3rd edn, 23 n. 36.

<sup>92</sup> Burton L. Mack, “The Kingdom Sayings in Mark,” 44–45: “None of the kingdom sayings in Mark is to be judged authentic.... [45] This means that the data in Mark is not a sufficient basis for deciding the question of Jesus’ use of the term kingdom of God. The analyses of both Q and the Gospel of Thomas will have to be taken very seriously. That is because each uses the term kingdom of God in ways that correspond to pre-Markan traditions. In all three cases (pre-Mark, early Q, Gospel of Thomas) the apocalyptic hypothesis must be set aside. Early usage will have to be determined by studying the overlaps among the three textual traditions. On the basis of the analysis of the sayings in Mark it is obvious that the Q texts will be crucial in the final adjudication. The Markan spotlight falls especially on Q 10:9; 11:2; 11:20; and 16:16.” Although Mack does not refer to Merklein, not even in his appended bibliography, dependence on Merklein would seem to be probable.

Q 11:20: But if it is by the finger of God that I cast out demons, then there has come upon you God's reign.

Q 16:16: The law and the prophets were until John. From then on the kingdom of God is violated and the violent plunder it.

In the case of Q 16:16, the Lukan alternative is considerably more appealing, and so it may be what is presupposed as the Q reading when "Q 16:16" is included: NRSV "...since then the good news of the kingdom of God is proclaimed, and everyone tries to enter it by force." But the very fact that the Matthean reading is the lectio difficilior, and may still betray an allusion to the beheading of John, suggests that the Matthean reading is that of Q. The concept of "evangelizing" the kingdom is distinctively Lukan (Luke 4:43; 8:1; Acts 8:12). So 16:16 it is not included in the following discussion of the sayings in Q that have the highest chance of going back to Jesus himself.

The concept of these sayings characterizing the kingdom as an "active, dynamic entity," to use Merklein's language, suggests that the translation "God reigning" is more appropriate than the conventional translation "kingdom of God."

This active, dynamic meaning is spelled out in somewhat more detail by Dieter Lührmann's pupil Peter Kristin. For he speaks of what is present in the sense of what happens at individual points of time:<sup>93</sup>

They [the disciples] put these sayings into practice and understood themselves, on the basis of these performatively functioning sayings, and on the basis of being commissioned by Jesus, as messengers of the kingdom of God that is punctually present in their encounter with the "children of peace" and in the healings that accompany this encounter.

---

<sup>93</sup> Peter Kristen, "Nachfolge Leben: Drei Modelle von Kreuzesnachfolge in Q und Markus," in Text und Geschichte: Facetten theologischen Arbeitens aus dem Freundes- und Schülerkreis. Dieter Lührmann zum 60. Geburtstag, ed. Stefan Maser and Egbert Schlarb, MThSt 50 (Marburg: N. G. Elwert, 1999), 89–106, at 92, 93, 95: "Sie praktizierten diese Worte und verstanden sich, aufgrund dieser performativ wirkenden Worte und der Beauftragung durch Jesus, als Boten des in ihrer Begegnung mit den 'Kindern des Friedens' und in den diese Begegnung begleitenden Heilungen punktuell gegenwärtigen Gottesreiches. . . . Die Boten verstehen sich als legitime Nachfolgerinnen und Nachfolger Jesu und bringen denen, die sie aufgrund ihres Friedensgrüßes aufnehmen, die Gegenwart des Gottesreiches (10,9), indem sie das verkündigen und tun, was Jesus (selbst getan und) ihnen aufgetragen hat. Das Gottesreich ist in ihrem Wirken angebahnt und in den ihnen aufgetragenen Heilungen und der Sphäre des Heils präsent und erfahrbar. Dieses Heil entwickelt sich als Folge der gastlichen Aufnahme in ein Haus. In ihrem ganzen Leben stellen sie die Prinzipien des Gottesreiches dar, wie sie in Q<sup>1</sup> erkennbar werden. Gewalt- und besitzlos (10,4) leben sie die Realität der Gottesherrschaft paradigmatisch, wie es in Q 12,31 ausgedrückt ist, im Vertrauen auf die Fürsorge des Vaters. . . . Die charakteristische Vorstellung des punktuell schon präsenten Gottesreiches als einer alternativen Lebensform ist das Movens der Boten, die Sendung durch Jesus ihre Legitimation für ein Leben nach seinen Worten."

The messengers understand themselves as legitimate followers of Jesus, and bring the presence of the kingdom of God to those who take them in on the basis of their greeting of peace (Q 10:9), in that they proclaim and do what Jesus (himself has done and) commissioned them to do. The kingdom of God is prepared in their deeds, and is present and can be experienced as the sphere of salvation in the healings with which they are commissioned. This salvation develops as the consequence of the hospitable reception into a house. In their whole life they present the principles of the kingdom of God, as it is recognizable in Q<sup>1</sup>. Without using force and without having possessions (Q 10:4), they live the reality of God’s reign paradigmatically, as it is expressed in Q 12:31, as trust in the care of the Father.

The characteristic concept of the kingdom of God, as an alternative life style that is already punctually present, is the moving force behind the messengers, and their being sent by Jesus their legitimation for living according to his sayings.

That is to say, what we would in modern terminology refer to as “religious experience” was referred to by Jesus as “God reigning.” But by Paul’s time, or, as Luke would put it, after Pentecost, Jesus’ use of ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ θεοῦ to refer to “religious experience” seems to have been lost from sight. For religious experience was now referred to as the activity of God’s “Spirit.” More concretely, such things as healings and exorcisms, which Jesus had explained as “God reigning,” would now fall into the category of “spiritual gifts,” πνευμάτικα, as Paul so eloquently states:<sup>94</sup>

To each is given the manifestation of the Spirit for the common good. To one is given through the Spirit the utterance of wisdom, and to another the utterance of knowledge according to the same Spirit, to another faith by the same Spirit, to another gifts of healing by the one Spirit, to another the working of miracles, to another prophecy, to another the discernment of spirits, to another various kinds of tongues, to another the interpretation of tongues. All these are activated by one and the same Spirit, who allots to each one individually just as the Spirit chooses.

Thus, on a larger semantic field, the shift away from ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ θεοῦ and its replacement by πνεῦμα as the name for religious experience would clear the way for another meaning for ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ θεοῦ, in a different semantic field—before the metaphor gradually faded into insignificance, replaced by emerging Christian doctrine.

<sup>94</sup> 1 Cor 12:7–11.

6. The Kingdom of God as a Place or Community

There are very many references, especially in the gospels, to ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ θεοῦ as a place or community “into” which one can “come”<sup>95</sup> or “in which” one finds oneself.<sup>96</sup> This usage of ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ θεοῦ to refer to a place or community is no doubt responsible for the standard modern translation, “the kingdom of God.”

This shift in meaning for ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ θεοῦ from religious experience to a place or community may also be understood on a broader semantic field: The original group of those who had been with Jesus in Galilee was designated “disciples” or “apostles” or “the twelve.” But later, when the Christian group had grown into a somewhat larger community, it lacked a name for itself.

The LXX term used for Jewish assemblies held elsewhere than at the temple, συναγωγή, seemed inappropriate. For that is the name of the place where Christians had been punished already by the pre-Christian Paul.<sup>97</sup> Jewish Christians had even become ἀποσυνάγωγος, “de-synagoguized,”<sup>98</sup> excommunicated. As a result, Christians could even refer to the Jewish meetings as the “synagogue of Satan.”<sup>99</sup>

The other LXX term for an assembly, ἐκκλησία, only gradually caught on. It occurs only three times in Matthew,<sup>100</sup> all in late additions, by which time the Q community had merged into the Pauline “church.” The designation ἐκκλησία never occurs in the other gospels.

This is particularly striking in the case of Luke, since “church” was clearly in his vocabulary. For it occurs 23 times in Acts! Thus, from Luke’s point of view, the church began at Pentecost. Jesus and his disciples did not constitute the “church.” This seems to have been the view of the other gospels as well.

Paul uses the term ἐκκλησία 44 times, and 18 more occurrences are found in the Deutero-Pauline Epistles. It occurs twice in Hebrews, once in James, 3 times in Third John, and 20 times in Revelation.

<sup>95</sup> Matt 5:20; 7:21; 18:3; 19:23, 24; 21:31; Mark 9:47; 10:15, 23, 24, 25; Luke 18:24, 25; 23:42; John 3:5; Acts 14:22; Col 1:13; 4:11; 1 Thess 2:12; 2 Tim 4:18.

<sup>96</sup> Matt 5:19 bis; 8:11; 11:11; 13:43; 18:1, 4; 20:21; 26:29; Mark 14:25; Luke 7:28; 13:28, 29; 14:15; 22:16, 30; Eph 5:5.

<sup>97</sup> Acts 22:19; 26:11.

<sup>98</sup> John 9:22; 12:42.

<sup>99</sup> Rev 2:9; 3:9.

<sup>100</sup> Matt 16:16; 18:17; 18:17.

One must infer that the evangelists seem to have made use of "kingdom" to refer to the group of Jesus' Galilean disciples as a community that one could "enter" or be "in," so as to leave the term "church" to refer to the Jerusalem "church" and the Gentile church beyond.

This is somewhat similar to the situation with regard to the title "Christians," Χριστιανοί. For Acts reports that it was first in the Gentile church of Antioch founded by Barnabas and Paul that the designation "Christians" came to be used.<sup>101</sup> It is then put on the lips of Agrippa toward the end of Acts,<sup>102</sup> and recurs once in First Peter.<sup>103</sup> Thus it seems to have been surprisingly rare in the first century.

Before ἐκκλησία and Χριστιανοί became common, some equivalent had to be developed. The "Way," ὁ ὁδός, served this purpose, in which meaning it is used 8 times in Acts.<sup>104</sup>

The "poor," οἱ πτωχοί, seems also to have served this purpose. For the Sermon in Q began, no doubt intentionally, with a Beatitude blessing the "poor."<sup>105</sup> Then Q's reference back to the Sermon to validate Jesus to the Baptists refers to the Sermon as "evangelizing the poor."<sup>106</sup> Paul took up a collection for "the poor."<sup>107</sup> Similarly, his reference elsewhere to "the poor of the saints in Jerusalem"<sup>108</sup> seems to refer to the Jerusalem church as such, not just to its poorer members. Actually, the remnants of Jewish Christianity came to be known as the "Ebionites," which is based on the Aramaic word for the poor.

Similarly "Nazorean," Ναζωραῖος, is a term originally used of Jesus, but then also applied to Christians, even to Paul, "a ringleader of the sect of the Nazoreans."<sup>109</sup>

The Greek word αἵρεσις<sup>110</sup> did not originally have the negative connotation of "heresy," but rather just meant a choice among various options, a preference, a party or sect. It is used of "the party of the

---

<sup>101</sup> Acts 11:26.

<sup>102</sup> Acts 26:28.

<sup>103</sup> 1 Pet 4:16.

<sup>104</sup> Acts 9:2; 18:25; 18:26; 19:9; 19:23; 22:4; 24:14; 24:22.

<sup>105</sup> Q 6:20.

<sup>106</sup> Q 7:22.

<sup>107</sup> Gal 2:10.

<sup>108</sup> Rom 15:26.

<sup>109</sup> Acts 24:5.

<sup>110</sup> 1 Cor 11:19; Gal 5:20; 2 Pet 2:1.

Sadducees”<sup>111</sup> and “the party of the Pharisees.”<sup>112</sup> So the Jesus people were also called “the party of the Nazoreans,”<sup>113</sup> “the Way, which they call a party.”<sup>114</sup> Paul’s religion is called “this party.”<sup>115</sup>

Of course the claim to be the true Israel led to the appropriation of terms Jews used of themselves, such as the “saints” and the “elect.”

Paul built upon the title for Jesus, “Christ”: People were baptized “into Christ (Jesus),”<sup>116</sup> and thus came to be “in Christ (Jesus),”<sup>117</sup> which could thus become a broader idiom for the Christian reality.<sup>118</sup>

In all of this plethora of designations for the Christian community, it is not surprising that ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ θεοῦ, Jesus’ favorite metaphor, became one of them. But this was not its primary meaning, any more than the other terms for the Christian community were their primary meanings.

Thus the term for religious experience in Jesus’ rhetoric became, in Christian rhetoric down to the present day, one of the many terms used for the Christian community “into” which one could enter, and “in” which one could find oneself.

7. The Kingdom of God as Still Future

It used to be customary to assume that Jesus simply carried on John the Baptist’s apocalyptic message. But one can hardly base an apocalyptic “kingdom of God” on John the Baptist’s influence on Jesus:

First of all, there is no extant saying of John the Baptist that mentions the kingdom of God.<sup>119</sup> Then, with regard to John’s influence on Jesus, it is important to notice that Jesus clearly departed from John’s practice: clothing; food; not baptizing; not fasting; and locale: going door-to-

<sup>111</sup> Acts 5:17.

<sup>112</sup> Acts 15:5. See also Acts 26:5, where Paul says: “I have belonged to the strictest sect of our religion and lived as a Pharisee.”

<sup>113</sup> Acts 24:5.

<sup>114</sup> Acts 24:14.

<sup>115</sup> Acts 28:22.

<sup>116</sup> Rom 6:3; Gal 3:27 (without “Jesus”).

<sup>117</sup> Gal 3:28; Phil 1:1; Rom 8:1; 1 Cor 1:2; 1:30; 4:10 (without “Jesus”); 4:15 (without “Jesus”); 15:18 (without “Jesus”); 15:19 (without “Jesus”); 15:22 (without “Jesus”); etc.

<sup>118</sup> Rom 3:24; 8:2, 39; 9:1 (without “Jesus”); 12:5 (without “Jesus”); 15:17; 16:3; 16:7, 9, 10 (all three without “Jesus”); 1 Cor 1:4; 3:1 (without “Jesus”); 14:17; 15:31; 16:24; 2 Cor 3:14 (without “Jesus”); 5:19 (without “Jesus”); etc.

<sup>119</sup> Except for Matthew’s secondary adaptation to John of Mark’s summary of Jesus’ message: Matt 3:2.

door along the Sea of Galilee asking for bed and breakfast, rather than withdrawing to the purity of the wilderness along the Jordan.<sup>120</sup> This makes it probable that Jesus also departed from John's message.

Already Ernst Käsemann pointed out that apocalypticism was launched into the Christian tradition first by the Easter experience, not by John the Baptist:<sup>121</sup>

Jesus obviously speaks of the coming of the basileia in a different sense from the Baptist and contemporary Judaism, namely, not exclusively, or even only primarily, in relation to a chronologically datable end of the world.

Of course half a century or more ago there had been a debate between C.H. Dodd and his German contemporaries about the two verbs used of Jesus' healings and exorcisms, ἐγγίζειν<sup>122</sup> and φθάνειν.<sup>123</sup>

Cure the sick there, and say to them: God's reign has reached (ἐγγίζειν) unto you.

But if it is by the finger of God that I cast out demons, then there has come (φθάνειν) upon you God's reign.

Dodd took this to mean "realized eschatology," the kingdom present in Jesus' ministry, but the German tradition, still following Johannes Weiss and Albert Schweitzer, took it to mean that the kingdom was basically future, with only anticipations, signs, occurring in Jesus' public ministry.

Mark put ἐγγίζειν programmatically at the opening of his gospel:<sup>124</sup>

The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God has come near; repent, and believe in the good news.

---

<sup>120</sup> For specifics see my essay, "Building Blocks in the Social History of Q," in Reimagining Christian Origins: A Colloquium Honoring Burton L. Mack, ed. Elizabeth A. Castelli and Hal Taussig (Valley Forge, PA: Trinity Press International, 1996) 87–112; "John's and Jesus' Lifestyles and Practice," 90–95, and "The Secondary Rapprochement of Baptists and Christians," 95–98.

<sup>121</sup> See my essay, "Jesus' Theology in the Sayings Gospel Q," in Early Christian Voices: In Texts, Traditions, and Symbols: Essays in Honor of François Bovon, ed. David H. Warren et al., BIS 66 (Boston and Leiden: Brill, 2003) 25–43, at 27–29, here quoting Käsemann, "Zum Thema der urchristlichen Apokalyptik," ZTK 59 (1962): 257–284, at 260–262, ET: "On the Topic of Primitive Christian Apocalyptic," in Apocalypticism: Journal for Theology and the Church 6 (New York: Herder and Herder, 1969): 99–133: 104.

<sup>122</sup> Q 10:9.

<sup>123</sup> Q 11:20.

<sup>124</sup> Mark 1:15.

In the light of Mark's usage elsewhere, this may not refer to Jesus' public ministry that was then beginning in Galilee, but rather to an apocalyptic event in the near future.<sup>125</sup>

Truly I tell you, there are some standing here who will not taste death until they see that the kingdom of God has come with power.

This Markan understanding of the kingdom, as an imminently pending apocalypse, seemed to be what one should attribute to Jesus. For after all, Mark is the oldest gospel. The generally-conceded fact that Mark is constituted more by its non-historical "Messianic secret" than by actual historical tradition did not outweigh the claim of its priority—for there seemed no alternative.

Though Q's existence was largely conceded, it still did not function as a gospel in its own right. Its sayings of Jesus, identifying the nearness or coming of the kingdom with the activity of Jesus and his followers, were not given the priority they deserve. The result was that Jesus' good news about what God is doing in the lives of people now was lost from sight, replaced by the idea of a future apocalypse about to take place.

Incidentally, that eschatological interpretation leaves Jesus holding the bag, in having a message that centered in what was about to happen, but did not happen—a problem its advocates rarely mention. Fortunately, we do not have to cope with the problem that Jesus was basically mistaken, but only with the problem that eminent German scholars were basically mistaken.

This does not mean that Jesus thought the kingdom to be only present, fully "realized." Of course he knew that the poor were still poor, the sick still sick, the demon-possessed still having convulsions. Jesus himself must on occasion have gone to bed hungry, or even had to go to sleep without a bed. He realized that the mass conversion of Judaism was not taking place.

But what it does mean is that the classification of the kingdom in Jesus' sayings as primarily eschatological, in the sense of apocalyptic, is no longer a valid interpretation. He did not just announce the kingdom, anticipate the kingdom, promise the kingdom. What happened in his ministry was not just a "sign" of some future eschatological event. Instead, he talked about the kingdom as something happening now. He did not pronounce the poor blessed because in the afterlife or the eschaton "theirs is the kingdom."<sup>126</sup> He did not pronounce the hungry blessed because they will participate in the eschatological banquet "in the kingdom of God,"<sup>127</sup> even if in the meantime they starve to death. He could not have been that cynical! No, he did the kingdom in the here and now, or, as he would put it, God did it through people who hearkened to him. In any case, it was happening right now.

---

<sup>125</sup> Mark 9:1.

There are of course sayings that focus on the future kingdom, but they tend to be secondary. A good instance is Matthew's insertion into the Lord's Prayer: He interprets "Thy kingdom come" as meaning "Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." Of course we still have a long way to go before the kingdom comes in this sense, judging by conditions both then and now. But this interpretation of the coming of the kingdom, as a petition to be really fulfilled only in the future, is not the interpretation that petition had in Q, and presumably for Jesus. For in Q it is immediately followed by the petition: Our day's bread give us today. Then, immediately following the prayer in Q, there is the reassurance that the fulfillment will take place in the here and now:<sup>128</sup>

What person of you, whose child asks for bread, will give him a stone?
Or again when he asks for a fish, will give him a snake? So if you, though evil, know how to give good gifts to your children, by how much more will the Father from heaven give good things to those who ask him?

Surely, if an evil father gives fish and bread in the here and now, the good Father from heaven will not do less. Jesus did not preach pie in the sky by-and-by.

There are of course sayings that put the kingdom only in the future, as in the eucharistic liturgy:<sup>129</sup>

Truly I tell you, I will never again drink of the fruit of the vine until that day when I drink it new in the kingdom of God.

I have eagerly desired to eat this Passover with you before I suffer; for I tell you, I will not eat it until it is fulfilled in the kingdom of God. Then he took a cup, and after giving thanks he said, "Take this and divide it among yourselves, for I tell you that from now on I will not drink of the fruit of the vine until the kingdom of God comes."

---

<sup>126</sup> Q 6:20.

<sup>127</sup> Q 13:28.

<sup>128</sup> Q 11:11–13.

<sup>129</sup> Mark 14:25 par. Matt 26:29; see Luke 22:15–18.

The futurity of the kingdom of God is sometimes emphasized by interspersing a kingdom of Christ prior to the kingdom of God:<sup>130</sup>

But each in his own order: Christ the first fruits, then at his coming those who belong to Christ. Then comes the end, when he hands over the kingdom to God the Father, after he has destroyed every ruler and every authority and power. For he must reign until he has put all his enemies under his feet. The last enemy to be destroyed is death.

Here the kingdom of God can be expected only when death has been completely eliminated—still some time away! But all of this development in the timing of the kingdom of God should not obscure the fact that for Jesus the kingdom of God, or, more accurately translated, God reigning, is something that took place in his actions during his public ministry. It was, after all, his rhetoric for talking about religious experience, not a doctrine about last things.

---

<sup>130</sup> 1 Cor 15:23–26. See also Luke 22:29; 23:42; John 18:36 ter; Eph 5:5; Col 1:13; 2 Tim 4:1, 18; Heb 1:8.

JEWISH GALILEE

ETIENNE NODET

Galilee as such plays no appreciable role in the Old Testament. In the New Testament, the Galilean milieu in which Jesus moves is rural: there is never any mention of Sepphoris or Tiberias. Nevertheless, it is very active in religious terms. We read of expectations, and debates and conflicts between various groups and tendencies. We must therefore inquire into the nature and the origin of this Jewish milieu which has no obvious biblical roots, remote from the big cities, and separated from Jerusalem by a hostile Samaria.

When Josephus wished to justify his claim to speak on behalf of his people, he wrote an autobiography ca. 90 CE. This Life or Vita paints a flattering picture of a man who in reality probably played a rather modest role. Curiously enough, he devotes most of this work to retelling his campaigns in Galilee from the uprisings in 66 onwards. This is obviously an apologia, but unlike his first exposé in the Jewish War, Josephus's second account of the events completely omits every direct military encounter of any importance with the Romans and concentrates almost exclusively on the divisions among the Jews. We may of course grant that such an omission may well be due to his present position as a notable man who had been set free by the emperor and is now defending the imperial policies; but the result, seen from the perspective of Rome, is that the political and social significance of the events which he relates seems limited to the strictly local sphere, with no contact with any important center. At the same period, when he describes the principal "philosophies" within Judaism, he is obliged to add a fourth tendency to the celebrated triad of Pharisees, Sadducees, and Essenes, viz. the Galilean Zealots, and he traces their origins back to the beginnings of the Roman domination. We may however wonder what led him to confer such a dignity on this movement—after all, he has just expressed a ferocious criticism of these Zealots, since it was they who bore the responsibility for the conflicts which ended in the destruction of Jerusalem. It seems, therefore, that there are specifically Jewish reasons which oblige him even in Rome to take seriously the distant Galilee and the Galileans, more than twenty years after the events he is describing. Since the Life was first an appendix to the Antiquities, we may ask for whom he wrote this major work.

In a completely different context, we note that the Mishnah, the foundational collection of rabbinic Judaism, likewise comes from Galilee. It was edited ca. 200 CE, and alongside many recollections of Jerusalem and of the temple, its general atmosphere is rural. We also note that at a period when the Severan dynasty tended to show favor to the Jews, and after Caracalla had granted Roman citizenship in 212 to all the free subjects of the empire, whether Jews or not, this Mishnah could be brought to Babylon and adopted there ca. 219; but we never hear anything at this period of its diffusion in the Mediterranean countries. Subsequent generations of commentators produced two collections known as the Jerusalem Talmud (which in fact originated in Galilee) and the Babylonian Talmud, and these are cultural twins. Nevertheless, the Mishnah presents itself not as the work of Babylonians who had arrived in Galilee, but of schools founded by those who had escaped from Judea after the defeat of Bar Kokhba, the transformation of Jerusalem into the pagan city of Aelia, and the expulsion of the Jews from Judea. This leads to a further question about the nature and origin of this later Galilean Judaism and about what seems to be a Babylonian orientation—all of which appears marginal, or at least lateral, in relation to the Roman world.

1. Galilee up to the Time of Jesus

The name “Galilee” evokes the undulating hills which extend from the high valley of the Jordan to the Phoenician coast. The region of Galilee corresponds roughly to four tribes of biblical Israel, viz. Asher, Issachar, Naphtali, and Zebulon. Although the soil is fertile, it is a small rural province which hardly plays any role in the Bible as a whole, a part from the conquest of Hazor (Josh 11) and various important events mentioned in the period of the judges. From the reign of Solomon onwards, these tribes formed part of the kingdom of Israel, but not the coast (Acco), at least according to most of the relevant texts. 2 Chr 30:11–12 tells us that the people of Asher, Zebulon, and Manasseh (central Samaria) humbled themselves and came to Jerusalem in the reign of Hezekiah. This information is more appropriate to the historical period of the Chronicler himself, but at any rate it shows that the devotion of these persons to Jerusalem was a remarkable exception. The celebrated designation “Galilee of the nations” comes from Isa 8:23 (according to the LXX), and is quoted at Matt 4:15. In the final scene of Matthew’s Gospel (28:16–18), the risen Jesus summons his disciples to meet him in Galilee, so that he can send them out to all the nations. Galilee is thus presented as the gateway leading to the other nations.

Nevertheless, what we have here is a play of words on the expression, since the original text in Isa 8:23 designates simply the “circle of nations” and has a hostile nuance:<sup>1</sup> it speaks of a small, exposed region which does not possess many fortified towns.

Josephus, who had fought there, knew Galilee well, but when he writes about Joshua’s division of the land, he does not make any precise link between this region and the corresponding biblical tribes (cf. Ant. 5.63f.). For Josephus (War 3.35–40), it extends from Carmel to Golan, as far as Tyre in the north and the city of Samaria-Sebaste in the south. In reality, he speaks of “two Galilees,” the Upper and the Lower (War 2.568); the extension which he gives to this region, on the east of the Jordan and to the south of the plain of Jezreel, goes back to the contours of the kingdom of Herod. Geographically, the term is more restricted: in the strict sense, it designates the region of rolling mountains situated to the north of the plain of Jezreel and to the west of the Jordan, i.e. in effect Upper Galilee.

According to Ezra-Nehemiah, those who returned from exile in Babylon were interested only in Jerusalem and Judea; at most, the term “Judea” extends to the north and includes Benjamin. Later, at the period of the Maccabean crisis, the reconquest properly speaking concerns only Judea itself, bordered by Emmaus on the east (by the hill country) and Bethzur to the south (halfway between Bethlehem and Hebron). Nevertheless, there are Jews in Galilee at this period: during the persecutions, they appeal for help to Judas and his brothers, declaring that they are the victims of a coalition consisting of Ptolemais, Tyre, Sidon, and the whole of Galilee (this corresponds well to the “circle of the nations”). This took place between 167 and 160 BCE. At the most, this was a scattered minority without any fortified town of their own—unlike the situation in other regions. Accordingly, when Simon is sent to provide reinforcement, he does not attempt to organize the security of the Jews in this region: instead, he prefers to take them with him to Judea (1 Macc 5:14–15). These scattered groups are certainly not émigrés from Judea, and there is no good reason to see them as direct descendants of the Israelites of earlier times, since in that case their natural attachment would have been to Samaria.<sup>2</sup>

---

<sup>1</sup> In 1 Macc 5:15 (the original text of which is Hebrew), “Galilee of the foreigners” (gelil ha-goyim) is a circle of enemies, whom Josephus understands as “the foreigners in Galilee” (Ant. 12.331).

The only notable event to which this precarious establishment of Jews in Galilee might be linked is the charter granted by Antiochus III to Jerusalem ca. 200.<sup>3</sup> The background is as follows: after the Lagids had dominated Coelestria (Palestine and Phoenicia) for a century, Antiochus had encountered some difficulty in seizing this territory from them, but the inhabitants of Judea (Ant. 12.133–134) and the Jews in general had taken his side.<sup>4</sup> This means that the charter which was granted to them was a reward. It gives Jerusalem a recognized status, and permits “all those who belong to the Jewish people” to live according to their national laws.<sup>5</sup> Obviously, this ordinance concerns a much larger area than Judea alone; for a long time, in fact, there had been a large Jewish population scattered throughout Mesopotamia and the Seleucid empire. And Antiochus, possibly in the context of a policy that had been traditional since the time of the Persians, is not afraid to

---

<sup>2</sup> S. Freyne, Galilee from Alexander to Hadrian: A Study of Second Temple Judaism (Collegeville: Liturgical Press, 1980), 1–44, follows earlier scholars and tries to show that the fidelity of Galilee to Jerusalem, bypassing Samaria, was due to the “Deuteronomist” reform of Josiah and to the small number of persons deported when the kingdom of Israel fell (at least according to the Assyrian sources). However, this view is certainly too “Judean” and poses more problems than it solves: (1) the historical substance of this reform is far from clear, since 2 Macc 6:1–3 shows that even at the period of the redaction of this book, the existence of two temples for one single nation did not present any major problem; (2) according to 2 Kgs 15:29, Galilee and the surrounding towns were seized and their inhabitants deported by Tiglath-Pileser more than ten years before Sargon conquered Samaria. Even if the numbers involved here have been exaggerated in the biblical narrative, it nevertheless indicates that social and religious cohesion had been destroyed. More recently, R. A. Horsley, Galilee: History, Politics, People (Valley Forge: Trinity Press International, 1995), attempts a more nuanced approach to Jewish Galilee, without however succeeding in offering a good explanation of the origins, and above all of the specific character, of its traditional culture. See too the essays collected by E. M. Meyers ed., Galilee through the Centuries: Confluence of Cultures (Winona Lake: Eisenbrauns, 1999).

<sup>3</sup> The authenticity of this charter has been established by E. J. Bickerman, “La charte séleucide de Jérusalem,” in idem, Studies in Jewish and Christian History (Leiden: Brill, 1980), 2:44–85; Eng. trans. in the 2nd edn, 2007, 41–80.

<sup>4</sup> Josephus’s source is a lost passage by Polybius, who speaks of “those of the Jews who dwell around Jerusalem”; this presupposes that there were many other Jews as well.

<sup>5</sup> These thus became the official laws of the Jewish ethnos. The project of the Seleucids, who were heirs to Alexander, was to establish an empire. This ordinance is similar to that quoted at Ezra 7:25–27, where Artaxerxes enjoins upon Ezra to establish authoritatively the “law of his God” for “all the people in the province Beyond the River.” This expression corresponds exactly to the Jewish ethnos in Syria.

make use of the Jews here as unarmed colonists in a distant country, in order to stabilize a disputed border (with regard to Asia Minor, cf. Ant. 12.148–149).

It is therefore natural to suppose that the Jewish colonists who were sent or who departed voluntarily in the aftermath of this charter arrived in the fertile region of Galilee and in the associated urban centers. We may also suppose that the journeys necessitated by pilgrimages and the bringing of sacrificial offerings led to the creation of places where travelers could spend the night, since the land route from Mesopotamia goes by way of Damascus and Scythopolis. These suppositions are strengthened to some extent by the results of archaeological investigations in Galilee, which have revealed that the region was very sparsely populated in the Hellenistic period before the second century. After this, there was a significant increase in the rural population, but their settlements were scattered and there was no appreciable urbanization.<sup>6</sup>

During the Maccabean crisis (167–164) and for some years afterwards, Judea remained a Seleucid province under direct administration. Politically, it began to move towards a measure of autonomy only when Jonathan, the son of Mattathias, became high priest in 152 in troubled circumstances: there was no civil government, and the high priesthood had remained a concession by the Seleucid authorities, but Jonathan, the heir to a family which had rebelled against Antiochus IV, succeeded in obtaining his office thanks to a civil war between Demetrius I and Alexander Balas (1 Macc 10:17–19), in which he opportunely took the side of one of the parties. Later, Jonathan also obtained the allocation to Judea of three districts in the region of Lydda-Lod (1 Macc 10:30; 11:34). These had been attached to a region called Samaria-Galilee. This implies that the jurisdiction of Judea did not include Samaria, and still less Galilee.

At a later date, John Hyrcanus (135–104), who succeeded his father Simon the brother of Jonathan, conducted an energetic policy of territorial expansion. In particular, Josephus relates the conquest of Sichem and the Judaization of Idumaea ca. 128 (Ant. 13.255–257) and notes that later, between 111 and 107, the towns of Samaria and Scythopolis were captured (13.275–277). This does not permit us to conclude that the whole of Galilee was conquered at that date. After the death of Hyrcanus in 104, his son Aristobulus succeeded him in troubled conditions. He annexed a part of the territory of the Ituraeans ca. 103 and circumcised them by force (Ant. 13.319); here, Josephus does not have a direct source, and he is probably quoting Strabo (Geogr. 753–756), but his redactional work suggests to the reader that this “part of Ituraea” was none other than Galilee.<sup>7</sup> This means that the Galileans would have been Judaized by force and would thus be Israelites of the second rank, without a pedigree, with a provenance even more recent than that of the Idumaeans. One may even wonder whether Strabo, who was acquainted with an instance of enforced circumcision, may have committed the mistake of confusing Ituraeans and Idumaeans, since the two names are very similar. The extract in question does not name the king of Judea, and it may be that he was in fact John Hyrcanus, since we are told that he was a king who did good to his nation—something that cannot be said about Aristobulus, whose brief and lamentable reign never rose above the level of quarrels within the palace.

---

<sup>6</sup> E. Meyers, J. Strange, and D. Groh, "The Meiron Excavation Project: Archaeological Survey in Galilee and the Golan" (1976), BASOR 230 (1978): 1–24; E. Meyers, "Galilean Regionalism: A Reappraisal," in Approaches to Ancient Judaism 5: Studies in Judaism and its Greco-Roman Context, Brown Judaic Series 32, ed. E. Meyers, J. Strange, and D. Groh (Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1985), 115–131.

In 63, Jerusalem fell to Pompey (Ant. 14.48–76), thanks to a civil war: Antipater, the father of Herod and apparently the governor of Idumaea, supported the legitimate heir, the feeble Hyrcanus II, against the claims of Aristobulus, who had seized the throne in 67. Initially, the Romans supported Aristobulus, but later they pursued him and besieged him in Jerusalem. The victorious Pompey made a solemn entrance. Hyrcanus, who thus found himself on the winning side, remained ethnarch and high priest, but he was stripped of the royal title. Judea was severely amputated, losing a whole series of towns and their dependencies: to the west, the coastal villages from Raphia to Dora, which form a region to the south of Carmel; in the center, Samaria and Scythopolis; to the east of the Jordan, several towns as far as Pella, Gadara, and Hippos to the north. All these towns, with extensive adjoining territories, were attached directly to the Roman province of Syria which had just been created. It is worth noting that in this way, the Romans exercised direct control of all the routes leading to Galilee. Clearly, Galilee could no longer be a part of Judea, but this does not mean that the region (or any one of its cities) was specifically attached to Syria on this occasion. We have no evidence of any changes, even for the Jewish town of Sepphoris, the future capital. The obvious conclusion is that, with the exception of extensive regions to the east of the Jordan (Peraea), Galilee was not an integral part of the Judea which Hyrcanus and Jan-naeus had enlarged.

---

<sup>7</sup> This is the commonly held view; cf. E. Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ, ed. G. Vermes et al., 3 vols., (Edinburgh: T&T Clark, 1973–1987), 1:141 and 562; 2:8–9, who assume without genuine proof that the conquered “part of Ituraea” means Galilee.

In 57, Gabinius, the new governor of Syria, put down a Jewish revolt at the time when Alexander, the son of Aristobulus, was trying to regain power (Ant. 14.82–97). Gabinius divided Palestine, or more exactly “the people,” into five districts, each of which was governed by a “Sanhedrin,” and Sepphoris became the capital of Galilee. This was a reorganization of the people, not just of Judea, as is evident in the case of Peraea, with the two districts of Amathontis and Jericho: there were many Jews there, but the region had not belonged to Judea since the time of Pompey. The same must be said of Galilee, about which Josephus says nothing explicit. From the perspective of Syria, it was important to give the Jews of the region a territorial organization, without however according too much importance to Jerusalem. Above all, the very notion of a kingdom of Judea had to be sedulously ignored. Accordingly, although a Jewish Galilee did exist, with Sepphoris as its capital, its political links to Jerusalem were tenuous at most. It was only in 47, when Hyrcanus II returned to favor, that Galilee was explicitly attached to Judea, and that the young Herod was given a mission there.

For our present purposes, the conclusion is that the Jews in Galilee were in a singular situation. They have no identifiable relationships with the former northern kingdom (Israel) or with the Samaritans; their origin is not in the political unit of Judea; they are not the effect of the enforced circumcision of local tribes. The only element in this picture which is reasonably clear is the policy of Antiochus III, but the Galilean Jews are certainly not the same as the Jewish ethnos which was scattered in Syria and Mesopotamia.

2. Under Herod the Great

In 47, Herod was “charged with” Galilee, in conditions about which we know little. He crushed a certain Hezekiah and his band, who were causing havoc on the frontier with Syria (Josephus, Ant. 14.159–161). This led to legal proceedings, with an accusation and a trial before the Sanhedrin in Jerusalem. If this had merely been a question of a police operation consisting in neutralizing robbers, there would surely have been nothing to merit a legal investigation.<sup>8</sup> This Hezekiah was not

---

<sup>8</sup> The parallel account in War 1.209 simply says that plotters compelled Hyrcanus to summon Herod, by then a rising star, before the court. He was accused of having acted just a simple bandit: he is regarded as the ancestor of the movement of the Galileans (War 2.56). This incident thus involved both political<sup>9</sup> and religious issues. In political terms, Herod's victims cannot have been partisans of Aristobulus, Rome's enemy in the time of Pompey, because the tearful mothers come to present their supplications during the trial to Hyrcanus himself, who was wholly a vassal of the Romans. One might argue that Herod was seeking to carve out a stronghold for himself against Hyrcanus, and that this was the cause of the jealousies at court; but his actions won the favor of the governor Sextus Caesar, who cannot have been an opponent of Hyrcanus (a protégé of Julius Caesar). Nor can Sextus Caesar have looked favorably on a sedition which threatened the pax romana. As things turned out after these exploits, Herod was appointed governor of Coelestria and Samaria by Sextus, and there is every reason to credit him with possessing exceptional political skill—as indeed his entire career shows.

The conclusion must therefore be that these “brigands” were anti-Roman Jews. The legal proceedings taken against Herod were prompted by Jews who defended the Law and were not in the least interested in allegiance to Rome. During the trial, the Pharisee Sameas was noteworthy for his frankness. This means that the difficult or legendary elements in Josephus<sup>10</sup> fail to conceal the fact that there existed a Galilean Judaism on which the Pharisees looked with favor. This Galilean Judaism may have given signs of irredentism, but there is no doubt that it was strongly opposed to Herod the Idumaeen, who was described as a “half-Jew” (Ant. 14.403): this is a principled stand which is taken without regard to the possible political consequences. The Galilean opponents of Herod were certainly not marranos, i.e. Ituraeans or in contempt of the “Jewish law” and the “national customs” by killing many persons without a trial. This redaction, which avoids stating that these schemers were partisans of Hezekiah, waters down the precise situation of the brigands and centers attention upon a monopoly enjoyed by the tribunal in Jerusalem.

---

<sup>9</sup> Cf. Sean Freyne, “Bandits in Galilee: A Contribution to the Study of Social Conditions in First-Century Palestine,” in The Social World of Formative Christianity and Judaism, ed. Jacob Neusner et al. (Philadelphia: Fortress Press, 1988), 50–68, who emphasizes the socio-political circumstances. Helmut Schwier, Tempel und Tempelzerstörung, Novum Testamentum et Orbis Antiquus 11 (Fribourg: Universitätsverlag, 1999), 145–146, discusses various scholarly opinions about these bandits.

<sup>10</sup> In particular, it is difficult to know whether or not this trial conducted at Jerusalem for actions committed in Galilee presupposes the disappearance of the other provincial Sanhedrins. The scene of the trial is reported in b. San. 19a–b, with different names (Jannaeus instead of Hyrcanus, etc.), and with a special emphasis on the independence of the Pharisees.

others who had been circumcised by force: Hezekiah was defending a form of Judaism.

In 40, Herod had himself appointed king of Judea by the senate in Rome (Ant. 14:381–382), but he obtained this promotion only thanks to the war. Rome had need of local allies: Antigonus, the last Hasmonean king, had just obtained his throne thanks to the Parthians, who had forcibly driven the Romans out of Syria and taken Hyrcanus prisoner. In 39, Herod landed at Ptolemais-Acco to begin the reconquest of Judea. He was supported by the Romans, who were still fighting against the Parthians. After some initial successes, Herod encountered difficulties in Galilee and was obliged at once to deploy considerable numbers of soldiers against “brigands living in caves.” Josephus relates how this enemy was defeated all along the line. This was followed by the assault on the caves where the last survivors had fled. These caves are situated in the cliffs of Arbela, which overhang Magdala on the shore of the lake (Ant. 14.421–422). We hear a remarkable detail: on the point of being taken captive, an old man (or an “elder”) refused to let himself be taken prisoner and preferred rather to kill his wife and his seven children, before throwing himself off the cliff. Herod was present at this scene and offered him his pardon, stretching out his hand to the man. But he found the time, before throwing himself off the cliff, to hurl abuse at Herod, reproaching him for his origins. For the brigands, therefore, this was not an economic war, and the scene recalls the story of the prisoners at Jotapata a century later, or even the collective suicides at Gamala and Massada. These brigands were in a similar situation to Hezekiah, whom the same Herod had killed ten years earlier. The hand which Herod stretched out gives a glimpse of his hope, not only of conquering, but of being acknowledged. A century later, Josephus was motivated by the same concern, in somewhat parallel circumstances.

Josephus tells us in a later chapter (Ant. 17.23–25) that at a period which is not precisely specified (but was probably shortly after the beginning of his reign),<sup>11</sup> Herod wished to protect himself against bandits in Trachonitis. Once again, these are Jewish “brigands” with political intentions, not nomads. The king wished to establish a buffer zone in Batanaea (Golan, to the east of the Jordan) by creating a settlement populated by Jewish subjects, so that he could protect both the region and the pilgrimage route. He installed a group of Babylonian Jewish colonists there who were already in Syria and enjoyed the favor of the Romans. He gave them ground to clear and exempted them from taxes. Their leader, Zamaris, built a city called Bathyra (most probably on the site of Qatzrin, the Rabbinic Cesarea) and a number of strongholds. He gathered together from many different regions “people faithful to the Jewish customs”; both the exemption from taxation and the remote location were very attractive, especially for people who had a strong religious motivation and had no interest in seeking power. Herod’s choice of Babylonian Jews without political ambitions was certainly prudent, bearing in mind the neighboring Galileans who had resisted him on the other shore of the lake, and who had the same Babylonian origin from a more distant period in time.

---

<sup>11</sup> Josephus places Zamaris’s appeal after he had been installed at Daphne near Antioch by Saturninus, who was the governor of Syria at the end of Herod’s reign (9–6 BCE), i.e. at a period when Herod was already submerged in domestic difficulties (cf. Schürer, History, 1:257). This is highly unlikely. We should rather think of the period when Herod was consolidating his authority, viz. 37–25. There was a governor named Calpurnius in 34–33, and this date is better; the names may simply have been mixed up.

When Herod died in 4 BCE, the situation reverted to confusion, with quarrels about the succession focusing on Archelaus, abuses committed by the Roman army, and a number of revolts, especially on the occasion of pilgrimages to Jerusalem for the Passover and Pentecost. The religious factor played a significant role in the uprisings: at Jerusalem, people were demanding that the new ethnarch purify the cult, and revenge was sought for the Pharisaic teachers whom Herod had killed when they sought to remove a golden eagle from the temple (Ant. 17.206–207). Varus, the governor of Syria, hastened to Jerusalem with an armed force and restored order. He showed clemency to Jerusalem, but was implacable in dealing with the “brigands.”

In Galilee, Sepphoris was the center of a rebellion inspired by Judas of Gamala, who profited from the weakness of Jerusalem and attempted to take over the government. This revolt was crushed, and the city was destroyed by Varus’s son (17.289). This Judas is none other than “Judas the Galilean,” the founder together with a Pharisee of that “folly” which Josephus was later compelled to call the “fourth philosophy” (18.4–6).<sup>12</sup> This Judas is described as “the son of Hezekiah,” viz. of the man whom Herod had defeated more than forty years earlier. Obviously, Judas is one who continues the work of Hezekiah; he is not his “son” in the strict sense.<sup>13</sup> This is indicated not only by the gap between <sup>12</sup> Cf. M. Hengel, Die Zeloten, AGSU 1 (Leiden: Brill, 1961), 57–61 and 322.

<sup>13</sup> Similarly, “a certain” Menahem, “the son” of Judas the Galilean, appeared later, ca. 65 (War 2.433). Here too, we have an heir rather than a son, not only because of the dates, but above all by his lack of pedigree. In other words, he is called “son” in order to affirm that he belongs to the same category of persons. During the fiscal census of Quirinius, in 6 CE, Judas was sufficiently influential to be able to stir up a large-scale resistance to the Roman power (and especially to its taxes) in the whole of Judea. This is why he was called “the Galilean”—a sobriquet which was certainly not bestowed by the Galileans on themselves, and attests a large-scale migration and influence beyond the borders of Galilee.<sup>14</sup> This influence was not born overnight, and the repressions by Varus had been directed to this profoundly anti-Roman group.<sup>15</sup> This means that Jewish Galilee was reinforced under Herod, until it acquired a national importance which continued to grow in subsequent years. We must bear in mind here the fact that the Pharisees were never willing to pay allegiance to Herod, who feared them and persecuted them (cf. Ant. 17.41–42).

3. Hillel and Galilee

The preceding section, which has related Herod’s actions vis-à-vis Galilee and the Pharisees, provides the framework for the activity of Hillel the Elder, and lends some credibility to the rabbinic sources which speak of him. Hillel is one of the great founding figures of normative Judaism (m. Abot 1:12), and the first to whom the tradition accords the title of “patriarch.”<sup>16</sup> It is also with Hillel that the rabbinic tradition the lengthy period separating the dates, which is highly unlikely if Menahem was the biological son of Judas, but also because of the contradiction between “a certain” (which presupposes that his genealogy was unknown) and the indication “son of” (which expresses exactly the opposite). Cf. É. Nodet, “Jésus et Jean-Baptiste selon Josèphe,” RB 92 (1985): 504–506, where I demonstrate inter alia that the doublet between Judas the looter and Judas the founder comes from a system of doublets in which the same episodes, after the death of Herod, are related twice and interwoven with each other in keeping with two different perspectives.

---

<sup>14</sup> This is attested by Luke’s reference to the Galileans whom Pilate killed (Luke 13:1–3). This passage shows that Luke understands the term Galilean in the secondary sense of “brigand.”

<sup>15</sup> The Seder Olam Pabbah (ed. Ratner, 145) has preserved the memory of a war by Varus which was just as important as that waged by Vespasian, although it ignores both the civil war and the arrival of Pompey. The first event (which it cites) concerned primarily Galilee; the latter, of which it knows nothing, concerned Judea.

<sup>16</sup> Or nasi. This title is certainly anachronistic, since it does not correspond to anything in Jewish society that can be identified before 70; at the most, Hillel had the rank of a recognized master. The patriarchal institution, properly so called, is not attested before Bar Kokhba, without any connection to the Tanaites. From Judah the Prince onwards, it was assuredly projected back onto the earlier generations: cf. A. Oppenheimer, Galilee in the Mishnaic Period (Jerusalem: Zalman Shazar Center, 1991), 51–52.

begins to relate controversies. This disturbed later commentators and led to a fusion of originally distinct currents. Hillel was a Babylonian who lived in the days of Herod, but we have little precise information about him.

Josephus, who has eyes only for what counts in societal terms, ignores Hillel, but he knows the Pharisees Shemaiah and Abtalion (Sameas and Pollion) in Judea,<sup>17</sup> who were the immediate predecessors of Hillel and Shammai (m. Abot 1:10–11). The story of the elevation of Hillel to the patriarchate is supplied only by the rabbinic sources, and its principal concern is to demonstrate a pronounced discontinuity between him and his predecessors. The event is related in various analogous forms; I comment here on the longest and best documented recension (j. Pesah. 6:1 p. 33a),<sup>18</sup> omitting a few secondary developments:

This law was unknown to the elders of Bathyra.

This refers to the breaches of the sabbath law which were permitted in order to prepare the paschal lamb, such as we read in m. Pes. 6:1–2:

It happened one day that Nisan 14 coincided with the sabbath, and they did not know whether or not the paschal sacrifice took precedence over the sabbath. They said: “There is a certain Babylonian here whose name is Hillel, who has studied under Shemaiah and Abtalion. He will know whether or not the paschal sacrifice takes precedence over the sabbath.”—“Can he be of some use to us?” They sent people to look for him, and they said to him: “Have you ever heard whether or not Nisan 14 takes precedence over the sabbath, when the two days coincide?”

Hillel attempts to establish the point by means of various arguments, based primarily on the Bible and employing his own rules for interpretation, but the others reject his arguments or refute them, and then conclude:

---

<sup>17</sup> Cf. L. H. Feldman, “The Identity of Pollion, the Pharisee, in Josephus,” JQR 49 (1958): 53–62. The transcription “Sameas” is ambiguous: it may come from Shemaiah, his colleague, or from Shammai, his disciple and the inseparable adversary of Hillel. However, the second form may be considered as an abbreviation of the first: cf. J. N. Dérenbourg, Essai sur l’histoire et la géographie de la Palestine (Paris: Impr. Impériale, 1867), 1:35 n. 1 and 95 n. 1. In Ant. 15.3, Josephus mentions “the Pharisee Pollion and his disciple Sameas,” and attributes to Pollion an intervention at Herod’s court which he has already attributed to Sameas at 14.172. He thus mixes up a colleague and a disciple of Pollion.

<sup>18</sup> The two other versions are in t. Pes. 4:13–14 and b. Pes. 66a. J. Neusner, Judaism in the Beginning of Christianity (Minneapolis: Augsburg Fortress, 1984), offers a different analysis, which severs every link between Josephus and the rabbinic tradition. This is certainly simpler, but it is a priori arbitrary. Cf. also idem, The Tosefta: Second Division, Moed (New York: Ktav, 1981), 136–137.

“There is nothing to be got out of this Babylonian!” Although he remained there all the day to provide them with explanations, they did not accept him until he said to them: “Woe is me! This is what I received from Shemaiah and Abtalion.” When they heard him say these words, they arose and appointed him patriarch.

The examination to which Hillel is subjected is remarkable for various reasons.

First, the body which interrogates Hillel has the power to appoint him “patriarch,” or at any rate head of the school. We are nowhere told that this body was a Sanhedrin: they are merely “the elders of Bathyra,” about whom we know little from other sources. They have links to Babylon, just like Zamaris’s group.

Secondly, the masters who are mentioned, Shemaiah and Abtalion, are the authorities whom everyone recognizes, but they are absent and they have not been replaced. Other passages too indicate a discontinuity between them and their successors (cf. m. Ed. 1:3); their authority is intact, but they are inaccessible. We must therefore assume that they have died, or have been killed. In any case, they have not been able to establish a succession which is recognized by the colony in Bathyra.

Thirdly, they are looking for a candidate with a particular profile: a Babylonian who has studied under these Judean Pharisaic masters. In the narrative, however, some cast doubt on the Babylonian precisely because he is a Babylonian—in other words, we have the problem of how to reconcile divergent currents in the tradition.

Fourthly, the context of the elders’ question is not academic, but practical. It concerns a specific urgency, for which no authority is accessible—on two levels.

Fifthly, the question itself is remarkable, because according to the customary lunar calendar, Passover falls on a sabbath roughly every seven years. It is therefore rather improbable that this entire assembly, which was entitled to confer promotion on Hillel (even if this authority was recognized only at a later date), should have forgotten a customary point which was of such universal relevance—and was therefore so simple.

This means that the redaction of the episode, although it is very condensed, presents a whole number of problems. We have seen the discontinuity which precedes Hillel, whose title of “patriarch” is certainly a later addition. We can say a little about the emergence of the elders of Bathyra, who never appear in any of our sources as a permanent body: Josephus tells us that many persons came and settled in the city founded by Zamaris because they felt safe there. Herod persecuted the Pharisees, but he did not interfere with the statute of this colony, because of general political considerations relating to the Babylonians and the Parthians. This made it a refuge for very pious persons who could not hope for protection from the priestly milieu, which were forcibly subjected to Herod. As for the question of the Passover, which is posed far from Jerusalem, this raises issues that go far beyond the limits of the present study.<sup>19</sup>

4. The Galilee of Jesus

The elements which we have identified in the preceding sections permit an initial access to the Galilean milieu in which Jesus recruited his disciples. This is a rural milieu, a scene of intense and highly diversified activity<sup>20</sup> on both shores of the lake. This supplies a framework for many details in the gospels; at the same time, the gospels can help clarify some decisive points in the history of Judaism on the periphery of Judea, since both Christianity and the rabbinic tradition had their beginnings on the same soil. I limit myself here to a summary list of characteristic traits which identify more precisely the milieu from which Jesus and his disciples came.

First, scholars have seen a general opposition between the Zealot milieus to the west of the Sea of Tiberias and other milieus to the east which were more submissive. This lake plays an important role in Jesus' wanderings, not only as a geographical element, but also through symbolic effects linked to water and to fishing. Besides this, the theme of crossing the lake and the numerous allusions to "the other shore" take on a new significance (cf. John 6:1, etc.); the symmetrical curse of Bethsaida and Chorazin (Matt 11:21 par.) concerns the two shores; the first multiplication of the loaves takes place on the western shore (Matt 14:13–34 par.) with twelve baskets, while the second multiplication takes place on the eastern shore (Matt 15:32–39 par.) with seven baskets. Originally, these communications between the two shores are not a bridge between the Gentile Decapolis and Jewish Galilee,<sup>21</sup> but rather between two contrary tendencies in one and the same culture. This culture is very closed, and Jesus has come only “for the lost sheep of the house of Israel.” The usual interpretation, which sees the twelve baskets as an allusion to the twelve tribes of Israel, and the seven baskets as a reference to the nations (recalling the “seven nations” of Canaan), accords with the spirit of a Christian redaction.

<sup>19</sup> Cf. É. Nodet and J. Taylor, The Origins of Christianity: An Exploration (Collegeville: Liturgical, 1998), 138–144.

<sup>20</sup> Cf. S. Appelbaum, "Judea as a Roman Province. The Countryside as a Political and Economic Factor," ANRW II 8 (1977): 355–396.

Secondly, when he writes about the town where Jesus “was brought up,” Eusebius cites an instructive legend (Hist. Eccl. 1.7.14): according to a letter of Julius Africanus, the “family of Jesus” originally came from the Jewish villages of Nazareth and Kokhaba. The latter town was in Batanaea (Golan). Let us begin by noting that this doubling of the locality accords with the doubling (on the east and the west of the lake) which Herod had organized. Our next point: this family is none other than the posterity of James, whose entourage formed the Jewish Christians in the strict sense of the word, or “Nazoreans” (the nozrim of the rabbinic sources). It is natural to associate this word with “Nazareth” (“Nazara”), but we may ask which name comes first, when we look at the parallel case of the other village: Kokhaba too is completely unknown,<sup>22</sup> but its name means “star,” and it is hard to avoid seeing a symbolic meaning in this word, inspired by the star of Jacob from Num 24:17, since Jesus—like all his family—is also a “Bar Kokhba.” It is therefore certainly possible that Nazareth, a village about which we know nothing from other sources, was initially a town of Nazoreans, i.e. a number of families or one group who eagerly awaited the Messiah. Finally, it is interesting to note that Africanus came from Emmaus-Nicopolis in Judea, which had been a prominent center (both really and symbolically) of active “messianism” since Judas Maccabeus. This was a place where more or less legendary Jewish Christian memories may have been elaborated, without precise links to the New Testament. Besides this, Jesus’ own town is Capharnaum on the lake, not far from Tiberias (Mark 2:1; 3:20; 9:33). Archaeological excavations on this site have shown that the fishing village predates Herod. Jesus was familiar with this milieu, where he recruited his disciples, and he seems to have known something about fishing and navigation.

<sup>21</sup> Cf. the bibliography by A. Hennessy, The Galilee of Jesus (Rome: Editrice Pontificia Università Gregoriana, 1994).

<sup>22</sup> Four sites with this name have been identified up to now in the relevant territory, two to the west of the Jordan and two to the east, but it is difficult to follow their traces before the Byzantine period.

Thirdly and more generally, the milieu in question is rural and a scene of intense religious activity, with various tendencies engaged in debate or in conflict. The last question which the apostles put to Jesus is: “Lord, will you at this time restore the kingdom to Israel?” (Acts 1:6). This scene is situated at Jerusalem, and this terminology, which resembles that of some rabbinic sources, completely ignores the real territory of Judea and the successors of Herod. It bears traces of a dream of independence, like that of the Zealots; we find the same in the third temptation (Matt 4:8–10), in the sadness of the two disciples who leave Jerusalem for Emmaus, and in the people’s choice of Barabbas, who is a “brigand”—i.e., not merely a common criminal, but a Galilean of the most genuine kind (to borrow Josephus’s terminology). We should note that although he moves around in Galilee and recruits his disciples there, Jesus remains far from the two Romanized capitals, Sepphoris and Tiberias (which was founded by Herod Antipas on the site of a cemetery, in honor of Tiberias: Ant. 18.37). The milieu of Jesus and his disciples lay certainly alongside the traditional Galileans.

Fourthly, the group which follows Jesus has a diverse composition. It includes Matthew the tax collector and Simon the Zealot, men who were opponents a priori (and who correspond to the two shores), as well as Joanna, the wife of the steward of Herod Antipas—this represents a third pole opposed to the other two, linked to the ruling milieus of the cities, especially of the new capital, the despised city of Tiberias. Some disciples of John the Baptist leave him to follow Jesus. When Jesus celebrates the Last Supper at Jerusalem, he has access to a room in a hostelry about which the disciples know nothing, and this means that he has other relationships. He has adherents among the Pharisees, who warn him about the danger posed by Herod, but he counters the Pharisees by insisting on the primacy of scripture over the oral tradition; the scribes, irrespective of whether they follow Jesus or reject him, are the guardians of scripture and the opponents of the Pharisees. Taken together, these various tendencies form a spectrum of the Judaism in Galilee, where we find scarcely any Sadducees or priests. Jesus breaks all barriers—but within Judaism. He even joins the deviants, the lepers and the prostitutes, but his contacts with Gentiles do not go beyond a few symbolic gestures,<sup>23</sup> which were doubtless the maximum that his milieu could tolerate; and these gestures are always carried out in the presence of Jewish onlookers. This is the significance of the "sign of Jonah," a narrative meant for the people of Israel: even the most wicked of the prophets is capable of converting a Gentile city. We must add to this list of transgressions the visit which he receives from Samaritans, who follow scripture and await a new Moses, and who utter one of the most solemn acknowledgments of Jesus. All these crossings of boundaries form an ensemble of signs which show that Jesus is not afraid of ritual impurity.

<sup>23</sup> Cf. J.-F. Baudoz, Les miettes de la table, EB NS 27 (Paris: Gabalda, 1995), who

Fifthly, just as John the Baptist is surrounded by disciples, so Jesus, in addition to all these occasional encounters, recruits and forms a group in which he is recognized as master ("Rabbi"), although this is not a school in the narrow sense of the term, since the apostles were subsequently regarded as "uneducated, common men" (cf. Acts 4:13); although they were not ignoramuses, they did not fit into any system of recognized doctrinal competence. At the same time, the group shared a common life and to some extent formed a closed unit. This is illustrated especially by the example of the Last Supper, which presupposes that the group habitually met for meals. What we see, therefore, is a more or less itinerant brotherhood with its own organization.

Sixthly, Jesus goes up to Jerusalem several times, alone or in a group. Although he is critical of the temple, he never ceases to regard it as the center of the promises. At the decisive moment, he insists absolutely on challenging the authorities, although the disciples disagree (cf. Matt 16:22 par.; according to John 7:8-9, he hesitates). And it is clear that some of them have never made the pilgrimage to Jerusalem, because although they are already adults, they are filled with amazement at the architecture. There is a certain parallel in the trajectories of Jesus and the movement of Judas the Galilean, who was conceived in Galilee and later attempted to make Judea the base of his activity, which included a protest against the temple (cf. Ant. 18.3-4); similarly, Luke 3:1 relates that Jesus, who had been conceived in Galilee, came to Judea to start his public activity, which ended with an analogous protest. Gamaliel himself is said to have drawn this parallel (Acts 5:37), and Josephus tells us that Judas's movement was very close to the Pharisees in doctrinal terms. On the other hand, Jesus' confrontation with the civil and priestly authorities, which was followed by a discontinuity and a difficult succession, discusses especially the position of J. Jeremias, Jesu Verheißung für die Völker (Stuttgart: Kohlhammer, 1956), who argued that the mission to the Gentiles can be found in the ipsissima verba of Jesus.

---

recalls the specifically Pharisaic problem (as Josephus uses this term) of the analogous confrontations and discontinuities at Jerusalem under Alexander Jannaeus and Herod, and perhaps as early as the period of the Maccabean crisis. On his way back from Judea, Jesus dismisses equally the temples of Jerusalem and Garizim in his conversation with the Samaritan woman (John 4:21–23), and then heads for Galilee: once again, the horizon is Galilean Judaism.

Finally, we should note that the sources studied here give particular prominence to the symbolic and religious factors, and that these explain very well why Josephus devotes so much attention to Galilee. Obviously, socio-economic circumstances, famines, and political oppressions also played a role, but it is remarkable that those studies of Galilee at this period which have centered on materialistic determinisms do not produce any coherent synthesis which can integrate the specific characteristics of the local culture, even when they make use of such concepts as the “people of the land” or “the poor”; they are often obliged to make the historical Jesus a somewhat unreal figure who emerges by chance in Galilee, without any deep links to tradition.<sup>24</sup>

Nevertheless, these links were durable. Let us look at two important periods, that of the War of 70 and after the defeat of Bar Kokhba.

5. Josephus, Galilee, and the School of Jabneh-Jamnia

In 66, following a long series of troubles with complex origins, Cestius Gallus, the governor of the province of Syria, arrived from Antioch with a body of soldiers to take Jerusalem. However, he failed to realize that the “brigands” were no longer the masters and that the people were ready to throw open the city gates to him. He did not dare to push his advantage and conquer the city at once (according to Josephus, this would have averted the subsequent wars). Instead, he withdrew, and this provoked the rebels to pursue him and finally to inflict a severe defeat on him between Beth-Horon and Antipatris (War 2.540–545). This tactical victory was a strategic disaster: the Romans must inevitably undertake reprisals, for otherwise they would have appeared weak. It was therefore necessary to prepare for war, and it was on this occasion that Josephus was once again in Galilee, charged with a mission.

---

<sup>24</sup> S. Freyne, Galilee, Jesus and the Gospels: Literary Approaches and Historical Investigations (Dublin: Gill & Macmillan, 1988), who takes up anew the discussions of his predecessors, is typical of this tendency, which is heir to the nineteenth-century German liberal thought which saw Jesus as one who promoted emancipation from the Law. This tendency can be seen almost in the form of a caricature in the thesis of W. Grundmann, Jesus der Galiläer und das Judentum (Leipzig: Wigand, 1940), 82–83, who attempts to show that Jesus was an Aryan. This tendency always detaches Jesus from his Jewish context. Cf. also W. Bauer, “Jesus der Galiläer,” in Festgabe für Adolf Jülicher (Tübingen: Mohr–Paul Siebeck, 1927), 16–34.

It is here that the second narrative begins (Life 17–19), but with a very different presentation of the events. Josephus, who has just returned from a mission to Rome, sees the preparations being made for insurrection. He sticks close to the leading Pharisees and tries in vain to warn them against a military confrontation with the Romans. After the rout of Cestius, these leading men send him with two priests to Galilee, which has not yet completely risen up against Rome. In Galilee, Josephus attempts to calm the “brigands” and to gather in their weapons, so that these may be available to the leading Pharisees if—and only if—the Romans attack. We are then given a long account of the divisions among the Jews and of the conflicts (often bloody) between the various factions (Life 30–70). In his many attempts at appeasement, Josephus states several times that he is an emissary of the Sanhedrin in Jerusalem; and he tells us that he cultivated the friendship of the seventy elders who governed the land, in order to ensure the faithfulness of the people.

This is not the place to investigate which is the better version of events.<sup>25</sup> In the conclusion to the Antiquities, Josephus proclaims his competence in doctrinal matters, and even the Jews acknowledge this. Despite his vanity, we must admit that he knows Judaism very well, certainly better than he knows history and philosophy. He then goes on to announce that he intends to write his autobiography. The Life, which is (or has become) an independent book, presents itself as an appendix to the Antiquities (Life 420). It is devoted almost entirely to the few months which Josephus spent in Galilee in 66–67 (Life 17–412), and the narrative stops just before a decisive military attack on the Romans. At this point, Josephus refers to the Jewish War, where he has already written of this whole campaign and of ensuing events. This leaves us with a strictly provincial narrative about disputes between Jewish factions whom Josephus tries in vain to reconcile with one another. Such a work has no prospect of interesting the Gentiles, especially more than twenty-five years after the events. This means that Josephus is essentially writing for the Jews. This autobiography is the exposé of his entitlement, from the time he went to Rome onwards, to pose as the guide of the nation, with the Pharisaic note which was in accordance with the most popular tendency. He comes from a good family, and has studied in the principal schools; above all, his actions in Galilee were motivated by a perfect national loyalty which contrasted with the folly of the factions. Galilee, with its links to Babylon, was a major point of reference.

---

<sup>25</sup> S. J. D. Cohen, Josephus in Galilee and Rome: His Vita and Development as a Historian, Columbia Studies in the Classical Tradition 8 (Leiden: Brill, 1979), has shown convincingly (cf. the summary, 242) that one of the keys to understanding the new redaction of the Life is Josephus’s concern to portray himself as an observant Pharisee, and hence to disparage systematically the religious fidelity of the Galileans. Following other scholars, U. Rappaport, “Where Was Josephus Lying—In His Life or in the War?” in Josephus and the History of the Greco-Roman Period: Essays in Memory of Morton Smith, ed. F. Parente and J. Sievers, Studia Post-Biblica 41 (Leiden: Brill, 1994), 279–289, accords priority to the Life.

Josephus's principal adversary was John of Gishala, who had contacts with the leading Pharisees in Jerusalem, especially with Simon b. Gamaliel (Life 190–191). Although these men were not Zealots, they held views similar to those of the traditional Jewish Galilee, from which they may have originally come. At the period when Josephus was writing, however, this Simon was Josephus's main Jewish opponent, because he was the father of Gamaliel II, under whom the school of Jabneh-Jamnia, founded by Johanna b. Zakkai, came to its full flowering. We must look briefly at this foundation.

The town of Jabneh-Jamnia, situated between Jaffa and Ashkelon, was ten kilometers from the sea, to which it was linked by a canal, so that it had a maritime harbor. The town, which had belonged to Judea since the days of the high priest Simon, had been given by Herod to his sister Salome (War 2.98). When she died, this private property passed to the empress Livia, and subsequently became a personal property of Tiberius, her son and heir. Juridically speaking, therefore, it did not belong to Judea, although most of its population was Jewish (Philo, Leg. 200–203). It was here that the controversy about the statue of Caligula in the temple at Jerusalem began, following an insurrection: he wished to punish the Jews for seeking to establish their own law in his domains. In 68, when the Galilean war was extended to Judea, Vespasian took with him “numerous citizens who had surrendered themselves in contradiction of the laws,” and installed garrisons at Jabneh and Ashdod (War 4.130). He then installed “a sufficient number of Jews who had gone over to his side” as inhabitants of the town (4.444). These were probably compelled to take up residence there, and this means that he had imported Galileans.

The rabbinic sources allow us to suppose that Johanan b. Zakkai was a member of this group, and hence that he founded his school before 70. He had held a private school for about twenty years at Arab near Sepphoris (j. Sabb 16:8, p. 15d); a strange Christian legend relates—still in Galilee—that his father (Zakkai-Zacchaeus) was compelled to bow down before the knowledge of the child Jesus (Infancy Gospel of Thomas 6–8).<sup>26</sup> Finally, we are told that he was the last disciple of Hillel the Elder (b. Meg. 13a), the Babylonian from Bathyra. Later traditions relate that he surrendered to Vespasian and predicted to him that he would become emperor; Vespasian then permitted him to settle at Jabne with some teachers. Other accounts relate that after trying in vain to persuade his compatriots in the besieged Jerusalem to abandon a hopeless war, he fled the city, hidden in a coffin, and then made his way to Vespasian, who granted him concessions.<sup>27</sup> This is certainly a transfer, slightly modified, to Johanan of what Josephus writes about himself, with the intention of denying that Josephus played any role as founder, and of implying that Johanan actually came from Jerusalem. The links to Galilee are clear, despite various legends which make him a master of the Sanhedrin who was forced to go into exile from Jerusalem.

Johanan was succeeded by Gamaliel II ca. 90, at the period when Josephus was writing the Antiquities. He was a man of a different caliber. His grandfather Gamaliel I, the teacher of Paul of Tarsus, and his father Simon, whom Josephus criticizes, were well known and leading Pharisees from Jerusalem who accepted the Roman rule. Gamaliel II strengthened the prestige of the school in Jabneh, which he wished to make a point of reference for the entire people. He used his authority to bring together different groups or brotherhoods, and this is the source of the controversies about the law or about political action. Nevertheless, he always respected the Galilean customs. He maintained good contacts with the Roman authorities and visited the Jewish communities as far as Rome itself.

At a later period, when schools were developing around Jabneh, we know little about Galilee until the revolt of Bar Kokhba (132–135). The reasons for this gap in our knowledge are disputed.<sup>28</sup> The clearest elements in the picture concern the general policy of Hadrian, viz. the prohibition of circumcision by all those peoples in the empire who practiced this custom, the elimination of customs deemed barbarous, and projects for founding or rebuilding towns (Jerusalem was only one of these).<sup>29</sup> This was a reprimand of the civilizing policy of Alexander, but we do not know up to what date the temple had continued to function. In other words, we do not know whether Hadrian was a new Antiochus Epiphanes. At any rate, it was after this war that refugees from Judea emigrated to Galilee, in particular the disciples of Aqiba, the master who had believed Bar Kokhba to be the messiah, and who had been executed by the Romans. The documents found in the desert of Judah indicate that these disciples, who later became the masters of the rabbinic tradition, had been removed from the leading circles around Bar Kokhba.<sup>30</sup>

<sup>26</sup> This legend circulated, for it is known to Irenaeus: Adv. Haer. 1.20.1.

<sup>27</sup> Cf. ARN A.4; these accounts are transmitted in several versions, which are presented and commented by J. Neusner, A Life of Yohanan ben Zakkai, ca. 1–80 C.E., 2nd ed., Studia Post-Biblica 6 (Leiden: Brill, 1970), 152–154. I adopt rather different conclusions here, except with regard to the date of Johanan's arrival in Jabneh.

<sup>28</sup> Cf. S. Liebermann, "Persecution of the Jewish Religion," in Festschrift Salo Baron

Subsequently, there are traces of an organization in Galilee around various centers: Usha, Shefaram, Beth-Shearim, Sepphoris, and Tiberias. Usha was the home town of Juda b. Ilai, one of the principal disciples of Aqiba, and the assembly which had its seat there joined up with the "elders of Galilee" (cf. b. Ber. 63b–64a), who are no longer the descendants of Judas the Galilean. When these Galilean schools began to expand, there were disputes with the leaders of the Babylonian communities about questions of precedence and the regulation of the calendar, but we cannot detect any organic links to the Greek-speaking Judaism in the Roman world, which Josephus had sought to address. A lapidary evaluation of this epoch says that to the west of Tyre, the western border of Syria, "one does not know Israel, nor their Father who is in heaven" (b. Men. 110). When the Mishnah was published ca. 200, it was immediately communicated to Babylonia, but not elsewhere. It had a posterity parallel to that which it had in Galilee, viz. the two Talmuds.

We must therefore conclude that at the end of the second century, Jewish Galilee had had a Babylonian culture for at least four centuries, (Jerusalem: Magnes, 1979), 3:214; M. D. Herr, "Causes of the Bar Kokhba Revolt," Zion 43 (1978): 6, with bibliography.

---

<sup>29</sup> According to Dio Cassius, Hist. Rom. 69.12,1–2; cf. the discussion by Schürer, History, 1:537.

<sup>30</sup> Cf. Schürer, History, 1:544 n. 133. The rabbinic tradition, which banished the memory of Bar Kokhba and rejected 1 Maccabees, leaves a gap between the patriarchates of Gamaliel II and his son Simon II. This gap corresponds approximately to the reign of Hadrian.

although this does not exclude various evolutions linked to Judea; and this is how the situation remained until the Byzantine rule in the fourth century. Geographically speaking, this concerned primarily the region around the Sea of Tiberias, where the remains of synagogues have been found.<sup>31</sup>

---

<sup>31</sup> English translation: Brian McNeil.

ON AVOIDING BOTHERSOME BUSYNESS:
Q/LUKE 12:22–31 IN ITS GRECO-ROMAN CONTEXT

GERALD DOWNING

Humans, like other animals, enjoy periods of repose. From the Greco-Roman world around the first century CE we have preserved for us evidence of commonplace reflections on ways to attain peace of mind, if only peace of mind, among the troubles, anxieties, pressures, and stresses of civic life. Some of these reflections are brief and gnomic, with perhaps only one or two motifs in illustration. Others we know of were much longer, dissertations of several thousands of words. Two such longer ones have reached us: Seneca's De tranquillitate, and Plutarch's essay, ΠΕΠΙ ΕΥΘΥΜΙΑΣ, known by the same Latin title, De tranquillitate.<sup>1</sup> Both writers refer to a much older piece by Democritus, the mentor of Epicurus, and both have been thought to depend on a work with the same title by the Stoic Panaetius. Plutarch explains that he went back through his notebooks for ideas on the theme that in the past he had found worthwhile, and Seneca tells us he is fully aware of Greek traditions on the topic. It is clear then that thinkers of different schools joined in the discussion. Both our authors alongside their Epicurean motifs deploy others from the Stoa, with Seneca also referring to a work by Athenadorus; and both include Cynics.<sup>2</sup> For insights into explicitly Epicurean attitudes we have to rely here mostly on Lucretius, from the previous century.

---

<sup>1</sup> Seneca, De tranquillitate, text and trans. in M. Rosebach, ed., L. Annaeus Seneca, Philosophische Schriften, II, Dialoge VII–XII (Darmstadt: Wissenschaftliche Buchgesellschaft, 1971), taken from A. Bourguery and R. Walz, eds. and trans., Sénèque, Dialogues II, III et IV (Paris: Belles Lettres, 1961–65); text and trans. in J. W. Basore, ed. and trans., Seneca II. Moral Essays II, LCL (Cambridge, MA and London: Harvard University Press & Heinemann, 1932), 202–284. Plutarch, De tranquillitate. Moralia 464E–477F, text and trans. in J. Dumortier and J. Defradas, eds. and trans., Plutarque. Œuvres morales VII.i (Paris: Belles Lettres, 1975); text and trans. in W. C. Hembold (ed. and trans.), Plutarch's Moralia VI, LCL (Cambridge, MA and London: Harvard University Press & Heinemann, 1939), 166–245. This present essay is now reprinted in F. G. Downing, God with Everything: The Divine in the Discourse of the First Christian Century, SWBA 2.2 (Sheffield: Sheffield Phoenix Press, 2008), 91–114.

<sup>2</sup> On this literature, see I. Hadot, Seneca und die griechisch-römische Tradition der Seelenleitung (Berlin: de Gruyter, 1969), 135–141; D. Babut, Plutarque et le stoïcisme (Paris: Presses Universitaires de France, 1969), 97–102; H. D. Betz, “De tranquillitate animi (Moralia 464E–477F),” in Plutarch's Ethical Writings and Early Christian Literature, ed. idem (Leiden: Brill, 1978), 198–230; E. J. Osler and L. A. Panizza, “Introduction,” in

The intention of this essay is to consider what light this “pagan” debate may throw on the “Cares” pericope found in Luke 12:22–31 and Matt 6:25–34<sup>3</sup> (and, before them, we may take it, in Q),<sup>4</sup> with echoes in Gospel of Thomas 36, P. Oxy. 655, Justin Martyr, Apol 1.15, and Clement of Alexandria, Paid. 2.1.5–6.

The motifs deployed are often not in fact individually peculiar to this topic, but can crop up again under other headings, singly or in clusters. So a discussion of freedom may involve the issue of retaining an inner freedom under pressure; the topic of friendship may include helping a friend to attain tranquillity.<sup>5</sup> One cluster of motifs that will figure in what follows comes from Musonius, Discourse 15, on raising children. Of two from Dio Chrysostom, Dio of Prusa, one, Discourse 6, is Diogenes, or On Tyranny, and the other, Discourse 10 is traditionally titled “Diogenes, or On Servants”; however, its subject matter is really “usefulness” (what is truly useful, serviceable, is what causes least trouble). A third comes from Epictetus’s Diss. 1.9, on our kinship with God, the God whose rational care pervades the world; convinced of this, our anxieties should depart. A comparison of the two long essays cited and along with them of a number of these shorter clusters and

---

Atoms, Pneuma and Tranquillity: Epicurean and Stoic Themes in European Thought, ed. M. J. Osler (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1991), 1–5; R. S. Smith, Studies in Seneca, De Tranquillitate Animi (Roman Empire), unpublished Ph.D. thesis, University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign, 2000.

<sup>3</sup> H. D. Betz, in his Sermon on the Mount (Hermeneia; Minneapolis: Fortress, 1995), 460, notes that although this passage “contains a comprehensive argument on several of antiquity’s most controversial subjects,” “no comprehensive investigation exists.” In fact in his “De tranquillitate animi” he himself refers to these gospel passages only twice, and only in passing. Other older and more recent discussions are also disappointingly superficial in their attention to the Greco-Roman context here. The most helpful that I have found have been M. F. Olsthorpe, The Jewish Background and the Synoptic Setting of Mt 6,25–33 and Lk 12,22–31, SBFA 10 (Jerusalem: Franciscan Printing Press, 1975); U. Luz, Das Evangelium nach Matthäus I, Mt 1–7, EKK 1.1 (Zürich: Benzinger, 1989), 364–375; Betz, The Sermon, 459–486; F. Bovon, Das Evangelium nach Lukas 2, Lk 9,51–14,35, EKK 3.2 (Zürich: Benzinger, 1996), 292–318; and M. Ebner, Jesus—Ein Weisheitslehrer? Synoptische Weisheitslogien im Traditionsprozess (Freiburg: Herder, 1998), 250–275.

<sup>4</sup> For a recent defence of the Q hypothesis, cf. F. G. Downing, “Disagreements of Each Evangelist with the Minor Close Agreements of the Other Two,” ETL 80.4 (2004): 335–369.

<sup>5</sup> Compare Philo, Quod omnis probus liber sit 21–27; Plutarch, Quomodo adulator ab amico intinoscatur, Moralia 49–74, at 68E–69E; and C. E. Glad, Paul and Philodemus: Adaptability in Epicurean and Early Christian Psychogogy, NovTSup 81 (Leiden: Brill, 1995), 170–171, quoting Cicero, De amicitia 45.

individual apothegms on cares, excerpted from other near contemporary sources, allows us to discern what seems to be a fairly standard set of contributory themes that may elaborate the topic of “cares.” We shall find that a great many of these sub-motifs figure in the two gospel passages, which themselves, of course, form parts, respectively, of Matthew’s and Luke’s bios of the teacher, Jesus; just as an earlier version formed part of a shorter bios, Q. In each they represent this teacher’s mind on the commonplace topic of cares.<sup>6</sup>

The negative terms, the general words for what is either to be coped with or avoided, vary. Plutarch proposes being “storm-free” (465A), avoiding grief and disturbance (λυπή, ταραχή, 465D; cf. Epictetus, Diss. 1.9.7; Dio, Disc. 6.34, and 10.16; Ps.-Crates, Ep. 35.2).<sup>7</sup> Epictetus, Diss. 3.13.13, also talks of the exercise of concern (μελέω), as does Ps.-Crates, Epistle 3. Diogenes Laertius includes care, caution (εὐλάβεια).<sup>8</sup> Seneca’s sage will not be “sollicitus aut anxius” (Ep. mor. 17.9), avoiding iactatio (De tranq. 2.8). Lucretius extols freedom from “dolor,” “cura” and “metus” (De rerum natura 2.18–19). Liddell and Scott list a number of uses of μέριμνα, μεριμνάω alongside citations from Matthew’s pericope, in one instance clustered with grief (and robbery), and note that these words are often used in philosophical contexts.<sup>9</sup>

1. Concerns.<sup>10</sup> Our two aristocratic authors allot most words to the pressures of social expectations, especially to the public affairs in which

<sup>6</sup> For the gospels as bioi, see R. A. Burrige, What are the Gospels? A Comparison with Graeco-Roman Biography, SNTMS 70 (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1992); and for Q as a bios, F. G. Downing, “A Genre for Q and a Socio-cultural Context for Q: Comparing Sets of Similarities with Sets of Differences,” JSNTS 55 (1994): 3–26; reprinted in idem, Doing Things with Words in the First Christian Century, JSNTS 200 (Sheffield: Sheffield Academic Press, 2000), 95–117; and on Greco-Roman philosophical topoi in early Christian writings, W. A. Meeks, “Judaism, Hellenism, and the Birth of Christianity,” in Paul Beyond the Judaism-Hellenism Divide, ed. T. Engberg Pedersen (Louisville: WJK, 2001), 17–27, at 26.

<sup>7</sup> Pseudo-Crates, Epistles, in A. J. Malherbe ed., The Cynic Epistles (Missoula, MT: Scholars Press, 1977), and so for the ensuing quotations from the Cynic Epistles; the translations are from F. G. Downing, Christ and the Cynics, JSOTM 4 (Sheffield: JSOT Press, 1988), as are the quotations from all the other Greek or Roman sources, with texts from LCL.

<sup>8</sup> Diogenes Laertius, Lives of Eminent Philosophers (LEP) VI 22.

<sup>9</sup> H. G. Liddell and R. Scott, A Greek-English Lexicon, 9th ed., ed. S. H. Jones and R. McKenzie (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1968). R. Bultmann, μεριμνάω, κτλ, TDNT 4:589–593, ignores the two discourses on tranquillity, constricted as he is by a word-study approach.

<sup>10</sup> In my “The Jewish Cynic Jesus,” in Jesus, Mark and Q: The Teaching of Jesus and its Earliest Records, ed. M. Labahn and A. Schmidt, JSNTSup 214 (Sheffield: Sheffield Academic Press, 2001), 184–214, at 202–204, I offered a rather simpler analysis of this pericope, but I reproduce here some of the arguments, with kind permission.

they are willingly or unwillingly involved. Seneca's friend Annaeus Senecus explains that he feels impelled to a politically active life, yet finds he cannot settle in it, he is pulled in different directions (De tranq. 1.10–12). Seneca accepts that we should avoid busyness for its own sake, but duty must come first (De tranq. 13.1–2), and interprets Democritus to this effect. Plutarch interprets the same saying of Democritus as urging total retirement from public concerns, but then himself demurs (De tranq. 465c).<sup>11</sup> In many of the shorter sequences on the topic, however, the worry is much more basic. "Suppose I have lots of children, where am I going to get food for them all?" asks Musonius's interlocutor (Discourse 15), echoed in Epictetus (Diss. 1.9.7; cf. 3.13.13; 3.26.27). Plebeian Cynics clearly expect to have to deal with active concerns over hunger and thirst and exposure (Ps.-Crates, Epistle 18; Ps.-Diogenes Ep. 7, 34; 36.5). Yet, interestingly, both Seneca and Plutarch also find room for reference to food and clothing, and bothering about them. Seneca, in fact, discusses the issue with reference to a Diogenes tradition (Seneca, De tranq. 8.8; cf. 1.7–10, 11.9–10; and Ep. mor. 17.9–10), and Plutarch with reference to both Crates and Diogenes, and then to a Socratic tradition itself elsewhere ascribed to Diogenes (De tranq. 466DE; 470F). "What shall we eat, what shall we wear?" are, unsurprisingly, fundamental.

In this discussion some fifteen sub-topics are picked out. It might well be possible to make further sub-divisions in many of them. For instance, in the foregoing I have myself distinguished social pressures and physical needs, and that might seem to warrant two headings, not one. And Seneca and Plutarch further contrast external and internalized social pressures of various kinds. My defence of the procedure adopted is provided by displaying, from other near-contemporary short passages, the analogies for just such sub-complexes.

2. Body and soul. It is also commonplace to find a contrast of values expressed in such opposed terms as  $\omega\chi\acute{\eta}$  and  $\sigma\alpha\rho$ , animus and corpus, urging a conviction that there is more to life than its basic physical needs. This might well not be unexpected from people with rich intellectual and social lives (and financial wealth and security), such as our two main authors, and that is what we find (e.g., Seneca, De tranq. 1.6; 1.12; 17.8–11; Plutarch, De tranq. 465A; 475BC; compare Lucretius, De rerum natura 2.18, corpus and mens). Yet a similar dualism is also to be found among the other sources adduced here. So in Ps.-Crates,

<sup>11</sup> Retirement is, of course, Lucretius' recipe: De rerum natura 2.1–19.

Epistle 3 we read, μελέτω ὑμῖν τῆς ψυχῆς, τοῦ δὲ σώματος ὅσον ἀνάγκη, τῶν δ' ἔξωθεν μηδ' ὅσον ("take care of your life/soul/self; and of your body, but only as much as is really necessary; and to mere externals pay even less attention still" (compare Ps.-Crates, Epistles 10.3; 34.2; Ps.-Diogenes, Ep. 15; 31.4; Dio, Disc. 6.11). There is more to life than producing food, more to bodily well-being than producing clothes.<sup>12</sup> And if divine power pervades and sustains plants and bodies, even more must it sustain our lives/souls (Epictetus, Diss. 1.14.5–6).

3. Inner resources. However, here there is a significant contrast. Stoic, Epicurean and Platonic thinkers all agree that strength of soul must be attained first. With a strong soul established, a person (usually expected to be male) will be able to cope with both physical and social and spiritual troubles. What matters are "inner" resources, a "calm mind" that allows one "to be reconciled to one's lot" (Seneca, De tranq. 10.4; compare 3.9). "Multum et in se recedendum est," he urges (De tranq. 17.3); one may also compare Epictetus: "We make a fuss about our little bodies, about our piffling property, about what Caesar thinks of us. And about what's going on inside? Not a thought!" (Diss. 2.13.11; cf. 3.26.2; 4.1.22). Only a well-trained rationality is of use, insists Plutarch (De tranq. 465B; compare 466F). Our resources are in the soul (473BC; compare Lucretius, De rerum natura 2.7–8). Notably, both Plutarch and Seneca portray even Cynic heroes in this same light. Seneca's Diogenes is "vir ingentis animi," "great-souled" (De tranq. 8.4). It is inner reason, Plutarch surmises, that allows Crates and Diogenes to laugh at circumstances. Yet Cynics themselves take a very different stance. For them there is not the long haul of attaining mental self-discipline, but the short cut of physical askêsis.<sup>13</sup> To live well, you must "do philosophy, but not as others do; rather, as Antisthenes began to do it, and as Diogenes perfected it" (Ps.-Crates, Epistle 6; compare e.g. Ps.-Diogenes, Ep. 36.4–7). The emphasis on inner, mental training is also missing from the gospel sequence. As in our Cynic instances, we are taken straight to the physical example of wild creatures.

<sup>12</sup> Read thus, there is no call to imagine that Luke 11:23 deploys a quite different, and discrepant, dualistic usage of body and soul language, in contrast to the complementarity of v. 22. In fact, we may see that complementarity is retained.

<sup>13</sup> C. Gill, "Peace of Mind and Being Yourself: Panaetius to Plutarch," ANRW II 36.7 (1994), 4599–4640, discusses interestingly interpretations of authority, in relation to modern issues of "self." He does not discuss the ascetic practices involved, and makes no mention of the other similar clusters of ascetic motifs that constitute the focus here. See M.-O. Goulet-Cazé, L'ascèse cynique: Un commentaire de Diogène Laërce VI 70–71 (Paris: Vrin, 1986), 22–28; and "Le cynisme à l'époque impériale," ANRW II 36.4 (Berlin: de Gruyter, 1990), 2720–2823, at 2759–2763, 2806–2812.

4. Wild animals. In fact, both Plutarch and Seneca also allude to animals, Seneca disparagingly to the apparently random “inconsultus” activity of ants (De tranq. 12.3), Plutarch, unadmirably, to savage dogs (465C, 468D). Plutarch’s bees, however, are wise in their choice of unlikely flowers (467C), while the Nature that teaches animals their respective ways to acquire food is the Nature that instructs humans precisely to shepherd and plough and hunt and fish (473A). Lucretius is equally sure that “nature” taught humans to sow seeds, and even to graft; and is pleased with animals displaying a placid usefulness to humans, but not more than that (De rerum natura 5.1361–1362; 3.302–306; 5.871–877).

By contrast we may note Epictetus, with his leanings to an idealized Cynicism:

“Won’t having God as our maker and father and guardian be good enough to release us from grief and fear?”... “And what shall I do for food?”... “Are you going to be wretchedly inferior to the dumb beasts, when each of them is self-sufficient, and suffers no lack of food, nor of any other appropriate natural necessity for its kind of life?” (Diss. 1.9.7–9).

So, too, we may recall Musonius,

“Good God, that’s all very well, but I’m a poor man without property. Suppose I have lots of children, where am I going to get food for them all?” “Well, where do the little birds go to get food to feed their young, though they’re much worse off than you are—the swallows and nightingales and larks and blackbirds? Do they store away in safekeeping?” (Dis. 15).

And there are a great many more examples from more clearly Cynic sources, with Diogenes learning from a mouse (LEP 6.22) and from a snail (Ps.-Diogenes, Epistle 16); and, especially there are dogs, of course (Ps.-Crates, Epistles 16, 29, Ps.-Diogenes, Epistles 2, 7). Dio’s Diogenes, explaining his seasonal travels, cites the examples of storks and cranes, of deer and hares (Disc. 6.32–34). The most quoted example in this connexion is, of course, from another of Dio’s Diogenes Disc. 10.16 (more of the passage will be discussed later):

Why not consider the beasts and the birds, and see how much more painlessly they live than humans do, how much more pleasantly and healthily? They are stronger, and each lives the longest possible span for their kind—despite lacking hands or human intelligence.

And we may compare Disc. 6.13, 21, 32–33.

5. Flowers. I have not been able to find any passage other than the gospel one that directly invites us to emulate the easy life of flowers as such, and that despite their short lives. That divine care for plants is itself part of the whole scheme that includes divine care for humans is, however, forcefully asserted by Epictetus, who does include the fall of leaves and fruit (Diss. 1.14.3, already cited above). Looking at flowers and grass should induce tranquillity, suggest both Lucretius (De rerum natura 2.20–36) and Plutarch (De tranq. 469A); for the latter, contemplating the natural world, including “plants and animals” should help us put things into a divine perspective (477CD). The comparative beauty of simple Athens and Corinth is extolled by Dio’s Diogenes, over against the royal extravagance of Ecbatana and Babylon (Disc. 6.4–5).

6. Kings and Wealthy Others. However, an unflattering comparison with the clothing and other trappings of the wealthy, and especially of kings and tyrants, and “others” in general (“the nations”) is quite frequent in the longer pieces; we may include Seneca, De tranq. 1.8; 9.4–7; Plutarch, De tranq. 470B; 471EF; Dio, Discourse 6, passim.<sup>14</sup> We may also note “the Greeks” in Ps.-Anacharsis 9; the wealthy, in Ps.-Crates, Epistle 7; various other peoples, Ps.-Crates, Epistle 13; but also Lucretius (De rerum natura 2.20–36, again).

7. Human worth. It is also worth noting that in some of these passages, as in the gospel pericope, to humans is nonetheless ascribed higher status than that accorded the admired birds or beasts. “Have these creatures more intelligence than humans have? You’d not say so” (Musonius, Disc. 15; compare Epictetus, Diss. 1.9.9; 1.14.3; Dio, Disc. 10.16). (As we have seen, Seneca and Plutarch are also sure of human rational superiority, as is Lucretius, De rerum natura 3.753.)

8. Women and men. The longer essays include some specific reference to women’s likely attitudes to busy cares, and are disparaging (Seneca, De tranq. 16.2; cf. 17.4; Plutarch, De tranq. 465D). Lucretius approves of spinning and weaving, as originally male activities, men being cleverer than women (De rerum natura 5.1354–1360). Ps.-Crates rebukes his partner, Hipparchia, for weaving him a tunic and playing the part of a conventional wife; but insists that the same excellence is available to women as to men (Epistles 28 and 30). When we come to the admired example of non-human animals, there is no distinction (Ps.-Crates, Epistle 29; compare Ps.-Diogenes, Ep. 36.4–5; Dio, Disc. 10.16, again).<sup>15</sup> In the gospel pericope we seem to have examples of typically male and female work paired for equal rejection (weaving and spinning; and perhaps sowing and reaping).

---

<sup>14</sup> On the splendour of kings, there is the well-known response of Solon when Croesus in full regalia asked if he had ever seen anything more beautiful. “Yes,” says Solon, “cocks, pheasants, peacocks, for they have their natural decoration and brilliance, a thousand times more splendid” (LEP 1.51).

9. Toil as such. What is most deprecated is laborious work, toil, busyness. Seneca and Plutarch are sure that one may be trained to cope without undue disturbance. Lucretius sees no need for luxuries, but approves of moderate (and peaceful) human technological productivity: not only the spinning and weaving, sowing and grafting we noted above, but also metalwork (De rerum natura 5.1251–1456). For a disparagement of toil (πόνος) as such we have to turn to Cynic sources, for instance Ps.-Anacharsis 9. Dio's Diogenes talks of "many useless labours" expended on conventionally valued goods (πολλὰ πονήσεις μάτην, 10.16), Ps.-Crates, Epistle 4, probably playing on the secondary use of ponos as "pain," urges that the only worthwhile toil (the painstaking Cynic askêsis) is that which averts toil.<sup>16</sup> The gospel pericope at this point appears to follow the distinctive Cynic line.

10. Possessions. Seneca's friend Serenus is already accustomed to relative simplicity: rural silverware rather than fashionable luxury (De tranq. 1.7–10). Seneca commends the standard Stoic stance on wealth: as long as one has no psychological need of it, one may safely enjoy it (5.4). It is only possessiveness that endangers peace of mind (8.3). Plutarch agrees: it is not circumstances that disturb, but wrong attitudes (De tranq. 466C; 471A). For Lucretius, the trouble lies in the urge to outdo others (De rerum natura 2.9–14); but an Epicurean simple sufficiency is clearly quite comfortable (one may compare Philodemus's mansion at Herculaneum). For Cynics, property itself enslaves (Ps.-Crates, Epistle 8; Ps.-Diogenes, Ep. 37.6; Ps.-Heraclitus 8.3), and dispossession is the only safe way (so, too, Epictetus, of the ideal Cynic, Diss. 4.8.31). And thus Musonius's parent birds do well to be without stores (Discourse 15, again); and Dio's Diogenes says that the beasts and birds "have one enormous advantage to counter-balance any ills they may suffer—they are free of property" (Disc. 10.16, again; cf. 6.34). Yet once more, the gospel pericope sides with the Cynics.

<sup>15</sup> If we allow that Musonius's askêsis is Cynic (even though his metaphysics are Stoic), we may include the analogy of parent birds, the mother in particular, coping with the problems of parenthood, Discourse 15; for Musonius's askêsis as Cynic, see Goulet-Cazé, L'ascèse cynique, 187–188.

<sup>16</sup> Compare, of course, Lucian's satire on the artisans who adopt Cynicism as, he avers, simply work-shy, Fugitivi 17; compare Dio's Cynic Diogenes, Disc. 10.12; doing without a slave is better than having one, since it involves less work. On this, see Goulet-Cazé on "Les ponoi inutiles," in L'ascèse cynique, 53–57.

11. Food there is. A number of our responses to anxiety offer the (optimistic) assurance that there is no need to starve; food, if only the simplest, is readily available. "Lots of things grow from the earth and can satisfy hunger," insists Ps.-Diogenes (Ep. 36.4–5); and Plutarch quotes Simonides on "the fruit of the spacious earth" (De tranq. 470D; compare Lucretius, De rerum natura 5.11.19; Ps.-Diogenes, Ep. 37.5; Dio, Diss. 6.13, 22, 28, 62; and 10.16; and, probably, Seneca, De tranq. 9.2).

12. Divine provision. Yet quite a number of the sources (not Lucretius, of course) are also sure that such sustenance comes out of divine awareness and by divine provision (however variously "divine" is understood).<sup>17</sup> Epictetus is more ready than is Seneca to speak of deity in personal terms: "Another, whose business it is, provides food and clothing" (Diss. 3.13.13). This is "God our maker and father and guardian" (who also provides for the dumb beasts: Diss. 1.9.7, 9, again; compare 3.24.16). Seneca does have God's "omnia dantis, nihil habentis" (De tranq. 8.5), but will as readily talk of Nature as the giver (11.3), as does Plutarch (De tranq. 472F). Plutarch agrees with Plato that the world is to be contemplated for its beautiful representation of the divine mind (477CD), rather than as the setting for individual divine care (but perhaps compare 465B). On the other hand, Musonius's assurance of divine care for parent birds follows a reference to prayer to the Gods for human parents (Discourse 15, again). Cynicism as such ranged from near atheist to quite pious, and so to Diogenes can also be ascribed "human life had been made very easy by the Gods" (LEP 6.22); and the assurance that he can "roam the whole world as a free man under father Zeus" (Ps.-Diogenes, Ep. 34.3; cf. Dio, Diss. 6.25).<sup>18</sup> The reference to divine care in the gospel passage leaves it well within the range of the other examples with which it is being compared.

<sup>17</sup> R. Bultmann, μεριμνάω, insists that in the gospel pericope God's lordship is made the human being's first concern, and "this thought distinguishes the admonition... from Stoic par. (Epictetus Diss. 1.9.7ff...)." The harder question, just how different, is not explained; but see below, on "seeking his kingdom" (14).

<sup>18</sup> On Cynic piety, see J.H. Moles, "Le cosmopolitisme cynique," in Le cynisme ancien et ses prolongements: Actes du Colloque internationale de C.N.R.S., ed. M.-O. Goulet-Cazé and R. Goulet (Paris: Presses Universitaires de France, 1993), 259–280.

13. Human limitations. The gospel passage reminds hearers how little their anxiety can achieve. So Serenus keeps reminding himself to lower his sights, curb his ambitions (Seneca, De tranq. 1.11, 13–14); Seneca agrees, limitations must be acknowledged, “ante omnia necesse est se ipsum aestimare, quia fere plus nobis videmur posse quam possumus” (6.2; cf. 10.4–5; we may compare, again, Lucretius, De rerum natura 2.15–19). I do not find this motif clearly expressed in Plutarch’s essay, though one might include his aside on Alexander’s overweening ambition (De tranq. 466D). One might also note Dio’s observation that each living thing appears to have an allotted lifespan (Disc. 10.16; cf. 6.22); and compare Epictetus on seasonal growth and decline (Diss. 1.14.3, again).

14. His kingdom. For “seek first his kingdom” I found no clear or direct verbal analogy in either of the long essays. For Lucretius, the gods are real, but dwell apart in undisturbed tranquillity (De rerum natura 1.45–49). However, Plutarch does (with Plato, as noted earlier) end by urging his hearers above all to contemplate the divine reality mirrored in the natural world (De tranq. 477CD). Seneca also ends with an encouragement to seek divine inspiration and achieve sublime heights (De tranq. 17.11). The gospel passages are not alone in reaching a climax in reference to the divine. A Cynic who had taken the shortcut to a carefree existence is sharing the life of the Gods (Dio, Disc. 6.31) and/or might be expected to claim that he or she had entered her or his kingdom, seen as the returned Golden Age, the kingdom of Cronos.<sup>19</sup> (This is not to say that the words convey the same sense; but there is at least an overlap in usage.)

15. Sufficient to the day. Matthew’s sequence has an appendix with “each day has troubles enough of its own,” lacking in Luke. But a similar sentiment is expressed by Seneca’s Serenus, “minore labore opus est studentibus in diem,” “those who study for immediate use have less toil” (De tranq. 1.14 [1.13]). Plutarch actually quotes Epicurus, “The one who least needs the morrow goes on most happily to meet the morrow” (De tranq. 474C). Dio in Discourse 6 argues that much of the wretchedness of tyrants consists in their being unable to live one day at a time, <sup>19</sup> Epictetus, Diss. 4.8.34, in a discussion (30–43) of attaining ataraxia; compare 3.22.79, and “you’ll not only share table-fellowship with the Gods, you’ll share their rule,” Ench. 15; Demetrius, in Seneca, De beneficiis 7.10.6; Lucian, Fugitivi 12, 17; and see F. G. Downing, Cynics, Paul and the Pauline Churches (London: Routledge, 1998), 88–90.

36–37. It must be held significant that Matthew saw fit to add or retain 6:34 as entirely appropriate in such a sequence.

This brief survey has displayed fifteen distinguishable motifs relating to overcoming anxieties. That they are genuinely distinguishable is shown by the appearance of most of them singly or in different combinations in other near-contemporary Greco-Roman writings. A different reader might discover yet more themes in common in the two long essays and in other such brief or longer discussions of anxiety, or might, as noted earlier, sub-divide them differently. The motifs as here distinguished are ones for the most part found both in the gospel passages and/or also passages from roughly contemporary Cynic or near-Cynic sources that I collated some years ago.<sup>20</sup> They are not simply determined by the gospel set: we have, as an important example, the emphasis on “inner resources” (3), insistent in the longer essays, but entirely absent from the gospel passages. On the other hand, for urging the example of flowers (5) I have not been able to find any clear analogy elsewhere; nor any very close analogy for talk of “his kingdom” (14). And the final motif (15) in the list, while found in both the long essays, occurs in only one of the gospels.

The order in which the motifs are presented here is, with the exception of (3), that of the gospel pericopae. However, the order as such does not seem to be set: at least in Seneca’s and Plutarch’s respective essays the order differs, even though they both had access to some of the same sources. Their themes may still usefully be compared with each other, and with the gospel sets. Nor should the difference in length deter us. We know from the progymnasmata and from Quintilian that people learned from school days to “expand and condense.”<sup>21</sup> Dio’s Discourses 4 and 6, on Diogenes, can be read as expansions of some very brief chreiai found elsewhere (6 presents elaborate versions of themes in 10.16). Yet it is by no means clear that short chreiai are primary; 10.16 could represent a condensation of themes treated at length in 6.<sup>22</sup> Certainly, as we have already seen, many of our themes can themselves be stated elaborately or briefly.

<sup>20</sup> Downing, Christ and the Cynics, 50 and 68–71. In “The Jewish Cynic Jesus,” I had not yet analyzed as full a tally of motifs (202–204).

<sup>21</sup> R. F. Hock and E. N. O’Neill, eds. and trans., The Chreia in Ancient Rhetoric I: The Progymnasmata (Atlanta: Scholars Press, 1986); Quintilian, Inst. 13.2.

<sup>22</sup> See J. F. Kindstrand, “Diogenes Laertius and the Chreia Tradition,” Elenchos 7 (1986): 219–243.

It seems now worth suggesting some interim conclusions. Among motifs that could in some if not all instances be used under various headings (as noted earlier), there would seem to have been in circulation in discussions of threatening busy cares and of tranquillity sought in the face of them at least fifteen motifs that can be discerned in the sources here quarried. All fifteen (and maybe more) could be brought together in extended discourses. Individual motifs or smaller selections could also be deployed in much briefer discussions of cares, troubles, fussy busyness, within explicitly distinct over-arching contexts.

Thus in the passage where Musonius (Discourse 15), discussing child-rearing, comes to debate potential parental concerns, we have reference to divine assistance (12), the need for food (1), the example of wild birds (4), gender inclusive (8), birds which are much worse off, weaker and less intelligent than humans (7), lacking stores (10), yet food there is for them (11): seven motifs. (One might possibly also compare the appeal to the “beauty” of a big family at festival with (6), the “glory” of flowers.)

Similarly, his pupil Epictetus, discussing human kinship with deity, raises the issue of inconsistent griefs and fears, and responds with trust in God as maker, father, guardian (12), instead of worrying about food (1), when food there is (11), for those without possessions (10), and cites the example of wild animals (4), gender inclusive (8), to whom humans are nonetheless superior (7): again, the same seven motifs (Diss. 1.9.7–9).

In Discourse 6, his discussion of tyranny (in effect, “uneasy lies the head that wears a crown”), Dio considers (1) trouble taken over food, drink and clothing (10–16, 26–28), and (for the tyrant) security, 38; cf. 60. Body and soul (2) are involved, 6.11. Wild animals (4), birds and mammals, appear frequently. The whole piece is about rulers, tyrants (6). Toil as such is described at length (5, 16, 29, 31, 34). Personal possessions (10), such as houses, 4–7, 28, 37, wealth as a lure (49), or to be bequeathed (34), are despised. Food (11) there is, 13, 22, 28, 62. Zeus begrudges nothing that is really good (12). Unlike self-indulgent humans, animals (barring violence) live their full life-span (13). Diogenes does not here speak of his kingdom, but he can live the life of the Gods (item 14, 6.31). But a tyrant is so tormented that he cannot live a day at a time (15), in the day longing for night, in the night for day (37). We have here 11 of our fifteen themes, seven of them at length and clearly, the other four only in passing.

Much more briefly, when debating trouble-free usefulness in a passage to which we have already frequently referred (Disc. 10.15–16), Dio talks of particular griefs (1; food itself was discussed earlier), and then the theme of useless toil (πολλὰ πονήσεις μάτην, 9), points to the wild beasts and birds (4), gender inclusive (8), to their span of life (13), despite their inferior intelligence and lack of hands (7), and commends their lack of property (μέγιστον ἀγαθὸν ὅτι ἀκτήμονά ἐσπν, 10): seven motifs, with perhaps one more (11) implicit in the claim that wild things, if not humans, do live their full span of life.

There are, of course, shorter clusters still. Ps.-Diogenes, Ep. 36.4–5 includes poverty (10), food and clothing (1), the availability of food (11), and the example of the beasts (4). Epictetus, Diss. 2.13.11, can consider bodies (2) as contrasted with the inner life (3), and property (10).

It happens that in the two gospels we have particularly rich examples of a quite brief admonition on the theme, with Luke including thirteen of our fifteen strands, and Matthew fourteen. In the words of H. D. Betz, “much thought has gone into it and is contained in an extremely condensed form.”<sup>23</sup> What is worth noting is that this seems to be our one and only example of such a full sequence from earlier or near-contemporary Jewish sources. Betz and his predecessors and successors are able to find just a handful of similar individual motifs scattered in the Jewish sources, but that is all. By the first century CE, other Greco-Roman encompassing topics had been adopted by Jewish writers, but not that of tranquillity in the face of troublesome concerns. Even Philo, who can write about “providence” and “freedom” and “the eternity of the world” and “the virtues” and more, and deploys the term εὐθυμία, gives it no extended treatment. He insists that εὐθυμία is sustained by a conviction of divine providential spiritual provision (De plantatione 90–92; compare De migratione 164–65, De mutatione 131).<sup>24</sup> That seems to be all. We may presumably take it for granted that Jewish people in ancient times did relish peace of mind. In the canonical scriptures we may note, for example, Deut 28:65, 1 Sam 4:13, Job 11:18, Eccl 2:23, and perhaps Prov 15:15; also LXX Ps 54:22 and Sir 40:1–7. Presumably, ancient Israelites had further ways to articulate their responses to harassing concerns. But no Jewish thinker of our period or before, other than the author(s) of this piece, produced (or, at least, have had preserved for us) such rich systematic (brief or extended) reflections on cares and tranquillity, either independently, or in reliance on alien sources

<sup>23</sup> Betz, The Sermon, 460; Luz, Matthäus, 364; Bovon, Lukas, 295–297.

<sup>24</sup> For a discussion, see Betz, “De Tranquillitate Animi,” 204–205.

Some of the individual motifs are, as just noted, and as is well known, to be found in our Jewish sources. M. F. Olsthorpe, in Jewish Background, includes matter from midrashim which he takes to be early. Some, including the present author, are not convinced of the relevance of that material; however, in the event none of it as adduced by Olsthorpe provides any close parallels to the complex as a whole, or even to such smaller but still sizable selections of relevant motifs as we have found in the non-Jewish material.<sup>25</sup> There are coincidences of subject matter. (1) There is a very partial resonance with the Sabbatical Year question (Lev 25:20, LXX), “What shall we eat (τί φαγόμεθα) since we will neither sow (σπεύρομεν) nor gather the produce” (but here there is to be reliance on past sowing and gathering).<sup>26</sup> Rabbis can be quoted acknowledging the need for food and clothing: but are not criticized for it. The escaped slaves complain about lack of food in the wilderness (Exod 16:3), and that is reprehensible; although the good wife’s busy concern with food and clothing is commended (Prov 31:13–15; compare Sir 29:1). (4) Wild beasts are on occasion admired, ants, for instance, but precisely for their work and their storage systems (Prov 6:6 and 30:25), and not for any insouciance (nor in the Rabbinica). (5) Flowers are admired in the Song of Songs, but not to the disadvantage of Solomon in splendour (Cant 2:1–2; 3:7–10). (7) That humans are worth more than (other) animals is implicit, but not, I think, specifically stated. Toil, as already noted, (9) is encouraged, not disparaged. The poor who depend faithfully on God may have his special care, but, again as already noted, storing (10) is admired, and possessions are a blessing. There is only one important common motif, and that is the divine provision of food for beasts and humans (12; with 11 implicit); e.g., Ps 104:21–23, 27, etc.; compare 147:8–9, taken up in Rabbinic writings). But this is in no way an excuse to give up work (Ps 104:23), which is what the divinely provided sunshine encourages and regulates.<sup>27</sup> And clearly God is king <sup>25</sup> Olsthorpe, Jewish Background. He accepts (6) that he had not been able to explore the wider Greco-Roman literature. Had he done so, he might have been less confident in presenting his specifically Jewish material as so immediately relevant.

<sup>26</sup> Noted, but uncritically, by S. Freyne, Jesus: A Jewish Galilean (London & New York: T&T Clark, 2005), 47.

<sup>27</sup> Compare Olsthorpe, Jewish Background, 26–27; dependence on divine provision there is for sure; but there are no injunctions on that basis to desist from toil; cf. Pss Sol. 5.8–11, adduced by W. Eckey, Das Lukasevangelium unter Berücksichtigung seiner Parallelen (Neukirchen-Vluyn: Neukirchener, 2004), 2:589.

in canonical texts, and people are encouraged in the Psalms to seek him (14); yet “kingdom” and “seeking his kingdom” (14) are unparalleled. The only remotely close and possibly near-contemporary Jewish parallel to the saying on “the morrow” (15) comes in the very Greek Ps.-Phocylides (116–121).<sup>28</sup>

When we look carefully, some topics similar to those in our gospel pericope are touched on in the canonical texts (and in later rabbinic writings), but almost always to a quite different effect. As Betz concludes, of the version in Matthew, “One must see the position taken . . . in the context of this wider [Greco-Roman] debate.”<sup>29</sup> However, I shall argue, as already indicated, and on the basis of the examples surveyed above, that it is the specifically Cynic form of the debate, all but ignored by Betz, which is the most significant. In this we part company with Betz, who makes divine provision, “providence” (12), the dominant motif, and we concentrate rather on the life-style that is inculcated, and to which more of the sequence seems to be devoted.<sup>30</sup> Similarly, we may affirm F. Bovon’s initial assertion in the following passage, while finding ourselves in detailed disagreement with his ensuing emphatic qualifications of it:

Lukas scheint seinen hellenistischen und städtischen Lesern und Leserinnen [Hörern und Hörerinnen?] dasselbe Ideal vorzuschlagen wie die griechischen oder lateinischen Weisen seiner Zeit. Oder zumindest entscheidet er sich dazu, dieselben Fehler wie sie zu bekämpfen. Aber, im Unterschied zu ihnen zählt er weder auf die philosophische Meditation noch auf die persönliche Disziplin, um diese Befreiung zu erlangen und zu innerer Ruhe zu kommen; er setzt im Gegenteil auf das Vertrauen in Gott, der sich väterlich mit seinen Geschöpfen befasst.<sup>31</sup>

<sup>28</sup> Betz, The Sermon, 484 n. 481, also cites Prov 1:27; Sir 10:10; 11:18; 20:15, none of which seems particularly apposite. In this connection it was disappointing to find how meagre were the passages selected for comparison in K. Berger and C. Colpe, Texte zum Neuen Testament I: Religionsgeschichtliches Textbuch zum Neuen Testament (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1987), 100–102.

<sup>29</sup> Betz, The Sermon, 464–65; see also Bovon, Lukas, 294–95, 309–310 (but see below). J. N. Jones, “‘Think of the Lilies’ and Prov 6:6–11,” HTR 88.1 (1995): 175–77, argues that our pericope is a direct reversal of the Proverbs passage. The ethos is certainly very different, but there are not enough of the relevant motifs in those verses in Proverbs for that to be taken as basic or particularly formative.

<sup>30</sup> Betz, The Sermon, 463–65. Cynics are noted in passing, 473 n. 393; 474 n. 396.

<sup>31</sup> Bovon, Lukas, 310. We may also note the conclusion of R. A. Martin, Studies in the Life and Ministry of the Historical Jesus (Lanham, MD and London: University Press of America, 1995), 76 that “this unit has clear original Greek frequencies”; as noted with approval by Robinson and Heil, “The Lilies,” 24, and J. S. Kloppenborg, Excavating Q: The History and Setting of the Sayings Gospel (Edinburgh: T&T Clark, 2000), 77 n. 33. I have not been able to assess Martin’s detailed arguments.

It may well be the case that both in intention and in effect in the gospel and Acts as a whole Luke was urging on his hearers a distinctive trust in God's parental care. However, had he meant to make any such distinctiveness clear here, he would have needed to phrase the whole very differently, for every motif, as we have shown, clearly echoes motifs readily found in contemporary Greco-Roman writings; as does not least the motif of trust in divine fatherly care. As a set of Greek words this passage in Luke is, of course, unique, as is Matthew's version; but so too is each of the illustrative passages adduced. In terms of recognizable motifs, there is nothing here that is distinctive, and we may assume that Luke (and Matthew) would be aware of that, and content with it. Taken singly and taken in this combination, the passage offers ground that overlaps with what listeners would be likely to have heard in public discourse in their Greek towns and cities. By adding or retaining 6:34, Matthew has signalled a clear awareness and acceptance of the family resemblance.

That this is so appears particularly clearly in Clement of Alexandria, who produces his own variation among the themes, using scriptural and non-scriptural wording, but to deal not with anxiety but (see the full context) with gluttony, fussing over exotic food:

No one is deprived of necessities (11), no human is overlooked, for there is one who feeds fowl and fish (4), and, in short, all the brute beasts, and that's God (12). They lack not a single thing, despite not fussing (μὴ μεριμνῶσι) (9) over food (1). And we are superior to them (7), as their masters, and more nearly akin to God, in so far as more temperate. We exist, not for eating and drinking, but as people coming to a knowledge (14?) of God (Paid. 2.1.5–6).

It is obvious that for Clement our gospel pericope belongs in this field, and can be mixed quite naturally with other variants. We may note such non-scriptural terms as “necessities” (τὰ ἀναγκαῖα), “brute/irrational beasts” (τὰ ἄλογα) “there is one who” (εἷς ἐστιν), “more akin to God in so far as more temperate” (θεῷ οικειότεροι, ὅσω σωφρονέστεροι), as well as the ready variant, ‘fish’. Ending with “knowledge of God” (rather than “kingdom”), aligns Clement, of course, with Seneca and Plutarch.<sup>32</sup>

<sup>32</sup> Text in O. Stählin, ed., Die Griechischen Christlichen Schriftsteller der ersten drei Jahrhunderte. Clemens Alexandrinus (Leipzig: Heinrichs, 2005). In Paid. 2.11, Clement uses two themes of the passage to deal with fussing over dress styles; in Strom. 4.6, he quotes the ending rather more precisely, in order to persuade to “the gnostic

There are, however, various formal analyses of this passage that tend to occlude—by ignoring—its Greco-Roman resonances. In his collected studies on Q, C. M. Tuckett asserts,

It is widely acknowledged that Q 12:23 (the ψυχή is more than food, and the σῶμα more than clothing) does not fit well after the exhortation in v. 22 not to worry about food or clothing. The motives given in v. 23 on the one hand, and in vv. 22, 24, 26–28 on the other, for the general advice not to worry are different: in vv. 24, 26–28 there is no grading of concerns but simply an assurance that God will provide; v. 23 however introduces a contrast between the more important ψυχή—σῶμα and the less important food and clothing. It looks very much as if either v. 23 has been added secondarily to vv. 22, 24 and 26–28, or vice-versa... [This latter is judged less likely]... So, too, v. 25, interrupting the twin appeals to examples from nature (ravens/birds and lilies) and introducing a quite different kind of argument appealing to human inability to solve the problems of anxiety, is almost universally regarded as a secondary addition to the earlier tradition.

A third addition may occur in vv. 30a, 31, in the references to the gentiles and the kingdom... The easiest solution is to see vv. 30a, 31, with their national and eschatological appeals, as secondary.<sup>33</sup>

It does not seem necessary to tell us why these distinctions discerned by twentieth-century western Europeans would have been so striking that a first-century east Mediterranean speaker, Jesus or a follower, could not have combined themes such as these from the start; and this, despite the fact that some supposed early redactor did find them compatible and the sequence entirely coherent; as, obviously, also did Matthew and Luke. And such pulling apart must look particularly strange when we see how readily other near contemporaries could also assemble such motifs in various combinations; indeed, even more of them in the longer works of Seneca and Plutarch discussed above. The criteria deployed in such disruptive analyses are anachronistic.

---

life.” Clement seems to be missing from such Wirkungsgeschichten of our pericope as I have encountered.

<sup>33</sup> C. M. Tuckett, Q and the History of Early Christianity: Studies on Q (Edinburgh: T&T Clark, 1996), 149–150, citing D. Zeller, D. Catchpole, U. Luz, J. S. Kloppenborg and P. Hoffmann for v. 23, and R. Bultmann, J. Jeremias, D. Zeller, J. S. Kloppenborg, R. A. Piper and P. Hoffmann for v. 25. Possibly vv. 25–26 are intended; compare J. D. G. Dunn, Jesus Remembered (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2003), 552; and J. M. Robinson and C. Heil, “The Lilies of the Field: Saying 36 of the Gospel of Thomas and Secondary Accretions in Q 12.22b-31,” NTS 47 (2001): 1–25. Tuckett’s attention, 389 n. 15, to “the paucity of Cynic parallels” in Berger and Colpe, Religionsgeschichtliches Textbuch presupposes in that work a comprehensive aim and achievement, for neither of which is there evidence.

More attention is worth paying, for instance, to Quintilian, on “inventio,” bringing together from notes or from memory relevant arguments and illustrations. He contrasts brief utterances with those where one does need a good memory so as to be able “to say everything demanded by the subject (omnia quae res postulat dicere)” (Inst. 3.3.2).<sup>34</sup> Later he allows, “Even the unlearned often possess the gift of inventio, and no great learning need be assumed for the satisfactory arrangement of subject matter” (Inst. 8.3.2). “There are certain arguments which are light-weight and weak when they stand alone, but which have great force when produced in a body” (Inst. 4.5.7).<sup>35</sup> Quintilian’s primary concern is forensic oratory, but the advocate has to engage his audience, and so “must not the orator breathe life into the argument and develop it? Must he not vary and diversify it by a thousand figures, and do all this in such a way that it seems to come into being as the very child of nature, not to reveal an artificial manufacture and a suspect art?” (Inst. 5.14.32). An appeal to ordinary hearers cannot usefully deploy a strictly logical progression of inferences. “Eloquence therefore must not restrict itself to narrow tracks, but range at large over open fields” (Inst. 5.14.30–31). And this is precisely what we have found Quintilian’s contemporaries, Seneca and Plutarch, doing; as also the other authors on whom we have drawn, including the author(s) of our gospel pericope; and as we have seen Clement do, later.

If, nonetheless, we were to accept the suggested excisions, it would in fact not make a great deal of difference to the foregoing argument. We would retain (2), reference to body and soul/life, even if we lost v. 23. And, anyway, we argued above that vv. 22 and 23 are not in conflict in their use of body and soul talk.<sup>36</sup> (13), the note on the limits of human powers, would go completely with the loss of vv. 25–26. This theme is not one of those best evidenced in the illustrative sources adduced; however, for a brief argument in favour of seeing it at home in the text as a whole, see further, below.<sup>37</sup> An unfavourable comparison with others is implicit throughout, so the loss of 30a would make no difference to (6). The excision of v. 31, and the kingdom, would lose us theme (14).

<sup>34</sup> Quintilian, in H. E. Butler ed. and trans., Quintilian, LCL, 4 vols. (Cambridge, MA and London: Harvard University Press and Heinemann, 1920–), slightly adapted.

<sup>35</sup> On this, compare Ad Herennium 3.10.18, but also on inventio.

<sup>36</sup> See above, pp. 328–329 and n. 12.

<sup>37</sup> See below, pp. 344–345.

We would, then, still be left with 12 or 13 themes strongly represented in this gospel passage and in our Greco-Roman sources.

J. M. Robinson and C. Heil argue for an even briefer original, on the basis of a reconstruction of the text of Gospel of Thomas 36 in P. Oxy. 655. This would leave us with (1), (5), (7), (8), (9), (11) and (12), still quite a full tally. Justin Martyr, Apol. 1.15, gives us (1), (4), (7), (9), (12) and (14). I would argue for both these as condensations; Justin's Apol. 1.15–17 clearly is an epitome of teaching ascribed to Jesus, here drawn from memory.<sup>38</sup>

Yet while the examples cited (whether the full 14/15, or one of the shorter ones) display together a common willingness to deploy common Greco-Roman themes in varying orders and connections, there is, as already indicated, a certain distinctiveness about the gospel sets, though not where Bovon finds it. The focus (1) on cares about food and drink and clothes, on very basic needs, to the exclusion of all else, is found in Cynic or Cynic-allied sources.<sup>39</sup> An emphasis on gaining inner mental resources (3) to rely on, however, found as it is in Epicurean, Stoic and Platonic reflections, is specifically refused by Cynics—and is absent here. A positive evaluation of the example of wild animals (4) is also distinctively Cynic.<sup>40</sup> A Platonist such as Plutarch could find occasional exceptions, but we have seen that his admired animals (like those in Proverbs) are those who teach shepherding and ploughing, not those who teach insouciance.<sup>41</sup> It is distinctive of Cynicism to urge that <sup>38</sup> In their “The Lilies,” Robinson and Heil continue the argument for preferring OY ZAINEI in Matthew's version (6:28) to the AYΞANEI that could lie behind the AYΞANOYΣIN of the received text. Although it is part of their argument for a shorter original, acceptance of this detail would make no difference to the case argued here. However, in majuscules the letters are more clearly dissimilar than in the minuscules that Robinson chooses; and relying on mis-heard dictation suggests a scriptorium setting implausibly early in transmission. It is also worth noting the reservations of S. E. Porter, “P.Oxy. 655 and James Robinson's Proposals for Q: Brief Points of Clarification,” JTS NS 52, no. 1 (2000): 84–92. See now also D. Jongkind, “‘The Lilies of the Field’ Reconsidered: Codex Sinaiticus and the Gospel of Thomas,” NovT 48.3 (2006): 209–216, suggesting an echo of Thomas or pressure of context as prompting an original ZAINEI in Sinaiticus.

---

<sup>39</sup> For Musonius, see n. 12 above; for Epictetus and his “idealized” Cynicism, see Diss. 3.32, and M. Billerbeck, Epiktet (Leiden: Brill, 1978), and “Le cynisme idéalisé d'Epictète à Julien,” in Le cynisme ancien, ed. M.-O. Goulet-Cazé and R. Goulet, 319–338; and on the issue of relevant Cynic sources and dating, Downing, Cynics, Paul and the Pauline Churches, 26–54.

<sup>40</sup> Compare M.-O. Goulet-Cazé, “Les premiers Cyniques et la religion,” in Le cynisme ancien, ed. eadem and R. Goulet, 117–158, at 134–139.

<sup>41</sup> For more of Plutarch's exceptions, see Bruta animalia, Moralia 985D–992F.

“philosophical” askêsis is equally open to women and to men (8); and that too is significant, if we are right to see typically male and female toil equally disparaged in the gospel passages. Certainly, to reject productive work as such (9), wealth creation, is specifically Cynic; as is, of course, the refused accumulation of possessions (10). It is only Cynics who claim a “kingdom” (14) already in the carefree life they adopt. Thus in seven of the fourteen or fifteen motifs where Cynics adopt a distinctive stance, the gospel passage is aligned with the Cynics; and—save for (14)—these Cynic strands all remain, even if the excisions I have resisted are allowed, as in effect they also do in the versions in the Gospel of Thomas and in Justin; while the rest of the motifs, at least here in their unelaborated, un-expounded forms, remain entirely compatible with Cynicism, not excluding divine parental care (12).

Some at least of these analogies, as we have seen, are acknowledged; and yet the conclusion that the gospel pericope is Cynic in ethos, let alone Cynic-influenced, is stoutly resisted.<sup>42</sup> That resistance is supported by the emphasis we have seen on the motif of divine paternal care, along with a refusal to see that as itself a possible Cynic motif. And this emphasis on divine parental (or providential, so Betz) care is combined with a persistent and traditional preference for forcing what is in effect (and probably in distant origin) a Stoic reading onto a text that, as I hope now to show, resists it, and resists it with Cynic bluntness.

The injunction could on its own, as Bultmann showed, be used to dissuade from actively taking care, fussy busyness, or to dissuade from internalized worry, or both.<sup>43</sup> It seems widely, these days, to be taken—with little if any argument—for the second.<sup>44</sup> “The disciples are exhorted not to worry about material things.”<sup>45</sup> Yet the birds and flowers are not commended for being un-anxious. They are commended for not working, and instead in practice relying on being supplied with “material things.” Their life is lived fully without food production, their physical well-being is sustained without cloth making (v. 23, thus clearly at home here). In the saying, no one is being accused of relying on

<sup>42</sup> In addition to Luz, Betz and Bovon we may note as further examples Ebner, Jesus, 269 n. 104, and Tuckett, Q, 389.

<sup>43</sup> Bultmann, μεριμνάω, 589–90.

<sup>44</sup> Olsthorne, Jewish Background, 20, notes some older exceptions, citing A. Loisy, K. Bornhäuser, A. Schlatter, and J. Jeremias. The latter allows that it forbids active provision, but only to the twelve, in The Parables of Jesus (ET of 8th edn, of Die Gleichnisse Jesu, 2nd edn, London: SCM, 1970), 214–215.

<sup>45</sup> Tuckett, Q, 389.

anxiety itself to get fields sown and harvested and the harvest stored, or clothes produced; it is engagement in busy toil that is criticized, the busy toil that can, for instance, do so little to improve bodily stature (vv. 25–26, which thus are clearly at home here). Of course, in the way that linguistic polyvalence works, we may well assume implicitly that inner anxiety will also be avoided.<sup>46</sup> But what the birds and flowers are commended for, and therefore what is enjoined on the sayings' hearers, is simply abstaining from toil. And this is an explicit and distinctive Cynic message. It finds no parallel in the specifically Jewish material offered by the commentators, and none in the general run of Greco-Roman authors: but clear resonances among the Cynics.<sup>47</sup>

Tuckett further adduces the wider context in Q of "the imminent arrival of the eschatological kingdom of God" as an element distinguishing this saying (even without v. 31) from any such general urging of ascetic practice. In itself and in general this is an entirely apposite issue for reflection.<sup>48</sup> Yet there is no indication in the parable that hearers are to find a strange new behaviour pattern in birds and flowers, adopted in the face of some imminent crisis. Whether in crisis or not, they are to live, toil-free, as birds and flowers always have done—and as Cynics have long counselled, and commended as being "according to nature."

If the conclusion is allowed—or at least found plausible—that this text, in both versions, belongs firmly among the Greco-Roman examples cited, and belongs there specifically among the Cynics, we must also ask what further conclusions might follow. One might well be that this piece could stem neither from Jesus nor from an original form of Q, because, so many insist, Jesus could not have been open to Cynic influ-

---

<sup>46</sup> Olsthorne, Jewish Background, 21, suggests that in 1 Cor 7:32–34 and Luke 12:11, New Testament usage supports his preferred internalized anxiety interpretation. At most, however, this could only further illustrate one of the two strands noted by Bultmann, as Olsthorne allows for other passages. In fact, 1 Cor 7:32–34 seems to many to reflect the warning against the busy distractions of married life noted by Epictetus (Diss. 3.22.67–76) and others; Luke 12:11 more likely dissuades from preparing speeches in advance. The tyrant imagined by Dio (Discourse 6) does have lots of anxieties, worries induced by his life-style; his Diogenes enjoys life by maintaining a simple life-style, not by quelling inner perturbation.

<sup>47</sup> It is worth noting that in alluding to this passage, Ambrose of Milan regularly combines it with Cynic themes of sharing the fruits of the earth in common: De officiis 1.28; 3.7; De viduis 1, 5; In Luc. 7.124 PL (the latter two references from J. L. González, Faith and Wealth: A History of Early Christian Ideas on the Origin, Significance, and Use of Money (New York: Harper & Row, 1990), 191.

<sup>48</sup> Tuckett, Q, 390.

ence, nor could his earliest followers, who were responsible for at least the earliest elements of Q. And neither he nor they could have been open to Cynic influence, because we have no independent evidence for Cynic influence in Galilee (or in Judaea). So some scholars insist.<sup>49</sup>

In fact, we have little if any independent evidence at all for the details of the culture(s) of ordinary people in Jesus' Galilee (or Judaea), or that of the followers who survived him.<sup>50</sup> Josephus (hardly "independent") tells us something of the macro-politics of the area, mostly decades later, and from his own standpoint. We know from archaeological finds that villages in Galilee avoided pork and used the stone jars that later accounts tell us avoided contamination; and wealthy people in towns built miqvā'ôt, ritual baths: these external markers of Jewish committed allegiance were widely maintained. That does not tell us at all how they were interpreted.<sup>51</sup> And in fact all writers on Jesus' Galilee plunder the synoptic gospels for evidence; they are, after all, the only sources we have that even claim to be concerned with that time and place.<sup>52</sup>

So, to recapitulate, we have offered to us, and ascribed to Jesus, a complex saying for which we have no similar sequence in known contemporary Jewish sources, but plenty of contrasts there to its themes taken singly, and also with contrasting inferences drawn even from the one apparent and important-looking common strand: divine provision encourages not hard work (as in other Jewish sources), but here a toil-free existence. This complex piece, unparalleled in our near-

---

<sup>49</sup> Among those who insist on this conclusion, H. D. Betz, "Jesus and the Cynics: Survey and Analysis of the Hypothesis," JR 74.4 (1994): 453–475; B. Witherington, Jesus the Sage: The Pilgrimage of Wisdom (Minneapolis: Fortress, 1994); C. M. Tuckett, "A Cynic Q?," Bib 70.2 (1989): 349–376, much of it recurring in idem, Q, 325–354; P. R. Eddy, "Jesus as Diogenes? Reflections on the Cynic Jesus Thesis," JBL 115.3 (1996): 449–469.

<sup>50</sup> See F. G. Downing, "The Jewish Cynic Jesus," 187–195; and "In Quest of First-Century C. E. Galilee," CBQ 66.1 (2004): 78–97; and "Jesus and Cynicism," in this Handbook.

<sup>51</sup> See, among others, J. L. Reed, Archaeology and the Galilean Jesus: A Re-Examination of the Evidence (Harrisburg: Trinity Press International, 2000), who adds this rider. He and others add ossuaries as further evidence of distinctive Jewishness, but that lacks archaeological support: M. Aviam and D. Syon, "Jewish Ossilegium in Galilee," in What Athens has to do with Jerusalem, ed. L. V. Rutgers (Leuven: Peeters, 2002), 154–187, at 183 (with my thanks to Tamsin Lisius).

<sup>52</sup> As an example of this practice from an author who claims to eschew the use of the gospels as evidence for their own setting, R. A. Horsley, Galilee: History, Politics, People (Valley Forge, PA: Trinity Press International, 1995), 14 and 252; and idem, Archaeology, History and Society in Galilee (Valley Forge, PA: Trinity Press International, 1996), 171, 181.

contemporary Jewish documents, in a very “natural” Greek,<sup>53</sup> is richly paralleled in non-Jewish Greco-Roman sources, and most closely in Cynic ones, where the Cynic instances are themselves distinctive among other Greco-Roman examples.

It is obvious that for Clement our gospel pericope belongs in this field, and can be mixed quite naturally with other variants. We may note such non-scriptural terms as “necessities,” “brute/irrational beasts.” If the community behind Q was originally non-Cynic, as claimed, what sorts of motives could one imagine for importing so blatant and complex a piece of Cynic teaching, socially disruptive, superficially naturalized by a token reference to Solomon? If the rest of Q was non-Cynic, and to all hearers clearly non-Cynic, lacking any of the socially disruptive thrust of Cynicism, this bit, with its elaborate assembly of commonplaces but urging a distinctive Cynic ethos, would stand out like a sore thumb (quite a large sore thumb, at that: one twentieth part of the whole collection, it would seem). It would only make sense to import so large a carefully formulated chunk if already Q in some measure had Cynic resonances that others could recognize, and with which even this would effectively harmonize. We might instance the mission charge, the opposition to Mammon and to treasures, and the apparent rejection of funeral rites, among much else.<sup>54</sup> But once we have allowed that the “Cares” passage could look at home in Q, we have discarded the non-Cynic Q anyway. Then, if these various Greco-Roman motifs, including distinctive Cynic motifs were assimilable by Jesus’ earliest Jewish followers, themselves Galileans or at least led by Galileans, it would seem plausible that they had been assimilable by Jesus too, living among the same fellow Galilean Jews.

(Here is not the place to argue the possibility of Cynic influence from Gadara with its Cynic heritage, or from the popularity of Diogenes in the teaching manuals and so among those literate in Greek.)<sup>55</sup>

---

<sup>53</sup> See n. 23 above.

<sup>54</sup> Compare Downing, Christ and the Cynics, 9–87.

<sup>55</sup> See n. 40 above; and on Greek in Galilee, P. W. van der Horst, “Greek in Jewish Palestine in the Light of Jewish Epigraphy,” in Hellenism in the Land of Israel, ed. J. J. Collins and G. E. Sterling (Notre Dame: Notre Dame University, 2001), 154–176: “We may tentatively conclude that Roman Palestine was largely a bilingual or even trilingual society—alongside the vernacular Aramaic (and, to a much lesser extent, Hebrew), Greek was widely used and understood—but we have to add that the degree of use and understanding of the Greek language probably varied according to locality and period, social status and educational background, the occasion and mobility”

Of course, to defend the hypothesis of a quite non-Cynic Jesus, we could excise the “Cares” pericope and all the other matter in Q (and, presumably, in Mark and special Matthew and special Luke) with which it seems to harmonize as therefore also Cynic-sounding. It could leave us with a millenarian prophet, exorcist and healer. But we would still be left with the problem: “How” as well as “why” was this non-Cynic Jesus, in a Galilee impervious to Cynic influence, so soon “Cynicized” by his originally un-Cynic followers?

Of course it is very likely that if any are persuaded by the above characterization of the pericope, there will be some among them able to outline alternative hypotheses to explain such a Cynic intrusion into an originally non-Cynic tradition of what Jesus did in speaking and in other ways. And for some, their own rival hypotheses are likely to appear to them as certainties that sweep others from the field. But what I hope I have done in this essay and in its companion piece in the first volume, and in other writing referred to in the footnotes, is to show at least that there are real difficulties in framing any purely Cynic-free hypotheses to explain the origins of Christianity. However awkward, we may have to include in our reflections and reconstructions the possibility of a Jesus with a socially disruptive, largely anarchistic message, one which perhaps might disturb more than it does the practice and politics of those among us who claim to be his followers.<sup>56</sup>

---

(166). All that is needed for the present case is the reasonable plausibility of Greek topoi having become known.

<sup>56</sup> R. A. Horsley and N. A. Silberman, in their The Message and the Kingdom (Minneapolis: Fortress, 1997), 93–94, suggest that ancient Cynicism had no real socio-political bite, appealing only to people “alienated from, but still part of, the dominant culture” (93). It may even be that others who see Jesus in Cynic terms also interpret him so. But this is to misunderstand the socially disruptive thrust of Cynic teaching and practice, as it affected such fundamental issues as working for consumption (the issue here), but also family, authority, and cults. It is also to ignore the potential social attraction of a significantly egalitarian shared simplicity in living, in the context of the fraught antagonistic world of the ancient Mediterranean; on which see F. G. Downing, “Fairly Simple: The Impact of Life-style,” in idem, God with Everything, 64–90.

POVERTY AND WEALTH IN JESUS AND THE JESUS TRADITION

HEINZ GIESEN

The kingdom of God, understood as an intimate fellowship between Jesus and his Father in which Jesus gives his adherents a share, is not just one central theme of his message: it is the theological center of his thinking, speaking, and acting.<sup>1</sup> This is why it is also the criterion which allows us to evaluate Jesus' position on poverty and wealth.<sup>2</sup> In the present essay, I shall study in detail five examples (Mark 10:17–22 par.; Mark 10:23–27 par.; Mark 12:41–44 par.; Luke 6:20 par.; and Luke 16:13 par.) which show us how Jesus and the Jesus tradition saw poverty and wealth, and then offer a general evaluation. Since it is important to come as close as possible to the message of the earthly Jesus himself, the first, third, and fourth examples begin with a synoptic comparison, I also discuss the question of historicity.

1. Wealth and Discipleship (Mark 10:17–22 par. Matt 19:16–22 and Luke 18:18–23)

1.1. Synoptic Comparison

When a man asks Jesus what he must do in order to inherit eternal life (Mark 10:17), Jesus refers him to the commandments in the second table of the decalogue. As a pious Jew, the man proclaims that he has observed this from his youth. However, he still lacks one thing, before he can become an immediate follower of Jesus: he must get rid of his possessions and give the proceeds to the poor. In return, he is promised a treasure in heaven (Mark 10:21; Matt 19:21; Luke 18:22). These words of Jesus horrify him, and he departs sadly. Since he possesses a great deal of property (Mark 10:22), he decides against becoming an immediate follower of Jesus.

---

<sup>1</sup> Cf. Heinz Giesen, Herrschaft Gottes—heute oder morgen?, BU 26 (Regensburg: Pustet, 1995), 5–6, 35.

<sup>2</sup> Cf. Heinz Giesen, "Eigentum im Urteil Jesu und der Jesustradition," in idem, Jesu Heilsbotschaft und die Kirche, BETL 179 (Leuven: Peeters, 2004), 231–244, at 232; Martin Hengel, Eigentum und Reichtum in der frühen Kirche, Calwer Paperback (Stuttgart: Calwer, 1973), 37.

Matthew and Luke do not tell us that the man was horrified; they say only that “he went away sorrowful” (Matt 19:22) or that “he became sad” (Luke 18:23). Matthew too explains the sadness of the man in terms of his great wealth, while Luke 18:23 emphasizes the extent of this wealth: “for he was very rich.” According to Mark 10:17 and Matt 19:16, the one who puts this question is simply “a man,” while Luke 18:18 tells us that he was a member of the Jewish ruling elite. Unlike Mark and Luke, Matt 19:21 introduces the demand that he sell everything with the redactional words: “If you would be perfect” (cf. Matt 5:48).<sup>3</sup> In Mark 10:17 and Luke 18:18, the man addresses Jesus as “Good teacher”; at Matt 19:16, he calls him “Teacher” and asks: “Teacher, what good deed must I do to have eternal life?” In all three versions, Jesus rejects this question, since God alone is “good” (Mark 10:18; Matt 19:17; Luke 18:19).

With the addition, probably redactional, of εἰς ὁδόν Mark 10:17 inserts the dialogue, which goes beyond a merely academic debate,<sup>4</sup> into the path that Jesus takes towards Jerusalem, thereby defining the following of Jesus as the following of his passion.<sup>5</sup> The act of falling to one’s knees, which is not customary before a teacher, and the address of Jesus as “Good teacher” (Mark 10:17) belong together.

As the synoptic comparison shows, the historical reconstruction must begin with Mark.

1.2. Jesus’ Attitude to Poverty and Wealth

1.2.1. On the historicity of the encounter between Jesus and the rich man

Although the evangelists present this story in a stylized form which is adapted to their own situation, I see no reason to doubt that they are basically relating an event from the life of the historical Jesus.<sup>6</sup> Paul S. Minear however maintains that the nucleus around which Mark 10:17–31 is constructed is the affirmation that it is hard for the rich to attain salvation (10:25).<sup>7</sup> This difficulty is illustrated with the help of a logion of Jesus about discipleship (v. 21), the negative example of the rich man, and (on the basis of Jesus' logion about the reward awaiting the disciples, vv. 28–29) the positive example of Peter. The dialogue about the commandments as the path to eternal life (vv. 18–20) was added subsequently, in order to make it clear that discipleship does not mean the abolition of the law of Moses. If this were correct, there would have to be a similar insertion into other vocation narratives too.<sup>8</sup> Since this is not the case, Minear's hypothesis has deservedly found little support.

<sup>3</sup> Cf. Heinz Giesen, Christliches Handeln, EHS T.181 (Frankfurt a.M.: Lang, 1982), 129–145.

<sup>4</sup> Cf. Wilhelm Egger, Nachfolge als Weg zum Leben, ÖBS 1 (Klosterneuburg: Österreichisches Katholisches Bibelwerk, 1979), 187.

<sup>5</sup> This interpretation is discussed by Rudolf Pesch, Das Markusevangelium 2, HTK 2.2 (Freiburg: Herder, 1977), 137. However, the lack of an article means that we cannot ascribe this to a pre-Markan redaction, since the article can be omitted in prepositional phrases. Cf. Friedrich Blass and Albert Debrunner, Grammatik des neutestamentlichen Griechisch, rev. F. Rehkopf (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 14th edn, 1976), §255.

Another hypothesis admits that the story relates the calling of a disciple. However, the vocation is not refused because of Jesus' demand that the man renounce his possessions; rather, in a secondary development, vv. 23 and 25 have utilized the apophthegm found in a pre-Markan stage of tradition to answer "the question of the relationship between being rich and being a Christian."<sup>9</sup> According to Nikolaus Walter, the original story related how a pious man comes to Jesus to ask about the path that leads to eternal life, but is then challenged to make the decision to follow him. The story was handed on, not as an example of a failed vocation story, but as testimony that the true path to life consists in following Jesus; the demand that the rich man sell his goods and give the proceeds to the poor is only a minor element in the story,<sup>10</sup> which is concerned with the soteriological problem in general. This proposal is based on an elaborate literary criticism, but it remains unconvincing. At any rate, the fact that the man's wealth is mentioned only at the close of the narrative does not mean that this

---

<sup>6</sup> This position is taken, in the case of Mark 10:17–31, by Vincent Taylor, The Gospel According to St Mark, 2nd ed. (London: Macmillan, 1966), 424–433; William L. Lane, Commentary on the Gospel of Mark, NICNT (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1974), 364; in the case of 10:17–27, cf. Egger, Nachfolge, 186–190; on this, cf. Vittorio Fusco, Povert  e sequela (Mc. 10,17–31 parr.), SB 94 (Brescia: Paideia, 1991), 116–117.

<sup>7</sup> Paul S. Minear, "The Needle's Eye," JBL 61 (1942): 157–169.

<sup>8</sup> Cf. Fusco, Povert , 129.

<sup>9</sup> Thus Heinz-Wolfgang Kuhn, Ältere Sammlungen im Markusevangelium, SUNT 8 (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1971), 151.

<sup>10</sup> Nikolaus Walter, "Zur Analyse von Mc 10,17–31," ZNW 53 (1962): 206–218, at 213. This would mean that Mark 10:22b is a later insertion.

is a late addition: this is due to the narrative strategy.<sup>11</sup> Other scholars question whether the original context of the story was a call to discipleship. It has been suggested that the renunciation of one's wealth in favor of the poor was not the condition for entry into the group of disciples, but a radicalization of the commandment to give alms.<sup>12</sup> The addition: "Follow me!" has turned this episode into a vocation narrative, probably in order to supply a negative counterfoil to the positive example of the disciples (vv. 28–31).<sup>13</sup> This literary-critical judgment is derived above all from the lack of a connection between the story of the rich man and the subsequent dialogue in which wealth is seen as a hindrance on the path to salvation (vv. 23–27). This, however, is far from convincing; the hypothesis of an early stage without the vocation context cannot be demonstrated.<sup>14</sup>

None of the literary-critical hypotheses is truly convincing. Everything suggests that we have here a narrative which from the very beginning contained both the dialogue about eternal life, and the vocation of the rich man and his rejection of Jesus' call.<sup>15</sup> A number of observations support the historicity of the episode. To begin with, it is improbable that a scene which emphasizes Jesus' lack of success would have been invented (cf. Mark 4:30–32). The same applies to unusual traits such as the address of Jesus as "Good teacher" and his brusque refusal of this title. There is no evidence of the use of the title "Good teacher" in Palestine,<sup>16</sup> but the Talmud offers possible parallels at a later date (b. Taan. 24b).<sup>17</sup> There is therefore no reason to dispute that Jesus' encounter with the rich man is an historical event<sup>18</sup> which preserves the memory of a lack of success on Jesus' part.

<sup>11</sup> Cf. Fusco, Povertà, 128.

<sup>12</sup> Cf. Dieter Lührmann, Das Markusevangelium, HNT 3 (Tübingen: Mohr, 1987), 175.

<sup>13</sup> Cf. Pesch, Markusevangelium, 140–141, 146; Josef Ernst, Das Evangelium nach Markus, RNT (Regensburg: Pustet, 1981), 294–301.

<sup>14</sup> Cf. Fusco, Povertà, 130, who also discusses other hypotheses.

<sup>15</sup> Thus Fusco, Povertà, 131.

<sup>16</sup> Cf. the commentaries ad loc.

<sup>17</sup> Cf. Gustaf Dalman, Die Worte Jesu mit Berücksichtigung des nachkanonischen jüdischen Schrifttums und der aramäischen Sprache 1 (Darmstadt: Wissenschaftliche Buchgesellschaft, 1965 [= Leipzig, 2nd edn, 1930]), 277; Lane, Mark, 365 n. 41; Craig A. Evans, Mark 8:27–16:20, WBC 34B (Nashville: Thomas Nelson Publishers, 2001), 95.

<sup>18</sup> Fusco, Povertà, 133, 134.

1.2.2. Interpretation of the probably historical event

When the man asks what he must do in order to inherit eternal life (Mark 10:17), Jesus refers him to the commandments in the second table of the decalogue, which stand for the decalogue as a whole.<sup>19</sup> When Jesus looks at the rich man with love, this not only expresses his sympathy, but signals a quasi-sovereign action “on the part of the one who gives instruction and formulates decisions about the law.”<sup>20</sup> It is usually supposed that “the one thing he still lacks” is, like the observance of the law, a necessary condition for inheriting eternal life, but this is not correct: it is a condition only for the immediate following of Jesus.<sup>21</sup> It is only such a disciple of Jesus who must go beyond the fulfillment of the law by renouncing his property and giving the proceeds of its sale to the poor. In return, he is promised a treasure in heaven (Mark 10:21; Matt 19:21; Luke 18:22).

When Jesus rejects the address as “good,” he emphatically directs the attention of the rich man in a positive sense towards God (Mark 10:18; Matt 19:17; Luke 18:19), who is goodness in person and who displays his goodness especially in his gift of the commandments (Ps 119:68).<sup>22</sup> In this way, he demands that the man imitate God, who alone is entitled to issue commandments and require that these be observed. This means that Jesus sees himself as totally at the service of God, and he insists that God’s commandments be obeyed.<sup>23</sup> People who at least sense this fact ask Jesus what they are commanded to do (cf. also Luke 10:25) in order to attain salvation, and even in the earliest strata of the tradition (Luke 6:46; Matt 7:24.26 par.), Jesus replies to such insistent questions on his own authority.<sup>24</sup> The broad attestation makes it probable that this

---

<sup>19</sup> On this, cf. Bernhard Hose, “Reich Gottes contra Gesetz? Anmerkungen zur bleibenden Heilsrelevanz des Gesetzes in Mk 10,17–27,” in Paradigmen auf dem Prüfstand: Festschrift K. Müller, ed. M. Ebner and B. Heiniger, NTA NF 47 (Münster: Aschendorff 2004), 103–115, at 111–113.

<sup>20</sup> Klaus Berger, Die Gesetzesauslegung Jesu 1, WMANT 40 (Neukirchen-Vluyn: Neukirchener, 1972), 398. It is improbable that Mark has in mind a kiss here, against Berger, ibid. 397–398; Pesch, Markusevangelium, 140; and with Dieter Sänger, “Recht und Gerechtigkeit in der Verkündigung Jesu,” BZ 36 (1992): 179–194, at 187 n. 42.

<sup>21</sup> Cf. Hose, “Reich Gottes” 113; also Hugh Anderson, The Gospel of Mark, NCB (London: Oliphants, 1976), 249–250.

<sup>22</sup> Cf. Édouard Trocmé, L’Évangile selon Saint Marc, CNT (N) II (Geneva: Labor et Fides, 2000), 265; Lane, Mark, 365.

<sup>23</sup> Cf. Berger, Gesetzesauslegung, 400–401; Pesch, Markusevangelium, 138.

<sup>24</sup> Cf. Herbert Braun, ποιέω, κτλ. ThWNT VI (1959), 456–483, at 478.

reflects the activity of the earthly Jesus. Jesus certainly does not wish to say that he himself is not good.<sup>25</sup> The address has been regarded as crude flattery,<sup>26</sup> but against this view, we must bear in mind that according to Mark (10:21), Jesus looks on the rich man with love and full sympathy. The decisive point is the theocentricity of Jesus' message: it is not his own self that he proclaims, but God his Father, who gives eternal life to those who follow his ordinances. At the same time, Jesus draws attention to his own unique mission.

The fact that Jesus assumes that the man will be familiar with the decalogue (Mark 10:19; Luke 18:20) is historically plausible, as is the demand that he should follow Jesus after selling his goods;<sup>27</sup> this is noted by all three synoptics (Mark 10:21 parr. Matt 19:21–22; Luke 18:22–23; cf. Mark 2:14; 8:34). The summons to follow the earthly Jesus means sharing in the life, and hence also in the poverty, of the itinerant preacher Jesus.<sup>28</sup> Only this explains the demand to sell everything. It is important to note that Jesus is not content to demand that the man sell his possessions. He demands in the same breath that he give the proceeds to the poor (τοῖς πτωχοῖς, Mark 10:21; Matt 19:21; Luke 18:22).

Unlike the πένητες (i.e., those who lack possessions), the πτωχοὶ are utterly destitute<sup>29</sup> and thus completely dependent on help from others. This narrow meaning of the word is not found in the New Testament; rather, the reference is to poor and needy persons in general, as in LXX usage.<sup>30</sup> For Jesus, poverty in itself is not an ideal, and wealth is not per se reprehensible. If however wealth presents an obstacle to disciple-

<sup>25</sup> Cf. also Evans, Mark, 96.

<sup>26</sup> Against Dalman, Worte, 277; Trocmé, Marc, 264–265; cf. also Richard T. France, The Gospel of Mark, NIGTC (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2002), 401–402. According to Ben T. Witherington III, The Gospel of Mark (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2001), 282, it is difficult to decide whether this address is flattery or genuine reverence.

<sup>27</sup> With Egger, Nachfolge, 187–188; against Rudolf Bultmann, Die Geschichte der synoptischen Tradition, FRLANT 29 (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 8th edn, 1970), 20–21; Pesch, Markusevangelium, 140; Ernst, Markus, 295.

<sup>28</sup> For a similar position, cf. Eduard Schweizer, Das Evangelium nach Markus, 16th ed., NTD 1 (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1983); John R. Donahue and Daniel J. Harrington, The Gospel of Mark, Sacra Pagina 2 (Collegeville: Liturgical Press, 2002), 307; France, Mark, 403; against Berger, Gesetzesauslegung, 437.

<sup>29</sup> Cf. Friedrich Hauck, art. πτωχός, κτλ. ThWNT VI (1959), 885–888, at 886–887; Helmut Merklein, art. πτωχός, κτλ. EWNT I, 2nd ed. (1992), 466–472, at 467.

<sup>30</sup> Cf. Jacques Dupont, “Jésus, Messie des pauvres,” in idem, Études sur les Évangiles synoptiques, BETL 70–A (Leuven: Peeters, 1985), 86–130, at 87–97; Marius Reiser, “Selig die Reichen!”—“Selig die Armen!”. Die Option Jesu für die Armut,” EuA 74 (1998): 451–466, at 463.

ship, it must be abandoned. It is striking that Jesus tells the man to give the proceeds from the sale of his property directly to the poor, not to a religious institution such as the temple.<sup>31</sup> The rich man who gives up all he owns becomes himself a poor man, dependent on others. If he gives up his wealth in favor of the poor, and above all in order to be able to follow Jesus, he is promised a treasure in heaven<sup>32</sup> (Mark 10:21 parr. Matt 19:21; Luke 18:22) which is not earned, but bestowed as a gift.<sup>33</sup> The renunciation of wealth in favor of the poor thus takes on an eschatological quality. The motif for this renunciation is not asceticism, but the missionary ministry.<sup>34</sup> The rich man is confronted with the alternative between earthly and heavenly riches. It is clear that the demand presented here does not apply to all who follow Jesus, but only to one particular individual,<sup>35</sup> although vv. 23–27 affirm that wealth per se is an insurmountable obstacle to entry into the kingdom of God.

When he is confronted with these alternatives, the reaction of the rich man is very plausible. He is clearly convinced that it suffices to have kept the ten commandments. According to Mark 10:19, the decalogue also includes the commandment not to “defraud,”<sup>36</sup> which may perhaps be a combination of the two prohibitions of coveting in the decalogue.<sup>37</sup> This could be an allusion to rich men who keep back part or all of the wages of the workers whom they hire on a daily basis, but it may also be a general reference to crimes involving property.<sup>38</sup>

The high point of this episode, the center of the narrative, is the demand to follow Jesus.<sup>39</sup> This is the only passage in Mark which explicitly

<sup>31</sup> This is noted also by Evans, Mark, 98–99.

<sup>32</sup> According to Klaus Koch, “Der Schatz im Himmel,” in Leben angesichts des Todes: Festschrift H. Thielike (Tübingen: Mohr, 1968), 47–60, at 52–57, the “treasure in heaven” is understood as the store of good works that one lays up for oneself in heaven (cf. Ethiopic 1 En. 39.5; Syriac Baruch 14.12; 24.1; etc.).

<sup>33</sup> With Johannes Eichler, “Armut/Reichtum,” ThBNT I, 2nd ed. (1997), 73–74, at 74; against Pesch, Markusevangelium, 140.

<sup>34</sup> Cf. Donahue and Harrington, Mark, 307; against Christopher S. Mann, Mark, AB 27 (Garden City: Doubleday, 1986), 401.

<sup>35</sup> With Lane, Mark, 367; Mann, Mark, 401; Robert H. Gundry, Mark. A Commentary on His Apology for the Cross (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1993), 388; France, Mark, 368.

<sup>36</sup> On the textual criticism, cf. e.g. Witherington, Mark, 281.

<sup>37</sup> Berger, Gesetzesauslegung, 43–49; Evans, Mark, 96.

<sup>38</sup> Cf. Pesch, Markusevangelium, 139; Mann, Mark, 400.

<sup>39</sup> Thus also Walter Zimmerli, “Die Frage des Reichen nach dem ewigen Leben,” EvTh 19 (1959): 90–97, at 97; Lane, Mark, 368.

presents Jesus' demand that those who wish to follow him must give up all their possessions, but the same requirement is implied in the calling of the first disciples (Mark 1:16–20; cf. 2:13–17), since those whom Jesus calls immediately abandon their workplace and their home in order to follow him. It is therefore only logical that Peter, in the name of the group of disciples, affirms at Mark 10:28 that they have done what the rich man refuses to do: they have left everything, and now they want to know what their reward will be. Jesus assures them that they will be repaid a hundredfold in this life and will receive eternal life in the age to come (vv. 29f.)—words that correspond to his promise that the rich man will receive a treasure in heaven.

We may not infer from the mention of the house of the brothers Simon and Andrew at Mark 1:29 that “abandoning everything” does not in literal fact mean renouncing all one's possessions.<sup>40</sup> The following of Jesus does not demand that one's relatives too (Mark 1:30 mentions Simon's mother-in-law) must give up their possessions.

There is no parallel in the history of religions to the absoluteness and radicalism of Jesus' demand about the renunciation of possessions and discipleship.<sup>41</sup> After he calls Elisha, Elijah allows him to return to his house and bid his family farewell (1 Kgs 19:19–21); the pupils of the rabbis had secular occupations. But Jesus and his disciples are entirely at the service of the rule of God, which leaves no time available for other pursuits.<sup>42</sup> For the rich man, at any rate, Jesus' demand is completely unexpected. It shocks him and makes him sad. He is so attached to his property that he is not willing to give it up in order to become an immediate disciple of Jesus (cf. also Mark 4:19). This may also be expressed by the use of the word κτήματα, which is derived from κτάομαι and designates that which one has acquired—thus presenting an effective contrast to the act of selling. This in turn may imply that the rich man, who is unwilling to abandon his possessions, wants to acquire still more: in other words, it is an attack on his greed.<sup>43</sup> Instead of following Jesus joyfully and placing himself at the service of his mission, the rich man departs disappointed and downcast.

This narrative thus relates an unsuccessful vocation; its primary concern is not about the relationship between the Christian existence and

<sup>40</sup> This is however the position of Taylor, Mark, 433.

<sup>41</sup> Cf. Evans, Mark, 100.

<sup>42</sup> Cf. Evans, Mark, 100.

<sup>43</sup> Thus Gundry, Matthew Evans, Mark, 100, 555.

wealth.<sup>44</sup> The text as we have it was certainly formulated by Mark, but most scholars agree that it goes back to authentic Jesus tradition.<sup>45</sup> The fact that the name of the rich man is not mentioned does not necessarily mean that the narrative lacks an historical kernel,<sup>46</sup> especially since the rich man doubtless played no further role in the later community; it is of course also possible that his namelessness is meant to make it easier for the hearers to identify with him.<sup>47</sup>

2. Wealth as an Obstacle to Entry into the Kingdom of God (Mark 10:23–27 parr. Matt 19:23–26 and Luke 18:24–27)

The episode at Mark 10:17–22 seems incomplete,<sup>48</sup> especially if v. 22b, as is sometimes suggested, did not belong to the original narrative. This is why the commentary in vv. 23–25 must have accompanied this story from the beginning.<sup>49</sup> The theme here is no longer poverty in the context of the immediate following of Jesus, but the difficulty for rich people in general to enter into the kingdom of God (10:23–31). This discussion is detached from the call to follow the historical Jesus, and obviously (though not exclusively) reflects a problem in the Christian community. Although the disciples are not personally affected, they are shocked (v. 24a) to hear that it is difficult for rich people—who play the dominant role in this world—to be saved. From a Jewish perspective, it was impossible to understand how wealth could be an obstacle to entry into the kingdom of God.<sup>50</sup> Rather, wealth was seen as a sign of God's blessing (Ps 112:1–3; Prov 22:4).<sup>51</sup> A similar esteem for rich people and

<sup>44</sup> Cf. Egger, Nachfolge, 188, 190.

<sup>45</sup> Indeed, according to Reiser, "Selig" 453, there is a total consensus on this point.

<sup>46</sup> This is however the position of M. Dibelius, Die Formgeschichte des Evangeliums mit einem Nachtrag von G. Iber, ed. G. Bornkamm, 5th ed. (Tübingen: Mohr, 1966), 47–48, who evaluates the narrative in form-critical terms as a "paradigm." Bultmann, Geschichte, 20–21, followed by many other scholars, sees the narrative Mark 10:17–22 as an "apophthegm."

<sup>47</sup> This is suggested by Schweizer, Markus, 113.

<sup>48</sup> Cf. Ernst Lohmeyer, Das Evangelium des Markus, 17th ed., KEK 1.2 (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1967), 213.

<sup>49</sup> In its original form, the commentary comprised vv. 23a, 24c and 25. Cf. Egger, Nachfolge, 189.

<sup>50</sup> Cf. Lane, Mark, 369; Francis J. Moloney, The Gospel of Mark (Peabody: Hendrickson, 2002), 201.

<sup>51</sup> Cf. France, Mark, 399. This is expressed in a particularly impressive way by Sir 31[34]:8, "Blessed is the rich man who is found blameless, and who does not go after gold" (the Hebrew text speaks of "mammon" rather than "gold").

for wealth is also found among pagans.<sup>52</sup> Poverty was regarded as a disaster and an evil (Prov 10:15; Sir 40:28). Good health (Sir 30:14–15), the fear of God (Prov 15:16), and wisdom (Prov 16:16) were considered even more valuable than wealth.<sup>53</sup>

There were however two exceptions in classical antiquity to this general evaluation: an option in favor of poverty was maintained by the Essenes in Judaism and by the Cynics in paganism. While the Essenes contributed their possessions to the community and “formed a community in law and possession, the Cynics were individualists who led a simple, sparse life and despised wealth, prestige, and nobility of birth (Diogenes Laertius 6.104).”<sup>54</sup> They chose poverty in order to be independent. But Jesus’ verdict about poverty and wealth is entirely determined by his message about the rule of God, which has absolute priority.

Jesus’ affirmation that it is difficult for persons from the upper classes to gain admission to the kingdom of God culminates in the metaphor of the camel and the needle’s eye (v. 25), which certainly goes back to Jesus himself.<sup>55</sup> In this metaphor, Jesus posits a contrast between the largest animal known in the East and the smallest opening. It is to be understood literally; it cannot be toned down. It underlines in a penetrating manner the impossibility of acquiring salvation by oneself.<sup>56</sup> Nevertheless, many have attempted to make these words more palatable. For example, it has often been claimed that instead of κόμηλον, the text originally read: κόμιλον, which allegedly means a “ship’s rope,”<sup>57</sup> but this explanation does not in fact make things easier, since a ship’s rope is too thick to pass through the eye of a needle; and a decisive argument

<sup>52</sup> Cf. the examples in Reiser, “Selig,” 455–460.

<sup>53</sup> Cf. the examples in Reiser, “Selig,” 454–455.

<sup>54</sup> Cf., 459–460; for a detailed study, cf. Hans-Josef Klauck, “Gütergemeinschaft in der klassischen Antike, in Qumran und im Neuen Testament,” in idem, Gemeinde—Amt—Sakrament (Würzburg: Echter, 1989), 69–100.

<sup>55</sup> Cf. Reiser, “Selig,” 453: “It is one of the most impressive proverbs which Jesus coined.”

<sup>56</sup> Josef Schmid, Das Evangelium nach Markus, 4th ed., RNT 2 (Regensburg: Pustet, 1984), 195, correctly emphasizes: “This can be accomplished only through a miracle of God, but not in such a way that the rich man would retain his possessions while seeking to attain an inner attitude of freedom vis-à-vis these possessions.” Cf. also Lane, Mark, 369, 370.

<sup>57</sup> Cf. e.g. Raimund Köbert, “Kamel und Schiffstau: Zu Markus 10,25 (Par.) und Koran 7,40/38,” Bib 53 (1972): 229–233; Pinchas Lapide, Jesus, das Geld und der Weltfrieden (Gütersloh: Gütersloher Verlagshaus, 1991), 19.

against this is that the word κόμιλον is not attested in any Greek text.<sup>58</sup> Even more popular is the explanation that there was a little gate in Jerusalem which people called “The Eye of a Needle,” through which a camel could just manage to squeeze. Marius Reiser rightly dismisses this as a fairy tale intended to spare “oneself and others the salutary shock caused by these words of Jesus, which are formulated with perfect clarity.”<sup>59</sup>

As these attempts to tone down the metaphor themselves show, the evangelist is not primarily interested in the past, but about Christians in the post-Easter communities. The disciples’ shock in this passage shows what ought to be the reaction of all those Christians who want to be disciples of Jesus without giving up their wealth.<sup>60</sup> The answer which is given at the end of the passage to the disciples’ question about who can be saved (10:26) certainly corresponds to Jesus’ own intention: salvation is impossible not only for the rich, but for everyone (v. 24b),<sup>61</sup> but this is possible for God, “for all things are possible with God” (v. 27). There are no exceptions to this rule: salvation is a gift of God. This is how Jesus expresses justification by grace alone and by faith alone.

3. The Gift of the Poor Widow (Mark 12:41–44 par. Luke 21:1–4)

3.1. Synoptic Comparison

The story of the poor widow and her gift is transmitted only by Mark and Luke. Its omission in Matthew is probably due to his desire to link the central importance of the theme of judgment in chs. 24 and 25 more closely to the cries of woe against the Pharisees in ch. 23.<sup>62</sup>

---

<sup>58</sup> Reiser, “Selig,” 462, is correct to call this a “product of the imagination, which was invented to explain away the present passage.” Cf. Gösta Lindeskog, “Das Kamel und das Nadelöhr,” in Glaube und Gerechtigkeit: In memoriam R. Gyllenberg, ed. Jarmo Kiilunen et al., SESJ 38 (Helsinki: Finnish Exegetical Society, 1983), 109–122, at 116–122.

<sup>59</sup> Reiser, “Selig,” 463.

<sup>60</sup> Cf., 453.

<sup>61</sup> Cf. Schweizer, Markus, 115; Joachim Gnilka, Das Evangelium nach Markus (Mark 1–8,26), EKK 2.1 (Zürich: Benziger, 1978), 88; Trocmé, Marc, 265.

<sup>62</sup> Thus Donald A. Hagner, Matthew 14–28, WBC 33B (Dallas: Word Books, 1995), 686; cf. also Alexander Sand, Das Evangelium nach Matthäus, RNT (Regensburg: Pustet, 1986), 478, who however also thinks it possible that Matthew did not know this pericope.

The differences between the texts in Mark and Luke are irrelevant with regard to our present subject. The introduction in Mark 12:41a, "And he sat down," which is not found in Luke 21, is probably redactional; the same may be true of the words "opposite the treasury."<sup>63</sup> According to Mark 12:41b, Jesus sees "the multitude putting money into the treasury" and notes that "many people put in large sums"; according to Luke 21:1, he sees only "the rich putting their gifts into the treasury." In other words, Luke concentrates immediately on the rich. Both evangelists offer a powerful contrast to the rich, in the figure of a poor widow (Mark 12:42; Luke 21:2). Luke employs the term πενιχρός for "poor" (a hapax legomenon in the New Testament) instead of the πτωχρός in Mark's text (12:42), and omits the redactional explanation in Mark that "two lepta make a quadrans." In Mark 12:43, Jesus calls his disciples together in order to tell them that this poor widow has put more than all the others into the treasury chest. These words are introduced by the solemn affirmation "Amen, I say to you." Luke is obliged to omit this calling together of the disciples, since they are already present in the preceding scene. Instead of "Amen, I say to you," Luke has: "Truly, I say to you," and he does not even mention the treasury chest. There are indeed also a number of different formulations in the concluding verse of the two versions, but these do not amount to any substantial difference. It is unlikely that the addition "her whole living" in Mark 12:44b is due to Markan redaction, since this is the real reason for the positive evaluation of the gift which the poor widow makes.<sup>64</sup> It is also unlikely that this is merely a hyperbole on the part of Jesus,<sup>65</sup> who wishes to express his meaning as pointedly as possible. In the quest for the historical Jesus, therefore, we can take our starting point in the text of Mark, which has scarcely modified the tradition that the evangelist has taken over.<sup>66</sup>

<sup>63</sup> With Ernst, Markus, 364; cf. Pesch, Markusevangelium, 261.

<sup>64</sup> It is however improbable (against Schweizer, Markus, 142) that a frequently occurring motif "has been elaborated and given the form of a conversation of Jesus with his disciples or an exemplary narrative, thus producing the present story." Likewise, the suggestion that the narrative originated in a parable is pure speculation: against Emil Wendling, Die Entstehung des Marcus-Evangeliums (Tübingen: Mohr, 1908), 153–154; Dibelius, Formgeschichte, 261; Ernst Haenchen, Der Weg Jesu, de Gruyter Lehrbuch, 2nd ed. (Berlin: de Gruyter, 1968), 432–433. Haenchen's hypothesis is rightly rejected by Gnllka, Markus 2, 176; Trocmé, Marc, 316; and by other scholars.

<sup>65</sup> Against Pesch, Markusevangelium, 262; Johannes Beutler, "Die Gabe der armen Witwe. Mark 12, 41–44," in "Den Armen eine frohe Botschaft": Festschrift Bishop Franz Kampenhaus, ed. J. Hainz et al. (Frankfurt a.M.: Knecht, 1997), 125–136, at 132.

3.2. The Historicity of the Episode

The action (Mark 12:41) and its interpretation (vv. 43b, 44) are so closely inter-related that one can scarcely make any distinction in terms of the history of tradition between the logion of Jesus and its narrative framework.<sup>67</sup> From the perspective of form criticism, Rudolf Pesch has called this episode a “logion narrative.”<sup>68</sup> Others see it as a “biographical apophthegm with the character of an ideal” or an “ideal scene,”<sup>69</sup> a “wandering anecdote” (Wanderanedote),<sup>70</sup> or an “exemplary narrative which was freely created to serve a specific purpose.”<sup>71</sup> Emil Wendling holds that the narrative goes back to a story which Jesus himself told by way of instruction.<sup>72</sup> When they define its genre, scholars point out that the historical Jesus could scarcely have known that the widow had put two small coins into the treasury chest and had thereby given “her whole living.”<sup>73</sup>

Jesus takes his seat opposite the treasury chest (γαξοφυλάκιον) in the temple (Mark 12:41). γαξοφυλάκιον is a loanword from Persian, which designates the treasury chamber in the northern part of the Court of the Women in the temple (Josephus, War 5.200; Ant. 19.294) with its thirteen treasury chests shaped like trumpets (m. Shek 6.5). Seven of these were for fixed contributions, five for specific purposes,

<sup>66</sup> Cf. e.g. Trocmé, Marc, 316.

<sup>67</sup> Cf. Ernst, Markus, 364.

<sup>68</sup> Pesch, Markusevangelium, 261.

<sup>69</sup> Bultmann, Geschichte, 32–33; Trocmé, Marc, 316; Gnlika, Markus 2, 176; Walter Schmithals, Das Evangelium nach Markus. Kapitel 9,2–16,18, ÖTK 2.2–GTB 504 (Gütersloh: Gütersloher Verlagshaus, 1979), 553.

<sup>70</sup> Emanuel Hirsch, Frühgeschichte des Evangeliums 1: Das Werden des Markus-Evangeliums, 2nd ed. (Tübingen: Mohr, 1951), 137; a similar position is taken by Schmithals, Markus, 552: “a floating narrative” (Wandererzählung).

<sup>71</sup> Lohmeyer, Markus, 266; Eduard Schweizer, Markus, 142.

<sup>72</sup> Wendling, Entstehung, 154.

<sup>73</sup> This suggestion has recently been reprinted by Gerd Theissen, “Die Witwe als Wohltäterin: Beobachtungen zum urchristlichen Sozialethos anhand von Mk 12,41–44,” in Randfiguren in der Mitte: Festschrift Hermann-Josef Venetz, ed. M. Küchler and P. Reinl (Lucerne: Edition Exodus, 2003), 171–182, at 181. If Mark 12:41–44 were a fictional text, Theissen can imagine Jesus as its narrator. This would mean that an original exemplary narrative, like the parable of the tax collector and the Pharisee (Luke 18:9–14), had been turned into an historical narrative. Cf. also Beutler, “Gabe,” 132.

and one for general donations. The γαξοφυλάκιον may however refer to the thirteenth treasury chest for general donations. Since the donors had to inform a priest who stood by each chest the purpose of the donation, and the coins in all the treasury chests had to be checked to see whether they met a number of different criteria, all those present heard how high each donation was.<sup>74</sup> This would explain Jesus' knowledge of the amount the widow had contributed; the silence of Mark's text on this point is no argument against this hypothesis,<sup>75</sup> since it is also possible that the evangelist, or those who handed on the tradition before him, attributed such a knowledge to Jesus.

The public proclamation of the amount of people's contributions made it possible for rich donors to make a show of putting money into the treasury chest (cf. Matt 6:2). This is the background to the present scene.<sup>76</sup> Since the prohibition against sitting in the sanctuary is not yet attested for the period of Jesus' lifetime,<sup>77</sup> it is certainly historically possible that he sat in the Court of the Women—a posture that displays his role as teacher.<sup>78</sup> And this means that the fact that it was forbidden to sit in the temple does not lead to the conclusion that Mark's introduction is inexact and therefore redactional.<sup>79</sup> It is also historically plausible that many rich persons made large contributions; this need not be an indication of an "ideal" scene.<sup>80</sup>

The pre-Markan tradition already drew a contrast between the widow who was willing to give away all she possessed and the widow who has become the victim of the scribes' creed (v. 40). There is thus no reason to deny that Mark 12:41–44 reflects the recollection of the

---

<sup>74</sup> Cf. Hermann Strack and Paul Billerbeck, Kommentar zum Neuen Testament aus Talmud und Midrash 2 (München: Beck, 1924), 38. This means (against Ernst, Markus, 364) that we need not dismiss such details as historical inaccuracies and attribute them to the community catechesis. Schmithals, Markus, 553, suggests that the reference is to the collection which was taken up at the end of Christian worship, but this is extremely unlikely.

<sup>75</sup> As is argued by Lane, Mark, 442 n. 83.

<sup>76</sup> Cf. Horst Balz, γαξοφυλάκιον, EWNT I, 2nd ed. (1992), 556; Thomas Hieke, "Schatzkammer," NBL III (2001), 466–467; Evans, Mark, 281.

<sup>77</sup> Cf. e.g. Trocmé, Marc, 317, and the scholars cited in n. 78 below; against Ernst, Markus, 364–367.

<sup>78</sup> Cf. Strack and Billerbeck, Kommentar, 33; cf. ibid., 33–37; Simon Légasse, L'Évangile de Marc 2, LeDiv—commentaires 5 (Paris: Cerf, 1997), 771.

<sup>79</sup> Against Ernst, Markus, 364–365.

<sup>80</sup> With Ernst, Pesch, Markus; Pesch, Markusevangelium, 261.

story of Jesus,<sup>81</sup> especially because (as we shall see) it accords well with Jesus' thinking.

3.3. The Widow's Willingness to Give Everything Away

In Judaism and the New Testament, the "poor widow" is the embodiment of total destitution and helplessness (cf. Luke 18:3).<sup>82</sup> Since she herself depends on support from others, even the tiniest contribution on her part is surprising. The woman's status as a widow is probably recognizable from her clothing.<sup>83</sup> A lepton is the Greek name for the smallest Jewish coin, the perutha. The widow gives two lepta.<sup>84</sup> Since those for whom he is writing are not familiar with the economic background of the original narrative, Markus informs them that two lepta amount to a quadrans, the smallest Roman coin.

When Jesus now calls together his disciples (cf. also 6:7; 8:1, 34) in order to instruct them, and his words begin with the solemn introduction: "Amen, I say to you," this fits the situation described in the text. It is at this point that the disciples make their first appearance after the episode of the cursed fig-tree (11:14), and this suggests redactional work on the part of Mark.<sup>85</sup> The solemnity of the introduction is not due to an apocalyptic image of the visionary Jesus, on the pattern of Ethiopic Enoch (1 Enoch) 98.6; 103.1–2; 104.1.<sup>86</sup> Rather, it emphasizes the great authority of the following logion of Jesus about the value of the poor widow's gift. She has given more than all the others, i.e. those who are wealthy. There is a clear contrast between the πολλοὶ πλούσιοι . . . πολλά and the μία χίρα πτωχή, which may be underlined by the fact that the text, instead of using the indefinite pronoun τις which the reader would expect,

<sup>81</sup> Indeed, Lane, Mark, 442, writes: "The sequence of movement envisioned in Ch. 12:41–13:2 is natural and undoubtedly reflects what happened upon a single occasion." Evans, Mark, 281: "But there is no need to imagine any other form or setting than the one presented in Mark."

<sup>82</sup> Cf. Ernst, Markus, 365; Kiyoshi Mineshige, Besitzverzicht und Almosen bei Lukas, WUNT 2.163 (Tübingen; Mohr Siebeck, 2003), 205.

<sup>83</sup> Cf. Strack and Billerbeck, Kommentar, 45; Gustav Stählin, ThWNT IX (1973), 428–454, at 434; Pesch, Markusevangelium, 262; Gundry, Mark, 732.

<sup>84</sup> The use of the term λέπτα is not an argument against the historicity of the scene: with Gundry, Mark, against Lohmeyer, Markus, 266.

<sup>85</sup> Gundry, Mark, 732. There is no justification—against Gnllka, Markus 2, 176—for the view that Jesus originally addressed the bystanders rather than the disciples; cf. the arguments against this position by Ernst, Markus, 365.

<sup>86</sup> Against Berger, Gesetzesauslegung, 48; Pesch, Markusevangelium, 261; Gnllka, Markus 2, 177; with Ernst, Markus, 365.

employs the numerical word μία, thus creating the antithesis between “many” and “one” (vv. 41–42). The fact that the rich give large donations is underlined by the imperfect ἔβαλλον in v. 41, which implies repeated gifts; on the other hand, the aorist ἔβαλλον in v. 42 indicates that the poor widow gives a donation only once. She gives away all that she possesses (v. 44),<sup>87</sup> and it is clear that this constitutes her value in Jesus’ eyes. For the widow’s generous gift does not in the least mean that she is doing to herself what the scribes do to widows, according to Mark 12:40, when they “devour widows’ houses.”<sup>88</sup>

Many New Testament scholars see the point of the narrative in the positive relationship of the widow to God. The motif of love of God is not emphasized, but it certainly lies close at hand, since the widow offers her gift in the temple, with the intention of supporting worship there. Another argument which confirms this interpretation is that Jesus sees all ethical behavior as orientated to God. When the poor widow gives away everything, even her life,<sup>89</sup> she shows that she is “a living example of the carefree attitude which trusts in God’s loving care.”<sup>90</sup> And her action should also be seen as fulfilling the commandment to love one’s neighbor, since Jesus has just taught the double commandment of love of God and one’s neighbor (Mark 12:28–34).<sup>91</sup> Love of neighbor on its own is however not a sufficient motif, since the text does not speak of giving material support to the poor,<sup>92</sup> although it is of course true that love of neighbor, as a primary religious category, is the putting into practice of

---

<sup>87</sup> This is pointed out by Camille Focant, L'évangile selon Marc, Commentaire biblique: Nouveau Testament 2 (Paris: Cerf, 2004), 474. Against J. Duncan M. Derrett, “The Rich Fool: A Parable of Jesus concerning Inheritance,” in idem, Studies in the New Testament 2 (Leiden: Brill, 1978), 99–120, at 105–106, who argues that the widow gave what was superfluous to her needs on that particular day, in order to help others.

<sup>88</sup> With France, Mark, 493 n. 112. This is not in the least the natural inference from Mark’s text—against Gundry, Mark, 729.

<sup>89</sup> The expression ὅλον τὸν βίον αὐτῆς in v. 44 has a double meaning. Cf. Moloney, Mark, 247. It can designate both the material means necessary for the sustenance of life and life itself: “The double meaning is intended, for in doing one she has done the other.” Cf. Elisabeth Struthers Malbon, “The Poor Widow in Mark and Her Poor Rich Readers,” CBQ 53 (1991): 589–604, at 596.

<sup>90</sup> Ernst, Markus, 366; cf. Pesch, Markusevangelium, 263.

<sup>91</sup> Cf. Morna Hooker, A Commentary on the Gospel According to St Mark, BNTC (London: Black, 1991), 296–297.

<sup>92</sup> Cf. Gerd Theissen, “Jesusbewegung und charismatische Wertrevolution,” NTS 35 (1989): 343–360, at 351; Gundry, Mark, 729.

the love of God.<sup>93</sup> The example of the poor widow is proposed to the disciples and to the later Christian community as a model of unshakable trust in God's loving care.<sup>94</sup> Since both the scene as a whole and most of its details are very concrete, there is no reason whatever to accept the hypothesis of an adoption by Christians of a Wanderanedote based on parallels which the history of religions posits outside Judaism, or that the story is an illustration of the widespread principle that the gifts of the poor, though small, were valuable.<sup>95</sup> Similarly, there is no support in the text itself<sup>96</sup> for the hypothesis of a competition between church and synagogue about which of the two provided better care for widows.<sup>97</sup>

Since the story of the poor widow agrees with the preaching of Jesus (cf. e.g. Mark 10:23–26),<sup>98</sup> there is no reason not to regard it as a narrative which preserves the memory of the historical Jesus.<sup>99</sup> At the same time, the fact that it was handed down shows that it was significant for the Christian communities, in which the poor certainly outnumbered the rich.

3.4. Does Jesus Lament the Poor Widow's Behavior?

There is no doubt that the widow's action is generous. The traditional interpretation, which sees Jesus praising her behavior as exemplary, has been called into question by Addison G. Wright.<sup>100</sup> He infers from

---

<sup>93</sup> This is the position taken by Schmithals, Markus, 553: the story, as an "example of the service of love of one's neighbor," is "ultimately saying something about the quality of faith" (italics original).

<sup>94</sup> Cf. Stählin, χῆρα, 438; Hans-Joachim Degenhardt, Lukas—Evangelist der Armen (Stuttgart: Katholisches Bibelwerk, 1965), 96–97; Pesch, Markusevangelium, 263; Légasse, Marc, 774.

<sup>95</sup> With Degenhardt, Lukas, 96; Pesch, Markusevangelium, 263; against Bultmann, Geschichte, 32–33, who posits dependence on a Buddhist tradition. Similar positions are taken by Lohmeyer, Markus, 265–266; Hirsch, Frühgeschichte, 137; Schmithals, Markus 2, 552.

<sup>96</sup> Cf. also Gundry, Mark, 731.

<sup>97</sup> Thus Lührmann, Markus, 212.

<sup>98</sup> Thus also Gnllka, Markus 2, 178, who however believes that the story cannot be traced back to the historical Jesus.

<sup>99</sup> Pesch, Markusevangelium, 263 remarks pertinently that no serious objection can be brought against the story from the perspective of tradition criticism. He envisages persons who handed on the tradition in Jerusalem.

<sup>100</sup> Addison G. Wright, "The Widow's Mites—Praise or Lament? A Matter of Context," CBQ 44 (1982): 256–265. This interpretation is accepted by Evans, Mark, 282; Joseph A. Fitzmyer, The Gospel According to Luke (X–XXIV), AB 28B (Garden City: Doubleday, 1985 [below: Luke 2]), 1320–1321; Ched Myers, Binding the Strong Man

the context of the narrative that Jesus does not praise her conduct, but rather laments it: her action illustrates the dangers of religious institutions. The official religion has led her astray, so that she parts with even the small amount of money she possessed.<sup>101</sup> He supports this interpretation with the following arguments. (1) Jesus does not recommend her behavior, nor does he explicitly exhort his disciples to imitate her. (2) The principle that what counts in a donation is not how much one gives, but rather how little one retains for oneself, is very widespread (cf. Xenophon, Mem. 1.33.3; Aristotle, Eth. Nic. 4.1,19; Josephus, Ant. 6.149).<sup>102</sup> (3) There is no contrast in the text between the divine and the human evaluation. (4) There is no indication that the disciples found it difficult to understand the scene. (5) According to the testimony of Mark's Gospel, Jesus attaches higher value to human distress than to the observance of the commandments of Sabbath or Corban (Mark 2:23–3:6; 5; 7:10–13). (6) Finally, both the preceding context (in which Jesus affirms that the scribes devour the houses of widows)<sup>103</sup> and the immediately following context (in which Jesus predicts the destruction of the temple) offer support for the view that he laments the action of the widow.<sup>104</sup>

Wright emphasizes that he bases his verdict exclusively on the redactional level of the gospel. However, even on this level the arguments are unconvincing, since the widow is portrayed in a positive

---

(Maryknoll: Orbis, 1988), 321; Rasiah S. Sugirtharaja, "The Widow's Mites Revalued," ET 103 (1991/1992): 42–43; Légasse, Marc, 774–775.

<sup>101</sup> Wright, "Widow," 263.

<sup>102</sup> Cf. Strack and Billerbeck, Kommentar, 45–46; Samuel Tobias Lachs, A Rabbinic Commentary on the New Testament: The Gospels of Matthew, Mark, and Luke (Hoboken: Ktav, 1987), 375–376.

<sup>103</sup> Wright, "Widow," 262: "Her religious thinking has accomplished the very thing that the scribes were accused of." Fitzmyer agrees: Luke 2, 1321.

<sup>104</sup> Malbon, "Widow," 589–604, discusses Wright's position and seeks to show that this story can be interpreted in at least six different narrative contexts in the Gospel of Mark: (1) the behavior of the scribes (Mark 12:38–40); (2) the theme of the temple, which is announced as early as 11:11, with the story of the fig-tree which Jesus curses (11:12–14, 20–25); (3) the anointing of Jesus by an unnamed woman, at Mark 14:3–9; (4) in general, the position of women in Mark's Gospel; (5) the other women in their relationship to Jesus as teacher; (6) the descriptions of the persons in Mark. Légasse, Marc, 774 n. 25, rightly objects: "E. S. Malbon has been inspired by this, but the relationships which one discovers by means of this methodology ought surely to be more than merely artificial."

light.<sup>105</sup> Jesus neither laments nor recommends the widow's behavior: all he does is to compare it with the behavior of the rich. The lack of an exhortation to imitate her proves only that the text is not explicitly parenetic. The principle attested in ancient sources, whereby the one who retains less for himself pays more, is irrelevant here, since Jesus is not following these authors, but is pronouncing his own verdict; and he goes beyond the parallel statements in ancient authors, since the widow retains absolutely nothing—not even a small portion for herself. Since Jesus is pronouncing a judgment on his own authority, the lack of a contrast between human and divine evaluation is irrelevant. When he says: “Amen, I tell you,” he is assuring his hearers that his judgment is correct—all the more so, in that it contradicts an opinion which was widespread among the people. Finally, there is no indication that the widow makes her donation because religious authorities put pressure upon her to do so.<sup>106</sup> On the contrary, she does so voluntarily<sup>107</sup>—she is not bending the law, as others do with regard to the commandment of Corban. It may indeed be true that Jesus ultimately makes the temple and its cult superfluous through his message of salvation,<sup>108</sup> but that is not the point at issue in the present text. Besides this, the fact that Jesus introduces his verdict with the words: “Amen, I tell you,” makes it difficult to read this as a complaint about the widow's action; and this is not affected by the fact that the contrast in the text is between “more” and “less,” rather than between an authentic and an inauthentic gift,<sup>109</sup> since we may surely take it that Jesus does not intend to portray the “more” of the rich as something positive—although nothing in the text suggests that he condemns them for the size of their gifts.<sup>110</sup>

---

<sup>105</sup> Thus France, Mark, 490 n. 1; Witherington, Mark, 35 n. 160; Beutler, “Gabe,” 127; cf. also Mineshige, Besitzverzicht, 206. On what follows, cf. especially Gundry, Mark, 730–731.

<sup>106</sup> However, this is affirmed by Wright, “Widow,” 262: “She has been taught and encouraged by religious leaders to donate as she does, and Jesus condemns the value system that motivates her action.” Fitzmyer agrees: Luke 2, 1321.

<sup>107</sup> This is correctly emphasized by France, Mark, 493, and Witherington, Mark, 335.

<sup>108</sup> Cf. Giesen, Herrschaft Gottes, 87–91.

<sup>109</sup> This objection is made by Fitzmyer, Luke 2, 1321.

<sup>110</sup> Against Moloney, Mark, 247: “The condemnation of the scribes, who abuse the widows while parading their religiosity, continues with the wealthy who parade their large sums, in contrast with the poverty of the poor widow.”

3.5. The Poor Widow—a Selfless Benefactress?

We may therefore conclude that when Jesus makes a distinction between the action of the poor widow and the actions of the rich, he is not rebuking her, but rather praising her and exhorting the disciples to acknowledge what she does.<sup>111</sup> This most likely goes back to the historical kernel of the story;<sup>112</sup> but its position in the Gospel of Mark is certainly the work of the evangelist. We must identify the meaning of the original narrative independently of its context in Mark. Ancient parallels help to clarify and define more closely the way in which it is to be understood. Since these parallels never warn against making sacrifices or gifts, but invariably recommend these, the interpretation in terms of self-exploitation, which Addison G. Wright and other scholars have proposed, cannot be correct.<sup>113</sup> As Gerd Theissen has shown, religious sacrifices<sup>114</sup> and gifts from one person to another<sup>115</sup> were evaluated in classical antiquity with the help of four criteria: (1) the proportionality of the sacrifice or gift; (2) the attitude of the one who offers the sacrifice or makes the gift; (3) the sacrifice or gift as a vicarious gift of one's own self; and (4) the status of the one who makes the sacrifice or gift. The story of the poor widow must be evaluated against the background of the criteria that can be discerned in ancient texts.<sup>116</sup>

The widow gives away all that she possesses at this moment. It follows that her donation is not proportional to her possessions, and therefore breaks the rule of proportionality. Ancient texts offer no parallels to such conduct. In order to underline how exceptional it is, the narrator explicitly states that the widow possesses two lepta. In other words, she could at least have kept one of the coins for herself.<sup>117</sup> But this poor widow, who was herself dependent on support from others, does not keep back even the little that she possesses—nor even a part of this sum. The text does not in fact say anything about the intentions or the moral

---

<sup>111</sup> Cf. e.g. Lane, Mark, 443. On the basis of the context, Donahue and Harrington, Mark, 365, leave open the question whether Jesus praises the widow as a model of generosity or expresses his sympathy with her as a victim of religious exploitation.

<sup>112</sup> This would be true, even in the unlikely case that the narrative goes back to a parable of Jesus.

<sup>113</sup> I agree on this point with Theissen, "Witwe," 172.

<sup>114</sup> Cf. the examples, Theissen, "Witwe," 173–175.

<sup>115</sup> Cf. the examples, Theissen, "Witwe," 175–177.

<sup>116</sup> On what follows, cf. Theissen, "Witwe," 177–178.

<sup>117</sup> Cf. Schweizer, Markus, 143; Lane, Mark, 443; Hooker, Mark, 296.

qualities of the widow, but as we have seen, almost all exegetes ascribe good motives to her. The silence in the text invites such interpretations, which assuredly do not run contrary to the view held by the narrator himself. Nevertheless, her motivation must lie in the explicit affirmation that she is giving “her whole life”: her gift expresses the existential gift of her own self, since she parts with her property, which she needs in order to ensure her survival.

Obviously enough, a poor widow is a recipient of benefactions; but through her gift, this widow herself becomes a benefactress. Since the decisive criterion in the evaluation of the ethical quality of a donation is the capacity of the donor, she surpasses the rich, since the large sums they donate amount only to a small portion of their wealth. There is nothing similar to this point in the parallels from the history of religions.

It is striking that the widow’s donation is not called a “sacrifice.” Jesus’ argument is based only on the contrast between superfluity and lack. When he praises her gift, Jesus does not refer to God (as in the parallel texts from classical antiquity): it is not God, but Jesus who pronounces a verdict on the sacrifice in Mark 12. The “Amen” (12:43) shows that he is speaking in the name of God and that his verdict is authoritative.<sup>118</sup> He praises the widow’s gift for transcending the principle of proportionality and sees it as evidence of the gift of her own self. Since Jesus is not the recipient of the gift or sacrifice, he does not himself occupy the place of God.

The widow places her gift in the hands of the priests. In this way, the story occupies an intermediate position “between the parallels which speak of the religious sacrifices made by the poor and the examples of social donations.”<sup>119</sup> According to the traditional religious evaluation of sacrifice, the sacrifices of the poor can be more valuable in God’s sight than those of the rich. This evaluation is also a factor in the logic of the social donation, with the result that the poor, in their capacity as donors, are the equal of the rich; indeed, if they contribute their entire possessions, they are superior to the rich. As benefactors, the poor acquire a new status. This is not only a question of how God sees them: other people too must be taught to esteem poor benefactors.

---

<sup>118</sup> Cf. Theissen, “Witwe,” 178; Klaus Berger, Die Amen-Worte Jesu, BZNW 39 (Berlin: de Gruyter, 1970), 49.

<sup>119</sup> Theissen, “Witwe,” 179.

But how is the widow to survive, if she gives away everything that she needs for her sustenance? The answer is that she will fast on that day, becoming a model for the praxis of fasting in the context of diakonia which is attested at a later date.<sup>120</sup> In classical antiquity, members of the upper class acquired prestige and influence by means of their benefactions. This is applied to the poor widow in Mark 12:41–44. Instead of receiving benefactions, she becomes a benefactress. She is one who acts, not one who receives. Theißen's interpretation misunderstands the original intention of the narrative, but we may assume that those for whom Mark was writing could understand it in this way, thanks to the ideas which were current in their milieu.

3.6. The Poor Widow as a Model for the Disciples of Jesus

Jesus does not attack wealth, nor the rich as such. He inverts the widespread system of values which sees the size of the donation as more important than the generosity of the donor.<sup>121</sup> When he explains this to his disciples—who doubtless thought in this conventional manner—he is telling them what is important for them. By giving away all that she possesses, the poor widow becomes a model and pattern of true discipleship (cf. Mark 1:16–20; 2:13–14),<sup>122</sup> although the following of Jesus is not explicitly mentioned in this passage. This story thus recalls both the negative example of the rich man who was not willing to give up his possessions in order to follow Jesus (Mark 10:21) and the positive example of the disciples who have left everything in order to follow him (10:28).<sup>123</sup> Discipleship demands that one commit oneself to the will of God, which Jesus himself is about to fulfill in his passion.<sup>124</sup> This is why the good news is preached to the poor (Luke 4:18; Luke 7:22 par.

<sup>120</sup> On this, cf. A. Guillaume, Jeûne et charité dans l'Église latine, des origines au XII<sup>e</sup> siècle en particulier chez saint Léon le Grand (Paris: Éditions S.O.S., 1954), 21–27.

<sup>121</sup> Cf. France, Mark, 489, 493.

<sup>122</sup> Cf. also Lane, Mark, 443; Louis Simon, "Le sou de la veuve. Marc 12/41–44," ETHR 44 (1969): 115–126; Malbon, "Widow," 595–601; Moloney, Mark, 247; Witherington, Mark, 335; Beutler, "Gabe," 133; Mineshige, Besitzverzicht, 207.

<sup>123</sup> Cf. France, Mark, 493.

<sup>124</sup> Cf. Anderson, Mark, 287; Moloney, Mark, 248.

Matt 11:5).<sup>125</sup> Even more important, however, is the fact that the poor widow, who is dependent on support from others, becomes a benefactress—and one who surpasses the greatest benefactors by means of her gift, small as this is. “The great appreciation of the sacrifices of the poor in God’s eyes leads to a great appreciation of the poor as benefactors of their fellow human beings.”<sup>126</sup> Religious evaluations are applied to social evaluations, thereby laying the foundations for a Christian community of brothers and sisters: now that the quantity of the gift is not the central issue, it is possible to achieve a genuine equality among all the Christians in the community.

In this sense, the poor widow is a model for every person who enters into fellowship with Jesus and must learn that in following Jesus, it is necessary to leave everything,<sup>127</sup> in order to achieve a community of equals. On a secondary level, in the larger context of Mark’s Gospel, this scene can also be related to the confrontation between Jesus and the authorities in Israel, who are characterized not by the undivided gift of self but by an unchecked rapacity<sup>128</sup> which does not promote fellowship, but rather destroys it. However, the main concern is with the disciples, who are to imitate the example of the poor widow and turn to God with all their hearts, in an unlimited act of trust. This means that the present story is not about the option for the poor, but about the option for poverty.

---

<sup>125</sup> Cf. Walter Grundmann, Das Evangelium nach Markus, 7th ed., ThHK 2 (Berlin: Evangelische Verlagsanstalt, 1977), 259; Pesch, Markusevangelium, 264.

<sup>126</sup> Theissen, “Witwe,” 182.

<sup>127</sup> Here, we may agree with Beutler, “Gabe,” (n. 65 above), 132, 134, that the exemplary function of the widow is not restricted to the narrower circle of Jesus’ disciples.

<sup>128</sup> Thus Beutler, 134–136, who sees the widow as “a kind of ideal disciple and at the same time a representative of what was noblest in her people,” since she is the only woman who is praised unreservedly during Jesus’ three visits to the temple. Focant, Mark, 474, rightly disputes this interpretation. He sees the words of Jesus as ambivalent: they can be understood both as praise and as a lament (475).

4. "Blessed are you Poor" (Luke 6:20 par. Matt 5:3)—
"Alas for the Rich" (Luke 6:24)

4.1. Synoptic Comparison

In addition to the beatitudes pronounced on the mourners and the hungry, the Sermon on the Mount in Matthew and the Sermon on the Plain in Luke both transmit a beatitude concerning the poor. Almost all scholars agree that these macarisms in their original verbal form go back to Jesus himself.<sup>129</sup> Likewise, there is no reason to deny that the longer fourth macarism (Matt 5:11 par. Luke 6:22) goes back to Jesus,<sup>130</sup> especially since all the strata of the gospel sources of the gospel tradition contain warnings that the disciples of Jesus will suffer,<sup>131</sup> and since parallel series in Judaism often close like this, with a longer or more nuanced line which emphasizes the conclusion.<sup>132</sup> The four macarisms were combined no later than the pre-synoptic tradition;<sup>133</sup> three other macarisms (about the "meek," the "pure of heart," and the "peacemakers") which are transmitted only in Matthew are probably the fruit of exegetical work in the pre-Matthean tradition.<sup>134</sup> Matthew forms one further macarism about those who have mercy (5:7).<sup>135</sup> Most scholars trace the

<sup>129</sup> Cf. Klaus Koch, Was ist Formgeschichte?, 5th ed. (Neukirchen-Vluyn: Neukirchener, 1989), 50–55; Bultmann, Geschichte, 135; Siegfried Schulz, Q: Die Spruchquelle der Evangelisten (Zürich: Theologischer Verlag, 1972), 78; Giesen, Handeln, 84; Merklein, Die Gottesherrschaft als Handlungsprinzip, 2nd ed., FzB 34 (Würzburg: Echter, 1981), 50; Hans Weder, Die "Rede der Reden" (Zürich: Theologischer Verlag, 1985), 40; Werner Stenger, "Die Seligpreisung der Geschmähten (Matt 5,11–12; Luke 6,22–23)," in idem, Strukturelle Beobachtungen zum Neuen Testament, NNTS 12 (Leiden: Brill, 1990), 119–153, at 150; Ulrich Luz, Das Evangelium nach Matthäus (Matt 1–7) 5th ed., EKK 1.1 (Düsseldorf: Benziger, 2002), 271; François Bovon, Das Evangelium nach Lukas 1, EKK 3.1 (Zürich: Benziger, 1989), 295; Mineshige, Besitzverzicht, 16.

<sup>130</sup> Cf. Bovon, Lukas, 295; Darrell L. Bock, Luke 1, Baker Exegetical Commentary on the NT 3A (Grand Rapids: Baker, 1994), 553; against Heinz Schürmann, Das Lukasevangelium 1, HTK 3 (Freiburg: Herder, 1969), 335–336; Merklein, Handlungsprinzip, 50 with n. 23.

<sup>131</sup> Cf. Joachim Jeremias, Neutestamentliche Theologie 1 (Gütersloh: Gütersloher Verlagshaus, 1971), 230; Bock, Luke, 577–578.

<sup>132</sup> Cf. David Daube, The New Testament and Rabbinic Judaism, Jordan Lectures (London: University of London, 1952), 196–201; Bock, Luke, 578.

<sup>133</sup> Cf. Gerhard Schneider, Das Evangelium nach Lukas. Kap. 1–10, ÖTK 3.3–GTB 500 (Gütersloh: Gütersloher Verlagshaus, 1977), 152; Schürmann, Lukasevangelium, 335; Fitzmyer, Luke, 634–635.

<sup>134</sup> Cf. e.g. Koch, Formgeschichte, 53–54.

<sup>135</sup> Cf. Bovon, Lukas, 295.

shared traditions in the Gospels of Matthew and Luke to Q.<sup>136</sup> Some suppose two different versions of Q (QMatt and QLk).<sup>137</sup> Greater historical reliability is attributed to Luke's version.<sup>138</sup>

The beatitude genre is found in many different cultures.<sup>139</sup> In Israel, we find the cultic and sapiential macarism which promises earthly prosperity. The eschatological macarism, promising future salvation, originated above all in early Jewish apocalyptic (e.g. Pss. Sol. 17.44; 18.6–7a). The best definition of the macarism is a congratulatory formula which proclaims present happiness and congratulates the person to whom it is addressed.<sup>140</sup> There can be no doubt about the eschatological character of the macarisms in the Sermon on the Mount and the Sermon on the Plain.

The usual form of a macarism is in the third person, as in Matthew; Luke uses the second person. It is difficult to decide which is original. It is probable that Matthew—or perhaps already a pre-Matthean redaction—has assimilated the macarisms to the customary third person,<sup>141</sup> in

---

<sup>136</sup> Cf. inter alia Luz, Matthäus, 270; Bovon, Lukas, 295; Fitzmyer, Luke 2, 631; Walter Radl, Das Evangelium nach Lukas. Kommentar 1: 1:1–9:50 (Freiburg: Herder, 2003), 370. Hans Theo Wrege, Die Überlieferungsgeschichte der Bergpredigt, WUNT 9 (Tübingen: Mohr, 1968), 11, postulates two distinct oral traditions.

<sup>137</sup> Thus e.g. Georg Strecker, Die Bergpredigt (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1984), 10; Hans Dieter Betz, The Sermon on the Mount Matthew 5:3–7:27 and Luke 6:20–49, Hermeneia (Minneapolis: Fortress, 1995), 43–44; Mineshige, Besitzverzicht, 14–15.

<sup>138</sup> Cf. e.g. Schulz, Q, 76; Schürmann, Lukas, 330; Georg Braumann, “Zum traditionsgeschichtlichen Problem der Seligpreisungen Mt v 3–12,” NovT 4 (1960): 253–260, at 253–255.

<sup>139</sup> On this, cf. e.g. Friedrich Hauck, μακάριος, κτλ. ThWNT IV (1942), 365–367; Georg Bertram, μακάριος, 367–369; William David Davies and Dale C. Allison Jr., A Critical and Exegetical Commentary on the Gospel According to Saint Matthew 1, ICC (Edinburgh: T&T Clark, 1988), 431; Heinz Giesen, “Seligpreisung,” in Münchener theologisches Wörterbuch (Düsseldorf: Patmos, 1997), 329–331; Bock, Luke, 571–572; Radl, Lukas, 374–376.

<sup>140</sup> Cf. Hans-Joachim Kraus, Psalmen 1, 3rd ed., BKAT XV 1–2 (Neukirchen-Vluyn: Neukirchener, 1966), 66; Heinz Giesen, “Heilszusage angesichts der Bedrängnis,” in idem, Glauben und Handeln 2, EHS.T 215 (Frankfurt a.M.: Lang, 1983), 71–97, at 73–74; idem, Die Offenbarung des Johannes, RNT (Regensburg: Pustet, 1997), 64–67, esp. 66.

<sup>141</sup> Thus e.g. Josef Schmid, Matthäus und Lukas, BSt(F) (Freiburg: Herder, 1930), 216; Hubert Frankemölle, “Die Makarismen (Matt 5,1–12; Luke 6,20–23),” BZ 15 (1971): 52–75, at 63; against Bultmann, Geschichte, 114; Dupont, Les Béatitudes 1: Le Problème Littéraire, reprint of 2nd ed. (Paris: Gabalda, 1969), 271–272; Schulz, Q, 77; Helmut Merklein, Handlungsprinzip, 49; Fitzmyer, Luke, 631–632; Stenger, “Seligpreisung,” 129; Bovon, Lukas 1, 297.

order not to restrict them to one particular group of persons, but to keep them open for all who behave accordingly.<sup>142</sup> This makes it more probable that Jesus himself employed the second person.<sup>143</sup> A further supporting argument is the addition of τῷ πνεύματι (Matt 5:3)<sup>144</sup> and διψῶντες τὴν δικαιοσύνην, as well as the change from βασιλεία τοῦ θεοῦ to βασιλεία τῶν οὐρανῶν (Matt 5:3, 10): these are certainly redactional. Luke twice inserts a vñv into 6:21.<sup>145</sup> Matthew has probably assimilated the sequence of the first two macarisms to Isa 61:1–3; this means that the sequence in Luke is original.<sup>146</sup>

At Luke 6:24–26, four cries of woe form a counterfoil to the four beatitudes. The first three beatitudes promise salvation to those who are “blessed” (vv. 20f.), but those against whom the cries of woe are pronounced will not enjoy this salvation (vv. 24–25), since they have already received their reward. The fourth beatitude and the fourth cry of woe form an antithetical correspondence through the mention of the prophets (v. 23c) and the false prophets (v. 26b). While the first three corresponding pairs concern physical suffering or well-being, the fourth antithetical pair concerns an inner state of mind.<sup>147</sup> Scholars disagree about whether the cries of woe were in Q. Heinz Schürmann is certain of this: he argues that Matthew has omitted them because of the specific intention of his macarisms.<sup>148</sup> However, the cries of woe are probably the creation of Luke’s redaction, which may have been influenced by

<sup>142</sup> Cf. Giesen, Handeln, 87–88; a similar position is taken by Radl, Lukas 1, 373.

<sup>143</sup> Thus Schmid, Matthäus, 216; Frankemölle, “Makarismen,” 63; I. Howard Marshall, The Gospel of Luke, NIGTC (Exeter: Paternoster Press, 1978), 249; Giesen, Handeln, 87; Luz, Matthäus 1, 270. A different position is taken by Bovon, Lukas 1, 297; Bock, Luke 1, 573; Mineshige, Besitzverzicht, 16–17.

<sup>144</sup> The early church understood the addition “in spirit” in the sense of humility, and this is probably correct. Cf. Jacques Dupont, Les Béatitudes 3: Les Évangélistes, rev. ed., ÉB (Paris: Gabalda, 1973), 457–471; Strecker, Bergpredigt, 262; Reiser, “Selig,” 464.

<sup>145</sup> On this and other points of difference, cf. the commentaries ad loc.

<sup>146</sup> Thus Schürmann, Lukas 1, 336; Radl, Lukas 1, 372. A different position is taken by Dupont, Béatitudes 1, 271–272.

<sup>147</sup> Cf. Radl, Lukas 1, 370.

<sup>148</sup> Schürmann, Lukas 1, 336, 339–340; cf. Hans-Werner Bartsch, “Feldrede und Bergpredigt,” ThZ 16 (1960): 5–18, at 10–11; Frankemölle, “Makarismen,” 64–66; Schneider, Lukas 1, 280; Christopher M. Tuckett, “The Beatitudes,” NovT 25 (1983): 193–215, at 205. According to Dieter Lührmann, Die Redaktion der Logienquelle, WMANT 33 (Neukirchen-Vluyn: Neukirchener, 1969), 54, they are traditional, but do not come from Q. A similar position is taken by Vincenzo Petracca, Gott oder das Geld, TANZ 39 (Tübingen: Francke, 2003), 69.

material that has been included in the Sermon on the Mount. One argument in favor of Lukan redaction is that the contrast between the poor and the rich is typically Lukan (cf. Luke 1:52–53; 16:29–31) and that the second person fits the Lukan form of the macarisms.<sup>149</sup>

4.2. The Kingdom of God for the Poor

During the Sermon on the Plain, the twelve apostles and a great number of Jesus' disciples are present (Luke 6:17), as well as a great crowd of the people (vv. 17, 19) who want to hear Jesus speak and to be healed by him (v. 18). Although these persons are present, however, and hear what he says, Jesus addresses the double sequence of four beatitudes and four cries of woe (vv. 20b–26) to his disciples alone (v. 20a).<sup>150</sup> This is confirmed in v. 27 (cf. 7:1), when Jesus now speaks explicitly (cf. the ἀλλὰ) to “you who hear,” i.e. also<sup>151</sup> (but not exclusively)<sup>152</sup> to the crowd. From this point onward, the Sermon on the Plain is no longer addressed to the disciples alone.<sup>153</sup> Since the fact that the cries of woe are addressed to the disciples demonstrates that there were rich persons among them, the words of Jesus cannot envisage only those who have left everything in order to follow him. In the post-Easter period, these words are addressed to Christians.<sup>154</sup> Who are these “poor” persons

<sup>149</sup> With Dupont, Béatitudes 1, 341–342, 344; Edmond Jacquemin, “Les béatitudes selon Luc. Lc 6,17.20–26,” AsSeign 37 (1971): 80–91; Bovon, Lukas 1, 298; Peter Klein, “Die lukanischen Wehrufe Lk 6,24–26,” ZNW 71 (1980): 150–159; Fitzmyer, Luke 2, 627; Petracca, Gott, 84; Radl, Lukas 1, 371–372; against Friedrich Wilhelm Horn, Glaube und Handeln in der Theologie des Lukas, GTA 26 (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1983), 125–130, 132f.; Ingo Broer, Die Seligpreisungen der Bergpredigt, BBB 61 (Königstein-Bonn: Hanstein, 1986), 20–38.

<sup>150</sup> With Wrege, Bergpredigt, 3; Schürmann, Lukas 1, 327; Marshall, Luke 2, 257; Fitzmyer, Luke, 629; Walter E. Pilgrim, Good News to the Poor (Minneapolis: Augsburg, 1981), 107; for a similar position, cf. Radl, Lukas 1, 366, 377; against Petracca, Gott, 80–82.

<sup>151</sup> With Mineshige, Besitzverzicht, 14 with n. 5.

<sup>152</sup> Against Luise Schottroff and Wolfgang Stegemann, Jesus von Nazareth—Hoffnung der Armen, UB 639 (Stuttgart: Kohlhammer, 1978), 91–93; Bartsch, “Feldrede”, 7–8; Paul S. Minear, “Jesus’ Audiences according to Luke,” NovT 16 (1974): 81–109, at 104–109.

<sup>153</sup> Against Fitzmyer, Luke, 627; Betz, Sermon, 574–575, 592. It is absurd to interpret the “poor” as a reference to Israel in its need of salvation: against David Peter Secombe, Possessions and the Poor in Luke-Acts, SNTU vol. B.6 (Linz: Prof. DDR. Albert Fuchs, 1982), 88–92.

<sup>154</sup> Thus also Schürmann, Lukas 1, 325–326; Secombe, Possessions, 92–93; Radl, Lukas 1, 377.

to whom the kingdom of God belongs? We are not told explicitly, but it is surely not wrong to identify them with those disciples who have abandoned everything in order to follow Jesus.<sup>155</sup> In other words, they are not “poor” in an exclusively material sense.<sup>156</sup> The fact that they are his disciples is demonstrated with particular clarity by the hatred and exclusion which are inflicted on them for the sake of the Son of Man (Luke 6:22).<sup>157</sup> This is in keeping with the widespread societal norms whereby the poor, sinners, the sick, and other groups of persons in society suffer exclusion. Such societal norms are even considered to have their basis in the will of God.<sup>158</sup> Jesus takes exactly the opposite view, since such an exclusion contradicts his image of God. Since it is with him that the rule of God comes, the poor may truly consider themselves blessed—all the more so, in that they always enjoy the special protection of God.<sup>159</sup>

Not only the word πτωχοί, but also the antithesis to the πλούσιοι in the first cry of woe (v. 26), shows that Jesus declares “blessed” people who are in need. Since those whom he is addressing are his disciples, we cannot exclude the religious accentuation of poverty.<sup>160</sup> The religious connotation of poverty is further strengthened by the fact that the poor are assured that they possess the kingdom of God even now: this is no consolation that points to the future, but an event which is already present<sup>161</sup> and presupposes faith on the part of the human person. As in Jesus’ healings of the sick, the kingdom of God demonstrates its presence even now in the poor (cf. Luke 11:20).<sup>162</sup> Since the next two beatitudes

<sup>155</sup> A similar position is taken by Schottroff and Stegemann, Jesus, 102. Pilgrim, Poor, 77, admits that there is an indissoluble link between genuine poverty and discipleship. Against Mineshige, Besitzverzicht, 22 n. 58.

<sup>156</sup> Thus also Mineshige, Besitzverzicht, 22.

<sup>157</sup> Cf. Degenhardt, Lukas, 50–51; Schürmann, Lukas 1, 327; Radl, Lukas 1, 378.

<sup>158</sup> Cf. Joel B. Green, The Gospel of Luke, NICNT (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1997), 268.

<sup>159</sup> Cf. Dupont, Beatitudes 3, 669–670; Reiser, “Selig,” 463.

<sup>160</sup> Against Mineshige, Besitzverzicht, 17–18. This point is correctly maintained by Karl Heinz Rengstorff, Das Evangelium nach Lukas, 16th ed., NTD 3 (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1975), 87; Walter Schmithals, Das Evangelium nach Lukas, ZBK 3.1 (Zürich: Theologischer Verlag, 1980), 80; Eduard Lohse, “Das Evangelium für die Armen,” ZNW 72 (1981): 51–64, at 55–56; Pilgrim, Poor, 77; Josef Ernst, Das Evangelium nach Lukas, 6th ed., RNT (Regensburg: Pustet, 1993), 168.

<sup>161</sup> Thus also Bovon, Lukas 1, 300–301; Marshall, Luke, 250; Weder, Rede, 46; Schottroff and Stegemann, Jesus, 100; Bock, Luke 1, 572; against Mineshige, Besitzverzicht, 18.

<sup>162</sup> On this, cf. Giesen, Herrschaft Gottes, 64–80.

promise future salvation, we see that the eschatological process will be completely achieved only in the end-time.<sup>163</sup> The beatitude pronounced on the poor also recalls Jesus' statement at Luke 4:18 that he has been sent by God to preach the good news to the poor (cf. Isa 61:1).<sup>164</sup> A religious accentuation of poverty is also strengthened by the comparison between those on whom blessings are pronounced and the prophets, the representatives of God's will who were treated by the ancestors of the Jews just as the disciples themselves are now being treated by the Jews (Luke 6:23). The second and third beatitudes make explicit Jesus' understanding of poverty. Hunger (v. 21a) is often a consequence of poverty, and can be a synecdoche for the distress a beggar experiences. This is why hunger is frequently coupled in the Bible with thirst (Job 22:7; Ps 107:5; John 6:35; 1 Cor 4:11; Rev 7:16), nakedness (Tob 1:17; 4:16; Job 24:10; Ezek 18:7, 16), homelessness and nakedness (Isa 58:7), and imprisonment (Ps 146:7).<sup>165</sup> Unlike Luke 1:53, the words of Jesus here do not promise that the hungry will be filled with good things: all he promises is that their hunger will cease. God himself will satisfy their hunger: this is expressed by the passivum divinum "you will be satisfied." This means that, unlike the blessing pronounced on the poor, the promise to the hungry is not for the present time. Jesus does not promise his disciples heaven on earth. The incipient experience of the rule of God does not preserve them from distress (cf. Rom 8:31–39).

"Those who weep" are people affected by a great distress (cf. e.g. Luke 7:13); weeping can also be a reaction to the experience of hunger.<sup>166</sup> Here too, although this weeping is not religiously motivated, but is the consequence of physical or mental pain,<sup>167</sup> we should not forget that those addressed are disciples of Jesus. This means that we should suppose them to be conscious of their dependence on God and on his mercy.<sup>168</sup> They are told that they will laugh, and the fourth beatitude makes it clear that this will happen here on earth. In the midst of hatred

<sup>163</sup> A similar position is taken by Bock, Luke 1, 572.

<sup>164</sup> Cf. also Robert A. Guelich, The Sermon on the Mount (Waco: Word Books, 1982), 67–72; Bock, Luke 1, 573–574.

<sup>165</sup> Cf. Wrege, Bergpredigt, 17; Bock, Luke 1, 575; Radl, Lukas 1, 380.

<sup>166</sup> Cf. Bock, Luke 1, 550: "In particular, Luke's order seems to move from a general condition (poor), to a result (hunger), to a response to the result (weeping), to a cause (persecution)."

<sup>167</sup> Cf. Radl, Lukas 1, 380.

<sup>168</sup> Cf. Karl Heinrich Rengstorff, κλαίω, κτλ. ThWNT III (1938), 721–725, at 722.

and enmity, they are to leap in exuberant joy, because their reward in heaven is great (vv. 22f.). When he assures them of a reward in this present time,<sup>169</sup> Jesus reminds his hearers of the experience of the presence of God's rule and thus of that fellowship with God which Jesus was sent to preach (Luke 4:43); this divine rule will be fully established in the eschatological future. The poor who are declared "blessed" are those who are willing to abandon all that they possess in order to follow Jesus (cf. Luke 14:33).<sup>170</sup>

4.3. "Alas for the Rich!" (Luke 6:24)

The cries of woe are the reverse side of the beatitudes, to which they form an antithesis. The cry of woe against the rich observes that they have already found their consolation in their wealth (v. 24). Their doom is proclaimed, not because they are charged with special acts of injustice, but exclusively because they think only of themselves and enjoy their earthly life to the full, without thinking of the poor (cf. Luke 1:53). The same warning is present in the parable of the rich fool, for whom no further possibility of repentance exists, and the poor Lazarus.<sup>171</sup> Although this text too has no mention of a possibility of repentance,<sup>172</sup> there can be no doubt that the apodictic proclamation of doom has a parenetic accent, just as in the prophets of Israel (cf. Luke 16:28). It is meant to keep the rich from falling victim to a self-assurance which has disastrous consequences (cf. Luke 12:16–21).<sup>173</sup> Luke probably envisages prosperous Christians here.<sup>174</sup> It is possible that the earthly Jesus could

<sup>169</sup> The present dimension of the reward is emphasized by Bock, Luke 1, 581; for a different position, cf. Ernst, Lukas, 169–170; Fitzmyer, Luke, 635.

<sup>170</sup> Cf. Reiser, "Selig," 464. This is studied in detail by Hans-Josef Klauck, "Die Armut der Jünger in der Sicht des Lukas," in idem, Gemeinde—Amt— Sakrament (Würzburg: Echter, 1989), 160–194, at 184–185: "Historically speaking, Jesus confronted only individual persons with the call to follow him. These persons then took upon themselves the consequences, such as abandoning their professional work and leaving the place where they lived." After Easter, "the disciples' following of Jesus becomes the paradigm of all Christian existence." The directives had to be formulated anew to meet this changed situation.

<sup>171</sup> Cf. Giesen, "Eigentum," 238–242.

<sup>172</sup> Cf. Schürmann, Lukas 1, 338; Petracca, Gott, 187; Radl, Lukas 1, 385.

<sup>173</sup> Cf. Dupont, Béatitudes 3, 203; Radl, Lukas 1, 385.

<sup>174</sup> Cf. Stenger, "Seligpreisung," 153; Pilgrim, Poor, 163–166; against Schweizer, Lukas, 80; Radl, Lukas 1, 386.

have proclaimed this cry of woe against the rich (v. 24),<sup>175</sup> since it is indisputable that he had adherents among the rich too (Luke 8:3; 19:2).<sup>176</sup> According to vv. 22–23, Christians are blessed because they are rejected by the people among whom they live; but a cry of woe is pronounced against the rich when they are praised by everyone. This means that we can dismiss the suggestion that the cries of woe are directed either to the crowd or to particular persons close to the group of disciples who had accepted the message of Jesus.<sup>177</sup> Even less convincing are suggestions that Jesus addresses the cry of woe to persons who are not even present at the scene,<sup>178</sup> e.g. persecutors,<sup>179</sup> scribes,<sup>180</sup> or rich Jewish enemies.<sup>181</sup> Nothing indicates a change of addressees before v. 27.<sup>182</sup>

In an antithetical analogy to the poor, the rich are characterized as persons who are now full and now laugh (v. 25); but their present state will turn into the opposite, since hunger, mourning, and weeping await them. As we have seen, the fourth cry of woe is also addressed to Christians: if everyone speaks (only) well of them, then they resemble, not the prophets (Luke 6:23), but the false prophets who tell people what they want to hear and seek to curry favor by what they say, instead of proclaiming the word of God (cf. Jer 5:12–14; Mic 2:11; etc.).<sup>183</sup> It is easy for false prophets to win the people over to their side (cf. 1 Kgs 22:26–28; Isa 28:7–9; Jer 5:31; etc.), but true prophets are rejected (Luke 6:23; cf. LXX Jer 6:13; 33:7–8; etc.).<sup>184</sup> Who then is the object of praise in these words of Jesus? Not those who are universally honored and recognized,<sup>185</sup> nor

<sup>175</sup> Thus also Petracca, Gott, 80; against Bock, Luke 1, 571. According to Mineshige, Besitzverzicht, 21 with n. 50, Jesus originally spoke only to the poor.

<sup>176</sup> Cf. also Petracca, Gott, 60; Green, Luke, 266.

<sup>177</sup> Thus inter alia Degenhardt, Lukas, 53; Marshall, Luke, 255–256; Heinz Schürmann, Traditionsgeschichtliche Untersuchungen zu den synoptischen Evangelien, KBANT (Düsseldorf: Patmos, 1968), 303–305; M. Dennis Hamm, The Beatitudes in Context, Zacchaeus Studies (Wilmington: Glazier, 1990), 41.

<sup>178</sup> Thus Erich Klostermann, Das Lukasevangelium, 2nd ed., HNT 5 (Tübingen: Mohr, 1929), 80; Schürmann, Lukas 1, 337; Radl, Lukas 1, 384.

<sup>179</sup> Thus Dupont, Béatitudes 3, 21–40; Walter Grundmann, Das Evangelium nach Lukas, 5th ed., ThHK 3 (Berlin: Evangelische Verlagsanstalt, 1969), 146; Wolfgang Wiefel, Das Evangelium nach Lukas, ThHK 3 (Berlin: Evangelische Verlagsanstalt, 1987), 133.

<sup>180</sup> Schürmann, Lukas 1, 340.

<sup>181</sup> Thus Horn, Glaube, 134.

<sup>182</sup> Thus also Mineshige, Besitzverzicht, 21; cf. Green, Luke, 266. See further under 3.1.

<sup>183</sup> Cf. Green, Luke, 268.

<sup>184</sup> Cf. Horst Balz, πρὸς Ἰωάννην, EWNT III 2nd ed. (1992), 1190–1191, at 1190.

<sup>185</sup> Against Radl, Lukas 1, 386; Bock, Luke 1, 585.

false teachers.<sup>186</sup> Here, Christians enjoy universal praise for conduct that is clearly false—and this is dangerous. This is why they must be warned, by means of a cry of woe, against letting themselves be praised for bad conduct.<sup>187</sup> Unlike the preceding cries of woe, this text does not speak of a reversal of the present situation in the eschatological future. This is surely not because the Christians are unable to prevent themselves from being praised<sup>188</sup>—for all they would have to do in order to stop this kind of praise would be to live as Christians. The text presupposes that the Christian existence is a stumbling block for outsiders and leads to hatred; and this is emphasized by the fourth beatitude.

Together with the beatitudes, the cries of woe are meant to inspire the wealthy not to be too much attached to their possessions, but to give up their wealth in favor of their neighbor, and above all in order to follow Jesus. If they are not willing to do so, God himself will ensure an equitable distribution.<sup>189</sup>

5. The Service of God is Incompatible with the Service of Mammon
(Matt 6:24 par. Luke 16:13)<sup>190</sup>

For Jesus, God and his salvific rule have the highest priority, to the exclusion of everything else. This is expressed in a particularly pointed way in his logion about the service of God and of mammon. Like the logion about the camel and the eye of a needle (Mark 10:25 par. Matt 19:24; Luke 18:25), the relevance of these words cannot be restricted.<sup>191</sup> Since there were in fact slaves in classical antiquity who served a number of masters simultaneously (cf. in the New Testament Acts 16:16, 19), Jesus must have formulated this metaphorical logion in view of its application to two special “masters,” viz. God and mammon. A human

---

<sup>186</sup> Against Schürmann, Lukas 1, 338–339; Degenhardt, Lukas, 53; Ernst, Lukas, 170; Wiefel, Lukas, 132–133.

<sup>187</sup> Cf. Fitzmyer, Luke 2, 637: “The Lukan Jesus warns that a widespread good reputation can be a deceptive goal in life for a Christian.” Cf. also Pilgrim, Poor, 105; Petracca, Gott, 84; Nolland, Lukas 1, 290; Bovon, Lukas, 305.

<sup>188</sup> Against Schneider, Lukas 1, 153.

<sup>189</sup> Cf. Petracca, Gott, 85.

<sup>190</sup> On what follows, cf. Giesen, “Eigentum,” 233–234.

<sup>191</sup> According to Josef Schmid, Das Evangelium nach Matthäus, 5th ed., RNT 1 (Regensburg: Pustet, 1965), 140, this logion of Jesus is “one of the weightiest words anywhere in the Gospel.”

being finds it very difficult to serve two masters in the same way, if these masters are fundamentally different: he will love the one and hate the other. The love of the slave is expressed, not so much by a strong emotional affection for his master, but by his reliability in carrying out the tasks that are laid upon him; his hatred is expressed in negligent work. In other words, “hatred” means contempt, and “love” means loyalty.<sup>192</sup> The object of this love or hatred is God or mammon. The Aramaic word “mammon,” meaning property, money, possessions, and profit, is frequently attested in Jewish literature (e.g. Sir 31[34]:8;<sup>193</sup> CD XIV, 20; 1 QS VI, 2). Mammon is not per se reprehensible. It must be rejected only when it is personified as an idol, as an alternative to God.<sup>194</sup> This is probably why early Christian literature leaves the word untranslated.<sup>195</sup> With his exhortation to win friends for oneself with the “mammon of unrighteousness” (Luke 16:9), Jesus is telling the rich to use their wealth to remit debts (vv. 5–7) or to distribute it to the needy (vv. 19–31). He thus abandons a priori the principles of reciprocal ethics. One who acts in this way is assured of a heavenly reward.<sup>196</sup>

If however a person becomes completely possessed by his own possessions, instead of administering them responsibly (Luke 16:10–12),<sup>197</sup> they usurp the place of God and thereby infringe the first commandment of the decalogue. But one who serves God, the Father who loves unconditionally, becomes his son or daughter (cf. Matt 5:45) and experiences in faith the rule of God even now, although the full realization of this kingdom belongs to the future.<sup>198</sup> The correct service of God consists in the unconditional decision a person takes in favor of God.<sup>199</sup>

<sup>192</sup> Cf. Heinz Giesen, μισέω, EWNT II, 2nd ed. (1992), 1060–1062, at 1060.

<sup>193</sup> Cf. the quotation in n. 51 above.

<sup>194</sup> Cf. Sand, Matthäus, 139; Joachim Gnilka, Das Matthäusevangelium, 1. Kommentar zu Kap. 1,1–13,58, HThK 1.1 (Freiburg: Herder, 1986), 243; Heinz Giesen, “Mammon,” LThK VI, 3rd ed. (1997), 1256; Reiser, “Selig,” 461; a similar position is taken by Petracca, Gott, 170–171.

<sup>195</sup> Thus also Hengel, Eigentum, 32.

<sup>196</sup> For further details, cf. Giesen, “Eigentum,” 234–236; cf. also Petracca, Gott, 169.

<sup>197</sup> Cf. Giesen, “Eigentum,” 237–238.

<sup>198</sup> The correct attitude to property is motivated by the proximity of the kingdom of God, not by the imminent end of the world—against Schulz, Q, 460–461. On the imminent expectation, cf. Giesen, Herrschaft Gottes, 80–86.

<sup>199</sup> Thus also Gnilka, Matthäus 1, 243.

6. Jesus' Sovereign Position with Regard to Possessions

The radicalism of Jesus' critique of the rich is unsurpassable. Possessions are positive only when they are at the service of love of one's neighbor, or are given away in order to follow Jesus.<sup>200</sup> Jesus himself, as a carpenter (Mark 6:3), comes from the lower middle classes. His disciples, most of whom come from the same social class (cf. Mark 1:20; 2:14–15; Matt 9:9–10; 10:3), leave everything in order to follow him, an itinerant preacher without possessions.

Jesus' statements about poverty and wealth can be understood only in the context of his message about the rule of God, which liberates people from their slavery to possessions (Matt 6:24–33; Mark 10:28–31; Luke 10:3; etc.) so that they can serve their neighbor.<sup>201</sup> This means that the demand to take the right attitude to property, or to renounce it, is preceded by the gift of a share in God's rule. One who lets himself become a slave to his wealth fails to see the need of his neighbor: his wealth has become the unrighteous mammon, and it is this—not God—that is the determining factor in his life.

Jesus does not offer a theoretical reflection about when it is right to have possessions and when it would be better to distribute these to others. "Rather, he has the same offensive freedom and lack of prejudice in relation to possessions as he has to the powers of the state, the foreign Roman rulers and their Jewish accomplices."<sup>202</sup> Only one who lets himself be set ablaze by the love that is the kingdom of God can understand the radical demand to renounce one's possessions in order to follow Jesus, and to use one's wealth aright in order to help the poor. Jesus does not make a general demand of total renunciation, but he does demand that everyone deal responsibly with wealth.

Jesus' demand that one lend money without reckoning on getting it back (Matt 5:42; Luke 6:30.34) presupposes that one has possessions. The chief tax collector Zacchaeus is not required to renounce all his possessions (Luke 19:8–9). Jesus has no qualms about accepting rich men's invitations to banquets (Luke 7:36–38; etc.). Well-off women support him (Luke 8:2–3). He and his disciples do not fast, since this is inappropriate to the messianic age of salvation (Mark 2:18–22).

<sup>200</sup> On what follows, cf. especially Giesen, "Eigentum," 242–244.

<sup>201</sup> Cf. Heinz Giesen, "Armenhilfe," LThK I, 3rd ed. (1993), 998–999, at 998.

<sup>202</sup> Hengel, Eigentum, 37.

He is mocked as a glutton and a drunkard (Matt 11:19/Luke 7:34). Without societal criticism, his parables often reflect the societal situation in Galilee with its great landowners, administrators of property, and tenant farmers. In his parables, he makes use of the social background with which his hearers are familiar in order to present vividly his message about the kingdom of God.<sup>203</sup>

Jesus' judgment about poverty and wealth is adopted by the early church. His evaluation is handed on to the Christians as a norm. Luke explicitly confirms this in his Acts of the Apostles, when he exhorts the rich to support the poor members of the community in keeping with their needs (Acts 2:45; 3:11; 4:35; 6:1–4; cf. Rom 12:9; 1 Pet 4:8–11; Jas 2:14–17; etc.).<sup>204</sup> The merciful God himself is the model to be imitated here (Luke 6:36; cf. also Matt 25:31–45). In this context, we should also mention the Pauline collection for the first community in Jerusalem<sup>205</sup> (Gal 2:10; Rom 15:26; 1 Cor 16:1–3; 2 Cor 8–9; Acts 24:17; etc.).<sup>206</sup>

---

<sup>203</sup> Cf. Giesen, Herrschaft Gottes, 46–53.

<sup>204</sup> Cf. e.g. Giesen, "Almosen," LThK I, 3rd ed. (1993), 423–424, at 423.

<sup>205</sup> Cf. e.g. Giesen, "Armenhilfe," 998.

<sup>206</sup> English translation: Brian McNeil.

THE QUESTION OF THE BAPTISTS' DISCIPLES ON FASTING (MATT 9:14-17; MARK 2:18-22; LUKE 5:33-39)<sup>1</sup>

RAINER RIESNER

1. Redaction or Parallel Traditions?

1.1. More Dissent than Consensus

All three synoptics tell the story of a question about the correct fasting praxis, which Jesus answers by means of several metaphors. There is widespread consensus about at least one problem of the pericope: the so-called “fasting question” is not one uniform tradition, but is a combination of at least two independent traditions. Jesus replies to the accusation that his disciples do not fast by means of a metaphor that contains a strong contrast: at a wedding, the friends of the bridegroom do not fast. But the joy of a wedding turns into mourning when the bridegroom dies (Matt 9:14-15/Mark 2:18-20/Luke 5:33-35). It is not possible, either in a genuine or in a fictitious conversational situation, for such a prediction of suffering to be followed immediately by metaphors of a garment and of wine, which are appropriate to a joyful feast rather than to a death (Matt 9:16-17/Mark 2:21-22/Luke 5:36-39). There is less scholarly agreement about whether these texts formed part of a pre-synoptic collection of five disputes (Mark 2:1-3:6/Luke 5:17-6:11).<sup>2</sup> If the two-sources hypothesis is presupposed, one can also make sense of the combination as a Markan creation.<sup>3</sup> A highly controversial question <sup>1</sup> This example illustrates my approach to the questions concerning the transmission of the Gospels and the so-called historical Jesus. I have set out the principles involved in “From the Messianic Teacher to the Gospels of Jesus Christ,” in the first volume of this Handbook. Cf. also R. Riesner, “Teacher, Teaching Forms”, in Encyclopedia of the Historical Jesus, ed. C. A. Evans (New York: Routledge, 2008), 624-630. I have presented the substance of the present essay on a number of occasions, e.g. in a guest lecture at the Protestant Faculty of the University of Basle in 1993.

---

<sup>2</sup> H. W. Kuhn, Ältere Sammlungen im Markusevangelium, SUNT 8 (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1971), 61-72; W. Thissen, Erzählung der Befreiung. Eine exegetische Untersuchung zu Mk 2,1-3,6, FzB 21 (Würzburg: Echter, 1976), 45-257; J. D. G. Dunn, “Mark 2.1-3.6: A Bridge between Jesus and Paul on the Question of the Law,” NTS 30 (1984): 395-415.

<sup>3</sup> J. Dewey, “The Literary Structure of the Controversy Stories in Mark 2:1-3:6,” JBL 92 (1973): 394-401; J. Kiilunen, Die Vollmacht im Widerstreit: Untersuchungen zum Werdegang von Mk 2,1-3,6, AASF 40 (Helsinki: Suomalainen Tiedeakatemia, is whether (as most scholars argue) Luke 5:33–39 and Matt 9:14–17 are to be explained as redactional elaborations of Mark 2:18–22, or one must assume the existence of other sources. The answer to this question can also influence the verdict on how much of both traditions goes back to Jesus. J. Ernst calls the fasting question a “pericope which is highly obscure in terms of the history of tradition.”<sup>4</sup>

1.2. Synoptic Phenomena

The question of sources is complicated by at least three striking factors. (1) A. Ennulat calls “some of the agreements” between Matthew and Luke against Mark 2:18–22 “massive,”<sup>5</sup> and there are in fact no less than four strong minor agreements in the second part of the pericope. One argument against a redactional explanation<sup>6</sup> is that these minor agreements point to an underlying Semitic text (cf. 3.1 below). In the first part of the pericope, the πολλά (Matt 9:14b), which is probably original,<sup>7</sup> is a minor agreement which corresponds to the Lukan πικνά (Luke 5:33b; cf. Acts 24:26). Besides this, the clauses Mark 2:18a and 2:19b are missing in Luke and Matthew. The “western text” has also deleted the repetition of the rhetorical question at Mark 2:19a as a positive statement in Mark 2:19b. But the omission on two occasions in both Matthew and Luke of probably redactional Markan phrases in such a brief text remains striking.<sup>8</sup> A similar concentration of positive and negative minor agreements also characterizes the entire (pre-)Markan collection.<sup>9</sup> (2) In Matt 9:14–17, we can observe linguistic and formal Semiticisms which go beyond 1985); W. Weiss, Eine neue Lehre in Vollmacht: Die Streit- und Schulgespräche des Markusevangeliums, BZNW 52 (Berlin: de Gruyter, 1989), 20–25.

<sup>4</sup> Johannes der Täufer, BNZW 53 (Berlin: de Gruyter, 1989), 23.

<sup>5</sup> Die “Minor Agreements,” WUNT 2.62 (Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 1994), 77.

<sup>6</sup> F. Neiryck, The Minor Agreements of Matthew and Luke against Mark, BETL 37 (Leuven: University Press, 1974), 72–73.

<sup>7</sup> Although πολλά is missing in B and  $\aleph^*$ , it is difficult to explain as an addition in C D W L $\aleph^2$ , as is shown precisely by the πικνά in  $\aleph^1$ , which goes back to Luke 5:33b. Cf. B. M. Metzger, A Textual Commentary on the Greek New Testament, 2nd ed. (Stuttgart: Deutsche Bibelgesellschaft, 1994), 20. Matthew avoids the adverbial use of πολλά which is common in Mark.

<sup>8</sup> The periphrastic imperfect ἦσαν νησεύοντες (Mark 2:18a) is characteristic of Markan usage (V. Taylor, The Gospel according to St Mark, 2nd ed. [London: Macmillan, 1966], 62–63). Mark 2:19b is one of his typical duplications (Mark 2:8; 3:7.8, etc.). The construction with ἔχειν is unsemiotic.

<sup>9</sup> Ennulat, Die “Minor Agreements,” 58–93, declares all the minor agreements to be pre-Matthean/pre-Lukan redactional work on Mark. On this, see the critical remarks by A. Fuchs, “Bevormundung oder die Arroganz der halben Wahrheit,” SNTU 19 (1994): 161–172.

Mark (cf. 4.1 below). (3) It is difficult to explain the specific versions and the special material in Luke 5:33–39 as the redaction of a Markan text by the evangelist (cf. 4.2); for example, the traditional passage about the fasting question (Luke 5:33–35) and the metaphors of the garment and the wine (Luke 5:36–39) are also separated on the formal level by ἔλεγεν δὲ καὶ παραβολὴν πρὸς αὐτούς (Luke 5:36a). Although Luke has assimilated such catena-formulae more or less strongly to his own style, they are typical of his own special tradition (Luke 6:39; 12:16.41; 13:6; 14:7; 15:3; 18:1, 9; 19:11).<sup>10</sup>

1.3. Products of Coincidence, or Influence from Sources?

After presenting a brilliant analysis of how strongly Mark 2:18–22 is in keeping with the style of the evangelist (“duality,” repeated catchwords, inversions), J. P. Meier goes on to observe: “Once again, we see in Matthew’s and Luke’s redaction the paradox . . . : later pruning by redactors who wish to omit material because of their theological or stylistic preferences may result in these redactors inadvertently producing a text that by accident coincides with the primitive form of the tradition.”<sup>11</sup> Since not every scholar believes in the power of coincidence, the fasting pericope has been discussed in the light of the Griesbach hypothesis,<sup>12</sup> the influence of an Ur-Mark<sup>13</sup> or an Ur-Matthew,<sup>14</sup> a double transmission in Q<sup>15</sup> or the special Lukan tradition,<sup>16</sup> or even of a plurality of sources.<sup>17</sup> Our examination will show that the assumption of Markan

<sup>10</sup> Cf. T. Schramm, Der Markus-Stoff bei Lukas, SNTSMS 14 (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1971), 107–108.

<sup>11</sup> A Marginal Jew: Rethinking the Historical Jesus, ABRL (New York: Doubleday, 1994), 2:493–494 n. 178; my italics.

<sup>12</sup> C. S. Mann, Mark, AB 27 (New York: Doubleday, 1986), 232–236.

<sup>13</sup> J. Wellhausen, Das Evangelium Lucae (Berlin: Reimer, 1904), 18.

<sup>14</sup> L. Vaganay, Le problème synoptique (Paris: Desclée, 1954), 93–94; A. Feuillet, “La controverse sur le jeûne (Mc 2,18–20; Mt 9,14–15; Lc 5,33–35),” NRT 90 (1968): 113–136, 252–277.

<sup>15</sup> C. F. Burney, The Poetry of Our Lord (Oxford: Clarendon, 1925), 140–141; only for Matt 9:15–17/Mark 2:21–22/Luke 5:36–39; E. Lohmeyer, Das Evangelium des Markus, 11th ed., KEK 2 (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1951), 61–62; F. Hahn, “Die Bildworte vom neuen Flicken und vom neuen Wein,” EvTh 31 (1971): 357–373, at 361–364; W. Schenk, NovT Sup 89 (1997): 262–264.

<sup>16</sup> T. Schramm, Der Markus-Stoff bei Lukas, 105–111; I. H. Marshall, The Gospel of Luke, NIGTC (Exeter: Paternoster, 1978), 222; D. L. Bock, Luke 1:1–9:50, BECNT 3A (Grand Rapids: Baker, 1994), 502–504.

<sup>17</sup> M. É. Boismard, Synopse des quatre Évangiles en français (Paris: Cerf, 1980), 113–115; P. Rolland, “Les prédécesseurs de Marc: Les sources présynoptiques de Marc II,18–22 et parallèles,” RB 89 (1982): 370–405.

priority does not in fact suffice to give a satisfactory explanation of the phenomena.<sup>18</sup>

2. The Interrupted Wedding (Matt 9:14–15/Mark 2:18–20/ Luke 5:33–35)

2.1. The Disciples of the Baptist as Questioners

When Matt 9:14 mentions only disciples of John as questioners, this may be a clarification of the unclear expression καὶ ἔρχονται καὶ λέγουσιν (Mark 2:18b). In that case, however, Matthew would have departed from his redactional tendency (Matt 3:7 diff. Luke 3:7; Matt 12:24 diff. Mark 3:22; etc.) by singling out the disciples of the Baptist rather than the Pharisees from the groups mentioned at Mark 2:18a. In the (pre-)Markan collection of disputes, Pharisees appear as opponents of Jesus both before this passage (Mark 2:16) and after it (Mark 2:24; 3:6). Rudolf Bultmann supposed that an apophthegm (Mark 2:18b–19a) was formed out of a genuine logion of Jesus at a period “when the question of the relationship of the community to the Baptist sect was immediately relevant.”<sup>19</sup> But he too failed to discuss why it is precisely Matthew who then offers the best introduction. Not only critics of the two-sources hypothesis, but also a surprisingly large number of those who accept it,<sup>20</sup> regard the Matthean version as primary in terms both of history and of tradition history. The ὁμοίως καὶ οἱ τῶν Φαρισαίων in Luke 5:33 looks like a secondary addition (cf. Luke 5:10).<sup>21</sup> It is thus possible that the pre-Lukan tradition

<sup>18</sup> Cf. also U. Luz, Das Evangelium nach Matthäus (Mt 8–17), EKK 1.2 (Zürich: Benziger, 1990), 46.

<sup>19</sup> Die Geschichte der synoptischen Tradition, 2nd ed., FRLANT 12 (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1931), 17.

<sup>20</sup> Thus e.g. J. Roloff, Das Kerygma und der irdische Jesus (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1970), 225–236; T. A. Burkill, “Should Wedding Guests Fast? A Consideration of Mark 2:18–20,” in New Light on the Earliest Gospel (New York: Cornell University Press, 1975), 39–47; J. C. O’Neill, “The Sources of the Parables of the Bridegroom and the Wicked Husbandmen,” JTS 39 (1988): 485–489 (an unconvincing hypothesis that a logion of the Baptist has been transferred to Jesus); J. Gnllka, Das Evangelium nach Markus, 5th ed., EKK 2.1 (Zürich: Benziger, 1989), 112–114; R. A. Guelich, Mark 1–8:26, WBC 34A (Dallas: Word, 1989), 115–116; M. D. Hooker, The Gospel according to Saint Mark, BNTC (London: A. & C. Black 1991), 98. Unconvincingly, J. L. Jones, “References to John the Baptist in the Gospel according to St. Matthew,” AThR 41 (1959): 298–302, argues that there is in Matthew a concerted hostility to Baptist circles.

<sup>21</sup> Cf. Schramm, Der Markus-Stoff bei Lukas, 105–106.

also mentioned only the disciples of the Baptist. There are other indications that this tradition described only a discussion with disciples of John. For example, it is not obvious why Luke should have spoken at 5:33b of their regular prayers (καὶ δεήσεις ποιοῦνται), since this theme plays no further role in the text. It is possible that the use of καὶ to add this further item should be understood as a non-Lukan Semitic parataxis.<sup>22</sup> The additional characterization corresponds to the pre-Lukan tradition at Luke 11:1–4, according to which it was precisely a prayer that distinguished the disciples of Jesus from those of John.<sup>23</sup> In the expression δεήσεις ποιῆσθαι, δεήσεις is derived from the special Lukan tradition (cf. Luke 1:13; 2:37), since Luke otherwise writes προσευχή. Likewise, ἐσθίειν καὶ πινεῖν (Luke 5:33b)—instead of νηστεύειν (Mark 2:18b)—betrays the existence of a non-Markan tradition (cf. Luke 5:30; 7:33–34; 10:7; 12:45; 17:27–28; 22:30); this expression is not found in the Acts of the Apostles, where Luke instead writes φαγεῖν καὶ πιεῖν (Acts 9:9; 23:12.21). A Q tradition expresses the difference between Jesus and the Baptist by means of ἐσθίειν καὶ πινεῖν (Matt 11:18–19/Luke 7:33–34). One possible solution of the problem of sources is that Luke knew the fasting question (Luke 5:33–35) in an additional version which, like Matt 9:14–15, specified that it was disciples of the Baptist who began the debate; Luke then introduced the adherents of the Pharisees from Mark or from a tradition which resembled Mark.<sup>24</sup>

2.2. The Bridegroom and his Friends

Since the question concerns, not the conduct of Jesus, but that of his disciples, R. Bultmann regarded the situation indicated in Mark 2:18 as unhistorical. With J. Wellhausen, he supposed the projection back into the story of Jesus of a controversy about fasting in the early community. However, not only the answering question (Mark 2:19a, “Can the sons of the bridal chamber fast, while the bridegroom is with them?”) is in keeping with Jewish teaching praxis; the same is true of the responsibility of the teacher for his pupils.<sup>25</sup> A further indication

<sup>22</sup> Cf. J. Nolland, Luke 1–9:20, WBC 35A (Dallas: Word Books, 1989), 247.

<sup>23</sup> The introduction (Luke 11:1) contains several Hebraisms (Schramm, Der Markus-Stoff bei Lukas, 84–85).

<sup>24</sup> The problematical, but not necessarily false expression (cf. Josephus, Ant. 13.288–289) οἱ μαθηταὶ τῶν Φαρισαίων (Mark 2:18b; cf. Luke 5:33b) may already be pre-Markan (cf. Matt 22:16).

<sup>25</sup> Cf. D. Daube, “Responsibilities of Master and Disciples in the Gospels,” NTS 19 (1972/73): 1–15.

of ancient Palestinian tradition is that “the sons of the bridal chamber” (οἱ υἱοὶ τοῦ νυμφῶνος) is the slavish translation of a standard Hebrew expression (בְּנֵי הַחֻפָּה); both the textual transmission (D οἱ υἱοὶ τοῦ νυμφίου; Vetus Latina fili sponsi) and patristic exposition show how incomprehensible this phrase was to Greeks.<sup>26</sup> The “sons of the bridal chamber” are wedding guests (t.Ber. 2:10; j.Suk. 5 [53a]; b.Suk. 25b–26a); these were also designated by the more general expression אֲנָחְיָא (Lev.R. 28 [126b]). The context suggests that this term refers above all to the bridegroom’s friends, whose task is to ensure a joyful celebration.<sup>27</sup> One rabbinic affirmation runs: “As the sons of the bridal chamber rejoiced before the bridegroom (אָנְחֵי), so the angels leaped” (j.Hag 2 [77a]). The incompatibility of weddings and mourning was proverbial. Phrases such as “like a bridegroom among mourners” (b.Sabb. 114a) or “like a mourner among wedding guests” (b.Nid. 20a) described crass contradictions.

R. Bultmann held that only Mark 2:19a was a logion of Jesus,<sup>28</sup> but it is difficult to see why this isolated question should have been handed down.<sup>29</sup> Most scholars today regard Jesus’ answering question as genuine, because (unlike Mark 2:19b–20) it does not yet contain any messianic allegory of the bridegroom, but only uses the image of a wedding to speak of the age of salvation. J. Jeremias has been influential here: “Originally, the subordinate clause ἐν ᾧ ὁ νυμφίος μετ’ αὐτῶν ἐστὶν was probably a way of saying: ‘during the wedding’.”<sup>30</sup> However, the passage speaks not only about a wedding, but about the bridegroom and his friends. G.R. Beasley-Murray was right to object: “Jeremias’s interpretation has the effect of turning a statement about relationships in the unique situation of the present into an impersonal statement about the nature of time. The focus of the saying is not on the gifts of salvation that are inherited in the kingdom (cf. Matt 11:5) but on the privilege of the disciples to enjoy fellowship with their master at his festive table.”<sup>31</sup> J. Wellhausen had already pronounced the following verdict: “Already in [Mark] 2:19, the allegorical meaning shines through (also in the clause as long as the bridegroom is with them, rather than

<sup>26</sup> Cf. F. G. Cremer, “Die Söhne des Brautgemachs’ (Mark 2,19 parr) in der griechischen und lateinischen Schrifterklärung,” BZ 11 (1967): 246–253.

<sup>27</sup> Cf. Str-B 1:500.

<sup>28</sup> Die Geschichte der synoptischen Tradition, 17.

<sup>29</sup> Cf. Meier, A Marginal Jew, 2:446.

<sup>30</sup> Die Gleichnisse Jesu, 8th ed. (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1970), 49 n. 3.

<sup>31</sup> Jesus and the Kingdom of God (Exeter: Paternoster, 1986), 140.

during the wedding), and one cannot cut 2:20 away from this.”<sup>32</sup> Nor can one adduce the argument of a breached form in favor of an isolation of Mark 2:18b–19a, if one accepts the claim by W. Schenk that an “elaborate chreia” is found in Mark 2:18–20.<sup>33</sup> It might therefore seem more consistent to assume a unitary composition.<sup>34</sup>

Similarly, the Semitic stylistic forms of parallelismus membrorum and the qinah meter, which are recognizable behind the Greek text, argue for the unitary character of Matt 9:15/Mark 2:19–20/Luke 5:34–35, as well as for ancient Palestinian tradition.<sup>35</sup> The following hypothetical text<sup>36</sup> is intended only to display the possibilities:

Can the sóns of the brídál chámber fást when the brídégroom is with thém?
 But dáy's will cóme when the brídégroom is snátched away from thém, and thén they will fást
 in thóse dáy's.

The qinah with its variation of four beats or three beats with two beats is the rhythm of the lamentation for the dead, where the two last beats imitate the shrill cries of the wailing women. Jesus often employed this meter in order to give an impressive and easily remembered form to utterances of great inner emotion.<sup>37</sup> Antithetic parallelism was also one of his most commonly used rhetorical devices.

Even if we grant that Mark 2:18b–19a is original, the contemporaries of Jesus would still have had to ask who the “bridegroom” was. A. Jülicher<sup>38</sup> denied that Jesus ever employed allegory, and this has led to the verdict that Mark 2:20 is not genuine; but this general verdict

<sup>32</sup> Das Evangelium Marci (Berlin: Reimer, 1903), 20.

<sup>33</sup> “Die rhetorische Funktion der Fastenwarnung Mk 2,20,” NovTSup 89 (1997): 251–276.

<sup>34</sup> Thus A. Kee, “The Question About Fasting,” NovT 11 (1969): 161–173; C. E. Carlston, The Parables of the Triple Tradition (Minneapolis: Fortress, 1975), 121–125; M. G. Steinhauser, Doppelbildworte in den synoptischen Evangelien, FzB 44 (Würzburg: Echter, 1981), 53–55; W. Schenk, NovTSup 89 (1997): 260–276; G. Kern, “Fasten oder feiern?—Eine Frage der Zeit (Vom Bräutigam/Die Fastenfrage) Mk 2,18–20 (Mt 9,14–15/Luke 5,33–35/EvThom 104),” in Kompendium der Gleichnisse Jesu, ed. R. Zimmermann (Gütersloh: Gütersloher, 2007), 265–272.

<sup>35</sup> Cf. Burney, The Poetry of Our Lord, 140–141.

<sup>36</sup> Μὴ δύνασθε . . . ποιῆσαι νηστεύσαι is Lukan (J. Nolland, Luke 1–9:20, 247). Νηστεύειν in Mark and Luke is preferable to the Matthean πενθεῖν (cf. 2.7). ἐν ἐκείναις ταῖς ἡμέραις seems particularly redundant and therefore unusual in Luke (cf. 2.6).

<sup>37</sup> Cf. J. Jeremias, Neutestamentliche Theologie I (Gütersloh: Gütersloher, 4th ed., 1988), 35–37.

<sup>38</sup> Die Gleichnisreden Jesu I/II, 3rd and 2nd ed. (Tübingen: J. C. B. Mohr, 1910).

is untenable.<sup>39</sup> Like other Jewish teachers, Jesus too could consciously employ this stylistic device,<sup>40</sup> and he could assume that his audience would understand him, on at least one of the following conditions: (1) if he was using conventionalized metaphors; (2) if there existed a spectrum of images which was known widely or at least to one particular group, and newly formed metaphors were understandable within this spectrum; (3) if the metaphorical meaning could be discerned through a comparison between the situation in question and the interpreting word. Jesus used the metaphor of the bridegroom to defend his disciples. If the questioners made the link between the offensive situation and his reply, then they would have recognized that Jesus clearly wanted to compare his disciples to the friends of a bridegroom—and that only he himself could be this bridegroom.

The Q-tradition mentioned above shows that the pre-Easter discussions concerned not only the beginning of salvation in general terms, but also the position of John and Jesus (Luke 7:31–34; cf. Matt 11:16–19):<sup>41</sup>

- [31] With whom shall I compare the people of this generation, and whom do they resemble?
- [32] They are like children who sit in the market place and call to one another, saying:
“We played the flute for you and you did not dance, we mourned and you did not weep.”
- [33] For John the Baptist came, ate no bread, drank no wine,
and you say:
“He has a demon!”
- [34] The Son of Man came,
ate and drank,
and you say, “See,
a man who is a glutton and drunkard,

<sup>39</sup> Cf. H. J. Klauck, Allegorie und Allegorese in synoptischen Gleichnistexten, 2nd ed., NTA NF 13 (Münster: Aschendorff, 1986), 1–147; C. L. Blomberg, Interpreting the Parables (Leicester: Apollos, 1990), 29–70; K. Erlemann, Gleichnisauslegung (Tübingen: Francke, 1999), 45–50; K. Snodgrass, Stories with Intent: A Comprehensive Guide to the Parables of Jesus (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2008), 1–31, esp. 15–16.

<sup>40</sup> Cf. D. Flusser, Die rabbinischen Gleichnisse und der Gleichniserzähler Jesus I (Bern: Lang, 1981); B. H. Young, Jesus and His Jewish Parables (New York: Paulist, 1989); D. Stern, Parables in Midrash (Cambridge, MA: Harvard University, 1991), 188–205.

<sup>41</sup> On the question of authenticity, cf. R. Riesner, Jesus als Lehrer: Eine Untersuchung zum Ursprung der Evangelien-Überlieferung, 3rd ed., WUNT 2.7 (Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 1988), 332–335; W. D. Davies and D. C. Allison, The Gospel According to Saint Matthew II, ICC (Edinburgh: T&T Clark, 1991), 259–265; T. Holmén, Jesus and Jewish Covenant Thinking, BIS 55 (Leiden: Brill, 2001), 205–219.

a friend (φίλος) of tax collectors and sinners.”
 And wisdom was justified by all her children.

This logion of Jesus has a number of points of contact with the fasting question. His contemporaries regarded the Baptist as a terrifying ascetic. With his disciples, he gave the impression of a mourning cortege. Jesus' adherents, on the other hand, appear on the scene as his friends, and he offers an explicit justification of their joyful behavior: the table fellowship is equated with the presence of the Wisdom of God, who in Prov 9:5 issues the invitation to a festal meal with wine. A wedding is employed explicitly as an image of the age of salvation on the occasion of the fasting question, and it is implied in the logion about the children at play.

2.3. A Jewish Prehistory for the Metaphor of the Messianic Bridegroom?

We find a wedding as an image of the age of salvation in the later parts of the Book of Isaiah (Isa 49:18; 61:10; 62:5) and in early Jewish writings.<sup>42</sup> One widespread expectation affirmed: “This world is the time of betrothal (קִדּוּמֵי) . . . , the wedding (יְשׁוּבֵי) will be in the days of the Messiah (Exod.R. 15:2 [79b]). Early Jewish texts describe the messianic banquet with “wine on the lees well refined” (Isa 25:6) as a wedding feast (1 En. 62.14; m.Abot. 4:16; b.B.Bat. 75a). This means that when Jesus spoke of the age of salvation as a wedding feast, his hearers could certainly grasp his meaning; but scholars dispute whether this also applies to the metaphorical designation of the Messiah as “bridegroom.” R. Zimmermann has made a comprehensive presentation of the imagery of the “wedding” in early Judaism and early Christianity,<sup>43</sup> and has disputed the view, held almost unanimously in the wake of J. Jeremias,<sup>44</sup> that the “bridegroom” was unknown as a designation of the Messiah at the time of Jesus.<sup>45</sup> Jeremias himself later pointed to the text Pes.R. 149a,<sup>46</sup> but this is no older than the third or fourth century CE at most:<sup>47</sup>

<sup>42</sup> Cf. Str-B (1926), 1:517–518.

<sup>43</sup> Geschlechtermetaphorik und Gottesverhältnis, WUNT 2.122) (Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2001), 227–258.

<sup>44</sup> “νόμφη, νυμφίος,” ThWNT (Stuttgart: Kohlhammer, 1942), 4:1092–1099.

<sup>45</sup> Geschlechtermetaphorik und Gottesverhältnis (2001), 258–276. Cf. earlier D. E. Aune, “Bride of Christ,” ISBE (1979), 1:546–547.

<sup>46</sup> Die Gleichnisse Jesu, 49 n. 2.

<sup>47</sup> Thus A. Goldberg, Erlösung durch Leiden: Drei rabbinische Homilien über die Trauernden Zions und den leidenden Messias Efraim (PesR 34.36.37) (Frankfurt: Peter Lang, 1978).

Another comment: As a bridegroom putteth on a priestly diadem [Isa 61:10]. This text teaches that the Holy One, blessed be He, will put upon Ephraim, our true Messiah, a garment whose splendor will stream forth from the world's end to the world's end... And as a bride adorned herself with jewels [Isa 61:19]. Why is the congregation of Israel likened to a bride? To tell you that a bride can be singled out only by her jewels, even so the adversaries of the congregation of Israel can be put to shame only by her merit.<sup>48</sup>

R. Zimmermann attempts to show that the metaphor of the messianic bridegroom is found also in Psalm 45 (LXX 44), in the Targum to Zech 3:1–10, and in variants of the textual tradition of the Targum to the Song of Songs (e.g. Tg.Cant. 8:1).<sup>49</sup> In Psalm 45, an epithalamium with links in the history of tradition to Isa 61<sup>50</sup> and to the Song of Songs,<sup>51</sup> the messianic interpretation of the royal bridegroom is not inevitable, but it is possible; indeed, for the post-exilic period, it is in fact probable.<sup>52</sup> The Letter to the Hebrews (Heb 1:8–9) and the Targum (Tg.Ps. 45:3) interpreted it in this way, and there may be traces as early as Qumran (4Q171 IV, 22–27). The Targum to Zechariah speaks of the high priest Joshua as a bridegroom,<sup>53</sup> but he is at most a parallel figure to the Messiah. The further question, viz. how far the Targum traditions go back to the period before 70 CE, remains open. The Targum to the Prophets interprets Isa 61:10 eschatologically,<sup>54</sup> but identifies the speaker as the holy city:

Jerusalem hath said, I will greatly rejoice in the Memra of the Lord; my soul shall exult in the salvation of my God: for he hath clothed me with garments of salvation; he hath covered me with the robe of righteousness, as a bridegroom (כַּרְתֻּנָּא) who is happy in his bride-chamber (בְּגִנוּנִיָּה), and as the high priest (וּכְכֹהֵנָּא רַבָּא) that is adorned with his garments, and as a bride who decks herself with her ornaments.<sup>55</sup>

<sup>48</sup> W.G. Braude, Pesiqta rabbati II (New Haven: ASOR, 1968), 689.

<sup>49</sup> Geschlechtermetaphorik und Gottesverhältnis, 260–265, 269–273. J. C. O'Neill had already referred to these texts: JTS 39 (1988): 485.

<sup>50</sup> Cf. H. J. Kraus, Psalmen, BK 15.1 (Neukirchen: Neukirchener, 1960), 494.

<sup>51</sup> Cf. R. Tournay, "Les affinités du Psaume 45 avec le Cantique des Cantiques et leur interprétation messianique," VTSup 11 (1962): 168–212.

<sup>52</sup> Cf. E. Zenger, in F. L. Hossfeld and E. Zenger, Die Psalmen. Psalm 1–50, NEB. AT 29 (Würzburg: Echter, 1993), 283.

<sup>53</sup> R. P. Gordon, The Targum of the Minor Prophets (Wilmington: Michael Glazier, 1989), 191–192.

<sup>54</sup> Cf. B. D. Chilton, The Isaiah Targum (Wilmington: Michael Glazier, 1987), 118–119.

<sup>55</sup> Text and translation: J. F. Stenning, The Targum of Isaiah (Oxford: Clarendon, 1947), 204–205.

The addition by the scribes of the “bridal chamber” (cf. Tg. Joel 2:16) is interesting in view of Jesus’ metaphor. It is clear that Isa 61:10 could readily suggest this association. If “bridegroom” as a messianic predicate is attested from the post-exilic period in Psalm 45, and is explicitly employed in late rabbinic texts, but is not attested in rabbinic texts from the intervening period, this may be because these metaphors were used by circles that were suspect in the rabbis’ eyes.

Scholars disagree about whether Song 1:7 LXX [⌘] (πρὸς πρὸς τὸν νυμφίον τὸν χριστόν) and the messianic designation of the bridegroom in Joseph and Asenath are Christian interpolations. Christian influence has not been demonstrated in the case of the novel, which may come from Essene-Therapeutic circles.<sup>56</sup> The complete Isaiah scroll from Qumran, which very probably interprets Isa 61:10 messianically, was certainly written in the first century BCE. This prophetic text reads:

I will greatly rejoice in the Lord,
 my soul shall exult in my God;
 for he has clothed me with the garments of salvation,
 he has covered me with the robe of righteousness, as a bridegroom (כַּחַתָּן) who does priestly service (יִבְהֵן) with a headdress (פֶּאֶר).

Since the Masoretic text appears difficult to understand, instead of יִבְהֵן is often conjectured the hiphil of בָּנָה: “who puts on the headdress” (יִבְנֵן).<sup>57</sup> In 1QIsa<sup>a</sup> 61:10, the text reads: “like a bridegroom, like a priest (כַּכַּחַתָּן) in the headdress.”<sup>58</sup> W. H. Brownlee saw here an allusion to the priestly Messiah and noted the significance of this text for Matt 9:15/Mark 2:19–20/Luke 5:34–35.<sup>59</sup> According to J. Gnilya, the Qumran reading is only an attempt to make the difficult text comprehensible; there is no messianic interpretation here.<sup>60</sup> R. Zimmerman however finds here “a discreet allusion to the ‘Messiah of Aaron’,” and justifies this claim by appealing to the eschatological use of the expression “headdress”

<sup>56</sup> Cf. M. Delcor, “Un roman d’amour d’origine thérapeute: Le livre de Josèphe et Asénath,” BLE 63 (1962): 3–27.

<sup>57</sup> Cf. C. Westermann, Das Buch Jesaja. Kap. 40–66, ATD 19 (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1966), 293; for a different view, cf. J. Blenkinsopp, Isaiah 56–66, AB 19 (New York: Doubleday, 2003), 228.

<sup>58</sup> Cf. M. Burrows, J. C. Trever, and W. H. Brownlee, The Dead Sea Scrolls of St. Mark’s Monastery I (New Haven: ASOR, 1950), Plate L.

<sup>59</sup> “Messianic Motifs of Qumran and the New Testament,” NTS 3 (1956/57): 195–210, at 205–206.

<sup>60</sup> “‘Bräutigam’—ein spätjüdisches Messiasprädikat?,” TThZ 69 (1960): 298–301.

(פִּאֵר—cf. Tg. Isa. 28:5).<sup>61</sup> It can also be pointed out that, unlike the fragmentary roll 1QIsa<sup>b</sup>, the copy 1QIsa<sup>a</sup> was consciously edited in keeping with the views of the Qumran community;<sup>62</sup> in this text, it is clear that Isa 52–53 is also understood messianically (cf. 4Q491; 4Q541).<sup>63</sup> Subsequently published texts have shown how important Isa 61 was as an eschatological or even messianic text (cf. 2.6).

2.4. Did the Baptist Employ the Metaphor of Bride and Bridegroom?

The Qumran text is particularly noteworthy, because one can still argue that the Baptist had contacts with Essene communities before he received his prophetic call (cf. Luke 1:80).<sup>64</sup> According to the Gospel of John, one of his last logia ran as follows (John 3:29):

He who has the bride is the bridegroom;
the friend of the bridegroom (φίλος τοῦ νυμφίου), who stands there and hears him,
rejoices (full) of joy at the voice of the bridegroom.
Therefore this joy of mine is now full.

This statement is clearly related to the synoptic metaphor of the bridegroom and his friends, but John 3:29 was not formed out of synoptic material. Rather, it was taken over from an autonomous tradition,<sup>65</sup> as we see in the un-Johannine, Hebraizing expression χαρῶ χαίρειν (John 3:29b).<sup>66</sup> The use of a dative to intensify the verb is found above all in the Hebraizing special tradition of Luke (Luke 22:15; Acts 5:28; cf. Jas 5:17). Similarly, ὁ ἑστῆκός καὶ ἀκούων corresponds to the Semitic mode of expression (עֲשֵׂה וְשָׂמַע). According to older scholars the Baptist is described as the one who gives the bride away (שִׁוֵּב בָּרַי); in the Mishnah

<sup>61</sup> Geschlechtermetaphorik und Gottesverhältnis, 268.

<sup>62</sup> Cf. A. van der Kooij, Die alten Textzeugen des Jesajabuches, OBO 35 (Freiburg: Universitätsverlag, 1980), 81–94.

<sup>63</sup> Cf. M. Hengel (with D. P. Bailey), “The Effective History of Isaiah 53 in the Pre-Christian Period,” in The Suffering Servant, ed. B. Janowski and P. Stuhlmacher (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2004), 45–146.

<sup>64</sup> Cf. S. L. Davies, “John the Baptist and Essene Kashrut,” NTS 29 (1983): 569–571; O. Betz, “Was John the Baptist an Essene?” in Understanding the Dead Sea Scrolls, ed. H. Shanks (New York: Random, 1992), 205–214; J. H. Charlesworth, DSD 8 (2001): 208–211.

<sup>65</sup> Cf. B. Lindars, “Two Parables in John,” NTS 16 (1969/70): 318–329; E. Trocmé, “Jean 3,29 et le thème de l’époux dans la tradition présynoptique,” RevSR 69 (1995): 13–18.

<sup>66</sup> Cf. C. H. Dodd, Historical Tradition in the Fourth Gospel (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1963), 385–386; M. Zerwick, Biblical Greek (Rome: Pontifical Biblical Institute, 1963), 21.

(m.Sanh. 3:4), this figure is also called “the friend” (הַאֲוִיבֵּי).<sup>67</sup> Recently this interpretation was challenged by other scholars understanding “friend of the bridegroom” as a designation for an ideal disciple of Jesus (cf. John 15:13–15).<sup>68</sup> Possibly, one should discern between the function of John 3:29 in the theology of the evangelist and an original logion of the Baptist. In such a logion the Jewish marriage custom should still be considered, but even more important is the Old Testament background of the imagery. The “voice of the bridegroom” may be an allusion to the dialogues of the Song of Songs and it is possible that the synoptic metaphor too has in mind the friends of the bridegroom in the Song of Songs (Cant 5:1),<sup>69</sup> whom he invites to a meal (φάγετε, πλησίοι, καὶ πίετε καὶ μεθύσθητε, ἀδελφοί). It is also noteworthy that Psalm 45, the royal wedding song which was interpreted messianically (cf. 2.3), plays an important role in the Gospel of John.<sup>70</sup>

It is not impossible that the Baptist already employed the metaphors of bride and bridegroom to speak of the renewed people of God, as John 3:29 claims.<sup>71</sup> The Baptist understood his mission in terms of Isa 40:3 (קוֹל קוֹרֵא בַּמִּדְבָּר), as a prophetic “voice crying in the wilderness” (Matt 3:3/Mark 1:3/Luke 3:4/John 1:23), and this means that, as the son of a priest and one who had been instructed in scripture,<sup>72</sup> John must have been interested in all those Old Testament texts which speak of the wilderness as an eschatological place. In apocalyptic Judaism, the prophetic words about the wilderness as the ideal bridal period of Israel were <sup>67</sup> Cf. I. Abrahams, Studies in Pharisaism and the Gospels II (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1917), 213; S. Krauß, Sanhedrin (Hoher Rat)—Makkōt (Prügelstrafe), Die Mischna IV 4/5 (Gießen: Töpelmann, 1933), 130–131; A. van Selms, “The Best Man and the Bride: From Sumer to St. John,” JNES 9 (1950): 65–75; M. É. Boismard, “L’ami de l’époux (Jo., III,29),” in A la rencontre de Dieu (Le Puy: Mappus, 1961), 289–295.

<sup>68</sup> Cf. M. and R. Zimmermann, “Der Freund des Bräutigams (John 3,29): Deflorations- oder Christuszeuge?” ZNW 90 (1999): 123–130; M. Kempter, “La signification eschatologique de Jean 3.29,” NTS 54 (2008): 42–59.

<sup>69</sup> Cf. A. Feuillet, NRT 90 (1968), 272; idem, “Les épousailles messianiques et les références au Cantique des cantiques dans les évangiles synoptiques I,” RThom 84 (1984): 166–211, at 196–197.

<sup>70</sup> Cf. G. Reim, “Jesus as God in the Fourth Gospel: The Old Testament Background,” NTS 30 (1984): 158–160.

<sup>71</sup> Cf. B. Witherington, John’s Wisdom (Louisville: Westminster John Knox, 1995), 109.

<sup>72</sup> On the scriptural exegesis of the Baptist, cf. R. Bauckham, “The Messianic Interpretation of Isa. 10:34 in the Dead Sea Scrolls, 2 Baruch and the Preaching of John the Baptist,” DSD 2 (1995): 202–216.

very much alive and remembered.<sup>73</sup> John may have seen his own task refigured especially in Hos 2:16–18:<sup>74</sup>

- [16] Therefore, behold, I will allure her, and bring her into the wilderness (הַמִּדְבָּר)
and speak tenderly to her [the bride Israel].
- [17] And there I will give her her vineyards, and make the Valley of Achor a place of hope.
And there she shall answer as in the days of her youth, as at the time when she came out of the land of Egypt.
- [18] And in that day, says the Lord, you will call me, “My husband,” and no longer will you call me, “My Baal.”

The people of God is portrayed as an unfaithful wife; and the Baptist too saw Israel under judgment (Matt 3:7–10/Luke 3:7–9). When he baptized to the east of the Jordan near Jericho (Mark 1:4–5/Matt 3:4–6), in Batanaea (John 1:28), and in the Gentile Decapolis (John 3:22–24),<sup>75</sup> he had in mind the exodus and the conquest of the promised land.<sup>76</sup> A period of repentance in the wilderness had to precede the eschatologically renewed marriage covenant with God. The Jewish wedding ritual included the bath of the bride before the marriage ceremony (Josephus, Apion 1.182; b. Sabb. 77b; cf. Eph 5:27). Here, John could have made a connection to his own activity as baptist.<sup>77</sup>

Another prophetic text on which the Baptist, as an eschatological preacher of repentance, may have pondered was the commission of God in Jer 2:2–3a:

- [2] Go and proclaim (וְקִרְאתִי) in the hearing of Jerusalem,
Thus says the Lord,
I remember the devotion of your youth,
your love as a bride,
how you followed me in the wilderness (בְּמִדְבָּר),
in a land not sown.
- [3] Israel was holy to the Lord,
the first fruits of his harvest.

<sup>73</sup> Cf. M. Hengel, Die Zeloten, 2nd ed., AGAJU 1 (Leiden: Brill, 1976), 255–261.

<sup>74</sup> This possibility is suggested by W. Grundmann, Das Evangelium nach Markus, ThHK 2 (Berlin: EVA, 1959), 65–66; A. Feuillet, NRT 90 (1968): 132.

<sup>75</sup> Cf. R. Riesner, Bethanien jenseits des Jordan: Topographie und Theologie im Johannes-Evangelium, BAZ 12 (Gießen: Brunnen, 2002).

<sup>76</sup> Cf. also H. Merklein, “Die Umkehrpredigt bei Johannes dem Täufer und Jesus von Nazaret,” in Studien zu Paulus und Jesus, WUNT 1.43 (Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 1987), 109–126.

<sup>77</sup> Cf. Boismard, “L’ami de l’époux (Jo., III,29),” 294–295.

It is striking how frequently the images of fruit and harvest occur in the few surviving logia of the Baptist (Matt 3:8–10.12/Luke 3:8–9.17); Jeremiah 2 links these metaphors to Israel's period as a bride in the wilderness. Especially near to the language and imagery of John 3:29 is Jer 33:10–11 (LXX 40:10–11). After the desolation of Jerusalem says the Lord:

- [10] There shall once more be heard (ἀκουσθήσεται)...
 the voice of mirth
 and the voice of joy (החמש), the voice of the bridegroom (φωνή νυμφίου)
 and the voice of the bride.

This happy outlook is closely linked to the messianic promise of “a righteous branch to spring up for David,” who “shall execute justice and righteousness in the land” (Jer 33:15).

We shall encounter Isaiah 61–62 below (cf. 3.3). This passage is an important background to the metaphors of clothing and wine, and plays a significant role in the history of the transmission of the fasting question. Isa 61:1 speaks of the mission of a man “on whom the Spirit of the Lord is, because the Lord has anointed (משח) him.” This anointed one is to “bring joy to the mourners in Zion” and take away their “garment of mourning” (Isa 61:3). The age of salvation is depicted as a wedding feast, and both the one anointed with the Spirit (Isa 61:10) and God (Isa 62:5) are compared to a bridegroom. Isaiah 60–62 picks up many motifs from Isaiah 40. For example, this section ends with an exhortation which echoes the words in Isa 40:3 where the Baptist saw his own vocation, and at the same time applies the metaphor of a bride to the renewed Zion (“Sought out, a city not forsaken”: Isa 62:10–12). There is therefore some evidence to suggest that Jesus' metaphor of the bridegroom who is present and then is snatched away was not simply addressed to outsiders, but rather to a group such as that of John's disciples, who were familiar with such metaphors.

2.5. Is the Metaphor of a Wedding Used in Other Baptist Contexts?

In the first century, the Baptist movement posed a considerable challenge to early Christianity.<sup>78</sup> Some New Testament texts suggest that the metaphors associated with bride and bridegroom played a special role in the messianic debates between the two groups.<sup>79</sup> No matter how its authenticity is judged, John 3:29 shows at any rate that both the Johannine tradition and the special Lukan tradition (cf. Luke 3:15) were engaged in debates with Baptist communities who revered their executed master as the Messiah (cf. John 1:6–8.19–28).<sup>80</sup> The fact that a miracle involving wine at a marriage in Cana in Galilee is the first messianic “sign” in the Fourth Gospel (John 2:1–11) is probably connected with these debates: Jesus acts here in place of the bridegroom,<sup>81</sup> and—in contrast to the ascetic Baptist—the wine flows in streams, because the age of salvation is beginning. The Gospel of John also applies Jacob’s blessing of Judah (Gen 49:9–12) to Jesus (John 4:22b; 9:7).<sup>82</sup> Gen 49:11–12 says of the future king from the house of David:

<sup>78</sup> Cf. K. Backhaus, Die “Jüngerkreise” des Täufers Johannes: Eine Studie zu den religionsgeschichtlichen Ursprüngen des Christentums, PaThSt 19 (Paderborn: Schöningh, 1991).

He washes his garments in wine and his vesture in the blood of grapes; his eyes shall be red with wine...

According to a credible tradition in the early church, the Gospel of John was written in Ephesus (Eusebius, Hist. Eccl. 5.8.1–5),<sup>83</sup> where there was also a Baptist group (Acts 19:1–7).

The metaphor of the community as the bride of Christ finds its most extensive articulation in the Letter to the Ephesians, which was probably a circular letter to the communities in the vicinity of Ephesus.<sup>84</sup> The closest parallel to Eph 5:25–32 is the Baptist text at John 3:22–30 (cf. 2.4). It is well known that this letter contains a large number of parallels to Qumran.<sup>85</sup> Another text which brings us near to Ephesus is the Revelation of John (2:1), which contains a prominent description of the perfected community as bride (Rev 19:7, 9, 21:2, 9, 22:17). A great variety

<sup>79</sup> This was already suggested by A. Feuillet, NRT 90 (1968): 271; R. A. Batey, New Testament Nuptial Imagery (Leiden: Brill, 1971), 61–66.

<sup>80</sup> Cf. F. Neugebauer, Die Entstehung des Johannes-Evangeliums, ATh 1.36 (Stuttgart: Calwer, 1968).

<sup>81</sup> Cf. F. M. Braun, Jean le Théologien III/2: Sa théologie (Paris: Lecoffre and J. Gabalda, 1972), 99–103.

<sup>82</sup> Cf. O. Betz, “‘To Worship God in Spirit and in Truth’: Reflections on John 4:20–26,” in Jesus der Messias Israels, WUNT 1.42 (Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 1987), 420–438.

<sup>83</sup> Cf. M. Hengel, The Johannine Question (London: SCM, 1989), 1–23.

<sup>84</sup> Cf. A. T. Lincoln, Ephesians, WBC 42 (Dallas: Word Books, 1990), 1–7.

<sup>85</sup> Cf. K. G. Kuhn, “The Epistle to the Ephesians in the Light of the Qumran Texts,” in Paul and the Dead Sea Scrolls, ed. J. Murphy-O’Connor and J. H. Charlesworth (New York: Crossroad, 1990), 115–131; F. Mußner, “Contributions made by Qumran to the Understanding of the Epistle to the Ephesians,” in ibid., 159–178.

of Jewish and Jewish Christian groups competed for influence in western Asia Minor at the end of the first century.<sup>86</sup> Paul too speaks on one occasion of the community as the bride of Christ (2 Cor 11:2–3). The context points back to pre-Lukan tradition, and the false teachers against whom Paul inveighs may represent an erroneous development from the early circle of the disciples of the apostle John.<sup>87</sup> Paul claimed to have the function vis-à-vis the Corinthians of the one who gives the bride away; and this is the role ascribed to the Baptist at John 3:29. Apollos, who had earlier been a disciple of the Baptist (Acts 18:24–25), also worked in Corinth (1 Cor 1:12; 3:4–6:22; 4:6; 16:12; Acts 19:1). According to J. Jeremias, Paul borrowed “the application of the image of νυμφίος to the Savior, which is derived from mythology and was widespread in Hellenism”<sup>88</sup> from Gnostic sources. Simple considerations of chronology make this questionable.<sup>89</sup> It is much more likely that Paul knew these metaphors from the tradition about Jesus, since we may assume with J. Roloff that Paul “possessed a fixed collection of logia of Jesus, which he adduced where necessary (cf. 1 Cor 9:14), and which were so well known in his communities too that he could refer to these logia in his letters.”<sup>90</sup>

2.6. The Bridegroom Who is Snatched Away

The wedding feast in Jesus’ metaphor has a tragic end: mourning breaks out, because “the bridegroom will be snatched away” (Matt 9:15c/Mark 2:20/Luke 9:35). Clearly, this means that he dies a violent death.

<sup>86</sup> Cf. R. Riesner, Essener und Urkirche in Jerusalem, BAZ 6 (Gießen: Brunnen, 1998), 136–137.

<sup>87</sup> Cf. R. Riesner, “Genesis 3,15 in vorlukanischer und johanneischer Tradition,” SNTU 29 (2004): 119–178, at 162–164; idem, “Der ‚neue Bund‘ und die Überlieferungsströme im Urchristentum,” in Jesus als Bote des Heils, ed. L. Hauser et al., SBB 60 (Stuttgart: Katholisches Bibelwerk, 2008), 277–293, at 292–293.

<sup>88</sup> ThWNT IV (1942), 1098–1099. J.E. Taylor, The Immerser: John the Baptist within Second Temple Judaism (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1997), 207, incorrectly asserts that according to J. Jeremias the Gospel of John was the first to apply the metaphor of bridegroom to Jesus.

<sup>89</sup> Cf. J. A. Ziesler, “The Removal of the Bridegroom,” NTS 19 (1972/73): 190–194.

<sup>90</sup> Jesus (München: C. H. Beck, 2000), 15. Cf. D. Wenham, Paul: Follower of Jesus or Founder of Christianity? (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1995); R. Riesner, “Paulus und die Jesus-Überlieferung,” in Evangelium—Schriftauslegung—Kirche, eds J. Ådna et al. (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht 1997), 346–365; S. Kim, “The Jesus Tradition in Paul,” in Paul and the New Perspective, WUNT 1.140 (Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2002), 259–292; D. Häusser, Christusbekennnis und Jesusüberlieferung bei Paulus, WUNT 2.210 (Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2006).

This is not the only instance in the Jesus tradition of a wedding that is overshadowed by a sad, indeed a violent event. In Matthew's version of the parable of the royal wedding feast (Matt 22:1–14), the rebellious guests are punished harshly (Matt 22:7), and the guest without a festal garment is excluded from the feast (Matt 22:11–13). The same happens to the foolish bridesmaids (Matt 25:1–13). Perhaps Jesus' lament at Luke 19:42–44 is occasioned by sadness that the royal bride Zion has rejected the messianic bridegroom.<sup>91</sup> Some scholars believe that the arrest or execution of the Baptist ca. 27/28 CE<sup>92</sup> prompted his disciples to put the question about fasting (cf. 2.7). At any rate, Jesus must assume that the same danger threatened him from Herod Antipas (Luke 13:31–33), and this is why he avoided the cities of Sepphoris and Tiberias. The present position of the fasting question says nothing about its original historical situation. The piece was included for thematic reasons at an early date in a pre-synoptic collection (cf. 4.1). It is clear that, precisely in the period of the "Galilean crisis,"<sup>93</sup> many compared the fate of the Baptist to that of Jesus (Matt 16:13–14/Mark 8:27–28/Luke 9:18–19) and he himself saw John's martyrdom as a presage of his own death (Matt 17:12/Mark 9:12–13). The evangelist too understood Mark 2:20 as a prediction of suffering, since the first decision to eliminate Jesus is taken at Mark 3:6, and Mark 8:32 (καὶ παρρησία τὸν λόγον ἐλάλει) does not exclude the possibility of earlier veiled predictions.

"The bridegroom will be snatched away (ἄπαρθῆ) from them," announces Jesus, clearly employing a passivum divinum, in a dramatic phrase. When modern exegetes see here an allusion to the "Servant of the Lord" in Isa 53:8 (cf. Acts 8:33),<sup>94</sup> or deny this,<sup>95</sup> they cite E. Lohmeyer;<sup>96</sup> but he was not the first to propose this view.<sup>97</sup> The most

<sup>91</sup> Cf. W. Grimm and K. Dittert, Deuterocesaja (Stuttgart: Calwer, 1990), 455.

<sup>92</sup> Cf. R. Riesner, Paul's Early Period: Chronology, Mission Strategy, Theology (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1998), 41–43.

<sup>93</sup> Cf. F. Mußner, "Gab es eine 'Galiläische Krise'?" in Jesus von Nazareth im Umfeld Israels und der Urkirche, WUNT 1.111 (Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 1999), 74–85; U. Wilckens, Theologie des Neuen Testaments I/1: Geschichte des Wirkens Jesu in Galiläa (Neukirchen-Vluyn: Neukirchener Verlag, 2002), 304–328.

<sup>94</sup> C. E. B. Cranfield, The Gospel According to St Mark, CGTC (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1972), 110; R. P. Martin, Mark (Exeter: Paternoster, 1972), 186–187; W. Eckey, Das Markusevangelium (Neukirchen-Vluyn: Neukirchener Verlag, 1998), 105.

<sup>95</sup> W. L. Lane, The Gospel of Mark, NLC (London: Marshall, Morgan & Scott, 1974), 111; R. T. France, The Gospel of Mark, NIGTC (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2002), 140 n. 38.

<sup>96</sup> Das Evangelium des Markus, KEK 1.2 (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1937), 60.

<sup>97</sup> J. Knabenbauer, Evangelium secundum S. Marcum, CSS NT 1.1 (Paris: Lethellieux, detailed exposition of the supporting arguments has been put forward by A. Feuillet, but his work has gone largely unnoticed.<sup>98</sup>

Isa 53:8 MT	Isa 53:8 LXX
מעצר וממשפט לקח ואת דורו מיישוחח כי נגזר מארץ חיים מפשע עמי נגע למו	ἐν τῇ ταπεινώσει ἡ κρίσις αὐτοῦ ἦρθη· τὴν γενεάν αὐτοῦ τίς διηγῆσεται; ὅτι αἴρεται ἀπὸ τῆς γῆς ἡ ζωὴ αὐτοῦ, ἀπὸ τῶν ἀνομῶν τοῦ λαοῦ μου ἤχθη εἰς θάνατον.

As the Septuagint and 1QIs<sup>a</sup> show, the Masoretic Text is not unproblematic. Originally, the text probably had the following meaning:

By arrest and judgment he was snatched away,
but who cares about his fate?
He was cut off from the land of the living and put to death because of the crimes of my people.

With the exception of Feuillet, scholars who compare this passage to the logion of Jesus always quote the incorrect translation of Isa 53:8c LXX: “His life was taken away (αἴρεται) from the earth.” But an allusion to the beginning of the verse is more likely: “By arrest and judgment he was snatched away” (Isa 53:8a).<sup>99</sup> The verbal form ἀπαρθῆ (Matt 5:15/Mark 2:20/Luke 5:35) would be a correct translation of מִיַּד חֲקָלָה. The use of the compound form, which is unique in the New Testament, argues against a direct borrowing from the Septuagint. The verb αἴρω does not necessarily imply a violent end,<sup>100</sup> but the context of Isa 53:8 makes it clear that this is the fate awaiting Jesus, who announces a fasting that denotes mourning (cf. 2.7). If all that was meant was the departure of the bridegroom (in the sense that he “removed himself”), the intransitive active form of the verb (which is frequently found in the 1894), 83; H. B. Swete, The Gospel according to St. Mark, 3rd ed. (London: Macmillan, 1909), 44.

<sup>98</sup> NRT 90 (1968): 252–259.

<sup>99</sup> חֲקָלָה is employed for the (rather non-violent) “taking away” of the Teacher of Righteousness (CD XIX, 35; XX, 14).

<sup>100</sup> Because of Acts 1:9—Jesus “was raised up” (ἐπήρθη)—some scholars think that a rapture into heaven is meant here: cf. especially U. Mell, ThZ 52 (1966): 7–8. Cf. the critical remarks by Zimmermann, Geschlechtermetaphorik und Gottesverhältnis, 298–299.

Septuagint) would have been the obvious form to use, not the exceptional passive form.<sup>101</sup>

Those who believe for other reasons that Jesus interpreted his impending death as the suffering of the Servant of the Lord from Isa 53 (Mark 10:45; 14:23–24 and parallels)<sup>102</sup> will not wish to exclude the possibility that the messianic metaphor of the bridegroom contains an allusion to this. Jesus identified himself with the “one anointed with the Spirit” (Isa 61:1–3; see below), and most modern scholars see this “one anointed with the Spirit” as the speaker in Isa 61:10, a text that was already interpreted messianically at that period.<sup>103</sup> Jesus saw both the anointed liberator (Isa 61) and the Servant of the Lord (Isa 53) as models of his own messianic mission. In the metaphor of the interrupted wedding, he united the metaphors associated with a wedding (Isa 61:10) and the prediction of suffering (Isa 53:8), because scriptural scholarship in early Judaism read Isa 40–66 as one unit.<sup>104</sup> It may have been significant for Jesus that the metaphors of bride and bridegroom are applied to the renewed Jerusalem at Isa 49:14–21[18] and 54:1–8[5–6], in the immediate vicinity of the second and third Servant Songs. When we read that the Suffering Servant “shall see his offspring” after he is rescued (Isa 53:10), it is clear that he is thought of as a husband.

John 1:29 shows that Isaiah 53 played an important role in the discussions with the Baptist movement—perhaps already before Easter,<sup>105</sup> but at any rate after Easter; and we have evidence that at least Isa 61 played a decisive role for Jesus in this context. A Q-tradition relates the question put by John when he was in prison: is Jesus ὁ ἐρχόμενος (Matt 11:2–3/Luke 7:18–19), i.e. the Messianic Son of Man who is coming to judge the <sup>101</sup> J. B. Muddiman, “Jesus and Fasting (Mark ii. 18–22),” in Jésus aux origines de la christologie, ed. J. Dupont, BETL 40 (Leuven: Leuven University Press, 1975), 271–281, assumes that the original verbal form was active, but he appeals here for support to the secondary Gos. Thom. 104 (cf. 4.3).

<sup>102</sup> Cf. P. Stuhlmacher, “Isaiah 53 in the Gospels and Acts,” in The Suffering Servant, eds. Janowski and Stuhlmacher, 147–162; R. Riesner, “Back to the Historical Jesus through Paul and his School (The Ransom Logion—Mark 10.45; Matthew 20.28),” JSHJ 1 (2003): 171–199; U. Wilckens, Theologie des Neuen Testaments I/2 (Neukirchen-Vluyn: Neukirchener Verlag, 2003), 49–85.

<sup>103</sup> Cf. Blenkinsopp, Isaiah 56–66, 231.

<sup>104</sup> On the technique of evoking lengthy Old Testament contexts by means of catchwords, cf. R. B. Hays, Echoes of Scripture in the Letters of Paul (New Haven: Yale University Press, 1989); J. White, Die Erstlingsgabe im Neuen Testament, TANZ 45 (Tübingen: Franke, 2007), 3–12.

<sup>105</sup> Cf. D. B. Sandy, “John the Baptist’s ‘Lamb of God’,” JETS 34 (1999): 447–459.

world (Dan 7:13 Theod.: ἐρχόμενος ἦν)? Matt 11:4–6 and Luke 7:22–23 transmit the implicitly affirmative answer in almost identical words:<sup>106</sup>

Go, tell John what you see and hear:
 the blind see,
 the lame walk,
 lepers are cleansed,
 and the deaf hear,
 the dead arise,
 the good news is preached to the poor:
 and blessed is the one who does not take offense at me.

This list of saving works has a surprising parallel in a Qumran text which was published rather late, 4Q521:

[1] [for the heav]ens and the earth will listen to his anointed one... [5] For the Lord will consider the pious, and call the righteous by name, [6] and his spirit will hover upon the poor, and he will renew the faithful with his strength. [7] For he will honor the pious upon the throne of an eternal kingdom, [8] freeing prisoners, giving sight to the blind, straightening out the twist[ed]... [11] And the Lord will perform marvelous acts such as have not existed, just as he sa[id], [12] [for] he will heal the badly wounded and will make the dead live, he will proclaim good news to the poor... (4Q521 2 II, 1, 5–7, 11–12).<sup>107</sup>

The text appears to speak of the priestly and the Davidic Messiahs and of Elijah who will announce their coming.<sup>108</sup> There is disagreement between scholars if the wonders are performed by God or a Messianic figure.<sup>109</sup> The Q logion displays a similar tension, since the working of <sup>106</sup> For the authenticity, cf. Meier, A Marginal Jew, 2:131–137; E. P. Meadors, Jesus the Messianic Herald of Salvation, WUNT 2.72 (Tübingen: Siebeck Mohr, 1995), 162–168; J. D. G. Dunn, Jesus Remembered (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 2003), 447–450.

<sup>107</sup> F. García Martínez and E. J. C. Tigchelaar, The Dead Sea Scrolls Study Edition II (Leiden: Brill, 1998), 1045.

<sup>108</sup> Cf. É. Puech, “Une apocalypse messianique (4Q521)”, RevQ 15 (1992): 475–519; idem, “Some Remarks on 4Q246 and 4Q521 and Qumran Messianism”, in The Provo International Conference on the Dead Sea Scrolls: Technological Innovations, New Texts, and Reformulated Issues, ed. D. W. Parry and E. Ulrich (Leiden: Brill, 1999), 545–565; J. Zimmermann, Messianische Texte aus Qumran, WUNT 2.104 (Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 1998), 343–388; A. Falcetta, “The Logion of Matthew 11:5–6 Par.: From Qumran to Abgar,” RB 110 (2003): 222–248.

<sup>109</sup> Summaries of the discussion in O. Betz and R. Riesner, Jesus, Qumran, and the Vatican (London: SCM, 1994), 90–93; J. J. Collins, “Jesus, Messianism, and the Dead Sea Scrolls,” in Qumran-Messianism, ed. J. H. Charlesworth et al. (Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 1998), 110–119; D. Zacharias, “Dead Sea Scrolls: Messianic Apocalypse (4Q521),” in Encyclopedia of the Historical Jesus, ed. Evan, 138–140.

God is indicated by the passiva divina, but it is Jesus who performs the miracles. The Qumran text and the logion of Jesus agree in interpreting Isa 61:1 as speaking of the final age.<sup>110</sup> The Melchizedek Fragment also understands Isa 61:1–2 eschatologically.<sup>111</sup> When Jesus replies to the messianic question of the Baptist with a summary of saving works which is so similar to Qumran, this can scarcely be explained only on the basis of a common recourse to the Old Testament: it points to a common exegetical tradition. C. A. Evans rightly asks: “One cannot help but wonder if it is more than a coincidence that in replying to an imprisoned and questioning John the Baptist (Matt 11:2–6 = Lk 7:18–23), who may very well have had some contact with members of the Qumran sect, Jesus not only alludes to Scripture that was important to this community (cf. 11QMelch II, 4, 6, 9, 13, 18; 1QH XV, 15; XVIII, 14–15); at points he paraphrases it as they did.”<sup>112</sup> There are some indications that Jesus’ extended family practiced an exposition of scripture reminiscent of that of Qumran.<sup>113</sup>

2.7. Fasting as the Expression of Penance and Mourning

Already in the Old Testament period, fasting was one of the most common mourning customs (1 Sam 31:13; Jdt 8:6; 1 Macc 1:25–28, etc.). The close link is shown by the first sentence of the Aramaic megillat ta’anit, which dates back to before 70 CE: “These are the days on which one is not to fast (לֹא לֵאֲתַעֲנָאָה), and on some of them one is not to <sup>110</sup> Cf. H. Kvalbein, “The Wonders of the End-Time: Metaphoric Language in 4Q521 and the Interpretation of Matthew 11.5 Par,” JSP 18 (1998): 86–110.

<sup>111</sup> Cf. M. P. Miller, “The Function of Isa 61:1–2 in 11Q Melchizedek,” JBL 88 (1967): 467–469; É. Puech, La croyance des esséniens en la vie future (Paris: Lecoffre and J. Gabalda, 1993), 2:516–561; Zimmermann, Messianische Texte aus Qumran, 389–412.

<sup>112</sup> “The Recently Published Dead Sea Scrolls and the Historical Jesus,” in Studying the Historical Jesus, ed. B. Chilton and C. A. Evans, NTTS 19 (Leiden: Brill, 1994), 547–565, at 553.

<sup>113</sup> Cf. R. Bauckham, Jude and the Relatives of Jesus in the Early Church (Edinburgh: T&T Clark, 1990), 179–234. There are parallels to 4Q521 2 II, 5 (אֲדִנִי חֲסִידִים יִבְקֶר) in the special Lukan tradition (Luke 1:68, 78; 7:16; Acts 15:14), which was handed on by circles associated with James of Jerusalem and other relatives of the Lord. Cf. R. Riesner, “James’s Speech (Acts 15:13–21), Simeon’s Hymn (Luke 2:29–32), and Luke’s Sources,” in Jesus of Nazareth: Lord and Christ, ed. J. B. Green and M. Turner (Carlisle: Paternoster 1994), 263–278; idem, “Die Emmaus-Erzählung (Lukas 24,13–35),” in Emmaus in Judäa, ed. K. H. Fleckenstein, BAZ 11 (Gießen: Brunnen, 2003), 150–207.

mourn (לֹא לְמַסְפָּד).<sup>114</sup> The significance of fasting as an expression of repentance and penance because of guilt vis-à-vis God grew after the exile (Ezra 8:21–23; 2 Chr 20:3; Bar 1:5, etc.), and a fortiori after the Maccabean period (2 Macc 13:12; Pss. Sol. 3.8; T. Sim. 3.4, etc.).<sup>115</sup> Outsiders saw fasting as a typical element in Jewish piety (Tacitus, Hist. 5.4; Suetonius, Aug. 76.3). Indeed, the “fasting scroll” had to specify on which joyful feast days it was forbidden to fast (cf. Jub. 50.12–13; CD XIII, 13). Pharisees fasted on two weekdays (Luke 18:12; cf. b. Taan. 12a) in vicarious penance, in order to ward off calamity from the people of God (b. Git. 56a).<sup>116</sup> Fasting of this kind for “the redemption of Jerusalem” is attested for the New Testament period (Luke 2:26–38). The Qumran Essenes saw their ascetic way of life, which included their meals, as a sign of the eschatological tribulation in which they lived (4QpPs37 III, 2–5). Circles close to the Essenes emphasized the link between fasting and humility before God (1 En. 108.7–9; cf. 1QS III, 8; T. Jud. 19.2).

Fasting was practiced in the Baptist’s penitential movement (perhaps on the model of Jon 3:5),<sup>117</sup> but Jesus and his disciples attracted notice by the fact that they did not fast.<sup>118</sup> Jesus interpreted his provocative behavior with the help of the metaphor of the bridegroom: one need no longer prepare oneself with fasting for the age of salvation, nor attempt to hasten its coming, because it is already present! The prophet Zechariah expected that the fasting days would then “be to the house of Judah seasons of joy and gladness, and cheerful feasts” (Zech 8:19). According to Jer 33:10–11, when God has mercy on his people, “there shall be heard again the voice of mirth and the voice of gladness, the voice of the bridegroom and the voice of the bride.” Jesus’ linking of the irruption of the age of salvation to his own presence, but without saying

<sup>114</sup> J. A. Fitzmyer and D. J. Harrington, A Manual of Palestinian Aramaic Texts, BibOr 34 (Rome: Biblical Institute, 1978), 184.

<sup>115</sup> J. Behm, “νήστους κτλ.,” ThWNT IV (1942), 925–935, emphasized one-sidedly the meritoriousness of fasting. For a more balanced view, cf. H. A. Brongers, “Fasting in Israel in Biblical and Post-Biblical Times,” OTS 20 (1977): 1–21; J. F. Wimmer, Fasting in the New Testament (New York: Paulist, 1982), 7–30; Holmén, Jesus and Jewish Covenant Thinking, 128–134.

<sup>116</sup> Cf. Str-B, 2:241–244; D. Correns, Taanijot Fastentage, Die Mischna vol. 2 (Berlin: de Gruyter, 1989), 14.

<sup>117</sup> Cf. C. H. H. Scobie, John the Baptist (London: SCM, 1964), 139–141.

<sup>118</sup> The references to fasting at Matt 17:21; Mark 9:29 are secondary (Metzger, A Textual Commentary, 35, 85).

this explicitly, is an example of the pre-Easter mode of speech which conceals the messianic secret.<sup>119</sup> A number of scholars have proposed that the arrest or execution of John the Baptist prompted the question about fasting,<sup>120</sup> and this would explain a number of things. The disciples of John must have seen these events as the sign of an intensified apocalyptic crisis—and nothing would have been more natural than to respond with an intensified fasting, in keeping with Joel 2:12–16:

- [12] “Yet even now,” says the Lord, “return to me with all your heart,
       with fasting, with weeping, and with mourning . . .
 [16] Let the bridegroom (ἄνθρωπος, LXX νυμφίος) leave his room, and the bride her chamber.”

If the disciples of the Baptist did indeed follow this passage of scripture, Jesus’ choice of metaphor would have been particularly appropriate, since his answer spoke not only of the present feast, but also of the sudden interruption of the wedding. The lamentation of a bride at the death of her bridegroom illustrates in Joel 1:8, as in intertestamental literature (1 Macc 9:39–41; 3 Macc 1:19; 4:6–8), the contrast between extreme joy and extreme mourning. A particularly close parallel to Jesus’ metaphor is found in 4 Ezra 9.38–10.4. Here, a widow who is identified with Zion says: “But it happened that when my son entered his wedding chamber, he fell down and died . . . I will neither eat nor drink, but without ceasing mourn and fast until I die” (4 Ezra 10.1, 4).<sup>121</sup> Jeremiah often announces that God will put an end on the day of judgment to the exultation of bridegroom and bride (Jer 7:34; 16:9; 25:10). Jesus’ choice of metaphor supports the view that ἀπαρθῆ is a passivum divinum: it is God who will snatch away the bridegroom from the midst of his friends as they celebrate.

According to Matt 9:15, Jesus’ answering question is not: “Can the sons of the bridal chamber fast (νηστεύειν)” (Mark 2:19; cf. Luke 5:34), <sup>119</sup> Cf. J. Schniewind, “Messiasgeheimnis und Eschatologie,” in idem, Nachgelassene Reden und Aufsätze (Gießen: Brunnen, 1987), 1–13; V. Hampel, Menschensohn und historischer Jesus (Neukirchen-Vluyn: Neukirchener Verlag, 1990), 101–127; M. Hengel and A. M. Schwemer, Jesus und das Judentum (Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2007), 506–525.

<sup>120</sup> A. E. J. Rawlinson, The Gospel according to St Mark, 7th ed. (London: Westminster, 1947), 31; Taylor, The Gospel according to St Mark, 208; Mann, Mark, 232–233.

<sup>121</sup> B. M. Metzger, “The Fourth Book of Ezra,” in The Old Testament Pseudepigrapha 1: Apocalyptic Literature and Testaments, ed. J. H. Charlesworth (New York: Doubleday, 1983), 517–559, at 546.

but “mourn (πενθεῖν) while the bridegroom is with them?” J. Jeremias regarded these as variant translations of the Aramaic ܝܬܦܐܠ (Ithpaal of ܦܢܥ),<sup>122</sup> which in the Targumim can mean both “to fast” and “to mourn.”<sup>123</sup> This explanation would be impossible, if the logion had been formulated in Hebrew (cf. 3.1), since the Septuagint never translates פנע as πενθεῖν.<sup>124</sup> At any rate, Matthew’s chosen verb indicates that this fasting of the mourners lies in the future. Similarly, the indicative future νηστεύουσιν at Mark 2:19/Luke 5:34—“they will fast”—is not to be understood in a purely exhortatory sense (i.e., “they ought to fast”). In the Gospel of John, there is a close thematic link (cf. John 17:11) between joy at the bridegroom (John 3:29; cf. 15:11) and mourning at Jesus’ departure (John 16:20–24; cf. 20:11).<sup>125</sup> The prediction at John 16:20–23 is reminiscent of the logion of the children who play at funerals in the version in Luke 7:32 (ἐθρηνήσαμεν καὶ οὐκ ἐκλάυσατε), and of the metaphor of the bridegroom who is “snatched away” (ἀπαρθῆ):

- [20] Amen, amen, I say to you,
 you will weep and lament (κλαύσετε καὶ θρηνήσετε),
 but the world will rejoice;
 you will mourn (λυπηθήσεσθε),
 but your grief will turn into joy...
- [22] So you have grief now, but I will see you again
 and your hearts will rejoice, and no one will take (αἶρει) your joy from you.
- [23] In that day (ἐν ἐκείνῃ τῇ ἡμέρᾳ) you will ask nothing of me...

The metaphor of the sorrow and joy of a woman who gives birth (John 16:21), which is inserted between these words about the reactions of the disciples, is related to a theme of the special Lukan tradition: the community of the disciples is seen as a woman who suffers the death and resurrection of Jesus as the messianic birth pangs, and in

<sup>122</sup> Th WNT IV (1942), 1096 n. 1. Like J. Jeremias (ibid. n. 42), E. Lohmeyer, Das Evangelium des Matthäus, 2nd ed. (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1956), 175, also regarded ἐφ’ ὅσον (Matt 9:15) and ἐν ᾧ (Mark 2:19) as variant translations from Aramaic (ܝܬܦܐܠ). For a contrary view, cf. H. W. Kuhn, Enderwartung und gegenwärtiges Heil, SUNT 4 (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1966), 198 n. 6.

<sup>123</sup> This had already been suggested by P. Joüon, “Notes philologiques sur les évangiles,” RSR 18 (1928): 345–359, at 345.

<sup>124</sup> Cf. J. Dupont, Les Béatitudes 3: Les évangélistes (Paris: J. Gabalda, 1973), 552 n. 3.

<sup>125</sup> Cf. R. Infante, L'amico dello sposo. Giovanni Battista (Naples: Dehoniane, 1984), 119–148.

this event of giving birth brings the eschatological people of God into the world.<sup>126</sup>

The synoptic evangelists too describe the response of the disciples and adherents of Jesus to his passion as a deep mourning. The disciples are already sad in the upper room (λυπεῖσθαι, Matt 26:22/Mark 14:19). Peter weeps (κλαίω) after his betrayal of Jesus (Matt 26:75/Mark 14:72/Luke 22:61). The “daughters of Jerusalem,” who also represent the holy city (Zion), “lament” (ἐθρήνουν) over Jesus (Luke 23:27). Apart from these three contexts in Luke 7:32; 23:21 and John 16:20, the verb θρηνεῖν never occurs in the New Testament. According to the inauthentic conclusion to Mark, which is closely related to the special Lukan tradition,<sup>127</sup> the disciples “mourned and wept” (πενθοῦσι καὶ κλαίουσιν, Mark 16:10). Mark 2:20 is given a corresponding interpretation in the Gospel of Peter, when the disciples look back and relate: “Because of all these things we fasted (ἐνηστεύομεν) and sat there mourning and weeping (πενθοῦντες καὶ κλαίοντες) night and day until the sabbath” (Ev. Pet. 2.7 [SC 201, p. 52]). Unlike the Johannine passages, the synoptic metaphor of the “bridegroom who is snatched away” contains no allusion to the resurrection; this too is an indication of a pre-Easter provenance. If the metaphor had been created after Easter, it is extremely difficult to understand (cf. Acts 8:8; 13:52) why the earthly absence of Jesus should have been characterized exclusively as a period of mourning. Clearly, both the synoptic and the Johannine traditions have understood this metaphor as announcing the mourning of Good Friday, not as a justification for post-Easter fasting customs.<sup>128</sup>

2.8. No Etiology of Early Christian Fasting

The oldest exegesis understood this text surprisingly seldom as a justification for fasting.<sup>129</sup> It was held that the church’s praxis was already

<sup>126</sup> Cf. R. Riesner, SNTU 29 (2004): 144–152.

<sup>127</sup> Cf. R. Pesch, Das Markusevangelium, 4th ed., HThK 2.2 (Freiburg: Herder, 1991), 2:544–547.

<sup>128</sup> Cf. J. Schniewind, Das Evangelium nach Markus, 4th ed., NTD 1 (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1947), 63; D. Hill, The Gospel of Matthew, NCB (London: Oliphants, 1972), 176–177; R. H. Stein, Luke, NAC 24 (Nashville: Broadman, 1992), 185.

<sup>129</sup> Cf. F. G. Cremer, Die Fastenansage Jesu: Mk 2,20 und Parallelen in der Sicht der patristischen und scholastischen Exegese, BBB 23 (Bonn: Hanstein, 1965); idem, “Lukanisches Sondergut zum Fastengespräch: Lk 5,33–39 . . .,” TThZ 76 (1967): 129–154.

legitimated by the forty days' fast of the Lord (Matt 4:2/Luke 4:2), and one could also appeal to the conduct of the earliest church, as this is described in the Acts of the Apostles (Acts 13:2–3; 14:23) and is perhaps presupposed by Paul (2 Cor 6:5; 11:27).<sup>130</sup> It is highly questionable whether, apart from some second-century gnostics (Gos. Thom. 6, 14, 104), there were ever any Christians who rejected fasting on principle.<sup>131</sup> The logic of classical form criticism inevitably led scholars to read such a group out of Mark 2:18–20. The weekly fasting can be traced back as far as the end of the first century (Did. 8.1); this is probably connected with the old Palestinian-Syrian chronology of the Passion (Didascalía 5), according to which Jesus was arrested in the night between Tuesday and Wednesday and was crucified on the Friday.<sup>132</sup> It is not possible to demonstrate any influence from our text on this fasting praxis;<sup>133</sup> at most, one could ask whether the striking singular ἐν ἐκείνῃ τῇ ἡμέρᾳ has some connection with fasting on Good Friday or on Fridays in general.<sup>134</sup> Both of these were common in Rome, where Mark's Gospel was written, at least as early as the second century (Hippolytus, Traditio Apostolica 25.1–4); however, when Hermas writes ἐν ἐκείνῃ τῇ ἡμέρᾳ ἧ νηστεύεις (Sim. 5.3.7; SUC 3, pp. 258–259), he refers neither to one particular date nor to Mark 2:20.<sup>135</sup> When he employs the singular, the evangelist may be referring to the historical Good Friday as the day of greatest mourning. The Septuagint uses this phrase for the “day of the

<sup>130</sup> Cf. R. P. Martin, 2 Corinthians, WBC 40 (Waco: Word Books, 1986), 174–175, 380.

<sup>131</sup> Cf. S. G. Hall and J. H. Crehan, “Fasten/Fastentage,” TRE XI (1983): 48–59; C. C. Mitchell, “The Practice of Fasting in the New Testament,” BSac 147 (1990): 455–469.

<sup>132</sup> Cf. E. Ruckstuhl, “Zur Chronologie der Leidensgeschichte Jesu I,” in Jesus im Horizont der Evangelien, SBA 3 (Stuttgart: Katholisches Bibelwerk, 1988), 101–139. D. Stöckl Ben Ezra, The Impact of Yom Kippur on Early Christianity, WUNT 2.163 (Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2003), 212–218, believes that Jewish Christian groups continued to observe the only obligatory Jewish fast on the Day of Atonement (Lev 16:29–31); cf. Acts 27:9. In that case—as with James the brother of the Lord (Eusebius, Hist. Eccl. 2.23,5–6) and the Quartodecimans (5.23.1–25)—this was probably a penitential fast for the conversion of Israel.

<sup>133</sup> Cf. K. T. Schäfer, “... und dann werden sie fasten, an jenem Tage’ (Mark 2,20),” in Synoptische Studien (München: Zink, 1954), 124–147.

<sup>134</sup> Thus Kuhn Ältere Sammlungen im Markusevangelium, 66–72.

<sup>135</sup> Cf. M. Leutzsch, Hirt des Hermas, SUC 3 (Darmstadt: Wissenschaftliche, 1998), 470 n. 52. As R. T. Beckwith has shown (“The Feast of the New Wine and the Question of Fasting,” ET 95 [1984]: 334–335), it is impossible to link Mark 2:18–22 with Roman fasting customs in the early third century under bishop Callistus (Liber Pontificalis 7 [Duchesne 1:62–63, 141]), as was suggested by G. J. Brooke, “The Feast of the New Wine and the Question of Fasting,” ET 95 (1989): 175–176.

Lord,”<sup>136</sup> and Mark 15:3, 38 draws on the attributes of this “day” in its account of the execution of Jesus. In John, the same expression is used for the time of the cross and resurrection (John 14:20; 16:23.26). Even a purely stylistic variation between the plural ἡμέραι at the beginning and the singular at the close is possible (cf. Amos 8:11.13 LXX; Luke 17:22, 24; Heb 8:38–39). In Mark 2:20, ἐν ἐκείνῃ τῇ ἡμέρᾳ refers to a period which is seen in eschatological terms. Similarly, ἐν ἐκείνῃ τῇ ἡμέρᾳ at Luke 5:35 refers not to the time of the church, but to the time between the arrest and the resurrection of Jesus.<sup>137</sup>

In a late writing (De ieiunio 2.6; CSEL 20/1, p. 275), Tertullian justifies the annual fast on Good Friday and Holy Saturday with reference to Luke 5:35: certe in evangelio illos dies ieiunium determinatos putant, in quibus ablatus est sponsus. In an early writing (De oratione 18), he had employed a different argument. The letter of Irenaeus to Victorinus shows that the ecclesial praxis was not subject to any extensive regulation (Eusebius, Hist. Eccl. 5.24.12). Church orders of the third and fourth centuries justify the two-day paschal feast with reference to the plural ἐν ἐκείναις ταῖς ἡμέραις of Luke 5:35b (Didascalia 5.12.16; Apostolic Constitutions 5.18.2). However, the oldest Greek exegesis explicitly rejected this pericope as a justification for bodily fasting, since νηστεύειν was a metaphor for lacking the presence of the bridegroom (Origen, In Matthaeum 9.15; GCS 41, p. 85); and this got at least one aspect of Jesus’ answer right (cf. 2.7). Augustine too underlined that the Lord had not laid down any fixed day for fasting (Ep. 36.25). He understood Mark 2:20 and parallels primarily as a prediction of the mourning that would follow the death of Jesus (Ep. 36.32).<sup>138</sup> F. G. Cremer judges the situation in the first century as follows: “Just as there was no non-fasting community that could have justified its praxis by an appeal to Jesus’ reply in the reduced form of Mk 2:19a alone, so too a fasting community did not need to invent the sentence at Mk 2:20 in order to defend its praxis.”<sup>139</sup>

<sup>136</sup> Cf. F. J. Moloney, The Gospel of Mark (Peabody: Hendrickson, 2002), 66.

<sup>137</sup> Cf. Nolland, Luke 1–9:20, 248; Stein, Luke, 185–187.

<sup>138</sup> Cf. F. G. Cremer, Der Beitrag Augustins zur Auslegung des Fastenstreitgesprächs (Mk 2,18–22 parr) (Paris: Études Augustiniennes, 1971).

<sup>139</sup> Die Fastenansage Jesu, 6.

3. The Garment and the Wine for the Messianic Banquet
(Matt 9:16–17/Mark 2:21–22/Luke 5:36–39)

3.1. Aramaic or Hebrew?

J. Jeremias posited an Aramaic basis for the logion about the bridegroom (cf. 2.7), and M. Black posited a similar basis for the metaphor of the old garment.<sup>140</sup> J. Carmignac,<sup>141</sup> P. Rolland,<sup>142</sup> and D. Flusser<sup>143</sup> claim that the original form of the entire pericope about fasting was in Hebrew. The Qumran discoveries have made it clear that some groups spoke a Middle Hebrew, an intermediary form between biblical and Mishnaic Hebrew.<sup>144</sup> An original formulation in Hebrew might be indicated by the supposition that Jesus is addressing Jews who were well acquainted with the scriptures; all the metaphors presuppose the ability to identify Old Testament metaphors and eschatological images. The surest linguistic indicator is the obvious Hebraism οἱ υἱοὶ τοῦ νυμφῶνος in the metaphor of the bridegroom (cf. 2.2). The expression ἐλεύσονται δὲ ἡμέραι imitates the prophetic יָמֵי בָּיִת וְיָמֵי (1 Kgs 2:31; Amos 4:2; Jer 19:6, etc.). In the logia of Jesus, the same or similar forms are found only in the Hebraizing special Lukan tradition (Luke 17:22; 21:6; cf. Luke 19:43; 23:29), where they announce the terror that will precede the day of the Son of Man. When in Matt 9:14 follows an interrogative pronoun with two coordinated clauses, with only the latter containing the actual question, this is a Semiticism.<sup>145</sup> The ἐφ' ὅσον which is attested only in Matthew (Matt 9:15; 25:40, 45) corresponds to the rabbinic לְמַן לְיָמֵי (Gen.R. 9:7 [6d]; MekExod. 17:10 [62a]).<sup>146</sup>

In the metaphor of the old garment, which refers to an outer garment (ἱμάτιον, תְּכָנִיף), the minor agreement ἐπιβάλλειν ἐπιβλημα (Matt 9:16/Luke 5:36) may be derived from the Hebrew phrase תִּלְחָטְמָהּ הִלְחָטְ (m.Kelim 26:2; 28:6). Paronomasia is so common in the logia of Jesus that one can speak here of a typical stylistic device.<sup>147</sup> The verb ἐπιράπτειν, which

<sup>140</sup> An Aramaic Approach to the Gospels and Acts, 3rd ed. (Oxford: Clarendon, 1967), 94–95, at 133.

<sup>141</sup> “Studies in the Hebrew Background of the Synoptic Gospels,” ASTI 7 (1968/69): 64–93.

<sup>142</sup> RB 89 (1982): 381–383.

<sup>143</sup> “Mögen Sie etwa lieber neuen Wein?,” in Entdeckungen im Neuen Testament I (Neukirchen-Vluyn: Neukirchener Verlag, 1987), 107–114.

<sup>144</sup> Cf. J. A. Lund, “The Language of Jesus,” Mishkan 17/18 (1992/93): 139–155.

<sup>145</sup> Cf. M. J. Lagrange, Évangile selon Saint Matthieu, 4th ed. (Paris: Lecoffre and J. Gabalda, 1941), 183.

<sup>146</sup> Cf. A. Schlatter, Der Evangelist Matthäus (Stuttgart: Calwer, 1929), 312.

<sup>147</sup> Cf. Black, An Aramaic Approach to the Gospels and Acts, 160–185.

is chosen at Mark 2:21, avoids a redundancy which is ugly in Greek; it has no Semitic equivalent. Since there is likewise no Semitic equivalent to ῥάκος ἄγναφος (Matt 9:16a/Mark 2:21a), the adjective may be a secondary explanation:<sup>148</sup> the “unshrunk piece of cloth” shrinks when it is washed, and tears the old cloth at the seams.<sup>149</sup> Luke 5:36 contains a clarifying interpretation (“One will tear the new garment”),<sup>150</sup> but this may preserve a reminiscence of an expression such as ἐπίβλημα καινόν, which has a direct parallel (תִּשְׁרֹף תִּלְוָה) in Mishnaic Hebrew (m.Kelim 27:12). The occurrence of πλήρωμα in the sense of “a patch” (i.e., a completing piece) is un-Greek, but it corresponds to the Hebrew אִיִּמָּה or the Aramaic אִיִּמָּה or אִיִּמָּה.<sup>151</sup> In both languages, a play on words (עֲרַךְ/עֲרַךְ) behind χεῖρον σχίσμα would be possible.<sup>152</sup>

The metaphor of the new wine contains three minor agreements which point back to an underlying semitic formulation and therefore cannot be the product of Matthean-Lukan redaction:

Matt 9:17bc	Mark 2:22b	Luke 5:37b–38
καὶ ὁ οἶνος ἐκχεῖται καὶ οἱ ἀσκοὶ ἀπόλλυνται· ἀλλὰ βάλλουσιν οἶνον νέον εἰς ἀσκούς καινοὺς	ὁ οἶνος ἀπόλλυται καὶ οἱ ἀσκοί, ἀλλὰ οἶνον νέον εἰς ἀσκούς καινοὺς	καὶ αὐτὸς ἐκχυθήσεται καὶ οἱ ἀσκοὶ ἀπολούνται· ἀλλὰ οἶνον νέον εἰς ἀσκούς καινοὺς βλητέον

<sup>148</sup> We may compare the explanation (not needed by Palestinians) in the parable of the mustard seed: μικρότερον πάντων τῶν σπερμάτων (Matt 13:32/Mark 4:31; not found in Luke 13:19).

<sup>149</sup> Cf. M. G. Steinhauser, “The Patch of Unshrunk Cloth (Mt 9:16),” ET 87 (1976): 312–313.

<sup>150</sup> At the same time, the adaptation in terms of contents to Luke 5:37–38 (both the old and the new will be destroyed) means that the formal parallel is abandoned. It is difficult to decide whether this is due to redaction (J. A. Fitzmyer, The Gospel according to Luke I–IX, AB 28 [New York: Doubleday 1981], 600–601) or to the influence of the special Lukan source (Schramm, Der Markus-Stoff bei Lukas, 108–109). The verb συμφωνήσει in Luke 5:36b may suggest the former (cf. Acts 5:9; 15:15), but (like Luke 5:33, 39) 5:36b offers “a rather clumsy parataxis” (Nolland, Luke 1–9:20, 248).

<sup>151</sup> Cf. 1:518.

<sup>152</sup> Cf. R. H. Gundry, The Use of the Old Testament in St. Matthew’s Gospel, NovTSup 18 (Leiden: Brill, 1967), 170. The lack of an article before σχίσμα need not be due to Aramaic influence: cf. E. C. Maloney, Semitic Interference in Marcan Style, SBLDS 51 (Chico: Scholars, 1981), 110–111.

The impersonal plural βάλλουσιν which occurs twice in Matt 9:17 may be either an Aramaism<sup>153</sup> or a Hebraism.<sup>154</sup> The elliptical formulation ὁ οἶνος ἀπόλλυται καὶ οἱ ἀσκοὶ (Mark 2:22b) cannot be translated back into a Semitic language. Matthew and Luke agree in giving each subject a verb of its own, as an underlying Semitic text would require; they also agree in their choice of verbs (βάλλειν, ἐχκύνειν). Similarly, Mark 2:22b—ἀλλὰ οἶνον νέον εἰς ἀσκοὺς καινοῦς—lacks a verb, contrary to semitic usage.<sup>155</sup> Matt 9:17c with its impersonal plural βάλλουσιν is the closest to Semitic usage; Luke 9:38 presents the only verbal adjective in the New Testament, viz. βλητέον from the same verb. In Luke 5:37, the position of the adjective after the noun with a repeated article (ὁ οἶνος ὁ νέος) could go back to the Hebrew שְׂתִּיבָה לְיַיִן, but the adjective seems rather to disturb the meter (see below). In both metaphors, εἰ δὲ μή after a negative protasis does not correspond to any Semitic original, although the Septuagint occasionally translates the Hebrew יִּפְּ in this way (Num 20:18 LXX, etc.).<sup>156</sup>

In the metaphor of the old wine, which is found only in Luke, the positive χρηστός in Luke 5:39 (instead of the comparative χρηστότερος)<sup>157</sup> is a Semiticism.<sup>158</sup> The participle πίων, like an underlying Hebrew participle (הִתְּשֵׁ), denotes a habitual drinking.<sup>159</sup> Accordingly, this metaphor was not formulated by the evangelist, and it is scarcely imaginable that he took it over as an isolated tradition: this logion was probably already attached by means of a catchword to the metaphor of the new wine. The logion is difficult to understand and is indeed open to misunderstanding (as one sees even in modern exegesis),<sup>160</sup> and this may explain why the traditio triplex omitted it; in a similar manner, Marcion's influence led codex D and the Vetus Latina to omit this logion. It is however more likely that Luke found at least the sequence of logia Luke

<sup>153</sup> Cf. Black, An Aramaic Approach to the Gospels and Acts, 126–127.

<sup>154</sup> Cf. Flusser, “Mögen Sie etwa lieber neuen Wein?” 113 n. 2.

<sup>155</sup> Cf. R. L. Lindsey, A Hebrew Translation of the Gospel of Mark (Jerusalem: Dugith, no date [1973]), 93.

<sup>156</sup> Cf. K. Beyer, Semitische Syntax im Neuen Testament 1.1, 2nd ed., SUNT 1 (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1968), 99–100.

<sup>157</sup> Manuscripts of the third (P4) and fourth (B, ⋈) centuries read χρηστός. Most later manuscripts read χρηστότερος.

<sup>158</sup> Cf. J. Jeremias, Die Gleichnisse Jesu, 103. The occurrence of this phenomenon only in logia of Jesus from the special Lukan tradition (Luke 5:29; 9:48; 10:42) argues against a loose Lukan usage: the redactional introduction at Luke 9:46 has μείζων, but the domonical logion at 9:48 has μέγας.

<sup>159</sup> Cf. Flusser, “Mögen Sie etwa lieber neuen Wein?”, 109 n. 4.

<sup>160</sup> Cf. J. Dupont, “Vin vieux, vin nouveau,” CBQ 25 (1963): 286–304.

5:36–39 in his own special tradition.<sup>161</sup> Matt 9:17b offers a summary (καὶ ἀμφοτέροι συντηροῦνται) of the kind attested occasionally in his redactional work (Matt 5:18 diff. Luke 16:17, etc.): the “new wine and new skins” are preserved. This probably refers to the new reality of the rule of God and to the new commandments of Jesus (Matt 5).<sup>162</sup> The fact that nothing in the metaphor of the old garment corresponds to the words about appropriate conduct with regard to the wine and the skins (Matt 9:17c/Mark 22c/Luke 5:38) may point to a parenetic expansion, but F. Hahn correctly observes that “a surplus element . . . at the end of a small collection of logia” is “conceivable.”<sup>163</sup>

3.2. An Original Double Metaphor?

On the basis of our linguistic and redactional observations, the original form of the metaphors may have looked like this:

No one púts a nów páтч onto an óld gárment;
 otherwise, the páтч téars away from the gárment and the resúlt is a ríp.
 They do not pút nów wíne
 into óld skíns;
 otherwise, the (nów) wíne búrst the skíns and the wíne is spílt
 and the skíns destróyed;
 rather, they pút nów wíne
 into nów skíns.
 But<sup>164</sup> no one who drínks óld wíne wánts nów,
 for he sáys:
 “The óld is míld!”

It is possible to infer a qinah meter with three and two beats in these metaphors of the old garment and the new wine—a meter that fits the drama of the warnings they express—but the metrical structure of

<sup>161</sup> This was already suggested by B. Weiß, Die Quellen der synoptischen Überlieferung (Leipzig: Hinrichs, 1908), 232–234; B. S. Easton, The Gospel According to St. Luke (New York: Scribener’s, 1926), 72–73.

<sup>162</sup> Cf. C. L. Blomberg, Matthew, NAC 22 (Nashville: Broadman, 1992), 159; D. A. Hagner, Matthew 1–13, WBC 33A (Dallas: Word Books, 1993), 224.

<sup>163</sup> EvTh 31 (1971): 363.

<sup>164</sup> For the adversative καί, cf. W. Radl, Das Evangelium nach Lukas (Freiburg: Herder, 2003), 334.

the metaphor of the old wine is unclear, possibly because of original independence and/or redactional work by Luke.<sup>165</sup>

Some scholars have proposed that originally, the metaphors of the old garment and the new wine did not belong together, since the former concerns the preservation of what is old and the latter concerns the protection of what is new. However, the motifs of an old garment and wine skins are already linked in Job 13:28 (cf. 3.3). Repairing a garment and filling wine skins were typically female and male activities.<sup>166</sup> Jesus occasionally employed double metaphors and double parables, which were among his favorite modes of speaking,<sup>167</sup> in order to express the same idea in images that were appropriate respectively to the world of men and to the world of women; we find examples in various traditions (Matt 13:31–33/Luke 13:18–21; Matt 24:40–41; Luke 15:4–10). All of this, together with the common reference to Isaiah 61 (cf. 2.2), the broadly similar construction, and the consistent use of the qinah meter, indicates that the parables originally belonged together. On the other hand, it is clear that Luke 5:39, which does not fit this form, was added only in the pre-Lukan tradition.

3.3. Secular Parables or Eschatological Metaphors?

R. Bultmann regarded the metaphors of the garment and the wine as “originally completely secular meshalim.”<sup>168</sup> The Jesus Seminar too sees them as “undoubtedly secular proverbs, which may have been put on the lips of Jesus.”<sup>169</sup> Most scholars, however, regard the double metaphor as authentic.<sup>170</sup> The strong contrast between old and new indicates an eschatological significance. J. Jeremias, who otherwise follows the

<sup>165</sup> The difficulty of translating it into Hebrew is demonstrated by F. Delitzsch, מַפְרָי הַבְּרִית הַחֲדָשָׁה (London: Lowe and Brydone, 1954), 11.

<sup>166</sup> Cf. W. Eckey, Das Lukas-Evangelium I (Neukirchen-Vluyn: Neukirchener Verlag, 2004), 264.

<sup>167</sup> Jeremias, Die Gleichnisse Jesu, 89–91, and Steinhauser, Doppelbildworte in den synoptischen Evangelien, 406–408, both consider eleven examples as original (although they disagree about the identification of these examples). I believe that only the combinations in the typically Matthean mode of composition are secondary (Matt 5:13–15; 10:24–25). This means that we have twenty examples in four streams of tradition (the traditio triplex and duplex, and the special materials in Matthew and in Luke).

<sup>168</sup> Die Geschichte der synoptischen Tradition, 102.

<sup>169</sup> R. W. Funk and R. W. Hoover, The Five Gospels: The Search for the Authentic Words of Jesus (New York: Macmillan, 1993), 49.

<sup>170</sup> For the various positions, cf. Backhaus, Die “Jüngerkreise” des Täufers Johannes, 149 n. 217.

anti-allegorical approach of A. Jülicher, was happy to be inconsistent here, pointing out that these images could take on a metaphorical significance in Judaism.<sup>171</sup> J. D. M. Derrett has added further comparative material,<sup>172</sup> though this must be evaluated critically. An old garment can symbolize the past (Hos 5:12; Isa 50:9; 51:6, 8; Sir 14:17, etc.), and especially the past of the cosmos (Ps 101:27 LXX; cf. Heb 1:10–12). The fragility of the human person is compared to an old bag and a moth-eaten garment (ὁ παλαιούται ἴσα ἀσκῶ ἢ ὡσπερ ἱμάτιον σητόβρωτον, Job 13:28 LXX). New or bright clothing could symbolize an existence renewed by God (2 En. 22.8; Joseph and Asenath 14.12–15), and wine could be the symbol of the age of salvation (Gen 49:11–12; Amos 9:13–14; Isa 65:21, etc.).<sup>173</sup> The eschatological festal calendar of the Qumran community included a feast of the new wine (11QMiqd XIX, 14–15; XX, 4–10). Old wine, which was regarded as particularly good in the Old Testament (Isa 25:6), Hellenistic-Roman (Plautus, Casina 5–6; Lucian, De merc. cond. 26), and Jewish milieus (Sir 9:10; b.Ber. 51a), is sometimes employed in the rabbinic literature as a symbol of the doctrine of Torah (Sof. 15:6; m. Abot 4:27; S. Ekev 48 [Finkelstein 111]). The impetuous vigor of the new, fermenting wine was proverbial among both Jews (Job 32:19; cf. b. Abod. Zar. 30a) and Romans (Seneca, Ep. 83.16).

Like other logia (Matt 5:15; 15:14), the metaphors of the old garment and the new wine speak of an irrational conduct, whereas the metaphor of the old wine speaks of understandable behavior. The principal reason why these insights born of general human experience were understood to be more than simple rules of common sense was that it was Jesus who spoke in this way. His contemporaries realized that his intention was to make religious affirmations, and those among his hearers who knew the scriptures could reflect on the metaphors and on their relation to the rest of Jesus' preaching. The modern expositor is in the same situation. The metaphor of the old garment pronounces a judgment on this world, viz. that it cannot be saved by a partial renewal alone. We find the same radicality here as in the metaphor of the tree that no one can "make good" (Matt 12:33). In the metaphorical language of the synoptic gospels, the new garment is a sign of the divinely renewed existence that comes about when people repent. The presence of this metaphor in both the special Matthean and the special Lukan material (Matt 22:11–13; Luke 15:22) points us back to one way in which Jesus spoke.

<sup>171</sup> Die Gleichnisse Jesu, 117–118.

<sup>172</sup> "Modes of Renewal (Mk. 2:21–22)," EQ 72 (2000): 3–12.

<sup>173</sup> This is shown in a little-noticed work by P. Lebeau, Le vin nouveau du royaume, ML.B 5 (Paris: Desclée, 1966), 33–65.

The metaphor of the new wine shows that the age of salvation which is now breaking in can pose a threat to the old order. This recalls the logion about those who “take the kingdom of God by storm” (Matt 11:12–13/Luke 16:16), which is connected to John the Baptist. The new age of salvation and fidelity to the old interpretation of Torah come into a particularly acute conflict when Jesus eats together with “tax collectors and sinners.” It is not by chance that the pericope about fasting follows the meal in a tax collector’s house in the (pre-)Markan collection (Matt 9:9–13/Mark 2:13–17/Luke 5:27–32). Jesus’ logion affirms that although the new may seem destructive,<sup>174</sup> it is nevertheless a gift of the age of salvation. The image of the old wine from Luke’s special material (Luke 5:39) is sometimes understood as an appeal to show understanding and tolerate what is old;<sup>175</sup> but C. L. Blomberg’s view comes closer to both Jesus and Luke: “It is better to interpret this verse not as a toning down of the force of the parable but as an ironic aside reflecting on the way many of the Jewish leaders actually did react to Jesus.”<sup>176</sup> The one who prefers to stay with the old wine of the customary exegesis of Torah is like the older brother in the parable, who does not go into the house for the meal that celebrates the return of the prodigal son (Luke 15:25–32). This supports the position of those scholars who see the metaphors of garment and wine as a summons to repentance.<sup>177</sup>

<sup>174</sup> Cf. B. H. Branscomb, The Gospel of Mark, MNTC (London: Hodder and Stoughton, 1937), 55.

<sup>175</sup> Thus R. S. Good, “Jesus, Protagonist of the Old, in Lk 5:33–39,” NovT 25 (1983): 19–36; A. H. Mead, “Old and New Wine: St Luke 5:39,” ET 99 (1988): 234–235; J. B. Green, The Gospel of Luke, NICNT (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1997), 249–250.

<sup>176</sup> Interpreting the Parables of Jesus, 125. J. Flebbe, “Alter und neuer Wein bei Lukas ... Lk 5,39,” ZNW 96 (2005): 171–187, goes to great pains to justify the following translation: “Wer gerade neuen Wein trinkt, will keinen neuen” (“One who is drinking new wine at this precise moment does not want any [other] new wine”), but this does not lead to any fundamental alteration in our understanding of the passage.

<sup>177</sup> A. Kee, “The Old Coat and the New Wine: A Parable of Repentance,” NovT 12 (1970): 13–21; D. L. Tiede, “Luke 5:29–35,” Interp 40 (1986): 58–63; L. T. Johnson, The Gospel of Luke, Sacra Pagina 3 (Collegeville: Liturgical, 1991), 99–100. Any specific eschatological significance of the logia is denied by M. Leutzsch, “Was passt und was nicht (Vom alten Mantel und vom neuen Wein) Mk 2,21–22 (Mt 9,16–17 / Lk 5,36–39 / EvThom 47,3–5),” in Kompendium der Gleichnisse Jesu, ed Zimmermann, 273–277.

3.4. The Metaphors and the Baptist Movement

The metaphors of garment and wine can scarcely be related exclusively to Jesus' discussion with the Baptist movement,<sup>178</sup> but they assuredly possessed a particular impressiveness for its members because of the contrast between the Baptist, who wore a garment of camel's hair (Matt 3:4/Mark 1:6) and rejected luxurious clothes (Luke 3:11), and Jesus, who wore an outer garment "woven from top to bottom" (John 19:23) and employed new garments as an image of the age of salvation. Even more striking, in view of the Baptist's abstinence from wine (Luke 1:15)—which he had in common with the Therapeutae (Philo, Contempl. 73–74) and perhaps with Qumran<sup>179</sup>—is Jesus' celebratory drinking of wine, which he justified by appeal to the irruption of the kingdom of God. Hosea 2 was probably one of the texts which guided John in his ministry (cf. 2.4), and this text speaks of the time of the wilderness and of repentance as a time without wine (Hos 2:7–11.14); this is why John led a life of abstinence, like the Rechabites (Jer 35:6–7). Hos 2:17–24 proclaims that in the age of salvation, wine will once again flow for Israel (cf. 2.3). Isaiah 61–62, an important text for the discussion between Jesus and John and his disciples, likewise lies behind the images of garment and wine. The messianic messenger of joy brings to "those who mourn in Zion... the oil of gladness instead of a mourning garment" (Isa 61:3), and he is clothed by God "with the garments of salvation... with the robe of righteousness, like a bridegroom" (Isa 61:10). When "the bride Zion" is betrothed to her "(re-)builder" (Isa 62:5), "Those who garner the wine shall drink it in the courts of my sanctuary" (Isa 62:8–9). Some Baptist circles sought a Christological compromise: on the model of Qumran, they declared Jesus to be the Davidic Messiah and John to be the priestly Messiah who was his superior.<sup>180</sup> When Jesus interpreted Isaiah 61 as referring to himself, he was claiming to be the fulfillment of the expectation of a priestly Messiah. Scholars have for a long time paid too little attention to the role of this factor in the process of the tradition of the gospels.<sup>181</sup>

<sup>178</sup> Thus C. H. Dodd, The Parables of the Kingdom (London: Nisbet, 1935), 88; W. F. Albright and C. S. Mann, Matthew, AB 26 (New York: Doubleday, 1971), 108–109.

<sup>179</sup> The verdict of J. Jeremias still holds good: "The question whether the Essenes drank wine in their daily ritual at meals must remain open" (Die Abendmahls Worte Jesu, 4th ed. [Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1967], 46). The abstinence of the Therapeutae was justified with reference to the regulations for the priestly service in the inner sanctuary (Lev 10:9; Ezek 44:21; Philo, Contempl. 74), and this would have been an appropriate motivation in Qumran too. Augustine claims that the Essenes refrained from drinking wine (Adv. Jov. 2.14). It is unclear whether תירור at the fellowship meal means unfermented grape juice or wine (1QS VI, 4–6); but it is clear that wine was to be drunk at the messianic meal (1QSa II, 17–21), since it is "mixed" (García Martínez and E. J. Tigchelaar, The Dead Sea Scrolls I, 102–103) 11QMiqd XIX, 15–15 and XXI, 4–10 likewise refer to the future.

4. Tradition and Collection

4.1. Jesus, Baptist Circles, and Christian Levites

One consequence of the form-critical approach is that some scholars read whole epochs of earliest Christianity out of the pericope about fasting. According to M. Waibel, this pericope “can show how in a relatively brief space of time the Jesus tradition underwent large-scale changes.”<sup>182</sup> U. Mell discovers a history of earliest Christian theology from a logion of Jesus that should be interpreted existentially (Mark 2:19a $\alpha$ ) to the theology of Antioch which was freed from the law (Mark 2:14–22b).<sup>183</sup> The link between the image of Jesus which an author presupposes and his proposed historical reconstruction is particularly clear in M. Ebner.<sup>184</sup> As a building laborer, Jesus did not belong to any scribal-apocalyptic tradition, but spoke of the generosity of God in simple insights born of experience. Mark 2:18–22 is deconstructed until it fits this picture: (1) the “commonplaces” of the marriage logion (Mark 2:19a $\alpha$ ) and two prudential rules which exhort the hearers to make a well-considered decision to adopt the radical existence of a wanderer (Mark 2:21–22) go back to Jesus.<sup>185</sup>

<sup>180</sup> Cf. P. Böhle, Jesus und der Täufer: Schlüssel zur Theologie und Ethik des Lukas, SNTSMS 99 (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1997).

<sup>181</sup> Cf. G. Friedrich, “Beobachtungen zur messianischen Hohepriestererwartung in den Synoptikern,” ZThK 53 (1961): 265–311; T. Pola, “Die Gethsemane-Perikope Markus 14,32–42 im Lichte des Mischnatraktates Joma (mYom I 4.6f),” ThBeitr 25 (1994): 31–44; A. M. Schwemer, “Jesus Christus als Prophet, König und Priester,” in Der messianische Anspruch Jesu und die Anfänge der Christologie, ed. M. Hengel and A. M. Schwemer, WUNT 1.138 (Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2001), 165–230; and now especially C. H. T. Fletcher-Louis, “Jesus as the High Priestly Messiah,” JSHJ 4 (2006): 155–175; 5 (2007): 57–79.

<sup>182</sup> “Die Auseinandersetzung mit der Fasten- und Sabbatpraxis Jesu in den urchristlichen Gemeinden,” in Zur Geschichte des Urchristentums, ed. G. Dautzenberg et al., QD 87 (Freiburg: Herder, 1979), 63–96.

<sup>183</sup> “‘Neuer Wein (gehört) in neue Schläuche’ (Mk 2,22c): Zur Überlieferung und Theologie von Mk 2,18–22,” ThZ 52 (1996): 1–31.

<sup>184</sup> Jesus—ein Weisheitslehrer? Synoptische Weisheitslogien im Traditionsprozeß, HBS 15 (Freiburg: Herder, 1998), 183–216.

<sup>185</sup> In the double metaphor, the “pictorial concept of the preparation for a journey”

(2) Radical wanderers after Easter defended their way of life against disciples of John by means of an apophthegm (Mark 2:18b, 19a $\alpha$ , 21–22). (3) Apparently, however, Jesus' words did not carry much conviction, for the fasting praxis of John's followers immediately became Christian praxis, with a Christological extenuation (Mark 2:18b–22). (4) The Q community sought a reconciliation with the disciples of John (Luke 7:31–34/Matt 11:16–19), but (5) the pre-Markan tradition took its distance from them, in order to accommodate the needs of "God-seekers" (Mark 2:14–22). However, before one assumes reasons for the invention of gospel material, or takes refuge in excessively complicated reconstructions, one ought to attempt an explanation with as few stages as possible intervening between Jesus and the gospels.

In the period before the "Galilean crisis," Jesus instructed his disciples not to practice any private fasts. This was a messianic sign on his part, intended to point to the irruption of the age of salvation. When the wider group of followers inquired about the correct fasting praxis, Jesus insisted that this must be marked by the same festal joy (Matt 6:16–18).<sup>186</sup> The non-fasting of the inner group of disciples corresponded to the festal table fellowship with "tax collectors and sinners" in which Jesus anticipated the messianic banquet. During the "Galilean crisis," he replied to the question put by John's disciples with a puzzling logion that contrasted the joy at the presence of the messianic bridegroom with the future mourning over his violent death. The Old Testament applied the metaphor of the bridegroom primarily to God; but Jesus applied characteristics and behavior of God to his own self in other metaphors and parables too.<sup>187</sup> The ground had already been laid in Essene and Baptist circles for the transfer of the metaphor of bridegroom to the priestly Messiah. Jesus may have seen his ministry before his execution as the period of betrothal,<sup>188</sup> assuming that the kingdom of God would be fully accomplished only after his death. The (M. Ebner refers here to Jos 9:1–15) comes "close to the actual situation" (Jesus, 214). But one may question whether a caravan laden with wineskins (Jos 9:4) was an image likely to provide motivation for radical wanderers who were not even allowed to take a bag with them (Mark 6:8 parr.).

---

<sup>186</sup> On the question of authenticity, cf. B. Reicke, "Die Fastenfrage nach Luk. 5,33–39," ThZ 30 (1974): 321–328; W. D. Davies and D. C. Allison, The Gospel according to Saint Matthew I, ICC (Edinburgh: T&T Clark, 1988), 617–618.

<sup>187</sup> Cf. H. Riesenfeld, "The Parables in the Synoptic and in the Johannine Traditions," in The Gospel Tradition (Oxford: Basil Blackwell, 1970), 139–170; P. B. Payne, "Jesus' Implicit Claim to Deity in His Parables," TrinJ 2 (1981): 3–23.

<sup>188</sup> Thus W. Grundmann, Das Evangelium nach Markus, 7th ed., ThHK 2 (Berlin: EVA, 1977), 87; K. Berger, Wer war Jesus wirklich? (Stuttgart: Quell, 1995), 33.

prediction that the disciples would fast in mourning is in keeping with his refraining from drinking wine at the farewell Passover meal (Matt 26:29/Mark 14:25/Luke 22:18).

On another occasion, Jesus used the double metaphor of the old garment and the new wine to make clear the necessity of an eschatological new creation; at the same time, he defended the impetuous vigor of the kingdom of God. The debate about the question of fasting was linked at an early date to the double metaphor. This was suggested by the metaphor of marriage which was found in both traditions and has its primary background in Isaiah 61–62. Rev 19:7–8 likewise links the motifs of wedding (γάμος), festal meal (δεῖπνον), and new garment (βύσσινον λαμπρὸν καθαρὸν). It seems possible that these texts were joined together before the composition of the synoptic gospels, in the course of the dialogue with the Baptist movement. G.J. Brooke argues that a pre-Markan collection in Mark 2:1–3:6 particularly reflects the interests of Levites.<sup>189</sup> We know of at least two leading members of the earliest community in Jerusalem who were Levites, viz. Barnabas and John Mark (Acts 4:36–37; 12:12; Col 4:10). In Acts, Mark is portrayed as a bearer of traditions about Jesus (Acts 13:5 [ὑπηρέτης]; cf. Luke 4:16),<sup>190</sup> and the earliest tradition ascribes to him the Gospel of the same name (Papias apud Eusebius, Hist. Eccl. 3.39.15).<sup>191</sup> The independent metaphor of the old wine (Luke 5:39) formulates Jesus' experience of persons who refused to repent. It was probably united to the double metaphor already in the pre-Lukan tradition, which despite all its criticism was nevertheless still attempting to win over the Pharisees by means of a dialogue (Luke 7:36–50; 11:37–52; 14:1–14; 15:25–32).

4.2. Several Pre-synoptic Sources

The philological and historical investigation suggests that the Gospel of Mark was not the only source from which Matthew and Luke knew the pericope about fasting. The situation in the synoptics can be explained on the hypothesis that Matthew and Luke drew both on a pre-Markan tradition and on a second common tradition. Luke also found the material in his Hebraizing special tradition.

<sup>189</sup> "The Temple Scroll and the New Testament," in Temple Scroll Studies, JSPSup 7 (Sheffield: Sheffield Academic Press, 1989), 181–200.

<sup>190</sup> Cf. Riesner, Jesus als Lehrer, 63.

<sup>191</sup> Cf. M. Hengel, The Four Gospels and the One Gospel of Jesus Christ (London: SCM, 2000), 34–115.

Taken on its own, this pericope cannot decide whether the tradition similar to Mark was an Ur-Mark, nor whether the tradition common to Matthew and Luke was an Ur-Matthew or the collection of logia in Q. At any rate, the analysis of the pericope tends to point to a model of several sources (cf. 1.2–3).<sup>192</sup> Even one who does not wish to assume the existence of pre-synoptic sources (other than Q) ought at least not to exclude on principle the influence of variants in the oral tradition known to the synoptic evangelists, when a purely redactional explanation is problematical.

4.3. The Gospel of Thomas and Synoptic Tradition

Two logia in this gnostic text offer parallels to the metaphors of the garment and the wine, and to the question about fasting. Some scholars see here pre-synoptic tradition, or a tradition independent of the synoptics.<sup>193</sup> This view was popularized above all by the Jesus Seminar.<sup>194</sup> Other interpreters argue that the apocryphal text presupposes the final redaction of the synoptic gospels.<sup>195</sup> Logion 104 reads:<sup>196</sup>

<sup>192</sup> I recall here with gratitude my work with the late Marie-Émile Boismard OP and Philippe Rolland at the symposium “De interrelatione evangeliorum” in Jerusalem in 1984. Cf. The Interrelations of the Gospel, ed. D. L. Dungan, BETL 95 (Leuven: Leuven University Press, 1990). On the influence of oral tradition in the gospels see now A. D. Baum, Der mündliche Faktor und seine Bedeutung für die synoptische Frage, TANZ 49 (Tübingen: Francke, 2008).

<sup>193</sup> W. Nagel, “Neuer Wein in alten Schläuchen (Mt 9,17),” VigChr 14 (1960): 1–8; F. Bovon, Das Evangelium nach Lukas I, EKK 3.1 (Zürich: Benziger, 1989), 256; G. Riley, “Influence of Thomas Christianity on Luke 12:14 and 5:39,” HTR 88 (1995): 229–235.

<sup>194</sup> Funk and Hoover, The Five Gospels, 47–49.

<sup>195</sup> Cf. R. McL. Wilson, Studies in the Gospel of Thomas (London: Mowbray, 1960), 77–79; M. Fieger, Das Thomasevangelium, NTA NF 22 (Münster: Aschendorff, 1991), 149–153, 260–262.

<sup>196</sup> H. Koester and T. O. Lambdin, “The Gospel of Thomas (II,2),” in The Nag Hammadi Library, ed. J. M. Robinson (Leiden: Brill, 1977), 129.

They said [to Jesus], "Come, let us pray today and let us fast." Jesus said, "What is the sin that I have committed, or wherein have I been defeated? But when the bridegroom leaves the bridal chamber, then let them fast and pray."

The Gospel of Thomas indicts fasting as lying, false conduct (Gos. Thom. 6 and 14), and this is why the true gnostic will no longer leave the bridal chamber—for he has overcome the destructive division. Logion 47 presents the images of Luke 5:36–39 in reverse order and with a partly distorted meaning.<sup>197</sup> They became "the arbitrary illustration of the basic thesis that the unity of the gnostic does not tolerate any experience of being torn between spirit and world."<sup>198</sup> The synoptic tradition endeavors to understand and clarify, but the Gospel of Thomas engages in a radical reinterpretation. This means that there is little hope of finding a more original tradition here.

5. Methodological and Historical Consequences

Some scholars have rejected the pericope about fasting as completely inauthentic (cf. 2.2), and most modern exegetes see a post-Easter composition at least in the metaphor of the bridegroom who is snatched away.<sup>199</sup> The present investigation comes to a different conclusion, viz. that the tradition has preserved the memory of one specific situation in the life of Jesus and has also preserved his words in their basic substance.<sup>200</sup> The analysis was guided by the following historical and methodological insights, which would be helpful in the study of other gospel traditions as well:

1. In terms of literary criticism, one should assume the existence of parallel traditions to a greater extent than is allowed by a rigid two-sources hypothesis (1.1; 2.1; 3.1). The question about fasting was handed on in at least three streams of tradition (4.2), and this strengthens the criterion of multiple attestation.

<sup>197</sup> Koester and Lambdin, "The Gospel of Thomas (II, 2)," 123.

<sup>198</sup> Klauck, Allegorie und Allegorese, 174.

<sup>199</sup> The most important representatives are mentioned by Holmén, Jesus and Jewish Covenant Thinking, 144 n. 322.

<sup>200</sup> This position has been taken in recent years by R. H. Gundry, Mark (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1983), 131–139; G. R. Beasley-Murray, Jesus and the Kingdom of God, 138–143; Bock, Luke 1–9:50, 502–504; France, The Gospel of Mark, 136–140; K. Berger, Jesus (München: Pattloch, 2004), 174–185.

2. In evaluating the variant traditions, it often helps to look back for possible semitic origins. Here one should draw on Hebrew in addition to Aramaic (3.1).
3. The Johannine tradition is certainly not always dependent on the synoptic tradition. Sometimes, it offers an independent parallel tradition which can help to clear up synoptic problems (2.7).
4. Paul knew more traditions about Jesus than most exegetes are willing to accept. His attestation of a tradition is an important indication with regard to age and authenticity (2.5).
5. On the other hand, many scholars considerably exaggerate the historical value of the Jesus tradition in the gnostic Gospel of Thomas. It is usually possible to demonstrate a dependence on the synoptics (4.3).
6. In terms of the history of tradition, the Old Testament is the most important background for understanding the words of Jesus. In the biblical scholarship of his time, individual catchwords and images could evoke larger textual units (2.4; 2.6; 4.3).
7. In terms of the history of religion, Palestinian Judaism is the context for the understanding of Jesus. Because of their clear chronological position, the Qumran texts have a particular significance here (2.3; 2.7).
8. Jesus came from a family with a religiosity related to that of a pre-Essene Hassidism and to Baptist circles. Elements in the New Testament that have been regarded as signs of gnostic influence can usually be explained by reference to apocalyptic-mystical Judaism or Jewish Christianity (2.5).
9. Jesus summarized his preaching in brief teaching summaries and in longer parables. Through their poetical and mnemotechnical form, he himself ensured that they would be easily remembered, and that his hearers would begin to transmit them with care (2.2; 3.2).
10. The parables of Jesus are not to be judged according to alien aesthetic or theological criteria, but as masterly examples within a narrative tradition with its roots in the Old Testament and early Judaism. We may not assert that Jesus could not have consciously employed allegorical elements in the form of conventionalized or newly created metaphors (2.2).
11. The messianic secret is not a Markan construction, but agrees with the special way in which Jesus put forward his claims (2.6–7). Since the tradition of the earliest church understandably tended to clarify, the concealed manner of speaking about the Messiah is an indication of authenticity.

12. The so-called "Galilean crisis" is a decisive datum for the historical understanding of Jesus' ministry (2.6). The categorization of logia as belonging to the periods before or after this crisis, and to the public proclamation of Jesus or to the private instruction of the disciples, makes many theories about inauthenticity superfluous (4.1).
13. Many hypotheses about the earliest Christian developments in the first century can be evaluated critically by studying the impact made by New Testament texts in the early Patristic period (2.8).
14. When it is possible to understand traditions coherently on the basis of what is otherwise known about the history and the preaching of Jesus (4.1), this explanation is to be preferred to inferences (be they never so genial) from a post-Easter situation.

RIDDLES, WIT, AND WISDOM

TOM THATCHER

Some readers may be surprised to find an entry on “riddles” in a volume dedicated to so serious a topic as the Historical Jesus. In modern Western societies, riddles are generally relegated to magazines, children’s books, jokes, and other forms of entertainment. “What’s black and white and re[a]d all over?” (a newspaper); “What room can’t be entered?” (a mushroom); “What has four wheels and flies?” (a garbage truck)—these and similar verbal tricks are typical of current Western uses of the genre. Thomas Burns calls such puzzles “leisure-time” riddles, word games that people exchange to amuse themselves. Although riddles perform a wide variety of social functions cross-culturally, Westerners tend to think that leisure-time riddles are the norm. This assumption is not limited to popular conceptions, as leisure-time riddles have been “the focus of the great majority of the [academic] literature on the riddle and riddling.”<sup>1</sup>

Perhaps for this reason, Jesus scholars have generally not explored the riddle as a speech genre in great detail—at least when compared to other oral-traditional forms—and have sometimes been hesitant to endorse the historicity of gospel texts that seem to include them. For example, at Mark 12:35–37, Jesus amuses a crowd by quoting Ps 110:1 and then asking how the Christ can be both “David’s son” and “David’s Lord” at the same time. Robert Funk, founder of the Jesus Seminar and apparently reflecting the collective opinion of that group, refers to this passage as a “piece of sophistry” and asks, “What would be the point of demonstrating that the Messiah was not the son of David?”<sup>2</sup> “Is this way of handling issues consonant with his [Jesus’ teaching] style?”—a rhetorical question which obviously assumes that Jesus did not talk this way.<sup>3</sup> Such comments reflect the fact that many Jesus scholars

---

<sup>1</sup> Thomas A. Burns, “Riddling: Occasion to Act,” Journal of American Folklore 89 (1976): 144–145.

<sup>2</sup> Robert W. Funk with Mahlon H. Smith, The Gospel of Mark Red Letter Edition (Sonoma, CA: Polebridge, 1991), 188.

<sup>3</sup> Robert W. Funk, Roy W. Hoover, and the Jesus Seminar, The Five Gospels: The Search for the Authentic Words of Jesus (New York, NY: Polebridge, 1993), 237–238.

have failed to recognize the riddle as a cross-cultural speech form with sophisticated social and rhetorical functions.

This essay will counter this trend by locating riddles in a variety of sources for Jesus and, ultimately, in the ministry of the historical Jesus himself. It will first define the “riddle” as a speech genre and major categories of riddles in the gospels, then note the implications of the evidence for our understanding of both the sources and the historical Jesus.

1. Anatomy of a Riddle

1.1. Definition

A “riddle” is an interrogative statement that intentionally hides its referent (the thing that it is talking about) and asks the audience to name it. While many Western riddles take the form of questions, all riddles, despite their grammatical form, are interrogative in the sense that they seek an answer.<sup>4</sup> Thus, while the English riddle, “There is something with a heart in its head,” does not end with a question mark (?), it clearly requests a response (answer: “a peach”). But the audience’s ability to provide this answer is complicated by the fact that the language of the question is ambiguous, pointing away from the correct solution. Folklorists W. J. Pepicello and Thomas A. Green define “ambiguity” as “the situation which obtains in language when two or more underlying semantic structures may be represented by a single surface representation.”<sup>5</sup> Similarly, Jack and Phyllis Glazier describe a statement as “ambiguous” when “it [potentially] refers to two or more frames of reference depending on one’s interpretation of the term[s].”<sup>6</sup> Essentially, an “ambiguous” statement is one that could reasonably refer to more than one thing, and riddles are ambiguous statements that ask the audience to identify which of these possible options the riddler has in mind. Thus, the question, “What has four wheels and flies?”, is ambiguous in the sense that it could reasonably

---

<sup>4</sup> W. J. Pepicello and Thomas A. Green, “The Folk Riddle: A Redefinition of Terms,” Folklore 38 (1979): 17; Elli Königäs Maranda, “Theory and Practice of Riddle Analysis,” Journal of American Folklore 89 (1971): 54.

<sup>5</sup> Pepicello and Green, “The Folk Riddle,” 13.

<sup>6</sup> Jack Glazier and Phyllis Gorfain Glazier, “Ambiguity and Exchange: The Double Dimension of Mbeere Riddles,” Journal of American Folklore 89 (1976): 211.

refer to a very wide variety of items; the reader is challenged to identify the “correct” referent, “a garbage truck.”

Of course, ambiguity alone cannot categorize a statement as a “riddle.” Many questions admit more than one answer, and many statements are unclear simply because the speaker has done a poor job of communicating what she has in mind. It is therefore important to stress that riddles are intentionally ambiguous questions. Whereas language normally seeks a direct route to its referent in order to avoid confusion, riddlers seek to generate confusion by pointing their audience down the wrong track. Riddles use language that is ambiguous and confusing in an artful way. While all riddles are intentionally ambiguous questions, the genre eludes definition on the basis of form. The formal features of riddles can vary widely from culture to culture and even within a single culture, a fact that riddlers exploit to further confuse their audiences. Riddles evidence only one consistent formal feature: all riddles in every culture are composed of two structural components, the ambiguous question and the clarifying answer. The ambiguous question could potentially refer to more than one item and generally directs the audience’s attention to the wrong one—the question, “What has four wheels and flies?”, seems to point to “an airplane” while also accurately describing the correct referent, “a garbage truck” (playing on the fact that the English word “flies” can function as a verb or a noun). Building on this observation, folklorists such as Roger D. Abrahams and Elli Königs Maranda have fruitfully discussed the riddle as a subversive interactive metaphor. As subversive metaphors, riddles blur the lines between conventional ideological categories by bringing together concepts and/or things that are normally kept distinct. The audience is challenged to provide a solution that will anchor the question in established ways of thinking, or else to develop a new way of thinking if no solution seems possible. To explore this aspect of riddling further, it will be helpful to briefly describe the way that metaphorical language interacts with a group’s order of values.

As a figure of speech, the metaphor directly compares two things for sake of rhetorical effect. Thus, the common biblical metaphor, “God is my rock,” compares God (the subject under consideration) to another object (a rock) in order to make a particular point (see Pss 18:2, 31, 46; 19:14; et al.). But it is important to note that metaphors do not play on the relationship between words and their respective referents. When the Psalmist says, “God is my rock,” he does not thereby suggest that the word “rock” should henceforth be used as a synonym for the word “God.” Rather, the metaphor plays on the distinct set of ideas that the word “rock” evokes in the mind of the audience, what I. A. Richards calls the “psychological context” of the term.<sup>7</sup> Specifically, a metaphor equates two (or more) things that normally fall into different categories in order to transfer the psychological context of one item to another item. Richards therefore defines the “metaphor” as “a borrowing between and intercourse of thoughts,” a figure of speech that mixes elements from different sets of ideas.<sup>8</sup> Returning to the example above, the metaphor “God is my rock” transfers qualities that one might normally associate with a “rock” to “God,” thereby creating a third conceptual entity that shares elements from the psychological contexts of two terms that normally fall into very different mental compartments.

Building on this approach, the riddle may be defined as a subversive interactive metaphor. Riddles are metaphors in the sense that they compare things from different mental categories: the first mental category is represented by the question and the second category by the answer.<sup>9</sup> Thus, the simple riddle, “What has a million ears but can’t hear? A cornfield,” compares something from the category “things that can hear” with something from the category “vegetables” by playing on a dual meaning of the English word “ears.” Riddles are interactive metaphors because the riddler provides one term in the comparison while the audience provides the second. In the cornfield riddle, the riddler refers, albeit indirectly, to something from the category “things that can hear,” while the riddlee must connect that item to something from the category “vegetables.” But riddles are subversive interactive metaphors because they blur the lines between conceptual categories by using ambiguous language to highlight common features of things that are viewed as categorically different. Animals that hear and cornfields seem to be very different things, yet both have multiple “ears”—perhaps the differences between them are more arbitrary than we tend to think? Or perhaps we use the word “ears” too loosely, allowing the term to cross conceptual borders that should be more closely guarded? The riddle’s ambiguous question highlights a common trait (“ears”) which points the audience toward something in the wrong conceptual category (i.e.,

---

<sup>7</sup> I. A. Richards and C. K. Ogden, The Meaning of Meaning, 8th ed. (New York, NY: Harcourt Brace, 1956), 50–57.

<sup>8</sup> I. A. Richards, The Philosophy of Rhetoric (New York, NY: Oxford University Press, 1964), 94.

<sup>9</sup> Köngäs Maranda, “Theory and Practice of Riddle Analysis,” 54.

toward the category “things that can hear” rather than the category “vegetables”), and in the process it temporarily brings “the whole idea of classification under question.”<sup>10</sup>

Riddlers can manipulate the inherently subversive dimension of riddles to suit their rhetorical purposes, depending on the extent to which they wish to actually challenge the group’s classification system. In many cases, riddles “play with boundaries, but ultimately to affirm them.”<sup>11</sup> Animals and cornfields are the same in that both have “ears,” but the observation that animals use their “ears” to hear while corn plants use their “ears” for reproduction ultimately underscores the otherwise vast differences between these two types of things. Some riddles, however, challenge conventional thinking to a much more significant degree, mediating “between [conceptual] sets that are not only different, but in many aspects opposed, and in this way it [the riddle] can form the basis for a differing system of classification, or allow contrasting classifications and conceptual frameworks to co-exist at the same time.”<sup>12</sup> The riddler may specifically wish to subvert group values by bringing things from different ideological sets together in a way that cannot easily be resolved, thus forcing a significant redefinition of terms or a realignment of mental categories.<sup>13</sup>

1.2. Riddles and Social Identity

Because riddles play with a group’s foundational beliefs, many traditional cultures attribute high value to “wit,” the ability to ask or answer difficult ambiguous questions. The witty riddler can create verbal knots that are difficult to untie; the witty riddlee is gifted in providing answers.<sup>14</sup>

Wit is significant to intellectual status because it reveals one’s command of three types of cultural knowledge. First, the witty person knows the attributes of the subject of the riddle. The cornfield riddle above

<sup>10</sup> Kōngās Maranda, “Theory and Practice of Riddle Analysis,” 54.

<sup>11</sup> Elli Kōngās Maranda, “Riddles and Riddling: An Introduction,” Journal of American Folklore 89 (1976): 131; see also Roger D. Abrahams, “Introductory Remarks to a Rhetorical Theory of Folklore,” Journal of American Folklore 81 (1968): 149.

<sup>12</sup> Ian Hamnet, “Ambiguity, Classification and Change: The Function of Riddles,” Man NS 2 (1967): 382.

<sup>13</sup> Dan Ben-Amos, “Solutions to Riddles,” Journal of American Folklore 89 (1976): 252–254.

<sup>14</sup> W. J. Pepicello and Thomas A. Green, The Language of Riddles: New Perspectives (Columbus, OH: Ohio State University Press, 1984), 5, 12–13, 22.

can be answered only by a person who knows basic facts about corn; a person from a culture that does not raise or eat corn could never hope to solve this puzzle. Second, the witty person evidences command of her culture's rules of logic and analogy, the acceptable means of moving from the ambiguous metaphorical description to the referent in question. This type of knowledge may be illustrated by the very ancient "Riddle of the Sphinx," supposedly solved by Oedipus: "What goes on four legs in the morning; two legs in the afternoon; and three legs in the evening?" To provide the correct answer, "a human being," one must know basic information about human anatomy and the fact that elderly people in some cultures walk with canes ("three legs"). But one must also know that the developmental stages of life can be defined in terms of physical capabilities, that the stages of life can be compared to the phases of a day, and that a "day" may be conceived in three distinct time periods (morning, afternoon, evening). A person who does not come from a culture that uses such analogies, or a person who lacks the wit to understand how such analogies operate in her own culture, will not be able to answer. On the other hand, the ability to pose the question, or to answer the question, reveals one's command of these key facts and channels of group logic.

In many instances, however, wit demonstrates intellectual prowess through command of a third type of cultural knowledge: knowledge of traditions. Folklorist Edgar Slotkin notes that many riddles cannot be answered on "rational grounds." This is the case because few riddles "admit to [purely] logical solutions where one and only one answer satisfies the descriptive grid imposed on the riddle topic."<sup>15</sup> Specifically, while knowledge of cultural items and logic may enable a person to identify possible correct answers, such knowledge does not necessarily explain why some possible answers are "wrong." For example, the popular children's riddle, "What's black and white and red all over?" can reasonably refer to more than one thing; "the acceptable reply is dictated by the rules of riddling, not by a rule which admits any logical response."<sup>16</sup> For this reason, "most riddles depend for their solution on either inspired guessing or simply knowing the riddle—which is to say, knowing traditions.”<sup>17</sup> In other words, in many instances the riddlee can provide the correct answer only if she has heard this riddle, or one very much like it, before. Her awareness of this tradition, evident in her ability to answer, affirms her command of cultural information that the group holds in common.

---

<sup>15</sup> Edgar Slotkin, "Response to Professors Fontaine and Camp," in Text and Tradition: The Hebrew Bible and Folklore, ed. Susan Niditch, SBLSS (Atlanta, GA: Scholars Press, 1990), 154.

<sup>16</sup> Glazier and Glazier, "Ambiguity," 216.

Because riddles play on foundational beliefs, and because one’s ability to pose or answer them depends on group knowledge, logic, and traditions, riddling can play a key role in identity formation. Riddles inherently create a community of knowledge, a group of people who are united by their ability to think about the same things in the same way. Not everyone knows that the correct answer to the question, “What has one eye and three legs?”, is “a camera”; those who do are united by this common knowledge and set apart from the ignorant. For this reason, in many societies riddles are performed in contexts that emphasize the group’s solidarity and continuity: greetings; rituals “involving initiation and death”; courtship and wedding ceremonies; and “the educational encounter between teacher and student.”<sup>18</sup> As an extension of this principle, riddles often function as the “underdog’s channel,” a means of establishing a subgroup within the dominant society. Elli Kõngäs Maranda’s extensive field work led her to conclude that “this art form [the riddle] is [often] utilized by those persons to whom other institutionalized expression is denied: women, commoners, unmarried men, and children.”<sup>19</sup> Riddles can, in other words, be used to maintain a sense of group identity, or to create a new group with a distinct identity, on the basis of shared knowledge that is not available to other people.

1.3. Riddling Sessions

Whatever form they take, riddles do not tend to support social cohesion. They explicitly seek to confuse people through ambiguous questions that play with foundational beliefs and values, and can therefore easily lead to misunderstanding and embarrassment. For this reason, riddles must be performed in carefully controlled settings that defuse their potentially negative impact. Folklorists refer to these controlled social settings as

---

<sup>17</sup> Slotkin, “Response,” 154.

<sup>18</sup> Thomas A. Burns, “Riddling: Occasion to Act,” Journal of American Folklore 89 (1976): 145.

<sup>19</sup> Kõngäs Maranda, “Theory and Practice of Riddle Analysis,” 58.

“riddling sessions.” The implicit guidelines of the riddling session turn otherwise antisocial questions into a form of “play,” meaning that the verbal exchange is impersonal because the speaker and audience adopt stereotyped roles. One person plays the “riddler,” the character who poses the ambiguous question and determines the single correct answer; another person, or group of people, plays the “riddlee,” the character(s) who must provide that answer. As a scripted play environment, the riddling session allows people to express “motives we don’t normally allow ourselves under the circumstances of real life,” such as the desire to confuse people, the desire to overtly assert our intellectual superiority, and the desire to publicly direct people’s attention to taboo subjects. Play also determines the real-world consequences of such actions by regulating the stakes in the contest.<sup>20</sup>

The rules of riddling sessions are as localized, and therefore as diverse, as the forms of riddles themselves. A riddling session may include only one question, a series of questions posed by one riddler, or a back-and-forth exchange. The laws of riddling dictate the appropriate times and places for riddles, the appropriate people to share them with, and the appropriate rewards and consequences for the ability or inability to answer. These rules must always be observed, even when they are not explicitly stated. To take a well-known example from the Hebrew Bible, Samson clearly thinks that the Philistines have cheated him by forcing his fiancée to tell them the answer to his riddle about the “sweet eater.” He protests by killing thirty Ashkelonites, yet still satisfies the rules of engagement by paying on his earlier bet to the survivors (Judg 14:18–19). As is the case with so many social guidelines, people are often most conscious of the laws of riddling when they sense that they have been broken.

2. Criteria for Detection

Because riddles can take a wide variety of forms, they are often difficult to detect—especially difficult for people who are not members of the riddler’s group, and who therefore do not share the three types of prerequisite knowledge described above and/or the riddler’s inherent sense of how riddling sessions should be conducted. As a result, riddles are immune to form-critical criteria which focus on surface features of the text. Instead, riddles must be identified on the basis of their interaction with the immediate discourse context and/or their interaction with conventional systems of logic. Any criteria for detecting riddles in literary documents are essentially criteria for detecting statements that are intentionally ambiguous and that ask the audience for resolution. Four such criteria may be utilized to identify riddles in the sources for Jesus, three based on explicit statements in the texts and one that must be inferred from the presentation and/or the social context in which the source document was produced.

---

<sup>20</sup> Roger D. Abrahams, “The Complex Relations of Simple Forms,” in Folklore Genres, ed. Dan Ben-Amos (Austin, TX: University of Texas Press, 1976), 202–203.

First, a statement in the sources may be classified as a riddle if the author/narrator explicitly indicates that the saying is intentionally ambiguous. In these cases, the reader is simply told that a character has just uttered a riddle. Perhaps the most obvious example appears at John 10:6, where the narrator states that Jesus' immediately preceding remarks about sheep, shepherds, and strangers were actually a παροιμία ("riddle"; "proverb") that his audience could not understand. Of course, such explicit statements are rare; more often, the author of the source will simply reveal that a character is not talking about the most obvious thing in a particular context, thus indicating that his or her words were ambiguous. Matthew, for example, explains to his readers that Jesus was not actually talking about "bread" when he warned the befuddled disciples to "beware of the leaven of the Pharisees and Sadducees." Rather, Jesus was using the word "leaven" metaphorically to refer to the Pharisees' insidious "teachings," most likely their recent demands for a "sign from heaven" (16:6, 12). By providing the correct answer, Matthew indicates that Jesus' initial statement was capable of more than one interpretation. While this criterion is essentially foolproof, it is also seldom applicable. Narrators do not often show their hand so readily, and the rhetorical effect of the ambiguity is ruined as soon as the reader is told what is happening.

Second, a statement in the sources may be classified as a riddle if it is delivered during a "riddling session," a social context that would be an appropriate venue for riddle performance. In these instances, the source contextualizes a saying with the type of framing signals that would normally be used in the "real world" to warn someone that riddles are to follow. At John 9:2, for example, the disciples ask Jesus whether a certain man is blind as a result of his own sins or of the sins of his parents. The author does not call this statement a "riddle," but the question is contextualized in a theological discussion between a rabbi (Jesus) and his disciples, and the wording suggests that the issue is difficult to resolve. Both proposed answers assume a direct connection between illness and sin, and either would force Jesus to affirm this connection. Similarly, the synoptics sometimes indicate that riddles are about to be exchanged by noting, directly or indirectly, that a certain character is trying to “trap” or “test” Jesus in a contest of wits. Mark, for example, says that the Pharisees’ question about whether it is lawful to pay poll-taxes to Caesar was an attempt to “trap Jesus in a word” (12:13; see also 10:2; Luke 10:25). The same may be assumed of many other episodes in which a stereotypical opponent of Jesus—Pharisee, scribe, Sadducee, chief priest—suddenly appears and challenges his wisdom with an ambiguous question. In all these instances, the literary context of a statement corresponds to the real-world social contexts in which riddles would typically be exchanged.

Because riddles do not evidence a distinct form, many cultures supplement general contextual clues with special verbal formulae that signal that a riddling session is about to begin. Köngäs Maranda notes that the Lau people of Melanesia “do not have a marked riddle style”; to compensate for this lack, “the Lau riddle poser announces simply his intention by naming the genre he is about to present”—i.e., “This is a riddle.”<sup>21</sup> In a similar fashion, modern Americans typically introduce jokes or riddles by saying, “Here’s one for you,” or “Get this,” formulae that parallel the older British “Riddle me ree.” In the gospels, Jesus often alerts his audience that a riddling session is underway by framing a saying with the familiar formula, “Whoever has ears to hear, let them hear” (ὃς ἔχει ὅτα ἀκούειν ἀκουέτω). In every context in which it appears, this statement accompanies an ambiguous question or comment and indicates that Jesus expects someone to provide a clarifying answer and/or application. At Mark 8:18, for example, Jesus hints that the disciples need to look for a deeper meaning to his warning about the “leaven of the Pharisees” by asking whether their ears fail to hear, and the Parable of the Sower, explicitly presented as a mystery to crowds and disciples alike, is followed by some version of this formula in all three of the synoptics (see Mark 4:9; Matt. 13:9; Luke 8:8). A related phrase, “What do you think?” (τί σοῖ ὑμῖν δοκεῖ), appears several times in Matthew to introduce riddles, including the Parable of the Two Sons and Jesus’ question, How can the Christ be

---

<sup>21</sup> Köngäs Maranda, “Theory and Practice of Riddle Analysis,” 58.

“David’s son” and “David’s Lord” at the same time? (21:28; 22:42). These formulae resemble the type of verbal signals that might occur in a real-world riddling contest, and as such they serve as clues for the identification of riddles in the sources for Jesus.

Third, a statement in the sources may be classified as a riddle if it intentionally generates confusion. In these cases, Jesus makes a statement and other characters react to that saying in a way that highlights its ambiguity (note that Jesus himself never reveals any confusion about something that someone else has said). The synoptics, for example, often indicate that the disciples and/or the crowds were “amazed” by Jesus’ words, prompting them to ask for clarification at a later time. Following this motif, the disciples must ask Jesus to explain just how it is that “nothing outside a person is able to make him unclean by going into him” (Mark 7:14–17), and how anyone can be saved if rich people are lost (10:23–26). This criterion is particularly relevant to the Fourth Gospel, where almost everything Jesus says is intentionally ambiguous and therefore opaque to both disciples and enemies alike. For example, at John 7:33 and 8:21, Jesus tells the “Jews” that he is going away to a place where they cannot come. The Jews explicitly indicate that this statement is ambiguous by naming several possible answers: Does Jesus mean that he will go to the Diaspora? And/or to teach Greeks? Or does he mean that he plans to kill himself? (7:35; 8:22). While the reader may detect that Jesus is alluding to his imminent death and return to God, the disciples are no more capable of coming to this conclusion than the Jews; at one point Peter interrupts Jesus and demands to know exactly where he is going (13:33–38). This criterion thus covers a wide variety of instances where the reaction generated by a statement indicates that it must have been intentionally ambiguous.

Fourth and finally, a statement in the sources may be classified as a riddle if it seems calculated to violate normal ways of thinking by blurring ideological boundaries. As noted above, riddles use ambiguous language to bring together things and concepts that are normally located in separate mental compartments, usually on the basis of a single shared trait and/or a play on words. Following this principle, when Jesus makes a statement that apparently challenges the conventional order of values, that statement may be classified as a riddle. For example, Jesus’ assertion that “nothing outside a man is able to make him unclean by going into him” (Mark 7:14–15) must be viewed as problematic by anyone who is even vaguely acquainted with Leviticus 11 and ancient Jewish purity standards. Similarly, Jesus’ teaching on divorce at Mark 10:2–12 suggests an inherent contradiction between Gen 2:24 and Deut 24:1–4, resolves that contradiction by dismissing the latter teaching as a mere concession to human weakness, and then redefines remarriage as a form of “adultery”—it is difficult to see how this train of thought would not seriously derail the thinking of many ancient Jews (and easy to see why it confuses so many modern Christians). Even Christian readers must pause to reflect on Gos. Thom. 14:1–3, where Jesus states that fasting, prayer, and almsgiving are all sinful acts that will ultimately lead to condemnation. Obviously, this criterion is more subjective than the first three, in that it requires a prejudgment about what ancient Jews and/or early Christians would consider “normal” thought patterns. But in many cases, it is impossible to imagine that Jesus’ words would not violate conventional standards, thus forcing his audience either to come up with an answer that resolves the tension or else to abandon their current sense of reality.

Criterion 4 is especially applicable to one of the most prominent themes in Jesus’ teaching: reversal of the current world order. In many instances, Jesus’ words seem to inherently defy basic social standards, forcing his disciples (and the reader) to identify an alternate meaning that would make them at least barely applicable to life in the present world. He states, for example, that “if anyone wants to be first, she must be last of all and servant of all” (Mark 9:35). This is clearly not the way that things are usually done, and Jesus does not explain how one could be first and last, master and servant, at the same time. The statement is obviously ambiguous and the disciples are left to resolve it, meaning that this saying is a riddle. The same is true of Mark 10:14–15, where Jesus says that the Kingdom of God belongs to children; Mark 12:43, where Jesus says that a widow’s two mites are worth more than a rich man’s treasure; Luke 6:20, which defies all common sense by claiming that “the poor are blessed”; and Gos. Thom. 18:2–3, where Jesus seems to contradict himself by telling the disciples that “the end will be where the beginning is.” Such sayings may be classified as riddles because, in each instance, Jesus uses an intentionally ambiguous statement to challenge conventional ways of thinking and asks his audience to provide a solution.

It should be stressed that these four criteria can only locate specific riddles in the various sources for Jesus, not in the ministry of the historical Jesus himself. They are, in other words, literary criteria, not historical criteria, and at best they could be used only to create a database of riddles and riddling sessions for further analysis. The historicity of individual sayings within such a database must be evaluated on other grounds. At the same time, however, the fact that these criteria identify numerous riddles in a wide range of independent sources at least suggests that the historical Jesus regularly engaged in this type of verbal exchange, asking and answering riddles in a variety of settings.

3. Riddle Types in the Gospels

The riddles that appear in the sources for Jesus, identifiable on the basis of the criteria outlined above, could be sub-categorized in a number of different ways. But because riddles do not exhibit consistent formal features, any such scheme must be based on function rather than form, the way that riddles are used in the gospels rather than what they look like. Following this approach, three types of riddles appear in a variety of independent sources: dramatic riddles; sage riddles; and mission riddles. Each of these categories is based on the apparent function of the respective riddles in their current literary contexts: dramatic riddles function to add color to the narratives in which they appear; sage riddles function to portray Jesus as a person of unusual wit and wisdom; mission riddles function to establish some element of Jesus' unique identity. Of course, it is possible that specific riddles may have been used in various ways at different moments in the tradition, or even at different moments in the ministry of the historical Jesus. One can easily imagine that a certain sage riddle might have been used occasionally to highlight a christological theme, or that a mission riddle might have been stripped of its specifically christological significance to portray Jesus as an ethical model in early Christian preaching. It should also be stressed that these three categories overlap to a significant degree, and that a single riddle may serve more than one of these functions in a given context. All three categories are, however, consistent with the way that riddles might be used in oral cultures, in this case the oral cultures of both Jesus and first-century Christianity.

3.1. Dramatic Riddles

An element of oral narratives, dramatic riddles add tension or suspense to a story, or sometimes develop characterization. They may draw attention to, or heighten the effect of, something that someone says or does. For example, two dramatic riddles appear at Mark 9:9–12, one that adds tension to the plot and another that develops a character portrait. As Jesus descends the mountain with Peter, James, and John after the “Transfiguration,” he orders them to remain silent about what they have seen and heard until “the Son of Man should rise from the dead” (v. 9). The disciples indicate that Jesus has just uttered a riddle by expressing confusion and immediately asking him to clarify what the term “resurrection” implies (Criterion 3 above). This ambiguous statement about Jesus’ fate, and the disciples’ incomprehension, forecasts Jesus’ impending death and adds dramatic tension to Mark’s narrative (see also 9:31–32; 10:32–34). Jesus then follows this riddle with another, based on the disciples’ observation that “Elijah should come first” (either before the general resurrection and/or before the appearance of the Son of Man): “Elijah has come, and they did to him whatever they wished” (9:13). This riddle apparently alludes to the story of John’s death at Mark 6:14–29 (see Matt 17:13) and further develops the character of the Baptist as Jesus’ forerunner. In a similar way, the Fourth Evangelist uses a dramatic riddle to build tension in the story of Jesus’ encounter with the Samaritan woman. After she refuses to draw a drink for him, Jesus says that she should have asked him for “living water”; she proceeds to point out that the well is deep and he has no bucket, underscoring the irony of the scene and the ambiguity of the term “water” as a Johannine symbol (John 4:9–12). All three of these riddles add dramatic interest to their respective narrative contexts and color the characters that inhabit them in a deeper shade.

The sources for Jesus often add drama to an episode through the use of “neck riddles,” an oral narrative motif that is widely distributed cross-culturally. Neck riddles appear in riddling sessions with very high stakes: “the hero must pose a riddle that cannot be solved, or unravel one given him on penalty of death should he fail”—the protagonist must, in other words, use wit to “save his neck.”<sup>22</sup> A familiar Western example appears in the fairytale “Rumpelstiltskin,” where the princess must guess the troll’s secret name or surrender her firstborn son to him. In the gospels, neck riddles generally take the form of “traps,” challenges in which a character will suffer public shame if he cannot answer a difficult academic question. One of the more famous traps appears at Mark 12:13–14, where the Pharisees ask Jesus whether it is lawful to pay the poll-tax to Caesar. If he says “yes, pay” he will risk the ire of the masses who resent the tax; if he says “no, don’t pay” he will risk charges of sedition. Jesus himself sometimes poses neck riddles to humiliate his opponents and dismiss their charges against him. When, for example, the chief priests publicly challenge his credentials immediately after the Temple incident, Jesus demands that they tell him whether John’s baptism was “from heaven or from men.” Caught on the horns of the dilemma—they cannot admit that John was a prophet, but dare not assert in front of the crowds that he was not—they simply admit defeat and allow Jesus to continue teaching (Mark 11:27–33). The agonistic tone of such contests, along with their high stakes, inherently increases the dramatic tension of the scenes in which they occur.

---

<sup>22</sup> James L. Crenshaw, “Riddle,” IDBSup, 749; Archer Taylor, “The Varieties of Riddles,” in Philologica: The Malone Anniversary Studies, ed. Thomas A. Kirby and Henry Bosley Wolf (Baltimore, MD: Johns Hopkins University, Press, 1949), 6.

3.2. Sage Riddles

Sage riddles portray Jesus as a person of unusual wit, one who is particularly adept at posing and answering ambiguous questions. They often emphasize his theological insight and command of the Scriptures, and thereby establish his credentials as a teacher. Within their respective contexts, sage riddles function in one of two ways, depending on the audience. When Jesus’ dialogue partner is friendly, they are used to communicate some aspect of his message in a particularly witty and/or memorable fashion. When the dialogue partner is hostile, they are used to demonstrate Jesus’ intellectual superiority, generally over the established religious authorities of the day (Pharisees, scribes, chief priests, elders, etc.). Neither type of sage riddle, however, makes explicitly christological claims. They establish Jesus’ wisdom and/or highlight the genius of his teaching, with no clear interest in his messianic mission.

The sources often use sage riddles to demonstrate Jesus’ advanced intellect, specifically his superior insight into theological and biblical matters. When, for example, the Sadducees ask Jesus to discuss the eternal fate of a woman who successively married seven brothers, he humiliates them by handily solving their proposed dilemma (dead people do not get married) and then proceeding to demonstrate that they do not understand “the Scriptures or the power of God” (Mark 12:18–27). He similarly rebuffs, without breaking a mental sweat, the Pharisees’ claim that his disciples are violating Sabbath by picking grain: if righteous David ate the sacred bread from the tabernacle in a moment of need, surely his disciples cannot be guilty when, in fact,

“the Sabbath was made for people, not people for the Sabbath” (Mark 2:23–27). One of the more remarkable instances of this theme appears at John 8:3–5, where the Pharisees ask Jesus whether a woman caught in adultery should be stoned in accordance with the Mosaic Law. Their question seems to place Jesus in a no-win situation: Should he affirm the Law and condemn the woman, thus jeopardizing his reputation as champion of the oppressed and possibly inciting a riot? Or should he release the woman, implying that adultery is not so serious and that Moses may have been in error? Jesus neutralizes the proposed dilemma by affirming the Mosaic ordinance but insisting that the executioner must be sinless. Of course, the Pharisees could point out that Moses never mentions such a stipulation, but this observation would immediately spring the very trap they had set for Jesus by implying that they themselves promote an immediate death sentence. This riddling session, like several others, ends with an editorial note that Jesus’ opponents, and/or the sympathetic crowds who witnessed the exchange, were so overwhelmed that they feared to ask him any more questions (John 8:9; see Mark 12:34; Luke 14:6).

Sage riddles often occur in Jesus’ interactions with his followers to stress the wisdom of his message. On one occasion, Jesus and the disciples are sitting in the Temple, watching worshipers drop money into the offering boxes. An old woman leaves two small coins, and Jesus informs them that “this poor widow gave the most of all those who put something into the box.” In its context, this statement is obviously ambiguous, because many rich people were also leaving gifts at that time; Jesus is clearly challenging conventional perspectives on wealth. After the disciples ponder this odd remark for a moment, Jesus explains that the widow’s gift is of greater value because “all of them gave from their leftovers, but she from her shortage gave all that she had” (Mark 12:41–44). Another memorable, and much more disturbing, example appears at Luke 14:26. There Jesus—in flagrant violation of Gen 2:24, Exod 20:12, Lev 19:18, and a host of other scriptures—informs a sympathetic crowd that they must “hate” their parents, spouses, and children if they wish to be his disciples. This ambiguous statement apparently requires the audience to redefine the word “hate,” but on this occasion neither Jesus nor Luke offers an explanation that would resolve the tension. As a final example, at Matt 17:25 Jesus asks Peter, as a commentary on the annual two-drachma Temple tax, whether “the kings of the earth receive customs and taxes from their sons or from strangers.” The obvious answer, “from strangers,” seems to suggest that the Temple tax inherently alienates faithful Jews; its corollary, “the sons are free,” implies that faithful Jews should not have to pay a tax to God. This is obviously a dangerous dilemma, one that Peter apparently cannot resolve on his own; Jesus helps him by stating that a “son,” though technically exempt, should voluntarily pay the tax so as not to offend other people (vv. 26–27). Whether or not any of these specific episodes originated with the historical Jesus, there is no reason to believe that sage riddles of this type were not a typical feature of his teaching style.

It is relevant to note here that many of Jesus’ parables function as sage riddles in their current contexts in the sources—ambiguous stories that call the audience (and the reader) to search for a deeper meaning, often at the expense of cherished ways of thinking. As is now widely recognized, the parables make their primary points through contrast, highlighting absurd or exaggerated elements in a relatively familiar story to demonstrate ways in which the Kingdom of God differs from the normal world. Like riddles, then, many of Jesus’ parables blur the boundaries between conventional conceptual categories, challenging the audience to redefine key terms or develop new ways of thinking. For example, at Matt 21:28–31, Jesus tells a story about a man who sent his two sons to work in the family vineyard. Both children shamed their father, the first by defying his command and the second by lying to him. Jesus closes the parable by asking, “Which of the two did the will of the father?” (v. 31), forcing the audience to affirm the behavior of one or the other and, in the process, to redefine conventional thinking on obedience. As another notable example, the Parable of the Sower is presented as a riddle in Mark, Matthew, Luke, and Thomas. In Mark, the Sower meets all four criteria for riddle detection discussed above: the narrator explicitly indicates that the parable is difficult to interpret (4:33–34); Jesus closes the story with a typical framing signal for riddling sessions (“whoever has ears,” 4:9); the disciples reveal their confusion by asking for a private explanation of the story (4:10, 34); finally, the parable violates conventional expectations by stating that the seed on “good soil” produced a harvest at least four times larger than what should be expected. Especially for the crowds, who do not enjoy Jesus’ lengthy explanation in vv. 13–20, the Sower is an inherently ambiguous story that leaves the audience to make an application. Parables of this type may therefore be categorized as sage riddles.

3.3. Mission Riddles

Mission riddles function to establish some aspect of Jesus' unique identity and/or mission. Formally, they are identical to dramatic and sage riddles—i.e., they are subversive interactive metaphors that generate ambiguity and request a response—but their content betrays a distinctly christological interest. For example, John 12:32 (“Should I be lifted up from the earth, I will draw all people to myself”) may be classified as a riddle both because it confuses the crowd by violating their messianic expectations (v. 34) and because the narrator intrudes to reveal that Jesus' words are ambiguous, actually referring to “the kind of death he was about to die (v. 33).” As the third of the Fourth Gospel's “lifted up” sayings, the riddle seems to build on the Johannine theme of Jesus' imminent ascension and heavenly exaltation, which is specifically mentioned in the two earlier occurrences of the phrase (see 3:13–15; 8:23–30). John 12:32 thus uses ambiguity to promote a specifically Johannine christology of descent/ascent, interpreting the cross as the moment of Jesus' return to the Father. Similarly, at Gos. Thom. 28:1–4, Jesus says that all people in the world are “drunk” and warns that they cannot repent until they “shake off their wine.” While Thomas sometimes evidences a strenuous ethical perspective, the word “drunk” here seems to be ambiguous, especially because the “drunken” people in this context are also “blind in their hearts”—Jesus is apparently not talking about alcohol consumption. Yet this teaching is explicitly connected to Jesus' personal sense of mission: “I took my stand in the midst of the world, and in flesh I appeared to them” (v. 1; Scholar's Version). As such, the riddle is used to develop a Thomasine christological theme relating to Jesus' identity and sense of purpose. Because mission riddles showcase the theological interests of their respective sources, they generally would not satisfy the rigorous criteria of authenticity utilized by most historical Jesus scholars.

Because historical Jesus scholarship tends to disregard material that reflects the theological tendencies of a source and, conversely, to attribute greater historical weight to information that does not seem to reflect such tendencies, it is important to carefully distinguish between sage riddles (which make no explicitly christological claims) and mission riddles (which do make such claims). The problem is perhaps more complicated than first appears, simply because it is often difficult to determine how a specific saying should be classified. To illustrate, one may compare Jesus' riddles at Mark 12:35–37 and John 10:34–36. Both of these sayings are typically deemed inauthentic on the basis of their christological content,<sup>23</sup> yet a functional approach reveals that the two do not serve quite the same purposes in their respective contexts.

John 10:34–36 is, at the most basic level, a neck riddle. The Johannine “Jews,” frustrated by Jesus’ ambiguous statements about his identity, confront him at the Feast of Dedication and demand to know whether he claims to be the Christ (10:22–24). Jesus eliminates any doubt by informing them that, in fact, “I and the father are one”; the Jews reasonably interpret this claim as blasphemy and immediately grab stones to kill him (10:30–33). To buy time, Jesus poses a riddle that suggests a contradiction between the Jews’ beliefs and Ps 82:6–7. In the Psalm, God warns Israel’s unjust judges that their exalted status will not save them from his wrath: “I say, ‘You are gods, children of the Most High, all of you; nevertheless, you shall die like mortals’” (NRSV). First-century CE Jews seem to have applied these verses to Moses and the Israelites on Sinai, who were sanctified and made immortal by the Law but immediately lost this status in the sin of the gold calf.<sup>24</sup> Jesus points out that “the Scripture cannot be broken” to remind the Jews that the terms of this Psalm must be accepted without debate, then asks how they can condemn him for calling himself “God’s son” when the sacred writings themselves sometimes refer to human beings as “gods.” Jesus is clearly in a dangerous situation, and is attempting to use wit to “save his neck” and escape a stoning. On this occasion, however, the Jews are too enraged to reason, and attempt to kill him before he eludes them.

But while John 10:34–36 is typical of all riddles in its use of ambiguity to challenge established ideological categories, and while this statement occurs at a very dramatic moment in the narrative, the Fourth Evangelist seems to be primarily concerned here with Jesus’ identity. Although Jesus’ citation of Ps 82:6 is ostensibly calculated to deflect the charge that he claims to be God, it is immediately followed by the statement, “the Father is in me, and I am in the Father” (v. 38). Further, the entire exchange is preceded by the “Good Shepherd” discourse, in which Jesus claims a special intimacy with God and a unique mandate to serve as the true leader of God’s elect (10:7–18). As one aspect of this role, Jesus bears the Father’s authority to grant eternal life and to preserve his sheep from damnation (10:26–28). Viewed against this backdrop, it seems clear that the narrator is particularly interested in the riddle's implications for Jesus' identity and mission: the ancient Israelites may have been God's children, but Jesus is "God's son" in a wholly unique sense. This passage should therefore be classified as a mission riddle, one that seeks to promote the christological agenda of the source.

---

<sup>23</sup> Funk and Hoover, Five Gospels, 105, 435–36.

<sup>24</sup> Jerome Neyrey, “I Said: You are Gods’: Psalm 82:6 and John 10,” JBL 108 (1989): 647–649.

At first glance, one might conclude that the same dynamic is at work in Mark 12:35–37. There, Jesus asks a crowd in the Temple how the scribes could claim that the Christ is "David's son," apparently a summary of popular thinking on the subject. Jesus generates ambiguity by contrasting this doctrine with Ps 110:1, where the Psalmist, apparently David, claims that "the Lord said to my lord, 'Sit at my right hand until I put your enemies under your feet.'" Taking "my lord" to be a reference to the Messiah, Jesus asks how the Christ could be both "David's lord" and "David's son" at the same time. While the logic of this argument may be unsatisfactory to modern readers, one could easily argue that Mark is less interested in its coherence than in its christological content: the passage clearly fits well within the larger Markan "secrecy" theme, serving as an illustration of the vague way in which Jesus spoke about his messianic identity when in the presence of nonbelievers. As such, the saying seems to function as a mission riddle in the sense that it touches on a key christological theme.

But despite its content—an explicit public commentary on a messianic Psalm by Jesus himself—closer examination reveals that the "David's son" saying is more likely a sage riddle. Mark 12:13–37 is a lengthy riddling session in which Jesus' wit is demonstrated by his ability to publicly answer and pose enigmatic questions. The session opens with the Pharisees' neck riddle about the poll-tax (12:13–15); Jesus responds with an ingenious counter-question whose referent and application are unclear: "Give Caesar's things to Caesar and God's things to God." Does Jesus have a purely economic solution in mind, or do his words have a deeper implication? The vanquished Pharisees cannot reply, and as they depart some Sadducees test Jesus' aptitude as a teacher of the Law with an elaborate riddle concerning the eternal fate of a woman with seven husbands (Mark 12:18–23). Mark hints at the Sadducees' intended strategy by noting that they "say there is no resurrection"—they apparently intend to trick Jesus into naming one of the woman's seven husbands as her eternal spouse, then reveal the "correct" answer, "there is no resurrection." Jesus outwits them by offering a third alternative: there is a resurrection, but people will not be married there. The question of the scribe at 12:28 (“Which is the first of all the commandments?”) is a catechetical puzzle that requires Jesus to display his command of academic knowledge; the scribe clearly has a specific, “correct” answer in mind, as is evident from his positive assessment of Jesus’ response (12:32–33). Mark then notes Jesus’ complete victory: “and no one would presume to question him any longer” (12:34).

Within this context, Mark 12:35–37 seems to be simply the fourth and final round in a prolonged riddling session. Having demonstrated his skill at answering academic riddles, Jesus now entertains the crowd by posing a puzzle of his own. They “were listening to him gladly” because, presumably, they were impressed with his genius and his command of the Scriptures. It seems most likely, then, that Mark is more interested in Jesus’ wit, which the riddle simply illustrates, than in the theological implications of his remarks. Perhaps for this reason, scholars have been unable to identify a plausible context for this line of messianic speculation in the life of the early church.<sup>25</sup> As such, the saying is best classified as a sage riddle, one which plays on a messianic theme to generate ambiguity but is not immediately concerned with christological claims.

4. Riddles, Sources, and the Historical Jesus

The presence of riddles in a variety of sources raises several significant issues for historical Jesus studies, some relating to the authenticity of the gospels and others to the method and message of Jesus. A full treatment of these issues is beyond the scope of this article, but two implications of the emerging portrait of Jesus the Riddler will be briefly explored here.

4.1. Riddles and Authenticity

While the four criteria outlined above would identify a large number of riddles and riddling sessions in the sources for Jesus, very few of these sayings and situations would be accepted at face value by historical Jesus scholars. This is the case not only because many of the riddles explicitly promote christological themes (the “mission riddles” described above), but also because the vast majority of them fail to meet the Criterion of Multiple Attestation. As noted earlier, riddles do not evidence consistent formal features, and they rarely appear in the same form in more than one independent source. It is therefore difficult to produce a database of specific riddles that Jesus must have asked or answered, or to reconstruct the original version of individual sayings through comparison of occurrences.

---

<sup>25</sup> Funk and Hoover, Five Gospels, 105.

At the same time, however, as a genre riddles meet many of the “Criteria of Distinctive Discourse” utilized by Jesus scholars to identify authentic sayings. According to these guidelines, Jesus’ teachings tended to “surprise and shock” people, often frustrating “ordinary, everyday expectations” because they “cut against the social and religious grain.” He achieved this effect by using exaggeration, paradox, and questions with “unclear references”—i.e., by using ambiguous language that disrupted normal ways of thinking.<sup>26</sup> Whether or not these criteria accurately describe Jesus’ message—and it is hard to imagine that they do not—all are completely characteristic of the riddle genre. Further, while riddles sometimes reflect the specific purposes of the author of a source, they often do not promote an obviously christological agenda. Some of the dramatic riddles, for example, simply add color to traditional stories, while the sage riddles portray Jesus as a gifted teacher who offered many memorable insights. While the historicity of specific sayings must be determined individually, the overall portrait of Jesus the Riddler likely reflects the way that Jesus would have appeared to the masses in an oral culture where wit was a key academic credential.

4.2. Jesus the Riddler

The sources suggest that Jesus asked and answered riddles both to communicate ideas about the Kingdom of God and to establish his credentials to offer such teaching. Regardless of the authenticity of specific sayings, this broad portrait of Jesus the Riddler can inform our understanding both of his social posture and of the nature of the Kingdom that he proclaimed.

Oral cultures often see “wit,” the ability to pose and answer difficult questions, as a form of giftedness. In the context of Roman Palestine,

---

<sup>26</sup> Funk and Hoover, Five Gospels, 31–32.

Jesus' remarkable mastery of puzzling questions would likely be understood as a divine endowment, establishing him as a prophetic sage, a person of special expertise in spiritual affairs. This perspective is reflected in passages where the masses refer to Jesus as a "prophet" (Matt 21:11, 46; Luke 7:16; 24:19; John 4:19; 9:17), and also in episodes that portray Jesus in verbal contests with the recognized agents of religious authority. In all such scenarios, the authorities cannot outdo Jesus on his own terms and he refuses to engage them on theirs. It was this popular understanding of Jesus' credentials, not just the radical content of his teaching, that earned him an audience.

But while Jesus seems to have regularly displayed his wit in public settings, the riddles suggest that his teaching was not always transparent. Put another way, the accessibility of Jesus' person, evident in his lax interpretation of ritual purity regulations and his open table fellowship, was not necessarily matched by an accessibility of content: many of Jesus' proclamations must have seemed hopelessly ambiguous to the majority of his audience, at least until he himself provided the clarifying answer. As noted earlier, riddles can only be solved by those who possess the necessary prerequisite knowledge of cultural items, group logic, and group traditions; to those who do not possess this information, the answers to riddles will often appear arbitrary even after they have been revealed. For this reason, riddles naturally create a closed community of knowledge, a group of people who share the special insight necessary to provide the right response. Thus, while it is true that Jesus' personal practices would tend to integrate people from a wide range of social backgrounds, his use of verbal puzzles would intentionally segregate those whose wit did not enable them to grasp the interpretive grid he promoted. This observation may, in turn, call for a reconsideration of the general authenticity of passages such as Mark 4:10–12, 34, John 16:25, and Gos. Thom. 62:1, which suggest that Jesus revealed the deeper meanings of his teaching—i.e., revealed the correct "answers" to his ambiguous statements—only to a select group of his closest associates.

The fact that Jesus often used riddles, including parable-riddles, to establish his authority and disclose core elements of his teaching also carries significant implications for our understanding of the Kingdom of God. From the perspective of this study, the Kingdom of God may be defined as a community of knowledge, that group of people who were able to answer and apply Jesus' ambiguous statements. This community would include all people who possessed sufficient wit to comprehend the logic of his analogies and/or sufficient knowledge of tradition—i.e., sufficient awareness of the correct answers to his riddles, based on past encounters with Jesus or his disciples. Membership in this knowledge community would be obtained through “repentance” (Mark 1:15), a “change of mind” that would enable one to grasp the new perspective—specifically, an internal taxonomic shift that would realign conventional ideological boundaries to coincide with the logic of Jesus’ riddles. Like Jesus himself, one need not leave normal society to join this Kingdom, for the simple reason that there is no distinct “group” to join; rather, the Kingdom exists “in the midst” (Luke 17:20–21) of everyday life in the form of those individuals who grasp this reality. Of course, this new perspective would express itself not only in the ability to interpret Jesus’ words, but also in an application of those words to a variety of social situations.

THREE QUESTIONS ABOUT THE LIFE OF JESUS

CHRISTIAN-BERNARD AMPHOUX

To write the life of Jesus has become a great challenge. For centuries, people were content with the confusion between history and sacred history: the life of Jesus was what the gospels said, with a few borrowings from the apocryphal literature to fill in the gaps of what they did not say. But from the end of the eighteenth century onwards, scholars became interested in the contents of the life of Jesus, in order to ascertain more precisely the nature of the link between his ministry and the birth of Christianity.<sup>1</sup>

It is indeed true that the story of Jesus can be located in time by the presence of at least three personages of Roman history: (1) Jesus is born at the end of the reign of King Herod (40–4 BCE); (2) he receives baptism in the fifteenth year of the reign of the Emperor Tiberius (14–37 CE); (3) he is judged and condemned to death by Pontius Pilate, who was prefect of Judea from 26 to 36. In other words, he was born shortly before 4 BCE, received baptism in 28 CE, and died before 36, probably in the year 30.<sup>2</sup> This means that Jesus' life lasts roughly for thirty-five years and mostly covers the first three decades of the Common Era. But apart from these points of reference, how are we to read this history? What is the origin of this Jesus who disturbs the games of the mighty? What was at stake in his trial? If Jesus' ministry ends with his death, what does his resurrection mean?

The year 2000 came and passed away without resolving the enigma of the life of Jesus.<sup>3</sup> It seems at first sight as though the critical reading of the four gospels would leave no place for history: the first

---

<sup>1</sup> This essay first appeared in French: "Trois questions sur la vie de Jésus," Foi et Vie: Revue de Culture protestante 2 (2006): 7–47.—The first critical study of Jesus, by H. S. Reimarus, was published by G. E. Lessing in 1774. Lessing himself was the author of the first critical examination of the genesis of the gospels, which was published posthumously in 1778.

<sup>2</sup> Cf. C. Perrot, Jésus et l'histoire, 2nd ed. (Paris: Desclée, 1993), 72. Astronomical calculations allow us to identify the most probable date of his death as April 7, 30.

<sup>3</sup> Cf. the four volumes by J. P. Meier, A Marginal Jew: Rethinking the Historical Jesus, 1: The Roots of the Problem and the Person (New York: Doubleday, 1991); 2: Mentor, Message, and Miracles (1994); 3: Companions and Competitors (2001); 4: Rethinking the Historical Jesus (2009).

conclusion drawn by the historians was to deny the existence of Jesus. Nevertheless, Christianity was born of an indisputably historical event, and the existence of Jesus gradually won acceptance, despite all the difficulties. Under these circumstances, the second conclusion was drawn by German theologians at the beginning of the twentieth century, viz. that Jesus spoke and that his words are the only traces we have of his historical existence. However, the analysis of the logia shows that most of them are “post-Easter”: i.e., they were formulated by the disciples and placed by them on the lips of their master. The next step is to argue that Christianity is based less on the words of Jesus than on christology: if the words were in fact the only historical trace left by Jesus, how are we to explain the fact that Christianity has moved so far from these words?

It was the study of the manuscripts of the gospels that led me to the question of the historical Jesus. In this essay, I should like to look at the following three points. I wish to examine the social origins of Jesus; to restore the continuity which exists between the project to which his ministry was devoted and earlier Judaism (although traditionally, scholars have emphasized those elements that constitute his originality);<sup>4</sup> and to show that the ministry does not cease with Jesus’ death, but continues with a Jesus who now belongs to the heavenly realm. The four gospels, which form a homogeneous basis,<sup>5</sup> are the primary foundation of my examination. Where necessary, I shall attach most weight to the oldest form of their text, which is usually attested by Codex Beza.<sup>6</sup> I shall also have recourse to the second meaning of scripture, which was well known in classical antiquity and was linked to the work of redaction;<sup>7</sup> later, it was forgotten or concealed, and it plays no role in the contemporary exegetical tradition.

---

<sup>4</sup> The nineteenth century had a poor opinion of Jewish literature: civilization was viewed from the perspective of the Greco-Roman world, and everything else was seen as the domains of barbarism. This opinion, which went hand in hand with the colonial spirit, has the corollary that Christianity is detached from Judaism at the very outset, in order that it may enter the Greco-Roman world; and the nineteenth century is marked by the search for everything that can link the New Testament writings to the Greco-Roman world. The researches by R. Bultmann on rhetoric and G. Theissen on sociology are exemplary in this field; and the profound impact made by the writings of these scholars is very well known.

<sup>5</sup> The dominant scholarly presupposition is that the canonical gospels are four books composed separately, then united by means of a selection which eliminated other gospels. However, the manuscript tradition leads me to different conclusions: the primary fact—more important than the fact that they are separate books—is that they form a tetrad of gospels, i.e. four pieces of one single instruction. This is the reason for their coherence and complementarity. We can go so far as to define precisely the circumstances in which this tetrad was drawn up: the project features (in the second sense of this word) in the letters of Ignatius of Antioch, and it was his successor, Polycarp of Smyrna, who realized it, doubtless ca. 120.

1. The Social Origins of Jesus (4 BCE–6 CE)

The gospel accounts of the birth of Jesus (Matt 1–2; Luke 1–2), which have nourished popular religion, have generated a sacred narrative in which Jesus is a divine infant born in a provincial family of modest means, and this picture has discouraged historical research, which sees only a legend here. This reductionist verdict is inadequate, since theology has never ceased to affirm the full humanity of Jesus. We are therefore justified in reading these stories afresh, in search of information about the person of Jesus. Humanly speaking, who is he?

1.1. The Date and Place of His Birth

Two points of reference permit us to date precisely the birth of Jesus, viz. the death of Herod, mentioned above, and the long reign of Simon, the son of Boethus the Egyptian, who was high priest of the temple in Jerusalem from 22 to 5 BCE, and who provides a partial inspiration<sup>8</sup> for the figure of the righteous Simeon who is a witness to the presentation of Jesus in the temple (Luke 2:25–35).<sup>9</sup> This dates the birth of Jesus to 6 or 5 BCE. At that period, the Jewish religion was widespread throughout

---

<sup>6</sup> This bilingual manuscript of the Gospels and Acts was copied ca. 400. It was kept first at Lyons, then at Geneva. Since 1584, it has been kept at Cambridge. The apparatus criticus refers to it as D. At Mark 8:10, it corrects the earliest reading Dalmanutha, but most often it preserves the older reading.

<sup>7</sup> In the Peri archôn, Origen says that this second meaning is inspired by “the Spirit of God.” He says in effect that this meaning is manifested by “roughnesses,” i.e. incoherences on the level of the first meaning, which are intended to draw attention to its presence. Later, Thomas Aquinas calls this second meaning the sensus rerum, which we might translate as “historical meaning” (in Latin, history is known as res gestae); P. Grelot explains that it contains “theological reflections on historical events” (P. Grelot, Le langage symbolique dans la Bible [Paris: Cerf, 2001], 199). This indicates the importance of this meaning for the historian’s work.

<sup>8</sup> Cf. J. Jeremias, Jerusalem zur Zeit Jesu, 2nd ed. (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1958).

<sup>9</sup> The other figure who can be glimpsed behind this Simeon is Simon the Just, who was high priest ca. 200 BCE.

the Roman empire, and had adherents among the aristocracy. Are we to suppose that every newborn child was entitled to such a ceremony? This means that Jesus was a privileged child.<sup>10</sup>

The place of his birth is more problematic, since Bethlehem is one of the elements which link Jesus to David and thus confer on him a legitimacy which will one day entitle him to become king of the Jews. This is why the historians have concluded that Jesus was quite simply born in Nazareth. However, this solution is no better, since we do not know for certain of the existence of the village of Nazareth at this date, and the name itself (which derives from the root n-z-r, “to consecrate”) creates a link between Jesus and the place of consecration, i.e. the temple. These two place-names mean that Jesus is a layman, born as a descendant of David (“at Bethlehem”), and that he subsequently grows up in the vicinity of the temple (“at Nazareth”).<sup>11</sup>

1.2. The Family of Jesus

Jesus is a descendant of David by means of the genealogy of his adoptive father, Joseph. But it is an aristocratic trait to preserve the memory of one’s ancestors, and this prompts the question whether Joseph belonged to the elite, i.e. to the caste of Sadducees.<sup>12</sup> The Talmud contains a list of nine families, seven of which belonged to the tribe of Judah, who were entitled to provide the wood for the altar in the temple on the occasion of an annual feast; one of these is the family of David.<sup>13</sup> Where does this wood come from? Is it linked to the profession of “carpenter”—which we are told was Joseph’s profession? Did this family of David own woodlands near Bethlehem—which would explain why Joseph was registered in the census in this village?

---

<sup>10</sup> On the other hand, the census of Quirinius poses a difficulty, since this is not attested until 6 CE. The start of the Christian era was fixed ca. 540 by the monk Dionysius Exiguus to the 753rd year after the foundation of Rome. In general, it is held that his calculation was erroneous. However, this dating could lie halfway between the birth of Jesus and the census of Quirinius (on this census, cf. the section “Jesus at the age of twelve,” below).

<sup>11</sup> The examples of Bethlehem and Nazareth show how the primary meaning, that of sacred history, is expressed, as well as the second meaning, that of history: a “roughness” invites us to look for a second meaning, although the first meaning is familiar to us.

<sup>12</sup> Jeremias, Jerusalem, distinguishes between the lay nobility (the Sadducees) and the higher clergy.

<sup>13</sup> b. Ta’an 4:5.

Jesus has four brothers: James, Joseph (or Joset or John), Simon, and Jude, which were common names in the Sadducean families.<sup>14</sup> It is therefore tempting to situate the birth of Jesus in such a family. This Jesus would have come from the better districts in Jerusalem. He was born in the “family of David” and was brought up close to the temple.

Mary, for her part, is related to Elizabeth, who belongs to the tribe of Levi, like her husband, the priest Zechariah (Luke 1:5). Through his membership in this tribe, their son John, the future Baptist, is likewise a priest by birth.<sup>15</sup> Mary thus creates a link between Jesus and the priesthood; but Jesus is a layman by birth. It is only legends that affirm that Mary was born in the tribe of Judah,<sup>16</sup> but it remains true that she establishes a link of relationship between Jesus and a priestly family, in addition to his royal lineage.

This means that historical reality seems to speak in favor of Jerusalem. Jesus disturbs the centers of power because he has the qualities that can profoundly unsettle both the dynasty of Herod, who occupies without legitimacy the function of “king of the Jews,” and the chief priests, who have lost the dynastic succession to the profit of the Herodian family, which controls their nomination.

1.3. Jesus at the Age of Twelve

Luke’s infancy narrative closes with the episode in which Jesus, at the age of twelve, converses with the scribes, who possess and transmit the knowledge of the scriptures.<sup>17</sup> Can we imagine them having a meeting of this kind with a child from a modest background, whose education would necessarily have been very limited? The scene is improbable, and the historians discount it, regarding it as a page of “sacred history.”

---

<sup>14</sup> Cf. Matt 13:55 and Mark 6:3. These are the names of James (Jacob) and his principal sons (Simon, Jude, Joseph), of the first disciples (Simon, James, and John), and the last disciples (James, Simon, Jude/Judas), as well as of the future leaders of the Jerusalem community who were related to Jesus (James, Simon). We hear of the grandsons of Jude as late as the close of the first century (Eusebius, Hist. Eccl. 3.19–20).

<sup>15</sup> Let us recall that in Judaism, the function of priest is basically hereditary: it appertains to the tribe of Levi.

<sup>16</sup> “A very rich young man named Joachim lived at Jerusalem (...). At the age of twenty years, he took to his wife Anne, the daughter of Issachar, who belonged to the same tribe as himself; both were descended from the lineage of David” (A. Piñero, L’autre Jésus: Vie de Jésus selon les évangiles apocryphes [Paris: Seuil, 1996], 15 (following the Gospel of Ps.-Matthew 2)).

<sup>17</sup> Cf. Jeremias, Jerusalem.

But if Jesus comes from a Sadducean family in Jerusalem, the episode makes perfect sense: he receives his education from the scribes in the temple, whose task it was to train the children of the aristocracy, and at the age of twelve, this education is sufficiently advanced to allow Jesus to hold his own in a discussion with his schoolmasters. Like the upper class of the Jewish people, therefore, Jesus was educated in the temple at least until he was twelve years old.

If Jesus was born ca. 6 BCE, he would have turned twelve at the period of Quirinius's census, which was organized after the deposition of Archelaus<sup>18</sup> in order to assess the resources of Judea. Those who were recorded in the census had to pay the basic taxes which were collected by Rome. This is why Joseph was registered, together with his entire family—including Jesus. The Romans set up civil registers in 10 CE. Irrespective of his precise date of birth, Jesus was certainly born before this date, and this means that his birth was not declared officially. This means that the confusion between the date of his birth and the date of the census was a natural error about a hundred years later, during the redaction of Luke's writings.

1.4. Education

Between the ages of twelve and thirty-four, Jesus received an education that was doubtless complex. (1) The school of the scribes sought to impart a full knowledge of Torah, and Jesus displays a knowledge of this kind in the episode of the temptation and on many other occasions. (2) The school of the Pharisees is the source of the principle that one must love one's neighbor, although the formula itself comes from Torah (Lev 19:18); in the generation before Jesus, the Pharisees had made this the basis of human relationships, although its original intention was only to regulate the conflicts between neighbors. This means that Jesus must have studied under the Pharisees. However, their teaching disappointed him, because it lacked the perspective of salvation. (3) The apocalyptic movement inspires his teaching about the coming of the "kingdom of God," the return of "the Son of Man," and the "last judgment" which will confound those who failed to make the right choice. This movement challenged the Herodian priesthood and awaited the return to the priesthood of the legitimate dynasty. Jesus studied in this school too, and the message that he brings is the message of this group.

---

<sup>18</sup> Archelaus succeeded his father Herod in 4 BCE, but the Romans deposed him in 6 CE because of his prodigality. On the census, cf. C. Saulnier, Histoire d'Israël, 3: De la conquête d'Alexandre à la destruction du temple (Paris: Cerf, 1989), 489–491.

After receiving a “Sadducean” education in the temple, then, Jesus attended the Pharisaic school, where he imbibed the principle of love of one’s neighbor, then the apocalyptic movement, especially the group around his cousin John, whose preaching was such a dramatic event in the 20’s of the Common Era. We may infer from this that Jesus had mastery of at least four languages: first of all Greek, since his name is the Greek form of “Joshua”;<sup>19</sup> then Hebrew, in order to be able to study Torah; then Aramaic, the language of the people of Judea; and finally Latin, the language of the legal system and of the Roman occupying power.

1.5. The Question of Marriage

Nothing in the gospels suggests that Jesus was married or had children. But like every young person in the Judaism of his time, Jesus must have envisaged marriage: Judaism accords to procreation an even greater value than is found among other peoples, and marriages were subject to a legislation which was so binding that it led to many illegitimate children.<sup>20</sup> In the school of the scribes, Jesus learned that one’s primary duty is to establish a family and have children; the first of the Noachic laws gives sexuality a decisive orientation towards procreation.<sup>21</sup> In the school of the Pharisees, Jesus learned the importance of the father’s role in the celebration of the sabbath and in the synagogue, and his own teaching shows that he retained a positive image of marriage. It seems, however, that his cousin John chose celibacy. In the Judaism which awaited and made ready for the return of the legitimate high priest, there was a tendency to asceticism and to sexual abstinence, which were influenced by Egypt rather than by the Nazirite consecration to God (which applied only to a limited period, without sexual abstinence).<sup>22</sup> This meant that John had neither wife nor child. As for Mary Magdalene, the gnostic texts which speak of her are concerned with symbolism rather than with history.<sup>23</sup>

---

<sup>19</sup> In Greek, the Book of Joshua is called “Jesus.”

<sup>20</sup> Cf. Jeremias, Jerusalem.

<sup>21</sup> “Be fruitful and multiply, and fill the earth” (Gen 9:1). On these laws, see below.

<sup>22</sup> Cf. Num 6.

<sup>23</sup> Cf. A. Piñero, Jésus, 109–120, the chapter on “Jesus, women, and sexuality.”

2. A Reform Project (28–30)

Although the rest of the gospels is devoted to the ministry of Jesus, their picture does not present us with the historical Jesus,<sup>24</sup> unless there exists some coherence to which as yet we lack the key. My analysis shows that the gospels consist of two narrative series which were originally distinct but were then united in such a way as to constitute one sacred history. Nevertheless, they remain separable, and their separation supplies us with the keys to the genuine history of Jesus. In an Appendix to this essay, I present the list of the episodes and a rapid analysis of each series in Mark.<sup>25</sup> One of these series, which includes the episodes in the three synoptic gospels (Matthew, Mark, and Luke) set out in the same order, tells a story of Jesus' ministry which is close to the story told in John. The issue at stake was a project for the reform of the priesthood in the temple at Jerusalem. The second series, which includes the other episodes in the synoptic gospels, tells a different story in two periods, as we shall see below.

The first story is based on the link between the ministry of Jesus and that of John. After Jesus receives his investiture from John, he becomes his spokesman when the Baptist is imprisoned, and then his successor after his death. Let us now look at this story.

2.1. The Investiture of Jesus

Four narratives found in all four gospels present the stages by means of which we can relate the story of Jesus' ministry: (1) the baptism of Jesus; (2) the multiplication of the loaves; (3) the entry into Jerusalem; (4) the trial and the death of Jesus.

---

<sup>24</sup> In the introduction to Histoire du christianisme, 1: Le nouveau peuple (des origines à 250), ed. J.-M. Mayeur et al. (Paris: Desclée, 2000), 14–15, D. Marguerat writes: "Most of the words and actions attributed to Jesus cannot be located in space and time with an adequate guarantee of correctness. A few certain points of reference remain: the baptism of Jesus on the threshold of his public ministry; the concentration of his activity in Galilee; a widespread praxis of healings; an escalating conflict with the religious authorities of Israel; a final period at Jerusalem which was marked by the eruption of the crisis; and his execution, which was decided upon by the Romans in reaction to a Jewish denunciation."

<sup>25</sup> Cf. C.-B. Amphoux, "Quelques remarques sur la formation, le genre littéraire et la composition de l'évangile de Marc," FN 10 (1997): 5–34.

The story of the beginning of Jesus' ministry has two basic elements: (1) the baptism of Jesus (the principal narrative), which Luke dates in an emphatic manner (Luke 3:1-2); (2) the incarceration of John, a transition which marks the beginning of Jesus' ministry "in Galilee."

One day in 28 (Luke 3:1), doubtless between Pentecost and the Feast of Tabernacles, Jesus receives the baptism which his cousin John the Baptist imparts. He is roughly thirty-four years old, and this event is remarkable in that it is the only event in his entire ministry which is dated. What then is so special about this baptism, that it should be dated in this way?

First of all, the baptism is a sign that Jesus is an adherent of the preaching of John the Baptist, and it therefore signals his breach with the caste from which he himself comes. It takes place in the Jordan and is imparted by John; the account closes with two images, one visual (the descent of the dove), the other aural (the proclamation by a voice from heaven that Jesus is the "Son of God").

2.1.1. The Descent of the Dove

The first image plays on the proper names in the narrative. "To descend" is the meaning of the Hebrew y-r-d, which is the root of the word "Jordan"; and "dove," in Hebrew ywnh, gives the name Jonas, an anagram both of Ioan-, the name of John, and of Onia- (Onias), the last legitimate high priest, who was deposed in 175 BCE. In other words, this image tells us that a priestly investiture was conferred on Jesus when he was baptized. Obviously, this calls for some explanation.

The Judaism of Jesus' period was tripartite: (1) the Sadducees supported the priesthood which was in office at that time and which provided the livelihood of the priests and scribes of the temple; (2) the Pharisees had a system of teaching which was independent of the temple, but they respected it as a sign of unity and of Jewish identity; (3) the apocalyptic movement fought against the Herodian priesthood which was in office, since it regarded this as illegitimate, and wanted to re-establish a high priest who came from the legitimate dynasty. This movement was divided and rather ineffective. With the exception of the Zealots, who fought against Rome, the adversary was the Herodian dynasty, since the Roman sovereignty was in continuity with that of the Persian kings and later the Greek kings in the days of the former priestly dynasty. The principal question concerned the temple, rather than the palace: if the high priesthood is restored to the dynasty, the Herodian family will be obliged to disappear, and the chosen one of God who is installed in the temple will be able to assume in his own person the function of “king of the Jews.” This means that a divine act of election is necessary—and for Jesus, his baptism is just such an occasion.

But how can this choice fall on Jesus, who is a layman? We find the required model in the Book of Ezra. After the return from exile, the first high priest to be installed is Joshua, whose legitimacy comes from his father Jehozadak, a descendant of the mythical high priest of Solomon, Zadok “the Just.” On this model, two related persons can found a dynasty: one is the founder, and the other is the first to exercise the function. John and Jesus are relatives; John founds the project of reforming the priesthood of the Jerusalem temple, then designates Jesus as the first legitimate high priest, once the temple has been reconquered. A prophecy in Jeremiah<sup>26</sup> envisages the installation of a third dynasty in Jerusalem, after that of the kings of Judah and that of the descendants of Zadok, which ceased with Onias in 175 BCE.<sup>27</sup> The fact that Torah includes Leviticus, which is the law of the priests, means that the Jewish people as a whole is called to become a holy people, i.e. the priestly people for the other peoples, in view of the establishment of a universal religion which will have Yahweh for its God and the sanctuary in Jerusalem as its temple. The choice of Jesus by John is first of all the choice of a relative, out of sheer necessity; but it is also the choice of a layman, to signal that the time has come for the Jewish people to assume its function vis-à-vis the other peoples. Jesus will be both the king of this people (since he is David’s descendant) and the high priest of the renewed religion (since he receives investiture from John).

2.1.2. The Voice from Heaven

The second image proclaims Jesus “Son of God,” and this is the expression which those who speak with Jesus choose when they speak about him.<sup>28</sup> As yet, this has nothing to do with christology (Paul, ca. 55) or biological sonship (the infancy narratives, ca. 100): this is a title of sovereignty borne by kings such as those of Alexandria who were heirs to the Pharaohs. It confers on Jesus legitimacy as sovereign. In the present case, this is a priestly sovereignty which is not opposed to Roman rule.

---

<sup>26</sup> This refers to Jer 33:14–26, which is not found in the Septuagint version. Biblical scholars and historians (Bogaert, Piovanelli, Römer, Sérandour) regard it as an addition which dates from the period when the Hasmonaeen dynasty was established, i.e. shortly after 150 BCE.

<sup>27</sup> Neither the Hasmonaeans, who supplanted the previous dynasty, nor the Herodians succeeded in winning acceptance for their legitimacy. This means that at the time of Jesus, the third dynasty remained a project; and it was from this project that Christianity would be born.

In the year 28, therefore, there exists a project for the reform of Judaism, for which John prepares the way.<sup>29</sup> The aim is to restore a priestly dynasty to the temple in accordance with the prophecy of Jeremiah, and the first dignitary to hold this office will be Jesus. But just as David in the past had to win his kingly power after he was anointed by Samuel, so Jesus now receives investiture by John before he begins the struggle to achieve the right to exercise the functions that are his.

2.2. Spokesman of John the Baptist

2.2.1. The Noachic Laws

We are still in the year 28. John is alive, and perhaps he communicates with his disciples or with Jesus. In the eyes of the crowd, his succession is in preparation, but this is not an open question. The legitimacy still belongs to John; he has just demonstrated that Antipas is willing to break the Noachic laws about sexuality. John has underlined the centrality of these laws. Under the former priestly dynasty, the cult of Yahweh was linked to obedience to the Mosaic law. This law, however, concerns the Jewish people in a specific manner, since it seeks to bring about a holiness which is not envisaged for the other peoples. Accordingly, this law cannot be extended to apply to them: but the Noachic laws are appropriate for the other peoples, because they were promulgated in the days of Noah, immediately after the flood.<sup>30</sup> They propose a legislative <sup>28</sup> Jesus is frequently called "Son of God": by Satan in his temptation, by the demons whom he exorcizes, by his disciples, by the cloud when he is transfigured, by the crowd, and finally by the centurion at his death. The chief priests accuse him of having usurped this title.

---

<sup>29</sup> Cf. G. Theissen, "Jésus et la crise sociale de son temps," in Jésus de Nazareth: Nouvelles approches d'une énigme, ed. D. Marguerat et al., Le monde de la Bible (Geneva: Labor et Fides, 1998), 143: "The proclamation of the forgiveness of sins through a baptism throws down the gauntlet to the temple, since the temple offered both sacrifices and opportunities for expiation, for the sins of the people as well as for the sins of the individual."

<sup>30</sup> Gen 9:1-17.

base which is common to all peoples and has two aspects, one moral (prohibition of idolatry, of murder, and of adultery), the other ritual (prohibition of certain kinds of meat).<sup>31</sup>

2.2.2. John's Strategy

When he comes to receive baptism, Jesus mingles with a new public, viz. John's hearers—mostly, these are simple people, but not exclusively. They are united by their common rejection of the Herodian priesthood and by the conviction that the mediation between God and his people has stopped and will be resumed only when the legitimate priesthood returns. This means that a better life depends on the reform of the priesthood. The relative prosperity of this period<sup>32</sup> changes nothing, since these people see the problem as lying on the level of institutions: the high priest cannot be legitimate if he is appointed by a prince who himself is controlled by a foreign sovereign. When he encounters this crowd, which is open to hope and looks for a profound change in society, Jesus' message consists in preparing it for the change through fidelity to the law, confidence in the project, and a firm assurance that the mediation with God will be restored. The crowd which had followed John now listens to Jesus, who must structure his words in keeping with two distinct groups. He must preach to the new-comers, but also give instruction to those who have taken the first steps and have asked for baptism. He does not alter the strategy of John, who had sought to challenge the authorities who had deprived the temple of its mediatory function and to install in their place the one who would be legitimately both "king of the Jews" and "Son of God."

---

<sup>31</sup> We find a good overview of the Noachic prohibitions in Acts 15, in the draft of a (fictitious) letter sent to all the believers in the name of the communities of Jerusalem and Antioch. The text is initially oral (v. 20), and is then reproduced in its written form (v. 29). The manuscript tradition transmits two main forms. The form known as "western" emphasizes the moral meaning, including the "golden rule," a variant of the principle that one must love one's neighbor; the form known as "Alexandrian" emphasizes the ritual meaning, including meat "that has been strangled." Irenaeus of Lyons comments on the first form; Clement of Alexandria comments on the second form. The synthesis of the two traditions comes first with Origen.

<sup>32</sup> Theissen, "Jésus," 138: "The movement of Jesus was born in a relatively calm period. It is true that the situation was not without tensions, but there were no major conflicts." Cf. also 136–137.

2.2.3. Cana and Capernaum

In the synoptic gospels, Jesus leaves Nazareth, where he heals a leper, and settles in Capernaum, where he heals a paralytic (Mark 2:1). In John, Jesus goes from Cana, where he performs his first healing, to Jerusalem, where he heals a paralytic (5:1). The geography is different, but the healings are similar. In the second meaning, the journeys are superimposed on one another and correspond to the same story: the first town is the location of zeal for the temple, and the second town is the location of the apocalyptic movement. The passage from one town to the other is thus the image of Jesus' breach with the Sadducees and his adherence to the reform of the priesthood which John the Baptist had undertaken.<sup>33</sup>

At the same time, Jesus is preparing his future ministry. He gathers a number of companions in order to meet the demands of a growing crowd, and he gives the first signs of his messianic identity by healing and teaching.

2.2.4. The Companions of Jesus

Jesus calls several persons to accompany him in his ministry, and these men become his disciples. In the synoptic gospels, Jesus calls disciples on two occasions. First, there are four fishermen, Simon and Andrew, James and John; then a tax collector ("Matthew" in Matthew, "Levi" in Luke, "James" or "Levi" in Mark, according to the manuscripts).<sup>34</sup> In John too, five disciples are called; the first disciples are likewise called in pairs, and the fifth is Nathanael. Once again, the first meaning presents us with two competing traditions; but the second meaning shows that what we have here are two different presentations of one and the same story. The tax collector is "seated" when Jesus calls him, and Nathanael is "under the fig-tree" when Jesus sees him—a well known metaphor for the study of Torah. In order to carry out his professional work, a tax collector needs the three qualities which are indispensable for the study of Torah: he must know how to read, to write, and to count. This means that the fifth disciple is a scribe, while the others are preachers who come from the same milieu as Jesus, since they bear the same names as his brothers.<sup>35</sup> Their activity, the ministry of preaching or teaching, is carried out in a standing position.

---

<sup>33</sup> There is a numerical equivalence between Capernaum and Jerusalem, and between Nazar[eth] and Cana<'an> (or Qana<'an>), according to a numerical code based on 7, which is found very frequently in the gospels and comes from the Hebrew of the Torah. According to this code, the value of Capernaum and Jerusalem is 33, and the value of Nazara and Qana'an (or Cana'an) 20.

<sup>34</sup> The oldest form seems to be James; then this name is replaced by "Levi," borrowed from Luke. This last disciple points to the importance of writing, viz. either the function of evangelist (Matthew, John) or the function of the master who inspires him (in Luke and Mark).

From this first phase of his ministry onwards, therefore, Jesus surrounds himself with a number of preachers and with a scribe. These first disciples were doubtless recruited from among young Sadducean men who broke with their caste, like Jesus himself. Here, there are five disciples; in the other tradition, where (as we shall see) the meaning is different, they become twelve (cf. the Appendix). Their functions are very significant. They give Jesus a decisive orientation to the word. At present, he is still transmitting the word of John, but he will be able to give this word a personal color and to give it a fixed form in writing. This will both prepare and legitimate the future.

2.2.5. The First Healings

In the synoptic gospels, the first sick person to be cured by Jesus is a leper who comes to Jesus because he already knows of his saving power: in other words, this man has received instruction. Besides this, leprosy occupies a central position in Torah, at the heart of Leviticus (chs. 13–14), and this makes it a metaphor for the condition of the priests. In John, the man who asks Jesus to save his son is a basilikos, a “royal official,” or rather a basiliskos, a “basilisk,” if we accept the oldest state of John’s Greek text. A basilisk is a serpent; and in Genesis, the serpent is a metaphor for knowledge that is ambiguous, either good or evil. The serpent makes the man who bears its name a learned or wise man who is at odds with his own wisdom and is therefore incapable of ensuring the survival of his son. This unites the basilisk and the leper: they are the faithful in the temple. And they benefit from Jesus’ first healing action, which is an image of the precedence they enjoy in the kingdom of heaven. This means that Jesus does not present himself as an enemy of the temple—rather, it is the temple that will become his enemy.

The second sick man expects nothing from Jesus and asks for nothing. The similarity between the synoptic gospels and John is more visible. Both traditions speak of a paralytic, and Jesus pronounces the same formula: “Rise, take up your bed and walk!” The paralytic represents the apocalyptic movement. He is afflicted by his own fault, and Jesus begins by pardoning him. The healing is thus in continuity with the preaching of John, and at the same time constitutes a sign of hope which confers a little more legitimacy on the project which Jesus has inherited from John. The reform of the priesthood has begun. At the moment, the milieu of the temple still takes precedence, but it is no longer this milieu that guides the course of events. This milieu benefits from the mediation between God and his people which has been re-established, and which is signified by the healing; as yet, the apocalyptic movement takes second place. It remains to be seen what each of the two will make of the grace which it receives in this way.

---

<sup>35</sup> Cf. n. 14 above.

This story is therefore based on a reform project which was a response to the crisis of legitimacy which had affected the priesthood since 175 BCE and had intensified since the reign of Herod. And this means that Christianity was born in the wings of the temple and has a priestly origin, whereas the Pharisees developed their teaching without paying any heed to the teaching that was given in the temple.

2.3. Successor to John

John was assassinated early on, in the prison of Machaerus (according to Josephus). Jesus, initially his spokesman, now becomes his successor, and a new strategy is put in place. In the gospels, this is indicated by the replacement of the theme of water (baptism) by that of seed (the multiplication of the loaves).

2.3.1. The Death of John

The circumstances of John's death<sup>36</sup> are reported immediately after the narrative of the multiplication of the loaves. On the occasion of Antipas's birthday, the daughter of Herodias charms her future father-in-law and obtains from him the head of John, thereby accomplishing the revenge of her mother, who had been outraged by John's attack. We might be tempted to see this as an historical anecdote, but in reality, the story is inspired by the Book of Esther, and its intention is to alert Herod to the future change of dynasty: in Esther, Ahasuerus is supplanted by Mordecai, after he has threatened to exterminate the Jewish people, and at the present day, it is his partisans who are threatened with extermination.<sup>37</sup> For Antipas, the picture is complete: through the violation of the three principles of the Noachic law, Antipas—mockingly called “King Herod”—compromises his entire dynasty. This murder is a flagrant political error. Far from stopping John’s project, it hastens on the accession to power of the successor whom John had taken care to nominate.

---

<sup>36</sup> Mark 6:14–29 (= Matt 14:1–12; cf. Luke 9:7–9).

2.3.2. The Theme of Seed

The section which centers on the death of John begins with two brief episodes: the ears of corn which the disciples pluck, and the healing of the man with the withered hand.<sup>38</sup>

Several details in the first episode allow us to date the death of John to the early spring of 29.<sup>39</sup> Literally speaking, the scene is set in a wheat field, but another place is suggested when Jesus compares himself to David and his companions, who ate the loaves of the Presence which were reserved to the priests,<sup>40</sup> at a period when he had been anointed and Saul was still in power. The setting is now a place within the temple, before the entrance to the holy of holies, at the season when the table of offerings is piled high with the first fruits of the harvest, which are laid on it in accordance with the law.<sup>41</sup> Jesus, in full consciousness of his ancestry, signals that he is starting to exercise the function of “king of the Jews.” And the place he chooses to make this known signals that he also envisages the priestly function with which John the Baptist has invested him.

---

<sup>37</sup> The Book of Esther, which was written shortly before 80 BCE, may well allude to the massacre of the Pharisees by the Hasmonaean Alexander Jannaeus in 88 BCE, and Mordecai’s accession to power may announce revenge for this massacre in the form of a future accession to power by the Pharisees. However, when the Romans arrived in 63 BCE, it was Herod who became king. This time, it is John who is assassinated and who threatens Herod with loss of control over the temple: Herod will see a dynastic priesthood re-established there, with John’s successor.

<sup>38</sup> Mark 2:23–28 (= Matt 12:1–8; Luke 6:1–5) and Mark 3:1–6 (= Matt 12:9–14; Luke 6:6–11).

<sup>39</sup> The formula “at that time” (repeated at Matt 12:1 and 14:1) refers to the same event. This precision differs from the general formula “in those days” which is used at the beginning of the baptism narrative (Matt 3:1): the sabbath on which the ears of grain are plucked is linked to the death of John. In Luke 6:1, one word specifies that this was the “second first” sabbath, i.e. the sabbath of the week of unleavened bread (= the seven days following Passover). If the Passover falls on a sabbath day, it is the second. Otherwise, it is the first. This word is lacking in our modern Greek text, but it is an interesting detail.

<sup>40</sup> Cf. 1 Sam 21:4–7.

<sup>41</sup> Cf. Lev 23:9–11.

The second episode is an action performed on the same day, involving the Pharisees. Jesus has just met them in the temple, where they have criticized the disciples' behavior in the name of the law—thereby refusing to associate themselves with the reform of the priesthood. Did Jesus intend to ally himself with them against the Herodian priesthood? One may well think so; but whatever the answer to this question may be, Jesus puts his question once again: ought not the law to take a back place vis-à-vis the reform of the priesthood? And the Pharisees respond by forming an alliance with the Herodians against Jesus. From now on, a new strategy becomes necessary, and Jesus soon reveals this to his disciples.

We can locate the multiplication of the loaves in the synoptic gospels (where it marks a close) at the feast of harvest. In John, it is a point of departure and is dated to the period of Passover. For this reason, loaves of barley are used. The bread is a metaphor of the abundance at harvest time, the gift of God—although when Adam and Eve were expelled from paradise, he demanded that they work hard to make food and cook it. At the same time, it is a metaphor for the word of the preacher, which emerges from one single mouth and enters thousands of ears. And this is given, not to the disciples, but to the crowd: Jesus gives it to the disciples in order that they may feed the crowd, not themselves, since their nourishment is the seed. The gift of bread to the crowd and Jesus' preferential treatment of the crowd are an indication of his strategy, which is made more explicit in John's words about the "bread of life":<sup>42</sup> by turning his back on a political career, Jesus reveals here to his disciples that the path he is now taking is the path of martyrdom, i.e. that he risks death.

2.3.3. The Tabernacles and the Light

As yet, the synoptic gospels present this dramatic strategy in veiled words. Thanks to the histories of previous dynasties we learn that violence engenders violence. In Jesus' eyes, violence does not offer a just solution. It is therefore better to suffer violence than to commit it. Jesus therefore sets out on a path which does not consist in a mere passive expectation of violence at the hands of the other, but rather in reversing its effect in such a way that it is used against those who commit it. He takes the risk of a death caused by the chief priests of Jerusalem—but a death that would discredit them.

---

<sup>42</sup> John 6:26–59.

It is under these conditions that the tabernacles and the light are united. In the synoptic gospels,<sup>43</sup> Jesus appears luminously between Moses and Elijah, and the disciples suggest erecting tabernacles. In John, Jesus has gone up in secret to the feast of Tabernacles, where he reveals that he is the light of the world.<sup>44</sup> The summer has brought a harsh test for the disciples, which is echoed in the synoptic gospels by the triple announcement of the passion; the first prediction comes at the very moment when his disciples recognize in Jesus the Messiah, i.e. the legitimate high priest and the king of the Jews.<sup>45</sup> As soon as the disciples declare their readiness to follow Jesus in a work of reform, he tells them that he is soon to die. And he repeats this terrible prediction to them twice more, when he welcomes the children and when he utters warnings to the rich.<sup>46</sup>

To accept the risk of death is a reversal of ethics, and the gospel adds to this the rejection of power: “Whoever would be great among you must be your servant” (Mark 10:43). Jesus succeeds John the Baptist, not in order to rule, but in order to serve. In John’s gospel, we find another rejection, with regard to the leaders of Judea: they are no longer the children of Abraham, but of the devil. In other words, they pass from election to relegation, and are accursed. In the synoptic gospels, the children (the crowd) go before the rich (the adversaries). It is they who have precedence in the kingdom, without any active work of their own or any merit—but with so many privations that their hope is absolute.

The summer of 29 is the time of the birth of the Christianity of the heart, which unites the ethics of love of one’s neighbor to a gift of oneself that goes as far as martyrdom.

Obviously, the public words of Jesus did not leave people indifferent. On the one hand, the crowds were confirmed in their ever more intense expectation of a change; on the other hand, Jesus united the authorities against himself.

---

<sup>43</sup> The transfiguration: Mark 9:2–13 (= Matt 17:1–13; Luke 9:28–36).

<sup>44</sup> John 7:1–13 and 8:12.

<sup>45</sup> Matt 16:13–20 (= Mark 8:27–30; Luke 9:18–21). The first prediction of the passion comes immediately afterwards: Matt 16:2–23 (= Mark 8:31–33; Luke 9:22).

<sup>46</sup> Mark 9:30–32 (= Matt 17:22–23; Luke 9:43–45) and Mark 10:32–34 (= Matt 20:17–19; Luke 18:31–35) respectively.

2.3.4. The Royal and Priestly Messianism

This brings us to the feast of the winter solstice (John 10:22). Jesus returns here to the subject of messianism. (1) The good shepherd<sup>47</sup> is a metaphor for the royal Messiah, who lays down his life for the sake of his sheep. (2) The resurrection of Lazarus<sup>48</sup> is a metaphor of the return to life in the temple, where death reigns.

Jesus' teaching becomes ever less tolerable in the eyes of the local authorities, since he calls them into question more and more explicitly. But there is as yet no compelling argument to take a decision which would result either in his elimination (which by now seems the more likely outcome) or else in the reform of the priesthood which Jesus advocates (a reform which would in fact succeed, if his adversaries hesitated at the last moment to offer him resistance).

2.4. The Death of Jesus

2.4.1. Jesus Enters Jerusalem

A few days before Passover in the year 30, Jesus enters Jerusalem, riding on an ass. Here, Jesus has found the compelling argument, since the ass is found in two Old Testament texts. (1) The crowd gives the scene its first meaning, seeing it in the light of Zech 9:9, "Lo, your king comes to you; triumphant and victorious is he, humble and riding on an ass, on a colt the foal of an ass": Jesus is acclaimed as the messianic king. (2) For the chief priests, however, this scene is an allusion to Gen 49:10–11, where Jacob says: "The scepter shall not depart from Judah...until he comes to whom it belongs; and to him shall be the obedience of the peoples. Binding his foal to the vine and his ass's colt to the choice vine..."<sup>49</sup> The correspondence is not so good, but my italics underline the essential point: this sign makes Jesus a rival to Caesar, no longer merely to Herod, and the chief priests can now use this text to accuse Jesus of sedition against Rome and to get Pilate to judge him and eliminate him in perfect accord with the law. Through this sign, Jesus both galvanizes the crowd in their hope and gives the chief priests a pretext for having him condemned legally.

---

<sup>47</sup> John 10.

<sup>48</sup> John 11.

<sup>49</sup> RSV.

Historically speaking, the discussions which Jesus now has with the various leading figures in Jerusalem are not very probable in such a context, but they offer a perfect definition of the positions which each group takes, when seen from the perspective of Jesus' strategy. Only the apocalyptic movement is absent from these conversations; doubtless, it was on the side of the crowd at that time. After this, Jesus gathers his disciples and prepares to celebrate the Passover with them; the details of these narratives are well known.

2.4.2. Jesus' Trial and Death

In the night of April 6–7 in the year 30, Jesus is arrested and brought before the various authorities: the Sanhedrin, the chief priests, Herod, and finally Pilate, the only one who condemns people to death. But how is Jesus' identity established, when he stands before Pilate? In the Gospel of Nicodemus, his illegitimate birth is recalled. Did the Roman administration produce on that occasion an extract from Quirinius's census? That would explain several things: first of all, that the fact that Jesus was mentioned in that census, was preserved; and secondly, that it was this extract that gave rise to the suspicion of an illegitimate birth. Jesus has enjoyed a relative measure of protection up to this point, thanks to his social status, but from now on he will be treated as if he were a slave—crucifixion was the form of execution meted out to slaves.

The charges leveled against Jesus are stated on Pilate's titulus:<sup>50</sup> he is a "Nazoraean" and "king of the Jews." In other words, he claims to be the legitimate high priest and king of his people.<sup>51</sup> But this does not suffice for a condemnation, and the high priests are obliged to insist that setting Jesus free will make Pilate an enemy of Caesar. Pilate must also be reminded of the text from Genesis 49. Finally, Jesus is condemned for having laid claim to priestly legitimacy, as if this meant that he had been guilty of subversion vis-à-vis the Romans.

Jesus is condemned and executed on the same day, the day of preparation, i.e. the day before Passover, a few hours before the sunset which marks the beginning of this feast day. This was Nisan 14, or April 7, in the year 30. The chief priests are triumphant. When they obtain a legal condemnation of Jesus, they are putting an end to the entire project begun by John the Baptist. Jesus, who has not designated anyone to succeed him, cannot in fact have a successor, since both his project and his person are condemned. However, the crowd does not accept this unjust death, and the chief priests will enjoy only a brief respite.

<sup>50</sup> John 19:19, "Jesus the Nazoraean, the king of the Jews" (the source of the famous abbreviation "INRI").

<sup>51</sup> In the Gospel of Nicodemus, Jesus is accused of having made himself "king of the Jews" and "Son of God." Cf. R. Gounelle in Écrits apocryphes chrétiens 2:251–297.

2.4.3. The Resurrection

To call the resurrection of Jesus a paradoxical event is an understatement. The narrative of the resurrection comes at the close of the gospel: it is as if the life of Jesus had finished with his death. It would however be only logical for the story of his ministry to continue here, relating the works accomplished by “the living Jesus.” What actually happened?

Some women from the disciples’ entourage, those who had been present at the foot of the cross to the very end, and some other women suddenly have the intuition or vision that he is alive. The disciples are informed, but they find it difficult to believe this; but as soon as the crowd hears this rumor, they accept this incredible idea. Nourished by the years of John’s and then Jesus’ preaching, the crowd creates in this way the first Christian community, and the disciples must cope with a question they were not expecting and for which they were not prepared.

The gospels only seem to stop at the death of Jesus. In reality, the resurrection sounds like a musical da capo which sends the reader back to the beginning, with a second series of episodes which we have left to one side while we were looking at the “earthly” ministry of Jesus. This brings us to the question of his heavenly ministry.

3. The Heavenly Ministry (30–63)

3.1. The First Decisions of the Community

The disciples ask: Who then is Jesus? Their relationship to him had been that of disciples to a teacher, but now they ask questions about his nature: Is he only a human being? Can a human being rise from the dead? How are we to handle the resurrection, when this crowd expects things to continue? Gradually, the disciples were obliged to take their first decisions.

According to the Acts of the Apostles, their earliest decision is to explain the resurrection as a return to life which then leads to an absence. The risen Jesus is still alive, but he is no longer there: he has ascended to heaven and has become a heavenly personage. The legitimate high priest thus takes his place in heaven: the ascension of Jesus occurs forty days after the resurrection. And the expectation is that the mediation with God, which had been interrupted, will be resumed on high.

But who is to lead the community? We find two ideas: either one of his brothers, if he is indeed dead; or else the disciples, if he is still alive and absent. For in the latter case, he needs spokesmen; he does not yet need a successor. Acts relates the dilemma and the choice which was made in an anecdote placed immediately before the story of the first Pentecost (Acts 1:23–26). The replacement for Judas is chosen by lot between two candidates whose names are open to a second meaning: one represents the family of Jesus, and the other represents the one who will put down Jesus' words in writing. For one side, the death of Jesus is the most important factor, and it is necessary to continue the dynastic systems, continuing the struggle to reform the priesthood, although of course this does not prevent Jesus from being alive and from inspiring the action taken by the new leaders. For the other side, his life is the most important factor, and they believe that the community must be entrusted to the care of Jesus' disciples, who are those best placed to receive his inspirations and to continue his ministry. The thesis of the disciples wins the day.

Two episodes in the gospels from our second series are open to a second meaning which expresses these two decisions, viz. Jesus' rejection of his family<sup>52</sup> and the passage which combines three logia about the lamp, the secret, and the final retribution.<sup>53</sup> There is thus good reason to read this second series not as an alternative presentation of the earthly ministry of Jesus, but in relation to the beginnings of the earliest community in Jerusalem, i.e. as a parallel to the Acts of the Apostles.

In this improvised context, the harvest feast takes on a particular solemnity. The ardor of the crowd who listen to Peter's words makes them experience Pentecost as a great eschatological feast, which some see as the reversal of the sign of Babel:<sup>54</sup> after the flood, God dispersed the human beings who had collaborated in the construction of a tower that would reach up to him in heaven, and he made them speak different languages, so that they would no longer be able to understand one another. Now, we witness the opposite effect. In the joy of this rediscovered communication, the disciples establish an instruction, regulations, a cult consisting of prayers, and two rites, those of baptism and the eucharist.<sup>55</sup>

<sup>52</sup> Mark 3:31–35 (= Matt 12:46–50 and Luke 8:19–21).

<sup>53</sup> Mark 4:21–25 (= Luke 8:16–18). In Matthew, the three logia exist separately, each inserted into one of the "discourses" of Jesus: Matt 5:15, 10:26, and 13:12.

<sup>54</sup> Gen 11.

For the moment, their teaching is inspired by that of Jesus. They integrate the principle of love of neighbor into an ethic founded on the law, uniting this to faith in the imminent return of the risen Jesus who has ascended to heaven.<sup>56</sup> But this provisional situation cannot last; and as the period of waiting grows longer, the disciples are obliged to equip themselves to face the challenge. They choose to include a scribe in their group, and it is he who will take up the task of editing the words of Jesus.

In principle, the historian's work stops with the earthly ministry of Jesus; but he cannot ignore the fact (as it is indeed a fact) that the first Christians lived with the idea of a heavenly guide. The disciples and the brothers of Jesus were only his spokesmen, acting under his inspiration. I believe therefore that it is useful to break with the tradition which sees the life of Jesus as ending with his death. Instead, we should relate the beginnings of Christianity as still forming part of the ministry of Jesus, as we find them in those gospel episodes which are in the second series of episodes in the synoptics (cf. the Appendix).

3.2. The Prologue

In this perspective, an initial episode<sup>57</sup> serves as a prologue to the heavenly ministry by summing up the earthly ministry. Jesus arrives at Capernaum, where his legitimacy is immediately recognized. He goes to the synagogue, where he exorcises a demoniac, and then enters the house of Simon and Andrew, where he heals Simon's mother-in-law. When evening comes, he performs many healings and exorcisms on the sick persons who throng around his door. Then he disappears, and Simon and the others go out to look for him, and bring him back. Jesus

---

<sup>55</sup> We find this in substance (though in a different order) in the Didache, with the exception of the final apocalyptic scene; and we read this résumé in Acts 2:41–42, immediately after Peter's discourse.

<sup>56</sup> Cf. the Didache, including the final scene.

<sup>57</sup> Jesus at Capernaum: Mark 1:21–39 (= Luke 4:31–44).

then decides to set off on a mission in order to spread the message of salvation of which he is the bearer.

It is not very difficult to decipher the second meaning. Capernaum represents the apocalyptic movement, which recognizes the legitimacy of Jesus; the synagogue is the school of the Pharisees, which has understood Jesus' project but does not support him; Simon's house is a metaphor for the temple, which Jesus serves to the best of his ability, but which will ultimately provoke his departure; the door is the place of preaching, which proves very effective; and finally, Jesus' disappearance and his return in the company of Simon evoke the death and resurrection of Jesus. John the Baptist has no place here: the episode is oriented wholly to the heavenly ministry of Jesus.

3.3. The Summary

The second episode<sup>58</sup> gives us the structure of the ca. thirty years which follow the death of Jesus. This begins on the level of the crowd, whose origins are represented by three pairs of regions, with one central region between the first two pairs and the last:<sup>59</sup>

*A crowd which came from Galilee and Judea, and from Jerusalem and Idumea,
and those beyond the Jordan,
and those about Tyre and those about Sidon.*

This geography must be read anew in the light of history. The two first pairs represent the currents of Jerusalem, viz. the apostles (Galilee and Judea) and the hellenists (Jerusalem and Idumea); the last pair (Tyre and Sidon) is the direction of the journeys of Paul; between these groups, we find the region of the road to Damascus, where Saul of Tarsus was converted. A first reading might suggest that Jerusalem occupied the central position between two regions with a Jewish majority (Galilee and Judea) and four with a strong Jewish minority (Idumea, Transjordania, Tyre, and Sidon), but the syntax compels us here to recognize that the central position is held not by Jerusalem, but by the most important event of the heavenly ministry, viz. the road to Damascus.

<sup>58</sup> The crowd; the choice of the twelve: Mark 3:7–19 (= Luke 6:12–19; cf. Matt 4:23–25 and 10:1–4).

<sup>59</sup> This strange geography in Mark 3:7–8 is found in Codex Beza, the oldest form of the text. What we read today is a form that was fixed in the fourth century: "a great multitude from Galilee followed; also from Judea and Jerusalem and Idumea and from beyond the Jordan and from about Tyre and Sidon." The list has become completely opaque.

The second insight is communicated by the list of the twelve apostles, structured by means of three groups of four disciples.<sup>60</sup> The disciples in the first group represent the apostles, or perhaps the first debate between the apostles and the brothers of the Lord and which ended in the choice of the apostles as leaders of the community. The second group represents the debate between apostles and hellenists about the words of Jesus. The last group represents the period when the brothers of the Lord were at the head of the community, including the period of Paul's missionary preaching. This structure is superimposed upon the earlier structure, since the two first groups point back to the time before the conversion of Paul and the last group is the consequence of this conversion.

The episodes which follow this summary concern the family of Jesus and the three logia;<sup>61</sup> we have touched on these above, in the context of the initial debate. As we read them in Matthew, each of the three logia corresponds to a specific genre. The first discourse of Jesus (Matt 5–7) collects “words” which are destined for everyone, the second (Matt 10) collects “instructions” which are destined for the disciples, and the third discourse (Matt 13) collects “parables” which contain a metaphor destined for the crowd and a second meaning destined for the disciples.<sup>62</sup> In other words, Jesus continues his ministry through his disciples.

3.4. The First Conflict

The first conflict now arises: the apostles and the nascent group of hellenists take opposing views, most likely about the meaning of the words of Jesus, which have now been collected in a dossier. The episode which evokes this conflict (without specifying the issue at stake) is the <sup>60</sup> The list of the twelve (Matt 10:2–4; Mark 3:16–19; Luke 6:14–16; and Acts 1:13) is articulated in three groups of four disciples, where the first group is always the same. The order and the name of the others vary within the groups, but not from one group to another.

---

<sup>61</sup> Mark 3:31–35 and 4:21–25 respectively; see above.

<sup>62</sup> Cf. the concluding formulae of these Matthean discourses: 7:28 (words), 11:1 (instructions), and 13:53 (parables).

calming of the storm.<sup>63</sup> Jesus gets on board a boat with his disciples and sits at the rudder. When the storm begins, he is asleep, and his disciples awaken him, since they feel themselves at risk. Jesus surprises his disciples by calming the unchained elements. The well known picture in this scene has a second meaning that one would not suspect; it is echoed in the narrative of Acts 6 which speaks directly of the conflict with the hellenists.

When we read the logia of Jesus in the Gospel of Thomas, we see what this conflict was about—if we accept the hypothesis that this recently-discovered gospel is a good witness to the ideology of the hellenists. In their teaching, the apostles advocate a Judaism close to that of the Pharisees and defend an updated form of the law as the path to salvation; the difference is that they await the imminent return of Jesus. The hellenists follow a Judaism influenced by the hellenism of Alexandria and reject the law as a path to salvation, emphasizing instead wisdom or knowledge. This ideology was to have a great future, since it later gave birth to gnosticism; at the moment, however, the current represented by the apostles prevailed. According to the Gospel of Thomas, the hellenists are willing to recognize James, the brother of Jesus, as his successor,<sup>64</sup> and to accept the coexistence of a variety of teachings;<sup>65</sup> but it is from Jesus that the solution to the conflict comes. We are not yet told what this solution is, but the following episode will answer this question.

3.5. The Regulation of the Conflict

The next episode is that of the demoniac of Gerasa,<sup>66</sup> which begins with a new geographical oddness: when he reaches the eastern shore of the Sea of Galilee, Jesus arrives “in the land of the Gerasenes.” Gerasa in fact lies almost one hundred kilometers from this shore; but it was an obligatory stop on the road from Jerusalem to Damascus. In this way, the central event which had been foretold is now before our eyes and takes the form of an exorcism by Jesus, where the demon is a metaphor

<sup>63</sup> Mark 4:35–41 (= Luke 8:22–25; cf. Matt 8:23–27).

<sup>64</sup> Cf. Gos. Thom. 12: “The disciples said to Jesus, ‘We know that you will depart from us. Who is to be our leader?’ Jesus said to them, ‘Wherever you are, you are to go to James the Just...’” for bad teaching and the healing is a metaphor for the conversion to a better teaching.

<sup>65</sup> Gos. Thom. 13 juxtaposes the school of Simon Peter and Matthew with that of Thomas, who alone has the right to receive a special initiation.

<sup>66</sup> Mark 5:1–20 (= Luke 8:26–39; cf. Matt 8:28–34).

This is the central event in the entire heavenly ministry of Jesus. Its dating is uncertain: according to the information given by Paul himself in a passage open to various interpretations (Gal 1), it took place ca. 35—perhaps as early as 34, but perhaps not before 36. This conversion does not appear at first sight to make any impact on the conflict between the apostles and the hellenists, for according to Acts, by the time of Paul's conversion (ch. 9) the hellenists have already left Jerusalem (ch. 8) to carry out missionary work both in Samaria, where Philip has a confrontation with the father of gnosis, Simon the magician, and to the south, where the same Philip meets and baptizes an Ethiopian eunuch. This means that the adversaries have been separated. For the present, the apostles remain in Jerusalem, while the hellenists have left for Alexandria.

We must wait for Paul's First Letter to the Corinthians, written some twenty years later, to see how the conflict was regulated. At that time, Paul was in Ephesus, where he reacted to the teaching of Apollos, the emissary of a school in Alexandria which can only be that of the hellenists.<sup>67</sup>

In this letter, we find two dicta of Paul which were later to become logia of Jesus in the gospels, and they are so important that each is stated four times: the logia about divorce (1 Cor 7:10–11) and about the faith that can move mountains (13:2).<sup>68</sup> The first logion is opposed to the principle of the union of the male and the female, as this was understood by the hellenists and as we find it in the logion at Gos. Thom. 22. The second proposes a principle of replacement: to be more than ever in relationship, through an unlimited love for other human beings and through faith in God. The solution to the crisis which is offered here is faith as a path to salvation, accompanied by the law—but not by wisdom.

---

<sup>67</sup> Cf. Acts 18:24–28.

<sup>68</sup> The first logion is repeated at Matt 5:32 and 19:9; Luke 16:18; and Mark 10:11–12. The second logion is repeated at Matt 17:20 and 21:21; Luke 17:6 (in the oldest redaction); and Mark 11:23.

3.6. The Missionary Vocation

The disciples' departure for missionary work always has a surprising character when we read it in the gospel, because the disciples are still in a period of formation and the time for field work has not yet come. Since they are not ready for it, it ought not to be taking place. But in the context of the first community under the guidance of the heavenly Jesus, this departure becomes an historical reality: according to Acts, Peter receives a summons to set out for missionary work shortly after the conversion of Paul. At the same time, the other apostles leave Jerusalem, and the community is entrusted thenceforth to James, one of the brothers of Jesus. We know nothing about how he began to lead this community; all we know is that his leadership was in continuity with that of the apostles, since James does not claim to be the successor of Jesus (although he might perhaps have made such a claim initially). He presents himself as the spokesman of the heavenly Jesus, and he does not even claim the title of "brother" of Jesus, but is only his servant. According to Acts 15, James presides ca. 49 over a conference attended by the leaders of the communities of Jerusalem and Antioch. Later, in Acts 21 (in the spring of 58), it is he who leads the community in Jerusalem at the close of Paul's second Aegean voyage. Throughout this period, the apostles are far away, bringing the good news to other countries, both Greek- and Aramaic-speaking.

The mission lets them discover that others too are bearing the message of Jesus, for the disciples ask Jesus whether it is right to let such persons speak, or to prevent them from doing so.<sup>69</sup> Jesus invites them to respect the plurality of the teachings that are presented in his name—a stance which has not always been imitated!

3.7. The Widowed Community

After the departure of the apostles and the arrest of Paul, James becomes the sole leader of early Christianity. He is never dissociated from the celestial figure of Jesus; Paul had indeed attempted to reformulate this christology, but he had not yet found acceptance for his ideas. According to the testimony of an historian of the second century, reported by Eusebius of Caesarea at the beginning of the fourth century (Hist. Eccl. 2.23), James was even admitted to the temple in the closed circle of the chief priests ca. 60. This group comprised the high priest then in office, his predecessors, and those who aspired to this office. Scholars today doubt the historicity of this testimony, but this does not make it any the less interesting—since James, as the son of Joseph, is a layman, and his admission to the circle of the chief priests is an exceptional event. It makes sense, however, because a large sector within Judaism was receptive to James' teaching. According to this source, James is sounded out as a potential candidate for the high priesthood when a new Roman governor arrives in 63. This means that he must choose between a succession in full accordance with the law (which would mean the end of the heavenly functions of Jesus) and his fidelity to Jesus (which obliges him to be nothing more than Jesus' vicar). Clearly, James chooses the latter solution, and he is assassinated just as he assumes office: leaders of Judaism cannot accept a heavenly direction of the temple by Jesus, with the high priest only as his vicar—since a vicar of this kind would merely transmit the decisions taken in heaven, and there would be no possibility of entering into genuine negotiations with other human beings on earth about these decisions. James' death is dated to 63.

---

<sup>69</sup> Mark 9:38–40 (= Luke 9:49–50).

I believe that we find an echo of this event in the episode of the poor widow whom Jesus observes. He praises her fidelity to the temple.<sup>70</sup> On the level of the first meaning, this is a simple anecdote from the closing days of Jesus' ministry; but on the level of the second meaning, it is an echo of the community which was deprived of its leader and remained faithful to the temple after the death of James. This death produced a lasting trauma. James was not replaced, and the war against Rome broke out shortly afterwards, in 66. James' candidacy for the priesthood was the last attempt to save the temple, which was the symbol of the unity of Judaism. Its destruction in 70 meant the end of the Herodian high priests and the assimilation of their partisans, the Sadducees and the scribes, to the currents of the Pharisees and the Christians.

One last episode depicts an act of homage to the dead Jesus. It takes place in Bethany and is integrated in Matthew and Mark into the narrative of the beginning of the passion.<sup>71</sup> In this context, the community experiences the death of Jesus a second time, when James dies. It is at this point that the narrative of the heavenly ministry of Jesus ends, as if he had been buried for a second time, without a trial, and without having given the least sign of his return which the believers so urgently awaited. But their fervor does not weaken. With the passing of the years, their hope is transformed, since the time of waiting has not caused the believers to doubt. On the contrary, it has brought their faith to maturity. Now it is Paul's turn to die in Rome, at more or less the same time as James. And Peter, the historical founder of the first community, is left on his own. He is still the spokesman, and according to a number of testimonies, he now goes to Rome.

---

<sup>70</sup> Mark 12:41–44 (=Luke 21:1–4).

<sup>71</sup> Mark 14:3–9 (= Matt 26:6–13); in Luke, the episode is anticipated (7:36–50).

4. The First-Fruits of the Church (64–70)

Peter made it possible to postpone facing the question of the direction to be taken by the movement; this would be the task of the second generation. At present, he teaches by telling stories which contain some of his own memories. According to the testimony of Papias, as recorded by Eusebius, it was on this material that the first redaction of Mark's book was based; ultimately, this book became his gospel. I believe that this first redaction is pretty well represented by the series of episodes which relate the heavenly ministry of Jesus—this would in some sense have been the earliest way of telling the story of Jesus. Before this redaction was interwoven with the narrative of his earthly ministry, it was expanded by means of sections which we will present here as an epilogue, since they form a transition between Jesus and the church. The two principal elements are the following.<sup>72</sup>

4.1. The Status of the Logia

At the period when Mark is writing, Christians possess only one book written in their own group, viz. the collection of the logia of Jesus, which was made in a number of stages; Paul's letters had indeed been written, but they had not yet been brought together in a collection. The question was: What is the status of the logia of Jesus? Are they an exegesis of scripture (like the words of the rabbis)? Or else, given the heavenly nature of their author, ought they to be counted among the books of scripture (the canon was not yet closed)?

---

<sup>72</sup> On the history of the redaction of Mark, which I have set out briefly here, cf. my article cited in n. 25 above.

We find in Mark, though not in Luke, several proper names with the numerical value of 22 or 24, i.e. the total number of the letters of the Hebrew or Greek alphabet; this is also the agreed number of the books of the Bible.<sup>73</sup> This may of course be a matter of chance, but we may also put forward the hypothesis that in the second meaning, these names indicate a debate among the Christians about the status to be accorded to the logia of Jesus. Some Christians held that they should be included in scripture and thus close the canon.

This is only a hypothesis, and it is difficult to set it out here in greater detail, but it seems already to be a part of the ministry of Jesus, and it is he who inspires in his disciples the idea of closing the canon: in other words, the logia will become scripture. As yet, however, this is only a project, and several decades must pass before this project begins to be realized.<sup>74</sup>

4.2. The Succession to the Apostles

The second question which had been left in suspense becomes acute on the death of Peter, doubtless on the occasion of the massacre (attested by Tacitus) which followed the fire of Rome in July 66.<sup>75</sup> Who is to direct the Christian movement in the second generation? This question was neither irrelevant nor easy to resolve. The Christians were divided into a number of different currents, and the rivalries could be settled only if a legitimate claim could win acceptance.

This fundamental question—hidden once again beneath a complicated geography—seems to be the object of an episode in Mark<sup>76</sup> which assumes a choice between several possibilities. This is the story of the

---

<sup>73</sup> The principal cases are “Boanerges” (3:17) and “Dalmanutha” (8:10); to some extent, this applies also to “Beelzebul” (3:22) and an ancient form of the formula “Talitha, cumi” (5:41). After the Pharisaic canon was drawn up ca. 90 CE (which established the contents of the Hebrew Bible as we know it today), the Bible was reckoned to have 22 or 24 books. This means in effect that its corpus is closed; up to that date, the canon had been open.

<sup>74</sup> This does not happen before the beginning of the second century, with Ignatius of Antioch and Polycarp of Smyrna.

<sup>75</sup> Tacitus, Ann. 15.44.5.

<sup>76</sup> Jesus leaves Tyre and heads for the Sea of Galilee. Instead of taking the road to the south and following the coast, then striking off towards the east, he chooses for no apparent reason to travel by way of Sidon (which lies to the north), then to enter the Decapolis, which is further east than the Sea of Galilee. On the level of the second meaning, this journey offers the opportunity to bring together proper names which make sense when they are read in close juxtaposition.

healing of a deaf man who is also a stutterer, or incapable of speaking (Mark 7:31–37), and the reply to the question, which can be discerned in the formulaic word “Ephphatha” which Jesus pronounces, grants legitimacy to the successor of Peter...<sup>77</sup>

5. Conclusion: History and Theology

We can now see the history of Jesus, but there is still some way to go before we can extract from the gospels the entire substance of the second meaning. We may doubt whether the second meaning is relevant, and we will surely wonder at the discrepancies between the first and the second meanings—between the sacred history with which we are so familiar and this history which disturbs us with its novelty—but this is what happens with every advance in the study of the texts. Historical Jesus is not exactly theological Jesus. But Meier is right, when he insists on the importance of the Jesus of history.<sup>78</sup>

In the history which I have just presented, we are witnesses to a shipwreck, that of Jesus’ ministry in Galilee. Has the reader noticed this? This ministry disappears almost completely. For the second meaning, Nazareth, Capernaum, and Cana are not geographical points of reference; nor are the Sea of Galilee and the land of the Gerasenes. The idea of a “concentration” of Jesus’ activity in Galilee (cf. n. 24 above) comes from sacred history, not from history: in reality, Jesus seems mostly to have lived in Jerusalem. We cannot overlook the fact that Jesus goes up to Jerusalem for certain feasts, which thus function as points of reference; but the Gospel of John never tells us from where he sets out to go up to Jerusalem. Why does Galilee nevertheless occupy such a position in the accounts of his ministry? (I was once asked: “What is Galilee, if not the land where Jesus exercised his ministry?”)

I believe that this question discloses a new aspect of the second meaning, which writes history by means of images that point back to a model. This model is the history of Israel, from the entry into the promised land at the beginning of the Book of Joshua to the conquest of Jerusalem at the end of 2 Kings. The history which runs between these two events is a lengthy suffering, indeed a descent into hell, which begins with the special place conquered by Joshua: at God's request, he erects a memorial of this conquest in the bed of the Jordan at Galil, i.e. Galilee. Galilee is the starting point of the history which closes with utter destruction at Jerusalem. The books which relate this history form a corpus:

---

<sup>77</sup> “Ephphatha” is a transcription of the Hebrew hippatah. The sum of the letters of this word is the equivalent of the sum of letters of “Peter” (p-t-r). This would mean that Matt 16:18 (“You are Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church”) transposes to the first meaning what Mark has already said in the second meaning.

<sup>78</sup> Meier, Marginal Jew.

Joshua—Judges—Ruth—1-2 Samuel—1-2 Kings

At the center of this corpus, a short book (Ruth) separates two single books and two double books, and this proportion of the single to the double governs the first narrative tradition, which relates the earthly ministry of Jesus from Galilee until his death in Jerusalem. This death is a fact of history, and Galilee is an image which gives this death a meaning by presenting it as the final event in a story. At the center of the structure, we find the metaphor of the tabernacles and the light (see the Appendix).

We may truly say that the language of the gospels has an astonishing complexity. One may perhaps wonder why things cannot be simpler, but my reply would be that "simplicity" is a wholly relative idea. What seems simple is that with which we are familiar; but are history, theology, or philosophy simpler per se than the Bible, when we read it bearing in mind the second meaning? The chief priests of the Jerusalem temple looked for a language adapted to their needs, and they focused on the biblical text with its constructions and its double meaning. The evangelists did the same, showing thereby that they were drawing on the same tradition. Later on, the nineteenth century thought that the Judaism antecedent to the gospels was mere barbarity; but in reality, it develops another branch of hellenism than the branch we find in the Greco-Roman world. This misunderstanding has not yet been wholly eradicated.

In these conditions, the silhouette of Jesus is full of ambiguity. For sacred history, he is a divine child who becomes incarnate in a pious family of modest circumstances, possesses the infused knowledge of God, and wanders along the roads of Galilee where he performs numerous miracles, then comes to Jerusalem where he dies, a victim of the wickedness of the leaders of his time; after his death, he rises again to inaugurate the kingdom of God. For history, he belongs without any doubt to the privileged young people of Jerusalem who dream of better times and accept the fashionable utopia, viz. a reformation of the priestly institution which had been corrupted by the Herodian dynasty. The action taken by John the Baptist is not an isolated phenomenon. Already, on Herod's death, Judas the Galilean had launched a comparable project; the same happened when Archelaus was deposed, under a leader with an almost identical name.<sup>79</sup> The fate of these utopias was quickly sealed, thanks to the disproportion between the forces on each side. But Jesus has a destiny all of his own: after his death, a community is created within Judaism at Jerusalem, which sees in him its heavenly guide, and the first evangelists find words to affirm that his ministry continues, with his disciples as spokesmen. This community was to give birth to a new current in Judaism, and then to a new religion: Christianity. In the eyes of believers, Jesus gradually revealed himself to be God in person, and his divinity became a dogma. But in the eyes of the historian, the brevity of Jesus' ministry before his death is the most remarkable thing of all. In general, the founders of the great religions had thirty years for their ministry. Jesus had scarcely two years, and yet the face of the world was changed.<sup>80</sup>

Appendix

The narrative series in Mark

1

The earthly ministry (in Matthew-Mark-Luke together: 40 episodes)

The baptism	1:2-11	summer 28	1st principal narrative
THE TEMPTATION	1:12-13		INITIAL VISION
Transition (John in prison)	1:14-15	autumn 28
1. Vocation of the fishers	1:16-20	..	development (4 episodes)
2. Healing of the leper	1:40-45	..
3. Healing of the paralytic	2:1-12	..
4. Vocation of tax collector	2:13-22	..
1. Ears of grain are plucked	2:23-28	Passover 29
2. Healing of withered hand	3:1-6	..
3. Parable of sower	4:1-9	..
4. Explanation to disciples	4:10-20	..	development (4 episodes)
Transition (death of John)	6:14-16 + 17-29	..
Bread for the crowd	6:30-44	Pentecost 29	2nd principal narrative

<sup>79</sup> Cf. Theissen, "Jésus," 135.

<sup>80</sup> Eng. trans.: Brian McNeil.

1. Disciples' confession	8:27-30	summer 29
2. 1st prediction of passion	8:31-33	..
3. The path of martyrdom	8:34-9:1	..	development (3 episodes)
THE TRANSFIGURATION	9:2-13	autumn 29	CENTRAL VISION
1. Healing of a boy	9:14-29	..	development (6 episodes)
2. 2nd prediction of passion	9:30-32	..
3. Children as example	9:33-37 + 10:1-16	..
4. Rich people at risk	10:17-22 + 23-31	..
5. 3rd prediction of passion	10:32-34	..
6. Healing of a blind man	10:46-52
The entry to Jerusalem	11:1-10	Passover 30	3rd principal narrative
Transition (at Jerusalem)	11:11	..
1. Cleansing of temple	11:15-17	..	development (8 episodes)
2. John as priestly Messiah	11:27-33	..
3. Parable of vine-dressers	12:1-9	..
4. The corner-stone	12:10-12	..
5. Tax to Caesar	12:13-17	..
6. Question of resurrection	12:18-27	..
7. David as royal Messiah	12:35-37	..
8. Changing teachers	12:38-40	..
THE END OF TIME	13:1-37		FINAL VISION
Transition (the plot)	14:1-2	..
1. Preparation of Passover	14:10-16	..
2. Prediction of betrayal	14:17-21 + 22-25	..
3. Prediction of denial	14:26-31	..
4. Jesus' union with God	14:32-42	..
5. Jesus is arrested	14:43-52	..
6. Peter's denial	14:53-65 + 66-72	..	development (8 episodes)
Transition (in praetorium)	15:1
Trial and death	15:2-39	..	4th principal narrative
Transition (women witnesses)	15:40-41	..
7. Burial	15:42-47	..
8. Empty tomb	16:1-8	..
2a
The heavenly ministry (in Mark-Luke together: 12 episodes)
1. Jesus at Capernaum	1:21-39	28-30	prologue (earthly ministry)
2. Vocation of the Twelve	3:17-19	30-63	summary (heavenly ministry)
3. Rejection of the family	3:3-35	30	dynastic succession rejected
4. Inspiration of Jesus' words	4:21-25	30-32	collection of logia is made
5. Tempest calmed	4:35-41	33-34	conflict with hellenists
6. Exorcism of a demoniac	5:1-20	ca. 35	conversion of Paul
7. Jairus and healing of woman	5:21-43	ca. 40	new priority for prediction
8. Failure at Nazareth	6:1-6	49	breach with the temple
9. Departure for mission	6:7-13	50-54	Paul's 1st Aegean voyage
10. Logia about mission	9:38-50	55-59	Paul's 2nd Aegean voyage
11. Faithful widow in temple	12:41-44	62-63	after the death of James
12. Funeral homage	14:3-9		conclusion (cult maintained)

2b

The first-fruits of the church (additions in Mark: 12 logia or narratives)

Title: Gospel of Jesus Christ	1:1	The book of the words of Jesus
Introduction: By Beelzebul	3:20–26	words destined to become scripture
Logion 1: The strong man	3:27	Herodian dynasty rejected
Logion 2: Against the Spirit	3:28–30	Herodian priesthood eliminated
Logion 3: The seed	4:26–29	strategy of patience
Logion 4: The mustard	4:30–32	the fruits of patience
Conclusion: The parables	4:33–34	the double meaning of the parables
1. Walking on water	6:45–46	continuity of the heavenly Jesus
2. Against the Pharisees	7:1–23	rejection of the Pharisaic school
3. Preaching: the deaf man	7:24–27	preaching founded on Peter
4. Bread for the 4,000	8:1–10	in support of the closing of scripture
5. Teaching: the blind man	8:11–26	the theology based on Paul
Logion 5: The greatest one	10:35–45	1st principle: towards martyrdom
Logion 6: Fig-tree and faith	11:12–14, 20–26	2nd principle: faith, the path to salvation
Logion 7: Law and love	12:28–34	3rd principle: law, the path to salvation

Note

My researches suggest that this second tradition was written twice, before the first tradition was put into writing. It corresponds to the redaction of the “Roman Mark” attested by Papias, and to its amplification in Alexandria by this same Mark after the death of Peter, according to the testimony of Clement of Alexandria (or of a Ps.-Clement). The first tradition is however anonymous and was composed twenty years later.

WHY WAS JESUS NOT BORN IN NAZARETH?

ARMAND PUIG I TÀRRECH

1. Jesus, “the Nazarene”

The evidence from the sources is unanimous about Jesus’ hometown: Nazareth. The sign or title placed above the cross seems to be definitive, as it is mentioned in each of the four gospels. Indeed, it was placed there on the orders of the Roman authorities. Likewise, the name “Jesus of Nazareth” is found in the gospels and the Acts of the Apostles (2:22; 3:6; 4:10; 6:14; and others). Nazareth is described as “his own country” (Mark 6:1; Matt 13:54), i.e., his city, and “their own city (that of Joseph and Mary)” (Luke 2:39), where his family lived. A Galilean, like Jesus, and a future disciple, Nathanael asks ironically “Can anything good come out of Nazareth?” (John 1:46). Similarly, the crowds that accompany Jesus at his triumphal arrival in Jerusalem, a few days before the passion, state: “This is the prophet Jesus from Nazareth of Galilee” (Matt 21:11). The religious authorities in Jerusalem reply to Nicodemus, a Jewish leader who had dared to go and meet Jesus: “Are you from Galilee too? Search and you will see that no prophet is to rise from Galilee” (John 7:52). Jesus’ name in the Talmud is invariably ha-notsrí, “the Nazarene.” Despite their differences, the adjectives ναζαρηνός and ναζωραῖος and the nouns Ναζαρά and Ναζαρέθ, its most common names in Greek, lead us in the same direction. In the Talmud, the usual name for Christians is still ha-notsrim, “the Nazarenes.” This use is also seen in Acts 24:5. There is no doubting then the link between Jesus and Nazareth, his hometown.

Faced with this amount of incontrovertible evidence, many authors have defended the idea, and with good reason obviously, that Jesus was born in Nazareth, and thus that no distinction should be made between his place of origin and his place of birth. The opposite would seem to have little evidence to support it; the narratives of Jesus’ childhood both in Matthew (2:1) and Luke (2:4, 6–7) distinguish between the place where Jesus was born (Bethlehem of Judea: Matt 2:1; Luke 2:4, 6–7) and the place where he was brought up (Luke 4:16) and spent his childhood, adolescence, youth and a good part of adulthood, until he was, approximately, thirty years old: Nazareth in Galilee (Matt 2:22–23; Luke 3:23). Obviously, proposing Bethlehem as Jesus' place of birth requires explaining the reasons why Mary's son could not have been born in Nazareth, his parents' hometown.

2. Some Reflections on Matthew 1–2 and Luke 1–2

In Matthew, the report of the conception, birth and early years of Jesus the child is only associated with Bethlehem of Judea (2:1). The mention of the "house" (2:11) leads to the idea that Bethlehem is the town where Joseph and Mary are living at the time of Jesus' birth. Indeed, implicitly, it seems to suggest that they were living there before Jesus was born. Is this a house belonging to Joseph, descendent of David and a member of the family of the great king of Israel? Or are Joseph, Mary and Jesus being accommodated by one of Joseph's relatives, who, like him, belong to David's dynasty?

However, according to Luke, Nazareth is the town where Mary lives and where she is visited by the angel Gabriel, announcing her pregnancy (1:31). In turn, it is not stated explicitly where Joseph comes from nor where he lives. Luke merely says that he has to go to Bethlehem of Judea to comply with the legal obligations of the census decreed by Augustus, and, for this reason, he travels with Mary "from Galilee, from the city of Nazareth" (2:4), to register in "his own city" (2:3). Likewise, shortly after Jesus' birth, they return from Judea, "to their own city, Nazareth" (2:39). It seems then that Joseph had two hometowns: Bethlehem and Nazareth. In any case, Joseph is presented as belonging to the family of David, and, thus Bethlehem, David's city, is where he has to go to "register" (ἀπογράψασθαι). Is this irrefutable proof that Joseph was born in Bethlehem? And, if it is not, how many generations ago did his direct ancestors leave Bethlehem and move to Galilee? In any case, according to Luke, it initially seems that Joseph did not have his own house in Bethlehem, nor anyone to put him up, given, as Luke explains, that Mary, his wife, gave birth in a stable.

In terms of the legal situation of Joseph and Mary, Matthew and Luke both state that when Jesus was conceived in Mary's womb, she and Joseph were "betrothed," i.e., legally they were man and wife, but they were not yet living together (Matt 1:18; Luke 1:34). The question then is when they started living together as man and wife. According to Matthew, this came about before Jesus was born. Thus, in the middle of her pregnancy, Mary and Joseph became man and wife in the fullest sense, legally and above all socially, as they both now lived under the same roof (1:24). However, according to Luke, when Joseph and Mary arrive in Bethlehem and Jesus is born, it seems that they are still to be found in the same situation they were in when living in Nazareth. They are legally married, but apparently they are not yet living together (compare Luke 1:27 and 2:5, where the same expression is used to refer to Mary: τῆ ἐμνηστευμένῃ). This implies a certain level of irregularity, at least from the point of view of the vox populi, as Joseph is to be the legal father of a child (the marriage agreement is to all intents and purposes valid), without having begun to live with his legitimate wife and the mother of the child.

Interestingly, neither in Matthew, where Joseph's and Mary's situation is completely in order before the birth of Jesus, nor in Luke, where there are still some irregularities, is there any mention of the event which, biographically speaking, would require recounting: the wedding of Jesus' parents. Is it insinuated in Matt 1:24, where it is said that Joseph "took his wife" (παρέλαβεν) Mary? Whatever the case, it is clear that a woman becoming pregnant before living with her husband was not condemned by the rabbis, but in social terms, it would have gone against the norm, or indeed may have led to doubts or gossip as to who the child's father was. In Jesus' case, there were doubts, as can be seen in Matt 1:19, regarding Joseph, who wants to legally annul the ketuba and secretly divorce himself from Mary, so as thus to save, or try to save, her honour. In turn, Mark 6:3 uses the unusual expression "the son of Mary," which shows that in Nazareth, people knew Jesus equally as Mary's (only) child and as "the son of Joseph" (Luke 3:23, 4:22; John 1:45, 6:42; Matt 13:55: "the carpenter's son"). The reference to the mother on her own reflects the unusual social conditions surrounding Jesus' conception and likewise the ironic and somewhat disrespectful tone used by the people of Nazareth when discussing the affair.<sup>1</sup>

Apart from Matthew 2 and Luke 2, then, no clear mention is made of Bethlehem as Jesus' birthplace.<sup>2</sup> Furthermore, the statements from these two gospels about Jesus as the Messiah and descendant of David (for example, Matt 1:20; 2:6; Luke 1:27; 1:32–33; 1:69; 2:4; 2:11) lead to the idea that the Bethlehem option fits as a theological event that cannot easily be considered a strictly historical fact. There is, however, an initial assertion, which is identical in Matthew (2:1) and Luke (2:4, 15) and acts as the foundation for both gospel stories: Jesus was born in Bethlehem. Where did they get this information from? Is it an apologetic detail designed to counter the Jewish objections to Jesus' messianity, arising from the fact that he was born in Nazareth (see Contra Celsum 1.51)? However, if it is designed to "prove" Jesus' Davidic lineage, and created by the early community, why are there not more similar references in the writings about his childhood and, in particular, the focus that these two gospels place on Bethlehem?<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> On Mark 6:3, see Harvey K. McArthur, "Son of Mary," NovT 15 (1973): 38–58.

<sup>2</sup> In the Gospel of Mark, there is no reference to Bethlehem. The first time that Jesus is mentioned, he is presented as coming from Nazareth of Galilee (1:9). This is a common fact in all four gospels, and should be accepted as proven: Nazareth is Jesus' hometown. However, Mark's argumentum e silentio in terms of Jesus' birthplace does not lead to any firm conclusions. As for the Gospel of John, the only reference to analyse is 7:42. J. P. Meier rightly highlights the ambiguity of this verse: "Has not the

Luke 2 offers an explanation of why Jesus was born away from Nazareth. The eventful journey to Bethlehem was brought on by a political decision—the census decreed by the emperor Octavian Augustus for the whole of the Roman Empire. This would have represented a difficult journey for the mother of Jesus, apparently at an advanced stage in her pregnancy, accompanying Joseph, her husband, from Nazareth, where they lived. When they arrived in Bethlehem, the place where Joseph and Mary had to formalize their registration in the census, Mary gave birth, without any help from anyone and in somewhat scripture said that the Christ is descended from David, and comes from Bethlehem, the village where David was?" See J. P. Meier, A Marginal Jew: Rethinking the Historical Jesus, 1: The Roots of the Problem and the Person, ABRL (New York: Doubleday, 1991), 214–216. This sentence, read ironically, leads to those answering affirmatively stating that which they wish to refute. Readers know that Jesus was actually born in Bethlehem; so, that which is meant to negate in reality affirms, as proof of Jesus' being the Messiah. This irony is seen on more occasions in the Gospel of John (see for instance 19:3 and 19:19).

---

<sup>3</sup> Faced with these difficulties, B. Chilton has proposed that Bethlehem may be located not in Judea but in Galilee (Chilton, Jesus: An Intimate Biography [New York: Doubleday, 2000], 5–13). Indeed, there is a Bethlehem mentioned in Josh 19:15 (see also Judg 12:8, 10), located some 12 km west of Nazareth. This is where Joseph, a widowed builder with children, would have lived, who knew a girl much younger than he was, Mary of Nazareth. Mary gave birth to a child in Joseph's house, in Bethlehem of Galilee, where she would have gone to escape the gossip of those in Nazareth. Subsequently, they would have settled in Nazareth, together with the children from Joseph's first marriage. Despite Chilton's proposed, there is no evidence, in either the Jewish or Christian traditions, to support his hypothesis. Chilton does, however, take the reference to Bethlehem, present in Matthew and Luke, seriously—a reference that is often overlooked historically, deemed simply a product of theology to ensure the prophecies are fulfilled.

precarious conditions—the child was born in a stable and his mother had to place him “in a manger” (ἐν φάτνῃ) (2:7). Is this explanation historically valid? Does Luke offer enough reasons for Jesus to be born away from Nazareth, “his own country” (τὴν πατρίδα αὐτοῦ) (Mark 6:1 par. Matt 13:54)?

3. A Roman Census Decreed by Augustus?

Luke justifies Joseph’s and Mary’s journey with a “census” (ἀπογραφὴ) that would have affected the whole empire and had been decreed by the emperor Octavian Augustus, setting this census within the timeframe of Quirinius’s government, the imperial legate for the Roman province of Syria (2:1–2).<sup>4</sup> However, Flavius Josephus tells us that Publius Sulpicius Quirinius, the new legatus Augusti pro praetore, carried out the census in the year 6 CE in the Roman province of Judea, which had just been created following the deposition of Archelaus (Ant. 17.355, 18.1–2, 26; War 2.111). This census, decreed by Augustus, which affected only the province of Syria and the new Roman province of Judea, must have been one of Quirinius’s first tasks.<sup>5</sup> The aim of this census was to organize the payment of taxes in the new province of Judea, not the other two mainly Jewish territories of Galilee and Peraea, which continued to be governed by Antipas, nor Trachonitis and the surrounding areas, governed by Philip. Quirinius’s census provoked an immediate reaction from a scribe born in Gamala (in Gaulanitis), but called, sensu lato, Judas of Galilee, who was joined by a Pharisee called Zadok. Both acted in Jerusalem. The revolt that sprang from their doctrines, adopted above all by the young, was put down by Quirinius himself (Acts 5:37; Ant. 18.10; War 2.117).

However, in 6 CE (759 ab Urbe condita), when Quirinius carried out the Roman census in the province of Judea, Herod had been dead for ten years. On the other hand, both Luke and Matthew state that

---

<sup>4</sup> This subject is debated in depth, with an abundant bibliography, in The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ (175 B.C.–A.D. 135), eds., Emil Schürer and Geza Vermes and Fergus Millar and Matthew Black (Edinburgh: T&T Clark, 1973), 1:420–427. See the recent contribution by Stanley E. Porter, “The Reasons for the Lukan Census,” in Paul, Luke and the Graeco-Roman World: Festschrift A. J. M. Wedderburn, ed. A. Christophersen et al., JSNTSup 217 (London: Sheffield Academic Press, 2002), 165–188.

<sup>5</sup> As seen in an inscription referring to Q. Aemilius and the Syrian city of Apamea. See Schürer and Vermes, eds., History, 1:259.

Jesus was born while Herod was king of the Jews. Indeed, Luke starts by placing the action: “In the days of Herod, king of Judea” (1:5). It does not seem that, according to the Gospel of Luke (and even less so Matthew), Herod had left the throne when Jesus was born.<sup>6</sup> Therefore, if we want to justify the information coming from all the historical sources available, we have to take into account that it is impossible to make Quirinius’s provincial census (6 CE) fit chronologically with the birth of Jesus whilst Herod is king (before 4 BCE, the date of the king’s death) and, even less with the census which, according to Luke, took place at the same time as the birth. The difference between the two is at least over ten years!

Faced with this problem, a good number of authors, including R. E. Brown, J. P. Meier and G. Theissen agree with the theses defended in Schürer and Vermes and Millar and conclude that the events seen in Luke 2:1–7 deserve little historical credibility.<sup>7</sup> There are three historical gaps that can be attributed to the events related by Luke in terms of the census:

1. There is no ancient source, not even Flavius Josephus, linking Augustus to a decree ordering a census for all the inhabitants of the Roman Empire. Furthermore, to decree a general census for the empire would have implied an attack on the prerogatives maintained by the Senate in terms of the senatorial provinces and the territories that were under the jurisdiction of the client kings, such as Herod (should the census have been carried out in his lifetime, as Luke seems to state). It is true that Syria was not a senatorial province, but an imperial province, and thus Augustus would have been able to decree a census such as Quirinius’s, which affected the province of Judea, an imperial province as of 6 CE, directly, without having to involve the senate. However, Augustus as a ruler was rather prudent, and it seems unlikely that he would have ignored the prerogatives of an allied king such as Herod. Thus, the idea of a decree for a census affecting all the inhabitants of the empire, ordered by Augustus during the reign of Herod (Luke 2:1), has no Roman historiographical evidence, found to date, to back it up.

---

<sup>6</sup> The expression “in those days” in Luke 2:1, referring to the census, has to be related to that in 1:5 (“in the days of Herod, king of Judea”) and not to 1:80, which talks about Jesus growing up. For another view, cf. Michael Wolter, “Erstmals unter Quirinius! Zum Verständnis von Lk 2,2,” BN 102 (2000): 35–41. We see that the period of time between 1:5 and 2:1 cannot exceed 5 or 6 months, as indicated by the references to Elizabeth and Mary’s pregnancies (1:24, 26).

<sup>7</sup> R. E. Brown, The Birth of the Messiah: A Commentary on the Infancy Narratives in the Gospels of Matthew and Luke, 2nd ed. (New York: Doubleday, 1993), 555; Gerd Theissen and Annette Merz, The Historical Jesus: A Comprehensive Guide (London: SCM, 1998), 153–155; Meier, A Marginal Jew, 1:412 n. 9.

2. In a Roman census, inhabitants are registered in the place where they live and where they have property (or in the city that acted as the headquarters for the fiscal district that includes the place). Likewise, it is not clear whether all the members of a family had to register personally. It may have been the case that only the head of the family needed to declare who lived with them. Only in Egypt do we know that, in certain cases, everyone had to turn up in person to register; but, in any case, it is not clear whether this rule affected the place of residence, the place of birth or the place where the census office was located. Therefore, the events in Luke 2:3–5 do not seem to fit with the conditions and circumstances usually seen in a Roman census.

3. The information provided by Flavius Josephus about Quirinius's census in 6 CE corresponds to a typical Roman census, the main reason being to assess the property of each person and set a value for this, so as to be able to apply the corresponding taxation.<sup>8</sup> Flavius Josephus explains that the Jews “did stop any further opposition to it” and “so they, being persuaded by Joazar's words, gave an account of their estates (ἐπὶ ταῖς ἀπογραφαῖς)” (Ant. 18.3). Thus, the account in Luke 2:1–7, which says that Joseph went to Bethlehem for the census and could not find room at the caravanserai, seems difficult to justify in terms of a Roman census, the principal aim of which is to declare property (houses, land and assets) to the Roman administration's officials.

In conclusion, in line with the well-founded majority opinion, the census that Luke talks about in 2:1–5 cannot be the Roman census led and carried out by Quirinius in 6 CE, nor can it be a Roman census in its strictest sense. Luke, then, seems to have failed his readers, whom he assures in the prologue to his work that he has “followed all things closely for some time past” (1:3). Has Luke used a census from around the time of Jesus’ birth in order to construct a story with purely theological ends? Has he taken a source to be reliable that has provided information that is historiographically incorrect and which, furthermore, does not fit with the other events? Should we assume that Luke has simply got it wrong?<sup>9</sup>

---

<sup>8</sup> This can be seen, for example, in Babatha's scroll, found in the Cave of Letters (P. Yadin 16), which reports a tax declaration for property to the Roman authorities in the province of Arabia by a Jewish woman who goes to the provincial office in Rabath-Moab with her husband, for the census ordered by the legate Sextius Florentinus (127 CE). See Klaus Rosen, “Jesu Geburtsdatum, der Census des Quirinius und eine jüdische Steuererklärung aus dem Jahr 127 nC.,” Jahrbuch für Antike und Christentum 38 (1995): 5–15. It should be noted, as Porter stresses (“Census,” 186–187), that two other tax declarations, made in the same year by Jewish men, can be found in two other scrolls from the desert of Judea (P. Hever 61 and 62).

4. A more judaico Census Decreed by Herod

The alternative, in my opinion, can be seen in the following proposal: Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judea and not in Nazareth, which would have been the normal case for two people, Joseph and Mary, living in this town in Galilee, because Joseph, whose ancestors came from Bethlehem, went there to register for a census that king Herod (not Augustus directly) decreed in the final years of his reign (probably, 7/6 BCE). This census by Herod has to be differentiated from another census, that of Quirinius, the census par excellence, carried out in 6 CE and mentioned in Acts 5:37; Ant. 18.1–10, 26; and War 2.118.

4.1. Herod’s Taxation System

Herod’s census and taxation system was not an exact copy of the Roman census system, nor did Herod need to adapt to this system. The Jewish sovereign had freedom to plan and act when dealing with his subjects, who were divided into two groups: Hellenist and Jewish. This meant that each territory, whether large or small, in his kingdom needed a different fiscal and taxation system, above all in the case of his Jewish subjects, who were especially sensitive to the question of censuses: the king’s Jewish subjects paid their taxes more judaico, i.e., in a way that did not offend their religion and likewise did not involve too many problems for a skilful governor such as Herod.<sup>10</sup>

---

<sup>9</sup> Generally speaking, commentators “compensate for” the—assumed—lack of historical information in Luke 2:1–2 by emphasizing the depth of his theological concepts. Obviously, this is not the case in Luke 3:1–2, where no commentator doubts the historical accuracy of the information provided!

<sup>10</sup> The proposal presented here was already suggested by P. E. Huschke (1840) and taken up by K. Wieseler (1869). The latter (Beiträge zur richtigen Würdigung der Evangelien und der evangelischen Geschichte [Gotha: F. A. Perthes, 1869]) states that Herod’s census “an die althergebrachte jüdische Stammeseintheilung anknüpfte” (49).

Evidence of Herod's freedom to act in terms of his taxation system is seen in the writings of Dio Cassius. This historian relates that Augustus, travelling in Syria (20 BCE), granted the allied sovereigns or kings friendly to the Roman people, amongst whom was Herod, the most powerful client king in the eastern empire, the right to govern as had their ancestors.<sup>11</sup> A second text, from a non-Jewish source, points in the same direction. It is an inscription by the magistrates at Mesembria (Thrace), cited by W. M. Ramsay, according to which a census had to be taken of its inhabitants "according to the law of the city and according to custom" (κατὰ τὸν νόμον... καὶ τὸ ἔθος).<sup>12</sup> In Herod's kingdom, we only know of one direct action by Augustus in terms of taxes, and this was in the period of interregnum following the king's death, affecting the Samaritans, not the Jews.<sup>13</sup> There is no doubt, then, that Herod acted with complete freedom when it came to taxes and the taxation system, and, furthermore, there are no signs that any amount went to Rome during his reign.<sup>14</sup>

Herod governed in terms of grand projects, and this led to the need for ordinary and extraordinary taxation to finance them: whether splendid public works in his kingdom, or the no less splendid gifts sent to the cities of the eastern Mediterranean.<sup>15</sup> Among his projects the rebuilding of the temple in Jerusalem stands out. Work started during the winter of 20 to 19 BCE and was designed to ingratiate himself with his Jewish subjects (Ant. 15.380–423); but this grand work did not make Herod's subjects forget the heavy load of taxes that their king's ambitions and

---

<sup>11</sup> The text from Dio Cassius is as follows: "Augustus administered the subject territory (the province of Syria) according to the customs of the Romans (κατὰ τὰ τῶν Ῥωμαίων ἔθη), but permitted the allied nations to be governed in their own traditional manner (τῷ πατρίῳ τρόπῳ)" (54,9,1).

<sup>12</sup> The inscription can be found in CIG no. 2053. See Brook W. R. Pearson, "The Lucan Censuses, Revisited," CBQ 61 (1999): 262–282, at 275 n. 39.

<sup>13</sup> Samaritan cohorts successfully put down the popular revolt in Judea and Galilee led by a few Messianic pretenders to the throne (Ant. 17.271–281). As a reward, the emperor decided personally to apply a reduction of a quarter to their taxes (Ant. 17.319).

<sup>14</sup> This is the conclusion of Schürer and Vermes, eds., History, 1:416: "Herod acted independently with regard to taxes." The annual income from taxes accounted for on Herod's death was some 1,300 talents (Ant. 17.318–320).

<sup>15</sup> Taxation policy under Herod's reign is handled in depth by Alfred Schalit (König Herodes: Der Mann und sein Werk [Berlin: de Gruyter, 1969], 262–298). Despite the lack of data in many areas, the overall view gained is of an organized and effective fiscal system, which infiltrated all parts of life. Obviously, many doubts remain as to the exact nature of the so-called crown levies (the gold crown offered to the kings; see 1 Macc 10:29; 2 Macc 14:4) or the existence, in the time of Herod, of a tax on urban property (such as that decreed by Agrippa I in Jerusalem; see Ant. 19.299).

desire for fame and glory required. “Since his expenses were beyond his abilities, he had to be harsh to his subjects; for the people on whom he (Herod) expended his money were so many, that they made him a very bad procurer of it (through taxes)” (Ant. 16.154). In short, “that happiness and those laws which they (the inhabitants of Judea) had anciently enjoyed” were lost (War 2.86).

Indeed, around the time of his death, there are constant references to the extreme state of the population’s taxation situation. Thus, the first petition addressed by the Jewish leaders to his successor, Archelaus, contained three points: the reduction of the annual tax, annulling the taxes on sales (the collection of which had been abused), and a decree for an amnesty on those people Herod had imprisoned (Ant. 17.204–205; War 2.4). In short, a lessening of the pressures of taxation was demanded, both officially and in terms of the bribes and extra payments required by the tax collectors and other administrative officials. After a few months, the Jewish ambassadors to Augustus, sent to denounce the massacre of three thousand people in the temple ordered by Archelaus, repeated the same complaints, whilst highlighting the bribes and gifts that had to be paid to the king, his family and friends, and to the tax collectors (τῶν φόρων), who acted with complete impunity (Ant. 17.308).

This description of the state of tax affairs when Herod died can be applied to the whole of his reign. The king had organized a taxation system based on the annual payment of the tributum capitis (a tax on individuals). Furthermore, there was a series of taxes on commercial transactions, harvests (grain and fruit from the trees) and salt, and internal customs payments had been set, so that the prices of products increased notably.<sup>16</sup> That the annual and individual tributum capitis, per capita or poll tax, was the keystone to Herod’s system can be clearly deduced from what the Jewish ambassadors say to Augustus when denouncing Archelaus’s dreadful behaviour: “the annual impositions (φόρους) which he laid upon everyone of them (ἐκάστοις)” (Ant. 17.308). It seems that this tax was already being paid in the time of Antioch III, the first Seleucid king (ca. 200 BCE), or even earlier, in the Ptolemaic period.<sup>17</sup> Obviously, this annual and individual tribute to the highest political authority in the country was then paid to the emperor in the Jewish territories under direct Roman control (for example, Judea, but not Galilee and Peraea, subject to Antipas), as can be seen in the gospel account of the issue of the taxes for Caesar (see Mark 12:13–17). The episode involving the Jewish ambassador sent to Augustus may indicate the amount paid for the tributum capitis during Herod's reign and the Roman administration until 70 CE: one denarius, i.e. the equivalent to a day's work.<sup>18</sup>

---

<sup>16</sup> The taxes on grain and fruit from the trees increased by a third and a half the price of the product respectively. Herod collected them regularly (Ant. 15.303). The sale of farm products also levied another tax: Vitellius exonerated the inhabitants of Jerusalem for Passover in 37 CE (Ant. 18.90).

Thus, it seems likely that during Herod's reign there was an annual and individual tributum capitis, within the framework of a strict tax system. The king put Ptolemy in charge of this system, a man who enjoyed the king's greatest respect.<sup>19</sup> Obviously, a tax system such as this could be applied only if there was an up-to-date census, i.e., thanks to a series of decrees for registration, published periodically and affecting all of the adult population—both men and women.<sup>20</sup> There must, then, have been several general censuses or decrees for registration throughout Herod's reign, not just one, and the main aim must have been solely to collect the tributum capitis. Herod did not, as we shall see, impose the

---

<sup>17</sup> Indeed, Antioch III made the municipal council of Jerusalem and all those connected to the temple (priests, scribes and sacred singers) exempt from the payment of this tax, but maintained it for the rest of the population (ὑπὲρ τῆς κεφαλῆς τελοῦσιν) (Ant. 12.142). Despite this, some authors, such as Tcherikover, have reservations on the subject (Schalit, Herodes, 268 n. 420).

<sup>18</sup> Schalit proposes that the per capita tax would have been half a shekel per year or, perhaps, a third of a shekel, as with the temple tribute (Herodes, 272). In Syria, during Appian's time, 1% of the valuation of each person's property was paid as the (Schürer and Vermes eds., History, 1:402 n. 9).

<sup>19</sup> Ptolemy, "the king's dearest friend" (War 1.473), was Herod's minister of finances (Ant. 16.191) and, furthermore, the executor of his last will and testament (Ant. 17.195). The network of census agents could exceed or even become confused with the so-called "country scribes" (κωμογραμματεῖς), people with an average education who ensured the writing of public and private documents in rural and highly illiterate areas (Ant. 16.203; War 1.479). These scribes may have acted as leaders in the smaller Jewish towns (Schürer and Vermes, eds., History, 2:186 n. 4).

<sup>20</sup> According to Ulpian (Liber secundus de censibus 50.15.3), the inhabitants of the Roman province of Syria (which often includes those of the province of Judea) were required to go personally to register for the census: men over the age of 14, and women over the age of 12, and, both, up to the age of 65. See Schalit, Herodes, 277 n. 441. However, in Egypt, the Roman model was more closely adhered to, in accordance with which only men (between the ages of 14 and 60) needed to register for the census; the women, along with the children and the old, were declared by the man and head of the family.

tributum soli or tax on rural land, a key element in Roman taxation, because this would have led to a violent reaction from the Jews, as was the case in the events surrounding Quirinius's census in 6 CE.

4.2. The Frequency and Characteristics of Herod's Censuses

How often were the censuses decreed? Opinions are wide-ranging. According to A. Schalit, Herod would have decreed a census every six years during his reign, specifically in 20 and 14 BCE, coinciding with the two tax amnesties referred to by Flavius Josephus. There would have been a last census in 8 BCE, not mentioned by the Jewish historian.<sup>21</sup> According to M.-J. Lagrange, following W. M. Ramsay, the interval between one census and another would have been fourteen years, in line with the model seen in the province of Egypt.<sup>22</sup> However, recent research by Bagnall and Frier, and subsequently Pearson, and Palme's study, show that the cycle in Egypt lasted seven years.<sup>23</sup> Alongside this evidence from Egypt, the fact that Augustus decreed three censuses of Roman citizens should also be taken into account, in 28 BCE, 8 BCE and 14 CE, at intervals of approximately twenty years and for statistical reasons. Thus, though the Egyptian model cannot be applied directly to Herod's kingdom, the intervals are similar: the Egyptian cycle lasts seven years and according to Schalit's hypothesis on Herod's censuses, the interval would be six years.

However, it is difficult for this data to be considered rigidly exact. It is true, if we bear in mind the information provided by Flavius Josephus, that Herod decreed a reduction in taxes in 20 BCE, whilst in 14 BCE he proclaimed a pardon for the taxes that had to be paid. The reduction in taxation took place following Augustus's journey to the province of Syria, where Herod went to visit him; the pardon came following a joint journey by Herod and Agrippa, the empire's second in command, to Asia Minor. Herod returned home very satisfied on both occasions, due to his proven friendship with the imperial leaders and the attention he had received, and thus decided to reduce the taxation of his subjects. Schalit believes that the aforementioned reduction and pardon are signs of two decrees for censuses, which would have taken place around the same time. Indeed, they can be seen as a wise political decision, which combine, on the one hand, the updating of the census with the collection of the annual tax, and on the other, the reduction (20 BCE) or amnesty (14 BCE) of this tax.

<sup>21</sup> Herodes, 274–275.

<sup>22</sup> Lagrange proposes starting the first cycle of fourteen years in 10–9 BCE. Ramsay, in turn, sets the cycle between 7 CE (Quirinius's census) and 7–5 BCE. See Marie-Joseph Lagrange, "Où en est la question du recensement de Quirinius?" RB 8 (1911): 60–84, at 61–62.

<sup>23</sup> Pearson, "Censuses," 274. On the censuses in Egypt, see also B. Palme, "Die ägyptische κατ' οἰκίαν ἀπογραφή, und Lk 2:1–5," Protokolle zur Bibel 2 (1993): 1–24; "Neues zum ägyptischen Provinzialzensus: Ein Nachtrag zum Artikel PzB 2 (1993) 1–24," Protokolle zur Bibel 3 (1994): 1–7.

Thus, in 20 BCE, at a politically complicated time, in which there is a notable level of disaffection in the Jewish community, Herod, quick to defend his throne, invokes a series of measures, the political incentive for which is plain to see. The king applies an appeasing measure (to reduce taxes by a third) with the excuse of encouraging an economic recovery following a series of poor harvests and to show his Jewish subjects that he does not want “the dissolution of their religion (εὐσεβεία) and [...] the disuse of their own customs (ἔθνη)”, i.e. the Jewish Laws (Ant. 15.365). As has been mentioned, the favourable measures culminated in the rebuilding of the temple in Jerusalem, which started in the winter of 20/19 BCE. However, Herod simultaneously decreed a series of repressive measures (prohibiting meetings, extreme police surveillance, execution of enemies), and he demanded that all his subjects take an “oath of fidelity” (ὄρκους ἡξίου πρὸς τὴν πίστιν) to him, accompanied by a declaration of “goodwill” (εὐνοία) (Ant. 15.368). Only the Pharisees and Essenes were exempt from this oath, no doubt due to the religious reason that God alone is worthy of an oath of fidelity (Ant. 15.370–371). In this context, Schalit’s proposal seems credible: 20/19 BCE is an appropriate date for a census, which would obviously be better received if accompanied by an important reduction in the taxes to be paid.

Six years later, in 14 BCE, a second measure affecting taxation was introduced. Herod decided to pardon (not reduce!) the taxes to be paid. In effect, faced with the crowds called to Jerusalem by the king, coming from the city and the surrounding area, Herod tells them, to their obvious enthusiasm, that the taxes for the previous year are to be reduced by a quarter (τὸ τέταρτον τῶν φόρων) (Ant. 16.64–65). This amnesty, however, did not represent a reduction of taxes. It was a populist decision from a king who was looking to increase his subjects’ loyalty towards him. It is, thus, questionable to assume that this tax pardon in 14 BCE would have been accompanied by a decree for a census, as is very probably the case with the reduction in taxation decreed in 20 BCE.<sup>24</sup>

In the final years of Herod's reign, the complicated situation seen around 20 BCE repeated itself. There are three events to be taken into consideration, in three consecutive years. The first unusual warning sign came in 10 BCE. Faced with increasing costs from within and outside the kingdom, Herod decides to rob, personally and at night, the tomb of king David (Ant. 16.179–183). The second event, in 9 BCE, is also very unusual in terms of Herod's political career. Following a strange episode that includes a bloody attack on the Nabataeans, Augustus wrote a chastising letter to the king, saying: "whereas of old he had used him as his friend (φίλω), he should now use him as his subject (ὑπηκόω)" (Ant. 16.290). However, a short time later, they were reconciled, and Augustus wrote another letter to Herod in which he lamented the harshness of his reaction and admitted that the king had been the victim of slander (Ant. 16.352). Immediately, Herod's concerns are replaced by a renewed and enthusiastic loyalty to Augustus. The third event to take into account took place in 8 BCE. Augustus, for the second time during his reign, decreed a census that affected Roman citizens throughout the empire. This was a census ordered, fundamentally, for statistical reasons and to enhance the prestige of an increasingly great and large dominion. It took place during the time when Sentius Saturninus governed as legate of Syria (10/9–7/6 BCE).

Evidence of this imperial census, decreed in 8 BCE, seems to be given by Tertullian in somewhat confused information, provided in relation to Luke 2 and Jesus' lineage (genus): Sed et census constat actos sub Augusto tunc in Iudaea[m] per Sentium Saturninum, apud quos genus eius inquirere potuissent (Adversus Marcionem 4.19.10).<sup>25</sup> The <sup>24</sup> The general reduction in taxes decreed in 20 BCE was a unique decision in the history of Herod, and it is likely that it was due to the recommendations of Augustus, to whom Herod felt closely linked. The pardon in 14 BCE was also exceptional. We only know of one other exceptional measure that benefited a small Jewish military colony in Batanea (Ant. 17.23–28).

<sup>25</sup> From the critical edition by C. Moreschini and R. Braun in SC 456 (Paris, 2001). On this text, see C. F. Evans, "Tertullian's References to Sentius Saturninus and Lukan Census," JTS 24 (1973): 24–39. Evans adopts a somewhat sceptical position with regards to the historical sources that Tertullian had available and tries to show the short-circuit established between the author and Luke 2. The problem is, however, the starting point: for Evans, Luke would know only of one census, Quirinius's (6 CE), not of a previous Herodian census. Likewise, as he himself admits, the information provided by Tertullian has a minimal apologetic content, as it comes from another perspective, in a context interest generated by Tertullian's contribution is based on two facts: it shows the relationship between Augustus's census in 8 BCE with the governor Saturninus, and mentions Judea, Herod's kingdom (as in Luke 1:5: "In the days of Herod, king of Judea"). The most obvious imprecision contained in the information offered by Tertullian is that he makes Saturninus the executor, in Judea, of one of Augustus's decrees. However, as has been seen above, the only ruler who could have ordered a census in the Herod's kingdom was Herod himself, not the governor of Syria. Likewise, the census decreed by Augustus in 8 BCE differed fundamentally from a provincial census carried out in Syria or a census decreed by an allied king such as Herod. The latter were designed primarily for taxation reasons, whilst Augustus's census was intended to provide statistics and only affected Roman citizens residing in the Syrian and Palestinian territories. Thus, is there confirmation available of a census in Judea during Saturninus's time as governor (10/9–7/6 BCE), ordered (in the only case possible) by king Herod?

Firstly, it should be pointed out that, following the crisis of the war with the Nabataeans (9 BCE) and Augustus's severe reprimand, Herod had good reason to ingratiate himself with the emperor, at a time of great difficulties in his own family, culminating in the execution of his sons Alexander and Aristobulus, in the winter of 7/6 BCE—a decision he was advised against by Augustus himself (Ant. 16.356–394; War 1.536–551). A decree for a census may have satisfied the emperor, a man concerned about showing the strength and greatness of his empire—by carrying out constant censuses in the allied kingdoms and provinces.<sup>26</sup> Secondly, Herod boasted about his excellent relationship with Saturninus during the latter's final years in command as the governor of Syria (7–6 BCE).<sup>27</sup> Thirdly, Flavius Josephus tells of how in this period there was an act involving "all the people of the Jews" (παντὸς γοῦν τοῦ Ἰουδαϊκοῦ), which gave assurance "by swearing" (δι' ὄρκων), their "good-will (εὐνοήσειν) to Caesar, and to the King's government" (Ant. 17.42). This is a very similar situation to that seen fourteen years earlier in 20 BCE. Herod demanded for a second time that all his subjects swear their loyalty to Augustus and the king, with some subjects, the Pharisees, being exempted. The context for this oath, that does not directly talk about the birth of Jesus. Tertullian's contribution cannot, then, be quickly dismissed, as Brown seems to do (Birth, 553–554).

---

<sup>26</sup> See Schalit, Herodes, 276 n. 439.

<sup>27</sup> See Ant. 15.360; 17.23–28; 17.57; War 1.577.

likewise, was a period of political and social difficulties, seen in the complaints presented to Augustus immediately after the death of Herod. There were accusations of high treason and, subsequently, executions of some Pharisees and members of the court who sympathized with them, such as Carus and the eunuch Bagoas (Ant. 17.45). In this context of increasing subjugation, detentions, executions and suspicions, it is easy to see how a census decree would make sense, requiring, as with the previous census in 20 BCE, an act of loyalty to Herod and Augustus, whilst also updating the lists of registrations and ensuring the payment of the taxes.

In short, it would seem that, alongside the census decree ordered by Augustus in 8 BCE for all the Roman citizens throughout the empire, Herod, an ally to Rome and personal friend of the emperor, wanted to play his part in fulfilling the imperial desires, and decreed and carried out his own census, probably in 7/6 BCE, with political (swearing loyalty) and fiscal aims (updating the tributum capitis), affecting “Judea,” in other words, the whole of his kingdom.<sup>28</sup> It is true that there is no explicit reference to this Herodian census in Flavius Josephus, but he does mention an oath of loyalty to Caesar and Herod himself in 20/19 BCE and 7/6 BCE, which makes it highly likely that this oath has to be linked to the census.<sup>29</sup> Indeed, both require individual inscription or registration, both for men and women.

4.3. Jewish Customs in Herod’s Censuses

The fundamental question centres on the type of census that Herod decreed. We need to ask if the censuses decreed by Herod involved the registration of people, adult men and women, in terms of tribe, lineage and family, in other words, in accordance with the Jewish custom, not in line with the Roman system.<sup>30</sup>

---

<sup>28</sup> A Roman census, and no doubt a Herodian census, lasted at most a year: this is the opinion of Ramsay (see Pearson, “Censuses”, 275). Brown (Birth, 554) is right to refute the idea that the census could have started with Saturninus and gone on for a total of twelve years before being completed by Varus and Quirinius.

<sup>29</sup> We do not know if the censuses of 20/19 and 7/6 BCE, carried out, respectively, halfway through and at the end of his reign and with an interval of fourteen years, need to be supplemented by another census that Herod would have decreed around 36/35 BCE, at the beginning of his long reign. Note that the interval of fourteen years fits with the minimum age required to register in the census (see note 20).

<sup>30</sup> R. E. Brown accepts this possibility, referring to a Roman census (Birth, 549). If the Romans could do it, so too could Herod, king of the Jews!

It seems that there was still a register of genealogies in first-century Israel, at least in part, which included the sacerdotal tribe (of Levi) and the two tribes of the south, the ancient kingdom of Judah (the tribes of Judah and Benjamin). As is noted by J. Jeremias, a high level of awareness of the tribe to which one belongs is seen in those in exile, as the legitimacy of the dynasty or lineage was a guarantee to forming part of the authentic Israel.<sup>31</sup> It is obvious that in the case of the descendents of David, this awareness was kept alive, and thus also their links to Bethlehem, the origin of all the members of David's family.<sup>32</sup>

Likewise, tradition in Israel considered the census as the counting of people, a registration in terms of lineage and family, not as a cadaster which assessed land and assets, such as animals. In effect, the first censuses began before entry to the Promised Land so as to aid the equal sharing out of the land, in line with divine criteria (drawing lots), to ensure a fair and stable distribution of property (see Num 1 and 26). It is the Lord who commands that these two censuses be carried out on the adult men capable of fighting, as it is He who will give the land to the Israelites (Num 34:13–15). However, when king David dares decree a census to measure his military force and calls for the counting of all the men able to fight, divine punishment comes down on the people (2 Sam 24). Indeed, political authority is legitimized by carrying out censuses with military and/or fiscal ends, as in the measuring of the Lord's rights over Israel through the payment of the tribute to the temple (Exod 30:12–15). Following the exile, the census focuses on establishing lists of the repatriated and assessing the purity of the lineage of each, in terms of the name of the head of the dynasty or of their place of origin (see Ezra 2 and Neh 7). The figures from the census now included not only adult men, but also the women (no doubt, married), slaves and the temple's sacred singers.<sup>33</sup>

In consequence, if, as it seems, Herod organized or maintained for his Jewish subjects a fiscal system that respected their historical customs with regard to the census of the population and the payment of the tribute to the temple, the key aspect of a fiscal policy that would not

---

<sup>31</sup> See J. Jeremias, Jerusalem zur Zeit Jesu: Eine kulturgeschichtliche Untersuchung zur neutestamentlichen Zeitgeschichte, 3rd ed. (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1969), IVth section.

<sup>32</sup> Jesus' genealogies presented in the gospels of Matthew (1:1–17) and Luke (3:23–38) provide evidence for this idea.

<sup>33</sup> The husband had to pay the corresponding tax for his wife or wives.

upset the Jewish sensibility would be the equal application of a tributum capitis, instead of the tributum soli. This is the essential difference between a Jewish census (such as Herod's) and a provincial Roman census (such as Quirinius'). They need to be carefully distinguished, as A. W. Zumpt, M.-J. Lagrange, and recently B. W. R. Pearson have suggested.<sup>34</sup> Whilst the former is based on the registration of individuals and is designed for the collection of the per capita tax, the latter is based on the valuation of property and introduces an element, the taxable value of land, that goes against the sensibility of the Jewish religion.<sup>35</sup> In the Jewish system, the bottom line for the tributum capitis is the atonement of the people and their belonging to God, which ensures the equality of all (see Exod 30:12–15): the per capita tax is the same for all. However, apart from this, there are other personal taxes that are calculated in terms of the valuation of their fixed assets (see notes 16, 17 and 18 herein). As I have mentioned above, the per capita tax derived from the census lists affected men and women between 14/16 and 12/14, respectively, and sixty-five years old (see note 21).

On the other hand, the tributum soli in its strictest sense, a tax deriving from the declaration of agricultural property owned and its cadastral valuation, was introduced only in 6 CE, around the time of Quirinius's census. This can be deduced from Flavius Josephus, who stresses that the tributum soli was something completely new in relation to the system used until then and maintained by Herod: "Such were the consequences of this, that the customs of our fathers were altered, and such a change was made, as added a mighty weight toward bringing all to destruction (τῶν πατρίων καίνισις καὶ μεταβολή)" (Ant. 18.9). Quirinius's census in 6 CE was undoubtedly more romano and not more judaico, with the intention of establishing a cadaster. Thus, as well as the individual registration, people also had to make a declaration of their agricultural property so as to allow for the "valuation" (ἀποτίμησις) of the land (Ant.

<sup>34</sup> A. W. Zumpt wrote his work, Das Geburtsjahr Christi, in 1869. See, on his position, Schürer and Vermes, eds., History, 1:418. It is, in any case, true, that Zumpt underestimates the scope of Herod's Jewish census excessively and converts it into an almost inoffensive register of abode.

<sup>35</sup> Obviously, the Romans' income from taxes was not limited to the tributum soli. According to L. Neesen (cited by Philip C. Schmitz, "Census," ABD 1:883–885), the Romans' fiscal income coming from the provinces also included variable taxes on assets, a fixed per capita tax (tributum capitis), income from imperial and public property, taxes on Roman citizens (who benefited from many exemptions) and extraordinary fundraising.

18.1–2). The aim was to produce a cadaster of properties, carried out with a “sworn declaration” (ἀκρόασις) from the owners (Ant. 18.3)<sup>36</sup> (see note 15). However, the land belonged only to the Lord God, and a census that aimed to value the land was essentially an insult to his authority over the country and his people. This is the sort of theocratic argument used by Judas the Galilean: “After God, submit to mortal men (the Romans) as their lords” (War 2.118; or 2.433).<sup>37</sup> The Jews were convinced “not to submit to the taxation” (μὴ ποιεῖσθαι τὰς ἀπογραφάς), when Quirinius was sent by Augustus to Judea to carry out the “valuation” (τιμητῆς) of their land (War 7.253).

Furthermore, in the lists of taxes paid during the reigns of the Seleucid rulers Demetrius I (162–150 BCE) and Demetrius II (145–140 BCE) (see 1 Macc 10:28–30; 11:34–35; Ant. 12.42) there is no mention of the tributum soli or the tax on the cadaster of rural property. Likewise, there is no petition to Archelaus regarding this from the Jewish leaders in 4 BCE (Ant. 17.204–205; War 2.4). The first real mention of a tributum soli applied to a Jewish territory by the authorities in charge is provided by Flavius Josephus with regard to the census by the legate of Syria, Quirinius (6 CE). Herod’s censuses only affected individuals. This means that there is still the possibility, without this having to be obligatory, of registering in the town from which one’s family originates,

---

<sup>36</sup> The term ἀποτίμησις or “établissement de l’impôt d’après un cadastre” (Lagrange, “Recensement,” 65), both in Flavius Josephus (Ant. 18.1–2) and in the Babatha texts (P. Yadin 16, l. 11), deals only with the cadastral valuation of rural land or agricultural property; in turn, ἀπογραφή, indicates, generically, any type of census or registration of people and/or property. Note that Luke (2:3) uses only the latter term. See Wieseler, Beiträge, 19; Schalit, Herodes, 281 n. 461; Brown, Birth, 554. On Quirinius’s census in Josephus, see M. Hirschsmüller, “Der Zensus des Quirinius nach der Darstellung des Josephus,” Jahrbuch für evangelikale Theologie 8 (1994): 33–68.

<sup>37</sup> According to Schürer and Vermes, eds., History, 1:419, what would have offended the Jews would not have been the census on property, but rather “the Roman tax itself,” and they cite War 2.118 and 2.433. Indeed, in this latter example, Flavius Josephus censures the Jews for the fact that they “would after God submit to mortal men (the Romans),” as only God is worthy of submission. However, War 2.433 has to be interpreted in terms of War 2.118, where he says that the feeling of submission comes from the paying of the tribute (φόρον τελεῖν) to the Romans. Both very concise texts have to be read in terms of Ant. 18.3, which details that which really upset the Jews was the fact that they had to give a sworn declaration of their estates (ἀκρόασιν) in relation with the census (ταῖς ἀπογραφαῖς). As L. H. Feldman, in the LCL edition, translates: “Although the Jews were at first shocked to hear of the registration of property...”. In effect, this was Quirinius’s mission: ἀποτιμησόμενός τε αὐτῶν τὰς οὐσίας (Ant. 18.2), which Feldman translates as: “in order to make an assessment of the property.”

as opposed to registering in the place where one lives. This procedure would seem to correspond to the traditional organisation of the Jewish people, based on lineage and family.

5. Interpreting Luke 2:1–2

Herod's census merited direct reference from Luke, historian and evangelist. This can seemingly be deduced from Luke 2:2. The phrasing, which is somewhat cryptic, allows for two possible translations: "when this first census took place, Quirinius was governor of Syria" or "this census was prior to that which was carried out when Quirinius was governor of Syria." In the first translation, Luke would interpret that Jesus was born at the time of Quirinius's census (6 CE).<sup>38</sup> However, if the second translation is adopted, equally plausible from the point of view of the Greek language, it means that Luke, or the historical source he uses, distinguishes between two censuses: that of Quirinius and another, earlier census; both of which, obviously, would have been carried out during Augustus's reign. This earlier (or "first") census, which Luke does not identify, could correspond perfectly to the census decreed by king Herod in 7/6 BCE, when Saturninus was governor of Syria.

The grammatical possibilities for interpreting the adjective "first" (census) (πρώτη) as a comparative cannot be dismissed out of hand. From P. E. Huschke (1840) to B. W. R. Pearson (1999) and S. E. Porter (2002), including M.-J. Lagrange (1911), F. M. Heichelheim (1938), G. Camps (1963) and N. Turner (1965), many have stressed that the comparative sense applied to the adjective πρώτος is not infrequent. There are different examples of this use, where the adjective, followed by a genitive as the second part of the comparison, is used instead of πρότερος, which would be the more appropriate grammatically.<sup>39</sup> The adjective πρώτη, here practically a synonym of πρότερον, is used almost as an adverb. The syntactic problem is that it requires an elision between the two different ideas being compared (i.e., “prior to [the census which was carried out] when”). Furthermore, the term for comparison is not a noun or a pronoun, but a sentence with a present participle as the verbal form, which would seem to make it a genitive absolute (“Quirinius governing [the province of] Syria”). However, elisions can be seen to be normal in comparisons, although in many cases there is an analogy or parallelism between the first and second term being compared.<sup>40</sup> The use of a participle phrase as the second term for comparison (“Quirinius governing Syria”) is unusual, but there are examples of similar constructions.<sup>41</sup> In short, the curious Greek syntax in Luke 2:2 does not rule out the solution proposed, which is admittedly more unnatural, but not beyond the boundaries of possibility for such a versatile writer as Luke.<sup>42</sup>

<sup>38</sup> Likewise, Justin (Dial. 78). From the present day, Palme, Rosen and Smith.

<sup>39</sup> The classic example is John 1:15, 30 ("he was before me" is the translation of πρώτος μου). Pearson ("Censuses," 280–281) takes a sentence from Athenaeus's Deipnosophistae (Egypt, ca. 200 CE) where πρώτη (some manuscripts use προτέρα) means "prior" or "before." In turn, Lagrange ("Recensement," 81) remarks that Luke never uses the comparative adjective πρότερος (see Acts 1:1).

However, there is an obvious objection to this proposal: if the census mentioned in Luke 2:1–2 is not Quirinius’s, why is it linked to him, instead of mentioning Saturninus, who governed Syria when Herod ordered the census? It should be remembered that until 6 CE and Quirinius, the governors of Syria had no jurisdiction over the censuses in Judea. As a result, relating the legate or governor of Syria at the time, Saturninus, to Herod’s census would have been, historically speaking, inaccurate.<sup>43</sup> In turn, if Luke 2:2 dates Herod’s census in relation to Quirinius’s, it is because this is “the census” par excellence, the first Roman census decreed in Judea. Likewise, in Acts 5:37, Luke significantly uses the expression “in the days of the census” (ἐν ταῖς ἡμέραις τῆς ἀπογραφῆς) to date the rising led by Judas the Galilean (Ant.

<sup>40</sup> Thus Dan 2:39 LXX; Matt 5:20; John 5:36. See Lagrange, “Recensement,” 83 n. 4.

<sup>41</sup> Thus Jer 36:2 LXX. See Lagrange, “Recensement,” 83–84. In turn, S. E. Porter considers Κυρηνίου to be the genitive in the comparison and ἡγεμονεύοντος a participle modifying the noun (“Census,” 175). The use, or not, of the feminine article ἡ before the noun ἀπογραφή is not an element that pushes the interpretation of the sentence in one sense or the other. Some qualified textual witnesses (first hand of the Sinaiticus, Vaticanus and Bezae) do not use it, and their reading seems preferable.

<sup>42</sup> This versatility leads him to use present participles with some unusual meanings, where they are translated with the particle “when” or “so.” This is the case in Luke 11:14, 29; Acts 7:30; 13:43; 14:20; 25:13. See Pearson, “Censuses,” 281. I. H. Marshall correctly writes: “The form of the sentence (Luke 2:2) is in any case odd, since it is hard to see why πρῶτος was introduced without any object of comparison” (The Gospel of Luke, NIGTC [Exeter: Paternoster, 1978], 104).

<sup>43</sup> This is Tertullian’s mistake when he assumes that Saturninus carried out the census in Judea (Adversus Martionem 4.9,10). The possibility that Quirinius was legate of Syria twice is extremely weak (Porter, “Census,” 172–173).

18.4–10). As a result, it should not come as a surprise that in Luke 2:2 the last of Herod's censuses is described not on its own terms, but in relation to Quirinius's census, by definition the census in first-century Jewish history.

There is another point that would seem to pose a question mark against the historical accuracy of Luke 2:1 and/or his sources: the mention of an "edict" (δῶγμα) published by Caesar Augustus, according to which a census had to be carried out which affected "all the empire" (πᾶσαν τὴν οἰκουμένην). However, as has been noted, there is no evidence of a decree for a census that affected all the inhabitants of the empire, without exception, in the lifetime of Augustus, or, for that matter, Luke (!), i.e., throughout the first century CE.<sup>44</sup> Why does Luke then talk of a universal census, involving the whole of the Roman Empire?

From the point of view of the historical discourse, there are two possibilities. Luke may have grouped together a number of provincial censuses promoted by Augustus into just one, thus converting them into a general census of the empire, or he may be referring, specifically, to the census of 8 BCE, number seventy-two since the founding of Rome, which affected all the Roman citizens in the empire (but only the Roman citizens!).

Let us take the first possibility. It should be noted that Luke similarly grouped together a number of famines that affected many parts of the empire under Claudius's reign into just one: "Agabus (a prophet) stood up and foretold by the Spirit that there would be a great famine over all the empire (ὅλην τὴν οἰκουμένην); and this took place in the days of Claudius" (Acts 11:28).<sup>45</sup> Likewise, it should be stressed that embellishing events (not making them up!) is common in ancient historiography. Thus, Flavius Josephus states that the emperor Tiberius expelled all of the Jewish community (πᾶν τὸ Ἰουδαϊκὸν) from Rome, and then we learn that those sent to the island of Sardinia to fight against the bandits were four thousand men of fighting age (Ant. 18.83–84).<sup>46</sup> Obviously, Rome had not expelled all the Jews! Indeed, in relation to the expulsion ordered by Claudius, Luke himself uses vocabulary similar to that of

<sup>44</sup> Schürer and Vermes, eds., History, 1:410 n. 48. The use of δῶγμα as a technical term (= "imperial edict") is seen in P. Fayum 20.22 and War 1.393 (Porter, "Census," 180).

<sup>45</sup> Example cited in Schürer and Vermes, eds., History, 1:426.

<sup>46</sup> This figure is corroborated by Tacitus (Annals 2.85), though he does include believers in the cult of Isis, who were also expelled.

Flavius Josephus, describing the imperial decree as requiring “all the Jews to leave Rome” (Acts 18:2).

The second possibility is that Luke wanted to refer to the seventy-second census of Roman citizens, decreed by the emperor alone (as Luke 2:1 indeed assumes!) in 8 BCE. Luke would know that this was a universal census, inasmuch as it affected Roman citizens throughout the empire, whether Italians or from colonies with ius italicum. Thus, the sentence in Luke 2:1 would be imprecise but not erroneous, as shortly before 7/6 BCE, the date when Herod would have ordered the last census of his reign, Augustus would have decreed one for the whole of the empire—despite its being addressed only to Roman citizens. In this case, Luke would have created one census from two, Herod’s and Augustus’s, which chronologically would have been very close together and not without some links, given the preferential treatment Herod gave the advice he received, directly or indirectly, from the imperial court.

In short, whether in terms of one or other of the possibilities, it is clear that Luke wished to accentuate the historical importance of the key events in his story: the birth of Jesus in Bethlehem of Judea during Herod’s reign. Luke connects this birth to a decree for a universal census issued by Augustus in 8 BCE and addressed solely to Roman citizens, which coincides, practically, with a census ordered soon after by Herod (7/6 BCE), to such an extent that the former overshadows the latter. However, Luke, as a good historian, provides another reference in terms of the censuses and mentions the census par excellence, the famous and controversial census of Judea, carried out by Publius Sulpicius Quirinius, Caesar’s legate in the province of Syria, in 6 CE. Luke’s intention is clear and it deserves to be emphasized, in his words: “for this was not done in a corner” (Acts 26:26).

6. The Reasons for Joseph and Mary’s Journey to Bethlehem (Luke 2:3–5)

If the census mentioned in Luke 2:2 was carried out according to Roman customs, those registering would have had to travel to the district headquarters, where the census offices were located, and present a sworn declaration of their property. This is how the censuses of Quirinius (6 CE) and Sextius Florentinus (127 CE) were carried out. In this case, Joseph’s journey to Bethlehem could be explained in this way: he would have had to register the property he owned in the town from which his family came.<sup>47</sup> Matthew's silence on Nazareth would add to the plausibility of this solution. However, Luke's story presents Joseph and Mary arriving in Bethlehem and searching without luck for accommodation at an establishment open to the public: the supposed reason for this being that Joseph does not have a home of his own or accommodation in Bethlehem, nor anyone willing to put them up.<sup>48</sup>

The journey to Bethlehem fits with the framework of a more judaico census carried out by Herod, in accordance with the practice following the regulations deriving from the Old Testament, which aims only to register individuals. In effect, according to Luke 2:3, "all went to be enrolled, each to his own city" (ἐκάστος εἰς τὴν ἑαυτοῦ πόλιν).<sup>49</sup> This expression, on its own, is vague, as it may mean the current place of residence or the family's place of origin. Thus, Joseph and Mary were not obliged by law to travel to Bethlehem, as registration in a census of individuals could have been carried out both in Nazareth, where they lived, or in Bethlehem, the place that Joseph was descended from (or, more problematically, where he had been born).<sup>50</sup> Furthermore, regis-

---

<sup>47</sup> On this hypothesis, the census office (Roman or in line with the Roman style) would not have been in Bethlehem, but perhaps in Herodium, the town which was the capital of the toparchy to which Bethlehem belonged, and thus probably the fiscal district's headquarters (War 3.55). In the case of Nazareth, the fiscal office would, without doubt, have been in Sepphoris.

<sup>48</sup> Rosen ("Geburtsdatum," 13) concludes, on the basis of Babatha's declaration, that Joseph would have owned fields and sheep (not houses!) in Bethlehem. Note, however, that Matthew mentions a "house" (2:11) at an unspecified time after Jesus' birth ("two years," if we are to go by 2:16). In turn, in Matthew, Joseph "took" his wife Mary, i.e., admits her into his house (1:20, 24). The corresponding mention of Bethlehem (2:1), Jesus' place of birth, would seem to show that Joseph's house is located in this town. In any case, Matthew does not explicitly affirm this: the coming of the angel to Joseph in his dreams is not located anywhere. In turn, Luke assures us that Mary has her home in Nazareth (1:56), and that she and Joseph "returned" (2:39) after their stay in Bethlehem (2:4). Babatha takes three days to carry out her cadastral declaration.

<sup>49</sup> Or "his own" (ἰδίαν) city, as is seen in part of the manuscript tradition (Alexandrinus, Byzantine and other families), should be interpreted to mean that Joseph was born in Bethlehem. Similarly, Justin (Dial. 78): "(Joseph) went up from Nazareth, where he lived (ἐνθα ᾤκει), to Bethlehem, to which he belonged (ὅθεν ἦν)." Note that the sentence in Luke 2:3 makes complete sense if the census involves a personal registration by the town's γραμματεὺς (in Nazareth or Bethlehem), in accordance with Jewish customs, and not the registration carried out at the district headquarters (Sepphoris or Herodium), as in Roman censuses.

<sup>50</sup> In a Roman style census where the key element is the cadastral declaration, women did not need to go physically to the census office. Their husband simply had to register them. However, in a Jewish style census, each individual, man and woman, had to register themselves. For this reason, Joseph and Mary had to register together and personally. As is stated in Schürer and Vermes, eds., History, 1:412: "There would have been no such necessity in a Roman census" (see note 20).

tering in Nazareth would have meant being able to avoid an onerous journey, especially given the fact that Mary was at an advanced stage of her pregnancy. Why, then, did they decide to go to Bethlehem to register and thus make Bethlehem Jesus' place of birth?<sup>51</sup>

The reason given by Luke to justify the journey to Bethlehem is apparently based on religious grounds: despite not living in Bethlehem, Joseph belongs to the "house (οἶκος) and lineage (πατριά) of David", and, thus, according to the traditional customs of Israel, as seen in the scriptures, he is linked to "his own city" (2:3), i.e. "the city of David, which is called Bethlehem" (2:4). The problems arising from the condition in which Mary, his legal wife, is to be found, do not dissuade a faithful and strict Jew, belonging to David's line, from going to register in the town from which his ancestors come: Bethlehem. The alternative solution, which would have seen them stay in Nazareth, would have been permitted by the Herodian authorities (not all the inhabitants of Nazareth could trace their ancestry accurately), and by the people of Nazareth, but this may not have been enough for a man of conviction and Davidic ancestry, such as Joseph. It is true that many other Jews must have remained in the towns in which they lived, even if they were descended from somewhere else: the Law was not always applied with the same intensity with which strict Jews, like Joseph, practised it. Likewise, Joseph's descending from Bethlehem could have been recent, and he should have known his relatives in Bethlehem.<sup>52</sup>

However, there is another reason (probably the main reason) that helps explain the surprising decision to have the child away from Nazareth. According to Luke 2:5, when Joseph and Mary start on their long journey to Bethlehem, Mary is his legal wife (τῆ ἐμνηστευμένη ἀὐτῷ), but they do not yet live together, nor have they celebrated their wedding; i.e., the solemn welcoming of Mary to Joseph's house, which is the culmination of the marriage. In effect, Luke 1:56 states that Mary, who is three months pregnant, returns from Judea, from the house of Zechariah and Elizabeth, to Nazareth, “to her home” (εἰς τὸν οἶκον αὐτῆς), not to Joseph’s home. All this, then, leads us to think that Mary spends most of her pregnancy at her parents’ house, until the time when Joseph is to take her to Bethlehem.<sup>53</sup> This situation highlights the unusual and irregular circumstances surrounding Mary’s pregnancy, which must have shocked the inhabitants of the small town of Nazareth, many of whom would have been relatives. The social pressure would have meant that it was advisable for Mary and Joseph to leave the suspicious and suffocating environment of Nazareth. The child, yet to be born, would have been marked by the doubt and irony of the vox populi, and Joseph decided, wisely, that he should be born somewhere else and far away, so as to be sheltered from the slander of the inhabitants of the town they lived in. The decree for the census offered the perfect chance for Joseph to take Mary away from the small town of Nazareth, and together they could escape a stifling atmosphere of hostility.<sup>54</sup>

---

<sup>51</sup> Mark D. Smith ("Of Jesus and Quirinius," CBQ 62 [2000]: 278–293) notes: "Joseph chose [his italics] to go to his ancestral home" (289).

<sup>52</sup> In Galilee, a land historically marked by important migrations, many Jews had migrated to Judea, which underwent problems of overpopulation, in the times of Aristobulus I and Alexander Jannaeus, Galilee's conquerors. In other words, Joseph's great-grandparents, grandparents, or even his parents (and, more problematically, Joseph himself) could have been among these immigrants who had moved to the re-conquered Galilee and settled down in Nazareth, a town neighbouring Sepphoris, the then capital of Galilee, and one of the centres with the highest population and economic movement in the territory.

The situation, however, does not improve when they reach Bethlehem. Luke 2:6–7 tells us that Mary has her first child once they have arrived in the town of Joseph’s ancestors. We do not know when they arrived in Bethlehem, with the “official” intention of registering in the census decreed by Herod. It is clear, though, that, according to Luke 2, Mary gives birth in difficult circumstances, in a stable with a “manger” (φάτνη). The anomalous nature of this event shows that Bethlehem saw the uncomfortable situation that Mary and Joseph found themselves in repeat itself, surrounded by malicious gossip and doubts as to the father of the child that was to be born. If the child was born in a stable in Bethlehem, it must mean that Joseph, surprisingly, could not find accommodation with his relatives, who were of David’s lineage just like him. The reason why he was refused can only be the doubts over Mary’s pregnancy, which Joseph, despite everything and everyone, accepts. From the point of view of the bien pensants, Mary’s pregnancy, beginning before Joseph had started to live with his wife, should have led him to divorce her, if he wanted “to save” his reputation as a pious and honourable Jew. Joseph, however, accepts the fact that a descendent of David is to be born surrounded by suspicion. Luke implicitly links the child’s birth with the disapproval of Joseph’s relatives living in Bethlehem. Indeed, even the option of the caravanserai does not resolve the problem of a place to stay (the καταλύμα is full of people) and the manger must have been a somewhat unusual crib for a descendent of David, born in his own town.

<sup>53</sup> Matt 1:24, where it is said that Joseph “took his wife,” also implies that Mary spends part (a long or short period?) of her pregnancy not living with him.

<sup>54</sup> The suspicions concerning the father of Jesus, which Joseph himself initially shares (see Matt 1:18–19), do not go away when Joseph accepts Mary and the child is thus to be born as his own. The shadow of illegitimacy never leaves Jesus completely. See Armand Puig i Tàrrach, Jesús: Un perfil biogràfic, 5th ed. (Barcelona: Proa, 2004), 165–172. Bruce Chilton (Intimate Biography, 3–22) makes Jesus a mamzer.

7. Conclusions

It seems likely that in the year 7/6 BCE, with Sentius Saturninus as governor of Syria, under the reign of king Herod, a census was decreed by the king that affected all his subjects. It was a census which was approved by Augustus, who had just decreed a census of the Roman citizens throughout the empire (reported in Luke 2:1), but which Herod was to carry out in accordance with Jewish customs (more judaico). For this reason, Herod’s census, unlike Quirinius’s Roman provincial census twelve years later (6 CE), did not require a tax declaration or valuation of property and thus did not see the ulterior application of a tributum soli. The census affected all adults, men and women, between 12/14 and 65 years old, and had both political (an oath of loyalty to Augustus and the king) and fiscal aims (payment of the annual, individual and equal tributum capitis).

It is not excessive then, either in terms of history or of philology, to distinguish between two censuses in Luke 2:2: “the first” (Herod’s census, in 7/6 BCE) and the census carried out “when Quirinius was governor of Syria” (6 CE). Jesus’ parents, Joseph and Mary, lived in Nazareth of Galilee, but decided to travel to Bethlehem for Herod’s census, in accordance with the Jewish customs for censuses (Luke 2:3). Joseph thus decides against Nazareth and chooses Bethlehem, where his family had emigrated from (Luke 2:4). This choice is understandable in the case of a pious Jew belonging to the lineage of David, the great king of Israel. However, the definitive reason for his decision can be seen in the anomalous social situation in which he and Mary are to be found—a subject for gossip in Nazareth. Mary, who is as yet only betrothed to Joseph (without ever having lived under the same roof together), was pregnant (Luke 2:5). Joseph, however, does not divorce Mary and maintains the marriage agreement (Matt 1:19, 24). Nonetheless, the strong social pressures and malicious doubts over the identity of the child's father are decisive in leading to Joseph and Mary's leaving Nazareth, with the intention that Mary should have the child in Bethlehem—a more favourable setting. On arrival in Bethlehem, the reaction of Joseph's relatives cannot have been very positive, as, according to Luke 2:6–7, Mary gave birth to Jesus in precarious conditions, in a stable on the outskirts of the town where David had been born.<sup>55</sup>

---

<sup>55</sup> An extended version of this study, entitled “The Birth of Jesus,” is to be published in the book Studies on the Historical Jesus (Tübingen: Mohr Siebeck, 2010) (provisional title).

WORDS OF JESUS IN PAUL:
ON THE THEOLOGY AND PRAXIS OF THE JESUS TRADITION

PETR POKORNÝ

1. The Logia of Jesus on the Lips of the Apostle Paul and of the Christian Prophets

One aspect of the investigation of the relationship between the Easter proclamation and the pre-Easter Jesus tradition is the examination of the role played by the words of Jesus in Paul. For the period before Paul, we can draw only on indirect reconstructions which examine the form and function of the traditional logia which were written down and collected later, and edited to a greater or lesser extent. Our sources here are the reconstructed Q, the synoptic gospels, the Gospel of Thomas, the Gospel of John, and some other extra-canonical texts. The decisive material is contained in those post-Pauline texts; but if we wish to investigate the manner of its earliest tradition, we are obliged to take the Corpus Paulinum into account.

It is well known that although Paul presupposes Jesus in his theology, he appeals almost exclusively to the end of his earthly history: to Jesus' death on the cross, the factuality of which is proved by his burial, and to the resurrection, to which the apostle himself can bear witness on the basis of his personal experience of the exalted Lord. All that we learn about the life of Jesus is that he was born as a Jew (Gal 4:4) and was a descendant of David (Rom 1:3), that he had brothers (1 Cor 9:5), one of whom was named James (Gal 1:19; cf. 1 Cor 15:7), and that he gathered disciples, one of whom was named Cephas/Peter (Gal 2:14; 1 Cor 9:5, cf. 15:5a) and another John (Gal 2:9).<sup>1</sup>

Besides this, Paul cites some individual words of the Lord (κύριος). The context makes it clear that these are words of the risen and exalted Jesus, who is communicating with the apostle. Nevertheless, their contents and to some extent also their vocabulary correspond to the logia which were later written down as words of the earthly Jesus. For

---

<sup>1</sup> For further details, cf. Victor P. Furnish, Jesus according to Paul (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1993), 11–13.

Paul, the κύριος was Jesus, both as the exalted Christ and as the earthly Jesus of Nazareth, whose brother (ὁ ἀδελφὸς τοῦ κυρίου) he came to know personally (cf. Gal 1:19). In connection with the concrete words of the Lord, there is a striking link between these two dimensions of the concept of κύριος in 1 Cor 11:23–26a par., where Paul draws on liturgical tradition and declares that the Lord (most probably: the exalted Lord) who was “handed over” or “betrayed” (παρεδίδεται, v. 23) on the last night of his earthly life has communicated this to him directly (παρέλαβον ἀπὸ τοῦ κυρίου).

Similarly, Paul proclaims two verdicts on questions of church law in the name of the exalted Lord (κύριος παραγγέλει/διέταξεν), both of which are also closely related to the pre-Easter tradition of the logia of Jesus. One of these verdicts forbids divorce (1 Cor 7:10–11; cf. Matt 5:32 par.; Mark 10:11–12 par.); the other concerns the apostles’ right to receive support from those who hear their word (1 Cor 9:14 [9:4]; cf. Matt 10:10b par.). Paul appeals here to words associated with Jesus, which he distinguishes from his own words (7:8, 10, 25) although he believes that he too is a bearer of the Spirit; and these are words which he has received at an earlier date.<sup>2</sup> This unchallengeable piece of evidence is highly significant. Luke attests that such quotations of the words of the Lord Jesus in Christian preaching were common, when he has Paul cite a logion of the Lord (probably an agraphon) in the apostle’s farewell discourse in Miletus (Acts 20:17–38, at v. 35c).

We must however also note that the apostle not only proclaims the words of the Lord with authority and in keeping with the tradition; he also works as a prophet and a bearer of the Spirit who places his own judgment almost on the same level as the words of the Lord (1 Cor 7:7, 8, 12, 17, 25), although he concedes that his opinion is not absolute (νομίζω, 7:26). He both hands on the words of the Lord and works as one who has the gifts of the Spirit. Indeed, he can even speak of his ecstatic voyage to the heavenly sphere (2 Cor 12:2–3), to which there is both a parallel in terms of the phenomenology of religion and a counterpart in Ascension of Isaiah 6–14.<sup>3</sup> It is clear that this close link between the prophetic office and the ministry of teaching was not found only in the apostle Paul. At 1 Cor 14:2–4, he emphasizes the importance of the edifying prophetic discourse, which he contrasts with speaking in tongues (itself surely also a gift of the Spirit). His Corinthian adversaries obviously held a different view; but Paul argues against them, not by relativizing prophecy, but by subordinating it to the criterion of building up the community. The conflict here is between two divergent views of the pneumatological gift of prophecy: one view saw a close link between this gift and the tradition of the logia of Jesus. These are authentic experiences of the Spirit, connected to the Easter upheaval; but it was inevitable that since those who had these experiences were persons of their own historical period, they would also interpret them in the hellenistic category of “inspiration.”

---

<sup>2</sup> H.-W. Kuhn, “Der irdische Jesus bei Paulus als traditionsgeschichtliches und theologisches Problem,” ZThK 67 (1970): 295–320, at 296–298; Nikolaus Walter, “Paul and the Early Christian Tradition,” most recently in Paul and Jesus, ed. A. J. M. Wedderburn, JSNTSup 37 (Sheffield: Sheffield Academic Press, 1991), 51–80, at 54–55. On the distinction between the words of the Lord and the words of the prophet, cf. F. Neugebauer, “Geistsprüche und Jesuslogien,” ZNW 53 (1962): 218–228, esp. 227.

This means that a considerable portion of the Jesus tradition was transmitted by the prophets. And this in turn means above all that the prophet not only proclaimed the word, but gave an authoritative commentary. For example, Paul says as a prophet that if the unbelieving partner wishes to dissolve the marriage, he should be permitted to do so (1 Cor 7:15–16). Another example: it is the right, but not the duty of the apostle to live off the economic support provided by the community. It almost sounds like a general rule when he says that the believing marriage partner is not to be “enslaved” by the words of the Lord (οὐ δεδούλωται, cf. 1 Cor 7:15). Paul himself regarded the apostle’s right as a privilege, not as a duty, and this is why he made no use of it (... εἰς τὸ μὴ καταχρησασθαι τῇ ἐξουσίᾳ μου, 9:18), even though his opponents can misuse his conduct as an argument against his apostolic character (9:3ff., 15–17).

All this also means that the prophet has selected the words of Jesus in accordance with his own inspired judgment. Even in the case of a relatively faithful reproduction, this is a deep and creative incision into the Jesus tradition.

In many passages, the apostle can use his own words or an interpretative paraphrase of the tradition to express his conviction that something is in keeping with the will of the exalted Christ. The apocalyptic utterance in 1 Thess 4:15[-17] is sometimes interpreted in this sense. Paul proclaims this ἐν λόγῳ κυρίου, “with a word of the Lord.” He does not say: “The Lord commands...” And this may mean that although the Lord with his authority stands behind these words (cf. 3 Kgs 13:1,3 [LXX]; Sir 48:3,5), they need not be a direct quotation from the tradition of the logia of Jesus.<sup>4</sup>

---

<sup>3</sup> Cf. Martin Hengel and Anna-Marie Schwemer, Paulus zwischen Damaskus und Antiochien (Tübingen: Mohr-Siebeck, 1998), 47.

There is thus a fluid transition between the literally transmitted and quoted words of Jesus and those utterances of the apostle (as a bearer of the Spirit) which are authorized by the Lord, although it is possible to distinguish clearly the two poles of the one axis. At one pole of the axis stand those words of the exalted Lord which are not connected with the Jesus tradition, e.g. the response of the Lord to the apostle’s prayer, which was received in a dream or in an ecstatic act of hearing: “My grace is sufficient for you, for my power is made perfect in weakness” (2 Cor 12:9). These words are meant for the apostle alone, and thus clearly have a different function from the logia from the Jesus tradition which were meant for the whole community; nevertheless, the publication of these words in the framework of the epistle gives them a paradigmatic meaning for the addressees. The apostle is also a prophet who makes known the guidance which he has received from the exalted Lord, so that this may benefit the entire community.

In the center of the axis stand words which are not introduced as logia of the Lord, but are nevertheless different from the other apostolic instructions. In terms of their form, they are prophetic utterances which communicate the mystery (μυστήριον) as part of the all-embracing plan of God:<sup>5</sup> the word about hope in death (1 Cor 15:51) and the word about the eschatological salvation of the disobedient Israel (Rom 11:25). These are words with an apocalyptic character, which draw from the Easter confessions of faith inferences which belong in another category than the sayings of the Lord,<sup>6</sup> although the Jesus tradition is one factor that has influenced their formulation.<sup>7</sup> 1 Cor 15:51 resembles the word of

<sup>4</sup> Otfried Hofius, “Agrapha,” TRE 2:103–110, at 103; Peter Stuhlmacher, “Jesus-tradition im Römerbrief?” ThBeitr 14 (1983): 240–250, at 243.

<sup>5</sup> Petr Pokorný, Der Brief des Paulus an die Epheser, ThHKNZ 10.2 (Leipzig: Evangelische Verlagsanstalt, 1992), 140–142.

<sup>6</sup> Gerhard Delling, “Geprägte Jesus-Tradition im Urchristentum,” CV 4 (1961): 59–71, at 67; Fritz Neugebauer, “Geistsprüche,” 222; cf. M. Eugene Boring, Sayings of the Risen Christ (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1982), 12, 34, 127.

<sup>7</sup> Boring, Sayings, 235; cf. 126.

the Lord at 1 Thess 4:15 and is related to Mark 13:26–27; Rom 11:25 has something of a parallel in Luke 21:24 (cf. Luke [Q] 13:34–35).<sup>8</sup>

Since 1 Cor 13:2 makes a link between Christian prophecy in general and the knowledge of mysteries (cf. 1 Cor 2:6–8)—and it is obvious that the real mystery is contained in the proclamation of Christ (1 Cor 2:6–16)—it is clear that the Christian prophets also preserved the sayings of Jesus. Inspired by the Spirit, they evaluated these and made a selection which they proclaimed, where necessary, in an adapted, interpreted, or concretized form.

The prophet and the teacher were two charismatic figures who were closely linked, and indeed often worked in a personal union (cf. Did. 11.1–6). This is no new discovery: M. E. Boring has made important studies of the role of prophecy in the transmission of the words of Jesus,<sup>9</sup> and he sees the Christian prophet as a spokesman of the risen Christ;<sup>10</sup> many sayings were derived from the Jesus tradition. Boring has attempted to restruct Christian prophecy on the basis of the Revelation of John, but methodological considerations argue against this approach: the detailed description of a vision, partly following already established literary forms, belongs to the prophetic ministry but is not the same thing as the proclamation of the words of Jesus in a sermon or instruction. Nevertheless, Boring has rightly underlined the fact that the prophet John genuinely writes his extensive apocalyptic text in his own name (Rev 1:4, 9). Through him, it is the risen Lord who addresses the communities and who concludes the letters with direct, specific exhortations: 2:7, 11, 17, 26–29; 3:5–6, 12–13, 21–22. Rev 16:15 is also a direct exhortation by the Lord, and the prophet even communicates the words of God the Father at 21:5–8. These are not words from the Jesus tradition. Here, it is the prophet himself whose own authority must guarantee the inherent authenticity of that tradition.

Basically, this corresponds to the Pauline data. Paul makes a distinction between the words of the Lord which he addresses to the community and his own personal ecstatic encounters with Lord (as at 2 Cor 12:2–4); paradoxically, the only words which Paul transmits from these encounters is the saying about weakness (12:9), which has a different form from other sayings of the Lord. 1 Cor 11:23–25 is a good example of how the words which come from the κύριος can at the same time be linked to the earthly Jesus.

<sup>8</sup> Cf. Felix Flückiger, "Luk. 21,20–24 und die Zerstörung Jerusalems," ThZ 28 (1972): 385–390, esp. 389. On the link between teaching and prophecy, cf. 1 Cor 14:19, 31.

<sup>9</sup> Cf. n. 6 above, and idem, The Continuing Voice of Jesus: Christian Prophecy and the Gospel Tradition (Louisville: Westminster/John Knox Press, 1991).

<sup>10</sup> Boring, Sayings, 16.

Boring also recognized that the prophetic transmission of the words of Jesus tended to form groups of thematically related sayings (the core of the Sermon on the Mount, the instruction of the disciples, parables about the kingdom of God, etc.) which (like the Old Testament prophets) also contain sapiential sayings adapted to the apocalyptic context (e.g. [Q] Luke 12:22–34 par.). The prophets were conscious of being emissaries of the Wisdom of God (Luke 11:49).<sup>11</sup> M. Sato has very plausibly argued that the bearers of the Q tradition were early Christian prophets who had been close to Jesus before Easter.<sup>12</sup> At an early date, the Greek redactor of the Gospel of Thomas understood this text in a similar way, viz. as a collection and transmission of the words of the living Jesus (Ἰησοῦς ὁ ζῶν, Coptic Iêsous etôn<sup>h</sup>) which were received by revelation (prologue: P. Oxy. 654.1; NHC II 32.10), although more than half the logia are related to synoptic tradition. This means that prophecy transmitted the Jesus tradition, albeit in a creative way.

This allows us to draw some important conclusions. (a) Paul knew several logia of Jesus;<sup>13</sup> clearly, he learned these as a larger unit. (b) He distinguished these from other paraenesis, teaching, and prophecy, as well as from the words which Jesus addressed to him personally. (c) However, he himself selected and interpreted these sayings with the sovereignty of a prophet inspired by the Spirit. (d) The fact that he felt no need to comment on this process permits us to conclude that other prophets preserved and presented the words of Jesus in a similar manner. The form of individual, relatively self-contained logia, which is taken by most of the material about Jesus in the synoptic gospels, supports this conclusion. (e) This means that the transmission of the words of Jesus was not assured by instruction of a rabbinical nature (which would be an anachronism) nor by anonymous channels of the collective community tradition.<sup>14</sup> Rather, this transmission was institutionalized to a significant degree (especially in the case of the logia) in the elementary manner which I have described.

<sup>11</sup> The debate about whether Q is a sapiential (John S. Kloppenborg, The Formation of Q [Philadelphia: Fortress, 1987], 238–240) or a prophetic collection (Migaku Sato, Q und Prophetie, WUNT 2.29 [Tübingen: Mohr-Siebeck, 1988], 105–107) is in reality a debate about early Christian Christology. Kloppenborg underestimates the importance of Easter as a fundamental datum of the Christian faith.

<sup>12</sup> Sato, Q, 409 etc.

<sup>13</sup> Cf. e.g. David L. Dungan, The Sayings of Jesus in the Church of Paul (Oxford: Blackwell, 1971), 149–150.

These first indisputable conclusions prompt a serious question: Why do we find so few explicit quotations of the words of the Lord in the Pauline letters? As we shall see, Paul sometimes bases his arguments on the Jesus tradition without telling his readers what he is doing.

In literary terms, we are confronted on the one hand by the problem of religious pseudepigraphy, e.g. in the Johannine writings where we meet freely elaborated discourses of Jesus which are formulated by the authors with only a very indirect intention of corresponding to the words of the Lord. On the other hand, the anonymity with which several sayings from the tradition are cited is typical of the Corpus Paulinum. A more precise definition of the way in which Paul handed on the words of Jesus is closely linked to the explanation of this state of affairs.

2. Relativizing the Problem

We can solve this problem by calling into question what I have just said, and doubting the existence of words of Jesus in Paul. Frans Neiryck, a very conscientious scholar, has concluded that apart from the words in 1 Corinthians 7 and 9, the existence of logia of Jesus in Paul cannot be demonstrated:<sup>15</sup> the institution of the Lord's Supper is a liturgical tradition, and although one cannot exclude a priori the possibility that the other allusions are connected to individual logia of Jesus, these can just as well be analogous formulations. We must take this objection seriously, and bear in mind that our arguments in favor of Paul's knowledge of other words of Jesus rest only on the congruence of a number of indirect indications.

If Neiryck's conclusion were the last word on the subject, Paul's lack of interest in the Jesus tradition must be theologically motivated; it could not be the fruit of mere neglect or indifference. In this context, scholars have often quoted 2 Cor 5:16, where Paul writes that we as believers know no one—not even Christ—“according to the flesh” (κατὰ σάρκα).<sup>16</sup> Although most scholars understand the κατὰ σάρκα to refer not to the person of Christ, but rather to a mode of knowledge which is not yet influenced by Easter,<sup>17</sup> it is clear that Paul concentrated his attention on the new post-Easter presence of the Christ who had directly intervened in his life (Gal 1:15; 1 Cor 9:1; 15:8). Theologically, his principal argument is the Christ of the Christian confessions of faith, because the beginning of the new age is linked to him (Gal 4:4f.; 2 Cor 5:17) and because it is through the proclamation of Christ as the risen Lord that the God of grace reveals himself, the God who makes the dead alive (2 Cor 1:9). It is only this Jesus, recognized as Lord, who can be a model: but the model is not his conduct during his earthly life, but the reality of the incarnation to which the post-Easter confessions bear witness. This incarnation reaches its summit in his death on the cross (2 Cor 8:9; Phil 2:5–7) and becomes the model of humility and of the willingness to sacrifice one’s life, as Rudolf Bultmann has convincingly argued.<sup>18</sup>

---

<sup>14</sup> M. Dibelius, Die Formgeschichte des Evangeliums, 5th ed. (Tübingen: Mohr-Siebeck, 1965), 5.

<sup>15</sup> Frans Neiryck, "Paul and the Sayings of Jesus," in L'Apôtre Paul, ed. A. Vanhoye (Leuven: Peeters, 1986), 265–321.

This priority of the Easter confession goes a long way to explain the fact that Paul does not quote the words of Jesus when he expresses the fundamental affirmations of the faith.

We can and must criticize Bultmann for underestimating faith’s need for orientation in the world, which always entails a concrete confrontation with existing traditions. And we must ask why Paul paid so little attention to the tradition of the words of Jesus, although this tradition was cultivated in the Christian communities and was very much alive there—and although he himself knew at least a part of it. All these are legitimate questions which we must put to Bultmann; but there is no

---

<sup>16</sup> J. W. Frazer, “Paul’s Knowledge of Christ. II Cor V.16 Once More,” NTS 17 (1970–1971): 292–313, at 300–301; H.-W. Kuhn, “Der irdische Jesus bei Paulus als traditionsgeschichtliches und theologisches Problem,” ZThK 67 (1970): 295–320, at 307.

<sup>17</sup> Josef B. Souček, “Wir kennen Christus nicht mehr nach dem Fleisch” (1959), most recently published in Bibelauslegung als Theologie, ed. P. Pokorný and J. B. Souček, WUNT 100 (Tübingen: Mohr-Siebeck, 1997), 183–197; C. Wolff, “The Apostolic Knowledge of Christ: Exegetical Reflexion on 2 Corinthians 5,14ff.,” in Paul and Jesus, ed. Wedderburn, 81–98.

<sup>18</sup> Rudolf Bultmann, “Die Bedeutung des geschichtlichen Jesus für die Theologie des Paulus” (1929), republished in idem, Glauben und Verstehen (Tübingen: Mohr-Siebeck, 1933), 188–213, at 198, 202, 208, 211.

challenging the starting point. Paul's theology begins with an event, the substance of which is exceedingly difficult to grasp, viz. his encounter with the living Lord.

We can show what this means for our problem by looking at the way Paul speaks about the address of God as "Abba." Only a few scholars doubt the authenticity of the Lord's Prayer as a genuine prayer of Jesus, and it is probable that Paul too knew it. He quotes the address of God as "Abba" in worship (together with the Greek translation "Father") at decisive points in his argumentation (Gal 4:6a; Rom 8:15); this has a parallel in the Gethsemane pericope (Mark 14:36 par.) and is identical with the beginning of the Lord's Prayer (Luke 11:2; Matt 6:9).<sup>19</sup> But he does not introduce this as a word of the Lord. Rather, he emphasizes that it is the Spirit (of the Son) of God through whom the exalted Christ inspires and empowers the Christians to address God in this way.

The absence of direct quotations of words of the Lord thus constitutes no fundamental contradiction of Paul's theology. Here, Bultmann's position has lost nothing of its relevance.

3. Secondary Words of Jesus?

As I have said, however, the life of faith must seek a point of orientation in the world, and we must therefore ask what role the words of Jesus play for Paul in this context. Only a naïve hypercriticism would maintain that he knew no logia other than those he directly cites, or that he was completely uninterested in this tradition. His conversion at Damascus, which he experienced as an encounter with the risen Christ, must necessarily also have awakened his interest in the earthly Jesus. He writes at Gal 1:18 that he went to Jerusalem—probably only three years after his conversion—in order to get to know Cephas (Peter), ἱστορήσαι Κηφᾶν.<sup>20</sup> This most likely means that he acquired information from Peter about Jesus and the beginnings of the Christian movement. This corresponds not only to the semantic investigation of the verb ἱστορεῖν (ἱστορήσαι = "to get information from")<sup>21</sup> and to the substantially parallel use of προσανατίθεναι (“to consult” [an expert]) in v. 16, but can also be inferred from a simple reflection on the purpose of Paul’s visit to Peter.

<sup>19</sup> Ulrich Wilckens, Der Brief an die Römer, EKK 6.2 (Zürich: Benzinger, 1980), 57.

<sup>20</sup> The meaning "to get to know" is presupposed by Otfried Hofius, "Gal 1,18: ἱστορήσαι Κηφᾶν," ZNW 75 (1984): 73–85.

<sup>21</sup> The interpretation of ἱστορήσαι as "acquiring information" was proposed by George D. Kilpatrick nearly fifty years ago: "Galatians 1:18 ἱστορήσαι Κηφᾶν," in

It is therefore reasonable to assume that Paul knew some parts of the Jesus tradition, and this makes it all the more surprising that he does not appeal to sayings of the Lord at a number of decisive points in his letters where his argumentation runs close to such logia. The principal texts here are the paraenesis in Rom 12:14, 17–21, where Paul exhorts his readers to love their enemies, and Rom 14:14, about the relativization of the soteriological significance of observing the purity regulations. The striking parallels are Luke 6:27–29 and Mark 7:18 par.

One possible explanation is that Paul does not in fact cite any words of Jesus in such passages, but either elaborates the sapiential tradition (for the passages in Rom 12, cf. e.g. Prov 3:7; 25:21–22; Deut 32:35; T. Benj. 4–5) or makes a synthesis in brief maxims of what Christians had experienced in the aftermath of the apostolic decree.

Some scholars go so far as to suggest that the relevant logia entered the Jesus tradition only at a later date.

J. Sauer has attempted to demonstrate the secondary character of the appeal to love one’s enemies in Luke 6: this logion was generated in the early church and reached Paul via the preliminary stages of Q.<sup>22</sup> However, the development in the early church tended rather to make the instructions more specific; and the passages in the apostolic fathers (especially Did. 1.2–5 and Justin, 1 Apol. 15.9–13) which cite the exhortation to love one’s enemies show that these words belonged to the core of the Jesus tradition. Because they were so radical, however, they were soon relegated to the background: for example, there is no allusion to them anywhere in the lengthy text of Hermas’s Shepherd.

The reflections by E.P. Sanders in his book Jesus and Judaism have found a greater echo. He argues that if Jesus had really called the law (Torah) into question in the radical form that we find in Mark 7:15, 18, 20 par. (cf. Gos. Thom 14), then it would not have been necessary for

---

New Testament Essays: Studies in Memory of T. W. Manson, ed. A. J. B. Higgins (Manchester: Manchester University Press, 1959), 144–149; he is supported by J. D. G. Dunn, “The Relationship between Paul and Jerusalem according to Galatians 1 and 2,” NTS 28 (1982): 461–478, and idem, “Once More Gal 1,18 ἱστορήσαι Κηφῶν,” ZNW 76 (1985): 138–139.

<sup>22</sup> J. Sauer, “Traditionsgeschichtliche Erwägungen zu den synoptischen und paulinischen Aussagen über die Feindesliebe und Wiedervergeltungsverzicht,” ZNW 76 (1985): 1–28, esp. 25–27.

Paul to fight so vehemently to ensure freedom from the law as a path to salvation.<sup>23</sup> Jesus was a loyal Jew—not a Pharisee, but an apocalyptic representative of covenantal nomism, a “reform Jew” who limited his activity to Israel (Matt 10:5.23). Sanders has failed to notice the fact that the Christians of Jewish descent who lived among the Jews in a Jewish environment had the tendency to emphasize those traits in Jesus’ conduct which were faithful to Torah, and that a conflict within the community lies behind all that Paul has to say about these issues. When Paul affirms, in words closely related to Mark 7:18, that purity comes from within rather than from without, he introduces this aphorism with the words: “I know and am fully convinced in the Lord Jesus”<sup>24</sup> (οἶδα καὶ πέπεισμαι ἐν κυρίῳ Ἰησοῦ, Rom 14:14a). This does not mean that Paul is quoting a traditional logion of the Lord, but rather that he is drawing here the profoundest consequence of his encounter with the risen Lord. It is impossible to overlook the substantial analogy to Mark 7:1–23, a narrative which is surely not wholly the invention of the Christian communities. It remains most likely that Paul is alluding here to a logion of Jesus; but even if this is not the case, he was at least aware of the inner coherence between his maxims and what he knew about Jesus’ behavior. It is very improbable that Paul would have invented the maxims, only in order to relativize them at once, and that Mark (as his direct or indirect pupil) would have attributed them to Jesus without the Pauline relativization.

Scholarly studies of this kind have thus not signaled a radical turning point in the investigation of the relationship between Paul and the Jesus tradition. Nevertheless, they have shown how the Jesus tradition may have been influenced by post-Easter Christian prophetic instruction, with its tendency to the formation of clear regulations. And this makes it easier to understand Paul’s oscillating manner of citation: The Lord says, I am convinced in the Lord, etc.

Besides this, the present section has confirmed our reflections in section 2 above. Even if the words in question are a quotation from the tradition, the decisive point for Paul is their inherent correspondence to his own experience of Christ.

<sup>23</sup> E. P. Sanders, Jesus and Judaism (London: SCM Press, 1985), 11–12, 264–266.

<sup>24</sup> Following the German translation by Ernst Käsemann, “Ich weiß und bin im Herrn Jesus völlig überzeugt”; see An die Römer, HNT 8a (Tübingen: Mohr-Siebeck, 1973), ad loc.

4. Hidden Polemic?

At the beginning of the last century, A. Resch collected allusions and indirect quotations of the words of Jesus in Paul.<sup>25</sup> On closer examination, however, it can be seen that most of these passages belong only to the general treasury of Christian (and sometimes also Hellenistic Jewish) religious phrases.

In the 1960's, J. M. Robinson identified in 1 Cor 4:6–13 motifs and formulations which look like polemic against the beatitudes of the Sermon on the Plain or the Sermon on the Mount.<sup>26</sup> The Corinthian Christians regarded themselves as rich, wise, and replete, and believed that they already ruled as kings with Christ in the kingdom of God: clearly, they applied to themselves the promises in the beatitudes (Luke 6:20b–21; cf. Matt 5:3–6). The apostle objects ironically that he himself is still poor, hungry, thirsty, and weak: he faces death, but he would like to rule along with the Corinthians (συμβασιλεύειν, 1 Cor 4:8b). They believed that through faith they were already in the new aeon, and therefore judged (κρίνειν) the others ahead of time (πρὸ καιροῦ, 4:5).<sup>27</sup> This recalls the warning at 2 Tim 2:18 against heretics who say that the resurrection has already taken place—a warning that is likewise introduced by an emphasis on patience and on the dying which opens up the path to a share in Christ's rule (συμβασιλεύειν, 2 Tim 2:12).<sup>28</sup>

<sup>25</sup> A. Resch, Der Paulinismus und die Logia Jesu, TU 26 (Leipzig: Hinrichs, 1904).

<sup>26</sup> James M. Robinson, "Kerygma und Geschichte im Neuen Testament," in H. Köster and idem, Entwicklungslinien durch die Welt des Frühen Christentums (Tübingen: Mohr-Siebeck 1971), 21–66, at 41–43.

<sup>27</sup> The reaction to contempt, persecution, and slander is blessing, patience, and friendliness (1 Cor 4:12b–13a). This corresponds to the exhortations in Luke 6:27–29 par., making it clear that these are allusions to a version of the beatitudes from the basic stock of the Sermon on the Mount. Cf. also Fritz Lang, Die Briefe an die Korinther, NTD 7 (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1986), 65: "Words of Jesus echo in the antitheses in vv. 12b and 13a."

<sup>28</sup> This seems to be a synthesis of the experiences recorded in 1 Corinthians, if we follow W. Lütgert and R. Bultmann in interpreting those who deny the resurrection (1 Cor 15:12–14) and reject baptism on behalf of the dead (15:29) as gnostic enthusiasts. We can find later evidence of this kind of danger in Polycarp, Phil. 7.1, where the rejection of this position has already become a topos of paraenesis. More recent exegesis regards Paul's opponents as "spiritual" persons who believe in an immaterial immortality: cf. Gerhard Sellin, Der Streit um die Auferstehung der Toten, FRLANT 138 (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1986), 29–30, 36–37, 212. Christian Wolff, Der erste Brief des Paulus an die Korinther 2, ThHkNT 7.2 (Berlin: Evangelische Verlagsanstalt, 1982), 212–215, takes a similar view, but he derives the position of Paul's opponents not from gnosis, but from Jewish-hellenistic wisdom teaching: wisdom is identical with the Spirit of God and can dwell in the souls of the pious (Wis 1:6; 7:7,

We can of course discredit the individual allusions<sup>29</sup> and question whether Paul knew the Jesus tradition, but the sheer number of possible allusions surely supports the view that the apostle's adversaries were arguing on the basis of logia from the Jesus tradition and that what we have here is a conflict about how the inheritance from the Lord was to be interpreted.

According to Dieter Georgi, Paul's polemic in 1 Cor 2:14–7:4 and 2 Corinthians 10–13 is directed against ideas which correspond to the Christology of some of the novelistic miracle narratives in the synoptic gospels; these ideas may have come from the enthusiasts.<sup>30</sup> Taking these hypotheses as his starting point, H.-W. Kuhn has attempted to explain why the words of Jesus are almost absent from Paul: the apostle refrains from quoting the logia of Jesus, and does not mention the miracle stories linked to Jesus' name, because he sees a contradiction between these and the Easter faith.<sup>31</sup> This negative assertion is however an inadequate explanation of the fact that Paul quotes so few words of Jesus, for the simple reason that he quotes such logia three times in 1 Corinthians. Nevertheless, we must take seriously the positive theological interpretation which Georgi offers: "In Paul's eyes, genuine Christian preaching is not concerned primarily with knowledge of Jesus, but rather with taking on oneself the fate of Jesus..."<sup>32</sup> The phenomenon to which he draws attention here is connected with the post-Easter orientation of faith in Paul, and is well known. It has not been sufficiently taken into account in the investigation of the Jesus tradition in Paul.

For Paul, the Christ who suffered in his life on earth, who died, and who was exalted is the Lord who leads him through his Spirit and who also inspires him occasionally to cite some words from the Jesus tradition.

Despite all their one-sidedness, these studies have brought to light a hitherto underestimated dimension of the spiritual battle that is reflected in the Pauline letters. W. Lütgert had already demonstrated that this 22; 9:17). After death, the soul is in God's hand (3:1; 8:13, 17). Lang regards the basic position of Paul's adversaries as "pneumatic" (Korinther, 208, 218).

---

<sup>29</sup> Christopher M. Tuckett, "1 Corinthians and Q," JBL 102 (1983): 139–191.

<sup>30</sup> Dieter Georgi, Die Gegner des Paulus im 2. Korintherbrief, WMANT 11 (Neukirchen: Neukirchener Verlag, 1964), 251. On perfectionism in the context of the question of salvation, cf. especially W. Lütgert, Freiheitspredigt und Schwärmergeist in Korinth, BFChTh 12.3 (Gütersloh: Bertelsmann, 1908), 128–130.

<sup>31</sup> Kuhn, "Der irdische Jesus," 317, 320.

<sup>32</sup> Georgi, Gegner, 290 n. 3.

was a battle on two fronts: both against the Hellenistic enthusiasts with their insistence on perfectionism as the path to salvation, and against the Jerusalem “pillars” with their underestimation of Easter. At this point we can see that this also involved a conflict about the interpretation of the Jesus tradition.<sup>33</sup>

We will return in the last section of this essay to a number of logia from the Jesus tradition which Paul obviously relativizes. What we have said up to now suffices to show (a) that it is possible that Paul’s opponents employed logia of Jesus in their arguments, but at the same time (b) that this did not lead the apostle to reject the authority of the words of the Lord—since it is precisely in his correspondence with Corinth that he quotes them three times.

5. A Tradition with Defined Boundaries?

From the 1960’s onwards, a number of studies have been published of the rules of the rabbinic transmission from teacher to pupil, as these are recorded from the Tannaitic period. Some of these monographs are complemented by investigations of how the teaching of the founder was transmitted in the philosophical schools of classical antiquity. Following B. Gerhardsson,<sup>34</sup> R. Riesner formulated a theory about the reliable transmission of the sayings of Jesus. He assumes that Jesus himself initiated this transmission and supported it by means of narrative techniques which were easily memorized. Riesner is aware of the differences between Jesus and the rabbis. Jesus not only transmitted and commented on the ancient teaching; he also proclaimed the kingdom of God. Many saw him as a messianic teacher; after Easter, they saw him in a new light. Nevertheless, Riesner holds that the mode of transmission of Jesus’ teaching was derived above all from the Jewish environment.<sup>35</sup>

<sup>33</sup> Lütgert, Freiheitspredigt, 129–130.

<sup>34</sup> Birger Gerhardsson, Memory and Manuscript (Lund: Gleerup, 1961), 262–264; idem, Tradition and Transmission in Early Christianity (Lund: Gleerup, 1964, 39–41).

<sup>35</sup> R. Riesner, Jesus als Lehrer, WUNT (Tübingen: Mohr-Siebeck, 1981), 423; cf. D. M. Stanley, “Pauline Allusions to the Sayings of Jesus,” CBQ 23 (1961): 26–39; also Dale C. Allison, Jr., “The Pauline Epistles and the Synoptic Gospels,” NTS 28 (1982): 1–32; M. Thompson, Clothed with Christ. The Example and Teaching of Jesus in Romans 12.1, JSNTSup 59 (Sheffield: Sheffield Academic Press, 1991).

Peter Stuhlmacher has portrayed the Christian transmission of the words and deeds of Jesus in the framework of a catechesis organized on the lines of a school. He can appeal to the information in Acts 19:9b about the lectures which Paul held in the school of the philosopher Tyrannus in Ephesus and to the many possible allusions to the Jesus tradition in the Pauline letters, which can scarcely be a mere matter of chance. Stuhlmacher offers some interesting reflections on the post-Easter transformation of the proclamation of the kingdom of God into the Pauline doctrine of justification.

Why are the words of Jesus in Paul anonymous? Stuhlmacher suggests that the readers of the Pauline letters were so well informed about the words of Jesus through Paul's instruction that he did not need to mention the source explicitly. For example, at 1 Thess 5:2, Paul mentions a saying about the coming of the Lord (unexpectedly, "like a thief in the night") which recalls Luke [Q] 12:39–40 par. He introduces this in words which clearly refer to an instruction that had been given at an earlier date: "For you yourselves know well that..." (αὐτοὶ γὰρ ἀκριβῶς οἴδατε ὅτι...).<sup>36</sup> It is only in order to resolve specific individual questions that Paul explicitly quotes logia of Jesus with which not all his addressees were familiar.

Stuhlmacher has also drawn attention to the literary distinction between the synoptic tradition and the Pauline letters: these may have played different roles in the life and the liturgy of one and the same Christian community. This is not a sufficient explanation of the anonymity of some of the words of Jesus in Paul, but it certainly helps to explain the relative rarity of explicit quotations. To take a parallel case: if the text of the Gospel of John had not in fact survived, no scholar would suppose that the Johannine circle (or school) could ever have produced a gospel in the form of a vita Jesu.

It is wrong to dismiss the monographs which assume and emphasize a professionally regulated continuity in the Jesus tradition by seeing them as examples of "conservative" trends. In a number of ways, they have indirectly influenced contemporary scholarship, above all by pointing out a number of inconsistencies in the form-historical school. Its thesis that the form of the traditional units is related to the Sitz im Leben of the community leads to a romantic view of the collective tradition (comparable e.g. to the transmission of folk songs or fairy tales), since it leaves open the question of who transmitted the units and presupposes that they were transmitted in a liturgy which is not actually defined in any detail. It is only in an aside that Bultmann mentions the Christian prophets, whose role in the process of tradition also involved a creative dimension. On the other hand, he appeals to the rabbinic tradition as an instructive analogy which he clearly believes applies above all to the second or third Christian generation. The so-called conservative scholars have consistently asked who handed on the tradition in strictly historical terms; this does not resolve the problem of the anonymity of the words of Jesus in Paul, but it does supply an important presupposition for a more precise identification of these persons. These scholars argue that if Jesus was addressed as a teacher (“Rabbi”) and had disciples (i.e., pupils), then the community which depended on him must have handed on his teaching. One who posits the absence of this tradition in ancient Christian texts (other than the gospels) or who deliberately presupposes the existence of an anonymous process of transmission must show that this is correct: the burden of proof lies on him.

---

<sup>36</sup> Peter Stuhlmacher, "Jesu-tradition im Römerbrief," ThBeitr 14 (1983): 240–250, at 243; idem, Biblische Theologie des Neuen Testaments 1 (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1991), 304.

The second important presupposition which “conservative” scholarship has underlined is the fact that research into the New Testament must take seriously the character of tradition as tradition. In other words, the transmission of the words of Jesus was not a creation ex nihilo. It did indeed interpret, apply, combine, and bring up to date; it handed on Jewish and hellenistic material under the name of Jesus. But there existed a general awareness that the words and narratives which were handed on in the community could not be allowed to contradict the words and the behavior of the earthly Jesus. On this point, there is a much broader consensus, which is summarized and expressed in the work of scholars such as Heinz Schürmann or Traugott Holtz.<sup>37</sup>

This means that the transmission of the logia of the Lord that we encounter in Paul and in the collections in Q and the Gospel of Thomas, i.e. of the words which are guaranteed by the authority of the exalted

---

<sup>37</sup> Heinz Schürmann, “Die vorösterlichen Anfänge der Logientradition,” in Der historische Jesus und der kerygmatische Christus, ed. H. Ristow and K. Matthiae (Berlin: Evangelische Verlagsanstalt, 1961), 356–358; Traugott Holtz, “Jesusüberlieferung und Briefliteratur,” in idem, Geschichte und Theologie des Urchristentums (Tübingen: Mohr-Siebeck, 1971), 17–30, at 25–27.

Lord, was carried out in the conviction that the exalted Lord is personally identical with the earthly Jesus and that when his will is proclaimed, one must at least be inspired by those logia which have been handed down. To relativize the Jesus tradition, or to refrain from mentioning the origin of this tradition, would run counter to this tendency. We see this in Q from the fact that the words of the Lord are handed on together with the words of John the Baptist, and in Thomas from the occasional references to concrete situations in the earthly life of Jesus which introduce the words of the Jesus whom the prologue calls "living" (i.e., exalted), e.g. in the introduction to the logion about paying tax to the emperor (Gos. Thom. 100; cf. Mark 12:14–17 par.). In Paul, this awareness is indirectly present in the passage I have already mentioned, where he speaks of his meeting with James "the brother of the Lord" (κύριος, Gal 1:19—the word "brother" is surely meant in the physical sense here).

Those words of the Lord which individual persons received specifically after Easter as directives from the exalted Lord (e.g. the words addressed to Paul in 2 Cor 12:9, which we have already discussed) were not integrated into the community tradition, because they were words for individuals and as such could find no Sitz im Leben in the liturgical lives of the communities. They were handed on only in association with the name of their original addressee, who had made them known. We have seen that this is the case with Paul, and the same is true in principle of the Book of Revelation as a whole, which (unlike the other revelations) was linked to the name of a specific person known to his contemporaries (Rev 1:1, 4, 9). Paul shows that he is aware of the normative significance of the earthly Jesus in a reduced, post-Easter form. The model for his own behavior is the role of Jesus that is expressed in the post-Easter liturgical and hymnic affirmations about his vicarious death and his resurrection (e.g. 1 Cor 15:3b–5) and about his humiliation and exaltation (Phil 2:6–11). This too is of course a clear expression of the awareness that the earthly Jesus remains the normative source of orientation for Christians—and such an awareness is utterly incompatible with an intentional relativization, still less with a suppression, of the Jesus tradition.

Although it would be short-sighted to underestimate the fruits of this line of research, we must not overlook its limits.

First, it is clear that the rabbinic model can be used only with reservations to shed light on the teaching activity of Jesus. For example, the parables—which call forth new interpretations in the Jesus tradition, as is evidenced e.g. in the transmission of the parable of the sower (Mark 4:1–9 and 13–20)—play only a small role in the rabbinic tradition, just as the rabbinic casuistry which we find in the Mishnah plays only a small role in Paul. Similarly, the comparison with the hellenistic philosophical schools has only a limited validity, since like Socrates, Jesus too may have taught by shaping the existential attitudes of his disciples and by his discourses, rather than by handing on traditions with a fixed form.

Secondly, Jesus saw himself as a (messianic) prophet and teacher.<sup>38</sup> After Easter, however, a wave of eschatological enthusiasm reshaped much of the material from the Jesus tradition. The first Christians were convinced that they had a share in the outpouring of the Spirit which was to take place in the last days, whereas in Judaism the current thesis (with its starting point in Ps 74:9) was that the prophetic Spirit had been taken away from the people of God and replaced by the oral tradition as its echo (b. Sanh. 11a). It was only in the second and third generations that the task of institutionalizing the transmission of the words of Jesus was taken in hand. Paul stands at the beginning of this period, when Christians were starting to collect the words of the exalted Jesus.

Thirdly, the words of Jesus were not collected in accordance with the principles of historical criticism. The popular tradition of the deeds and some words of Jesus gained a foothold in a number of Christian groups.

Fourthly, the principal bearers of that tradition were the prophets, who quoted from it as they saw fit. We have no convincing evidence that this was an element in community catechesis.

Fifthly, the words of the Lord were in principle the decisive authority, but they could be applied only in a few specific instances as a concrete answer to the question at issue. In other cases, especially where fundamental questions of the Christian life were at stake, the prophets were obliged to reinterpret them and bring them up to date, and sometimes also to protect the words of the Lord from abuse. S. Byrskog, a student of B. Gerhardsson, has made an impressive synthesis of most of what we know about the teacher-pupil relationship in classical antiquity, and especially in the Judaism of the Hellenistic and New Testament periods. With methodological caution, he has then concentrated on the Gospel of Matthew, but in the almost two hundred pages of his introduction he has—unintentionally—called into question the entire picture of the conservative tradition of the words of the Lord. In many instances, he admits that the transmission was creative; in his discussion of the question of the transmission of the master's teaching in the school of the prophet Isaiah, he rightly maintains that Second and Third Isaiah made a substantially new interpretation of the most important themes of Isaiah in their own new situations. If Byrskog were to study the Gospel of John in this context, he would be obliged to relativize even more strongly the picture of "tradition as conservation."

---

<sup>38</sup> D. E. Aune, Prophecy in Early Christianity (Grand Rapids: Eerdmans, 1983), 225.

Sixthly, the analysis of Pauline references to a common stock of material, which he assumes his readers already know, has led Hans Conzelmann to the conclusion that Paul taught a primarily post-Easter theology, viz. the interpretation of the death and resurrection of Jesus as the eschatological mystery (1 Cor 2:6–7).

We can summarize the results of his investigations as follows, and add a few further points. The doctrine which Paul received included above all the christological professions of faith (1 Cor 15:1–3) and the corresponding interpretation of baptism (Rom 6:3–5), the tradition associated with the Lord's Supper (1 Cor 11:23–25), teaching about the relationship between the church and Christ (1 Cor 11:2–3; cf. Eph 5:32 in context), and eschatological paraenesis (1 Thess 5:2). Paul's arguments drawn from scripture are subordinated to this kind of proclamation. This is in keeping with the description in Acts 17:3 of Paul's testimony in the synagogue at Thessalonica. The words about the unexpected coming of the day of the Lord "like a thief in the night" (1 Thess 5:2) are sometimes taken as evidence of the transmission of words in Jesus in the community catechesis, since there is a parallel at Matt 24:50–51. When however we bear in mind the apocalyptic context which links these words to the apocalyptic exhortation "with a word of the Lord" which we have already mentioned, and which almost immediately precede the allusion to the "thief in the night" (4:15–17), it is highly likely that what the addressees "know well" (5:2a) is a group of prophetic aphorisms about the "mystery" (μυστήριον). As I have said, the "mystery" in this context was a prophetic instruction about the last times and about the key role played by Jesus, as the exalted Lord, in the transition from one aeon to another and in the new creation.

This does not mean that Paul knew only those logia of Jesus which dealt with the last days: we have already spoken of his meeting with Peter (and James). But it does mean that his teaching, as we have set this out above, concentrated on the significance of Jesus for the present day of the Christian community and for the future of the world. In his prophetic testimony to the risen Jesus, whose eschatological significance he had recognized when Jesus appeared to him outside Damascus as the exalted Lord, Paul quotes and interprets the words of Jesus. A didactic transmission of the words of Jesus was not a part of his community catechesis. The paucity of quotations from the dominical logia in the apostolic fathers shows that Paul was not an exception in this regard.

6. A Contemporary Parallel?

Samuel Byrskog has studied the anonymity of the tradition in the Essene group at Qumran, which clearly likewise handed on words of the “Teacher of Righteousness” in an anonymous manner. Earlier scholars took seriously the possibility that the Teacher of Righteousness had himself composed the Temple Scroll (11Q19 and 11Q20) and the Hymns (1QH and 4Q427–429[frag.]), and Byrskog summarizes the results of their investigations. The Temple Scroll reproduces in the prophetic manner, in direct speech and the first person singular, the words of Yahweh on Sinai. Since this text in its present form goes back to several groups of sources, it is to be considered an authoritative document to which the Teacher of Righteousness could appeal. Nothing supports the view that the Temple Scroll is derived from his prophetic vision, and there is no evidence in the Qumran texts of the idea that he was present in an exalted mode after his death.

The Hymns are poetic prayers which the author has formulated in the first person singular. Byrskog holds it possible that the community instruction could have kept alive the link between these Hymns and the Teacher of Righteousness; the text itself is however anonymous. It has also been seriously suggested that the Teacher of Righteousness may be the author of the strange letter 4QMMT, which is addressed to a man who clearly held responsibility for Israel (4Q398 frag. 14 II)—perhaps to one who had usurped the high-priestly office. Since parts of six copies survive, this may well have been an important document, and it may have begun with the name of the author. This cannot be proved; nor is it possible to prove (if the letter was in fact anonymous) that the community knew that its author was none other than the Teacher whom they revered in messianic terms.

This means that the Qumran texts belong to other literary genres than the Pauline epistles. We cannot indeed exclude the possibility of the anonymous transmission of words of the founder, but this cannot be demonstrated. All that is probable is that some of the texts which were handed on (or parts of these texts) had a particular importance for the group because the founder himself had used them, but this too is not mentioned. At most, therefore, we have here a very indirect analogy to the anonymity of the words of Jesus in Paul.

7. Transmission and Interpretation

This means that Paul may have handed on other words of Jesus in his instruction besides those that are contained in his letters. We may also suppose that he gave his fellow workers and disciples more precise information about the Jesus tradition—but this is only a supposition. All we know is that as early as the time of Paul, collections of dominical logia existed. These were the common core of the preaching of several prophets. Gradually, they were expanded, then transmitted in Greek (Q), and reinterpreted after the role of the prophets had diminished (Gospel of Thomas).

This does not yet resolve the question of the anonymity of the Jesus tradition in Paul, but we have taken a significant step forwards, since we now know that only a few of the dominical logia could be quoted literally as the highest authority in a particular situation: most of the logia reached the Christian community in a prophetic application or (re)interpretation. The measure of prophetic reformulation could be very considerable, including the de facto formation of new words of the Lord in cases where the prophet had the inner certainty that this was in keeping with the intention of the Lord. Such utterances are usually linked with the name of the prophet who is presented as the addressee or the emissary of the exalted Lord (cf. 2 Cor 12:9 and the words of the Lord in the Revelation of John). It is however also possible for a logion of this kind to be included at a secondary stage in a collection of dominical logia and to be integrated with this collection into a narrative composed at a later date, where it is presented as a word of the earthly Lord. For example, Luke (Q) 12:11–12 may have been a prophetic logion from the post-Easter period which was freely formulated on the basis of words once spoken by Jesus. We have a striking example of direct speech of this kind in the revelatory discourses of Jesus in the Gospel of John, which are introduced by an “I am...” logion. It is obvious that these came into existence through the prophetic formulation of the impact which the risen Lord made on the community of believers.

Between the literally quoted logia and those words of the Lord which were newly formulated under the pressure of the Spirit, we find concrete words of Jesus which the prophets had learned from the tradition (i.e., from the first and second generations of apostles and prophets) but which they found it necessary to reinterpret.<sup>39</sup> The prophet responds to a problem by means of a clear word of the Lord. He knows this logion from the tradition, which consists of oral, or perhaps even already written collections of such words; and yet he dares to give it a new and different formulation so that it will fit the new context. He knows that he is changing the literal text of the logion, but he is convinced in the Spirit of the same Lord that it is his duty to do so. This makes it easy to understand the reticences which could lead to the proclamation of such a changed logion only in the name of the prophet—without mentioning the name of Jesus.

In order to strengthen this hypothesis, we must test its applicability to concrete texts.

We have already discussed the possibility that 1 Cor 4:6–13 contains polemic against an enthusiastic understanding of the beatitudes of Jesus. These have become a point of contention, and the various interpretations have given divergent orientations to the groups within the community. This means that Paul cannot simply quote them without a commentary, for that would only intensify the tension. In order to find a responsible solution to the problem, he appeals to the Lord, who will definitively settle the dispute when he comes in glory. This awareness is decisively important for the correct interpretation of the words of the Lord. This is the mystery (μυστήριον) of God, and by “administering” this mystery Paul himself is the servant of Christ (4:1). It is thus clear that the enthusiasts have in fact usurped the eschatological judgment which belongs to Christ. As the “steward” (οἰκονόμος) of the mystery of God which is concentrated in Christ, Paul has no other authority than that of an apostle and prophet who knows more clearly than anyone else that the hope of every individual depends on the gracious verdict of the Lord (4:4). Accordingly, although he does speak in the name of the Lord, he must appeal to a higher authority than the individual logia of the Lord, because he is interpreting these logia in a way that his addressees do not expect.

---

<sup>39</sup> We find comparable material in Ps.-Philo’s Liber Antiquitatum Biblicarum, e.g. in Joshua’s discourse, inspired by the Spirit, at 20.3; cf. J. R. Levinson, “Prophetic Inspiration in Pseudo-Philo’s Liber Antiquitatum Biblicarum,” JQR 85 (1995): 297–329.

At 1 Cor 13:2, we read about the faith that moves mountains. It is clear that “faith” (πίστις) here does not mean faith in the sense of an elementary trust in God, but rather faith’s ability to accomplish extraordinary things (miracles), as already mentioned at 1 Cor 12:9. The phrase “to move mountains” was used proverbially in contemporary Judaism, but the link with faith is attested only in the Jesus tradition and here in 1 Corinthians. Since a relevant logion is attested in Mark (11:23 par.), in Q (Matt 17:20 par.), and in the Gospel of Thomas (48 and 106), we can assume that it reached Paul as an interpretation of the meaning of Jesus’ miracles (cf. Mark 5:30 par., etc.). If we then link the following words about sharing one’s possessions (as alms) with Jesus’ words about alms in Matt 6:2—as is done in many lists of parables (cf. Nestle-Aland), the critical distance vis-à-vis the words from the tradition about Jesus becomes even clearer. Not only the faith which moves mountains, and the willingness to make material sacrifices, are called into question here, but also prophecy and the knowledge of mysteries: this too is of no avail, if love (ἀγάπη) is lacking. It seems that the apostle is relativizing in this passage his whole privilege as the steward of God’s mystery. If however we read the instruction about the gifts of the Spirit in 1 Corinthians 12–14 as a whole, we see that this relativization of the prophetic mysteries is only a rhetorical instrument which Paul employs to emphasize that love is the core of God’s mystery. It is this love that the apostle represents in all that he says and all that he does. Ἀγάπη is the love of God which has become manifest in Christ (2 Cor 5:14). Not even the powers and mysteries of the apocalyptic future are stronger than the power of this love (Rom 8:31–39) which determines how human beings are to behave in relation to God and to one another (Rom 8:28; 13:10). This is what Paul underlines in the hymn of 1 Corinthians 13. Love will play the decisive role in the final judgment. This gives him a sure platform for the evaluation of the utterances of some prophets who claim to have a special knowledge of the mysteries of God, or who could find support in a logion of Jesus when they boasted of the miraculous effects of their faith (1 Corinthians 13:2). Only this platform makes it possible for him in his following plea to emphasize the precedence of prophecy over all the other gifts of the Spirit. Irrespective of whether the injunction that women are to be silent (1 Cor 14:33b–36) is a non-Pauline insertion, the proclamation that what Paul writes is a commandment of the Lord (κυρίου ἐντολή, v. 37) seems to apply to the entire debate about spiritual gifts. This proclamation is addressed to the prophets or bearers of the Spirit (14:37a), since the theme of Paul's words from 12:1–3 onwards ("About gifts of the Spirit...") is their authority and how they are to be normatively evaluated. The "commandment of the Lord," which in the immediate context appears to prohibit disorders in worship (cf. especially vv. 32–33), is in principle a word which presupposes a comprehensible profession of faith in Jesus as the Lord whose lordship is defined by concrete love (ἀγάπη) and itself calls forth love. This is worth more than all the enthusiastic utterances of the Spirit, even when these appeal to the (dominical) saying about the faith that moves mountains (13:2).

One large section of the text of the Letter to the Romans, chapters 12–14, contains several possible allusions to the words of Jesus. In 12:14, 17–21, we find indirect parallels to the Sermon on the Mount or Plain (Luke 6:27–29, 35; Matt 5:39–47). These may go back to a collection of sapiential aphorisms with parallels in Prov 3:7; 25:1–2; Deut 32:35; and T. Benj. 4.2–5, but they may also be words of Jesus.<sup>40</sup> This paraenesis is closely linked to the prophetic proclamation of Jesus as the eschatological mystery of God (Rom 13:11–13). It may be that Paul himself did not know exactly what came directly from Jesus; but if what we have said above is correct, then the supposition that he was unaware that he was quoting words of Jesus is extremely improbable. Indeed, this possibility is an artificial hypothesis. M. Thompson has collected the various explanations that have been offered for Paul's failure to mention such an important source; these range from the Pauline orientation to the risen Christ, to the different situation of those he was addressing.<sup>41</sup>

<sup>40</sup> Wolfgang Schrage, Die konkreten Einzelgebote in der paulinischen Paränese (Gütersloh: Mohn, 1961), 249–250.

<sup>41</sup> Thompson, Clothed with Christ, 70–72.

If we want a less ambiguous evaluation of this problem, we must begin by asking how Paul reproduces the Jesus tradition.

When we compare the words in Romans 12 with the indirect parallels in the Sermon on the Mount, we note that the exhortation to love one's enemies in v. 14 is freely reproduced and is then interpreted in the following verses (doubtless with the help of the sapiential tradition). This is not a purely sapiential composition, since there is no sapiential parallel to v. 15—which may however have been indirectly inspired by the blessing pronounced at Matt 5:4 on those who mourn. Surprisingly, v. 21 (which has a parallel in T. Benj. 4.3) seems like polemic against the exhortation at Matt 5:39 not to put up any resistance (ἀντιστῆναι) τῷ πονηρῷ. This probably means “one who is evil” (ὁ πονηρός) rather than Satan as “the evil one” or “evil” (τὸ πονηρόν). In this context, ἀντιστῆναι probably means treating the evil person in the same way, on the same (legal) level (LXX Deut 19:18; Isa 50:8), since that would only augment the evil.

I need not underline how often these words have been misunderstood in a quietist sense. They may be a later, pre-Matthaeian expansion of the exhortation to love one's enemies, intended to prohibit the settling of conflicts among Christians by recourse to the pagan courts (cf. 1 Cor 6:1–3), but they may also be a logion from the earliest tradition which Luke found unacceptably harsh. At any rate, the exhortation to love one's enemies can be concretized in a way which is not immune to quietist misuse, and it is very possible that this is what has happened here. It is even possible that Paul knew such a logion, since the verb ἀνθιστάναι (also linked to a negation) occurs in the immediate context, at Rom 13:2—one who resists the authorities is resisting (ἀνθέστηκεν) what God commands. It is obvious that Rom 13:1–7 is written for those who saw the civil authorities as their enemies. It is also well known that the verb ἀνθιστάναι is used elsewhere in the New Testament in a positive sense, in the exhortation to “resist the devil” (Jas 4:7; cf. 1 Pet 5:8–9); this is also found in the Pauline school (Eph 6:13). In such passages, the adversary is the devil (διάβολος, πονηρός at Eph 5:16); but it must have been very easy to understand the exhortation to love one's enemies as an exhortation to passivity in face of evil, i.e. as a capitulation before the devil and sin. The Sermon on the Mount is misunderstood in this way even today!

In the light of these observations, Rom 12:21 seems to be a conscious reinterpretation of the tradition associated with Jesus: love of one's enemies is in fact active conduct, a weapon against evil (τὸ κακόν) and Satan (cf. Rom 16:20).

If this passage is a Pauline interpretation of the exhortation to love one's enemies, or not to resist evil, then it must also be constructed as a conscious transition to Romans 13; and Paul's words in 13:1–7 about the subordination of the Christian to the civil authorities must be a concrete instance of the power of this love. This hypothesis is supported by the context in 12:9, 21 and above all in 13:8, which is marked by the key word "love" (ἀγάπη). Paul does not maintain that the pagan authorities are the Christians' enemies: he goes so far as to call these rulers, whose office involved the public worship of idols, the "authorities appointed by God" (an affirmation which is explicitly corrected at 1 Pet 2:13). When he says this, however, Paul's intention is to affirm that these authorities are subordinate to God, the Father of Jesus Christ.

It is significant that he may once again be drawing here on a Jewish Christian tradition linked to the name of Jesus. This tradition is represented by the pericope about paying tax to the emperor (Mark 12:17 par.); cf. the verb ἀποδιδόναι in Mark 12:17 and Rom 13:7. Just as the pericope Mark 12:13–17 par. recounts an unexpected anti-Zealot statement in the framework of Jesus' proclamation of the kingdom of God, so Paul too reacts in a similarly unexpected manner here, although his position makes sense in the anti-enthusiastic context. This striking motif is scattered across various New Testament writings, and this makes it at least conceivable (though scarcely demonstrable) that we have here a radical reinterpretation of the older Jesus tradition,<sup>42</sup> in clear contradiction of all the scholarly ideas about the conservative rabbinic tradition. Under these circumstances, it is easy to grasp why Paul does not venture to call Rom 13:1–7 or any part of this debate a direct word of the Lord, but instead emphasizes the apostolic commission which he has received from the exalted Lord (12:3; 14:14a; 15:15–16; cf. 1:1 or Gal 1:1, etc.).

Leonhard Goppelt has drawn attention to striking similarities in the vocabulary of 12:19 and 13:4. At 12:19, Christians are forbidden to condemn, since this belongs exclusively to the eschatological judgment of God (μη̄ ἑαυτοῦς ἐκδικοῡντες, ἀγαπητοί, ἀλλὰ δότε τόπον τῇ ὀργῇ), whereas in 13:4 the authorities will be ἔκδικος εἰς ὀργήν for the one who does evil. This means that the authorities are justified in punishing every enthusiastic failure to pay heed to reality, and Paul regards this as an echo of the judgment of God. He does not discuss the potential situations of conflict, but sketches a basic strategy which certainly does not lack its positive aspects. If the Christians take this strategy seriously, they themselves will be free of hatred, and it is possible that the empire will look on them as harmless subjects—something that can only benefit the people of God (σοι εἰς τὸ ἀγαθόν). Some Roman officials may even convert to the faith. Another example of a missionary strategy of this kind is the subordination of women at 1 Pet 3:1.

---

<sup>42</sup> Käsemann, Römer, ad loc. He also argues convincingly against scholars who see Rom 13:1–7 as a later insertion.

Immediately after this, in v. 9b, Paul cites the second precept of the double commandment of love. He cites this separately from the first precept, as this is found in Lev 19:18, so that we cannot say whether he knows it from the Jesus tradition. In the next chapter, however, we once again find words which are also present in the Jesus tradition.

As in the preceding section (and in the polemic against the enthusiasts in 1 Cor 4 which we have already discussed), Paul's remarks about the injury done to a weak brother begin with a warning against judging, which would be an anticipation of the last judgment (Rom 14:13a). This is followed by arguments against the position that observance of the cultic law leads to salvation ("Nothing is unclean in itself," v. 14b), with an almost verbal agreement with the aphorisms from the Jesus tradition (Mark 7:15 par.; Luke 11:41b).<sup>43</sup> Paul introduces these words with a solemn affirmation: "I know and am fully convinced in the Lord Jesus..." (v. 14a), but he does not call them a word of the Lord (as in 1 Cor 7 and 9), for the obvious reason that he immediately subordinates this declaration to the higher commandment of love of one's fellow Christian—since Christ died even for the brother who is weak in faith (Rom 14:7–9). Once again, Paul argues here on the basis of the cross and resurrection, and of life in Christ (or τῷ κυρίῳ, v. 8). It would be contrary to his apostolic strategy to quote a word of the Lord as a word of the Lord, and then in the next breath to relativize it in the name of the Easter faith. Paul is not relativizing his own position here. What is involved is a consistent application of the doctrine of justification by faith and by grace. This doctrine must not be watered down, either by the observation of the law or by the relativization of the law.

---

<sup>43</sup> T. Holtz supposes that Paul is drawing here on the Jesus tradition: "Jesusüberlieferung und Briefliteratur," 28. A different position is taken by C. Burchard, "Das doppelte Liebesgebot in der frühen christlichen Überlieferung," in Der Ruf Jesu und die Antwort der Gemeinde, ed. E. Lohse (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1970), 39–61.

In a similar manner, v. 17 relativizes the term “kingdom of God.” This appears to be a polemic against Luke 6:21a, where the kingdom of God is promised to those who hunger: Rom 14:17 corrects this logion in the same way as the blessing Matthew pronounces on those who “hunger and thirst for righteousness” (Matt 5:6). Basically, however, Paul’s polemic is directed against the “strong ones” who regarded the freedom to eat everything as a sign of spiritual perfection. We have evidence of this tendency of the “strong” at a later date in Gos. Thom 14 (cf. section 6 of the present essay).<sup>44</sup>

It is difficult to deny that these texts bear witness to an internal Christian conflict about how to interpret the inheritance from Jesus. Let us only add one indirect but weighty argument. When systematic theologians (above all Eberhard Jüngel) discover an inherent analogy between Jesus’ proclamation of the kingdom of God and Paul’s doctrine of the justification of the sinner by God’s grace, it is implausible to explain this as the effect of chance phenomenological parallels, and to see the Pauline theology only as a development of the Easter confessions of faith. These analogies must also be influenced by ideas which come from Jesus.<sup>45</sup>

---

<sup>44</sup> P. Pokorný, “Die Herrenworte im Thomasevangelium und bei Paulus,” in Carl-Schmidt-Kolloquium, Wiss. Beitr. der M.-L. Universität (Halle: Martin-Luther-Universität, 1990), 157–163.

<sup>45</sup> Eberhard Jüngel, Paulus und Jesus, HUT 2 (Tübingen: Mohr-Siebeck, 1962), 263–265.

8. Concluding Reflections

1. We have seen that Paul knew more logia from the Jesus tradition than scholars have supposed.

2. Nevertheless, the Pauline material does not confirm the idea that the words of the Lord formed part of the community catechesis in the Pauline churches.

3. The words of Jesus were employed to a greater extent in paraenesis and preaching than in catechesis. The preachers, as bearers of the Spirit, handed them on creatively, i.e. by reinterpreting them and applying them.

4. The group of Spirit-inspired preachers who handed on the words of the Lord in this way consisted of those witnesses to his resurrection who had been his disciples before Easter, as well as their direct or indirect pupils—among whom, historically speaking (in keeping with Gal 1:18), we must also include Paul. At that time, they were usually called apostles or prophets. Although the words of the Lord did not form part of the core of community catechesis, their transmission was nevertheless institutionalized in this way.

5. Paul gives a literal quotation of the words of the Lord, which basically derive from the Jesus tradition, only where they were directly applicable in order to solve a problem. In such cases, he made a distinction between these logia and his own prophetic judgments.

6. Otherwise, he employed them anonymously in the name of his own apostolic authority. In such instances, he usually emphasized that this authority came from the exalted Lord.

7. Closer examination shows that in such cases, Paul reinterprets the words of the Lord and relativizes them to some extent. This interpretation is in keeping with the Easter experience, and it cannot be allowed to contradict the Jesus tradition. Specifically, this means the interpretation of the Jesus tradition in the light of the commandment to love, which Paul sees as the human response to God's grace. Within the Christian community, this protected the Jesus tradition from an enthusiastic interpretation which ignored the eschatological reservation.

8. Other bearers of the Spirit were less reticent than Paul when they handed on the words of the Lord. He was obliged to write polemically against their utterances—even when these were linked to quotations from the words of the Lord. Where they emphasized speaking in tongues (and this too did not happen in a completely arbitrary manner, since such prophets had to be accepted by the community), Paul emphasized that a testimony must be comprehensible to outsiders (1 Cor 14:6, 23–25).

9. Even in the period before Paul, there was general agreement that the testimony of the prophets is not only subordinate to their own experience of the Spirit: it must also be in conformity with the confessions and the knowledge of the faith, as these have been received by the community which the prophets are addressing. Gradually, such norms came to occupy a more prominent place (Didache 11).

10. The collections of the words of the Lord which were made in various places at an early or a later date, and which took over a part of the function of the prophets in the third and later generations, consist mostly of words of Jesus which were transmitted and often interpreted by the prophets. The varied understandings of what it meant to possess the Spirit are reflected in the theology of the Jesus tradition which is contained in these collections. In general, the stage of the conservative tradition follows the stage of creative tradition, although we cannot exclude individual instances of a rabbinic transmission.

11. The profession of faith in the cross and resurrection of Christ was decisive for Paul's theology and ethics. The same is true of the writings of the apostolic fathers.

12. For Paul, scripture and the Lord were authorities of different kinds.

13. We cannot rule out the possibility that there were other groups of pre- or post-Easter adherents of Jesus who transmitted his logia according to completely different criteria. Since however they disappeared at a relatively early date, and without being removed by violent means, we must regard them both historically and theologically as marginal phenomena.

14. Although Mark and the later evangelists did not write in the modern historical-critical sense, their work means in principle the same as the demand at 1 John 4:1–3 and 2 John 7 that prophecy must not be detached from the earthly Jesus. Mark did not lack confidence in the tradition of the words of Jesus, since one third of his gospel too consists of logia of Jesus; all we see is that he did not wish to draw on one particular source, viz. Q. It is rather improbable that he did not know Q. Either he had reservations about it, or else he had so much respect for its authority in the church that he took it for granted that

Q would be used in parallel to his own biography of Jesus. In the present context, these are secondary questions. The decisive point is that the biographical framework protected the words of Jesus against an uncontrolled proliferation.<sup>46</sup>

---

<sup>46</sup> [English translation: Brian McNeil.]

INDEX OF ANCIENT SOURCES

Old Testament

Gen		12:10–20	4.3068
1:1	2.1708	14:18–24	2.1218
1:2	1.152, 2.1598	15	3.2786
1:5	3.2347	15:3	4.3039
1:14	2.1598, 3.2347	15:5	2.1717
1:16	3.2347	15:5–6	3.2786
1:18	3.23470	15:18	2.1717
1:26–2:3	3.2603	15:18–21	3.2775
1:26–30	2.1598	17:7	2.1717
1:27	2.1137, 2.1140, 2.1713, 3.2759	17:9	2.1717
1–2	2.1309, 4.3075, 4.3076	18:2	2.1551
1–8	3.2893	18:15	1.634
2:9	3.2254	19:34	3.2347
2:10–14	3.2254	21:33	3.2579
2:14–15	4.3049	22	3.2257, 3.2874, 4.3049
2:15	3.2254	22:4	3.2264
2:24	1.173, 2.1137, 2.1138, 2.1140, 2.1713, 2.1714, 3.2759, 4.3360, 4.3364	22:11–12	4.3049
3:5	3.2217	22:15–18	4.3049
3:6	3.2254	22:17	2.1717
3:15	2.1415, 3.2249	25:22–23	4.3193
3:19	3.2261	26:24	2.1717
3:24	3.2254	28:14	2.1717
4:6–8	3.2256	29:30–32	4.2970
5:1	1.16	31:30–35	2.1715
5:2	2.1137	35:16–21	2.1715
5:18–6:22	3.2218	35:17–18	2.1715
5:22	1.148	35:18–19	2.1716
5:22–24	2.1595	42:17	3.2264
6–9	1.345	45:3	1.634
6:5	2.1227	45:27–46:4	2.1716
7:9	2.1713	46:7	2.1716
8:22	3.2347	46:34	3.2377
9:1	4.3379	49	4.3392
9:1–17	4.3383	49:9–12	4.3320
9:5–6	4.3045	49:10	2.1522, 2.1531, 2.1539, 3.2249
11	4.3394	49:10–11	4.3391
12	3.2786	49:11–12	3.2286, 4.3338
12:1–3	4.3049	Exod
12:2	3.2786	1:15	2.1716
12:7	2.1717, 3.2775	2:11–14	4.3049
		3:6	2.1137, 2.1138, 2.1149, 3.2261, 3.2262

3:8	3.2225, 3.2793	20:14	2.1137, 2.1141,
3:14–15	2.1227		4.3141
3:15	2.1149	20:19	4.3136
3:17	3.2225, 3.2793	20:22–23:19	4.3136
8	4.3197	21:1	1.419
8:15	4.3072	21:2	1.167
8:19	1.647	21:7–11	1.167
10:13	3.2347	21:10–11	2.1714
12:6	3.2344	21:12	4.3039
12:10	3.1961, 3.2023,	21:14	4.3039
	3.2345	21:16/17 (LXX/MT)	4.2952
12:18	3.2347	21:17	2.1137, 3.2808,
12:42	2.1218		4.3142
12:43–13:18	3.2686	21:24	2.1137, 4.3141
12:46	2.1137, 3.2023,	22:2 (MT 21:37)	4.3048
	3.2025, 3.2349	22:11	2.1143
12:48	1.138	22:25	1.167, 1.648
13:5	3.2793	22:26–27	1.167
13:21	3.2347	22:27	4.3145
13:22	3.2347	22:28	2.1192
14:20	1.632	23:10–11	3.2794
15:1	3.2261	23:20	2.1161, 2.1777
15:2	3.2282	23:25	4.3186
15:17–18	3.2651	24	1.140
15:22	3.2251	24:8	2.1242, 2.1331,
15:25–26	4.3187		3.2405
15:26	4.3186	24:10–11	1.153
15:27	3.2251	24:15–18	3.2897
16:3	4.3258	24:16b	1.153
16:5	3.2597	28:21	2.1222
16:23	3.2597	29	3.1895
16:29	3.2597	29:37	3.2721, 3.2763
17:1–7	3.2251	29:38–42	3.2670
18:20	1.619	30:12–13	3.2670
19	2.1085	30:12–15	4.3426
19:5	2.1210	30:29	3.2721
19:6	1.547, 3.2264	31:1–3	3.2897
19:7	1.419	31:12	2.1265
19:10–25	3.2721	31:13	2.1265
20	1.225, 4.3137,	31:14	2.1227, 2.1265
	4.3141	31:18	1.647, 4.3144
20:1	4.3136	31:23–24	2.1265
20:2	4.3139	31:27	2.1265
20:4	1.170	32:15–16	4.3144
20:5	4.3190	32:19	4.3144
20:5–6	4.3182, 4.3193	33:14	3.1895
20:7–12	3.2686, 4.3139	33:19	1.629, 4.3186
20:12	2.1137, 3.2808,	33:20	3.2034
	4.2952, 4.3141,	33:22	1.629
	4.3364	33:30	1.153
20:12–16	2.1137, 2.1138,	34	4.3136
	4.3141	34:1	4.3144
20:13	2.1137, 4.3045,	34:4	4.3144
	4.3053, 4.3141	34:6	1.629

34:7	4.3182	17:15	3.2347
34:21	3.2597, 3.2607	17:15-16	3.2719
34:27-29	4.3144	18	3.2726, 3.2824
34:28	4.3135	18:5	3.2699
34:29-35	1.153, 3.2897	18:16	1.174, 3.2760
35:2	3.2597	18:21	4.3049
39:14	2.1222	18:22	3.2827
40	2.1599	18:24-30	3.2776
40:38	3.2347	18:28	3.2776
		18:29	3.2819
Lev		19	1.18, 2.1145
2:11	2.1776	19:8	3.2819
4	4.3185	19:12	2.1137, 4.3148
4-5	3.2406, 3.2826	19:13	3.2032
5:1-6	3.2719	19:18	1.631, 1.661,
5:3	3.2716		2.1137, 2.1138,
5:7	3.2670		2.1145, 2.1146,
6:11	3.2721		2.1268, 2.1269,
6:20	3.2721		3.2561, 3.2569,
7:20	3.2818		3.2630, 3.2633,
7:21	3.2818		3.2699, 4.2954,
7:22-27	3.2818		4.3053, 4.3142,
7:24	3.2818		4.3143, 4.3144,
7:27	3.2819		4.3364, 4.3463
8:35	3.2347	19:31	2.1435, 3.2726
9:6	2.1043	20:1-3	3.2726
10:9	4.3340	20:2-3	4.3049
11	2.1261, 2.1599,	20:9	3.2808, 4.2952,
	4.3359		4.3142
11:20-23	2.1776	20:13-16	2.1228
11:25-32	3.2347	20:17	3.2819
11:39	3.2347	20:18	3.2819
11:40	3.2347	20:22-26	3.2581
11:41-45	2.1261	20:27	1.621
11:46	3.2347	21	3.2721
12:8	3.2438, 3.2670	21:1-2	1.634, 3.2722
13-14	3.2673, 4.3386	21:10-11	3.2722
13:1-46	3.2718	21:16-24	2.1264
13:45-46	3.2541, 3.2716	21:17-23	4.3193
14:1-20	3.2814	21:17-24	1.631
14:20	3.2715, 4.3195	22:3	3.2819
14:21-23	3.2670	22:6	3.2347
14:46	3.2347	22:18-24	4.3193
15	3.2834	22:28	1.16
15:5-11	3.2347	23:5	3.2344
15:16-23	3.2347	23:9-11	4.3388
15:19-24	3.2716	23:11	2.1518, 3.2345
15:25-30	3.2716	23:15-16	3.2345
15:27	3.2347	23:29	3.2819
16	1.568, 2.1599,	23:32	3.2347
	4.3185	24:15-16	4.3146
16:12-21	2.1138	24:16	2.1192, 4.3145
16:29-31	4.3331	24:20	2.1137
17:4	3.2819	25	1.645

25:2-7	3.2794	21:16-20	3.2251, 3.2252
25:8-13	1.167	21:17-18	3.2253
25:10	1.645	21:19-20	3.2253
25:13	3.2282	22:5	2.1716, 2.1717
25:20 (LXX)	4.3258	22-24	3.2172
25:23	1.167	24:7	3.1880, 3.2249
25:25	2.1137	24:15-17	3.2280
25:29-31	1.167	24:17	2.1532, 2.1602,
25:35-37	1.167		2.1717, 3.2249,
25:36-37	1.648		3.2285, 3.2288,
26	4.3186		4.3235
26:1	3.2738	24:17-19	3.2287
26:14-16	4.3193	24:17-24	3.228, 3.2285
26:30	3.2738	25	4.3045
26:39	4.3183	25:6-13	2.877
		26	4.3425
Num		27:16-17	4.3115
1	4.3425	27:17	1.628
2:19	3.2253	27:18	1.628
3:2-4	1.153	28:3-8	3.2670
3:10	2.1443	30:2	2.1137, 2.1443
3:13	2.1143	31:24	3.2717
3:16	3.2172	32:23	4.3190
5:1-4	3.2716	33:14	3.2251
5:3	3.2716	34:13-15	4.3425
5:19	2.1443	35:16-21	4.3045
5:21	2.1443	35:16-28	4.3048
6	4.3379	35:22-28	4.3045
6:5-12	3.2722	35:33-34	3.2726
6:6	1.634
6:6-8	4.2960	Deut
9:1-14	3.2344	1:33	3.2347
9:3	3.2344	3:6	3.2261
9:5	3.2344	4:4-6	4.3138
9:12	3.1961, 3.2023,	4:4-9	4.3139
	3.2349	4:8	1.419
9:16	3.2347	4:12	3.2034
10:34	1.632	4:13	4.3135
11:32	3.2347	4:15	3.2034
12:1-15	4.3186	4:34	2.1211
14:18	4.3183	5	4.3141
15:30-31	4.3145	5:4	4.3136
15:32-36	3.2597	5:9	3.2686
15:37-41	3.2677, 3.2682,	5:9-10	4.3183
	3.2684, 3.2686	5:11-16	4.3139
15:39	1.115	5:16	1.622, 2.1137,
19	3.2717		4.3141
19:2	2.1262	5:16-20	2.1138, 4.3141
19:2-9	3.2717	5:17	2.1137, 4.3045,
19:9	2.1518		4.3053, 4.3141
19:11-16	1.170	5:18	2.1137, 4.3141
19:14-22	1.634	5:19	3.2808
19:19	3.2717	5:22	4.3136, 4.3144
20:1-5	3.2251	5:23-33	4.3136
20:18	4.3335	5:26	3.2578, 3.2579

5:27-29	4.3138	13:6	1.646, 2.1705
5:28-29	3.2280	13:6-8	2.1705
5:29	1.634	13:6-9	2.1231
6-8	3.2873	13:6-11	2.1703
6:4	1.418, 2.1166, 2.1206, 3.2578, 3.2677, 3.2682, 3.2691, 3.2692, 3.2696	13:6-18 13:10 13:11 13:17-18 14:2	1.621 2.1231 1.621 1.628 2.1210, 2.1211
6:4-5	1.631, 2.1137, 3.2677, 3.2690, 3.2706, 4.3144	14:3-21 15:1-2 15:3	2.1261 1.167 4.3053
6:4-6	3.1964	15:7-8	1.648
6:4-9	2.1269, 3.2677, 3.2682, 3.2686, 3.2689	15:7-11 15:12-15 15:18	1.167 1.167 1.167
6:4-25	4.3144	15:21	4.3193
6:5	2.1137, 2.1269	16:4	3.2348
6:7	3.2687, 3.2688	16:7	3.2342
6:8-9	3.2686, 3.2688	17	2.1228, 3.2399
6:13	1.640, 2.1137, 4.3144	17:2 17:2-7	2.1228 1.621
6:16	1.640, 2.1137, 4.3144	17:5 17:12	2.1531 1.621
6:23	2.1143	18:10	2.1435, 2.1703
7:6-7	2.1210	18:15-19	2.1218
7:8	2.1143	18:15-22	3.2005
7:9-10	4.3183	18:18-19	3.2280
8:1	2.1143	18:20-22	1.621, 2.1435
8:3	1.640, 2.1137	18:21	4.3049
9:5	2.1143	19:15	2.1137, 2.1138
9:9-15	4.3144	19:18	4.3461
9:10	1.647	19:21	2.1137, 4.3141
10:1	2.1218	21	3.2386, 3.2387
10:1-5	4.3144	21:6-8	3.1887
10:4	4.3135	21:15	4.2970
10:12-20	4.3139	21:15-17	2.1714
10:20	4.3144	21:18-21	1.622, 1.647, 2.1435
10:21-11:21	3.2686
11:13-21	3.2677, 3.2682, 3.2684, 3.2686	21:20 21:22	1.641, 1.647 2.1492
11:18-21	4.3137	21:22-23	3.2386, 3.2398
12:31	4.3049	21:23	2.1704
13	1.630, 1.632, 2.884, 2.1192, 2.1231, 2.1706, 3.2399	22:22-23 23:1 23:11 23:20-21	1.632 1.167 3.2347 1.648
13:1	2.1220	23:22	4.3141
13:1-5	1.621, 2.1433	24:1	1.288, 2.1137, 2.1721, 4.3075
13:1-8	2.1435		2.1140-1142, 4.3141, 4.3360
13:1-11	1.646, 2.883, 2.1231	24:1-4
13:3	1.631	24:6	1.167
13:4	1.634	24:10-11	1.167
13:5	3.2399	24:16	4.3183

24:19	2.1710	13:8	2.1551
25:6	2.1511	13:16	2.1551
26	4.3191	14:18–19	4.3356
28:21–22	4.3186	19:9	3.2347
28:26	3.2722	19:11	3.2347
28:27–28	4.3186, 4.3193
28:28–29	3.2541	1 Sam
28:65	4.3257	2:1–8	3.2734
28:66	3.2347	2:2–10	4.3183
29:12	2.1143	2:35	2.1218
29:15	2.1143	3:11–14	3.2620
29:19	2.1143	3:20	2.1218
31:9–13	1.428	4:13	4.3257
31:12–13	1.634	8:4–9	2.1218
31:20	2.1143	15	4.3039
31:21	2.1143	15:22	1.631
32:4–6	3.2585	16	3.1880
32:6	3.2585	16:13	2.1238
32:8–9	2.1210, 2.1211	16:13–23	1.631
32:14	2.1129	16:14–16	3.2858
32:14–33	3.2686	16:14–27	4.3069
32:18	3.2585	16:23	2.1238, 3.2858
32:35	4.3446, 4.3460	17:26	3.2579
32:39	3.2262, 4.3183	17:36	3.2579
32:40	3.2579	19:11	3.2348
33:8–11	3.2280	19:20–24	3.2442
33:26–29	4.3189	19:24	3.2347
34:10	2.1218	21:1–6	2.1227
		21:4–7	4.3388
Josh		25:16	3.2347
1:8	1.411, 3.2347	28:20	3.2347
2:16	3.2264	31:12	1.351
3:8	1.629	31:13	4.3326
3:10	3.2579
4:21–22	3.2789	2 Sam
5:13	2.1551	4:5–7	4.3040
5:13–15	3.2275	5:2	3.2378
6:20	1.462	5:6–8	1.631
6:26	3.2280	5:8	3.2716, 3.2717,
8:28	1.462		4.3193
9:1–15	4.3342	7	2.1043
15:25	3.2035	7:5–16	3.2400
19:15	4.3412	7:7–17	3.2278
19:49–51	1.356	7:10	3.2280
24	1.225	7:10–16	3.2437
		7:11–14	3.2280
Judg		7:12	2.1716
3:15–30	4.3043	7:12–14	3.2596, 3.2661
4:17–22	4.3043, 4.3048	7:13	2.1043
5:24–31	4.3048	7:14	2.1199, 2.1238,
5:31	1.16		3.2659
12:8	4.3412	7:16	3.2249
12:10	4.3412	12:1–4	3.2550
13:6	2.1551	12:1–7	1.110
13:7	3.2369	17:13 (LXX)	3.2416

19:7	4.2970	4-8	3.2858
20:8-10	4.3043	4:1	3.2442
22:31-33	2.1772	4:10	3.2374
23:17	2.1129	4:18-37	3.2718
24	4.3425	4:38	3.2442
		4:42-4	2.1296
1 Kgs		9:1	3.2442
1:32-48	2.1238	11	2.1731
2:31	4.3333	12:4	2.1724
4:32-33	2.1232	12:8-11	2.1731
4:33	3.2858	12:19-21	4.3040
5:9-19	3.1925	14:6	4.3183
5:12	3.1925	15:4	2.1724
8:27	2.1214, 3.2757	15:29	4.3224
8:29	3.2347	19:4	3.2579
8:39	4.3190	19:16	3.2579
8:47-48	2.1219	22:8-14	2.1731
8:50	3.2347	23:4	2.1731
10:1-13	3.2368	25:26	3.2365
10:1-14	4.2924
11:17	3.2365	1 Chr
11:29-39	1.346	5	2.1524
11:40	3.2365	5:30-41	2.1524
12:26-31	2.1724	6:35-36	2.1524
13:1 (LXX)	4.3440	16:13	2.1211
13:3 (LXX)	4.3440	21:1	3.2856
13:10-17	3.1925	24:3	2.1499
15:22	3.2696
16:8-12	4.3040	2 Chr
17	3.1925	6:18	2.1214
17-19	3.2858	6:30	4.3190
17:8-24	3.1925	6:37-38	2.1219
17:11-19	3.1925	9:1-12	4.2924
17:16	3.1925	20:3	4.3327
17:17-24	3.2718	21:1	3.2856
18:30	2.1724	21:12-19	4.3186
18:31	2.1222	23	2.1731
18:40	4.3045	24:4-11	2.1731
19:10	4.3045	24:15	2.1499
19:11	1.629	25:4	4.3183
19:13	2.1775	26:16-20	2.1731
19:19	2.1298, 2.1775	26:16-21	4.3186
19:19-21	3.2442, 4.3276	29-31	3.2659
20:39-40	3.2550	30:11-12	4.3222
21	3.2780	33:24	4.3040
21:1-15	1.167	34:14-22	2.1731
22:19	2.1591	34-35	3.2659
22:22-23	3.2714	36:18	4.3039
22:26-28	4.3299
		Ezra
2 Kgs		1-6	2.1724
1:8	2.1775	2	4.3425
2:8	2.1775	7	2.1524, 3.2248
2:11	1.153, 3.2236	7:1-5	2.1524
2:13-14	2.1775	7:25-27	4.3224

8:8	3.2248	Pss
8:21–23	4.3327	1	3.2748
Neh		1:1–3	1.357
1:6	3.2347	1:2	1.411, 3.2347
4:9	3.2347	1:3	3.2225
6:14	4.3190	2	2.1559, 3.2086, 3.2279, 3.2780
7	4.3425	2:1	2.1228, 3.2280
8	3.2248	2:2	3.2780
8:1	3.2248	2:6	2.1559
8:1–8	2.1365	2:7	1.639, 2.1238, 2.1295, 3.2596, 3.2659, 3.2780
8:8	3.2463
8:9	1.428
8:13	2.1126	2:9	3.2279
9:26	3.2403, 3.2448	2:11	1.634
10:1–40	2.1509	5:2	2.1219
10:32	3.2597	6:5	3.2626
12:10–11	2.1499, 2.1524	7:8–9	3.2283
13:15	3.2597, 3.2604	8	3.2477
13:15–22	3.2597	8:3	2.1137
13:19	3.2721	8:6	3.2428
13:19–20	3.2347	9:17	2.1212
13:22	3.2721	9:18	3.2522
13:30	2.1507	9:18–19	4.3190
Esth		10:7–8	3.2406
4:16	3.2347	11:4	2.1214
7:10	4.3190	14	4.3259
9:1	4.3190	15	3.2739, 4.3259
9:2	3.2264	18:2	4.3351
Job		18:31	4.3351
1:6–12	3.2856, 4.3073	18:46	3.2579, 4.3351
1–2	3.2856, 3.2874	19:14	4.3351
2:1–7	3.2856	21(22):28	4.3203
4:8	4.3190	22	1.355, 2.1322, 2.1324, 2.1325, 2.1327, 3.2088
4:9	1.633	22:1	1.313, 1.314, 2.1138, 2.1322, 3.2406
5:18	4.3187
8:4	4.3190	22:6–7	2.1322
11:18	4.3257	22:7	3.2406
13:28	4.3337, 4.3338	22:8	2.1322, 3.2406
14	2.1165, 2.1367	22:12	2.1322
14:4	3.2723	22:14–15	2.1323
14:22	2.1368	22:15	2.1329
15:35	4.3190	22:16	2.1323
21:7–8	4.3183	22:18	2.1323, 2.1329, 3.2406
22:7	4.3297	22:19	1.314
24:10	4.3297	22:19–21	2.1323
28	2.1048	22:22–30	2.1323
32:19	4.3338	22:25–27	4.3190
33:22	3.2626	22:28	3.2566, 4.3203
34:30	3.2450
36:13	3.2450

23	3.2224	69:21 (LXX)	3.2406
24:3-4	3.2732	72:8	3.2780
24:3-5	3.2739	72:10-11	3.2368, 3.2378
24:4	4.3148	73:3-5	4.3183
26:8	3.2239	73:13-14	4.3183
27:4	3.2240	73:16-19	4.3190
27:10	3.2585	74:9	4.3454
30:3-4	3.2626	74:12	2.1219
31:5	2.1137, 2.1327	75:8	3.2734
31:14 (LXX)	3.2406	78:2	2.1137
32:4 (31:4)	3.2347	78:24	2.1137
33:12	2.1210	81:9ff	4.3138
33:21	3.1961	82	1.167
34:10	2.1550	82:1-4	4.3183
34:18 [19]	3.2522	82:2	3.2283
34:20	3.2023	82:5	1.167
35:19	2.1137	82:6	2.1137
36:9	3.2579	82:6-7	4.3146, 4.3367
37	3.2798, 3.2799	84:1	3.2240
37:11	3.2799	84:2	3.2579
38:1-11	4.3186	84:3	2.1219
38:13-14	3.2406	84:4	3.2261
40	4.3190	84:8	4.3115
41:9 (LXX)	3.2406	86:6	4.3115
41:9	2.1137	88:4	2.1211, 3.2626
41:14	3.2579	89:20	2.1238
42:2	3.2579	89:26-27	2.1238
44:4	2.1219	90:2	3.2579
44(45):6	4.3203	90:4	3.2254
45	4.3315, 4.3317	91	2.1233, 4.3069
45 (LXX 44)	4.3314	91:5-6	3.2856
45:6	4.3203, 4.3209	91:11-12	2.1137
46	2.1599	93	3.2583
47:2	3.2566	93:2	3.2579
47:7	2.1219	93:11 (LXX)	4.2924
47:7-8	3.2566	95:1-3	3.2566
48	2.1599	95:3	2.1219
49:6	2.1125	96	3.2583
50	4.3138	99	3.2583
51:11	1.625	101:27	4.3338
51:13	3.2409	102:1	4.3115
54:2	4.3115	102:12-22	3.2567
55:1	4.3115	102:25-26	2.1603
60:10	2.1772	103:2-3	4.3187
61:1	4.3115	103:3	4.3185
62:10	2.1125	103:3-5	4.3186
62:13	4.3190	103:13	3.2585
65:12-13	3.2234	103:17-18	4.3183
68:10	3.2522	103:19	2.1214, 3.2566
68:24	2.1219	104:3	1.632
69	2.1324	104:6	2.1211
69:4	2.1137	104:21-23	2.1127, 4.3258
69:9	2.1137, 2.1138, 3.2029	104:23	4.3258
		104:24	3.2897

104:27	4.3258	7	3.2269
104:43	2.1211	8	2.1051
105:8	4.3183	8:1-21	2.1048
106:48	3.2579	8:12-14	2.1051
107	1.784	8:22	2.967
107:5	4.3297	8:22-31	2.1048, 2.1555,
107:18	3.2626		3.2269
107:20	2.1492	8:30	3.2254
107:23-32	4.3080	9	2.1048
108:10	2.1772	9:5	4.3313
110	1.632, 2.885,	10:15	4.3278
	2.1207, 3.2279	10:24	4.3190
110:1	2.1137, 2.1138,	13:24	4.2970
	2.1611, 3.2428,	15:8	4.3190
	4.3349, 4.3368	15:15	4.3257
112:1-3	4.3277	15:16	4.3278
113:7-9	3.2734	16:16	4.3278
114 [115]-118	3.2342	21:27	4.3186
118	2.1165	22:4	4.3277
118:22	2.1138, 2.1154,	23:19-25	1.647
	3.2074, 3.2075	25:1-2	4.3460
118:22-23	2.1137, 2.1634	25:21-22	4.3446
118:25-26	2.1137	28:7	1.647
118:26	3.2673	29:1-3	1.647
119:68	4.3273	30:7-9	2.1125
126 [126]:6	3.1920	30:25	4.3258
127:1	3.2897	31:1-9	3.2268
128	4.3189	31:13-15	4.3258
133	3.2236	54:22 (LXX)	4.3257
133:3	3.2235
135:4	2.1210	Eccl/Qoh
136 [137]:1	3.1920	2:14	4.3184
143:1	4.3115	2:23	4.3257
145:1	2.1219	2:26	4.3184
145:10-13	3.2567	3:17	4.3184
146	3.2281	5:22	4.3190
146:7	4.3297	7:15	4.3183, 4.3184
146:8	2.1272, 2.1272	8:10-12	4.3184
147:8-9	4.3258	8:12-13	4.3184
147:9	2.1225	8:14	4.3183, 4.3184
149:1	1.413	9:2	4.3184
		10:8-9	4.3190
Prov		12:9-10	3.2268
1:7	1.634	12:9-11	1.77
1:8	1.418	14:32	4.3190
1:17-18	4.3190	22:8	4.3190
1:20-33	2.1048	26:27	4.3190
1:27	4.3259	28:10	4.3190
3:7	4.3446, 4.3460
3:7-8	4.3186	Song
3:16	3.2254	1:7	4.3315
3:18	3.2254, 3.2262	2:1-2	4.3258
5:15	2.1129	3:7-10	4.3258
6:6	4.3258	5:1	4.3317

Isa		13:10	2.1162, 2.1604
1	4.3186	13:13	2.1604
1:1	2.1295	14:5	2.1212
1:3	3.2374	14:15	4.2981
1:10-17	1.167	14:29-32	3.2249
1:11	2.1295	15:39	2.1295
1:11-17	4.3190	16:12	3.2738
1:15	2.1294	19:1	1.632, 3.2738
1:27	2.1219	21:8	3.2347
2:1-5	1.439	21:9	3.2738
2:2-4	1.135, 3.2661	21:10	2.1768
2:2-5	3.2504	24	2.1605
2:12-17	3.2584	24:21-23	3.2583
2:18	3.2738	24-27	1.28, 2.1574,
3:14-15	1.167		3.2892
4:3-4	3.2732	25:6	4.3313, 4.3338
5	2.1165, 2.1513,	25:17-18	3.2406
	3.2842	26:19	2.1237, 2.1271,
5:1-7	1.255, 1.455,		2.1272, 3.2010,
	3.2550		3.2264
5:4	2.1153	27	2.1154
5:7	3.2225	27:3	3.2347
5:7b-9	1.167	27:8	1.633
5:8	1.167	27:12-13	2.1771
5:22	2.1307	28:7-9	4.3299
6	2.1591, 3.1912,	28:9	1.415
	3.2909	28:23-29	3.2550
6:1-13	2.1214	29	2.1166
6:5	2.1219	29:13	2.1137, 3.2808
6:9-10	2.1137, 2.1155,	29:18	3.2010
	2.1634, 3.2593	29:18a	2.1271
7:11	2.1220	29:18b	2.1270
7:14	1.638, 1.639,	29:18-19	1.641, 2.1157
	2.1220, 3.2249,	29:20	2.1158
	3.2369, 3.2381	30:8	1.77
8:1	1.77	31:7	3.2738
8:16	1.77, 1.423,	33:14-15	1.167
	3.2442	33:14-16	3.2739
8:16-18	1.415	33:16 (LXX)	3.2120
8:23	4.3223	33:22	2.1219
9:5-6	3.2249	33:22-34	3.2583
10:11	3.2738	34	3.2583
11	2.1306, 2.1555	34:4	2.1162
11:1	1.413, 3.2369	34:10	3.2347
11:1-2	2.1302	34:12	4.3039
11:1-4	2.1051	35	2.1166, 2.1306
11:2	2.1751	35:3-5	2.1294
11:3-4	1.633	35:4	2.1158
11:4	1.633, 2.1559,	35:5	1.353
	3.2249	35:5b	2.1271
11:10	1.352	35:5-6	1.641, 2.1157,
12:18	2.1295		2.1237, 2.1294,
13	3.2583		2.1297, 2.1531,
13:9	2.1604		3.2010
13:9-13	2.1771	35:6a	2.1270

35:8	3.2732	51:17-22	1.630
38:12-13	3.2347	52-53	2.1306, 2.1341,
40	2.1161, 2.1165,		4.3316
	2.1306, 2.1367	52:1	3.2716, 3.2732
40:3	1.116, 1.625,	52:4	2.1555
	2.1294, 2.1771,	52:7	2.1236, 2.1293,
	2.1776, 2.1777,		2.1306, 2.1492,
	3.2234, 4.3317		3.2263, 3.2282,
	2.1776		3.2282, 3.2583
40:3-5	2.967	52:7-12	3.2663
40:6	2.1236, 2.1293	52:13-53:12	2.1307, 3.2306
40:9	3.2579	53	1.353, 1.439,
40:18-20	3.2578, 3.2578,		1.568, 2.1306,
40:28	3.2579		2.1330, 2.1331,
	4.3324		2.1336, 3.2369,
40-66	2.1210		4.3324
41:8-9	4.3190	53:1-3	3.2369
41:17-18	3.2579	53:1-12	2.1331
41:21-24	1.639, 2.1295,	53:3-5	4.3186
42:1	2.1302, 2.1306	53:4	1.640
	1.641, 1.642	53:8	4.3322, 4.3323,
42:1-4	3.2732		4.3324
42:1-7	3.2578	53:10	4.3324
42:5	1.641, 2.1270	53:10-12	2.1307
42:7	3.2010	53:12	2.1137, 2.1163,
42:18-20	2.1219, 3.2566		2.1307
43:15	4.3185	54:1-8	4.3324
43:24-25	2.1210	54:2-3	4.3092
44:1-2	2.1219, 3.2566	54:13	2.1137
44:6	3.2579	55:1	4.3190
44:9-20	3.2578, 3.2579	56	2.1159, 2.1226
44:24	2.1043	56:1	2.1306
44:24-45:7	2.1210	56:3-8	3.2662
45:4	3.2578	56-66	2.1574
45:7	3.2578	56:7	2.1137, 2.1158,
45:11-12	3.2579		2.1159, 2.1164,
45:16-22	3.2579		2.1218, 2.1226,
46:5-7	3.2738		3.2029, 3.2644,
46:6	2.1555		3.2662, 3.2669,
48:10	3.2579		3.2671
48:12	3.2578	57:15	3.2522
48:12-13	2.1306	58:6	1.155, 2.1156,
49:1	2.1555		2.1166, 3.2290,
49:1-4	3.2423		3.2463
49:1-6	3.2845	58:6-7	3.2591
49:6	4.3190	58:7	4.3297
49:10	4.3324	58:13	3.2597, 3.2606,
49:14-21	4.3313		3.2607, 3.2610
49:18	3.2504	59-61	3.2583
49:22-23	4.3461	60	1.352
50:8	4.3338	60-62	4.3319
50:9	2.1603, 4.3338	60:3	3.2378
51:6	4.3338	60:5-6	3.2368
51:8	2.1307	60:8	3.2896
51:17

60:14	3.2504	63:9	4.3185
60:15	4.2970	63:10-11	1.625, 3.2409
60:21	2.1768	63:16	3.2584, 3.2585
60:22	2.1294, 2.1306	64:4 (LXX 65:1-2)	3.1946
61	1.155, 1.157, 1.352, 2.1042, 2.1157, 2.1158, 2.1166, 4.3314, 4.3316, 4.3337, 4.3341	64:8-9	3.2584
		65:9	2.1211
		65:15	2.1211
		65:17-25	2.1605
		65:21	4.3338
		65:23	2.1211
61-62	4.3319, 4.3340, 4.3343	66:1	2.1214, 2.1709
61:1	1.353, 1.641, 2.1156-1158, 2.1272, 2.1293, 2.1295, 2.1301, 2.1492, 3.2010, 3.2282, 3.2283, 3.2463, 3.2522, 4.3297, 4.3319, 4.3326	66:1-2	3.2663, 3.2757
		66:2	3.2522
		66:7-8	3.2406
		66:15-16	2.1771
		66:20-21	3.2770
		Jer
		1:5	3.2423
		1:10	4.3092
		2:2-3	4.3318
61:1b	2.1271	2:13	3.2579
61:1-2	1.155, 1.645, 1.646, 2.1042, 2.1137, 2.1155, 2.1156, 2.1237, 2.1294, 2.1339, 3.2290, 4.3326	2:30	3.2403, 3.2448
		3:17	3.2661
		3:18-19	3.2584, 3.2594
		3:19	3.2585
		4:4	1.167
		4:23	2.1605
61:1-3	1.352, 2.1037, 2.1041, 2.1051, 2.1157, 2.1158, 4.3294, 4.3324	5:3	2.1219
		5:12-14	4.3299
		5:26-28	1.167
		5:31	4.3299
61:2	1.645, 2.1158, 3.2335	6-7	2.1161, 2.1165
		6:13	4.3299
61:2-3	3.2283	6:16	3.1895
61:3	2.1158, 2.1768, 4.3319, 4.3340	7	2.1159, 2.1226, 4.3186
			4.3186
61:3-5	2.1156	7:1-15	3.2669
61:5	2.1158	7:3-4	3.2591
61:6	1.547	7:3-15	3.2497
61:7	2.1158	7:5-7	1.167
61:7-10	3.2585	7:8-10	2.1159
61:8	2.1158	7:11	2.1158, 2.1159, 2.1164, 2.1218, 2.1226, 2.1304, 3.2021, 3.2646, 3.2655, 3.2669, 3.2671, 3.2847
61:10	4.3313, 4.3314, 4.3315, 4.3319, 4.3324, 4.3340
61:19	4.3314
62:1-2	2.1294
62:2	2.1555	7:12-14	3.2669
62:5	4.3313, 4.3319, 4.3340	7:21-23	2.1261
		7:22-23	3.2727
62:6	3.2347	7:31	4.3049
62:8-9	4.3340	7:33	3.2722
62:10-12	4.3319	7:34	4.3328

8:1-2	3.2722	34:8	1.645
8:6	2.1219	34:15	1.646, 2.1219
8:19	2.1219	34:17	1.646
9:5	2.1219	35:6-7	4.3340
10:2-16	4.3183	36:2 (LXX)	4.3429
10:8-10	3.2579	42:13-44:30	3.2365
10:10	2.1219, 3.2578, 3.2579	46:10	3.2583
12:1	4.3183	51:45	3.1916
14:3	4.3039	51:46	3.1916
14:17	3.2347	51:48	3.1916
16:9	4.3328	51:55	3.1916
17:19-27	3.2597	Lam
19	2.1304, 3.1886	4:20	3.2249
19:1-13	1.346	Ezek
19:5	4.3049	1	2.1551, 2.1591, 3.2909
19:6	4.3333	1:26	2.1551
22:3	1.167	4:14	3.2721
22:13-17	1.167	6:5	3.2722
23:5-6	3.2732	7	3.2583
23:5-8	3.2437	8:2	2.1551
23:36	3.2579	14:6	2.1219
24:5-9	3.2779	16:20-21	4.3049
24:8	4.3039	17:24	3.2734
25:10	4.3328	18	4.3183
25:15	1.630	18:5-9	1.167
26	3.2497	18:7	4.3297
26:2-6	1.167	18:16	4.3297
26:18-19	2.1194	18:30	2.1219
26:19	2.1219	20:26	4.3049
26:21	3.2365	20:33	2.1219
29	3.2779	21:27	3.2734
29:14	3.2779	21:30-32	3.2249
30:3	3.2779	23:31-33	1.630
31	2.1336	27:23	3.2249
31:9	3.2584, 3.2585, 3.2594	29:5	3.2722
31:15[14]	2.1715	30	3.2583
31:15	3.2369	32:5-8	2.1604
31:20	4.3185	32:7	2.1162
31:25	3.1895	34	2.1207
31:28	3.1895	34:4	1.167
31:29-30	4.3183	34:16-17	1.167
31:31	2.1242, 2.1331	36:19	4.3190
31:31-33	3.2405	36:22-27	1.150-151, 3.2852
31:31-34	2.1636, 3.2852	36:25	3.2732
32:18-19	4.3183	36:29	3.2732
32:33	4.3049	37	1.28, 2.1325, 3.1887
33:7-8	4.3299	37:1-6	3.2579
33:10-11 (LXX 40:10-11)	4.3319, 4.3327	37:1-14	3.1887
33:14-26	4.3382	37:2-3	3.2262
33:15	4.3319
33:25	3.2347

37:5 (LXX)	3.2417	7:9	2.1195
37:10	3.2417	7:9-11	2.1599
37:22-28	3.2732	7:9-14	3.2411
38-39	2.1599	7:13	1.632, 2.885,
38:12	3.2239		2.1137, 2.1162,
40:1-44:3	1.346		2.1163, 2.1547,
40-48	2.1591, 3.2779,		2.1548, 2.1573,
	3.2884		2.1575, 2.1597,
40:46	2.1497		2.1598, 2.1600,
43:3	3.2249		3.2426, 3.2428,
44:21	4.3340		3.2429, 3.2490,
44:31	3.2721		3.2491, 4.3325
45:9-12	1.167	7:13-14	1.423, 2.1207,
47:1	3.2736		2.1226, 2.1236,
48:11	2.1519		3.2426, 3.2428,
			3.2429, 3.2490,
Dan			3.2491
1:8-16	2.1585	7:14	2.1562, 2.1597,
2	2.1599, 3.2908		2.1598, 3.2906
2-6	2.1595	7:16-28	2.1598
2:5	2.1562	7:17	2.1575
2:9	2.1562	7:17-18	2.1550
2:19	2.1581	7:18	2.1575, 2.1598,
2:21	3.2734		3.2567
2:22	2.1581	7:22	2.1598
2:27	2.1250	7:23	2.1575
2:28	2.1581	7:25	2.1575
2:29	2.1581	7:27	2.1550, 2.1562,
2:30	2.1581		2.1575, 2.1598
2:39 (LXX)	4.3429	7-12	3.2272, 3.2425
2:47	2.1581	8:9-14	2.1599
2:48-49	2.1595	8:13	2.1550
3:33	2.1562, 2.1597,	8:22	2.1538
	4.3203	9	2.1585
4:10	2.1550	9:21	2.1551
4:14	2.1550	9:22-27	2.1325
4:20	2.1550	9:24-27	2.1531, 2.1598
4:31	2.1562	9:27	3.2337, 4.3146
4:34	4.3203	10-12	2.1551
5:4	3.2738	10:1	2.1581
5:23	4.3039	10:13	2.1550
6:11	2.1725	10:20-21	2.1550
6:24	4.3190	11	2.1562
6:27	2.1597	11:31	4.3146
7	1.568, 2.1163,	11:35	2.1581
	2.1325, 2.1341,	12	2.1800, 3.2428
	2.1545, 2.1551,	12:1-2	3.2406
	2.1552, 2.1554,	12:1-3	3.1888, 3.2263,
	2.1559-1561,		3.2409, 3.2426,
	2.1563, 2.1566,		3.2898, 4.3189
	2.1575, 2.1595,	12:2	2.1149, 2.1308,
	2.1597, 2.1599,		3.1887
	2.1600, 2.1602,	12:2-3	3.2426, 3.2428,
	2.1605		3.2589
7:2-8	2.1598	12:3	1.502, 3.2411

12:5-7	2.1551	Jonah
12:7	3.2579	2:1	3.2264
12:11	4.3146	3:4	4.2924, 4.2926
12:13	3.2589	4	4.3186
12:32	2.1560	4:1-3	4.2937
Hos		Mic
2	4.3340	1:4	2.1559
2:7-11	4.3340	2:1-2	1.167
2:14	4.3340	2:1-3	3.2781
2:16-18	4.3318	2:11	4.3299
2:17-24	4.3340	3:1-3	1.167
4:1-3	1.167	3:12	3.2416
5:10	1.167	4:1-3	1.439
5:12	4.3338	4:1-4	3.2504, 3.2661
6:1	4.3187	4:1-8	1.352
6:2	3.2263, 3.2264, 3.2265	4:6-8	3.2567
6:6	1.167, 1.631, 2.1137, 2.1719, 3.2631, 3.2696, 3.2727, 3.2752	4:8	2.1715
8:7	4.3190	5:1	2.1532
8:10	3.2249	5:2	3.2327, 3.2369, 3.2378
10:13	4.3190	6:6-8	1.167, 1.631
11:1	3.2369	6:7	4.3049
11:8-9	4.3185	6:8	3.2591
11:11	3.2446	6:10-12	1.167
12:7-9	1.167	7:2	1.167
Joel		7:6	2.1137, 4.2966, 4.2967, 4.2968
1:4-2:17	3.2584	7:7	4.2968
1:8	4.3328	7:12	4.2968
2:12-16	4.3328	Hab
2:18-3:21	3.2584	1:12	3.2579
3	2.1599	1:13	4.3183
3:1-5	2.1769	1:16	1.630
Amos		Zeph
2:6-8	1.167	1:8	2.1604
4:1	1.167	1:14-18	2.1771
4:2	4.3333	3:8	2.1604
4:4-5	1.167	Hag
5:7	1.167	1	2.1605
5:10-12	1.167	1-3	3.2278
5:21-24	1.167, 4.3186, 4.3190	1:1-8	2.1724
8:4-7	1.167	1:14	3.2815
8:9-10	1.28	2:4-5	3.2815
8:11 (LXX)	4.3332	2:6	2.1604
8:13 (LXX)	4.3332	2:9	3.2736, 3.2737
9:6	2.1708	2:10-19	3.2815
9:13-14	4.3338	2:11-13	3.2721, 3.2737
		2:14	3.2737, 3.2738
		2:15	3.2737, 3.2738

2:21-22	3.2437	13:7	2.1137, 2.1166,
3:23	3.2278		2.1243
Zech		14	2.1599, 3.2641,
1-8	2.1591		3.2642, 3.2814
1:6	2.1219	14:1-21	3.2814
1:8	2.1551	14:4-5	1.28
2:5	2.1551	14:7	2.1603, 3.2347
2:16 [ 12]	3.2217	14:9	3.2770
3:1-2	3.2856	14:20	2.1305
3:1-5	3.2814	14:20-21	2.1307, 3.2663,
3:1-10	4.3314		3.2770
3:2	4.3077, 4.3078,	14:21	2.1305, 3.2641,
	4.3084		3.2642, 3.2662,
	4.3078		3.2663
3:20	4.3078	Mal
4	2.1724	1:2	2.1291
4:6	3.2814	1:2-3	4.2970, 4.2971
4:7	3.2737	1:4-6	2.1291
4:9	3.2737	1:6-2:9	2.1779
6:12	2.1199	2:10	3.2585
6:12-13	2.1043, 3.2400,	3	2.1161, 2.1165
	3.2661	3:1	1.625, 2.1137,
6:12-15	3.2437		2.1160, 2.1161,
7:2-7	3.2814		2.1291, 2.1777,
7:9-10	1.167		2.1779, 3.2663
7:12	3.2814		2.1771
8:18-19	3.2814	3:1-2	2.1771, 3.2663
8:19	4.3327	3:1-3	2.1771, 3.2663
8:20-23	3.2661	3:1-5	2.1778
9-14	1.28, 2.1574,	3:5-10	2.1779
	3.2892	3:7	2.1778
9:9	1.346, 2.1036,	3:10	2.1778
	2.1046, 2.1303,	3:15	2.1778
	2.1305, 2.1307,	3:17	2.1771
	2.1531, 4.3391	3:18	2.1707, 2.1778
9:9-11	3.2405	3:19	2.1778
9:10	3.2249	3:21	2.1771
9:11	2.1242, 2.1331	3:23	2.1291, 2.1292,
11:1-12:9	3.2814		2.1771
11:7	3.2522	3:23-24	2.1160, 2.1778
11:11	3.2522	3:24	2.1161, 2.1778
12:10	3.2025	4:1	2.1778
12-14	3.2583	4:3	2.1771
13:1	3.2736, 3.2814	4:5	2.1771
13:2	3.2714, 3.2814	4:5-6	2.1160, 2.1778
13:4	2.1775

Old Testament Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha

Bar		3:9-4:4	2.1048
1:5	4.3327	3:9-36	3.2254
2:16	2.1214	4:4	3.2782
3:9-4:1	3.2269	5:5	3.2782

12:10	3.2489	2:48	2.1212
14:12	4.3275	3:46	2.1725
24:1	4.3275	4	3.2236
		5:14–15	4.3224
Bel		5:15	4.3223
1:5	3.2738	6:7	4.3147
5	3.2579	6:44	2.1242
6	3.2579	7:9	2.1211
24	3.2579	7:12–17	1.413
25	3.2579	9:23–25	2.1210
		9:39–41	4.3328
1 Esd		9:51	2.1211
1–3	2.1800	10:14	2.1210
		10:17–19	4.3225
2 Esd		10:28–30	4.3427
3–14	3.2273, 3.2273	10:29	4.3417
13	1.568	10:30	4.3225
		11:34	4.3225
Ep Jer		11:34–35	4.3427
6:34–35	4.3183	12:5–6	2.1734
		12:19–23	2.1501
Jdt		14:41	3.2279
3:6–10	4.3048	15:16–21	2.1509
4:6–8	2.1735
8:6	4.3326	2 Macc
8:18	3.2696, 3.2738	1:1–10	3.2780
8:32–36	4.3048	1:7	3.2218
8:36–10:2	2.1725	1:10	2.1734
9:12	3.2579	1:24	3.2579, 3.2580
9:13–14	4.3048	1:27	3.2446
10:1–8	4.3048	2:13–14	2.1507
10:11–13	4.3048	2:18	3.2446
11:14	2.1735	2:21	2.1601
12:16–20	4.3048	3	2.1601
13:4	4.3049	4:7–10	2.1460
13:7	4.3042, 4.3049	4:9–12	1.410
13:16	4.3048	4:30–35	2.1508
13:16–20	4.3049	4:43–50	2.1733
15:8	2.1736	5:1–4	2.1601
15:12–13	4.3049	5:8	3.2365
16:6–9	4.3049	5:10	3.2722
		5:23–6:2	2.1508
1 Macc		5:27	2.1775
1:13–14	1.410	6–7	2.1240, 3.2391
1:25–28	4.3326	6:1–2	2.1508
1:43	2.1210, 3.2604	6:1–3	4.3224
1:52–53	2.1210	6:2	2.1215
1:53	2.1211	6:18–7:42	3.2391
1:54	4.3147	6:18–31	2.1240
2	2.1497	7	2.1241, 3.2757
2:15–28	4.3045, 4.3046	7:9	3.2589
2:27–42	3.2750	7:9–29	3.2429
2:42	2.1496	7:14	3.2589
2:44	2.1212	7:21–23	3.2589

7:23	3.2589	8:4-8	4.3067
7:28	3.2579	8:15	2.1210, 2.1211
7:28-36	3.2589	13:1	4.3203
7:32-33	3.2407	13:14-15	4.3187
7:33	2.1242	14:4	3.2781
7:37-38	2.1242, 3.2407	14:5	3.2651
10:29	2.1601	14:6	3.2781
11:8	2.1601	14:7	3.2782
11:27	2.1734	14:10	4.3190
12:44	3.2589	14:11-12	3.2722
13:12	4.3327
14:4	4.3417	Sir
15:13-15	2.1309	1:1-20	2.1048
15:36	2.1508	1:4	3.2269
		1:9	3.2269
3 Macc		1:10	3.1946
1	2.1735	1:24	2.1048
1:3	2.1210, 2.1212	4:7	4.3047
1:6-8	2.1735	4:10	4.3039
1:19	4.3328	4:11	2.1207
4:6-8	4.3328	4:31	3.1966
6:18-19	2.1601	6:6	3.1944
		8:1-3	4.3047
4 Macc		9:10	4.3338
1:11	2.1242	10:10	4.3259
6:28-29	3.2407	11:18	4.3259
7:19	3.2262	12:1-4	3.2699
13:14-15	3.2262	12:1-7	3.2700
13:17-18	3.2262	14:17	4.3338
16:25	3.2262	16:12	4.3190
17:21	2.1307	16:24	1.418
17:21-22	2.1242	16:26-17:32	3.2580
17:22	3.2407	16:28	3.2580
18:3-4	2.1242	17:20	3.2580
18:10	3.2262	18:1	3.2579
18:10-19	1.406	20:15	4.3259
18:12	2.877	21:27	3.2856
18:16-19	3.2262	23:11	2.1143
		24:1-22	3.2269
Tob		24:3	3.2254
1:16-2:9	1.351	24:8	3.2254
1:16-19	3.2722	24:19	2.1207
1:17	4.3297	24:25	3.2254
1:17-18	3.2417	24:25-27	3.2254
2:1-3	2.1725	27:25-27	4.3190
2:3-8	3.2722	30:14-15	4.3278
3:3-5	4.3183	31[34]:8	4.3277, 4.3301
3:7-8	3.2856	34:19	4.3186, 4.3190
4:3-4	3.2722	35:24	4.3190
4:12	3.2781	36:1-22	3.2894
4:16	4.3297	38:9-10	4.3186
6-8	3.2857	38:9-15	4.3187
6:14	3.2722	38:10	4.3187
8:1-3	3.2856, 4.3066	38:15	4.3186

39:1-11	3.2268	11-15	3.2696
39:16	3.2580	11:16	4.3190
39:27-44:17	3.2268	11:20	1.633
39:28-31	3.2580	12:3	3.2218
39:30-40:7	2.1127	12:23	4.3190
40:1-7	4.3257	13:1	2.1631
40:28	4.3278	14:8	3.2738
42:21	3.2580	14:21	4.3142
43:5	3.2580	14:22-28	2.1631
43:10	3.2580	14:22-31	4.3142
44-46	1.69	14:33	4.3142
44:5	1.77	16:12-13	4.3187
44:15	1.77	18:24	4.3068
48:1	1.77
48:3	4.3440	Apoc. Ab.
48:5	4.3440	24.5-8	4.3142
48:10	2.1160, 2.1292, 2.1771, 2.1778, 2.1779, 3.2850	29.19	2.1601
		Apoc. Adam
48:11	2.1779	4.1	3.2220
49:1	3.2894	58-14	2.1604
49:16	2.1595
50	3.2894	Apoc. El.
50:11-13	3.2894	3	3.2226
50:15	3.2894
50:25-26	3.2701	Apoc. Mos.
50:28	2.1632	19.3	3.2267
51:12	2.1497
51:13-22	3.2268	As. Mos.
51:23-26	1.642	9	3.2273
51:23-27	3.2269	10.1	4.3074
51:23-28	3.2268	10.1-7	2.1771
51:26-27	3.1895	10.1-10	3.2273
51:27	3.2270
		2 Bar.
Wis		3.7	3.2274
1-6	2.1341	4.1	2.1606
1:6	4.3448	4.2-6	2.1606
1:14	3.2856	7	3.2897
2:12-24	3.2874	10.11-12	2.1606
3:1	4.3449	11.2	4.3203
4:15	2.1210	21.11-25	4.3189
6-9	2.1048	32.4	2.1606
7:7	4.3448	32.6	2.1606
7:17-21	2.1232	42.8	3.2426
7:20	3.2858	44.7	2.1604
7:22	4.3449	44.11-15	4.3189
7:22-30	3.2269	48.33	2.1048
8:13	4.3449	48.36	2.1048
8:17	4.3449	50.2	3.2426
8:19-20	4.3193	50.2-4	3.2589
9:1	2.967	51.9	2.1603
9:17	4.3449	59.4	2.1606, 3.2884
10:10	2.1606, 3.2881, 4.3203	63.10	3.2218
		70.3	4.2968

72.6	2.1601	26-32	2.1594
73.1-3	4.3074	26.1	3.2239
73.1-5	2.1603	32.1	2.1596
73.1-74.1	2.1603	32.16-26	2.1596
73.6-7	2.1603	36-71	3.2479
74.1-2	2.1603	37	2.1553
77.6	2.1604	37-71	1.99, 1.110, 1.568, 2.1341, 2.1573, 2.1595, 2.1598, 3.2247
78.1-8	3.2782
78.7	2.1604
80	3.2897
84.2	2.1604	38	2.1553
85.4	2.1604	38-39	4.3189
		38-44	2.1553
3 Bar.		38.2-4	2.1211
1.6	2.1581	39	2.1553
2.6	2.1581	39.5	2.1550, 4.3275
8	2.1581	39.5-6	2.1553
10.9	3.2236	40.7	4.3073
		42	2.1048
1 En.		45-57	2.1533
1-36	2.1577, 3.2272	46.1	2.1553, 2.1554
1.1	2.1211	46.3	2.1557
1.3b-9	2.1771	46.6	3.2418
1.3-9	2.1579	47.3	2.1554
3	2.1594	48.2-3	2.1554
6-11	3.2857	48.3	2.1052
6-14	2.1596	48.6	2.1052, 2.1554
7	4.3188	48-51	2.1051
7:1	4.3067	51.1-5	3.2589
7.1-8	2.1596	51.15-16	3.2426
7.25	2.1596	53.6	2.1043
8	4.3188	55	2.1600
8.3	4.3067	55.4	2.1207
8.9-14	2.1597	56.5-7	2.1552
10	3.2858	57.1	3.2896
10-14	2.1594	58	2.1553
10.4	3.2856, 4.3074	58-69	2.1553
10.22	3.2770	60.4-5	2.1554
13.1	4.3074	61-64	2.1553
14	2.1553, 2.1585, 2.1591, 2.1600, 3.2909	62.3-5	2.1207
		62.7	2.1554
		62.7-8	2.1211
14.16-20	2.1214	62.13-15	3.2589
15.3-12	3.2857	62.14	4.3313
15.9-10	2.1632	66	3.2218
15.11-12	3.2856	67.5-13	2.1552
16.1	3.2798	69.14	2.1554
18.13-16	3.2857	69.27-29	3.2856
19	3.2247, 3.2289	70.1	2.1557
19.1	3.2714	70.1-2	2.1556, 2.1558
19.1-2	3.2857	70.3-4	2.1556
22	2.1579	70.3-71.17	2.1556
22.9-10	3.2418, 3.2429	71	2.1564
25	2.1603	71.3	2.1554
25-26	2.1579	71.8	2.1554

71.9	2.1554	45.3	4.3186, 4.3190
71.13	2.1554	51.4	2.1594
71.14	2.1555, 2.1557, 2.1558	59	2.1594
72–82	2.1577, 3.2272	61.4–62.3	2.1594
75–76	3.2236	64	2.1594
80.4	2.1604	65.7–8	2.1603
83.1	1.406	65.9	2.1603
83–90	3.2272	66.1–5	2.1594
89–90	3.2225	68.3	2.1594
89.36	3.2897	68.5–6	2.1594
89.54	3.2736	69–72	2.1594
89.56	3.2736	3 En.
89.73–74	2.1214	45.2	1.413
90.9–19	2.1601	48[E].7	1.413
90.28–29	3.2400
90.29	3.2651	Eup.
91.11	2.1601	34	3.2216
91.12	2.1601
91.13	3.2651	4 Ezra	3.2273
91.14	2.1603, 2.1604	2.15–17	2.1210
91–107	3.2272	2.22–23	3.2722
93.9–10	3.2852	3.36	2.1210
94.6–11	2.1632	4.23	4.3183
95.4	4.3186	5.9	4.2968
95.4–7	2.1632	5.9–11	2.1048
95.5	4.3190	5.23–29	2.1210
96.4–8	2.1632	6.18–20	2.1771
96.7–8	4.3047	6.24	4.2968
98.6	4.3283	6.25	4.2966
100.1–2	4.2968	6.27	2.1603
102.1	2.1771	6.54	2.1210
103.1–2	4.3283	7	2.1561
103.3	3.2426	7.17–25	2.1632
103.4	3.2589	7.26–44	3.2274
104.1	4.3283	7.28–29	2.1560, 3.2429
104.2	1.502	7.28–32	3.2589
104.7–13	2.1632	7.32–34	3.2426
108.7–9	4.3327	7.77–96	3.2418, 3.2429
108.11–15	3.2426	8.3	3.2277
125	2.1632	8.53	2.1603
		9.38–10.4	4.3328
2 En.		10.1	4.3328
1.3	2.1606	10.4	4.3328
2	2.1606	10.27	3.2400
9.1	2.1594	11–12	3.2274
10.5	4.3142	11–13	2.1341
11	3.2221	12	2.1559, 2.1563
22	2.1595	12.11	2.1559
22.8	4.3338	13	2.1552,
30.8	2.1048		2.1558–1562,
33.4	2.1048		2.1573, 3.2274,
45–46	2.1594		3.2479

13.2-50	3.2782	10.8	3.2856
13.23	2.1772	10.11	4.3074
13.32	2.1560	11.4	3.2714
13.36	3.2651	11.4-5	3.2856
13.37	2.1560	12.19	3.2579
13.39-47	3.2896	15.30-32	2.1210
13.48	3.2218	16.16-27	3.2579
		16.17	3.2856
Jos. Asen.		17	3.2874
1-22	2.1580	19.25	2.1604, 2.1605
5.5-6	2.1596	19.28	3.2856
8.4	3.2580	22	2.1575
12.2	3.2581	22.5	3.2579
14-17	2.1580	22.16-17	3.2856
14.12-15	4.3338	23	2.1575, 2.1579
16.14	2.1580, 2.1596	23.7	3.2722
22.13	2.1596	23.16	4.2968
23.8	2.1596	23.16-31	2.1605
27	2.1601	23.19	4.2968
		23.21	2.1214
Jub.		23.22-31	3.2406
1.2	3.2239	23.23-24	2.1212
1.3-9	2.1575	23.23-31	3.2857
1.12	3.2403	23.24-31	2.1604
1.17	3.265	23.29	2.1603, 3.2856,
1.20	3.2856, 4.3073		4.3074
1.23	2.1771	25-26	2.1575
1.23-25	3.2585	26-27	3.2579
1.28	3.2230	30	2.1601
1.29	2.1605, 3.2651	31.18-20	2.1601
2.2	3.2220	36.1-2	3.2722
2.10	2.1605	36.10	2.1771
2.17-33	3.2750	36.18-19	3.2722
2.19	3.2605	37.7	4.3144
2.29	3.2606	48.9-11	3.2536, 3.2856
2.29-30	3.2605	48.15	4.3073
2.31-32	3.2579	48.18	4.3073
4.26	3.2732, 3.2770	49.2	3.2856
5	3.2584	50.5	3.2732, 3.2783,
5.1-10	3.2857		3.2798, 3.2856
5.6	2.1603, 3.2856	50.8	3.2606, 3.2610
6.14	3.2670	50.8-12	3.2605
7.20	4.2951	50.10-11	3.2606
7.38-39	1.406	50.11	3.2670
8.19	3.2239	50.12	3.2606
9.15	2.1771	50:12-13	4.3327
10.1	3.2714, 3.2856
10.1-2	3.2856	L.A.B.
10.5	3.2856	3.10	3.2589
10.5-11	3.2857	10.7	3.2252
10.7	4.3074	11	4.3142
10.7-11	2.1603, 3.2856	11.1-13	4.3138
10.7-13	3.2856	11.5	3.2252

11.8	2.1772, 4.3115	5.1-16	3.2266
18	3.2257	6-14	4.3439
18.5	2.1242, 3.2257
19.10	3.2218	Odes Sol.
19.12-13	1.502, 3.2589	4	3.2225
20.3	4.3458	24	3.2226
20.8	3.2252	30	3.2225
25.7-13	4.3138	40	3.2225
25.12	4.3068
30.312	3.2581	Pr. Jac.
32.1-4	3.2257	8	3.2239
32.3	3.2258	16	3.2220
32.4	3.2258
34.1-4	4.3067	Ps.-Hec.
44	4.3142	198-199	3.2216
44.6f	4.3138
48.1	2.1292	Ps.-Menander
60	3.2858	9-15	4.3142
60.1-3	4.3069
L.A.E.		Ps.-Phoc.
9.1	3.2267, 3.2856	3-8	4.3138, 4.3142
9.3	3.2267	8	4.2951
11.3	3.2856	16	4.3148
12-17	3.2267	116-121	4.3259
12.1	3.2267	175-227	4.2951
17.1	3.2267	228	1.270
22	3.2238	Pss. Sol.
28.4	3.2261	1.1	2.1212
49.3-50.1	2.1604	2	3.2279
		2.1-2	2.1212
Let. Aris.		2.3	2.1214, 3.2278
83	3.2239	2.3-18	2.1632
83-104	2.1214	3.3-8	3.2278
128-132	4.3144	3.8	4.3327
168	4.3138, 4.3142	4.1-20	2.1632
187-294	4.2950	5.3	4.2939
207	1.16, 1.17	5.8-11	4.3258
229	3.2689, 3.2695	5.8-19	2.1225
		8	3.2279
Liv. Pro.		8.10-18	2.1632
1.1	3.2266	8.11-12	3.2278
1.8	3.2266	8.11-13	2.1214
16.38-42	3.2856	8.26	3.2584
23	3.2266	8.29	3.2584
		9.3	3.2278
Mart. Ascen. Isa.		9.9-11	2.1210
1.8-9	3.2856	10.6	2.1211, 3.2522
1.9	3.2856	11.2	3.2782
2.4	3.2856	11.2-3	3.2239
2.8-11	2.1774	13.7-10	3.2584
3.11-12	3.2266	14.3-5	2.1768
3.13-4.2	3.2265	14.6-10	2.1632
5	3.2874	14.9	3.2584

15.3-6	2.1771	4.171-192	2.1604
15.4-13	3.2278	4.179-190	4.3189
15.7	4.3189	5	3.2221
15.8	4.3189	5.152	2.1604
15.8-14	2.1632	5.187-189	2.1292
15.13	3.2278	5.194-202	2.1292
17	1.115, 2.1043, 3.2278, 3.2279, 3.2732	5.414-433	2.1043, 2.1564, 3.2897
17-18	3.2437	6.4-6	3.2121
17.3	4.3203	8	3.2238
17.4-6	3.2278	T. Ab.	3.2274
17.21	2.1278	10	3.2276
17.21-25	2.1212, 3.2279	11.1-12	3.2276
17.21-31	3.2504	12-13	3.2874
17.21-35	3.2279	12-15	3.2276
17.21-46	2.1198	20.13-14	3.2276
17.22-23	3.2732
17.23	2.1051	T. Ash.
17.26	3.2732	7.3	3.2857
17.29	2.1051
17.30-32	3.2279	T. Benj.
17.35	2.1051	3.3	4.3144
17.37	2.1051	4-5	4.3446
17.42-43	1.415	4.2-5	4.3460
17.43	2.1051	4.3	4.3461
17.44	4.3293	5.1-3	3.2714
18.4-9	1.415	5.2	3.2856
18.5-9	3.2279
18.6-7	2.1051, 4.3293	T. Dan
Sib. Or.		3.6	3.2856
1-2	3.2890	5.3	3.2689, 3.2695, 4.3144
2.68	4.3148	5.6	3.2856
2.170-173	3.2782	5.10-12	4.3074
2.196-213	2.1604	5.11	3.2857
3.8-45	3.2696	6.1	3.2856
3.71-73	2.1771
3.75-92	2.1604	T. Gad
3.270-276	3.2736	4.7	3.2856
3.573-574	4.2950
3.657-660	2.1214	T. Iss.
3.675-684	2.1604	5.2	2.1147, 3.2689, 3.2695
3.744-755	2.1603
3.751-755	2.1603	7.5	3.2689, 3.2695
3.760-761	2.1771
3.787-795	2.1603	T. Job
4.6-11	2.1214	2.2-3.5	3.2856
4.27-28	2.1214	4.4-9	3.2856
4.127	3.2231	23.11	3.2856
4.159-170	2.1753	26.6	3.2856
4.159-178	2.1761	27.1-7	3.2874
4.162-167	1.345	33	3.2218
4.167-177	2.1771

T. Jos.		T. Mos.
5.2	4.3144	5.3–6.1	2.1214
7.6	4.3144	9–10	2.1242, 2.1604
		9.1–7	2.1604
T. Jud.		10.1	2.1603
[A]21.1–4	1.415	10.46	2.1604
19.2	4.3327
23	3.2284	T. Naph.
24	2.1051, 3.2284, 3.2288	2.2–4	4.3193
		3.5	3.2857
		6.1–10	4.3080
T. Levi		T. Reu.
2–5	2.1579	1.6–8	4.3186
2–8	2.1579, 2.1593	2.8–9	3.2856
2.10	2.1581	3.3	3.2856
3.3	2.1579	5.5–7	3.2857
3.4–6	2.1214
3.8	2.1256	T. Sim.
4.1	2.1579	3.4	4.3327
5.1–2	2.1214	4.9	3.2856
5.3	2.1601	6.6	3.2857
6.1–11	2.1601
8	2.1579	T. Sol.
8.5	3.2908	1.9–11	4.3071
14.5–8	2.1214	3.5	2.1218
15.1	3.2736	20.12–17	4.3073
16.1	2.1214
16.3	1.621, 2.1191, 3.2536	T. Zeb.
18	2.1051, 3.2284, 3.2285	9.8–9	3.2857
18.2–6	1.415	Treat. Shem
18.12	3.2856, 4.3074	7	3.2221
18.12–13	3.2857

New Testament

Matt		1:16	1.638, 3.1921,
1	2.1278, 3.1879		3.2371, 3.2373,
1–2	1.69, 1.400, 1.401, 1.659, 3.1878, 3.1880, 3.2099, 3.2367, 3.2369, 4.3375, 4.3410	1:16–20	3.2380
		1:17	1.638
		1:18	1.638, 3.2377
1:1	1.341, 1.636, 1.637, 2.1683, 3.1921	1:18	1.637, 1.638, 2.1683, 3.1921, 4.3410
		1:18–2:23	3.1876, 3.1878
		1:18–19	4.3434
		1:18–25	3.2371, 3.2380, 3.2421, 3.2438
1:1–4:16	1.636, 1.637
1:1–16	3.2373	1:19	4.3411, 4.3436
1:1–17	3.2437, 4.3425	1:19–25	3.2377
1:2–16	1.637, 3.2377, 3.2380	1:20	1.637, 1.638, 3.1921, 3.2377, 4.3412, 4.3432

1:20-21	1.637, 3.1921	2:22-23	3.1921, 4.3410
1:20-25	3.2437	2:23	1.403, 1.413,
1:21	2.965, 3.1921		3.1881, 3.2366,
1:22-23	1.638, 3.1881,		3.2367, 3.2369
	3.2367, 3.2381	3:1	4.3388
1:23	1.403, 3.2369	3:1-2	2.1761
1:24	4.3411, 4.3432,	3:1-6	2.1751
	4.3434, 4.3436	3:1-17	1.569
1:24-25	3.1921	3:2	2.1219, 2.1291,
1:25	3.2366, 3.2377		2.1293, 3.2838,
2	2.1715, 3.2366,		4.3207
	3.2370, 3.2373,	3:3	2.1776, 4.3317
	3.2379	3:4	2.1774, 4.3340
2:1	3.1921, 3.2315,	3:4-6	4.3318
	3.2321, 3.2366,	3:5	2.1514, 2.1756
	3.2371, 4.3409,	3:6	2.1761
	4.3410, 4.3412,	3:7	2.1756, 4.3308
	4.3432	3:7-10	1.77, 2.1291,
2:1-12	2.1619, 3.2324,		3.1855, 3.2029,
	3.2362, 3.2367		3.2442, 4.3318
2:1-18	3.2372, 3.2373	3:7-12	1.27
2:2	1.341, 3.2326,	3:8	2.1219, 2.1762
	3.2327, 3.2372	3:8-9	3.2839
2:3-5	2.1521	3:8-10	4.3319
2:5-6	3.1881, 3.2367,	3:9	2.1212, 3.2789
	3.2369	3:10	3.2839
2:6	3.2378, 4.3412	3:11	1.150, 1.639,
2:7	3.2328		2.1219, 2.1769
2:7-8	3.2327	3:11-12	2.1157, 2.1751
2:9	3.2326, 3.2327,	3:12	1.639, 2.1291,
	3.2372		4.3319
2:10	3.2327	3:13-17	1.152, 1.311,
2:11	3.2375, 3.2438,		1.659, 2.1751
	4.3410, 4.3432	3:14	1.345, 1.563,
2:12	3.2421		2.1784, 3.2004
2:12-20	3.2122	3:14-15	2.1751, 3.1878
2:13	3.2438	3:14-17	2.1292
2:13-15	3.2365, 3.2421	3:15	1.11, 3.2121
2:13-21	3.2438, 3.2459,	3:15-17	1.639
	4.3084	3:17	1.641
2:14	3.2438	3:20	2.1292
2:15	1.403, 3.1881,	4	3.1893
	3.2367, 3.2369	4:1	1.154, 3.2859
2:15-16	3.2315	4:1-11	1.14, 1.22, 1.154,
2:16	3.2328, 3.2380,		1.659, 2.1084,
	4.3432		2.1236, 3.2679,
2:17-18	3.1881, 3.2367		3.2680, 3.2704,
2:18	1.403, 3.2369		3.2859, 4.3144
2:19-20	3.2315	4:1-12	3.2858
2:19-21	3.2372	4:2	4.3331
2:19-23	3.2421	4:4	2.1137
2:20	3.2438	4:5	3.2859
2:21	3.2438	4:6	2.1137
2:21-22	3.2366	4:7	2.1137, 4.3144

4:8	3.2859	5:3-16	1.402
4:8-10	4.3236	5:3-27	1.400
4:9-10	2.1206	5:4	3.1920, 3.2255,
4:10	2.877, 2.1137,		4.3461
	3.2588, 3.2858,	5:5	1.681, 3.1877,
	4.3144		3.1889, 3.1890,
4:11	3.2859		3.2235, 3.2798,
4:12	2.1339, 2.1751		3.2799, 3.2881
4:12-13	3.1881	5:6	1.178, 1.398,
4:13	1.467, 1.468		3.2255, 4.3189,
4:13-17	1.442		4.3464
4:15	1.403, 4.3090,	5:7	1.681, 3.1877,
	4.3094, 4.3223		3.1889, 3.1890,
4:15-17	4.3455		3.1969, 3.2126,
4:16	1.403		4.3292
4:16-16:20	1.640	5:7-9	1.681
4:17	1.349, 1.423,	5:8	1.681, 3.1877,
	2.1273, 3.2838,		3.1889, 3.1890
	4.3207	5:9	1.681, 3.1877,
4:17-16:20	1.636		3.1889, 3.1890,
4:18-22	3.2501, 4.2956		3.1944, 3.1969
4:19	1.771	5:10	1.401, 3.1889,
4:23	1.636, 2.1224,		3.1890, 3.1967,
	3.1878, 4.3105,		3.2881, 4.3207,
	4.3125		4.3294
4:23-25	4.3396	5:10-12	3.2043
4:24	1.442, 3.2859	5:11	1.398, 3.2478,
4:25	1.380, 1.393,		4.3292
	1.402, 4.3142	5:11-12	1.681, 3.1967,
4:25-7:23	3.2471		3.1969, 3.1970
5	1.352, 3.2271,	5:12	1.398, 3.2255
	4.3336	5:13	1.398, 1.402
5-7	1.79, 1.188,	5:13-15	4.3337
	2.1085, 2.1087,	5:14	3.2232
	3.1919, 4.3397	5:14-16	1.398
5:1	2.1085, 2.1224	5:15	1.110, 1.178,
5:2	4.3455		3.2255, 4.3323,
5:2-6	1.24		4.3338, 4.3394
5:3	1.24, 1.178,	5:16	1.401, 3.1967,
	1.398, 1.401,		3.2043, 3.2128,
	2.1037, 3.1890,		3.2255
	3.1969, 3.2503,	5:17	1.52, 1.401,
	4.3189, 4.3206,		1.403, 1.637,
	4.3210, 4.3211,		1.657, 1.671,
	4.3292, 4.3294		2.1063, 3.1890,
5:3-4	2.1294		3.1891, 3.2128,
5:3-6	2.1156, 2.1158,		3.2745
	3.2624, 4.3448	5:17-7:12	1.402
5:3-7:27	1.393	5:17-19	2.1300, 3.2466
5:3-10	1.347, 1.401	5:17-20	1.398, 3.1889,
5:3-11	1.396, 1.657, 2.973		3.1890, 3.1897,
5:3-12	1.681, 2.1254,		3.2758
	2.1339, 3.1919,	5:17-48	3.2746
	3.2880	5:18	3.1890, 3.1910,

	3.2745, 3.2746,	5:33	1.396, 1.403,
	4.3214, 4.3336		2.1137, 2.1206
5:19	1.401, 1.422,	5:33-34	1.61
	1.665, 3.1890,	5:33-36	4.3148
	3.1897, 3.2745,	5:33-37	1.24, 2.1143,
	3.2758, 4.3207		2.1145, 3.1877,
5:20	1.355, 1.401,		3.1878, 3.1889,
	1.402, 3.1891,		3.1891, 3.1970,
	3.2504, 3.2568,	5:34	4.3148
	3.2745, 4.3143,	5:34-35	1.315, 3.2043
	4.3207, 4.3214,	5:35	3.2590
	4.3429	5:35	3.2638, 3.2674
5:21	1.396, 1.403,	5:37	1.315, 3.2128
	2.1137, 2.1206,	5:38	1.396, 1.402,
	4.3141, 4.3143,		2.1137, 2.1206
	4.3461	5:38-42	1.398, 3.1885,
5:21-22	1.78, 3.1889,		3.1891, 4.3142
	4.3052	5:38-43	1.24
5:21-24	3.1877, 3.1878	5:38-47	3.2043
5:21-26	1.398	5:38-48	1.15, 1.17, 1.18,
5:21-31	3.1877		3.1967
5:21-48	2.1267, 3.1889,	5:39	1.342, 3.1944,
	3.1891, 3.1897,		3.2483, 4.3461
	3.2758	5:39-41	1.342
5:22	1.397, 2.1730,	5:39-42	2.1483, 3.2192,
	2.1740, 3.1969,		4.3051
	3.1970, 3.2468	5:39-47	4.3460
5:23-24	1.24, 3.1894,	5:39-48	2.1483, 3.2192
	3.2638, 3.2673,	5:39b-48	1.176
	3.2754, 3.2755,	5:40	1.24, 3.2310,
	3.2764, 3.2818		3.2311, 3.2483
5:24	1.401, 3.2560	5:41	1.357, 3.1877,
5:25-26	3.2311, 4.3141		3.1944, 3.2483
5:27	1.395, 1.403,	5:42	1.24, 1.178,
	2.1137, 2.1206,		3.2311, 4.3302
	4.3141, 4.3143	5:43	1.395, 1.402,
5:27-28	1.78, 3.1877,		2.1137, 2.1206,
	3.1878, 3.1889,		2.1269, 3.2032
	3.2760	5:43-44	1.24
5:27-32	1.398	5:43-45	2.1145
5:29	1.397	5:43-48	3.1885, 3.1891,
5:29-30	1.10, 1.78,		3.2590, 3.2900
	2.1480, 3.2468,	5:44	1.398, 2.1145,
	3.2760, 4.3141		2.1483, 3.1942,
5:30	1.397		3.1964, 3.2095,
5:31	1.395, 2.1137		3.2192, 4.3056
5:31-32	1.173, 1.679,	5:44-45	1.67, 2.1268,
	2.1140, 3.1891,		4.3054
	4.3142	5:44-48	3.2591
5:32	1.24, 1.174,	5:45	1.24, 1.349,
	1.341, 1.398,		1.401, 2.1268,
	3.1941, 4.3151,		3.2589, 4.3198,
	4.3399, 4.3438		4.3301

5:45-47	1.421	6:16-18	3.1878, 3.1893,
5:46	1.398, 3.2255, 3.2514		3.1896, 3.1899, 3.2514, 4.3342
5:46-47	3.2803, 3.2805	6:16-21	3.2680
5:48	1.16, 1.401, 3.1969, 4.3270	6:17	3.1877
6:1	1.401, 3.1877, 3.1897, 3.2255, 3.2453	6:17-18	3.1877
6:1-6	3.1878, 3.1893, 3.1899, 3.2680	6:18	1.401, 3.2494
6:1-8	3.1896, 3.2514	6:19	3.2047
6:1-18	1.254, 3.1877, 3.1889, 3.1897, 3.2758	6:19-20	1.178, 3.1970, 4.3041
6:2	2.1354, 2.1721, 3.2255, 4.3125, 4.3128, 4.3129, 4.3459	6:19-21	1.398, 2.1721, 3.2255, 3.2429, 3.2514, 3.2823
6:3	1.11	6:19-34	3.2697
6:3-4	3.1877	6:20	3.2047
6:4	1.401, 3.2494	6:21	2.1480
6:5	3.1877, 3.2255, 4.3125, 4.3128, 4.3129	6:22	1.399, 1.402
6:6	1.401, 3.1877, 3.2494	6:22-23	1.24
6:7	2.1633, 3.1877	6:23	1.399
6:7-15	3.1893	6:24	1.24, 1.178, 1.399, 1.402,
6:8	1.401	6:24-33	2.1206, 3.1969, 3.2468, 3.2588, 3.2705, 4.3300
6:9	1.342, 1.398, 1.401, 2.1154, 3.2497, 4.3445	6:25	4.3302
6:9-10	3.2513, 3.2624	6:25-33	1.399, 1.402
6:9-13	1.396, 2.1206, 3.1914	6:26	1.24, 1.178, 3.2594
6:9-15	2.1338	6:26-30	4.3246
6:10	1.201, 1.398, 1.471, 3.1914, 3.2235, 3.2881, 4.3206, 4.3210, 4.3211	6:26-33	1.399, 1.401, 2.1225
6:11	1.398, 2.1343	6:27	3.2589
6:12	1.398, 1.646, 2.1339, 2.1345, 3.2594, 3.2821	6:28	1.399
6:12-13	1.24	6:28	1.399, 1.657
6:13	1.398, 3.1914	6:29	1.399, 1.456, 4.3263
6:13b	2.1339	6:29	1.399
6:14	1.348, 1.401	6:30	1.399, 2.1225, 3.1883
6:14-15	1.24, 3.1894, 3.2126	6:31	1.399
6:15	1.401	6:32	1.401, 2.1633
6:16	3.1877, 3.2255	6:33	1.399, 3.2141, 3.2588, 3.2881, 4.3206
		6:34	2.1480, 3.1970, 4.3255, 4.3260
		7	3.2225
		7:1	1.399
		7:1-2	1.24, 3.1970, 3.2126
		7:1-5	1.399
		7:2	1.399, 3.2260
		7:3	1.399
		7:3-5	1.178

7:4	1.399		1.437, 1.640,
7:5	1.399, 1.401, 3.2868		1.726, 3.1881, 3.2462, 3.2504, 3.2761, 3.2814,
7:6	1.254, 3.1877		4.3096, 4.3127, 4.3195
7:7	1.399, 3.1969		2.1206, 3.2482
7:7-8	1.178		3.2505, 3.2511
7:7-11	3.1908, 3.2032, 3.2593, 3.2594	8:9 8:10	1.640
7:8	1.399	8:10-13	1.135, 1.767, 3.2568, 4.3206, 4.3214
7:9	3.2560	8:11	1.351, 1.559, 1.570, 2.1213, 3.2505, 3.2624, 3.2733, 3.2796, 3.2845, 3.2846, 4.3090, 4.3192 4.3207
7:9-10	1.399		1.24, 3.2511
7:9-11	3.2553, 3.2628		3.2522, 4.2957
7:11	1.399, 1.401, 2.1225, 3.1969, 3.2263	8:11-12	1.640 4.3148
7:12	1.11, 1.24, 1.176, 1.178, 1.400, 3.2126		1.22, 3.2859
7:13	1.400, 1.402	8:12	3.2522
7:13-14	3.2276, 3.2277	8:13	1.403, 1.640
7:13-27	1.402	8:14-15	1.24, 2.1478, 3.1908, 3.2442 3.2451
7:15	1.402	8:14-16	1.178
7:15-20	2.1768	8:14-17	1.421, 3.2443, 3.2501
7:16	3.1969	8:16	4.2959
7:16-20	1.178, 3.2032	8:16-22	2.1048, 2.1299, 2.1341, 2.1349, 2.1566, 3.2478, 3.2482, 4.3052
7:17-19	3.2095	8:17	2.1193
7:21	1.355, 1.401-402, 3.2504, 4.3207, 4.3214	8:18-22	1.351, 3.2765, 3.2771
7:21-23	3.2494	8:19	1.653, 4.3398
7:22	1.22, 3.2859	8:19-20	1.414, 1.654
7:23	1.401, 3.2133	8:19-22	1.356, 1.725, 3.1883
7:24	1.352, 1.402, 4.3273	8:20	1.786
7:24-26	3.1969		1.467, 3.2859, 3.2870
7:24-27	1.188, 1.400, 2.1207, 3.2503, 3.2553	8:21-22	1.379, 1.640, 2.1086, 3.2859, 4.3398
7:26	4.3273	8:22	3.2859
7:26-29	1.416		3.2864
7:28	4.3397	8:23-27	1.640, 1.671, 3.2497, 3.2523 3.2510
7:29	3.2507, 3.2848	8:25
7:31-34	2.1050	8:26
7:35	2.1050	8:27
8:1-4	3.2637, 3.2816	8:28
8:1-12	3.2846
8:2-4	1.155	8:28-34
8:3	1.640
8:4	1.640
8:5	4.3130	8:33
8:5-9	1.24	9
8:5-13	1.79, 1.188, 1.379, 1.380, 1.381, 1.382,	9:1-8 9:1-18

9:2	3.2497, 3.2511	9:34	1.641, 3.2536
9:4	4.2924	9:35	1.636, 2.1224,
9:6	2.1340, 3.2478, 3.2482		3.1878, 4.3105, 4.3125, 4.3128, 4.3129
9:8	1.671, 3.2482		3.2442
9:9	1.379, 1.381, 1.382, 1.439, 3.2462, 3.2501	9:35–11:1 9:36–11:1 9:37–38 9:37–10:42	4.2982, 4.3008 1.178, 3.2096 3.1913
9:9–10	4.3302	10	1.448, 3.2043, 4.2968, 4.3397
9:9–13	1.640, 3.2590, 4.3339	10:1	1.180, 1.422, 3.2502, 3.2713, 3.2741
9:10–11	3.2497		3.2831, 4.3396
9:10–13	2.1263, 3.2805	10:1–4 10:1–5 10:1–14 10:2 10:2–4 10:3 10:5 10:5–6	3.2505 1.24 3.2468 3.2445, 4.3397 3.2805, 4.3302 3.2230, 4.3447 1.24, 1.352, 1.449, 2.963, 2.1211, 3.2504, 3.2762 4.2985
9:11	2.1474		1.772
9:12–13	1.101		1.264, 1.771, 2.1370, 3.2796
9:13	2.1137, 2.1474, 2.1719		1.178–80, 1.423, 4.3206, 4.3210, 4.3211
9:14	2.1474, 3.2442, 4.3306, 4.3333		1.24, 3.2502 2.1137, 2.1296, 3.2741, 3.2816, 3.2859
9:14–15	4.3305, 4.3308, 4.3309		1.180 1.24, 2.1122
9:14–17	1.640, 2.1751, 4.3306		1.181, 3.2041, 4.3438
9:15	3.2488, 3.2499, 3.2510, 4.3311, 4.3315, 4.3321, 4.3328, 4.3329, 4.3333	10:5–7 10:5–16 10:6 10:7	1.178, 1.179, 1.341 1.180 1.178, 1.179
9:15–17	4.3307		1.178, 1.179 3.2494, 4.2980, 4.2983, 4.3008
9:16	4.3334		1.422, 3.2096, 3.2140, 4.3055
9:16–17	3.2552, 4.3305, 4.3333		1.254 1.636, 2.879, 4.3125, 4.3129, 4.3131
9:17	4.3334, 4.3335, 4.3336	10:7–8 10:8	4.2966 1.772
9:18–22	1.24		1.674
9:18–26	1.641, 2.1086
9:20	1.115, 3.2742, 3.2761	10:8–10a 10:9–10 10:10
9:20–22	3.2511
9:21	3.2742
9:22	3.2511	10:10b
9:25	2.1328
9:27	3.2437, 3.2522	10:11
9:27–30	1.771	10:12–14 10:15
9:27–31	1.24, 1.641, 3.2522
9:28	2.1481	10:16
9:28–29	3.2511
9:32	1.24, 1.641, 3.2490, 3.2859	10:16b 10:17
9:32–33	1.24
9:32–34	1.22, 3.2768, 3.2869	10:17–22
9:33	1.641	10:17–25
9:33–34	3.2859	10:18

10:19–20	4.3127	11:2–6	1.560, 1.656,
10:21	4.2965		2.1046, 2.1198,
10:22	4.2966		2.1753, 3.2499,
10:23	1.257, 1.272,		3.2510, 3.2533,
	1.273, 1.279,		3.2541, 4.3326
	1.348, 1.449,	11:2–11	3.1962
	2.861, 2.1341,	11:2–19	2.1369, 3.2004,
	3.1877, 3.1917,		4.3008
	3.2478, 3.2879,	11:3	1.641, 3.2521
	4.2967, 4.3447	11:4	3.2821
10:24	1.421, 3.2032,	11:4–5	1.24, 2.1041,
	3.2502		2.1156, 2.1157,
10:24–25	1.421, 2.1474,		2.1193
	4.3337	11:4–6	1.67, 1.641,
10:25	1.357, 1.641,		3.2860, 4.3325
	3.2403, 3.2469,	11:5	1.706, 2.1037,
	3.2536		2.1137, 2.1193,
10:26	1.178, 4.3394		2.1198, 2.1237,
10:26–27	2.1481		2.1296, 3.2010,
10:27	1.178, 1.423,		3.2521, 3.2523,
	3.2096		3.2713, 3.2715,
10:28	2.1309, 3.2468		3.2717, 3.2816,
10:28–31	3.2429		4.3291, 4.3310
10:29–31	3.2588	11:5–6	2.1028, 2.1031,
10:32	1.491, 3.1971,		3.2624
	3.2480	11:6	3.2503, 3.2540
10:32–33	1.665, 3.2387,	11:7–10	1.178
	3.2478, 3.2503	11:7–19	3.2801
10:34	1.105, 1.403	11:7–9:11	3.2498
10:34–36	1.52, 1.178,	11:9	3.2403, 3.2440
	4.2967	11:9–14	2.1160
10:34–39	1.641	11:10	2.1137
10:35–36	3.2482	11:11	1.67, 1.178,
10:35–66	2.1137		2.1480, 3.2440,
10:36	4.2968		3.2498, 4.3206,
10:37	1.178, 1.674,		4.3214
	2.1480, 4.2970	11:11–14	2.1293
10:37–38	1.24, 3.2501,	11:12	2.1480, 4.3046,
	4.2969		4.3206, 4.3210,
10:38	1.178, 3.2140		4.3211
10:39	2.1359, 3.2031,	11:12–13	1.571, 3.2499,
	3.2503, 3.2733,		3.2624, 4.3339
	4.3098	11:13	3.2498
10:40	1.24, 1.52, 1.641,	11:14	1.642, 2.1777
	2.984, 2.1207,	11:14–15	2.1751
	3.2032, 4.2982,	11:16–19	2.1048, 2.1115,
	4.2983, 4.3008		2.1212, 2.1480,
10:40–42	4.2982, 4.3008		3.2498, 3.2553,
10:42	1.24, 3.2255		3.2748, 3.2768,
11	3.2269, 4.2982		4.3312
11:1	4.3008, 4.3397	11:18	2.1299, 3.2859
11:2	2.1050, 2.1783,	11:18–19	1.29, 1.345,
	3.2269		1.641, 1.647,
11:2–3	4.3324		3.2475, 3.2478,
11:2–5	1.24		3.2482, 4.3309

11:19	1.562, 1.642, 2.1050, 2.1207, 2.1341, 2.1435, 3.2269, 3.2434, 3.2469, 3.2731, 3.2805, 3.2832, 4.3303	12:8 12:8–21 12:9 12:9–13	2.1300, 3.2478, 3.2482 1.641 1.636, 4.3105, 4.3125, 4.3131 1.641, 2.1265, 3.2591
11:20	2.1050	12:9–14	3.2597, 3.2608,
11:20–21	2.1219		4.3388
11:20–24	1.560, 1.641, 3.2533, 3.2541, 3.2542, 4.2980, 4.3008	12:10–12 12:11	3.2468 2.1374, 3.2560, 3.2604, 4.3075, 4.3149, 4.3311
11:21	4.3234	12:11–12	3.1909, 3.2599,
11:21–22	1.24		3.2613, 3.2615,
11:21–24	1.188, 1.423, 3.2503, 3.2592, 4.2981		3.2616, 3.2622, 3.2627, 3.2629, 3.2630, 3.2632, 3.2751
11:22	3.2522		3.2751
11:22–24	3.2494	12:12	2.1700, 3.2482,
11:23	4.3130		3.2632
11:23–24	4.2986	12:17	1.638
11:25–26	1.415, 2.1481, 3.2593	12:18 12:18–21	2.885 1.402, 1.642
11:25–27	2.1048, 3.1886, 3.1895, 3.2270, 4.3008, 4.3028	12:22 12:22–23 12:22–24	3.2717, 3.2859 1.22, 3.2859 1.560
11:25–30	3.1896	12:22–30	1.24
11:27	1.178, 1.413, 1.720, 2.1206	12:22–32 12:22–42	2.1369, 2.1369 4.2922
11:27–30	1.641	12:24	1.562, 1.642,
11:28–30	1.254, 1.416, 1.421, 1.642, 2.1048, 2.1207, 3.1877, 3.1895, 3.1896, 3.2269, 3.2750	12:24–26 12:25 12:26	1.736, 2.1705, 3.2122, 3.2536, 3.2859, 4.3308 4.3180 1.647, 4.2924 3.2468, 3.2858
11:29	2.1474	12:27	1.642, 3.2468,
11:42–52	2.1144		3.2523, 3.2531,
12	3.2223, 3.2225, 3.2864		3.2768
12:1	2.1699, 3.2337, 4.3149, 4.3388	12:27–28	3.2532, 3.2540, 3.2541, 3.2859
12:1–8	1.641, 2.1264, 3.2590, 3.2598, 3.2616, 4.3388	12:28	1.22, 1.348, 1.349, 1.423, 1.491, 1.560, 1.562, 1.569,
12:1–14	3.2523, 3.2750		1.594, 1.615,
12:3	2.1224		1.642, 1.647,
12:5	3.2468		2.884, 2.885,
12:5–7	3.2616, 3.2631		2.1193, 2.1294,
12:6	1.636, 2.1207, 2.1215		3.2499, 3.2511, 3.2523, 3.2533,
12:7	2.1137, 2.1719		3.2624, 3.2815,

	3.2860, 3.2867,	13:14–15	2.1137, 2.1634
	4.3197, 4.3206,	13:16–17	1.67, 1.178,
	4.3210, 4.3211		2.1634, 3.2499,
12:29	1.22, 1.178,		3.2510
	2.1207, 3.2533,	13:17	3.2141
	3.2867, 4.2919,	13:19	3.2858, 4.3207
	4.2920, 4.2937,	13:24	1.419, 3.1894,
	4.2940		4.3207
12:30	4.2922, 4.2941	13:24–30	1.254, 2.1212,
12:31	3.1969, 3.2482		3.1877, 3.1883,
12:31–32	1.642, 1.706,		3.1893, 3.1894,
	3.2478, 3.2482,		3.2308, 3.2553,
	3.2483		3.2554, 3.2566,
12:32	1.178, 2.1369		3.2568, 3.2569,
12:33	4.3338		3.2570, 3.2592,
12:38	1.706		3.2831, 3.2880,
12:38–39	2.1514, 3.2510,		4.3024
	3.2541	13:24–50	3.2680
12:38–41	1.643	13:31	1.419, 4.3206,
12:39	2.1222, 3.1969,		4.3207
	3.2541	13:31–32	1.178, 3.2551,
12:40	2.1137, 2.1341,		3.2553, 3.2566,
	3.2339, 3.2478,		4.3210
	4.2926	13:31–33	4.3337
12:41f	4.2923	13:32	4.3334
12:41	2.1219, 2.1222,	13:33	1.178, 1.657,
	3.2490		3.2468, 3.2551,
12:41–42	3.2503, 3.2505,		3.2553, 3.2566,
	3.2510, 4.2984		3.2567, 3.2624,
12:42	1.102, 1.415,		4.3206, 4.3210
	1.643, 2.1048,	13:35	1.403, 2.1137
	2.1234	13:36	2.1480, 2.1481
12:43	3.2482, 3.2713,	13:36–43	1.24, 2.1212,
	3.2714		3.1883, 3.1893,
12:43–45	3.2798, 4.3078		3.1894, 3.2486
12:44–46	3.1877	13:37	2.1341, 3.1337,
12:46	4.3371		3.2478
12:46–49	3.2439	13:37–43	3.2555, 3.2570
12:46–50	4.2961, 4.3394	13:39	3.2858, 3.2859
12:46–60	1.642	13:41	2.1341, 3.1337,
12:47–50	3.1877		3.2478, 3.2859,
12:48–50	3.2434		3.2880
12:50	1.254	13:43	4.3214
13	2.1338, 2.1680,	13:44	1.254, 1.357,
	4.3397		3.1893, 3.1894,
13–14	1.180		3.2553, 3.2566,
13:1–9	3.2238, 3.2831		3.2567, 4.3023,
13:1–17	3.2624		4.3024, 4.3207
13:1–23	3.2073	13:44–46	1.24, 1.254,
13:3–8	3.2553		3.2881
13:9	4.3358	13:45	3.1894, 4.3207
13:11	2.1481, 4.3207	13:45–46	3.1893, 3.2553,
13:12	4.3394		3.2566, 3.2567
13:13–15	3.2593	13:47	3.1894, 4.3207

13:47-48	3.2067	15:8-9	2.1137
13:47-50	1.254, 2.1212, 3.1893, 3.1894, 3.2553, 3.2566, 3.2568, 3.2570, 3.2592, 3.2831	15:11	1.271, 1.272, 2.1147, 2.1260, 3.1943, 3.2482
13:47-53	3.2880	15:11-20	1.271
13:51	2.1630	15:12-13	1.24
13:51-52	1.24, 1.634	15:13	1.254
13:52	2.1085, 2.1474, 3.2451, 4.3207	15:14b	1.178
13:53	3.2501, 4.3397	15:14	4.3338
13:54	4.3105, 4.3125, 4.3131, 4.3137, 4.3409, 4.3413	15:18	3.2482
13:54-58	2.1339	15:21	3.2504
13:55	1.413, 1.768, 3.2375, 3.2438, 3.2439, 4.3377, 4.3411	15:21-28	1.379, 1.381, 1.382, 1.387, 1.731, 1.733, 2.963, 3.1881, 3.2462, 3.2504, 3.2860, 4.3096
13:56	3.2439	15:22	3.2437, 3.2859
13:57	2.1219, 3.2031, 3.2476	15:22-24	3.1878
14:1	3.2476, 4.3388	15:22-28	3.2796
14:1-2	2.1751	15:24	1.52, 1.264, 2.1211, 3.2504, 3.2762
14:1-12	1.569, 4.3387	15:26	1.387
14:3-4	1.174, 2.1779	15:26-27	1.387
14:3-12	2.1751, 2.1780	15:28	3.2511
14:5	3.2403	15:29-31	3.2717
14:13-21	3.2337	15:31	1.767
14:22-33	4.3027	15:32-39	4.3234
14:22-16:12	1.436	16:1	3.2510
14:27	3.2029	16:1-4	2.1514, 3.2541
14:28-30	3.1882	16:2	3.2214
14:28-31	3.1877, 3.1878, 3.1883	16:2-3	2.1480
14:28-33	1.24	16:2-23	4.3390
14:31	1.356, 1.725, 3.1883	16:4	1.643, 3.1969, 3.2510
14:33	3.1883	16:6	2.1514, 4.3357
14:36	1.115, 3.2742	16:8	1.356, 1.725, 3.1883
14:61	1.643	16:11	2.1514
15	2.1300	16:12	2.1514, 4.3357
15:1	3.2451	16:13	1.389, 1.653, 2.958, 2.1340, 3.2478, 3.2488
15:1-2	3.2810	16:13-14	4.3322
15:1-9	4.2952	16:13-16	2.1751
15:1-20	3.1896, 3.2093, 3.2709, 3.2710, 4.3143	16:13-20	1.379, 1.381, 1.382, 1.388, 1.659, 1.731, 3.1884, 3.2463, 4.3390
15:2	2.963, 2.1496		1.674
15:3-9	3.2808		3.2476
15:4	2.1137, 4.3141	16:13-23
15:4-5	4.3142	16:14

16:15	1.389		3.2511, 4.3399,
16:16	1.643, 2.958,		4.3459
	3.2596, 4.3214	17:21	4.3327
16:16-17	1.352	17:22	2.1341
16:16-19	3.1883, 3.2885	17:22-23	3.2478, 3.2486,
16:16-20	3.2043		4.3390
16:17	3.2468	17:23	3.2340
16:17-19	1.24, 1.318,	17:24	2.1474, 2.1481,
	1.383, 1.389,		3.1910
	2.1193, 3.1877,	17:24-27	2.1213, 3.1876,
	3.1878, 3.1882,		3.1877, 3.1878,
	3.1883, 3.2902		3.1882, 3.1884,
16:18	1.636, 1.671,		3.2637, 3.2673,
	2.1258, 2.1480,		3.2712, 3.2754,
	3.1883, 4.3404		3.2807, 3.2818,
16:19	3.2032, 4.3207		4.3147
16:20	3.2515	17:25	2.1481, 4.3364
16:21	1.643, 3.2265,	17:25-27	3.2849
	3.2340, 3.2451,	17:26-27	4.3365
	3.2478, 3.2486	18	3.1893, 3.1897,
16:21-28:20	1.636, 1.643		3.2822
16:22	4.3237	18:1	4.3207, 4.3214
16:22-23	1.771	18:1-4	3.2882
16:23	3.1883, 3.2468,	18:1-5	1.771, 3.1897
	3.2858, 3.2859	18:3	1.256, 1.272,
16:24	3.2483, 4.2969		3.2032, 3.2139,
16:24-25	3.2501		3.2504, 3.22513,
16:25	3.2031, 3.2503,		4.3207, 4.3214
	4.3098	18:4	4.3207, 4.3214
16:26	3.2482	18:6	3.2127
16:27	2.1341, 3.2479,	18:7	3.1944
	3.2490, 3.2880,	18:8-9	1.78, 3.2494,
	3.2891		3.2504
16:27-28	3.2486	18:9	3.2468, 4.3207
16:28	1.494, 2.1294,	18:10-14	3.1897
	3.2478, 3.2490,	18:11	3.2478
	3.2495, 4.3207	18:12	3.2560
16:28-17:8	1.153	18:12-14	1.178, 3.1910,
17:1	3.2333		3.2553, 3.2555,
17:1-13	4.3390		3.2559, 3.2562,
17:5	1.644		3.2565, 3.2628
17:6-7	3.1878	18:13	3.1910
17:9	3.2478, 3.2486	18:14	3.1919
17:10-13	2.1751, 2.1777	18:15	1.24
17:12	2.1341, 3.2478,	18:15-16	3.1910
	4.3322	18:15-18	1.489, 3.2594
17:13	4.3362	18:15-20	3.2902
17:14-21	3.2859, 4.3028	18:15-21	3.1910
17:16	3.2502	18:15-22	3.1878
17:18	1.348, 3.2859	18:16	2.1137
17:19	2.1341	18:17	1.636, 3.1910,
17:20	1.343, 1.357,		3.2803, 3.2805,
	3.1883, 3.1944,		4.3214
	3.2042, 3.2501,	18:18	3.1883, 3.2032

18:18–27	4.2953	19:21	2.1721, 3.2514,
18:19	3.2032		3.2823, 4.3143,
18:20	2.1215, 3.1881,		4.3270, 4.3273,
	3.2897		4.3274
18:21–22	1.24, 3.1884,	19:21–22	3.2501
	3.2594	19:22	4.3270, 4.3274
18:23	3.1894, 4.3207	19:23	4.3207, 4.3214
18:23–34	4.3023	19:23–24	3.2504
18:23–35	1.24, 3.1877,	19:23–26	4.3277
	3.1884, 3.1893,	19:24	2.1265, 3.2808,
	3.1894, 3.2311,		4.3207, 4.3214,
	3.2553, 3.2565,		4.3300
	3.2566, 3.2568,	19:26	3.2494
	3.2569, 3.2570,	19:27–30	1.771, 4.2963,
	3.2590, 3.2739,		4.3214
	3.2821, 3.2881	19:28	1.24, 1.264,
18:24	3.2821		1.356, 1.423,
18:25	3.1884, 3.2311,		1.503, 2.1211,
	3.2494		2.1298, 2.1330,
18:27	3.2821		2.1334, 2.1341,
18:28	3.2311		2.1374, 2.1552,
18:28–30	3.2821		3.2145, 3.2446,
18:30	3.2311		3.2478, 3.2505,
18:31	3.2312		3.2797, 3.2844,
18:31–35	3.2822		3.2845, 3.2846,
18:34	3.2311		3.2880
18:35	4.3023	19:28–29	2.1044
19:3	2.1266	19:28–30	2.1193
19:3–9	1.173, 2.1140,	19:29	4.2965
	3.2507, 4.3151	19:30	3.2137, 3.2513
19:4	2.1137	20	3.2225
19:4–5	1.173	20:1	3.1894, 4.3207
19:4–6	2.1713	20:1–3	3.2310
19:5	2.1137, 2.1137,	20:1–15	3.2513, 3.2592,
	2.1713		4.3023
19:6	2.1266, 3.2482	20:1–16	1.339, 2.1152,
19:7	2.1137		3.1877, 3.1893,
19:7–8	2.1266		3.1894, 3.1899,
19:8–9	4.3141		3.2308, 3.2553,
19:9	1.174, 1.679,		3.2562, 3.2563,
	2.1266, 2.1269,		3.2565, 3.2566,
	3.2051		3.2568, 3.2842,
			3.2843, 3.2851
19:10–12	1.24		3.2592
19:11–12	3.2759	20:15
19:12	4.3055, 4.3207	20:16	1.24, 3.2513,
19:13–15	1.656		4.2963
19:14	3.2504, 4.3207	20:17–19	4.3390
19:16	4.3270	20:18	2.1341
19:16–22	4.3143, 4.3269	20:18–19	3.2478, 3.2486
19:17	3.2504, 3.2702,	20:20	4.2957
	4.3270, 4.3273	20:20–23	1.771
19:18–19	2.1137, 4.3141,	20:21	3.2495, 4.3214
	4.3142	20:22	1.101
19:19	1.24, 2.1137,	20:24–27	1.771
	4.3054	20:25–27	3.2513

20:25–28	2.1334	21:33–41	3.2843
20:26	3.2732	21:33–43	4.3025
20:28	1.430, 2.1341, 3.2514	21:33–44	2.1635
		21:33–46	2.1093, 2.1152, 3.2553
20:29–34	3.2522
20:31	3.2437	21:37	2.1288
21	3.2225	21:37–39	3.2488
21–22	3.1893	21:42	2.1137
21:1–9	1.659, 3.2340	21:43	3.1881, 3.1894, 3.2850, 4.3207
21:5	1.402, 2.1303
21:9	2.1137	21:46	2.1193, 2.1221, 3.2403, 4.3371
21:10–11	3.1878
21:11	2.1193, 2.1221, 3.2403, 3.2448, 4.3371, 4.3409	22:1	2.1137
		22:1–4	3.1877
21:12	3.2334, 3.2818	22:1–8	1.24
21:12–13	1.136, 3.2029, 3.2340, 3.2400	22:1–10	3.1909, 3.2568, 3.2732, 4.2969
21:12–14	3.2717	22:1–13	1.178
21:12–17	3.2638	22:1–14	3.2553, 3.2556, 3.2566, 3.2568, 3.2880, 3.2884, 4.3322
21:13	2.1137, 2.1159, 3.2590, 3.2818
21:14–15	3.2009	22:1–22	1.382
21:14–16	3.1878	22:2	3.1894, 4.3207
21:15–16	3.2451	22:2–13	4.3024
21:16	2.1137, 3.2137	22:7	3.2882, 4.3023, 4.3322
21:18–19	3.2340
21:20–22	3.2340	22:11–13	4.3339
21:21	3.1944, 3.1969, 4.3399	22:11–14	3.1894
		22:14	2.1211, 3.2277
21:21–22	3.2501	22:15–22	4.3147
21:22	3.2032	22:16	2.1474, 2.1520, 3.2442, 3.2452, 4.3309
21:23–27	2.1751, 3.2510
21:23–23:39	3.2340
21:25	3.2482	22:16–22	1.379, 1.381, 1.388, 1.731, 3.2462
21:28	3.2560, 4.3359
21:28–30	4.3023
21:28–31	4.3365	22:18	1.388
21:28–32	1.657, 2.1152, 2.1751, 3.1877, 3.1879, 3.1893, 3.1894, 3.2553, 3.2569, 3.2842, 3.2843	22:19	1.388
		22:19a	1.388
		22:20	1.388
		22:22	3.2262
		22:23–33	2.1510
		22:27	2.1288
21:31	1.355, 2.1089, 2.1207, 2.1212, 3.2833, 4.3207, 4.3214	22:32	1.767, 2.1137
		22:34	2.1511
		22:34–35	2.1513
		22:34–40	2.1146, 2.1269, 3.1914, 3.2690, 3.2691
21:31–32	2.1767, 3.2504, 3.2805, 3.2852
21:31b	1.356	22:35	3.2692
21:32	2.1756, 2.1766, 2.1767, 2.1782, 3.2732, 4.3192	22:36	3.2693
		22:37	2.1137, 3.2678, 3.2697
21:33–39	4.3024, 4.3024	22:37–40	4.3144

22:39	1.661, 2.1137, 3.1969, 4.3054	23:23-33	3.2260
22:40	3.2590, 3.2693	23:23-36	2.1348, 2.1369
22:41-46	1.108, 3.1896	23:24	1.636, 1.722, 2.1480
22:42	1.157, 4.3359	23:25	2.1621, 3.2808
22:44	2.1137	23:25-26	1.178, 2.1147, 2.1621, 3.2727, 3.2765, 3.2816
23	2.973, 2.1630, 3.1878, 3.1896, 3.1897, 3.2451, 3.2592, 3.2692, 4.3279	23:25-28	1.24
23:1-2	1.24	23:27	2.1357, 2.1621
23:1-3	3.1877	23:27-28	2.1621
23:1-12	3.1896	23:28	2.1630
23:1-39	2.1621, 3.2094	23:29	1.634, 2.1621, 3.2299
23:2	2.1224, 2.1630	23:29-36	1.24, 3.2765
23:2-3	3.1877, 3.1897	23:32-36	2.1621
23:2-31	1.675	23:32-39	1.675
23:3	2.1630, 3.1877	23:33	2.1621, 2.1767, 3.2468
23:4	3.1897, 3.2765	23:34	2.879, 2.1630, 3.2270, 3.2451, 4.3125, 4.3128, 4.3129
23:4-7	1.24		3.2475
23:5	3.1877	23:34-35	2.1048, 3.1897, 3.2754
23:6	2.1630, 4.3125	23:34-36	3.1896, 3.1897
23:6-7	4.3129		3.2267
23:7-8	1.636	23:34-39	2.1153, 2.1220, 2.1221, 3.2476
23:7-10	3.1877	23:35	1.415, 2.1048, 2.1193, 2.1213, 2.1242, 3.2160, 3.2638, 3.2672, 3.2673, 3.2736, 3.2754, 3.2765
23:8	2.1223, 2.1474, 3.2444	23:37	1.636
23:8-10	1.421, 1.675, 3.2705	23:37-39	2.1137, 3.2494, 3.2673
23:8-11	2.1630		2.1341, 4.3279
23:8-12	1.24, 3.1877, 3.1897		2.1294, 3.1896
23:9	1.24, 3.2594		3.2340
23:10	1.415, 2.1630		3.2160, 3.2638, 3.2652
23:11-12	1.24		2.1325
23:12	3.1970	23:38	3.1916
23:13	1.24, 1.178, 1.355, 2.1621, 2.1630, 4.3206	23:39	3.1916
23:13-32	1.675	24	4.3207
23:13-33	3.1896, 3.1897	24-25	1.435, 4.3147
23:15	1.24, 2.1621, 3.2468	24:1-25:46	4.3148
23:15-22	3.1877	24:2	3.2483
23:16	2.1621	24:9-22	3.2139
23:16-22	1.24, 2.1143, 2.1144, 3.2818, 4.3148	24:10	1.178, 1.179
23:21	3.2638, 3.2674	24:12	2.1341, 2.1567, 3.2478, 3.2485
23:23	1.24, 2.1369, 2.1370, 2.1621, 2.1721, 3.2590, 3.2758, 3.2766, 3.2767, 3.2818	24:14	3.2880
23:23-24	2.1621	24:15
		24:20
		24:23
		24:24
		24:26
		24:27
		24:27-28

24:30	2.1137, 2.1341, 3.1916, 3.2479, 3.2880	25:31-46	1.24, 2.1087, 3.1877, 3.1893, 3.1894, 3.2503, 3.2554, 3.2570, 3.2590, 3.2594, 3.2880
24:30-31	3.2043, 3.2478, 3.2486		3.2592
24:30-32	3.1941		3.2490
24:31	3.1916	25:31-48	3.2490, 4.3333
24:33	3.1970	25:34	3.2260, 3.2859
24:35	1.416	25:40	4.3333
24:36	1.312, 3.2494	25:41	3.1885
24:37	2.1341, 3.2478	25:45	1.141
24:37-39	2.1568	26:1-2	1.659
24:37-41	3.2485, 3.2880	26:1-5	2.1341, 3.2335, 3.2342, 3.2468, 3.2478
24:39	2.1341, 3.2478, 3.2490	26:1-27:66	3.2352
24:40-41	1.178, 3.2494, 4.3337	26:2	3.2406
24:42	3.2485, 3.2490	26:3	4.3401
24:43	2.1483, 3.1944, 3.2042, 3.2192, 4.3041	26:3-4	3.2028
24:43-44	1.178, 3.1971, 3.2478, 3.2485	26:6-13	3.1888
24:44	2.1341, 2.1568, 3.2490	26:11	3.1885
24:45	3.2560	26:14-15	3.2335, 3.2340, 3.2342, 3.2349
24:45-51	3.2485, 3.2553, 3.2564, 3.2570	26:15	1.141
24:47	1.356	26:17-20	3.2335, 3.2342, 3.2468
24:50-51	4.3455	26:18	3.2335, 3.2342
25	4.3279	26:19	2.1330, 3.2340, 3.2342
25:1	3.1894, 4.3207	26:20	2.1333
25:1-12	3.2494	26:20-21	3.2340
25:1-13	3.1877, 3.1893, 3.1894, 3.2052, 3.2551, 3.2553, 3.2556, 3.2562, 3.2563, 3.2566, 3.2568, 3.2569, 3.2880, 4.3322	26:21	3.2028
25:10-11	3.2490	26:21-25	2.1330
25:12	3.2133, 3.2494	26:24	2.1341, 3.2127, 3.2478
25:13	3.2478, 3.2485, 3.2490, 3.2564	26:24-25	3.1886
25:14-28	4.3023	26:25	1.414, 2.1223, 3.1885
25:14-30	1.197, 2.1212, 3.1877, 3.1911, 3.2553, 3.2570, 3.2881	26:26	1.137, 3.1881, 3.2342
25:29	1.178	26:26-28	2.1331, 2.1333, 3.2191
25:31	2.1341, 2.1552, 3.2478, 3.2479, 3.2880	26:26-29	1.340, 1.659, 1.679
25:31-45	4.3303	26:28	1.137, 1.138, 1.140, 2.1761, 3.1885
		26:29	1.136, 2.1331, 3.2495, 4.3207, 4.3214, 4.3219, 4.3343
		26:30	2.1331

26:31	2.1137, 3.2099	27:19	3.1877, 3.1878,
26:37	4.2957		3.1887
26:39	3.2099	27:20	3.1887
26:41–46	3.2437	27:24–25	3.1877, 3.1878,
26:45	2.1341, 3.2478		3.1887
26:45–46	3.2488	27:25	2.1620, 3.2160
26:47–56	3.2340	27:27	2.1322
26:49	1.415, 2.1223	27:29	3.2392
26:52b	2.1480	27:30	3.2392
26:52	1.106, 1.108,	27:31	3.2392
	3.2882	27:31–60	3.2340
26:52–54	3.1878, 3.1885,	27:33–50	3.2680
	3.1886	27:33–56	2.1321
26:53	1.24, 3.2145,	27:34	3.2406
	3.2883	27:35	1.314
26:55	2.1224, 3.2393	27:37	3.2392
26:57	3.2352, 3.2451	27:38	3.2393
26:57–75	3.2340	27:39	2.1322
26:59	2.1740	27:39–43	3.2481
26:59–68	3.2398	27:40	2.1322, 3.2638,
26:60–61	3.2767		3.2648
26:61	2.1196, 2.1213,	27:41	3.2392
	3.2400, 3.2638,	27:43	2.1322, 3.2406,
	3.2648, 3.2649,		3.2475
	3.2653, 3.2818	27:44	3.2392, 3.2393
26:63	1.643, 3.2017,	27:45	3.2150
	3.2475, 4.3145	27:46	1.313, 1.706,
26:63–64	3.2474, 3.2515		2.1137, 2.1325,
26:64	2.1036, 2.1137,		3.2088, 3.2461,
	2.1341, 3.2398,		3.2467, 4.3027
	3.2478, 3.2479	27:46–48	2.1323
26:64–65	2.1332	27:49	3.2430
26:65	2.1193, 4.3145	27:51	3.1878, 3.2334
26:67	3.2392	27:51–53	1.28, 2.1580,
26:68	2.1222		3.1877, 3.1887
26:72	3.1885	27:52–53	2.1325, 3.2419
26:74	3.1885	27:53	3.1878
26:75	3.1885, 3.1886	27:55	2.1255
26–27	3.1896	27:56	1.467
27	2.1331	27:57	2.1474, 3.2448
27–28	2.1322	27:62	3.2340
27:1	3.1886, 3.2340	27:62–66	3.1877, 3.1878,
27:2–26	3.2353		3.1888, 3.2451
27:2–30	3.2340	27:63	3.2399
27:3–10	3.1876, 3.1878,	27:63–64	1.643, 2.1191,
	3.1886, 3.2016		2.1193, 3.2536,
	3.2439		4.3180
27:5		28:1	3.2348
27:9–10	1.403, 3.1886	28:1–20	1.659
27:11	3.2475, 3.2515	28:1–35	3.2340
27:11–14	1.379, 1.381,	28:2	1.468, 3.1887,
	1.382, 1.389,		3.2419
	1.731, 3.2463	28:2–4	3.1877, 3.1878,
27:11–15	3.2418		3.2418
27:12	4.3133	28:4	3.1888
27:15–23	3.2359

28:7	3.2420	1:8-9	2.1759
28:9	1.97	1:9	2.1432, 3.2003, 4.3411
28:9-10	3.1877, 3.2013, 3.2026, 3.2421	1:9-11	1.563, 1.625, 1.659, 2.1292, 2.1751, 3.2285
28:9-20	3.1878		1.152
28:10	3.2420		2.885, 3.2145, 3.2882, 4.2930
28:11-15	3.1877, 3.1888, 3.2179, 3.2418	1:9-13 1:10	1.625
28:13-15	3.2418	1:10-11	1.624, 1.633, 2.1206, 2.1295
28:15	3.1888	1:11	1.113, 1.154
28:16-17	1.426, 3.2423	1:12	1.22, 1.625, 1.659, 2.1084, 2.1236, 3.2858
28:16-18	4.3223	1:12-13	3.2145, 3.2858, 4.3080
28:16-20	1.442, 3.1879, 3.1881, 3.1923, 3.2420, 3.2442, 3.2762	1:13	2.1751, 4.3126
28:16-28	3.2421	1:14	1.14, 1.65, 1.624, 1.626, 2.1206, 3.2294, 4.2928, 4.2934, 4.3119
28:18	1.25	1:14-15	1.51
28:18-20	1.11, 2.1323		3.2423
28:19	2.963, 2.1474		1.626
28:20	3.1881		3.1821
Mark			1.50, 1.53, 1.180, 1.279, 1.423, 2.1207, 2.1219, 2.1236, 2.1273, 2.1350, 3.2881, 4.3207, 4.3210, 4.3217, 4.3372
1	4.2984, 4.2986	1:14-17	1.24, 1.420, 1.836, 2.1255, 3.1912, 3.2441, 3.2443, 3.2501, 3.2765, 4.2956, 4.3276, 4.3290
1-9	3.2842	1:14-20	1.50, 1.53, 1.771, 3.2442, 4.3133
1:1	1.65, 1.624, 2.1437, 3.2596, 3.2838, 4.3408	1:14-4:34 1:14-8:21 1:15	4.3302
1:1-13	1.624		1.411, 2.1224, 4.3105, 4.3125, 4.3130
1:1-15	2.1437		4.2928, 4.3131
1:2	2.1161, 2.1777		1.22, 1.24, 2.1479, 3.2814, 4.2929, 4.3133
1:2-3	1.65, 1.625		4.3395, 4.3407
1:2-4	2.1774		1.78, 2.1206, 2.1224, 2.1232, 3.2075, 3.2507, 3.2561, 3.2746
1:2-6	2.1751
1:2-11	3.2029	1:16-20
1:2-20	4.3406
1:3	2.1776, 4.3317
1:4	1.569, 2.1291, 2.1759, 2.1760, 2.1761, 2.1763, 2.1781	1:17
1:4-5	3.2029, 4.3318
1:4-11	1.311, 1.678	1:20
1:5	2.1432, 2.1514, 2.1756, 2.1759, 2.1761, 3.2879	1:21
1:6	2.1774, 3.2029, 4.3340	1:21-22 1:21-28
1:7-8	2.1751, 2.1765, 3.2442
1:8	1.150, 1.625, 1.626, 1.631, 1.633, 1.639, 2.1768, 2.1769, 4.2930	1:21-39 1:22

1:22–23	1.414	2	4.3193, 4.3194,
1:23	1.626, 1.628, 3.2713, 3.2714, 4.3130	2:1	4.3195 1.462, 2.1481, 3.2301, 4.3130, 4.3235, 4.3385
1:23–24	3.2532		3.2897
1:23–27	4.3132	2:1–10	3.2523
1:23–28	3.2859	2:1–11	1.24, 1.671, 1.820, 2.1084, 2.1250, 3.1846, 3.2497, 3.2510, 3.2746, 3.2814, 3.2902, 4.3193, 4.3195, 4.3406
1:23–31	1.462	2:1–12	3.1825
1:24	1.467, 3.2714		1.437, 1.653, 1.656, 3.1825, 3.2751, 4.2927, 4.2928, 4.2930, 4.3305, 4.3343
1:25	1.53, 1.627, 4.3077, 4.3078		1.627 1.356
1:26	4.3131		1.626, 1.627, 1.729, 2.1206, 2.1218, 3.2497, 3.2511
1:26–27	3.2713		1.348
1:27	1.78, 1.627, 2.1206, 2.1229, 3.2452, 3.2746	2:1–28 2:1–3:6	3.2030 1.820 3.2693
1:28	2.1479, 3.2003, 3.2451, 4.3126, 4.3131, 4.3276		1.437, 1.626, 2.1194, 2.1206, 2.1432, 3.2681, 3.2702, 4.3194
1:29	2.1481, 4.3105, 4.3125, 4.3130, 4.3276	2:2 2:4–5	1.53, 4.3306 1.729, 3.2030, 3.2749
1:29–31	1.24, 2.1257, 4.2957, 4.3148, 4.3195	2:5	1.627, 2.1206, 2.1236, 2.1340, 2.1565–1567, 3.2428, 3.2478, 3.2482, 3.2748, 3.2749, 3.2886, 4.3150
1:30	4.3276		3.2030
1:30–31	1.420, 1.658, 3.2522	2:5–7 2:5–8	1.820 3.2693
1:32	1.22, 1.436, 3.2859	2:5–10 2:6–7	1.437, 1.626, 2.1194, 2.1206, 2.1432, 3.2681, 3.2702, 4.3194
1:32–28	3.2511	2:7	1.53, 4.3306 1.729, 3.2030, 3.2749
1:32–34	1.24, 3.2750, 4.2929		1.627, 2.1206, 2.1236, 2.1340, 2.1565–1567, 3.2428, 3.2478, 3.2482, 3.2748, 3.2749, 3.2886, 4.3150
1:34	1.22, 3.2859		3.2030
1:35	4.3131	2:8	1.671, 2.1229, 4.3131
1:35–42	3.2003	2:9	4.3131
1:38	1.52, 2.1479		1.379, 1.381, 1.382, 1.726, 3.2423, 3.2443, 3.2462, 3.2501, 4.3290
1:38–39	1.627, 3.1913	2:10	2.1193, 4.3276, 4.3339
1:39	1.22, 1.414, 3.2859, 4.3105, 4.3125, 4.3126, 4.3130
1:40–44	3.2637, 3.2764, 3.2814, 3.2816
1:40–45	1.11, 1.24, 1.155, 1.626, 3.1924, 3.2715, 3.2746, 3.2762, 4.3195, 4.3406	2:11 2:12 2:13 2:13–14
1:41	2.1371, 3.2713, 3.2715
1:41–45	2.1373
1:42	3.2715, 4.3195
1:44	1.53, 2.1213, 2.1371, 3.2673	2:13–17

2:13-28	4.3406	2:22	4.3334, 4.3335,
2:14	1.24, 1.272, 1.836, 2.1255, 4.3274	2:23	4.3336 2.1223, 2.1360, 2.1366, 2.1699, 3.2336, 3.2337, 3.2614, 3.2619, 3.2621, 4.3131
2:14-15	4.3302		3.2602
2:14-22	4.3341, 4.3342		3.2613, 3.2615, 3.2619, 3.2621, 4.3197
2:15	2.1223, 3.2731	2:23-24	4.3364
2:15-16	3.2497	2:23-26	1.24, 1.626, 2.1193, 2.1226, 2.1264, 2.1363, 3.2583, 3.2598, 3.2599, 3.2616, 3.2623, 3.2771, 4.3148, 4.3149, 4.3388
2:15-17	1.24, 1.626, 2.1212, 2.1263, 3.2095, 3.2805		2.1367, 4.3286
2:16	2.1223, 3.2693, 3.2731, 4.3308	2:23-27	2.1209, 3.2608, 4.3149, 4.3308
2:16-17	1.273	2:23-28	1.53, 2.1224 2.1227, 3.2601, 3.2622, 3.2631, 3.2749, 4.3150
2:16-17a	1.268		1.627, 2.1264, 2.1341, 3.2599, 3.2600, 3.2603, 3.2604, 3.2613, 3.2617, 3.2618, 3.2621, 3.2622, 3.2623, 3.2631, 3.2749, 4.3075
2:17	1.52, 3.2591, 3.2731, 3.2733, 3.2748, 3.2749	2:23-3:6	2.1346, 3.2482, 3.2621, 4.3150
2:18	1.421, 2.1223, 3.2442, 3.2619, 4.3309, 4.3342	2:24	2.1264, 2.1299, 2.1360, 2.1362, 2.1566, 3.2428, 3.2478, 3.2749, 3.2751, 3.2886, 4.3150
2:18-19	3.2619, 3.2748, 4.3308, 4.3311	2:25	3.2633
2:18-20	1.595, 1.615, 1.656, 3.1835, 3.2619, 3.2880, 4.3305, 4.3308, 4.3311, 4.3331 <sup>β</sup>	2:25-26	1.414, 4.3105, 4.3125, 4.3131
2:18-22	1.315, 2.1193, 2.1751, 2.1753, 2.1767, 2.1774, 4.3302, 4.3305, 4.3306, 4.3307, 4.3331, 4.3341	2:27	2.1265, 3.2717, 4.3195
2:19	1.53, 1.345, 3.2488, 3.2499, 3.2510, 4.3309, 4.3328, 4.3329, 4.3332, 4.3341, 4.3342	2:27-28	1.24, 1.626, 2.1360, 2.1368, 2.1374, 3.1924, 3.2523, 3.2582, 3.2597, 3.2604, 3.2608, 3.2609,
2:19b	2.1270	2:28
2:19-20	3.2619, 4.3310, 4.3315
2:19-22	1.627	3
2:20	3.2403, 4.3311, 4.3321, 4.3322, 4.3323, 4.3330, 4.3332	3:1
2:20-21	3.2749	3:1-5
2:21	4.3334	3:1-6
2:21-22	3.1912, 3.2552, 3.2880, 4.3305, 4.3307, 4.3333, 4.3341, 4.3342

	3.2613, 3.2615,	3:17–19	4.3407
	3.2618, 3.2626,	3:18	1.647, 2.877
	3.2750, 3.2771,	3:19–21	1.468
	4.3074, 4.3131,	3:20	2.1230, 2.1481,
	4.3148, 4.3388,		4.2928, 4.3131,
	4.3406		4.3235
3:2	3.2608	3:20–21	4.2920, 4.2928,
3:3–35	4.3407		4.2962
3:4	1.53, 2.1209,	3:20–30	2.1369, 3.2797,
	2.1348, 3.2468,		4.3408
	3.2599, 3.2600,	3:20–32	2.883
	3.2603, 3.2622,	3:20–35	4.2930
	3.2625, 3.2626,	3:21	1.327, 1.627,
	3.2627, 3.2631,		1.677, 1.706,
	3.2632, 4.3075,		1.735, 2.1230,
	4.3148		2.1289, 2.1432,
3:4–5	1.627		3.2011, 3.2441,
3:5	3.2609, 3.2610		4.2928, 4.2933,
3:6	2.1521, 2.1619,		4.2961
	2.1700, 3.1835,	3:21–22	1.620
	3.2451, 3.2452,	3:22	1.22, 1.24, 1.627,
	3.2608, 3.2750,		1.736, 2.1231,
	4.3308, 4.3322		2.1432, 2.1705,
3:7	2.1223, 3.1912,		3.2011, 3.2536,
	4.3306		3.2693, 3.2858,
3:7–8	4.2929		3.2859, 4.2922,
3:7–11	4.2929		4.2928, 4.3057,
3:7–12	1.24, 4.2928		4.3308, 4.3403
3:7–13	1.393	3:22–23	4.2932
3:7–19	4.3396	3:22–24	1.735, 4.2940
3:8	1.379, 4.2928,	3:22–26	3.2880, 4.2919,
	4.3306		4.2935, 4.2936,
3:9	2.1223, 3.1912		4.3180
3:11	3.2532, 3.2713,	3:22–27	3.2768, 3.2858,
	3.2714		3.2859, 4.2927,
3:13	1.462		4.2928
3:13–15	1.420, 1.772,	3:22–30	4.2912, 4.2931
	2.1298	3:23	3.2468, 3.2858
3:13–16	2.1211	3:23–26	4.3073
3:13–19	1.346, 2.1193,	3:23–27	1.22
	3.2007, 3.2444,	3:23–30	1.627, 1.736
	3.2505, 3.2831,	3:24	2.1480
	4.2928	3:26	3.2468, 3.2858,
3:13–19b	1.327		4.2937
3:14	3.1913, 3.2441,	3:27	2.1207, 3.2533,
	4.3131		3.2541, 3.2624,
3:14–15	3.2443, 3.2524		3.2625, 3.2860,
3:15	1.22, 1.771,		3.2867, 4.2920,
	3.2859		4.2937, 4.2939,
3:16	1.422, 2.1193		4.2943, 4.3031,
3:16–19	1.448, 3.2295,		4.3037, 4.3073,
	3.2445, 4.3397		4.3074
3:17	2.1359, 3.2468,	3:27–28	1.358
	4.3403	3:27–30	4.2932

3:28	3.2483	4:11	1.790, 2.1481,
3:28-29	2.1369, 3.2478, 3.2482, 4.2921	4:11-12	2.1581, 4.3207 1.423, 1.790,
3:28-30	3.2860, 4.2929, 4.2943		3.2144, 3.2733, 4.2930, 4.2933
3:29	1.627, 2.885	4:12	2.1155, 2.1634
3:29-30	3.2714	4:13	1.790
3:30	1.627, 3.2713, 4.2921, 4.2922, 4.2933	4:13-20	1.78, 3.2073, 3.2074, 3.2555, 3.2680, 4.3365, 4.3454
3:31-32	1.627, 1.832
3:31-33	4.2928	4:14	1.627
3:31-35	1.468, 1.832, 2.1289, 2.1432, 2.1435, 3.2011, 3.2436, 4.2920, 4.2928, 4.2961, 4.2962, 4.2967, 4.3394, 4.3397	4:15 4:19 4:21-23 4:21-25	3.2858 1.24, 4.3276 3.2073 4.3394, 4.3397, 4.3407
3:32	3.2441, 4.2928	4:22	2.1481, 3.1912
3:33	1.357, 1.832	4:23	3.1912
3:33-34	3.2868	4:24	1.665, 3.1912, 3.2126, 3.2260
3:33-35	1.627	4:24-25	3.2073
3:34	3.2594, 4.2962	4:25-27	1.627 1.358, 3.1912
3:34-35	4.2930	4:26	4.3207, 4.3210
3:35	1.55, 1.254, 1.832, 4.2964	4:26-29	1.103, 3.2073, 3.2194, 3.2553, 3.2566, 3.2567, 3.2624, 3.2793, 3.2880, 4.3210, 4.3408
4	1.97, 1.392, 1.437, 2.1338, 3.2859
4:1	2.1481, 3.1912, 4.3131	4:26-32	1.67, 1.75, 4.3073
4:1-2	3.2073	4:27	3.2347
4:1-9	3.2680, 3.2831, 4.3454	4:30	2.1480, 3.2560, 4.3206, 4.3207
4:1-20	3.2074, 3.2444, 4.3406	4:30-32	1.272, 2.1249, 3.2073, 3.2551, 3.2553, 3.2566, 3.2567, 3.2624, 3.2762, 4.3210, 4.3272, 4.3408
4:1-33	1.627
4:1-34	3.2073
4:2-32	3.2881
4:3	1.418, 4.3131
4:3-8	1.75, 1.78, 3.2461, 3.2553, 3.2554, 3.2624	4:31 4:31-32 4:33-34	4.3334 3.2439 3.2073, 3.2442, 4.3365, 4.3408
4:3-9	3.2073, 3.2074, 3.2793	4:34	2.1223, 2.1480, 4.3365, 4.3371
4:9	3.1971, 4.3358, 4.3365	4:35-41	1.464, 1.653, 3.2712, 4.3059, 4.3080, 4.3398, 4.3407
4:10	1.24, 2.1480, 4.3365
4:10-12	1.419, 3.2593, 4.3371	4:35-5:1	1.627
4:10-13	1.789, 1.790	4:38	1.414, 1.653, 2.1223, 3.2545
4:10-20	3.2073

4:39	1.627	5:41	1.677, 2.962,
4:40	1.356, 1.725		2.1328, 2.1343,
4:41	1.634, 1.786		2.1357, 2.1359,
5	3.2717, 3.2718,		2.1365, 3.2461,
	3.2762, 3.2871,		3.2467, 4.3403
	4.3286	6	3.2005
5:1	4.3385	6:1	4.3131, 4.3409,
5:1-20	1.22, 1.24, 1.379,		4.3413
	1.467, 2.1084,	6:1-2	1.411, 4.3127,
	2.1086, 3.2742,		4.3131
	3.2762, 3.2814,	6:1-5	4.3119
	3.2859, 3.2870,	6:1-6	1.58, 2.1237,
	4.3079, 4.3398,		2.1479, 3.2075,
	4.3407		3.2076, 3.2501,
5:2	1.348, 1.628,		4.3127, 4.3407
	3.2713, 3.2714	6:1-6a	2.1158
5:2-20	1.627	6:2	1.628, 2.1224,
5:5	3.2347		3.2452, 4.3105,
5:6-7	3.2532		4.3125, 4.3137
5:7	3.2714	6:2b-3a	2.1230
5:8	3.2713, 3.2714,	6:2-3	3.2437
	4.3078	6:3b	2.1230
5:13	3.2713, 4.3079	6:3	1.115, 1.413,
5:15	1.634, 3.2859		1.768, 3.2031,
5:16	3.2859		3.2075, 3.2100,
5:17	2.1229		3.2308, 3.2376,
5:18	3.2859		3.2377, 3.2382,
5:18-19	3.2501		3.2436, 3.2439,
5:21	4.3131		4.3302, 4.3377,
5:21-24	1.628, 3.2742		4.3411
5:21-43	1.24, 2.1084,	6:4	1.415, 1.468,
	2.1086, 2.1295,		2.1191, 2.1219,
	3.1924, 3.2713,		2.1221, 2.1289,
	4.3407		2.1480, 3.2031,
5:22-24	4.3195		3.2075, 3.2403,
5:24-34	3.2511, 4.3080		3.2441, 3.2448,
5:25-34	1.24, 1.628,		3.2476
	3.2713, 3.2741,	6:5	3.2075, 3.2076
	3.2742, 3.2762	6:5-6	1.706
5:26	3.2447	6:6a	2.1230
5:27	3.2742	6:6	4.3129
5:28	3.2742	6:6-13	1.24, 3.1945,
5:30	3.2511, 3.2742,		4.2982
	4.3459	6:7	1.22, 1.422,
5:31	2.1223		1.771, 3.2502,
5:33	1.634		3.2713, 3.2741,
5:34	3.2511, 3.2716		4.3283
5:35	2.1223, 2.1474	6:7-11	1.448, 1.772
5:35-42	4.3195	6:7-13	1.180, 1.628,
5:35-43	1.420, 1.628,		2.1298, 3.1913,
	3.2717, 3.2742		3.2422, 3.2442,
5:36	1.634, 3.2511		3.2444, 3.2723,
5:37	3.2447		4.3407

6:8	1.181, 4.3342	6:46-47	1.629
6:8-9	1.24	6:47-52	1.24
6:8-10	2.1122	6:48	1.629
6:9	1.181	6:49	2.1309
6:10	1.180, 2.1296	6:49-50	3.1883
6:11	1.180, 2.1193	6:50	1.634, 3.2029
6:12	1.180, 2.1219	6:51	3.1883
6:12-13	1.772, 3.2741	6:53	1.629
6:13	1.22, 1.180, 1.771, 3.2859	6:56	1.115, 3.2742, 3.2761
6:14	1.29, 1.562, 3.2086, 3.2476	7	1.66, 2.1148, 2.1300, 3.2726, 3.2754, 3.2798, 3.2807, 3.2810, 3.2811, 3.2828, 3.2829
6:14-15	2.1220, 3.1933
6:14-16	2.1193, 2.1231, 2.1747, 2.1751, 2.1758, 2.1773, 2.1777, 2.1780	7:1	1.120, 3.2052, 3.2693
6:14-44	4.3362, 4.3387, 4.3406	7:1-2	1.270, 1.271, 3.2810
6:15	2.1292, 3.2476	7:1-5	3.2751, 3.2764, 3.2807
6:16	1.628, 3.2476	7:1-7	2.1300
6:17-18	1.174, 2.1779	7:1-13	2.1119
6:17-29	2.1747, 2.1751, 2.1753, 2.1758, 2.1780	7:1-15	1.418, 3.2442
6:20	1.634, 2.1766	7:1-23	1.24, 1.120, 1.629, 2.1193, 3.2093, 3.2094, 3.2709, 3.2710, 3.2751, 3.2771, 4.3143, 4.3408, 4.3447
6:21	4.3039
6:27-29	3.2415	7:2	3.2619
6:29	3.2415, 3.2442	7:2-4	2.1209
6:30	3.2442	7:3-4	3.2435
6:30-31	4.2982	7:4	1.629
6:30-34	4.3027	7:4-5	2.1483
6:30-44	1.24, 1.628, 1.789, 2.1193	7:5	1.271, 3.2619, 3.2693, 3.2810
6:30-52	3.1959	7:6	2.1120, 4.2953
6:30-56	1.97	7:6-7	3.2808
6:32-44	2.1036, 3.2337, 3.2712	7:6-8	3.2751
6:32-52	1.75	7:6-13	3.2630, 3.2807, 3.2808
6:34	1.628, 4.3131	7:8	4.2953
6:35-41	1.24	7:8-9	3.2808
6:35-44	2.1296	7:9	1.729, 1.730, 2.1150
6:38-39	3.2545	7:9-13	3.2751, 4.2952, 4.3151
6:39	3.2335, 3.2336, 3.2337	7:10	4.3141
6:45	2.1260, 3.2006, 4.2980	7:10-12	3.2808
6:45-46	4.3408	7:10-13	2.1127, 4.2953, 4.3286
6:45-48	3.2214
6:45-52	1.464, 1.629, 3.2712, 4.3007, 4.3027, 4.3080
6:45-8:21	1.436
6:45-8:26	4.2979, 4.2980

7:11	2.1356, 3.2469		1.726, 1.731,
7:11–12	3.2807		1.733, 3.2462
7:11–13	4.2953	7:26	2.1457, 3.2859
7:11–16	3.2762	7:27	1.263, 1.264,
7:12	3.2808		1.387, 1.388
7:13	2.1483, 3.2808,	7:27–28	1.387
	4.2953	7:29	3.2511
7:14	1.418, 2.1148	7:29–30	3.2859
7:14–15	1.78, 3.2807,	7:31	2.1279, 2.1298,
	4.3359		4.3131
7:14–16	3.2233	7:31–35	4.3195
7:14–17	4.3359	7:31–37	1.24, 1.629,
7:15	1.267–272,		4.3057, 4.3079,
	1.288, 1.431,		4.3404
	2.1147, 2.1260,	7:32–35	1.658
	2.1261, 2.1263,	7:34	2.1328, 3.2467,
	2.1264, 2.1483,		3.2469
	3.2192, 3.2482,	7:35	4.3079
	3.2725, 3.2727,	7:42	4.3411
	3.2728, 3.2730,	8	3.2005
	3.2731, 3.2751,	8:1	4.3131, 4.3283
	3.2753, 3.2816,	8:1–10	1.629, 1.789,
	4.3446, 4.3463		4.3408
7:15–17	3.1943	8:4	3.2483
7:17	2.1480, 2.1481,	8:10	4.3375, 4.3403
	3.2482	8:11	1.630
7:17–23	1.24, 1.78,	8:11–12	2.1220, 3.2510,
	3.2751, 3.2807,		4.2919, 4.3076
	3.2809	8:11–13	3.2451, 3.2541
7:18	4.3446, 4.3447	8:11–26	4.3408
7:18–19	3.2809	8:12	1.706, 3.2868,
7:18–23	1.351		4.2931
7:19	1.629, 1.631,	8:14–21	1.706
	2.1147, 3.2751,	8:15	2.1514, 2.1523,
	3.2806, 3.2807		3.2452
7:19b	1.271, 1.288	8:18	4.3358
7:20	3.2482, 4.3446	8:21	1.786
7:20–23	3.2809	8:22	4.2980
7:21	1.355	8:22–25	1.658, 3.2717,
7:21–23	1.629		4.3195
7:22–23	3.2624	8:22–26	1.24, 4.3007,
7:23	3.1943, 3.2052,		4.3027, 4.3057,
	3.2461		4.3079, 4.3080
7:24	2.1279, 2.1481,	8:22–10:52	3.1821
	4.3131	8:23	2.1279
7:24–10:45	1.629	8:24	1.630
7:24–27	4.3408	8:25	2.1250
7:24–30	1.22, 1.24, 1.263,	8:26	2.1260
	1.264, 1.629,	8:27	1.389, 1.653,
	2.1458, 3.2504,		2.958, 2.1279,
	3.2761, 3.2796,		2.1301, 2.1340,
	3.2814, 3.2860		3.2478, 3.2488,
7:25	3.2713		4.3131
7:25–30	1.379, 1.381,	8:27–28	2.1220, 3.1933,
	1.382, 1.387,		4.3322

8:27-29	2.1480, 2.1751		2.1567, 3.1969,
8:27-30	1.352, 1.379,		3.2145, 3.2260,
	1.381, 1.382,		3.2404, 3.2428,
	1.389, 1.415,		3.2478, 3.2490,
	1.433, 1.659,		3.2880, 3.2886
	1.726, 1.731,	8:38-39	3.2486
	2.1036, 2.1680,	9	2.1235
	3.1883, 3.1884,	9:1	1.103, 1.111,
	3.2005, 3.2278,		1.118, 1.201,
	3.2463, 4.3390,		1.279, 1.350,
	4.3407		1.494, 3.2490,
8:27-31	2.1198		3.2568, 3.2879,
8:27-33	1.423, 1.674,		4.3207, 4.3210,
	2.1030		4.3973
8:27-38	1.24, 1.79	9:2	3.2333
8:28	1.29, 1.415,	9:2-8	1.153
	2.1193, 2.1292,	9:2-13	4.3390, 4.3407
	2.1758, 2.1777,	9:3	1.634
	3.2278, 3.2476	9:4	2.1218
8:29	1.388, 1.630,	9:5	1.414, 2.1223,
	1.643, 2.958,		3.2443
	3.1883	9:9	2.1027, 2.1341,
8:30	1.630		3.2478, 3.2486,
8:31	1.51, 2.1367,		4.3362
	2.1565, 3.2007,	9:9-12	4.3361
	3.2403, 3.2428,	9:11	2.1480
	3.2449, 3.2478,	9:11-13	2.1160, 2.1161,
	3.2486, 3.2693,		2.1218, 2.1367,
	3.2879, 3.2886,		2.1751
	4.3131	9:12	2.1155, 2.1362,
8:31-33	1.51, 1.630,		2.1367, 3.2478
	3.2858, 4.3390,	9:12-13	3.2403, 3.2850,
	4.3407		4.3322
8:32	1.55, 4.3322	9:13	2.1367, 4.3362
8:32-33	1.771	9:14-20	1.22
8:33	1.352, 3.1883,	9:14-29	1.24, 1.320,
	3.2435, 3.2468,		2.1298, 3.2859,
	3.2858, 3.2859		4.3027, 4.3407
8:34	1.24, 2.1239,	9:17	2.1223, 2.1480,
	3.2228, 3.2443,		2.1481, 3.2859
	3.2483, 4.2969,	9:17-18	1.472
	4.3098, 4.3274,	9:18	3.2502
	4.3283	9:20	1.472
8:34-9:1	2.1207, 4.3407	9:22	1.472
8:34-35	3.2501	9:23	3.2511
8:34-37	1.24, 1.421	9:24	3.2501
8:34-38	3.2403	9:25	3.2713, 3.2859,
8:35	1.24, 1.51, 1.353,		4.3077, 4.3078,
	1.421, 2.1359,		4.3079
	3.2031, 3.2503,	9:26	4.3131
	3.2733, 4.3098	9:28	1.423, 3.1971
8:36-37	3.2482	9:29	4.3327
8:38	1.279, 1.416,	9:30	3.2483, 4.3131
	1.665, 2.1279,	9:30-31	2.1480

9:30–32	1.630, 4.3390, 4.3407	10:2–12	1.173, 1.315, 3.2695, 4.3151, 4.3360
9:30–41	1.24		2.1266
9:31	1.55, 2.1341, 2.1367, 3.2007, 3.2403, 3.2428, 3.2449, 3.2478, 3.2486, 3.2879, 3.2886	10:3–4 10:6–7 10:6–8 10:8 10:9	1.173, 4.3075 2.1713 2.1713 2.1266, 3.2482, 3.2758
9:31–32	4.3362	10:10	2.1480, 2.1481, 3.1941, 4.3131
9:32	1.634		1.24
9:33	2.1481, 4.3130, 4.3235	10:10–12 10:11	3.2051, 3.2760
9:33–37	1.771, 3.2310, 3.2397, 4.3407	10:11–12	1.24, 1.272, 1.319, 1.341, 1.679, 2.1140, 2.1266, 4.3399, 4.3438
9:33–50	3.1945		3.1941
9:34	1.644		3.2051
9:35	1.24, 1.78, 2.1480, 4.3360	10:11–13 10:12	1.256, 1.257, 1.272, 1.656, 2.976, 3.2310
9:35–50	3.2053	10:13–16	1.273, 1.504 3.2504, 3.2882, 4.3360
9:36–37	3.2760		1.273, 1.355, 1.504, 3.2513, 4.3207, 4.3214
9:37	1.52, 3.2032		3.1989
9:38	1.422, 2.1121, 2.1223, 3.2859	10:14 10:14–15	2.1223, 4.3270, 4.3273
9:38–40	2.1234, 4.2933, 4.3400	10:15	1.706, 3.2511
9:38–41	1.22		3.2095
9:38–50	4.3407		3.1914, 3.2111, 3.2766, 4.3269, 4.3277, 4.3407
9:40	3.2095, 4.2919, 4.2922	10:16 10:17	2.1125
9:41	1.448, 3.2255		1.24, 4.2953
9:42	3.1944, 3.2127	10:17–18	1.24, 3.2142, 4.3271
9:42–48	1.24, 2.1240, 3.2760	10:17–19 10:17–22	1.102, 1.357, 3.2588, 3.2681, 3.2702, 3.2703, 3.2707, 3.2868, 4.3270, 4.3273
9:43	1.357, 3.2260, 3.2468, 4.3141, 4.3207	10:17–26	4.3271
9:43–47	3.2504	10:17–27	1.102, 1.357, 3.2588, 3.2681, 3.2702, 3.2703, 3.2707, 3.2868, 4.3270, 4.3273
9:43–48	1.10, 1.11, 1.13, 3.2494	10:17–31	4.3271
9:45	3.2468, 4.3141	10:18	1.102, 1.357, 3.2588, 3.2681, 3.2702, 3.2703, 3.2707, 3.2868, 4.3270, 4.3273
9:47	1.355, 1.357, 1.504, 2.1249, 3.2468, 4.3141, 4.3207, 4.3214		4.3271
9:49	3.2077	10:18–20	4.2953, 4.3141, 4.3274, 4.3275
9:50	2.1480, 2.1483, 3.1944, 3.2192	10:19	4.2954
10:1	4.3131	10:20–21	2.1721, 3.2429, 3.2514, 3.2823, 4.3271, 4.3273, 4.3274, 4.3275, 4.3290
10:1–12	2.1119	10:21
10:1–16	4.3407
10:2	4.3358
10:2–9	2.1266, 3.2507, 3.2760

10:21–22	3.2501	10:41–44	1.771
10:22	4.3270, 4.3271	10:41–45	1.24, 1.421
10:23	1.355, 4.3052, 4.3124, 4.3207, 4.3271	10:42–45	3.2044, 3.2057, 3.2513
10:23–25	3.2504, 3.2882, 4.3277	10:43	4.3390
10:23–26	4.3285, 4.3359	10:43–44	1.78
10:23–27	4.3269, 4.3272, 4.3275	10:45	1.52, 1.430, 1.630, 1.692, 1.693, 1.806, 2.861, 2.1163, 2.1306, 2.1341, 3.2403, 3.2428, 3.2478, 3.2514, 3.2671, 3.2733, 3.2755, 3.2757, 3.2886, 4.3324
10:23–31	1.24, 4.3277, 4.3407	10:46–52	1.24, 1.630, 2.1234, 3.2437, 3.2522, 3.2717, 4.3195, 4.3407
10:23–45	3.2442	10:46–13:37	1.630
10:24	4.3207, 4.3214	10:47	1.341, 1.467, 2.1234, 4.3195
10:25	1.357, 1.504, 2.1249, 2.1265, 3.2808, 4.3054, 4.3055, 4.3171, 4.3214, 4.3279, 4.3300	10:47–48	2.1234, 2.1238, 2.1278
10:26	2.1480, 4.3279	10:51	2.1223, 3.2443
10:27	3.2494, 4.3279	10:52	3.2511
10:28	4.3276, 4.3290	11	3.2075
10:28–29	4.3271	11–12	3.1893
10:28–30	3.2441	11–13	3.2753
10:28–31	1.771, 4.2963, 4.3272, 4.3302	11–19	2.1193
10:29–30	2.1127, 3.2447, 3.2765, 3.2880, 4.2964, 4.2965	11:1–10	1.659, 2.1046, 2.1067, 2.1193, 2.1303, 3.2016, 3.2019, 3.2340, 3.2659, 4.3407
10:31	3.2137, 3.2513, 3.2735, 4.3192	11:1–11	1.346, 1.678, 2.1036, 3.2295, 3.2437
10:31–34	1.630	11:1–13:37	3.1821
10:32	1.634, 2.1207, 2.1480, 4.3131	11:1–16:8	3.2647
10:32–34	4.3362, 4.3390, 4.3407	11:7–11	2.1238
10:33	2.1341, 3.2007, 3.2693, 3.2886	11:10	2.1238, 2.1278, 3.2075, 3.2568
10:33–34	2.1367, 3.2403, 3.2428, 3.2449, 3.2478, 3.2486	11:11	4.3131, 4.3286, 4.3407
10:34	3.1988, 3.2879	11:12–14	3.2340, 3.2712, 4.3286, 4.3408
10:35	2.1223, 3.1988, 4.2957	11:12–22	3.2882
10:35–40	1.503, 1.504, 1.771	11:12–26	3.2442
10:35–45	2.1367, 2.1368, 2.1374, 3.2443, 3.2891, 4.3408	11:14	4.3283
10:37	1.503, 3.2495	11:14–17	2.1036, 2.1043
10:38	1.101, 1.630, 3.2403	11:15	3.2334, 3.2641, 3.2644, 3.2645, 3.2663
10:38–39	2.1241, 3.2403
10:40	1.503

11:15–16	3.2646	11:30	1.631
11:15–17	1.136, 1.346, 2.1226, 3.2029, 3.2340, 3.2400, 3.2668, 3.2818, 4.3407	11:32	1.634, 2.1220, 2.1773
11:15–18	2.1218, 2.1432, 2.1433, 3.2814	11:33	1.631
11:15–19	1.354, 1.631, 3.2014, 3.2295, 3.2638, 3.2644, 3.2645, 3.2891	11:45–53	3.2013
11:16	2.1305, 3.2644, 3.2645, 3.2647, 3.2656, 3.2817	12	1.66, 3.2225, 4.3289
11:17	1.54, 2.1159, 2.1226, 2.1357, 3.2590, 3.2645, 3.2646, 3.2654, 3.2655, 3.2657, 3.2662, 3.2669, 3.2868	12:1	1.255, 3.2074, 4.2930, 4.2933
11:18	1.631, 1.634, 3.2646, 3.2671, 3.2694	12:1–8	4.3024, 4.3031
11:19	3.2646	12:1–9	2.1222, 3.2074, 3.2843
11:20–21	3.2712	12:1–10	2.1212
11:20–25	3.2194, 4.3286	12:1–11	2.1634, 3.2942, 4.3025
11:20–26	3.2340, 4.3408	12:1–12	1.11, 1.254, 1.417, 1.455, 1.456, 2.1093, 2.1152, 2.1193, 2.1206, 2.1207, 2.1373, 3.2074, 3.2310, 3.2403, 3.2553, 3.2555, 3.2556, 3.2561, 4.3407
11:21	2.1223	12:4	2.1373
11:22–23	1.356, 1.357	12:5	2.1153
11:22–24	3.2032	12:6	1.254
11:23	1.343, 1.356, 4.3399, 4.3459	12:6–8	3.2488
11:23–24	3.2501	12:9	2.1634
11:24–25	3.2754	12:9–11	3.2754
11:25	1.657, 3.2126, 4.3128	12:9b	1.255
11:27	2.1130, 2.1764, 3.2694, 4.3131	12:10	2.1224
11:27–33	2.1206, 2.1220, 2.1433, 2.1479, 2.1747, 2.1751, 2.1757, 2.1767, 2.1782, 3.2510, 3.2647, 3.2654, 3.2671, 4.3363, 4.3407	12:10–11	3.2074
11:27–12:44	3.2340	12:10–12	3.2759
11:27–13:2	3.2637	12:12	1.437, 1.631, 1.634, 1.692, 2.1634, 3.2074
11:28–30	1.836	12:13	2.1520, 3.2452, 4.3358
11:29	1.357	12:13–14	4.3362
11:29–30	2.1480, 2.1757, 2.1764	12:13–17	1.24, 1.352, 1.379, 1.381, 1.382, 1.388, 1.726, 1.731, 3.1852, 3.2091, 3.2302, 3.2462, 3.2849, 4.3147, 4.3407, 4.3419, 4.3462
		12:13–22	3.1944
		12:13–37	2.1619
		12:14	1.55, 1.415, 2.1223

12:14–17	4.3453	12:37	3.2699
12:15	1.388, 4.3147	12:37–40	3.1896
12:16	1.357, 1.388	12:38	3.2453
12:17	4.3055, 4.3462	12:38–39	4.3129, 4.3132
12:18–27	1.24, 2.1308, 2.1510, 3.2260, 3.2452, 3.2880, 3.2897, 4.3363, 4.3407	12:38–40	3.2765, 4.3286, 4.3407
		12:38–44	3.2754
		12:39	4.3125
12:19	2.1223	12:40	4.3282, 4.3284
12:22	2.1288	12:41	2.1224, 4.3280, 4.3281
12:24–26	2.1149	12:41–42	4.3284
12:25	1.504, 3.2145, 3.2760	12:41–44	1.24, 2.975, 3.2637, 3.2673, 3.2807, 3.2818, 4.3269, 4.3279, 4.3281, 4.3282, 4.3290, 4.3364, 4.3401, 4.3407
12:25–27	3.2699		4.3280
12:26	1.767, 2.1224, 2.1227, 2.1511, 3.2262, 4.3098	12:42	4.3280, 4.3281, 4.3289, 4.3360
		12:43	4.3280, 4.3281, 4.3284
12:27	3.2589	12:44	4.3280, 4.3281, 4.3284
12:28	1.631, 2.1514, 3.2693, 3.2694, 3.2699, 4.3369	13	1.75, 1.423, 1.437, 1.738, 2.1252, 2.1565, 2.1574, 2.1814, 3.1842, 3.1869, 3.1870, 3.1871, 3.1915, 3.1916, 3.2015, 3.2272, 3.2879, 3.2880, 3.2881, 3.2904
12:28–31	3.2698		1.390, 2.1481, 3.2737
12:28–34	1.24, 2.1269, 3.1914, 3.1944, 3.1964, 3.2451, 3.2587, 3.2682, 3.2690, 3.2691, 3.2702, 3.2706, 3.2753, 3.2766, 4.3284, 4.3408		3.2160, 3.2416, 3.2652, 3.2736, 3.2738, 3.2882, 3.2891
			1.391
12:29	1.767, 3.2681	13:1–4	1.24, 1.631, 3.2340, 3.2442, 4.3407
12:29–30	2.1137, 2.1146, 2.1166, 2.1206	13:1–2	1.320, 2.1213, 2.1304, 3.1915, 3.2032, 3.2638, 3.2646, 3.2648, 3.2652, 3.2653, 3.2654, 3.2666, 3.2667, 3.2668, 3.2671, 3.2672, 3.2673, 3.2674, 3.2737
12:30	3.2482, 3.2678, 3.2697	13:1
12:30–35	3.2699
12:31	1.631, 1.661, 3.2052, 4.3054
12:32	1.677, 2.1341, 3.2697, 4.3098
12:32–33	4.3369
12:32–34	3.2194, 3.2692
12:33	3.2032, 3.2678, 3.2697
12:34	1.78, 3.2693, 4.3207, 4.3364, 4.3369
12:35	1.157
12:35–37	1.6, 1.341, 1.409, 2.1207, 3.1896, 3.2437, 4.3349, 4.3366, 4.3369, 4.3407

13:3	1.390	14-15	3.2384
13:3-13	3.2416	14-16	2.1811
13:5-26	3.2879	14:1	1.390, 3.2022,
13:5-37	1.390-92		3.2335, 3.2336,
13:6	1.392		3.2342, 3.2349,
13:7	3.1916		3.2406
13:9	1.448, 4.3125,	14:1-2	1.141, 1.327,
	4.3127, 4.3129,		3.2013, 3.2014,
	4.3131		3.2019, 3.2020,
13:9-13	3.1917, 3.2416,		4.3407
	4.2966	14:1-15:3	1.632
13:10	1.263, 1.392,	14:1-15:47	1.652, 1.659
	2.1281	14:2	1.692, 3.2023
13:11b	1.392	14:3	1.420, 2.1212,
13:11	4.3127		3.2713
13:11-13	1.448	14:3-9	1.24, 1.466,
13:12	4.2965, 4.2966		1.632, 3.2014,
13:14	1.435, 4.3146		4.3286, 4.3401,
13:14b	1.392		4.3407
13:14-16	1.66	14:3-11	1.786
13:14-22	3.2043	14:7	3.2028
13:15	3.1916	14:8	3.2406
13:18	4.3148	14:9	2.1281
13:20	2.1211	14:10-11	1.327, 1.632,
13:21	3.2483		3.1888
13:22	2.1162, 2.1302	14:10-21	4.3407
13:24-25	3.2879	14:12	3.2335, 3.2340,
13:26	2.1565, 3.1916,		23.342
	3.2428, 3.2478,	14:12-16	1.138, 3.2022
	3.2479, 3.2879,	14:12-17	1.141
	3.2886, 3.2903	14:12-21	1.632
13:26-27	3.2486, 3.2879,	14:12-26	2.1335, 2.1367,
	4.3441		2.1368
13:27	1.279, 2.1211,	14:13	1.674
	3.2145, 3.2879,	14:14	1.351, 2.1474,
	3.2904		3.2335, 3.2342,
13:28	2.1474		3.2468
13:29	3.1969	14:16	3.2335, 3.2342
13:30	1.279, 1.350,	14:17	3.2340, 3.2342
	1.392, 1.631,	14:17-25	1.423
	3.2879	14:17-26	3.2340
13:31	1.416, 3.2879	14:18	3.2028
13:32	1.6, 1.103, 1.111,	14:19	4.3330
	1.118, 1.312,	14:21	2.1341, 3.1886,
	1.350, 1.706,		3.2127, 3.2478
	2.1432, 3.2145,	14:22	1.137, 3.2342,
	3.2494, 3.2884		3.2671
13:33	3.1944	14:22-24	3.2191
13:33-37	3.1915, 3.2485,	14:22-25	1.319, 1.340,
	3.2490, 3.2880		1.353, 1.659,
13:34-36	3.1915		2.1088, 2.1193,
13:34-37	3.2553		3.1941, 3.2014,
13:35-37	3.1944		4.3407
14	2.1191	14:23-24	4.3324

14:24	1.137, 1.138, 1.140, 1.692, 2.1163, 3.2671	14:58	1.320, 1.503, 1.632, 2.1028, 2.1043, 2.1196, 2.1213, 2.1304, 3.2032, 3.2400, 3.2638, 3.2646, 3.2648, 3.2649, 3.2650, 3.2651, 3.2652, 3.2653, 3.2654, 3.2666, 3.2668, 3.2671, 3.2673, 3.2674, 3.2738, 3.2753, 3.2818, 3.2891
14:25	1.13, 1.136, 1.345, 1.356, 2.1257, 2.1371, 3.2429, 3.2495, 3.2500, 3.2882, 3.2891, 3.2892, 4.3207, 4.3214, 4.3219, 4.3343		2.1307, 3.2018 2.1197, 3.2406, 3.2475, 4.3145
14:26–52	1.632		1.632, 2.1028, 2.1040, 2.1048, 2.1236, 3.2474, 3.2515
14:26–72	4.3407		3.2018
14:27	2.1166		1.279, 2.885, 2.1030, 2.1162, 2.1195, 2.1238, 3.2398, 3.2428, 3.2478, 3.2479
14:27–28	3.2403	14:59	1.65, 1.66
14:27–30	3.2096	14:61	1.632
14:27–31	3.2227		1.626, 2.1193, 2.1433, 3.2018, 4.3145
14:28	3.1821, 3.2008, 3.2026, 3.2027, 3.2096, 3.2431	14:61–62	1.633, 2.1192, 2.1222, 2.1288, 3.2392, 3.2400
14:32–42	1.354, 3.2015, 3.2404	14:61–64	3.2019
14:33	3.2447	14:62	1.467
14:33–36	2.1242		4.3131
14:34	3.2030		1.722, 3.2227, 4.3330
14:36	1.55, 1.320, 1.720, 2.1206, 3.2042, 3.2468, 3.2497, 3.2593, 4.3445	14:62–63 14:63–64 14:64	3.2726 2.1740, 3.2024, 3.2340, 4.3407
14:41	2.1341, 3.2478		2.1458
14:41–42	3.2488		3.2353
14:42	3.2032	14:65	3.2024
14:43–48	4.3041		1.341, 1.633, 2.1238, 3.2028, 3.2475, 3.2515
14:43–52	3.2340		1.382
14:45	2.1223	14:66–72	1.379, 1.381, 1.389, 1.726, 1.731, 3.2463
14:47	3.1886	14:67	3.2340
14:48	3.2301	14:68
14:49	3.2034, 3.2637, 4.3126	14:72
14:51–52	3.2111	15
14:53–54	3.2019	15:1
14:53–55	3.2650
14:53–65	1.24, 1.632	15:1–5
14:53–72	3.2340	15:1–15
14:55	2.1730, 2.1740, 3.2018	15:1–24 15:2
14:55–64	2.1036
14:55–65	3.2017, 3.2398	15:2–3 15:2–5
14:56–57	2.1194
14:56–58	3.2766
14:57	3.2650
14:57–58	3.2736
14:57–59	3.2651	15:2–19

15:2–39	4.3407	15:39	1.624, 1.633,
15:3	4.3332		2.1437, 3.2016,
15:5	3.2406		3.2032, 3.2762
15:6–14	3.2359	15:40	1.467, 2.1298,
15:6–15	1.633, 3.2301		3.2439
15:7	1.633	15:40–41	1.425, 1.467,
15:16–20	1.633, 3.2392		2.1256, 3.2446
15:16–32	1.789	15:40–47	4.3407
15:16–47	3.2415	15:40–16:8	1.633, 2.1437
15:17–18	3.2668	15:41	2.1255
15:18	2.1238	15:41–42	3.1913
15:19	3.2392	15:42	3.2024, 3.2340
15:20	3.2392	15:42–43	2.1740
15:20–46	3.2340	15:43	1.420, 1.805,
15:21	2.1239, 3.2016		2.1194, 3.2448,
15:21–24	1.633		4.3207
15:21–28	3.2796	15:44	3.2194
15:22–41	2.1328	15:44–45	3.2412
15:24	1.314, 3.2024,	15:47	1.467, 3.2439
	3.2389, 3.2406	16:1	1.467, 3.2439
15:25	3.2024	16:1–8	1.659, 3.2111,
15:25–26	2.1190		3.2340, 3.2417,
15:26	1.341, 1.633,		4.3407
	2.1030, 2.1197,	16:5	1.468, 1.634
	2.1238, 2.1304,	16:5–6	3.2111
	3.2160, 3.2392	16:6	1.27, 1.467
15:27	3.2301	16:7	1.468, 3.1821,
15:29	1.503, 1.633,		3.2008, 3.2026,
	2.1192, 2.1196,		3.2027, 3.2419,
	2.1213, 3.2032,		3.2420, 3.2421,
	3.2400, 3.2406,		3.2423, 3.2431
	3.2638, 3.2648,	16:8	1.468, 1.634,
	3.2754, 3.2891		3.2422, 3.2425
15:29–32	3.2392	16:9	3.2859
15:31	3.2392	16:17	3.2859
15:32	3.2392
15:33	1.28, 3.2016,	Luke
	3.2024, 3.2150	1	2.1747, 2.1753,
15:34	1.53, 1.55, 1.121,		2.1781
	1.313, 1.706,	1–2	1.69, 2.1278,
	2.875, 2.962,		3.1904, 3.2044,
	2.1088, 2.1325,		3.2099, 3.2367,
	3.1961, 3.2016,		3.2637, 4.3375,
	3.2088, 3.2392,		4.3410
	3.2406, 3.2461,	1:1	1.67, 3.2194
	3.2462, 3.2467,	1:1–2	1.439
	4.3027	1:1–4	1.96, 1.425,
15:35–36	1.633		1.434, 1.440,
15:36	3.2430		1.441, 1.679,
15:37	1.633, 2.1190,		2.956, 2.1087,
	3.2016		2.1314, 2.1645,
15:38	3.2016, 3.2334,		2.1813, 3.1906,
	3.2754, 4.3332		3.1930, 3.2430

1:1-25	3.1922	1:56	4.3432, 4.3433
1:2	1.438, 1.440, 2.1490, 3.2195	1:57-80	3.1922
1:3	3.2329, 3.2332, 4.3416	1:64	3.1903
1:5	3.1921, 3.2315, 3.2321, 3.2365, 3.2371, 3.2376, 4.3377, 4.3414, 4.3423	1:67-79	1.644, 3.2367
1:5-23	3.2637	1:68	1.767, 2.1221, 4.3326
1:5-25	2.1751	1:68-79	2.1753
1:5-80	2.1781	1:69	3.2437, 4.3412
1:5-2:52	1.659	1:76	2.1773, 2.1777
1:7-80	2.1751	1:76-77	2.1771
1:13	4.3309	1:77	2.1760
1:15	2.1774, 2.1776, 4.3340	1:78	2.1221
1:16-17	2.1760, 2.1771, 2.1777	1:80	2.1774, 4.3316, 4.3414
1:17	2.1777	1:83	3.1914
1:20	3.1903	2	2.1126, 4.3411, 4.3412, 4.3422, 4.3434
1:22	3.1903	2:1	2.1813, 3.2122, 4.3414, 4.3415, 4.3430, 4.3431, 4.3435
1:22-23	3.2367	2:1-2	1.644, 4.3413, 4.3416, 4.3428, 4.3429
1:24	4.3414	2:1-3	3.2365
1:26	4.3414	2:1-5	3.2320, 4.3415
1:26-27	3.2438	2:1-7	4.3414, 4.3415
1:26-28	3.2439	2:2	3.2321, 3.2323, 4.3428, 4.3429, 4.3430, 4.3431, 4.3435
1:27	3.1921, 3.2373, 3.2438, 4.3411, 4.3412	2:3	4.3410, 4.3427, 4.3432, 4.3433, 4.3435
1:28-30	3.1921	2:3-5	4.3415, 4.3431
1:30-35	1.644	2:4	1.341, 3.1921, 3.2373, 3.2437, 3.2438, 4.3409, 4.3410, 4.3412, 4.3432, 4.3433, 4.3435
1:31	3.1921, 3.2381, 4.3410	2:4-7	3.1921
1:31-38	3.2380	2:5	3.1921, 4.3411, 4.3433, 4.3435
1:32	3.1921, 3.2380	2:6-7	4.3409, 4.3434, 4.3436
1:32-33	3.2437, 4.3412	2:7	1.768, 3.2329, 3.2373, 3.2374, 3.2377, 4.3413
1:33	4.3208	2:10	2.1087
1:34	3.1921, 4.3410, 4.3411	2:11	3.1921, 3.2437, 4.3412
1:35	3.1921, 3.2380	2:14	2.965, 3.2367
1:36	2.1751, 3.2371, 3.2376, 3.2438, 3.2440
1:38	3.2438
1:39-44	3.1922
1:39-56	2.1751
1:46-53	3.2734
1:46-55	1.644, 2.974, 2.1753, 3.2366, 3.2377, 3.2438
1:52-53	4.3295
1:53	4.3297, 4.3298

2:15	4.3412		2.1767, 2.1779,
2:19	1.432, 3.2200,		3.1901, 3.1908
	3.2438, 3.2439	3:11	3.2077, 4.3340
2:22	3.2366	3:12	3.2805
2:22–24	3.2378, 3.2637	3:15	1.409
2:22–38	3.2373	3:15–17	3.2442
2:24	3.2438	3:15–18	2.1751, 2.1756
2:25	1.432, 3.2264,	3:16	1.150, 1.639,
	3.2378		2.1756, 2.1769
2:25–27	3.2378	3:16–17	1.645
2:25–35	4.3375	3:17	3.2839, 4.3319
2:26–38	4.3327	3:18	3.2838
2:28–32	3.2367	3:19	1.174
2:36	3.2378	3:19–20	2.1751, 2.1779,
2:36–37	3.2378		2.1780
2:37	3.2347, 4.3309	3:19–21	1.97
2:38	3.2264, 3.2378	3:19–22	1.311
2:39	3.1921, 3.2366,	3:20–22	1.345
	4.3409, 4.3410,	3:21–22	1.152, 1.645,
	4.3432		1.659, 2.1751
2:41	3.2637	3:22	3.2121, 3.2882
2:41–42	4.3137	3:23	1.768, 3.2122,
2:41–49	1.659		3.2126, 3.2317,
2:41–51	3.2329		3.2321, 3.2332,
2:41–52	4.2955		3.2333, 3.2371,
2:42–51	3.2376		3.2376, 4.3410,
2:48–49	3.2440		4.3411
2:48–50	3.2438	3:23–28	4.3425
2:49	3.2637	3:23–31	3.2373
2:51	1.432, 3.1921,	3:23–38	3.2377, 3.2437
	3.2200, 3.2438,	3:38	1.645
	3.2439	4	1.154, 1.155,
	1.644, 2.1813,		1.157
3:1	4.3237, 4.3381	4:1	1.154, 1.645
3:1–2	2.1780, 3.2122,	4:1–13	1.14, 1.22, 1.154,
	3.2321, 3.2354,		2.1084, 2.1236,
	4.3381, 4.3416		3.2858, 3.2859
3:1–3	3.2320, 3.2333	4:2	3.2859, 4.3331
3:1–6	2.1751	4:3	3.2859
3:3	2.1760, 2.1781	4:6	3.2859
3:4	4.3317	4:7–8	2.1206
3:4–6	2.1776	4:8	3.2588
3:7	2.1756, 4.3308	4:11–13	1.659
3:7–9	3.1855, 3.2029,	4:13	3.2859
	4.3318	4:14	1.154, 1.645,
3:7–17	1.27		2.1339
3:8	2.1212, 2.1762,	4:14–30	1.154
	3.1908, 3.2839	4:15	2.1224, 4.3105,
3:8–9	4.3319		4.3125, 4.3126
3:9	1.345, 3.2032,	4:16	1.411, 1.467,
	3.2839		3.2031, 4.3105,
3:10	2.1756		4.3124, 4.3125,
3:10–14	2.1339, 2.1751,		4.3126, 4.3137,
	2.1762, 2.1766,		4.3343, 4.3409

4:16-19	2.1729, 3.2290	4:43	1.646, 2.1219,
4:16-20	1.414		4.3208, 4.3212,
4:16-21	2.1120, 2.1155,		4.3298
	2.1156, 2.1158,	4:43-44	3.1913
	2.1193, 3.2282,	4:44	4.3105, 4.3125
	3.2463, 4.3116	5:1	1.784
4:16-29	2.1728	5:1-11	2.1193, 3.1901,
4:16-30	1.58, 2.1236,		3.1903, 3.1912,
	2.1339, 3.2076,		3.2026, 3.2420,
	3.2448, 3.2469,		3.2441, 3.2501,
	4.3126, 4.3140,		3.2712, 4.2956
	4.3148	5:3	2.1224
4:18	1.352, 2.885,	5:5	2.1474
	3.2311, 4.3290,	5:8	3.1912, 3.2441,
	4.3297		3.2730
4:18-19	1.645, 1.648,	5:10	3.2442, 4.3308
	2.958, 2.1137,	5:12-14	3.2637, 3.2816
	2.1294, 2.1494,	5:12-16	1.155
	2.1720	5:14	2.1213
4:18-21	3.2881	5:17-26	1.671, 3.2497,
4:19	2.1219, 3.2125,		3.2510, 3.2523
	3.2335	5:17-6:11	4.3305
4:20	1.414, 2.1224,	5:20	1.648, 1.729,
	4.3105, 4.3125,		3.2497, 3.2511
	4.3126	5:21	1.437, 3.2681,
4:21	1.645, 2.1236		3.2702
4:22	1.646, 3.2376,	5:22	4.2924
	4.3127	5:24	2.1340, 3.2478,
4:23	2.1220, 2.1230		3.2482
4:24	2.1191, 2.1219,	5:26	1.671
	3.2031, 3.2441,	5:27	3.2805
	3.2476, 4.3127	5:27-28	1.379, 1.381, 1.382,
4:24-27	2.1193, 2.1212		3.2463, 3.2501
4:25	3.1970	5:27-32	4.3339
4:26-27	1.646	5:29	3.2497, 4.3335
4:27-28	2.883	5:29-32	2.1263, 3.2805
4:28	4.3105, 4.3125	5:30	4.3309
4:28-30	1.646, 4.3127	5:32	2.1219
4:29	2.1432	5:33	4.3308, 4.3309,
4:30	3.1904		4.3334
4:31	1.646, 4.3394	5:33-35	4.3308
4:31-37	3.2859	5:33-39	2.1751, 4.3305,
4:32	3.2507		4.3306, 4.3307
4:33	3.2713, 3.2859,	5:34	2.1270, 3.2488,
	4.3105, 4.3125		3.2499, 3.2510,
4:35	3.2859		4.3328, 4.3329
4:36	3.2713	5:34-35	4.3311, 4.3315
4:38	4.3105, 4.3125	5:35	2.1145, 4.3323,
4:38-39	3.2447, 3.2522,		4.3332
	4.2957	5:36	4.3334
4:38-41	4.3148	5:36-38	3.2552
4:38-43	3.2511	5:36-39	4.3307, 4.3333,
4:41	3.2859		4.3336, 4.3345

5:37	4.3335		3.2624, 4.3189,
5:37–38	4.3334		4.3448
5:38	4.3336	6:20–22	2.1813, 3.1889
5:39	3.1912, 4.3334,	6:20–23	1.657
	4.3335, 4.3337,	6:20–26	2.1087, 2.1339,
	4.3339, 4.3343		3.1919, 3.2880,
6	1.352, 2.1338,		4.3295
	3.2271, 3.2445,	6:20b	1.356
	4.3446	6:20b–23	1.357
6:1	3.2337, 4.3149	6:21a	1.178
6:1–5	2.1264, 3.2598,	6:21	3.1890, 3.1920,
	3.2616, 4.3388		3.1969, 4.3294,
6:1–11	3.2523, 3.2750		4.3297, 4.3464
6:5	2.1341, 3.1976,	6:21–25	2.1125
	3.2202, 3.2203,	6:22	3.1890, 3.2478,
	3.2478, 3.2482,		4.3296
	3.2618	6:22–23	3.1969
6:6	2.1224, 3.2750,	6:23	3.2255, 4.3294,
	4.3105, 4.3125		4.3297, 4.3299
6:6–10	2.1265	6:24	2.1339, 3.1970,
6:6–11	3.2597, 3.2608,		4.3292, 4.3298
	4.3388	6:24–25	1.432
6:7	3.2095	6:24–26	4.3294
6:8	4.2924	6:25	3.1969
6:10	4.3073	6:26	1.16, 4.3296
6:11	2.1700	6:27	1.351, 1.357,
6:12	1.115, 3.2214,		1.398, 2.1145,
	3.2311		2.1268, 3.2032,
6:12–16	3.2831		4.3054, 4.3056,
6:12–19	4.3396		4.3295
6:12–26	3.2505	6:27–28	1.24, 1.342,
6:13	1.422, 3.2444		2.1483, 3.1891,
6:13–16	3.2445		3.1942, 3.1945,
6:14	2.1621		3.2095, 3.2192
6:14–16	4.3397	6:27–29	1.342, 2.1130,
6:15	2.877, 4.3046		4.3446, 4.3448,
6:17	1.380, 1.393,		4.3460
	2.1474, 3.2441,	6:27–30	1.24
	4.3295	6:27–35	3.2043
6:17–49	1.188, 2.1085	6:27–36	1.15, 1.17, 1.18,
6:17–7:1	3.1889, 3.1897		1.176, 2.1327
6:18	3.2713, 4.3295	6:27–38	2.1483, 3.2192
6:19	4.3295	6:28	1.348
6:20	1.24, 1.178,	6:29	1.357
	1.345, 2.1037,	6:29–30	2.1483, 3.1891,
	2.1223, 3.1890,		3.2192, 4.3052
	3.1969, 3.2503,	6:30	1.24, 1.178,
	4.3052, 4.3055,		4.3302
	4.3206, 4.3210,	6:31	1.11, 1.16, 1.24,
	4.3211, 4.3269,		1.178, 3.2126
	4.3292, 4.3294,	6:32–34	1.17
	4.3360	6:32–35	1.421, 3.2514
6:20–21	1.24, 1.347,	6:32–36	1.24, 3.1891,
	2.1156, 2.1158,		3.2590
	3.2497, 3.2513,	6:33–34	1.24

6:34	1.178, 4.3302	7:18-19	4.3324
6:35	1.17, 2.1130, 2.1268, 3.2255, 3.2311, 4.3054, 4.3460	7:18-20 7:18-22 7:18-23	3.2442 1.24 1.646, 1.656, 2.1046, 2.1193, 2.1198, 2.1753, 3.1904, 3.2004, 3.2442, 3.2499, 3.2510, 3.2533, 3.2541, 4.3326
6:35-36	3.2900, 4.3198		3.1962
6:35b	1.178		2.1369
6:36	1.17, 3.1969, 4.3303		3.2004
6:36-38	3.2126		3.2521
6:37-38	1.24, 2.1130	7:18-28	1.24, 1.345, 1.347, 1.706, 2.1037, 2.1156, 2.1157, 2.1193, 2.1198, 2.1237, 3.2010, 3.2521, 3.2523, 3.2713, 3.2715, 3.2717, 3.2816, 4.3290, 4.3298
6:38	3.2260	7:18-35	1.353, 2.1028, 2.1031, 2.1041, 3.2860, 4.3325
6:39	1.178, 4.3307	7:18-36	3.2503, 3.2540
6:40	1.421, 2.1474, 3.2032, 3.2502	7:19 7:22	3.2498 1.178 2.1337, 3.2801 3.2308 3.2440 2.1120
6:41	1.110		2.1178, 2.1480, 3.2440, 3.2498, 3.2498, 4.3206, 4.3214
6:41-42	1.178, 2.1130		3.2845
6:43	3.1969		2.1767, 3.2805 2.1751, 2.1756, 2.1782, 3.1901 2.1621
6:43-44	3.2032		2.1115, 4.3312 2.1048, 2.1212, 2.1480, 3.2498, 3.2553, 3.2748, 3.2768
6:43-45	1.178
6:44	3.1969
6:46	3.2494, 4.3273
6:47-49	1.188, 1.416, 3.1969, 3.2503, 3.2553	7:22-23
6:62	4.3208
7	3.2717, 3.2718, 3.2741	7:23
7:1	4.3130, 4.3295	7:24-26
7:1-10	1.24, 1.79, 1.188, 1.379, 1.437, 1.640, 3.1959, 3.2448, 3.2504, 3.2761, 4.3127	7:24-27 7:24-35 7:25 7:26 7:27 7:28
7:3-6	4.3127
7:5	1.379, 1.463, 4.3125, 4.3127
7:8	2.1206, 3.2482
7:9	3.2505, 3.2511	7:28-30
7:11	3.2441	7:29
7:11-15	4.3195	7:29-30
7:11-17	1.646, 2.1193, 2.1221, 3.1901, 3.1903, 3.1923, 3.2447, 3.2713, 3.2742	7:30 7:31-34 7:31-35
7:12-16	3.2717
7:13	4.3297
7:14	3.2717, 3.2741	7:32
7:16	2.1221, 2.1221, 3.2403, 3.2448, 4.3326, 4.3371	7:33 7:33-34
7:16-17	2.1193

7:33–35	3.2475, 4.3309	8:16–18	4.3394
7:34	2.1341, 2.1435, 3.2434, 3.2805, 4.3303	8:18 8:19–20 8:19–21	3.2453 3.2439 1.647, 3.2438, 4.2961, 4.3394
7:34–35	1.647		4.2961, 4.3394
7:35	2.1050, 2.1207, 3.2269, 3.2832	8:21 8:22–25	3.2448, 3.2453 4.3398
7:36	3.2435	8:24	1.414, 2.1474
7:36–8:3	3.2441	8:25	1.786
7:36–38	4.3302	8:26	3.2879
7:36–47	2.1479	8:26–29	3.2859
7:36–50	1.466, 2.1206, 2.1221, 2.1337, 3.1923, 3.1925, 3.2012, 3.2014, 3.2447, 3.2448, 3.2497, 3.2713, 3.2739, 3.2822, 3.2832, 4.3343, 4.3401	8:26–39 8:27 8:29 8:29–30 8:33 8:35 8:36 8:38 8:38–39 8:40–56 8:42–48	1.379, 4.3398 3.2859, 3.3210 3.2713 3.2859 3.2859 3.2859 3.2859 3.2501 3.2447 3.2511
7:37–38	3.2822	8:44	1.115, 3.2742
7:39	2.1191, 2.1193, 2.1221	8:45	2.1474
7:40–43	3.2822	8:46	3.2511
7:41–43	3.2554	8:48	3.2511
7:44–46	3.2822	8:50	3.2511
7:47	3.2822	8:54	2.1328
7:47–48	1.348, 2.1218	9	3.2043, 4.2979, 4.2982
7:47–49	1.648
7:48	1.345, 3.2497
7:48–49	3.2897	9:1	1.422, 1.771, 3.2043, 3.2502, 3.2859
7:50	3.2511
7:59–60	2.1193
8:1	4.3129, 4.3208	9:1–2	3.2502, 3.2524
8:1–3	1.346, 1.425, 1.432, 2.1255, 2.1298, 3.1913, 3.2012, 3.2441, 3.2446, 3.2832, 3.2869	9:1–5 9:1–6 9:1–10 9:2	1.772 1.180, 3.2422, 3.2741, 4.2982 3.2442 1.180, 3.2502, 4.3208
8:2	3.1901, 3.2832, 3.2859, 3.2860	9:2–3 9:3	3.1913 1.181, 2.1122
8:2–3	2.1256, 4.3302	9:3–4	2.1122
8:3	1.466, 1.467, 2.1257, 3.2452, 4.3299	9:4 9:6 9:7	1.180 1.180, 1.772 3.2476
8:4–8	3.2831	9:7–9	2.1751, 4.3387
8:4–15	3.2073	9:8	3.2476
8:5–8	3.2553	9:9	2.1780, 3.2476
8:8	1.418, 4.3358	9:10	3.2006, 4.2979, 4.2982
8:10	2.1481, 3.2593, 4.3207	9:10–17	3.2337, 4.3007
8:12	3.2859	9:11	4.3208

9:17	2.1260	9:55	3.2478
9:18	1.389, 2.958, 2.1260, 2.1340	9:57-58	1.178
9:18-19	4.3322	9:57-60	1.24
9:18-20	2.1751	9:57-62	1.421, 2.1478, 3.1908, 3.2441, 3.2442, 3.2443, 3.2501, 3.2765
9:18-21	1.379, 1.381, 1.382, 1.389, 1.659, 1.731, 4.3390	9:57-10:15	1.24
9:18-22	3.2463	9:58	1.78, 1.646, 2.1048, 2.1349, 2.1566, 3.2478, 3.2482
9:19	3.2476
9:20	1.389, 2.958
9:21	3.2515	9:59-60	1.266, 4.2958, 4.2959
9:22	3.2265, 3.2340, 3.2478, 3.2486, 4.3390	9:60	1.78, 1.273, 1.351, 3.2502, 3.2765, 4.3052, 4.3208
9:23	3.2483, 4.2969
9:23-24	3.2501
9:24	3.2031, 3.2503, 4.3098	9:61-62	3.1908, 3.1925
9:25	3.2482	9:62	1.78, 1.674
9:26	1.416, 3.1971, 3.2260, 3.2479, 3.2490, 3.2880	10	3.2043, 4.2982
		10:1	1.422, 3.2831
		10:1-12	3.2422, 3.2442, 3.2814
9:26-27	3.2486	10:1-16	3.1913
9:27	3.2490, 4.3207	10:1-20	1.772, 3.2447, 4.2981, 4.3008
9:27-36	1.153
9:28	3.2333	10:1-24	3.2444
9:28-36	3.1913, 4.3390	10:2	1.178
9:33	2.1474	10:3	1.422, 3.2140
9:34	1.644, 3.2731	10:4	1.24, 1.181
9:35	4.3321	10:4-5	2.1122
9:37-42	4.3028	10:4-11	1.178, 1.179
9:37-43	3.2859	10:5-7	3.2448
9:38	4.3335	10:5-20	4.2985
9:40	3.2502	10:6	1.180
9:42	3.2713, 3.2859	10:7	2.1124, 3.1941, 3.2041, 3.2043, 4.3309
9:43-45	4.3390
9:44	2.1341, 3.2478, 3.2486	10:7-9a	1.180
9:46	4.3335	10:8	3.2748
9:46-48	1.771	10:8-12	4.2985
9:47	4.2924	10:9	1.24, 1.180, 1.423, 1.771, 3.2502, 3.2524, 3.2753, 4.3206, 4.3210, 4.3211
9:48	4.3335
9:49	2.1474, 3.2859
9:49-50	4.3400
9:50	3.2095
9:51	2.963, 2.1679	10:10	1.180
9:51-53	2.1813	10:11	2.1273, 4.3208
9:51-56	1.24, 3.1925, 3.2797	10:11-32	1.337
		10:12	4.2980, 4.2983
9:51-14:35	2.1126	10:12-15	3.2494, 3.2533, 3.2541, 3.2542
9:51-19:27	3.2569
9:53	3.2111, 3.2797	10:13	3.2522

10:13-15	1.188, 1.423, 3.2503, 4.2979, 4.2981	10:38-42	1.420, 3.1925, 3.2012, 3.2013, 3.2447
10:13-16	3.1904	10:39	1.420
10:13-17	4.3195	10:40-42	4.2985
10:15	4.2985, 4.3130	10:42	1.420, 4.3335
10:16	1.52, 1.422, 2.1207, 3.2032, 4.2982, 4.2983	11:1	2.1751, 3.2442, 4.3309
10:17	1.422, 3.2859	11:1-2	1.24
10:17-20	1.24, 3.1923, 3.1925, 4.2982, 4.3073	11:1-4	1.421, 2.1206, 3.1889, 4.3309
10:18	1.22, 1.358, 2.1236, 2.1754, 3.2145, 3.2468, 3.2496, 3.2624, 3.2858, 3.2873, 3.2880, 3.2883, 4.3073, 4.3074	11:2	1.201, 1.342, 2.1154, 3.2497, 3.2513, 3.2624, 4.3206, 4.3210, 4.3211, 4.3445
10:19-20	1.22	11:2-4	2.1338, 3.1914
10:20	3.2858	11:4	1.24, 1.646
10:21	1.415, 1.418	11:5	3.2560
10:21-22	2.1048, 2.1481, 3.1895, 3.2270, 4.3008	11:5-6	1.78
10:22	1.178, 1.413, 2.1206, 2.1223	11:5-7	4.3024
10:23-24	1.178, 3.2499, 3.2510, 3.2624	11:5-8	3.1923, 3.2554, 3.2593, 3.2628
10:24	3.2141	11:8	3.2468
10:25	3.2682, 4.3273, 4.3358	11:9	3.1969
10:25-28	1.24, 2.1269, 2.1514, 3.1914, 3.2590, 3.2690, 3.2691	11:9-10	1.178
10:25-29	3.2698	11:9-13	3.1908
10:25-37	1.337, 2.1146, 3.2551, 3.2554, 3.2569, 3.2587, 3.2698, 3.2706, 4.2970	11:11	1.78, 3.2560
10:26	2.1120	11:11-13	3.1908, 3.2553, 3.2628
10:27	1.661, 3.1969, 3.2678, 3.2697	11:13	2.1225, 3.1969
10:29-37	1.24, 1.657, 3.1923	11:14	1.22, 1.24, 3.1904, 3.2859, 4.3429
10:30-35	3.2505, 4.3024	11:14-15	3.2768, 3.2859
10:30-37	3.2732	11:14-20	1.24
10:33	4.3023, 4.3302	11:14-23	1.647, 2.1369
10:34	3.2374, 3.2375	11:14-32	4.2922
10:36	1.357	11:15	1.647, 1.736, 2.1705, 3.2536, 4.3180
10:37	4.3091	11:16	1.647, 3.2510, 3.2541
		11:17	4.2924
		11:17-18	4.3180
		11:18	1.647, 3.2858, 3.2859, 4.2933
		11:18-19	3.2768
		11:19	1.647, 2.1121, 3.2468, 3.2469, 3.2523, 3.2531, 3.2859, 4.3084, 4.3133
		11:19-20	1.358, 4.3078

11:20	1.22, 1.67, 1.281, 1.423, 1.491, 1.594, 1.615, 1.647, 1.662, 2.884, 2.885, 2.1193, 2.1219, 3.2499, 3.2511, 3.2523, 3.2533, 3.2591, 3.2624, 3.2624, 3.2815, 3.2859, 3.2860, 3.2867, 3.2881, 4.3072, 4.3073, 4.3197, 4.3206, 4.3210, 4.3211, 4.3296	11:42 11:42-54 11:43 11:44 11:45-46 11:46 11:47 11:47-52 11:49 11:49-50 11:49-51 11:51 11:52	2.1370, 2.1721, 3.2766, 3.2818 3.1896, 3.1897 4.3125, 4.3129, 4.3132 1.634, 3.2765 3.2765 3.1897 3.2266 3.2765 2.1207, 3.2270, 4.3129, 4.3342 3.2475 1.422, 2.1048, 3.1897, 3.2754 3.2267 1.178, 3.2746, 4.3206
11:21	1.22, 1.178,	11:53-54	1.24
11:21-22	2.1207, 3.2533, 3.2541, 3.2867, 4.2919, 4.2920, 4.2921, 4.2937	12 12:1 12:2	4.2968 2.1514 1.178
11:23	1.647, 4.3249	12:2-3	2.1481
11:24	3.2482, 3.2714	12:3	1.178, 1.423
11:24-26	3.2798, 4.3078	12:4	3.2434
11:24-33	1.647	12:4-5	3.2140, 3.2589
11:27-28	3.2438, 3.2441, 3.2511, 4.2920	12:4-7 12:5	3.2429 3.2468
11:28	3.1971	12:6-7	3.2589
11:29	1.706, 3.2510, 3.2541, 4.3429	12:7-8 12:8	3.2480 1.491, 2.1341
11:30	2.1222, 2.1341, 3.2478	12:8-9	1.201, 2.1279, 2.1567, 3.2145, 3.2478, 3.2487, 3.2490, 3.2503
11:31	1.102, 1.415		1.178, 2.1341, 2.1369, 3.2478, 3.2482, 3.2483
11:31-32	2.1048, 2.1222, 3.2490, 3.2503, 3.2505, 3.2510, 4.2984	12:10	4.3125, 4.3127, 4.3265
11:33	1.178	12:11	4.3458
11:34-36	1.24		1.646
11:37	3.2764	12:11-12	3.1925
11:37-38	1.24, 3.2435, 3.2810	12:13 12:13-15	1.24, 2.974, 2.1340
11:37-52	2.1621, 3.2094, 4.3343	12:13-21	4.3368 4.3023 4.3307
11:38	2.1209, 3.2752	12:13-37	4.3023
11:38-52	3.2592	12:15	1.657, 3.1923, 3.2308, 3.2514, 3.2551, 3.2553, 3.2555, 3.2569, 4.3298
11:39	3.2808, 3.2816	12:16
11:39-40	1.178, 3.2765	12:16-20
11:39-41	2.1147, 3.2727	12:16-21
11:39-51	2.1348, 2.1369
11:39-52	1.24
11:41	1.24, 3.2740, 4.3463

12:18-23	4.3368	12:(57)58-59	4.3141
12:19-20	3.2589	13	3.2225, 4.3190,
12:20	1.647		4.3193, 4.3198
12:20-21	3.2494	13:1	3.2354, 3.2355
12:21	3.2588, 4.3023	13:1-3	4.3231
12:22	1.356, 2.1223	13:1-5	1.493, 3.1925,
12:22-28	1.356		3.2030, 3.2882
12:22-31	1.24, 1.178,	13:1-9	3.1910
	2.1125, 2.1225,	13:2-3	4.3193
	4.3245, 4.3246	13:3	2.1219, 4.3191
12:22-34	4.3342	13:6	4.3307
12:24	2.1225, 4.3299	13:6-9	2.1152, 3.1923,
12:24-28	3.2589		3.2554, 3.2842,
12:28	1.356, 1.725,		3.2882, 4.3023,
	2.1225, 3.1971		4.3026
12:31	3.2588, 4.3206	13:10	2.1224, 3.2613,
12:32	3.1923, 3.1925,		3.2615, 4.3105,
	3.2494		4.3125, 4.3127,
12:32-34	3.2255		4.3128
12:33	1.178, 3.2047,	13:10-16	3.2751
	3.2255, 3.2823	13:10-17	1.24, 3.1901,
12:33-34	2.1125, 2.1721,		3.1903, 3.1923,
	3.2429, 3.2514		3.2582, 3.2591,
12:34	2.1480, 3.2047,		3.2598, 3.2608,
	3.2823		3.2615, 4.3074,
12:35-37	4.3368		4.3148
12:35-38	3.1908, 3.1911,	13:11	3.2714, 3.2859
	3.1914, 3.2490,	13:11-13	3.2615, 3.2717
	3.2553, 3.2880	13:11-15	3.2591
12:36-38	3.2485	13:13	2.1250, 3.2609
12:37	3.2568	13:14	3.2608, 3.2611,
12:39	3.1944, 3.2042,		3.2613
	4.3041	13:14-16	3.2615
12:39-40	1.178, 2.1483,	13:14-17	4.3128
	3.2192, 3.2478,	13:15	4.3128, 4.3149
	3.2485, 4.3451	13:15-17	1.24
12:40	2.973, 2.1341,	13:16	3.2032, 3.2468,
	3.2042, 3.2490		3.2601, 3.2613,
12:41	4.3307		3.2622, 3.2625,
12:41-46	3.2485		3.2627, 3.2858
12:42	3.2560	13:18	4.3206, 4.3207
12:42-46	3.2553, 3.2564,	13:18-19	1.178, 3.2551,
	3.2570		3.2553, 3.2566,
12:45	4.3309		3.2624, 3.2762,
12:47-48	3.1923, 3.1925,		4.3210
	3.2490	13:19	4.3334
12:49	3.1870, 3.2077	13:20	3.2560, 4.3206
12:49-50	1.52, 1.358	13:20-21	1.178, 1.657,
12:51	3.2868		3.2551, 3.2553,
12:51-53	1.178, 2.1127,		3.2566, 3.2624,
	3.2441, 4.2967		4.3210
12:52	1.359	13:21	3.2468
12:54-55	2.1480	13:21-22	1.78
12:57-59	3.2311	13:22-24	3.2277

13:24-30	3.2880	14:7-14	3.1923
13:25-27	3.2133	14:11-32	3.2556
13:25-28	3.2490, 3.2494	14:12-14	1.24, 2.1264,
13:26	3.2949		3.2514, 3.2732
13:28	4.3206, 4.3214	14:15	4.3208, 4.3214
13:28-29	1.135, 2.1213,	14:15-23	3.2882
	3.2624, 3.2796	14:15-24	1.24, 1.178,
13:29	1.767, 3.2568,		3.1894, 3.2884
	4.3208, 4.3214	14:16-21	3.1909
13:29-30	1.345	14:16-24	1.345, 3.2554,
13:30	1.24, 3.2513,		3.2555, 3.2556,
	4.2963		3.2561, 3.2732
13:31	2.1231, 3.2448,	14:21	2.1264
	3.2451	14:23	1.24
13:31-32	1.569	14:25	4.2969
13:31-33	3.1925, 4.3322	14:25-26	1.178, 3.2765
13:32	1.22, 1.24,	14:25-33	3.2897
	2.1480, 3.2541,	14:26	1.421, 1.674,
	3.2859, 3.2860,		2.1223, 2.1480,
	3.2866		3.2441, 3.2483,
13:33	1.351, 1.415,		4.2970, 4.3052,
	2.1221, 3.2403,	14:26-27	4.3055, 4.3364
	3.2448, 3.2476		1.24, 3.2501,
13:34	2.1153, 2.1220,		4.2969, 4.2971
	2.1221, 3.2476	14:27	1.178, 2.1223
13:34-35	1.416, 2.1048,	14:28	3.2560, 4.3036,
	2.1152, 2.1193,		4.3044
	2.1213, 2.1242,	14:28-30	3.2628, 4.3043
	3.1897, 3.2638,	14:28-32	4.3034, 4.3037
	3.2672, 3.2673,	14:28-33	1.24, 3.1923,
	3.2736, 3.2754,		3.2501, 3.2554
	3.2765, 3.2882,	14:29-30	4.3043
	4.3441	14:31	3.2560, 4.3035,
13:35	3.2494, 3.2673		4.3044
14:1	3.2435	14:31-32	3.2628, 4.3043
14:1-6	1.24, 3.1901,	14:32	4.3043
	3.1903, 3.1909,	14:33	4.3298
	3.2598, 3.2608,	15	1.797, 2.1087,
	3.2615, 3.2751,		2.1206, 3.1910,
	4.3074, 4.3148,		3.2223
	4.3195	15:1	1.647, 3.2805
14:1-14	4.3343	15:1-2	3.2497
14:1-24	1.79, 2.1479	15:1-3	3.1910
14:4	3.2609	15:2	2.1212
14:5	2.1351, 2.1699,	15:3	3.1910, 4.3307
	3.1909, 3.2599,	15:3-7	1.178, 3.1910
	3.2604, 3.2613,	15:3-10	3.2884
	3.2615, 3.2616,	15:4	3.2560
	3.2622, 3.2625,	15:4-6	4.3023, 4.3024
	3.2627, 3.2628,	15:4-7	3.2553, 3.2559,
	3.2629, 3.2630,		3.2562, 3.2565,
	4.3149		3.2628
14:7	4.3307	15:4-10	4.3337
14:7-11	3.2732	15:5	3.1910

15:6-7	3.1910		3.1969, 3.2468,
15:7	2.1219		3.2588, 3.2705,
15:8	3.2560		4.3269, 4.3300
15:8-10	3.1923, 3.2554,	16:14-15	1.24, 3.1925
	3.2565, 3.2628	16:16	1.352, 3.2498,
15:10	2.1219		3.2499, 3.2624,
15:11-24	3.2556		3.2745, 4.3206,
15:11-32	1.339, 1.647,		4.3210, 4.3211,
	3.1879, 3.1894,		4.3339
	3.1923, 3.2308,	16:16-17	2.1119, 2.1480
	3.2551, 3.2554,	16:16-18	3.2746
	3.2732, 3.2902,	16:17	3.1890, 3.2745,
	4.3023		3.2746, 4.3336
15:13	4.3023	16:18	1.24, 1.173,
15:17	4.3023		1.315, 1.319,
15:18	3.2566		1.679, 2.1140,
15:18-19	3.2565		3.1891, 3.1941,
15:20	3.2564		3.2746, 4.3399
15:20-23	3.2884	16:18-19	4.3151
15:21	3.2565, 3.2566	16:19-31	1.11, 1.24, 1.657,
15:22	4.3339		2.1087, 2.1340,
15:23	3.2277		3.1923, 3.2010,
15:23-24	1.647		3.2013, 3.2261,
15:25-30	1.647		3.2308, 3.2551,
15:25-32	3.2513, 3.2556,		3.2554, 3.2566,
	4.3339, 4.3343		3.2569, 3.2570,
15:29-30	1.647		3.2732, 3.2885,
15:31-32	3.2565		4.3191, 4.3295,
15:32	1.647		4.3301
16	4.3198	16:22-23	3.2276
16:1	2.1257	16:25	4.3191
16:1-2	3.2822	16:28	4.3297
16:1-3	3.2312	17:1	3.1944
16:1-7	1.78, 4.3023,	17:2	3.2127
	4.3024	17:3-4	1.24, 3.1910
16:1-8	1.357, 3.2308,	17:6	1.356, 3.2501,
	3.2311, 3.2554,		3.2511, 4.3399
	3.2881	17:7	3.2560
16:1-9	1.24, 1.647,	17:7-10	3.1908, 3.1923,
	3.2739, 3.2822		3.2513, 3.2554,
16:1-13	3.1908, 3.1923		3.2628
16:4	3.2822	17:11-17	3.1923
16:5-7	3.2822, 4.3301	17:11-19	1.379, 1.381,
16:7	1.402		1.382, 3.1901,
16:8	1.648, 3.2822		3.1903, 3.2462,
16:8-12	4.3024		3.2713, 3.2715,
16:8-13	1.78		4.3091, 4.3195
16:8b	2.1257	17:12-19	3.2673, 3.2816
16:9	3.2468, 4.3301	17:13	2.1474, 4.3195
16:10	3.2131	17:14	2.1213, 3.2715,
16:10-12	1.24, 4.3301		4.3195
16:11	3.2468	17:15	3.2715
16:13	1.24, 1.178,	17:17	3.2715
	2.1125, 2.1206,	17:19	3.2511

17:20	3.2881, 4.3206	18:19	3.2702, 3.2703,
17:20-21	1.594, 2.1089,		4.3270
	3.1901, 3.1923,	18:20	4.3141, 4.3274
	3.1925, 4.3372	18:22	2.1721, 3.2514,
17:21	1.349, 1.350,		3.2823, 4.3273,
	3.2117, 3.2499,		4.3274
	3.2510, 4.3073	18:22-23	3.2501
17:22	3.2478, 4.3333	18:23	3.2111, 4.3270,
17:22-37	3.1916		4.3274
17:23	1.178, 1.179	18:23-34	4.3024
17:24	2.1341, 3.2478,	18:23-35	3.2311
	3.2485	18:24	4.3207, 4.3214
17:24-25	3.2486	18:24-25	3.2504
17:25	3.2478	18:24-27	4.3277
17:26	2.1341, 3.2488	18:25	2.1265, 3.2808,
17:26-27	3.1901, 3.1911		4.3207, 4.3214,
17:26-29	3.2485		4.3300
17:27-28	4.3309	18:25-27	3.2513
17:28-29	3.1910, 3.1911	18:27	3.2494
17:30	3.2478, 3.2488	18:28-30	1.771, 3.2441,
17:31	3.1916		4.2963
17:33	1.353, 2.1359,	18:29	4.2965, 4.3208
	3.2031, 3.2503	18:31	2.1341
17:34-35	1.178, 3.2494	18:31-33	3.2478, 3.2486
18:1	4.3307	18:31-35	4.3390
18:1-7	3.2593	18:33	3.2340
18:1-8	3.1923, 3.2879	18:35-43	3.2522
18:2-5	4.3023	18:42	3.2511
18:2-8	1.657, 3.2554	19:1-9	1.420
18:3	4.3273	19:1-10	2.1212, 2.1340,
18:6	2.1257, 4.3023		3.1925, 3.2497,
18:6-8	4.3024		3.2591, 3.2803
18:7	2.1211, 3.2347	19:1-11	1.273
18:7-8	3.2494	19:2	4.3299
18:8	3.2478	19:7	3.2731
18:9	4.3023, 4.3307	19:8	1.646
18:9-14	1.24, 1.657,	19:9-10	1.646
	3.1923, 3.2513,	19:9a	1.345
	3.2565, 3.2569,	19:10	3.2478
	3.2592, 3.2767,	19:11	1.28, 3.2568,
	3.2805, 4.3281		3.2880, 4.3208,
18:10-13	1.272, 4.3023		4.3307
18:10-14	3.2551, 3.2554,	19:11-27	1.197, 1.357,
	3.2732, 4.3191		2.1212, 3.2881
18:12	4.3327	19:11-28	3.1911
18:14	3.2565	19:12	3.1911
18:15-17	1.656	19:12-27	3.2554, 3.2570
18:16	4.3207	19:22-23	4.3299
18:16-17	3.2504	19:25	4.3299
18:17	3.2513, 4.3207	19:26	1.178
18:18	4.3270	19:27	4.3299
18:18-19	3.2511	19:28-38	1.659
18:18-23	4.3269	19:28-44	3.2340
18:18-27	4.2953	19:40	3.2474

19:41–44	2.1213, 2.1242, 3.1915, 3.2474, 3.2638, 3.2736, 3.2882, 3.2884	21:7–9 21:9 21:10–15 21:10–19	2.1813 3.1916 3.1916 4.2966
19:42–44	3.2160, 4.3322	21:11	3.1916
19:43	4.3333	21:12	4.3125
19:43–44	3.1915	21:12–16	3.2403
19:44	2.1207, 2.1221	21:14–15	4.3127
19:45	3.2334, 3.2818	21:18	3.1916
19:45–46	1.136, 3.2029, 3.2340, 3.2400	21:18–20 21:20	3.1916 3.2446, 4.3147
19:45–48	3.2638	21:20–24	1.442, 2.1213, 3.2160
19:46	3.2590, 3.2818		3.1916
20:1–8	2.1751, 3.2510	21:21	3.1916
20:1–18	2.1635	21:21–22	3.1916
20:1–21:4	3.2340	21:21–26	3.1916
20:2–26	3.2462	21:22	3.1916
20:4	3.2482	21:23	3.1916
20:9–15	4.3024	21:24	4.3441
20:9–16	3.2843	21:31	4.3208
20:9–18	4.3025	21:33	1.416
20:9–19	2.1093, 2.1152, 3.2553	21:34–36 21:36	3.1916, 3.2879 3.2478, 3.2488, 3.2880
20:13–15	3.2488		3.2347
20:18	2.1341	21:37	3.2637
20:19	1.437	21:37–38	4.3145
20:20–26	1.379, 1.381, 1.382, 1.388, 1.731, 3.2402, 4.3147	22 22–23 22:1	3.2384 1.141, 3.2335, 3.2342, 3.2343
20:23	4.2924		3.2384
20:24	1.388	22:1–71	1.659
20:27–28	3.2260	22:1–23:56	1.141
20:27–38	2.1510	22:2	3.2446, 3.2858
20:28	2.1341	22:3	3.2858
20:32	2.1288	22:3–4	3.2335, 3.2342, 3.2349, 3.2468
20:34–36	3.2898	22:7	3.2340
20:37	1.767		1.141
20:38	3.2262	22:7–8	2.1332
20:41	1.157	22:7–14	1.674, 3.2335, 3.2342, 3.2468
20:41–44	3.2437	22:7–38	3.2335, 3.2374
20:45–47	3.1896	22:8	3.2335, 3.2342
20:46	4.3125		3.1917
21	3.1915, 3.1916, 3.2225, 4.3280	22:11 22:13	3.2340
21:1	3.2453, 4.3280	22:13–16	3.2340
21:1–4	3.2637, 3.2673, 3.2807, 3.2818, 4.3279, 4.3401	22:14 22:14–30 22:15	3.2340 1.141, 2.1333, 3.2342, 4.3316
21:2	4.3280		1.141, 2.1333
21:5–6	3.2160		1.345, 4.3219
21:5–7	3.1916	22:15–17	1.340, 1.353, 3.1917
21:5–36	3.2340	22:15–18
21:6	3.2638, 3.2652, 4.3333	22:15–20

22:16	1.141, 2.1333, 3.2568, 4.3208, 4.3214	22:44-49 22:46-47 22:46-65	3.1917 3.1917 3.2340
22:17	2.1333	22:47-54	3.1917
22:18	1.136, 4.3208	22:48	3.2478
22:18-25	3.1917	22:49	2.1335
22:19	1.141, 3.2041, 3.2342	22:49-51 22:50-56	3.1901 3.1917
22:19-20	1.136, 1.137, 1.430, 1.659, 2.1333, 3.2191	22:51 22:54-62 22:54-65	3.1886 3.1917 3.2340
22:19b-20	2.1333	22:61	4.3330
22:20	1.138, 1.140, 2.1242, 3.2041	22:63 22:63-64	3.2392 3.1917
22:21-23	3.1917	22:63-65	3.2400
22:22	2.1341, 3.2127, 3.2478	22:64	2.1222, 3.2403, 3.2448
22:24	2.1334	22:65	3.2392
22:24-26	1.24	22:66	2.1740, 3.2340
22:24-27	1.771	22:66-70	3.2402
22:24-30	3.1917	22:66-71	1.648, 3.1917, 3.2018
22:25	3.2868
22:26-32	3.1917	22:67-70	3.2474, 3.2515
22:27	2.1087, 3.2478, 3.2514	22:69	3.2398, 3.2469, 3.2478
22:28-30	1.24, 1.264, 1.503, 2.1193, 3.2446, 3.2295, 3.2844	22:70 23 23:1-5	3.2475 3.2399 3.1917, 3.2400, 3.2401
22:28-31	2.1044	23:1-7	3.2358
22:29	4.3208, 4.3220	23:1-14	4.3180
22:29-30	1.356, 2.1334, 3.2505	23:1-25 23:2	3.2340, 3.2353 2.1191, 3.2396, 3.2399, 3.2400, 3.2401, 3.2536
22:30	1.423, 2.1211, 2.1341, 2.1374, 3.2495, 3.2797, 3.2882, 4.3208, 4.3214, 4.3309	23:2-4	1.379, 1.381, 1.382, 1.389, 1.731, 3.2463
22:31	3.2445, 3.2468, 3.2858, 3.2873	23:3	3.2028, 3.2475, 3.2515
22:31-32	3.2858	23:4	1.648
22:31-33	3.2858	23:4-5	3.2400
22:31-34	3.1917	23:5	3.2396, 3.2401, 3.2536, 4.3042
22:32	2.1334
22:33-34	3.1917	23:6-12	1.569, 3.1917, 3.2016, 3.2086, 3.2353
22:35-38	1.24, 3.1917
22:36	2.1163, 2.1163
22:36-38	4.3041	23:7-11	2.1231
22:37	2.1137	23:8-12	3.2358
22:38	1.105, 2.1163	23:9	3.2406
22:39	2.1481	23:11	3.2392
22:39-43	3.1917	23:13-25	3.2359
22:39-46	3.1917, 3.2404	23:14	1.648, 2.1191, 3.2399, 3.2536
22:43-44	3.2883

23:21	4.3330		3.2403, 3.2448,
23:22	1.648		4.3371
23:24	1.648	24:19–21	3.2408
23:26–54	3.2340	24:21	1.91
23:27	4.3330	24:24	3.1918, 3.2026,
23:27–31	2.1213		3.2419
23:28–31	3.2160	24:25–26	3.2423
23:29	4.3333	24:25–27	1.648
23:30	2.1137	24:26	3.2481
23:31	1.106	24:26–27	3.2407
23:33	3.2389	24:27	3.2264
23:33–49	2.1327	24:28–30	3.1923
23:34	1.314, 2.1327,	24:30	2.1333
	3.2593	24:34	3.2419, 3.2421
23:35–37	3.2392	24:34–36	3.2042
23:38	3.2392	24:36	3.1904
23:40–43	3.2447	24:36–41	3.1923
23:42	4.3214, 4.3220	24:36–43	3.1922, 3.1923,
23:43	3.2261		3.2026
23:44	3.2150	24:36–49	3.2421
23:45	3.2334	24:39	2.1309
23:46	1.313, 2.1137,	24:39–43	3.2146
	3.2593, 4.3027	24:41	3.1923
23:47	3.2762	24:44–47	3.2264, 3.2423
23:49	2.1255	24:44–49	1.648, 3.1922,
23:50–51	2.1740, 4.3046		3.1923
23:54	3.2340	24:46	3.2290, 3.2481
23:55	2.964, 2.1255,	24:47	3.1923
	2.1256	24:47–48	3.2420
23:59	4.3042	24:47–49	3.1923
24	2.1679, 3.1917,	24:49	3.1923, 3.2421,
	3.2417, 3.2419		3.2442
24:1–9	3.1919	24:50–53	3.1922
24:1–11	2.964, 3.1919	24:52	3.1923
24:1–23	3.2446	24:52–53	3.2421
24:1–35	3.2340
24:1–53	1.659	Q
24:4	1.468	3:2	1.265
24:4–46 (48)	3.1923	3:7	2.1778
24:6–7	3.2420	3:7–9	1.265, 2.1747,
24:6–8	3.2423		3.1855, 3.1869
24:7	3.2478	3:7b–9	2.1765
24:10	3.2439, 3.2869	3:8	2.1762, 2.1763,
24:10–11	1.468		2.1766
24:11	3.2417	3:8a	2.1766
24:12	3.1917, 3.1918,	3:8b	2.1766, 2.1770
	3.1919, 3.2026,	3:9	2.1766, 2.1768,
	3.2417		2.1770, 3.2879
24:13–27	1.122	3:9b	2.1765
24:13–33	3.2420, 3.2421	3:16	2.1759, 2.1772
24:13–35	1.298, 3.1922	3:16a	2.1772
24:17–19	3.1923	3:16–17	1.265, 2.1747,
24:18	1.425, 1.432		2.1772, 2.1773,
24:19	1.69, 1.467,		3.1869
	2.875, 2.1222,	3:16b	2.1772

3:16b-17	2.1765, 2.1768	7:31-35	1.265, 2.1747,
3:17	2.1768, 3.2880		2.1747, 2.1782
4:1-13	1.14, 3.1977	7:33	2.1774
4:16	1.467	7:33-34	2.1263
6:20	1.260, 3.2314,	7:34	1.273, 3.2886
	4.3205, 4.3206,	7:35	1.466, 2.1766
	4.3215, 4.3219	9:58	3.2886
6:20b	1.256, 1.257,	9:59-60	1.288, 1.468
	1.260, 1.261,	10:1-16	3.1855
	1.262, 1.504	10:2	1.771, 3.2880
6:20b-23	1.261	10:3	4.3201
6:20b-35	1.261	10:3-12	1.448
6:21-25	2.1125	10:4	4.3213
6:27-28	1.473	10:5-7	1.463
6:27-29	2.1130	10:7	1.272
6:27-35	1.261	10:8	4.2985
6:27-38	2.1145	10:8-9	1.472
6:28-28	3.1942	10:9	1.471, 2.1273,
6:35	1.261, 1.473,		3.2879, 4.3205,
	2.1130, 4.3201		4.3206, 4.3211,
6:36	1.465		4.3213, 4.3217
6:37-38	2.1130, 3.1869	10:9-15	3.1869
6:39	1.254	10:10-11	4.2985
6:40	1.448, 2.1256	10:11	4.3201
6:41-42	2.1130, 4.3201	10:12	1.265, 3.1869,
6:42	1.464		3.1870, 4.2985,
6:43-44	4.3201		4.2986
6:46-49	3.2902	10:13	1.471
6:47-49	3.1869, 3.2880,	10:13-14	2.1279
	3.2882, 4.3201	10:13-15	1.265, 2.1248,
7:1-10	1.464, 1.470		3.1869, 3.2880,
7:18	2.1256		4.2980, 4.2982,
7:18-19	2.1772, 2.1773		4.3007
7:18-22	1.265	10:16	1.265, 1.448,
7:18-23	2.1270, 2.1747,		4.2982
	2.1783, 3.2881	10:17	4.3202
7:18-35	3.1855	10:21	1.465
7:22	1.471, 1.474,	10:21-22	4.2982
	2.1270, 2.1271,	10:22	1.465, 2.1206
	4.2926, 4.3215	10:23-24	1.70, 2.1270,
7:22-25	1.70		3.2881
7:24	2.1762, 2.1774,	10:50	3.1969
	4.3201	10:51	3.1969
7:24-28	2.1747, 2.1773,	11:2	1.465, 2.1249,
	2.1782		2.1270, 4.3205,
7:24b-26	2.1773		4.3206, 4.3211
7:25	2.1774	11:2-4	1.472
7:27	1.70, 2.1120,	11:9-13	1.472
	2.1777	11:11-12	1.465
7:28	1.472, 2.1773,	11:11-13	4.3219
	3.2881, 3.2882,	11:13	1.465
	4.3205, 4.3206	11:13-15	4.2983
7:29	1.70	11:14	4.2925, 4.2926,
7:29-30	2.1747		4.2929, 4.2930,
7:31	4.2924, 4.2940		4.2940

11:14-15	1.470, 4.2932		4.2924, 4.2927,
11:14-16	4.2922		4.2931, 4.2984,
11:14,17-20	4.2923, 4.2935,		4.2986
	4.2936	11:32	4.2924
11:14-23	4.2912	11:33	4.3201
11:14-26	4.2925	11:39-41	1.268
11:14-32	4.2923	11:47-52	1.70
11:15	4.2925	11:49	1.466
11:15-16	4.2923	11:49-51	1.265, 3.1869
11:15-23	4.2931	11:50-51	3.2880, 4.2940
11:16	2.1782, 4.2922,	11:51	3.1870, 4.2924
	4.2925	11:52	1.178, 1.472,
11:17-18	4.2920, 4.2923,		4.3205, 4.3206
	4.2925, 4.2939,	12:2-9	1.448
	4.2940	12:3	1.254
11:17-26	4.2923, 4.2932	12:5	3.2880
11:18	4.2937	12:6	4.3201
11:18-19	4.2923, 4.2925	12:7	4.3202
11:19	2.1121, 3.1869,	12:8	3.1869, 3.2880,
	4.2923, 4.2927,		4.2922
	4.2933, 4.2940	12:8-9	1.70, 4.2922
11:19-20	4.2921, 4.2923,	12:9	3.1869
	4.2925, 4.2937,	12:10	4.2921, 4.2922
	4.2939, 4.2940	12:11-12	1.448
11:19-23	3.2880	12:22	4.3261
11:20	1.281, 1.472,	12:22-31	2.1125
	1.503, 2.1249,	12:23	4.3261
	2.1270, 2.1273,	12:24	1.465, 4.3202,
	4.2923, 4.2925,		4.3261
	4.2933, 4.2934,	12:25	4.3261
	4.3205, 4.3206,	12:26-28	4.3261
	4.3211, 4.3212,	12:27	1.456, 4.3202
	4.3217	12:27-28	1.465
11:21-22	3.2898, 4.2921,	12:28	4.3202
	4.2923, 4.2925,	12:30	1.465, 1.474,
	4.2939, 4.2940,		4.3261
	4.2941, 4.2943	12:31	1.473, 4.3205,
11:23	3.2898, 4.2922,		4.3206, 4.3212,
	4.2923, 4.2925		4.3213, 4.3261
11:23-25	4.2925	12:33-34	2.1125
11:24-26	3.1869, 4.2922,	12:39-40	3.1869, 3.2880
	4.2923, 4.2931,	12:40	1.279
	4.2943	12:42-46	3.1869, 3.1870,
11:26	4.2931		3.2879, 3.2880
11:27-28	4.2920	12:49	3.1869, 3.1870
11:29	4.2924	12:51	1.448
11:29-30	1.70, 2.1782,	12:51-52	1.468
	4.2923, 4.2924	12:51-53	1.178, 2.1127
11:29-32	4.2923, 4.2940	12:53	1.448, 1.465
11:30	4.2934	12:54-55	4.3202
11:31	1.466, 4.2924,	12:58-59	3.1869, 3.2881
	4.2926	13:18	4.3205, 4.3206
11:31-32	1.265, 1.465,	13:18-19	1.178, 1.272,
	3.1869, 3.2880,		1.273, 1.465,
	3.2881, 4.2923,		2.1249, 4.3202

13:18–21	3.2881		1.504, 3.2790,
13:20	4.3205, 4.3206		3.2880, 3.2891,
13:20–21	1.465, 4.3202		3.2898
13:27–30	3.2880	22:30	2.1256
13:28	4.3205, 4.3206, 4.3219	John
13:28–29	1.265, 3.1870, 3.2790, 3.2884, 3.2892, 3.2898	1–3 1:1 1:1–3	1.444 4.3146 3.2588
13:34	2.1119	1:1–14	2.967, 2.1208
13:34–35	1.70, 1.265, 1.452	1:1–18	1.298, 2.1683, 2.1753, 3.1953
14:5	2.1266	1:3	2.967
14:16–24	1.268	1:6–8	2.1751, 3.2004,
14:26	1.465, 1.468, 2.1146	1:13	3.2442, 4.3320
14:26–27	1.448	1:13–14	2.1349
14:34–35	4.3202	1:14	2.967, 2.1088,
15:4–5	1.465, 4.3202		2.1215, 3.2016,
15:7	1.465, 4.3202		3.2038
15:8–10	1.465	1:14–15	3.2004
16:13	2.1125, 3.2705	1:14b	1.100
16:16	1.473, 2.1747, 2.1773, 2.1782, 3.2881, 4.3205, 4.3206, 4.3211, 4.3212	1:15 1:17 1:18	2.1751, 3.2004, 3.2323, 3.2442, 4.3428 4.3151 3.2034, 4.3146
16:16–17	2.1260	1:19–21	3.1962
16:17	1.497	1:19–23	3.2005
16:18	1.272, 1.273, 2.1266	1:19–28	2.1751, 3.2201, 3.2278, 3.2442,
17:20	4.3205, 4.3206		4.3320
17:20–21	1.473	1:19–34	3.2030
17:21	4.3205, 4.3206	1:22–23	2.936
17:22–37	3.2880	1:23	2.1774, 2.1776,
17:23	1.178, 1.179		4.3317
17:23–24	1.265, 4.3202	1:23–24	3.2029
17:24	1.279, 3.2879, 3.2886	1:25–51 1:26	3.2442 2.936
17:26–27	1.265, 3.1869	1:26–27	3.2029
17:26–30	1.265, 1.279, 3.2879	1:28	1.444, 2.1781, 3.2033, 4.3126,
17:27	1.465		4.3318
17:33	1.448	1:29	1.345, 1.562,
17:34	1.465		3.2023, 4.3324
17:34–35	1.178, 1.265, 3.1869, 3.2879	1:29–34	1.311, 2.1751, 3.2201
17:35	1.465	1:30	3.2029, 3.2323,
17:37	1.265, 3.2879, 4.3202	1:30–34	4.3428
19:12–16	1.265	1:31	3.2029
19:24	1.265		3.2005, 3.2029, 3.2030
22:28–30	1.264, 1.265, 1.274, 1.503,	1:31–34 1:32	2.1769 2.1292, 3.2029

1:32-34	1.563	2:17	2.1137, 3.2007, 3.2029
1:33	2.1769, 3.2029
1:34	3.2029	2:18-22	3.2510, 3.2767
1:35-37	3.2442	2:19	1.503, 2.1196, 2.1213, 2.1215, 3.2032, 3.2400, 3.2638, 3.2648, 3.2650, 3.2651, 3.2653, 3.2891, 4.3091
1:35-51	2.1255, 2.1292, 2.1751, 2.1753, 3.2201, 3.2441
1:38	1.415, 2.1223, 3.2034
1:40	3.2007
1:40-42	3.2443	2:19-20	3.2334
1:41	3.2007	2:19-21	3.2661, 3.2754
1:43	3.2443	2:20	3.2034, 3.2354
1:43-48	3.2007	2:21	3.2016, 3.2033, 3.2650, 3.2851
1:44	2.1458, 3.2008, 4.2995, 4.3007	2:21-22	1.503
1:44-46	3.2443	2:22	1.686, 2.959, 3.2007, 3.2015, 3.2650
1:45	2.958, 3.2011, 3.2033, 3.2376, 4.3411	2:23	3.2335, 3.2339, 3.2542
1:45-49	3.2007
1:45-51	4.3096	2:23-25	3.2010
1:46	2.959, 3.2033, 3.2369, 4.3409	2:24	3.2511
		2:26	1.121
1:47	2.1355	3	4.3095
1:49	2.1223	3:1	3.2034
1:51	3.2478	3:1-10	1.256, 3.2010, 3.2025
2	3.2232, 4.2956
2:1-5	3.2011	3:2	2.1223, 2.1474
2:1-11	1.24, 2.1751, 3.1959, 3.2009, 3.2712, 4.3096, 4.3320	3:3	1.61, 1.272, 2.1090, 3.2032, 3.2139, 4.3208
2:1-12	3.2439	3:4	3.2139
2:3-4:12	1.735	3:5	1.61, 1.272, 2.1090, 3.2032, 3.2139, 4.3208, 4.3214, 4.3327
2:6	1.120, 1.465, 2.1697, 3.2034
2:11	3.2010, 3.2038
2:12	3.2439	3:10	3.2034
2:13	3.2335, 3.2336, 3.2337, 3.2338, 3.2339, 3.2343, 3.2354, 3.2359	3:12-13	3.2145
		3:13-15	3.2478, 4.3366
		3:16	2.967
		3:17-18	3.2503
2:13-15	3.1962	3:18	2.1090
2:13-16	3.2400	3:22	3.1962, 3.2004, 3.2111, 3.2130
2:13-17	1.136
2:13-22	3.2014, 3.2016, 3.2201, 3.2638, 3.2644, 3.2650	3:22-4:3	2.1751
		3:22-24	4.3318
		3:22-30	2.1753, 3.2201, 4.3320
2:13-3:21	3.2333
2:14-15	3.2334	3:23	2.1756, 2.1781, 3.2033, 3.2201
2:14-16	3.2644
2:14-22	1.320, 3.2029	3:24	3.2004
2:16	2.1305, 3.2029, 3.2646, 3.2754	3:25	2.1762
		3:25-30	3.1962, 3.2442

3:26	2.1223, 3.1962, 3.2004, 3.2034, 3.2130, 3.2839	4:46-54	1.379, 1.382, 1.726, 3.1959, 3.2462, 4.3195
3:26-27	2.1756	4:48	1.453, 3.2010
3:29	4.3316, 4.3317, 4.3319, 4.3320, 4.3321, 4.3329	4:54	3.2010, 3.2542
		5	3.2005, 3.2009, 3.2336, 3.2337, 3.2615, 4.3146, 4.3151
3:30	2.1756, 3.2005
3:31	3.2145
3:33	2.1351	5:1	3.2034, 3.2335, 3.2337, 3.2338, 3.2339, 3.2359
3:35-36	2.1206
3:36	3.2503
4	3.2012, 4.3151	5:1-9	3.1959, 3.1963
4:1	3.2004, 3.2130, 3.2442	5:1-18	4.3074, 4.3150
		5:2	3.2034, 3.2201
4:1-2	3.2839	5:2-3a	1.738
4:1-3	1.24, 2.1753, 2.1756	5:2-9	1.24, 3.2598, 3.2608
4:1-38	1.24	5:2-18	4.3027
4:1-42	2.967, 3.2814	5:3b-4	1.738
4:2	1.24, 3.1962, 3.2004, 3.2130	5:5	2.1223
		5:6	1.312
4:3-6	3.2228	5:8	3.2030, 3.2609
4:4-26	1.379, 1.381, 1.382, 1.726, 3.2462	5:10	2.1699, 4.3149
		5:14	3.2030, 3.2334
4:4-42	3.1964	5:15-16	3.2598, 3.2608
4:5-6	3.2033	5:16	2.1700, 3.2608
4:6	2.1088	5:16-20	3.2751
4:6-7	3.2033	5:17	2.1699
4:9	2.1632, 3.2012, 3.2034, 3.2038	5:17-18	2.1088
		5:17-20	3.2768
4:9-12	4.3362	5:18	3.2007, 3.2034, 4.3146
4:16-19	4.3151	5:19-47	2.1206
4:19	2.1193, 2.1222, 3.2005, 3.2403, 3.2448, 4.3371	5:24	1.343, 3.2503
		5:27	3.2476, 3.2477, 3.2478
4:20	3.2033	5:33-36	2.1751, 2.1756
4:21-23	4.3238	5:36	4.3429
4:21-24	3.2754, 4.3091	5:42	3.1964
4:22	3.2034, 4.3320	6	3.2005, 3.2336, 3.2337
4:25	1.415
4:27	3.2012	6:1	3.2006, 4.3234
4:31	2.1223	6:1-14	3.2337
4:35	1.771, 3.2337, 3.2338, 3.2339	6:1-15	3.1999, 3.2005, 3.2028, 4.3027
4:36-53	1.79	6:1-21	3.1959, 3.2006
4:38	2.1781	6:4	3.2335, 3.2336, 3.2337, 3.2338, 3.2339, 3.2343, 3.2354, 3.2359
4:42	2.958, 2.967, 2.1088
4:44	2.1191, 2.1219, 3.2031, 3.2476	6:5	3.2007, 4.3096
4:46	3.2086	6:5-21	1.75

6:6	1.312	7:2	3.1998, 3.2034,
6:7	3.2007, 4.3096		3.2339, 3.2359
6:8	3.2007	7:3	3.2439
6:14	3.2005, 3.2403, 3.2448, 3.2522	7:5	1.735, 2.1230, 4.2962
6:14–15	2.1193, 3.2006	7:8–9	4.3237
6:15	3.2020, 3.2475, 3.2510	7:10	3.2011, 3.2339, 3.2359, 3.2439
6:16–21	3.2009, 4.3027	7:11	3.2399
6:17	3.2006	7:11–12	2.1191, 2.1193
6:20	3.2029	7:12	2.883, 2.1433, 3.2536
6:24	3.2006		1.736
6:24–25	4.3126	7:12b	3.2334, 3.2339, 3.2637
6:25	2.1223	7:14	3.2033, 4.3140
6:26–59	4.3389		3.2007, 4.3151
6:27	3.2478	7:15	4.3074
6:30	3.2510, 3.2541	7:19	3.2598, 3.2608
6:30–58	1.139	7:19–23	3.2859, 4.3180
6:31	2.1137	7:19–24	4.3150
6:31–51	3.2034	7:20	4.3151
6:35	1.61, 3.1999, 4.3297	7:21–23	2.1700, 3.2608, 4.3151
6:38	3.2145	7:22–23	3.2536
6:41	3.2011	7:23	3.2481
6:42	3.2011, 3.2376, 4.3411	7:25–27	3.2334, 3.2637
6:45	2.1137	7:26–27	1.24
6:45–46	2.1206	7:28	4.3359
6:51	3.2007, 3.2145	7:32	4.3359
6:51–52	4.3125	7:33	3.2339
6:51–58	1.319, 3.2015	7:35	2.1193, 2.1222, 3.2403, 3.2448, 3.2536
6:52–58	3.2015	7:37	2.1084, 3.2011
6:53	3.2478	7:40	4.3180
6:59	2.1224, 3.2006, 4.3105, 4.3125, 4.3126, 4.3130	7:40–44	3.2370, 3.2481
6:60–66	3.2005	7:40–52	1.341, 3.2033
6:60–71	1.24, 1.139	7:41–42	1.24
6:61–62	3.2478	7:42	3.2507, 3.2536, 4.3094
6:63	2.856	7:45–52	2.1191, 3.2536
6:66–70	1.423	7:46	3.2448
6:66–71	1.318		3.2025
6:67	3.2007	7:47	2.959, 2.1191, 3.2481, 4.3409
6:67–71	3.2005	7:50–51	3.2117
6:70	3.2007, 3.2035, 3.2443, 3.2859	7:50–52	1.335, 3.2135
6:70–71	3.2007	7:52	3.2034, 3.2035
6:71	3.2007, 3.2035	7:53	3.2334
7	2.1297, 3.2034	7:53–8:11	4.3364
7:1	2.857	8	2.1474
7:1–9	3.2011	8:2	4.3151
7:1–13	4.3390	8:3–5
7:1–52	3.2094	8:4
		8:5

8:6-8	2.1120	9:18	4.3150
8:9	4.3364	9:18-22	2.1620
8:11	3.2117	9:22	2.1200, 4.3214
8:12	4.3390	9:24	3.2608
8:14	1.312, 1.586	9:28	2.1474
8:17	4.3151	9:33	2.1223
8:20	3.2034, 3.2334, 3.2637, 4.3126	9:35	3.2492
8:21	4.3359	9:35-38	3.2478, 3.2488
8:22	4.3359	9:39	3.2733
8:23	3.2145	9:49	2.1223
8:23-30	4.3366	10	3.2017, 3.2034, 3.2224, 4.3146, 4.3391
8:24	2.1223		4.3391
8:28	3.2478	10:1-3	2.1349
8:34	2.1346	10:1-6	3.2552
8:41	3.2382	10:2	3.2859
8:41-42	3.1964	10:6	4.3357
8:44	3.2859	10:7-18	4.3367
8:44-47	2.1621	10:10	2.984
8:45	2.1223	10:11	3.2023
8:48	1.736, 2.1433, 2.1632, 4.3180	10:17	3.2023
8:48-49	2.883, 3.2859	10:20	1.736, 3.2011
8:52	3.2859	10:20-21	3.2859
8:57	3.2033, 3.2126	10:22	3.1998, 3.2034, 4.3391
8:59	2.883, 3.2334	10:22-23	3.2637
9	3.2009, 3.2615, 4.3187, 4.3192, 4.3193, 4.3194, 4.3198	10:22-24	3.2236, 4.3367
9:1	1.631	10:22-39	3.2359
9:1-3	3.1963	10:23	3.2034, 3.2334
9:1-7	3.1959, 3.2598, 3.2608	10:26-28	4.3368
9:1-12	1.24	10:30	1.61, 3.1999
9:1-41	3.2523	10:30-32	3.2090
9:1-47	4.3074	10:30-33	4.3367
9:2	2.1223, 3.2443, 4.3357	10:30-38	3.2768
9:2-3	3.2030	10:33	3.2034, 4.3145
9:3	1.312, 4.3193, 4.3194, 4.3198	10:33-36	2.1194, 3.2017
9:6	3.2609	10:34	2.1137, 4.3151
9:7	2.1213, 3.2034, 4.3320	10:34-36	4.3366, 4.3367
9:8-10	4.3150	10:35	4.3146
9:13-17	4.3150	10:36	4.3145, 4.3146
9:13-34	1.24	10:38	3.2542, 4.3367
9:16	3.2608, 4.3150, 4.3151	10:40	2.1781, 3.2033
9:17	2.1193, 2.1222, 3.2403, 3.2448, 4.3371	10:40-41	2.1753
		10:40-42	2.1751, 2.1756
		10:41	4.3084
		11	2.1679, 3.1988, 3.2009, 3.2111, 4.3391
		11:1-44	3.2713, 4.3094, 4.3195
		11:2	1.467
		11:5	3.2012, 3.2033
		11:7-16	1.24

11:8	2.1223	12:20–28	1.379, 1.381,
11:11	3.2012, 3.2033, 3.2434		3.2462, 4.3087, 4.3094, 4.3095
11:11–15	1.312	12:20–50	3.2016
11:16	3.2007, 3.2008	12:21	2.1458, 4.3000, 4.3007
11:17–44	3.2717		3.2007, 4.3096
11:23	3.2261	12:21–22	3.2007
11:24–25	3.2015	12:22	3.2014, 3.2259, 3.2478, 4.3097
11:25–26	1.61	12:23	1.431, 4.3097
11:27	2.958		3.2031, 3.2503, 4.2971
11:28	2.1474	12:24	3.2031
11:28–44	1.24	12:25	1.354, 3.2015, 3.2030, 3.2259 4.3099
11:36–37	3.2033		1.23, 1.28, 1.358, 3.2858, 3.2859
11:41–42	2.1206	12:26	2.967, 4.3100, 4.3366
11:45	3.2015, 4.3094	12:27	1.102, 4.3366
11:45–53	1.24, 3.2013, 3.2014, 3.2019	12:27–28	3.2478, 4.3366
11:47	2.1740, 3.2020	12:31	2.1620
11:47–48	2.883, 2.1433, 3.2020, 3.2021, 3.2396	12:32	4.3094
	3.2020, 3.2036, 3.2398, 3.2650	12:33	3.2010
11:47–53	2.1620, 3.2017	12:34	2.1634
11:48	3.2020, 3.2352	12:35–50	2.1137, 3.2593
11:49–50	2.967, 3.2787	12:36	4.3122, 4.3214
11:52	3.2014, 3.2033, 3.2201	12:37	2.1621
11:54	3.2335, 3.2336, 3.2337, 3.2339, 3.2343, 3.2354, 3.2764	12:38–43	3.2010
11:55	3.2014	12:40	3.2503
	3.2334	12:42	3.2016
11:55–56	3.2014	12:42–43	3.2027, 3.2277
11:56	3.2334	12:44–50	3.2022, 3.2259, 3.2335, 3.2339
11:57	3.2014	12:46–48	1.312, 3.1964, 3.2014
12–13	3.2028	13	3.2044
12:1	3.2335, 3.2339, 3.2340	13–17	3.2007, 3.2014
12:1–8	3.2012, 3.2014	13:1	1.24
12:3	1.467	13:1–3	3.2340, 3.2859
12:5	3.2035	13:1–17	3.2130
12:6	3.2035	13:1–20	3.2399
12:8	3.2028	13:1–35	3.2007, 3.2015
12:9–11	3.2014, 3.2340	13:1–17:26	3.2094, 3.2130, 3.2342, 3.2719, 3.2764
12:11	4.3094	13:2	1.312
12:12–19	3.2013, 3.2014, 3.2016, 3.2019	13:6	2.1474, 3.2476
12:16	1.686, 3.2007	13:6–8	3.2502
12:18	3.2542	13:7	2.1137, 3.2406
12:19	4.3094	13:10	2.1207, 3.2032
12:20	3.2014
12:20–22	2.1457, 3.2761, 4.2995	13:11
12:20–23	2.967	13:13–14
		13:16
		13:18
		13:20

13:21	3.2028	16:11	1.23, 1.28,
13:21-30	3.2014, 3.2015		3.2858, 3.2859
13:23	3.2133	16:12-14	3.2423
13:27	3.2858	16:20	4.3330
13:29	1.24, 3.2035,	16:20-24	4.3329
	3.2342	16:23	4.3332
13:30	3.2342	16:23-24	3.2032
13:31	3.2478	16:25	4.3371
13:33-38	4.3359	16:26	4.3332
13:34	3.2014, 3.2031,	16:29-33	3.2007
	3.2052	17	3.2013, 3.2015,
13:34-35	3.1964		3.2016
13:36	3.2015	17:1	3.2259
13:36-38	3.2014	17:3	2.858
14-16	3.2013, 3.2016	17:11	4.3329
14:2	3.2140, 3.2276	17:13	2.1223
14:2-3	1.61	17:20	3.2008
14:5	3.2008	18-19	2.1088, 3.2028
14:6	1.61	18:1	3.2013, 3.2016
14:8-9	3.2007, 4.3096	18:1-2	2.1481
14:12	3.2010	18:1-11	3.2016
14:13-14	3.2032	18:1-32	1.24
14:15	3.1964, 3.2007	18:1-19:42	1.659
14:15-17	1.24	18:2-12	3.2340
14:16-25	1.62	18:3	3.2344, 3.2451
14:20	4.3332	18:11	3.1886
14:21	3.2133	18:12-27	3.2018
14:22-23	2.967	18:13	3.2017
14:22-24	3.2015	18:13-14	3.2352
14:25-26	3.2423	18:13-18	3.2019
14:30	1.23, 3.2858,	18:13-27	3.2340
	3.2859	18:15-16	3.2015
14:31	3.2015, 3.2032	18:19-24	3.2017
14:55-65	3.2017	18:20	3.2034, 3.2334,
14:58	3.2017		4.3105, 4.3125,
14:59	3.2017		4.3126
14:61-62	3.2017	18:24	3.2017
14:62-64	3.2017	18:25-27	3.2019
15	3.2225	18:28	3.1961, 3.2017,
15:6	3.2032		3.2022, 3.2335,
15:7	3.2032		3.2341, 3.2343,
15:10	3.2133		3.2344, 3.2345,
15:11	4.3329		3.2349
15:12	3.2032	18:28-19:16	3.2020, 3.2340,
15:12-17	1.24		3.2353
15:13-15	3.2434, 4.3317	18:29-38	1.379, 1.381,
15:14	3.2133		1.382, 1.389,
15:16	3.2032, 3.2443		1.731, 3.2463
15:17	3.2032	18:30	3.2650
15:18	3.2323	18:31	3.2021, 3.2396,
15:22	1.69		4.3151
15:25	2.1137, 4.3151	18:31-33	3.2089
15:44-45	3.2025	18:33	3.2028, 3.2515

18:35	3.2021	19:35	1.100, 1.445,
18:36	4.3208, 4.3220		3.1997, 3.2015,
18:36–37	3.2021		3.2025, 3.2037,
18:37	3.2515		3.2201
18:37–38	3.2089	19:36	2.1137, 3.1961,
18:38	1.786, 3.2021		3.2023, 3.2349
18:39	3.2335, 3.2339,	19:38–39	3.2448
	3.2343	19:39	3.2415
18:40	3.2650	19:39–40	3.2025
19:1	3.1997	19:42	3.2025, 3.2340
19:3	4.3412	20	2.1309, 3.2026
19:4	3.2021	20:1	1.119
19:6	3.2021	20:1–14	3.2420
19:6–7	3.2021, 3.2650	20:1–18	1.468
19:7	3.2768, 4.3146,	20:2	3.2418
	4.3151	20:2–6	3.2007
19:10	3.2021	20:2–10	3.2015, 3.2026
19:12	3.2021, 3.2359,	20:3–10	3.1917, 3.2417
	3.2393, 3.2650	20:11	3.2013, 4.3329
19:13	3.2034	20:11–18	3.2026, 3.2421
19:14	2.1329, 3.1961,	20:15	3.2418
	3.2022, 3.2024,	20:16	2.1223, 3.2443
	3.2335, 3.2339,	20:17	3.1927, 3.2420
	3.2340, 3.2341,	20:19	3.2412
	3.2349	20:19–20	3.1923
19:16	3.2021	20:19–23	3.2026
19:16–37	2.1329	20:19–29	3.2421
19:16–42	3.2340	20:21–23	3.1923, 3.2420
19:17	3.2016	20:23	3.2032
19:18	3.2389	20:24	3.2007
19:18–19	2.1190	20:24–26	2.960
19:19	2.1197, 3.2392,	20:24–28	3.2007
	4.3392, 4.3412	20:24–29	3.2008, 3.2026,
19:19–20	1.341		3.2420, 3.2425
19:19–22	3.2021	20:25	1.452, 3.2025,
19:20	1.417, 3.2034,		3.2390
	3.2469	20:26	3.2422
19:23	4.3340	20:28	1.453, 3.2034,
19:23–24	2.1329		4.3146
19:24	1.314	20:28–31	3.2420
19:25	1.425, 1.432,	20:29	3.2420, 3.2430
	1.467, 2.1334	20:30	1.298, 3.2010,
19:25–27	3.2011, 3.2015,		3.2542
	3.2025, 3.2439,	20:30–31	1.445, 2.955,
	4.2956		2.956, 2.959
19:26	3.2025	20:31	2.1313, 3.2596
19:30	1.313, 2.1190,	21	1.114, 1.122,
	3.2016, 3.2025,		1.445, 3.2007,
	4.3027		3.2026
19:31	2.1329, 3.2022,	21:1–3	3.2026
	3.2340, 3.2416	21:1–14	3.2008, 3.2027,
19:31–33	3.2412		3.2420, 3.2421,
19:31–37	3.2016		3.2423

21:2	3.2007, 3.2008, 4.2957	2:1-41 2:4	2.1623 1.428
21:2-3	3.2422	2:5	2.965, 2.966
21:3	4.2957	2:7	2.965
21:7	3.2015	2:7-11	4.3045
21:14	3.2026	2:9	3.2231
21:15-19	3.1964, 3.2420	2:9-11	1.394
21:15-22	3.2008	2:14	3.2445
21:20	3.1997, 3.2037	2:14-36	2.1490
21:20-24	3.2015	2:17	1.438, 3.2885
21:21-23	3.2895	2:17-21	2.966, 2.1769
21:24	1.100, 3.1997, 3.2025, 3.2037, 3.2038, 3.2201	2:22 2:22-40	1.623, 3.1926, 4.3409 3.1926
21:25	1.298, 2.955, 2.959, 3.2205	2:23 2:24 2:33	3.2386, 3.2390 1.27 1.150
Acts		2:34-35	2.1138
1	2.1679, 3.2359, 3.2445	2:36 2:37	3.2386 2.965, 3.2445
1:1	1.69, 1.490, 3.1926, 4.3428	2:41-42 2:41-46	4.3395 2.966
1:1-3	3.1926	2:42	1.196, 1.438, 2.1490
1:1-5	1.298
1:3	4.3208	2:42-47	1.137
1:3-11	3.2422	2:43	3.2445
1:4	2.1309, 3.2139	2:45	4.3303
1:4-11	3.1926	2:46	3.2636, 3.2851
1:5	1.625, 1.645, 2.1751, 2.1757, 2.1769	3:1 3:1-5	1.121, 3.2237, 3.2445, 3.2636 1.631, 2.966
1:6	1.28, 1.501, 4.3208, 4.3236	3:1-26 3:2	3.2524 3.2717
1:8	2.1680, 3.2422, 3.2442	3:3 3:6	3.2445 2.1511, 4.3409
1:9	4.3323	3:8	3.2717
1:12	3.2607	3:10	3.2717
1:12-14	1.440, 3.2438	3:11	3.2445, 4.3303
1:12-26	3.2505	3:12-26	2.1490, 3.1926
1:13	2.877, 2.1725, 3.2445, 3.2831, 4.3397	3:13	1.60, 1.767, 2.1138, 2.1306, 3.2353
1:14	1.432, 3.2012, 3.2200, 3.2439	3:13-21 3:14-15	3.2430 3.2386
1:15-26	3.2444, 3.2446	3:15	1.774
1:16	2.1218	3:18	3.2386
1:16-20	3.1886	3:19-21	1.26
1:21-22	1.439, 2.1490, 2.1751, 3.1926	3:22 3:26	2.1193 2.1306
1:22	1.563, 2.1747, 2.1757	4 4-5	2.1740 3.2164
1:23-26	4.3394	4:1	2.1740, 3.2022
2	2.962, 3.2359, 3.2458	4:1-2 4:1-3	3.2260, 3.2453 3.2636

4:2	1.27	6:1	1.394, 1.417,
4:3	3.2348		2.1458, 3.2464,
4:5	3.2022		3.2674
4:5-6	2.1740	6:1-3	2.1623
4:6	2.1499	6:1-4	4.3303
4:8	2.1740	6:1-6	4.3120
4:8-12	2.1490	6:2	2.1490
4:9	3.2521	6:4	1.439, 2.1490
4:10	4.3409	6:7	1.428
4:10-12	3.1926	6:8-8:2	3.2453
4:11	2.1138, 2.1154	6:9	1.417, 1.685,
4:12	4.3101		4.3113, 4.3122,
4:13	1.58, 3.2445,		4.3132
	4.3237	6:11	2.1194, 2.1195
4:15	2.1740	6:11-14	2.1209
4:16	1.440	6:13-14	3.2736, 3.2767
4:19	3.2445	6:14	1.503, 2.1193-
4:23	3.2022		1195, 2.1213,
4:25	2.1218		3.1926, 3.2400,
4:27	2.1295, 2.1306,		3.2638, 3.2648,
	3.1926, 3.1927,		3.2649, 4.3409
	3.2353	6:15	3.2891, 3.2898
4:29	2.1306, 2.1490	7	3.2787
4:30	2.1295	7:30	4.3429
4:31	2.1490	7:32	1.767
4:32	3.2680	7:37	2.1193
4:35	4.3303	7:47-50	3.2757
4:36-37	1.428, 4.3343	7:48-50	3.2663
5	2.1740	7:52	3.1926
5:9	4.3334	7:56	2.1309, 3.2477,
5:12	3.2445, 3.2636		3.2478
5:17	2.1497, 2.1499,	7:59	2.1328
	2.1620, 3.2022,	7:60	2.1328
	3.2453, 4.3089,	8	4.3399
	4.3145, 4.3216	8:8	4.3330
5:18	3.2445	8:12	4.3208, 4.3212
5:19-21	3.2636	8:19	3.2885
5:20	2.1490	8:26	3.2885
5:21	2.1740, 3.2022	8:30	1.433
5:24	3.2022	8:33	4.3322
5:24-39	3.2446	9	4.3399
5:25-26	3.2636	9:1	2.1474
5:28	4.3316	9:1-9	1.426
5:29-32	2.1490, 3.1926	9:1-29	2.968
5:30	3.2386	9:2	4.3089, 4.3215
5:35-39	1.29	9:5	2.970
5:36	4.3077	9:5-6	3.1926
5:36-37	3.1929, 3.2444	9:17-18	1.431
5:37	3.2321, 4.3237,	9:20	1.407
	4.3413, 4.3416,	9:24	3.2347
	4.3429	9:25	2.1474
5:42	3.2636	9:26-27	1.441
6	2.1195, 4.3398	9:31	1.440

10	2.966, 3.2740	13:28	3.2353, 3.2386
10-11	1.269, 1.270, 2.1213	13:29 13:43	3.2386 4.3429
10:9-16	3.2753	13:45	2.1620
10:14	2.1148	13:52	4.3330
10:28	3.2761	14:20	4.3429
10:34-35	2.966	14:21	2.1474
10:34-43	2.1490, 2.1492	14:22	4.3208, 4.3214
10:36-37	3.1927	14:23	4.3331
10:36-38	1.623	15	1.267, 1.269, 1.270, 1.797, 2.966, 3.1929, 3.2740, 3.2828, 4.3384, 4.3400
10:36-43	1.439, 3.1926
10:37	1.563, 2.1747, 2.1751, 2.1757, 3.2003
10:37-39	3.1926	15:1-12	3.2435
10:38	2.1434, 3.2521	15:5	4.3216
10:39	2.1490, 3.2386	15:6-29	2.1624
10:39b-41	2.1493	15:7-11	2.966
10:40	3.2340	15:13	3.2439
10:41	2.1490, 3.2139	15:13-21	3.2806
11:15-16	2.1757	15:14	4.3326
11:16	1.625, 1.645, 2.1491, 2.1751, 2.1769	15:15 15:15-19 15:20	4.3334 2.1635 3.2589, 4.3384
11:19	1.440	15:21	2.1729
11:20-26	1.440	15:22-33	1.141
11:22-26	1.441	15:29	2.1148, 4.3384
11:26	2.1200, 2.1474, 2.1542, 4.3215	16:9 16:10-17	3.2885 3.1929
11:28	3.1929, 4.3430	16:16	4.3300
12:2	3.2445	16:16-18	2.1234
12:6-17	3.2885	16:19	4.3300
12:12	1.428, 1.439, 1.440, 1.467, 4.3343	17:1-2 17:3 17:5	4.3133 3.2386, 4.3455 2.1620
12:15	2.1512	17:6-7	3.2396
12:17	1.440, 3.2439	17:7	3.2402
12:21-23	4.3186	17:10-11	1.411
12:23-41	3.1926	17:16	3.2589
13	1.155	17:24	3.2663
13-14	1.431	17:30-31	3.1926
13:1	1.196, 3.2452	17:30-32	2.1513
13:2-3	4.3331	17:37	2.1201
13:4-13	1.440	18:2	4.3431
13:5	1.407, 1.440, 4.3343	18:8 18:9	4.3208 3.2885
13:6-12	3.2536	18:24-25	4.3321
13:13-52	1.155	18:24-28	2.1751, 2.1752, 2.1757, 2.1759, 4.3399
13:14-16	4.3116
13:15	2.1729, 4.3119
13:23-31	1.439	18:25	2.1757, 4.3215
13:24	2.1757, 3.2839	18:25-26	3.2442
13:24-25	2.1751, 2.1756	18:26	4.3215
13:27-31	2.1540	19-20	1.442

19:1	4.3321	23:20	2.1730
19:1-4	2.1759	23:26	3.2330
19:1-7	2.1751, 2.1753, 2.1756, 2.1757, 3.2442, 4.3320	23:32	3.2348
	1.444	24:3	3.2330
19:1-9	3.1926	24:5	4.3089, 4.3215, 4.3216, 4.3409
19:4	4.3215, 4.3451	24:14	4.3090, 4.3215, 4.3216
19:9	1.444	24:17	4.3303
19:13-16	2.1234	24:22	4.3215
19:13-20	3.2531	24:26	4.3306
19:14	4.3215	25:8	2.1209
19:23	3.1929	25:13	4.3429
20:5-15	3.2348	26:5	3.2605, 4.3216
20:7	3.2348	26:5-7	3.2451
20:11	3.2277, 4.3438	26:7	3.2347
20:17-38	4.3208	26:9-20	2.968
20:25	1.430	26:11	4.3214
20:28	1.24, 1.251, 1.430, 3.1926, 3.1927, 3.1928, 3.1966, 3.2135, 3.2136, 3.2202	26:22-23	3.1926
20:35	1.342	26:25	3.2330
	3.2347	26:26	4.3431
20:35c	4.3400	27:1-28:16	3.1929
20:37	3.1929	27:9	4.3331
21	3.2439	27:23	3.2885
21:1-18	2.1193	28:17	2.1193
21:18	3.2636	28:22	4.3216
21:21	2.1209	28:23	4.3208
21:23-24	2.1457, 2.1458	28:25-28	2.1634
21:28	3.2446	28:28	4.3215
21:37	3.2789	28:31	2.966, 4.3208
21:37-40	1.394	Rom
21:38	2.1741	1-2	3.2589
	1.420, 1.429, 3.2605	1:1	4.3462
21:40	2.968	1:1-5	2.1489
22-23	4.3215	1:1-6	1.114, 3.2596
22:3	3.1926	1:2-4	2.969
	1.432	1:3	1.341, 2.1278, 3.1949, 3.2053, 3.2190, 3.2437, 4.3437
22:3-21	3.1926	1:3-4	2.1037, 2.1238, 3.2409
22:4	4.3215	1:3b-4a	2.1281
22:8	3.1926	1:4	1.27, 3.2053
22:12	4.3215	1:13	1.771, 2.1202
22:16	2.1741	1:18	2.1585
22:19	3.2452	1:18-32	2.1633
22:30	2.1741	1:24	3.2810
23:1-10	3.2452	2:17-20	2.1621
23:6	2.1741	2:27-28	2.1211
23:6-7	3.2453	2:29	3.1946
23:6-8	3.2435, 3.2451	3:1-2	2.1621
23:6-10	3.2260	3:8	2.1209
23:6-12	3.1927
23:8	2.1496
23:12	2.1741

3:22	2.1489	12	1.459, 3.2042,
3:23	2.969, 2.1489		3.2053, 4.3446,
3:24	2.1621, 4.3216		4.3461
3:24–25	2.969	12:3	1.483, 4.3462
3:25	1.138, 3.2636	12:5	4.3216
3:25–26	3.2674	12:7	1.196
3:27	3.2163	12:9	4.3303, 4.3462
4	3.2786	12:14	1.15, 1.342,
4:1–25	2.1637		2.1483, 3.1942,
4:13	3.2786		3.2043, 3.2192,
4:24–25	3.2410		4.3446, 4.3461
4:25	2.1493, 3.2197	12:15	4.3461
5:15	1.430	12:17	1.15, 2.1483,
6	3.2742		3.1944, 3.2043,
6:3	4.3216		3.2192
6:3–5	4.3455	12:17–21	1.342, 4.3446
6:17	2.1475, 2.1484,	12:18	3.1944
	3.1945, 3.2191	12:18–21	3.2427
6:19	3.2742	12:19	4.3462
7:7–8	4.3143	12:21	1.15, 1.342,
8:1	4.3216		4.3461, 4.3462
8:1–4	3.2766	12–15	3.1944
8:2	4.3216	13	4.3462
8:3	3.1949	13:1–7	1.352, 4.3461,
8:11	1.774		4.3462
8:15	1.342, 3.2042,	13:2	4.3461
	3.2497, 4.3445	13:4	4.3462, 4.3463
8:15–16	3.1945	13:7	3.1944, 4.3462
8:28	4.3459	13:8	4.3462
8:31–39	4.3297, 4.3459	13:8–10	3.1944, 4.3054,
8:32	2.1493, 3.2197		4.3056
8:33	2.1211	13:9	1.661, 2.1138,
8:34	2.1309		3.2032, 4.3463
8:39	4.3216	13:10	4.3459
9–11	2.1635	13:11	1.26
9–14	1.442	13:11–13	4.3460
9:1	2.1144, 4.3216	13:14	2.1484
9:1–5	2.1621	14	3.2617, 3.2618
9:5	2.1208, 3.1949	14–15	3.2618
9:6	2.1211	14:1–15:13	2.1202
9:13	4.2970, 4.2971	14:4	3.1942
9:32–33	2.1199	14:5	3.2617
10:9	1.27	14:7–9	4.3463
10:15	3.2263	14:8	4.3463
11:1	2.1635	14:13	4.3463
11:1–25	2.1202	14:13–23	3.2740
11:16	3.2740	14:14	1.430, 1.431,
11:25	4.3440, 4.3441		2.1151, 2.1261,
11:26	2.1635		2.1483, 3.1942,
11:28	2.1621		3.1943, 3.2052,
11:29	2.1637		3.2192, 3.2753,
11:32	4.2957		4.3447, 4.3462,
11:48	3.2034		4.3463

14:17	4.3208, 4.3464	2:14-7:4	4.3449
14:20	2.1261	2:20	4.3208
15:1-5	2.1484, 3.1945	3:1	4.3216
15:3	2.1138, 3.1949,	3:4-6	2.1752
	3.2190	3:4-6:22	4.3321
15:7	2.1484	3:10-15	2.1684
15:8	3.1949	3:11	1.188
15:15-16	4.3462	3:16	2.1215
15:16-20	2.1202	3:16-17	3.2636
15:17	4.3216	3:21	2.1294, 2.1309
15:18-19	3.2524	3:21-22	2.1752
15:20	2.1202, 2.1685	4	1.350, 1.459,
15:24	2.1281		4.3463
15:26	4.3215, 4.3303	4:1	4.3458
15:28	2.1281	4:1-2	3.2053
16:3	4.3216	4:4	4.3459
16:4	2.1202	4:5	4.3448
16:5	4.3121	4:6	2.1294, 2.1752,
16:7	4.3216		4.3321
16:9	4.3216	4:6-13	4.3448, 4.3458
16:10	4.3216	4:8	1.343, 1.356,
16:20	4.3462		2.1294, 2.1309,
16:23	1.407		3.1946, 4.3053
		4:8-21	2.1309
1 Cor		4:10	4.3216
1-4	3.2052	4:11	4.3297
1:2	4.3216	4:11-12	2.1123
1:4	4.3216	4:12	1.15, 2.1309
1:8	3.2490	4:12-13	4.3448
1:10-17	2.1757	4:14	2.1309
1:11	2.1684	4:15	2.1684, 4.3216
1:12	2.1294, 2.1752,	4:15-21	2.1644, 2.1685
	4.3321	4:20	3.2524
1:13	3.2385	4:21	2.1685
1:17-18	3.2385	5:1-2	4.3053
1:18	1.340, 3.2385,	5:4-5	3.2490
	3.2389	5:7	3.2023, 3.2341
1:18-23	2.1199	6:1-3	4.3461
1:18-25	3.2410	6:9	4.3208
1:18-26	1.562	6:9-10	1.356
1:19	2.1684	6:9-11	2.1633
1:23	1.340, 2.1088,	6:10	4.3208
	2.1133, 3.2385,	6:12-20	4.3053
	3.2389, 3.2481	6:16	2.1138, 2.1713
1:26	1.407	6:19	2.1215
1:30	4.3216	7	3.2041, 4.3443,
2-3	2.1814		4.3463
2:2	3.2385, 3.2410	7:1	3.2760
2:6	3.2143	7:5	3.2760
2:6-7	4.3455	7:7	3.2760, 4.3438
2:6-18	4.3441	7:8	1.341, 4.3438
2:8	3.2024, 3.2385	7:10	1.24, 1.341,
2:9	1.458, 1.459,		1.430, 2.1299,
	3.1945, 3.1946		3.1941, 3.2041,

	3.2046, 3.2051,	10:4	3.2253
	4.3438	10:14-22	4.3053
7:10-11	1.11, 1.78, 1.173,	10:16	1.136
	1.272, 1.319,	10:16-17	2.1493, 3.2197
	1.341, 1.679,	10:20-21	4.3100
	2.1261, 2.1483,	10:27	1.180
	3.2191, 4.3151,	10:33-11:1	1.430
	4.3399, 4.3437	11	1.341, 3.2041,
7:10-12	1.430		3.2046, 3.2051,
7:10-16	2.1140		3.2053
7:11	3.2041, 3.2046,	11:1	1.430, 2.1484
	3.2051	11:2	2.1483
7:12	3.2046, 4.3438	11:2-3	4.3455
7:14	3.2740	11:19	3.2138, 4.3215
7:15	1.174, 2.1142	11:23	1.138, 1.430,
7:15-17	4.3439		2.1261, 2.1493,
7:22-23	1.430		3.2024, 3.2197,
7:25	1.78, 1.341,		3.2340, 3.2342
	1.430, 3.1941,	11:23-24	1.430, 1.433
	4.3438	11:23-25	1.121, 1.353,
7:26	2.1127		2.1488, 2.1493,
7:27	3.2142		3.1941, 3.2191,
7:32-34	4.3265		3.2197, 3.2385,
7:32-36	3.2142		4.3442, 4.3455
7:34	3.2760	11:23-26	1.319, 1.340,
8:4-6	3.2164		1.679, 2.955,
8:6	2.1208, 3.1948,		3.2015, 3.2042,
	3.2589		4.3438
8:7-13	3.2740	11:23-33	1.148
8-10	2.1680	11:24-25	1.137, 1.141,
9	1.422, 2.1814,		2.1333
	3.2041, 3.2043,	11:25	1.140
	3.2052, 4.3443,	11:30	4.3186
	4.3463	12	2.970
9:1	3.2043, 3.2189,	12-14	4.3459, 4.3460
	3.2419, 3.2420,	12:1-3	4.3460
	3.2424, 4.3444	12:2	3.2589
9:3ff	4.3439	12:3	3.2152
9:4	3.2043	12:7-11	4.3213
9:5	1.340, 1.768,	12:9	4.3459
	2.1299, 3.1950,	12:9-10	3.2010
	3.2190, 3.2419,	12:12	3.2524
	4.3437	12:12-31	2.1336
9:14	1.11, 1.24, 1.180,	12:14	4.3460
	1.341, 1.430,	12:17-21	4.3460
	2.1261, 2.1483,	12:28-29	1.196
	3.1941, 3.2041,	12:32-33	4.3460
	3.2056, 3.2191,	13	4.3459
	4.3321, 4.3437	13:1-3	3.2680
9:14-15	2.1123	13:2b	1.343, 1.357
9:18	4.3439	13:2	3.1944, 3.2042,
9:19	3.2044, 3.2057		4.3399, 4.3441,
9:19-21	1.430		4.3459, 4.3460
10:1-4	1.138	14:2-4	4.3439

14:6	4.3466	15:12-14	4.3448
14:16	4.3121	15:12-19	2.960
14:17	4.3216	15:13-14	2.941
14:19	4.3441	15:13-20	2.1308
14:23-25	4.3466	15:14-19	2.956
14:26	2.1585	15:18	4.3216
14:26-28	3.1941	15:19	3.2412, 4.3216
14:31	4.3441	15:20	1.28, 2.1326
14:33-36	4.3460	15:20-55	3.2426
14:36	1.439	15:22	2.969, 4.3216
14:37	3.1941, 4.3460	15:22-28	3.2786
15	3.2042, 3.2046,	15:23	2.1326
	3.2053, 3.2425,	15:23-26	2.1326, 4.3220
	3.2427	15:24	4.3208
15:1-2	1.429	15:25-28	3.2428
15:1-3	1.341, 1.430,	15:26	2.1309
	4.3455	15:29	2.1309
15:1-8	3.2042	15:31	4.3216
15:1-11	2.1321	15:32	2.1128
15:3	1.340, 2.1190,	15:35	2.1308, 3.2426
	2.1488, 3.2190,	15:36-37	1.431
	3.2191, 3.2407	15:45	2.1611
15:3a	1.429	15:45-49	2.1309
15:3-4	1.439, 3.1948,	15:50	1.356, 2.1294,
	3.2265		2.1309, 4.3208
15:3-5	1.425, 1.429,	15:51	4.3440
	2.1281, 2.1814,	15:51-54	2.1308
	3.2385, 3.2420,	15:56	2.1309
	3.2423, 4.3453	16	1.422
15:3-7	2.941, 2.1488	16:1-3	4.3303
15:3-8	2.955, 3.2042,	16:12	2.1684, 2.1752,
	3.2411		4.3321
15:4	2.1308, 3.1949,	16:19	4.3121
	3.2340	16:22	1.27, 2.1208
15:4-8	3.2422	16:24	4.3216
15:5	1.425, 2.1298,
	2.1310, 3.2008,	2 Cor
	3.2295, 3.2419,	1:9	4.3444
	3.2444, 3.2505,	1:14	3.2490
	4.3437	1:17-20	3.2043
15:5a	1.340	2:7	3.1946
15:5b	1.340	2:10	2.1585
15:5-8	2.1308	3:14	4.3216
15:6	1.426, 1.440	4:3	2.1621
15:7	1.340, 1.425,	4:8-10	3.2426
	4.3437	4:8-11	2.1134
15:8	1.426, 2.968,	4:14	2.1261
	2.1618, 3.2189,	5	3.1938
	3.2424, 4.3444	5:1	3.2649
15:9	3.1951	5:1-2	3.2140
15:9-10	3.2412, 3.2420	5:13	3.1938
15:11	1.425	5:14	4.3459
15:12	1.343, 2.1308,	5:14-15	3.1938
	3.2412	5:16	2.968, 3.1937,

	3.1938, 3.2049,	13:4	3.1949, 3.2385
	3.2189, 4.3443	13:11	3.1944
5:16b	1.340	24:20-21	3.2267
5:16-21	2.1089
5:17	2.968, 3.1938,	Gal
	3.2898, 4.3444	1	3.2043, 3.2049,
5:19	2.958, 2.971,		3.2056, 4.3399
	4.3216	1-2	2.1814
5:21	3.2049	1:1	4.3462
6:5	4.3331	1:6	4.3446
6:10	2.1134	1:6-9	2.1685
6:14-18	4.3100	1:11-12	2.1489
6:16	2.1215, 3.2589,	1:12	1.148, 2.1585,
	3.2636		3.1951, 3.2049
8	3.2047	1:13	2.879, 2.1618,
8-9	4.3303		3.1951
8:9	2.1134, 2.1297,	1:13-14	2.1133
	3.1945, 3.1948,	1:13-16	3.2410
	3.1949, 4.3444	1:13-20	3.2421
9	3.2047	1:15	2.1306, 4.3444
10:1	3.1945, 3.2190	1:15-16	2.1085
10:8	3.2420	1:16	3.2189, 3.2424
10:12-18	3.2420	1:17	3.2423
10-13	2.1644, 3.2420,	1:18	1.140, 1.148,
	4.3449		1.340, 1.431,
10:13-11:23	2.1685		2.1488, 3.1939,
11-12	2.1814		3.1945, 3.2265,
11:1	2.1297		4.3445, 4.3465
11:1-6	2.1633	1:19	1.340, 1.440,
11:2-3	4.3321		2.1092, 3.1950,
11:10	2.1144		3.2190, 3.2439,
11:14-21	2.1633		4.3437, 4.3438,
11:22	2.1135		4.3453
11:22-33	3.2420	1:20	2.1144
11:23-27	2.1618	1:22	2.879
11:23-32	2.970	1:23	2.1134, 3.1951
11:24	2.879	2	1.141, 1.267,
11:27	2.1135, 4.3331		1.269, 1.270,
11:31	2.1144		3.2043, 3.2049,
11:32-33	3.2423		3.2056, 3.2810
12:1	2.1585	2:1-13	1.431
12:1-4	1.149	2:2	2.1135, 2.1489
12:1-5	3.2424, 3.2425	2:6	2.1684, 3.1948
12:1-6	3.2420	2:7-8	1.340
12:2-3	4.3438	2:9	1.340, 1.431,
12:2-4	4.3441		1.440, 2.1215,
12:2-5	3.2488		4.3437
12:4	2.1581	2:10	2.1297, 4.3215,
12:7-10	3.2420		4.3303
12:9	3.1941, 4.3440,	2:11	1.440
	4.3442, 4.3453,	2:11-14	2.1213, 2.1300,
	4.3457		3.2740
12:12	3.2010	2:12	2.1148
13:1	2.1138	2:12-13	2.1263, 3.2809

2:14	1.340, 2.1202, 4.3437	6:14 6:16	3.2385 2.1211, 2.1213
2:15	2.1212
2:16	2.1489	Eph
2:20	2.1134, 2.1489, 2.1493, 3.2197, 3.2428	1:17 2:11–12 2:14–16	2.1585 2.1633 4.3035
3	3.2786	2:16	3.2385, 3.2898
3:1	1.430, 2.1134, 3.1949, 3.2385	2:21 4:10	2.1215 3.1927
3:2–5	3.2524	4:19	3.2810
3:6–29	2.1637	5:3	3.2810
3:13	2.1088, 3.2385, 3.2386, 3.2410	5:5	1.356, 4.3209, 4.3214, 4.3220
3:15	2.969	5:16	4.3461
3:16	2.1716, 2.1717	5:25–32	4.3320
3:22	2.1489	5:27	4.3318
3:26–28	3.2132	5:31	2.1138
3:27	4.3216	5:32	4.3455
3:27–28	2.968	6:13	4.3461
3:28	4.3216
4	3.2617	Phil
4:4	1.340, 3.2038, 3.2044, 3.2053, 3.2190, 3.2382, 4.3437, 4.3444	1:1 1:6 1:8 2:5	4.3216 3.2490 3.2190 3.1945
4:4–5	3.1949, 3.1950	2:5–7	4.3444
4:5	3.1948, 3.2053	2:5–11	2.1208, 3.2044, 3.2152
4:6	3.2042, 3.2051, 3.2497, 4.3445	2:6–11	2.1088, 2.1281, 2.1297, 4.3102
4:6a	1.342		3.1949, 3.2038
4:10	1.497	2:7–8	1.340, 3.2385
4:10–11	3.2617	2:8	3.2898
4:10–20	2.1685	2:15–16	3.2490
4:11–19	2.1644	2:16	3.2490
4:26	3.2140	2:24	2.1261
5:10	2.1261	2–3	2.1630
5:11	1.340, 2.879, 2.1199, 2.1618, 3.2385	3:1–2 3:3 3:6	2.1622 2.1211 2.879, 2.1133, 2.1618, 3.1951
5:13–14	4.3054, 4.3056		2.968
5:13–25	3.2766	3:7–8	2.1489
5:14	1.661, 3.2032	3:9	3.2427
5:19	3.2810	3:11–4:1	2.1585
5:20	4.3215	3:15	2.1199, 3.2385
5:21	1.356, 4.3208	3:18	2.1622
5:24	3.2385	3:18–19	3.2140
6:2	2.1484, 3.2044, 3.2052, 3.2163	3:20 4:9	1.196, 2.1483
6:6	1.196
6:7	4.3182	Col
6:12	2.879, 2.1618, 3.2385	1:9 1:13	2.970 4.3214, 4.3220
6:12–14	2.1199	1:15–17	3.2588

1:15-20	2.1208, 3.2152	4:16	2.1326, 3.2043
1:20	2.970, 3.2385	4:16-17	3.2136
1:24	2.970	4:17	3.2043
2:6	2.1483	5	3.2052, 3.2053
2:6-8	1.196	5:2	2.1483, 3.2042,
2:6-11	4.3453		3.2051, 3.2052,
2:6-23	3.2617		3.2192, 3.2490,
2:14	3.2385, 3.2390		4.3451, 4.3455
2:14-15	4.3035	5:4	2.1483, 3.2192,
2:16	1.497		3.2490
3:1-4	3.2898	5:13	2.1483, 3.1944,
3:5	1.10, 3.2810	5:15	3.2192
3:12	2.1211		1.15, 2.1483,
3:13	2.1484		3.1944, 3.2192
4:6	1.77	5:21	3.2142
4:10	1.440, 1.441, 4.3343	2 Thess
4:11	4.3208, 4.3214	1:1	1.142
4:14	1.441	1:5	4.3208
		2:1	3.2879
1 Thess		2:1-10	3.2043
1	2.1814	2:3-9	3.2879
1:1	1.142, 1.431	2:8	3.2043
1:5	3.2524	2:15	2.1483
1:6	3.1948	2:17	3.2255
1:9	3.2164	3:6	1.196, 2.1483
1:9-10	3.2409	3:11	2.1294
1:10	1.27, 2.1090, 3.2426	1 Tim
2:1-12	2.1134	1:12-13	2.1618
2:9	2.1294	1:18	1.419
2:12	4.3208, 4.3214	2:1-4	1.352
2:13-16	2.1617	2:5	4.3101
2:14-16	3.2427	2:10	3.2255
2:15	2.1261	3:16	3.1927
2:15-16	2.1622	5:10	3.2255
3	2.1814	5:18	3.1941, 3.2041
4	3.2047, 3.2052, 3.2053	5:18b	1.180
4:1	1.196, 2.1483	5:25	3.2255
4:5	2.1633	6:8	3.2255
4:12	2.1294	6:13	3.2353, 3.2385
4:13	2.1633	6:19	3.2047
4:13-17	3.2879, 3.2889, 3.2895	2 Tim
4:13-18	3.2426, 3.2427, 3.2786	2-3	2.1630
4:13-5:11	3.2043	2:2	1.419
4:15	1.430, 2.1261, 3.1941, 3.2047, 3.2052, 3.2191, 4.3441	2:8	3.2437
4:15-17	1.342, 3.2135, 3.2191, 3.2202, 3.2486, 4.3439	2:10	2.1211
		2:12	4.3448
		2:14-3:9	2.1633
		2:18	4.3448
		2:21	3.2255
		3:17	3.2255
		4:1	4.3209, 4.3220
		4:13	1.434

4:18	4.3209, 4.3214, 4.3220	11:37 12:22 12:24 13:12	2.1775, 3.2266 3.2140 2.1636 3.2034
Titus		13:14 13:21	3.2140 3.2255
1:1	2.1211
1:11–16	2.1622
1:12	2.1633
1:15	3.2740, 3.2742	Jas
1:16	3.2255	1:1	3.2440, 3.2787
2:7	3.2255	1:2	3.1969
2:14	3.2255	1:4	3.1969
3:8	3.2255	1:5	3.1969
3:13	2.1752	1:17	3.1969
3:14	3.2255	1:19–20 1:22–25 2:1–13	3.1969, 3.1970 3.1969 1.261
Phlm		2:2	1.407
2	4.3121	2:5	1.256, 1.260– 262, 3.1969, 3.2043, 4.3209
24	1.440, 1.441		1.661, 2.1138, 3.1969, 3.2032, 3.2163, 4.3054, 4.3056
Heb
1	3.2588	2:8	4.3141
1:1–2	2.1193		3.2163
1:8	4.3209, 4.3220		3.1969
1:8–9	4.3314		4.3303
1:13	2.1138	2:11	1.196
2:6	3.2476, 3.2477	2:12	3.1969
2:7–8	2.1301	2:13	3.1969
2:9	2.1301	2:14–17	4.3303
2:16	2.1637	3:1	3.1969
3:1–6	3.2787	3:12	3.1969
4:1	3.2787	3:18	3.1969
4:12	4.3041, 4.3101	3:29	4.3316
4:14	3.1927	4:2–3	3.1969
5:7–8	1.354, 3.2015, 3.2030	4:4	3.1969
	2.1300	4:7	4.3461
6:1–2	2.1637	4:9	3.1969
6:13–20	2.1637	4:10	3.1970
6:15	2.1637	4:11–12	3.1970
6:19	3.1927	4:13–5:6	3.2047
8:6–12	2.1636	4:13–14	3.1970
8:7	2.1636	5:1	1.432, 3.1920, 3.1970
8:13	2.1636
9:11	3.2263	5:1–3	3.2734
9:15	2.1636	5:2	3.1970
9:24	3.1927	5:3	3.2047
9:26–28	3.2636	5:5–7	3.2043
10:1	3.2263	5:8	1.27
10:9	2.1636	5:9	3.1970
10:20	4.3035	5:10–11	3.1970
10:24	3.2255	5:12	1.61, 1.315, 2.1143, 3.1970, 3.2043
10:25	1.407
10:37	1.27
11:1–12:3	2.1637	5:12–16	4.3186
11:34	4.3041	5:17	3.1970

1 Pet		1 John
1:1	2.1211, 3.2787	1:1-4	3.2037, 3.2038
1:8	2.956	1:7	3.2024
1:14	2.1633	1:9	3.2024
1:15-16	3.1967	2:2	3.2024
1:18	2.1633, 3.2044	2:9	4.2970
2:4	2.1211	2:18-25	2.1633
2:5	2.1215	2:22-23	2.1243
2:6	2.1211	3:11-15	4.3030
2:7	2.1138, 2.1154	3:23	3.2032
2:9	2.1211	4:1-3	4.3466
2:12	3.1967, 3.1968, 3.2043	2 John
2:12-17	1.352	5	3.2032
2:13	3.2393, 4.3462	7	2.1633, 4.3466
2:17	3.2393	13	2.1211
2:24	3.2386	Jude
3:1	4.3463	1	3.2440
3:2	1.345	5-19	2.1633
3:4	3.1967	9	4.3078
3:8	3.2044	11	3.2173
3:9	3.1967, 3.2043	14	1.413, 3.2289
3:14	3.1968, 3.2043	14-15	3.2247
3:18	3.2636	Rev
3:19	2.1580	1-3	2.1613
3:22	3.1927	1:1	2.1580-1582, 4.3453
4:1-14	3.1967, 3.2043	1:3	2.1569, 3.1971
4:3-4	2.1633	1:4	4.3441, 4.3453
4:4-6	3.1968	1:6	2.1211
4:8-11	4.3303	1:7	3.2428
4:14	4.2967	1:8	2.1193
4:16	2.1202, 3.1968, 4.3215	1:9	4.3441, 4.3453
4:17	1.27	1:13	2.1552, 2.1582, 3.2476, 3.2880
5:5	3.2044	1:18	3.2428
5:8-9	4.3461	2:7	3.1971, 4.3441
5:12	1.142	2:9	4.3214
5:13	3.1841	2:11	3.1971, 4.3441
2 Pet		2:13-29	2.1633
1:14	3.2056	2:14	3.2173
1:16	3.2050	2:16	3.2279
1:16-18	3.2042	2:17	3.1971, 4.3441
1:17	3.2050	2:22	4.3186
2:1	4.3215	2:26-29	4.3441
2:1-22	2.1633	2:29	3.1971
2:15	3.2173	3:3	3.1944, 3.1971, 3.2490
2:20	3.2056	3:5	3.1971
3:3-8	3.2895	3:5-6	4.3441
3:8	1.350, 3.2254	3:9	2.1621, 4.3214
3:10	3.1944, 3.2042, 3.2043, 3.2053, 3.2056, 3.2490

3:12	2.1215	17:14	2.1211
3:12–13	4.3441	18:23	4.3039
3:13	3.1971	19:7	4.3320
3:21	1.356	19:9	4.3320
3:21–22	4.3441	19:20	3.2536
3:22	3.1971	20:6	2.1211
4:8	3.2347	20:10	3.2347
4:14	3.2476	21	3.2884
5:5	3.2437	21:2	4.3320
5:10	2.1211	21:4–5	3.2137
5:11–13	3.2152	21:5–8	4.3441
6:15	4.3039	21:6	2.1193
7:15	3.2347	21:9	4.3320
7:16	4.3297	21:22	2.1215, 3.2636,
11:1–2	2.1215		3.2661
11:8–11	3.2417	22:7	2.1569
12:7	1.358	22:9	3.1971
12:10	3.2347, 4.3209	22:10	2.1569
13:9	3.1971	22:13	2.1193
14:11	3.2347	22:14	3.2444
14:14	2.1552, 3.2880	22:16	3.2437
16:13–14	3.2536	22:17	4.3320
16:15	3.1944, 3.1971,	22:18–19	2.1569
	3.2490, 4.3441	22:20	1.27

New Testament Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha

Acts Andr. Mth.		Apoc. Pet.
26	3.2086	2	3.2084
Acts John		Apos. Con.
89	3.2130	7.36.13	4.3139
Acts Pet.	3.2084	(Arab.) Gos. Inf.
5	3.2146	9–26	3.2122
8	3.2086
Acts Phil.		Ep. Apos.
2.10 (15)	4.3150	§19	2.1218
		§35	2.1218
Acts Pil.		Gos. Eb.	3.2121
Prologue 1	1.621	1	2.1751
		2	2.1751, 2.1767,
Acts Thom.			2.1774
20	1.621	3	2.1751, 3.2004
48	1.621, 2.1191	6	2.1213, 2.1214
96	1.621, 2.1191
102	2.1191	Gos. Heb.
104	1.621	2	1.563, 2.1751
106	1.621, 2.1191
107	1.621, 2.1191	Gos. Jud. Isc.	3.1990
Ap. Jas.		33	3.2113, 3.2114,
8.6–10	4.3030	36	3.2115
			3.2114

39	3.2113	10	1.358, 4.3036
41-42	3.2113	12	1.24, 1.454,
43-44	3.2113		2.1090, 4.3398
56	3.2112	13	1.24, 3.1978,
58	3.2114		4.3398
Gos. Naz.		14	2.1260, 3.1943,
			3.2748, 3.2753,
			3.2758, 3.2762,
			4.3331, 4.3345,
			4.3446, 4.3464
frag. 2	1.563, 2.1751, 2.1760, 3.2004	14:1-3	4.3360
Gos. Nic.	4.3392	14:4b	1.180
18.2	2.1747	14:4a	1.180
		14:4	1.178, 1.179,
			1.271, 1.272
Gos. Pet.		16	1.178, 1.358,
1.2	3.2086		1.359, 4.3036
2.4	3.2086	17	1.178, 1.459,
2:7	4.3330		3.1946
3	3.2341	18	1.24, 1.254,
3.6-8	3.2023		1.357
3.7	3.2133		4.3360
4.10	3.2086	18:2-3	1.24, 1.178,
4.10-5.20	3.2023	20	1.272, 3.1978,
4.12	3.2134		3.2881, 4.3039,
4.14	3.2025		4.3206
6.19	3.2086, 3.2133	21	1.103, 3.2555,
6.21	3.2390		3.2881, 4.3035,
7.25-26	2.1213		4.3039
9.35-11.49	3.2418	21:5-7	1.178
10	3.2392	22	1.24, 1.256,
12	2.1255		1.272, 3.1978,
14.59-60	3.2027		3.2130, 3.2132,
			4.3209, 4.3399
Gos. Thom.		24	1.24
2	1.178, 3.1946	25	1.24
3	1.24, 1.497,	26	1.24, 1.178
	3.1978, 3.2881	27	3.1978,
3:1	4.3206		3.2751
3:1-3	1.178	28	3.1978
3:3	4.3206	28:1-4	4.3366
4	3.2059	30	1.254
4:4	1.180	31	2.1191, 2.1220,
5:2	1.178		3.2031, 3.2075,
6	1.24, 1.254, 3.2758, 4.3331, 4.3345	33	3.2076, 3.2079
6-7	3.1946	33	1.254
6:3	1.178	33:1	1.178
6:5-6	1.178	33:2-3	1.178
7-9	3.1979	34	1.178, 1.254
8	1.254, 3.1978, 3.2555, 4.3039	35	1.22, 1.178,
8:1	4.3023	36	4.2940, 4.3036
9	3.2074, 3.2079, 3.2554, 3.2881, 4.3039		1.24, 1.178,
			1.456, 4.3246,
			4.3263
		37	1.24, 3.2130

38	3.2141	65	1.274, 1.357,
39	1.24, 1.254, 1.455, 3.2096, 3.2765		1.456, 2.1090, 2.1152, 2.1212, 3.2074, 3.2075, 3.2079, 3.2555, 4.3023, 4.3024, 4.3039
39:1	4.3206
39:1-2	1.178
40	1.24, 1.254
41	1.178	65-66	1.254
42	1.24	66	3.2075
43	1.24, 1.357, 3.2765	68	1.178, 1.261, 1.357
44	1.24, 1.178, 3.2482	68-69	3.197
45	1.178, 3.2095, 3.2765	69	1.24
46	1.178, 2.1752, 3.1978, 3.2498	69a	1.261
46:2	4.3206	69b	1.261
47	1.455, 3.2705, 4.3345	69:1	1.178
47:1-2	1.178	69:2	1.178, 4.3055
48	1.24, 1.343, 4.3459	71	1.503, 2.1196, 2.1213, 3.2400, 3.2638, 3.2646, 3.2648, 3.2649, 3.2667
50	1.24, 1.460	73	1.178
51	1.178, 1.455, 3.2062	76	1.254, 3.1978, 3.2881, 4.3023, 4.3035, 4.3039
52	1.455, 2.1752, 3.2062, 3.2072, 3.2765	76:3	1.178
53	3.1946, 3.2762	78	1.24, 1.178, 2.1752
54	1.24, 1.178, 1.256, 1.260, 1.261, 1.357, 3.1979, 4.3206, 4.3209	79	1.24
55	1.24, 4.2971	81	1.24, 1.455, 3.2062
55:1-2a	1.178	82	1.358, 1.408, 1.455, 3.1976, 3.2062, 3.2076, 3.2077, 3.2079, 3.2080, 3.2203, 4.3030
55:2b	1.178	83	1.24
56	1.24, 3.1946	86	1.178, 3.2478, 3.2482
57	1.254, 3.2554, 3.2569, 3.2570, 4.3024, 4.3039, 4.3209	89	1.178, 3.2765
58	1.455	90	1.254
61:1	1.178	92:1	1.178, 3.1978
61:3	1.178	93	1.254
62:1	4.3371	94	1.178, 3.1978
63	1.24, 3.1978, 3.2555, 3.2569, 4.3039	95	1.24, 1.178
63-64	3.1979	96	3.2881
63:1	4.3023	96-99	4.3034, 4.3209
64	1.24, 1.178, 1.345, 3.2555, 4.3039	96:1	4.3206
		96:1-2	1.178
		97	1.256, 1.455, 3.1982, 3.2064, 3.2555, 4.3023, 4.3025, 4.3035, 4.3036, 4.3039

98	1.24, 1.256, 1.455, 3.1982, 3.2555, 4.3023, 4.3024, 4.3035, 4.3036, 4.3037, 4.3038	Prot. Jas. 1-8 8-9 9 9.1-2 9.2 10 12	3.2376 3.2376 2.1800 3.2101 3.2100, 3.2436 2.1752 2.1752
99	1.24, 1.254	17.1-2	3.2100
100	1.352	17-18	3.2101
101	1.24, 1.178, 4.2971	18.1	3.2100, 3.2120, 3.2373
102	1.24, 1.178, 1.455	22.1-2	3.2362
103	1.178, 4.3035	22-24	2.1747, 2.1752
104	2.1752, 4.3324, 4.3331
106	4.3459	Ps.-Clem.
107	1.178, 3.1978, 3.2555, 4.3039, 4.3209	Hom. 2.17 2.23-24	2.1752 2.1752
109	1.254, 1.357, 3.1978, 3.2881, 4.3023, 4.3039	2.44.2 3.22 3.52.1	2.1214 2.1752 2.1214
113	1.178, 1.349, 2.1090, 3.1978, 3.2881	Recog. 1.53.5-1.54.9 1.60.1-4 2.1	2.1752 2.1752 1.429
Inf. Gos. Thom.		2.8	2.1752
6-8	4.3241	3.61	2.1752
7.2	3.2361
13.1	3.2120
16	3.2376	Sec. Gos. Mk.
16.1-2	3.2100	frag. 1 frag. 2	3.1988, 3.2111 3.2111
Pist. Sophia
1.7	2.1747

Dead Sea Scrolls

CD ( Damascus Document )		V, 17-19	3.2536, 3.2856
		VI, 10-11	2.1280
I, 5-9	3.2853	VI, 11	1.415
I, 9-11	1.415	VI, 15	2.1632
I, 18-20	2.1188	VI, 20-21	2.1267
II, 7-10	3.2581	VII, 3-4	2.1769
III, 12-16	3.2597, 3.2606	VII, 18	1.415
III, 18-IV, 4	2.1519	IX, 3	2.1257
IV, 4	2.1211	X, 7-9	3.2606
IV, 20-21	2.1266	X, 14-15	3.2605
IV, 20-V, 2	2.1141, 2.1142, 2.1266	X, 14-XI, 18	2.1265
IV, 20-V, 6	2.1713, 3.2759	X, 15-XI, 18	3.2605
V, 6-8	2.1214	X, 17-19	3.2606, 3.2610
V, 11	2.1769	X, 20	3.2607, 3.2608
		X, 21	3.2606

X, 22-23	3.2607, 3.2608	XV, 15	4.3326
XI, 3-4	3.2606	XVII, 35-36	3.2586
XI, 5-6	4.3149	XVIII, 14-15	4.3326
XI, 7-9	3.2606	XIX, 10-14	3.2589
XI, 12-16	3.2582
XI, 13-14	2.1265, 2.1266	1QH <sup>a</sup> ( Hodayot <sup>a</sup> )
XI, 13.16	4.3149	III, 20-23	2.1274
XI, 14	3.2591	III, 21-23	2.1272
XI, 14-15	2.1280, 3.2606	III, 25-36	2.1771
XI, 16-17	3.2606	III, 27-38	2.1274
XI, 17-18	3.2606	7 II, 2-3	2.1277
XI, 21-23	4.3112	VII, 6-7	2.1769, 2.1771
XII, 2-3	1.621, 3.2856	VII, 29-30	2.1276
XII, 11-15	2.1776	X, 10-11	2.1278
XII, 12	2.1776	X, 15	2.1278
XII, 15-17	2.1695	XI	2.1274, 2.1275,
XII, 19	4.3114		2.1276
XII, 23	4.3114	XI, 3-14	2.1274
XIII, 13	4.3327	XI, 10-14	2.1274
XIII, 14	2.1632	XI, 13	2.1272
XIII, 15-17	3.2759	XI, 20-37	2.1274
XIII, 17	2.1141	XI, 20-21	2.1277
XIII, 17-18	2.1266	XI, 21-24	2.1275
XIV, 20	4.3301	XI, 22-24	2.1272
XV, 1	4.3148	XIV, 12-13	2.1769
XVI, 5	3.2856	XV, 23	2.1278
XIX, 35	4.3323	XVI, 2-3	2.1769
XIX, 35-XX, 1	2.1278	XVI, 6-7	2.1769
XX, 1	1.415	XIX	2.1274-1276
XX, 10	4.3112, 4.3114,	XIX, 6-17	2.1274
	4.3116	XIX, 13-17	2.1274, 2.1275
XX, 13	4.3112, 4.3114,	XIX, 16	2.1272
	4.3116	XIX, 18	2.1274
XX, 13-14	2.1278	XXV, 34-XXVII, 3	2.1277
XX, 14	4.3323	XXVI, 6-9	2.1277
		XXVI, 26-28	2.1277
CD-A
XII, 21-22	4.3117	1QIsa <sup>a</sup>	4.3316, 4.3323
		61:10	4.3315
1QapGen ( Genesis Apocryphon )		1QIsa <sup>b</sup>	4.3316
XIX, 10-XX, 34	4.3069
XX, 16	3.2714	1QM ( War Scroll )
XX, 16-19	3.2857	I, 1	3.2856
XX, 22	2.1250	I, 2	2.1633
XX, 26	3.2714	I, 7	2.1632
XX, 28-29	3.2763	I, 10-11	3.2857
XX, 29 (SHR II.181)	2.1250, 4.3078	I, 14-15	4.3073
		(SHR VI:35-36)
1QH ( Hodayot )	4.3456	II, 1-9	3.2897
3	3.2406	II, 5-6	2.1498, 3.2286
16 [olim 11]	3.2225	III, 1-4	3.2897
III, 18	3.2857	III, 4	4.3112
XI, 19-20	3.2626, 3.2627	III, 13	3.2897
XI, 20-23	3.2627	IV, 1-2	3.2856

V, 1	2.1256	III, 13-IV, 26	2.1257
V, 3-4	3.2897	III, 15-16	3.2581
V, 16	3.2897	III, 19-21	2.1632
VII, 5	3.2856	III, 20-23	3.2856
VII, 6	3.2857	III, 23	3.2856
VII, 9-IX, 7	3.2897	III, 24-25	3.2857
X, 2-8	3.2897	IV, 9-14	2.1633
X, 9	2.1211	IV, 20-22	2.1769, 2.1771,
XI	3.2286,		3.2732, 3.2857
	3.2586	IV, 21	2.1769, 3.2409
XI, 1	3.2286	V, 2	2.1632
XI, 8	3.2856	V, 2-5	4.3112
XII, 7-8	3.2857	V, 10	2.1632
XIII, 5	3.2714	V, 22	2.1211
XIII, 11	3.2856	VI, 1	2.1257
XIII, 11-16	3.2856	VI, 2	2.1247, 4.3301
XIV, 7	3.2522	VI, 2-5	4.3114
XIV, 14	2.1276	VI, 2-7	2.1257
XV, 2-3	3.2856	VI, 4-6	4.3340
XV, 15-18	3.2857	VI, 6-8	1.411
XVII, 5	2.1277	VI, 7-8	2.1537
XVII, 5-6	3.2857	VI, 13-23	2.1255
XVII, 7-8	2.1551	VI, 13-14	2.1256
XVIII, 1	3.2857	VI, 14-16	2.1263
XVIII, 3	3.2857	VI, 16-20	2.1263
XVIII, 11	3.2857	VI, 16-17	2.1264
		VI, 19-20	2.1257
I QpHab		VI, 20-23	2.1263
II, 3	1.415	VI, 22	2.1257
II, 8	1.415, 2.1278	VI, 27-VII, 2	3.2582
VII, 4-5	2.1278	VII, 5-6	3.2799
VIII-XII	2.1618	VII, 10	3.2799
VIII, 10-13	3.2582	VIII, 1-4	2.1256
IX, 3-5	3.2582	VIII, 4	2.1211
IX, 9-10	2.1194	VIII, 4-5	4.3116
X, 3-13	2.1771	VIII, 4-10	3.2736
XI, 4-8	2.1194	VIII, 5	2.1273
XII, 2-10	3.2582	VIII, 6	2.1211
XII, 8-9	2.1214	VIII, 8-9	2.1273, 4.3115
		VIII, 12-14	2.1771, 2.1776
1QS ( Rule of the Community )		VIII, 16	3.2409
1-2	1.428	IX, 4-5	4.3115
I, 9-10	3.2700	IX, 16	2.1632
I, 10	2.1632	IX, 26	3.2688
I, 12-13	2.1257	X	3.2683, 3.2686,
I, 18	3.2856		3.2687
II, 4-10	2.1633	X, 10	3.2687, 3.2688
II, 5	3.2856	X, 10-14	3.2687
II, 19	3.2856	X, 13-14	3.2687
III, 4-6	3.2785	X, 13-16	3.2687
III, 6-8	2.1769	X, 11-13	3.2581
III, 8	4.3327	XI, 1	3.2522
III, 13	2.1632	XI, 2-9	2.1273
		XI, 19-20	2.1776

1QSa		4Q129	4.3138
I, 4-5	1.411	l. 8	4.3141
I, 6	2.1211
II, 2-10	3.2736	4Q130	3.2686
II, 3-6	3.2717
II, 3-7	3.2717	4Q130-133	4.3138
II, 3-10	1.631
II, 3-11	2.1263	4Q131	3.2686
II, 5-7	3.2541
II, 9b-10 (11)	3.2717	4Q134	4.3138
II, 10	3.2717
II, 17-21	4.3340	4Q135	3.2686
1Q13	3.2686, 4.3138	4Q136	3.2686
frg. 15	4.3141
1Q28a		4Q137	4.3138
II, 3-4	2.1264	l. 23	4.3141
II, 11-22	2.1257	4Q139	4.3138
1Q32	3.2884	l. 9	4.3141
1Q174		4Q140	3.2686
III, 10-13	2.1199	4Q142	3.2686, 4.3138
4QFlor (4Q174, Florilegium )		4Q143	3.2686
I, 11	1.415	4Q146	3.2686
4QH <sup>a</sup> (4Q427)		4Q147	4.3138
III, 6-13	2.1277
IV, 7-9	2.1277	4Q148	4.3138
4QH <sup>c</sup>		4Q149	4.3139
1a-d 3-10	2.1277, 2.1278
II, 16-18	2.1277	4Q149-155	3.2686
4QTLevi		4Q150	3.2686, 4.3139
VIII, 1	2.1368
VIII, 3	2.1368	4Q151	3.2686, 4.3139
4QMMT	4.3456	4Q152	3.2686, 4.3139
LII-LVII	1.631
LV-LVII	3.2717	4Q153	3.2686, 4.3139
4QpPs37		4Q171
III, 2-5	4.3327	III, 16	2.1258
4QpNah		III, 15	2.1278
3-4 I, 7	3.2395	IV, 22-27	4.3314
4QShirShabb	3.2881	4Q174	3.2280
4Q128	4.3138	(4QFlorilegium)
4Q128-148	3.2686	I I, 1-5	3.2651
		I, 1-13	3.2400
		4Q175	3.2280

4Q176 frg. 1	3.2582 2.1776	4Q264a I, 5-8	3.2606, 3.2610
4Q181 1 II, 3-4	2.1272, 2.1274	4Q265 6 l. 5-7 7 l. 4-5 7 l. 2	4.3149 4.3149 4.3116
4Q184	3.2269	VI, 2-4 VI, 5-6 VI, 6 VI, 6-8 VII, 7	3.2606 2.1266 2.1694 3.2606 2.1256
4Q196 frg. 16	2.1354
4Q203 VIII, 12	2.1273	4Q266 9 III, 5-7	2.1266
4Q223-224 2 II, 48-49	2.1269	4Q267 9 II, 8	2.1279
4Q232	3.2884	4Q269 3:2 4 II, 2-3	2.1266 2.1267
4Q242 1-3	3.2529 2.1250	4Q270 6 III, 17-18 6 V, 18	2.1257 2.1280
4Q246	3.2475	4Q271 5 I, 9	2.1280
4Q249g 3-7	2.1264	4Q302 2 II-III	2.1249
4Q256 XI, 8-13 XI, 8 XI, 11 XI, 12-13 XI, 12 XVIII, 3	2.1255 2.1256 2.1263 2.1263 2.1264 2.1248	4Q381 frags. 14-16 frags. 76-77	2.1210 2.1210
4Q257 V-VI	2.1257	4Q390 I, 8-10	2.1214
4Q258 II, 5-6 II, 6 VI, 7 XII	2.1257 2.1247 2.1248 2.1273	4Q394 8 IV, 5 8 IV, 14	2.1267 2.1267
4Q259 III, 3-4 III, 19 II, 9-13	2.1248 2.1248 2.1256	4Q396 1-2 III, 4-5 1-2 IV, 2	2.1267 2.1267
4Q261 3:1	2.1255, 2.1263	4Q397 6-13:11	2.1267
4Q263 1-2	2.1257	4Q398 14 II	4.3456

4Q403 frg. li	1.151	4Q525 [4QBeat] 2 II, 1	3.2253, 3.2271 3.2271
4Q416 2 III 14–19a	4.2951	4Q541	1.415, 4.3316
4Q418 9–10	4.2951	4Q554–555	3.2884
4Q427 II, 18–V, 3 III, 6–13 IV, 7–9 IV, 8	2.1277 2.1278 2.1277 2.1276	4QDeut <sup>n</sup> IV, 7	4.3141
4Q427–429	4.3456	5Q8	3.2686
4Q431 II, 16–18	2.1277	5Q15	3.2884
4Q444	4.3069	6Q15 1.2–3 4.1–3	2.1266 2.1267
4Q462	3.2582	6Q18	4.3069
4Q491 8–10 I, 12	4.3316 2.1276	8Q3	3.2686, 4.3138
4Q503	3.2221	8Q4	3.2686
4Q504 ( Words of the Luminaries ) 1–2 VII, 7:4 V, 9	4.3114 4.3114 3.2580	8Q5	4.3069, 4.3138
4Q510	3.2530, 4.3069	11QMelch II, 4 II, 6 II, 9 II, 13 II, 18	4.3326 4.3326 4.3326 4.3326 4.3326
4Q511	3.2530, 4.3069	11QMiqd XIX, 14–15 XIX, 15–15 XXI, 4–10	4.3338 4.3340 4.3338, 4.3340
4Q521 ( Messianic Apocalypse ) 2 II, 1 2 II, 1–13 2 II, 5 2 II, 5–7 2 II, 11–12 2 II, 11–13 2 II, 12 5 II, 1–7 7 II, 1–7 II, 1 II, 8 II, 12	3.2529, 3.2857, 3.2881 3.2281, 4.3325 3.2589 4.3326 4.3325 4.3325 3.2261 2.1276 3.2589 3.2589 3.2858 3.2858 2.1198, 3.2858	11QPs <sup>a</sup> 154 XXVII, 2–11 XVIII XVIII, 5–8	2.1051, 2.1218 2.1048 1.411
		11QT ( Temple Scroll ) XIII, 9–XXX, 2 XXIX, 8–10 XLIV, 4–5 XLV, 8–18 XLV, 12–14 LIV, 4–5	4.3117 3.2851 2.1141 2.883 3.2716, 3.2717 2.1141, 3.2759

LVII, 5-6	3.2782	11Q13 (11QMelch)
LVII, 15-19	3.2759	II, 1	3.2282
LVII, 17-18	2.1266	II, 6-8	2.1600
LVII, 17-19	2.1141
LVII, 24-25	2.1266	II, 13	3.2584
LXIV, 6-13	3.2398	II, 15-16	2.1037
LXVI, 8-11	3.2859
		11Q18	3.2884
11QT <sup>a</sup> , 1. Temple Scroll <sup>a</sup>
XLV, 12-14	1.631	11Q19	4.3456
XLVIII, 3-5	2.1776	XXIX, 9-10	3.2651
LIV	1.621	XLV, 12-13	3.2541
LIV, 11-12	2.1266	XLVI, 10	3.2217
LXIV, 13-20	2.1280	XLVIII, 14-15	3.2541
		LIV, 11-12 [4-5]	2.1266
11QTS		LVII, 24-25	2.1266
XXIX, 8-10	2.1605	LXIV, 13-20	2.1280
11Q5 ( Psalms Scroll )	3.2530	11Q20	4.3456
XXVII, 9-10	3.2858, 4.3069
		XQphyl 3	4.3138
11Q11	3.2530, 4.3069
II, 1-2	4.3079
I, 3	4.3070

Philo

Agr.		82-95	4.3148
44	4.3115	98	1.411
		100	1.411
Cher.		106-107	4.3144
86-90	2.1699	106-120	4.2949
100-101	2.1214	107	4.2950
		165-167	4.2949
Conf.		Flacc.
56	2.1211	1	3.2355
129	3.2460	83-84	3.2390
196	3.2580	41	4.3114
Congr.		45	4.3114
169	2.1776	47-49	2.1725, 4.3114
		53	2.1725, 4.3114
Contempl.		122	4.3114
8-9	2.1631	122-124	4.3119
10	2.1631
28	4.3116	Fug.
29	4.3116	198	3.2580
73-74	4.3340
Decal.		Her.
36	4.3141, 4.3142	78	2.1211
50-51	4.3144	168	4.3144
52	3.2580	186	3.2670
61	3.2580	206	3.2580

Hypoth.		Plant.
7.1-9	4.3142	90-92	4.3257
7.13	4.3117, 4.3119, 4.3122	Post.
11.1	4.3114, 4.3115	67	4.3115
Leg.		Prob.
2.105	2.1776	21-27	4.3246
		75	4.3115, 4.3117
Legat.		75-76	4.3114
38	3.2158	76	4.3115
115	4.3138	79	3.2311
132	4.3114	81	4.3115
132-134	2.1725	81-82	4.3112, 4.3116
134	4.3114	85	4.3115
137	4.3114	86	4.3123
138	4.3114
152	4.3114	Prov.
156	4.3114, 4.3116	64	2.1726, 4.3115
157	1.411
159-161	3.2355, 3.2356	QE
165	4.3114	1.19	4.3115
191	4.3114
200-203	4.3240	QG
203-348	1.166	2.66	4.3115
210	1.428, 4.3138
299	3.2358	Somn.
299-304	3.2358	1.67	3.2580
299-305	3.2157, 3.2357	1.76	3.2580
300-303	3.2297	1.205	1.427
301	3.2358
301-302	3.2354	Spec.
315	3.2218	1.65	1.621
346	4.3114	1.67-77	2.1214
371	4.3114	1.69-70	2.1726
		1.77	3.2670
Migr.		1.291-292	2.1776
60	2.1210	1.303	2.1210
89-93	3.2604	1.315	3.2536
91	3.2610	1.315-317	1.621
113-114	2.1211	2.2-28.224	4.3148
164-165	4.3257	2.30	3.2580
		2.61-62	1.411
Mos.		2.61-63	4.3144
1.156	4.3082	2.63	3.2689, 3.2695
1.278	2.1210	2.198	3.2580
2.22	3.2607	2.224-241	4.2950
2.215-216	1.411, 4.3117	3.30	2.1721
2.228	2.1309	3.90-91	4.3190
2.288	1.502	3.159	3.2299
		3.208-209	1.270
Mut.		4.40	4.3148
29	3.2580	4.164	4.3203
131	4.3257
		Virt.
Opif.	3.2221	95	3.2689, 3.2695,
128	1.411		4.3144

Josephus

Ant.		8.45-49	2.1218, 3.2530
1-11	2.1660, 2.1673	8.46	3.2531
1.1-4	2.1645	8.46-48	3.2857, 3.2870
1.4	2.1645	8.46-49	2.1232
1.5	2.1641	8.47	4.3079
1.6-7	2.1679	8.95	2.1520
1.70	2.1604	8.95-96	3.2334
2.217-218	3.2589	8.134	4.3119
2.223	3.2521	8.137	4.3119
2.275-276	3.2582	8.138	4.3119
2.285	3.2521	8.280	3.2579
2.295	3.2521	8.381	4.3002
2.345	3.2521	9.7	4.3002
2.347	3.2521	9.58	3.2521
3.1	3.2521	9.60	3.2521
3.30	3.2521	9.288-291	3.2701
3.38	3.2521	10	2.1679
3.91	4.3142, 4.3148	10.152-153	2.1524
3.122	4.3002	10.214	3.2521
3.248	3.2348	10.235	3.2521
4.90-95	3.2352	10.268	1.29
4.202	3.2390	10.278	2.1504
4.210	1.412	10.279	2.1505
4.210-211	1.414	11.347	2.1499
4.212-213	3.2683, 3.2688	12.22	3.2579
4.224	2.1736	12.42	4.3427
4.225	2.1736	12.142	4.3419
4.242-243	4.3191	12.148-149	4.3225
4.253	2.1721	12.154-224	2.1460
5.23	2.1736	12.225-227	2.1501
5.28	3.2521	12.228-238	2.1460
5.44	3.2390, 3.2415	12.237	2.1508
5.63f	4.3223	12.257-264	2.1215
5.64	4.3002	12.275	2.1498
5.178	4.2976	12.331	4.3223
5.318	2.1524	12.387-388	3.2365
5.361	2.1524	13	2.1501, 2.1504
6.98	4.3002	13.61-64	2.1508
6.107	2.1524	13.65-70	2.1215
6.122	2.1524	13.74-79	2.1508
6.149	4.3286	13.166	2.1734
6.166-168	3.2858	13.171	2.1497
6.166-169	1.631, 3.2857	13.171-173	2.1500
6.242	2.1524	13.173	2.1504
6.247	4.3002	13.252	4.3149
7.110	2.1524	13.255-257	4.3225
7.284	4.3043	13.275-277	4.3225
7.305	4.3002	13.288-289	4.3309
8.12	2.1524	13.288-298	2.1501
8.42-49	1.631, 4.3070	13.288-299	2.1502
8.45	3.2858	13.294	2.1506
8.45-46	2.1232	13.297	2.1495, 2.1505

13.297-298	3.2453	15.370-371	4.3421
13.298	2.1496	15.371	2.1501, 2.1504
13.299	2.1502	15.373	2.1238
13.311-313	4.3116	15.373-376	4.3116
13.319	4.3226	15.380-423	4.3417
13.373	2.1520	15.409	2.1238
13.380	3.2395	15.411-416	3.2640
13.401	2.1503	15.417-420	3.2334
13.408	2.1495	15.421	3.2334
14.21	3.2365	16.1-3	3.2311
14.22-25	4.3067	16.64	3.2299
14.36	2.1238	16.64-65	4.3421
14.48-76	4.3226	16.136-141	1.168
14.82-97	4.3227	16.154	4.3418
14.159-161	4.3227	16.164	4.3120
14.163-184	2.1736	16.166-168	3.2218
14.168-180	2.1737	16.169-170	3.2218
14.172	4.3232	16.179-183	4.3422
14.175	2.1737	16.182	3.2266
14.214	4.3120	16.191	4.3419
14.214-215	4.3123	16.203	4.3419
14.227-258	4.3114	16.282-290	3.2320
14.269-261	4.3119	16.290	4.3422
14.374-389	3.1911	16.352	3.2320, 4.3422
14.381-382	4.3229	16.356-394	4.3423
14.381-385	3.2315	16.392-394	3.2379
14.389	3.2317	16.393-394	3.2379
14.403	4.3228	16.394	1.172
14.421-422	4.3229	17.1-10	3.2321
14.455	4.3119	17.20	1.171
14.463	4.3119	17.23-25	4.3229
14.465	3.2317	17.23-28	4.3422, 4.3423
14.470-480	3.2315	17.41	2.1683, 3.2605
14.475	2.1720	17.42	4.3423
14.487	3.2318	17.42-44	3.2379
14-18	2.1669	17.45	4.3424
15.3	4.3232	17.57	4.3423
15.6	3.2379	17.63-64	1.407
15.8-10	3.2379	17.116	3.2320
15.45-46	3.2365	17.146	1.171
15.53-55	3.2379	17.167	2.1606, 3.2315,
15.121-126	3.2221		3.2379
15.172-178	3.2379	17.182-187	3.2379
15.222-236	3.2379	17.188	1.171
15.230-231	1.172	17.191	3.2315
15.247-251	3.2379	17.195	4.3419
15.260-266	3.2379	17.204-205	4.3418, 4.3427
15.284-290	3.2379	17.206-207	4.3230
15.303	3.2299	17.219-249	1.171
15.331-337	1.168	17.224-340	3.1911
15.360	4.3423	17.271-276	3.2393
15.365	3.2299, 4.3421	17.271-281	4.3417
15.368	4.3421	17.273-274	2.1198
15.370	2.1496	17.273-276	1.408

17.278	2.1198	18.55-89	3.2157
17.278-285	3.2393	18.60	2.1662
17.289	1.169, 4.3230	18.60-62	3.2355
17.295	2.1240	18.62	1.569
17.299-314	3.1911	18.63	1.414, 3.2521,
17.299-323	1.171		3.2866
17.308	4.3418	18.63-64	1.59, 1.335,
17.317-318	3.2353		1.407, 1.486,
17.318-320	4.3417		1.619, 2.1190,
17.319	3.2821, 4.3417		2.1540, 2.1617,
17.327	3.2388		2.1647, 3.2168,
17.342	3.2318		3.2204, 3.2387
17.347	4.3116	18.64	1.569
17.355	4.3413	18.81-85	3.2356
18	2.1501	18.83-84	4.3430
18.1-2	4.3413, 4.3427	18.87-89	1.569
18.1-3	1.644	18.89	3.2297, 3.2353
18.1-10	4.3416	18.90	4.3418
18.3	4.3415, 4.3427	18.101-105	1.569
18.3-4	4.3237	18.102	1.172
18.4	2.1496	18.104-105	1.174
18.4-6	4.3230	18.106	3.2319
18.4-10	4.3430	18.109-115	2.1780
18.5	1.30	18.110	1.172
18.9	4.3426	18.116	1.175
18.10	4.3413	18.116-117	3.2829
18.11	2.1503	18.116-119	1.569, 2.1540,
18.11-22	2.1501		2.1752, 2.1756,
18.11-25	2.1627, 3.2224		2.1758, 3.2171
18.14	1.502, 3.2260,	18.117	2.1759, 2.1760,
	3.2452		2.1766, 2.1779
18.16	1.502, 2.1497,	18.118	2.1758
	3.2452	18.119	2.1780
18.16-17	3.2453	18.136	1.174
18.17	2.1497, 2.1505	18.163	3.2150
18.18	1.502	18.181-182	3.2356
18.19	2.1498	18.240-255	1.173
18.21	4.3117	18.250	3.2357
18.23	3.2319	18.252	3.2319, 3.2353
18.26	4.3413, 4.3416	18.256	3.2319, 3.2353
18.27	1.169	19	2.1683
18.28	4.2975, 4.2976,	19.294	4.3281
	4.3000	19.299	4.3417
18.29-30	2.1215	19.299-305	4.3120
18.32	3.2329	19.299-311	4.3118
18.35	1.569, 3.2352,	19.300-305	2.1725
	3.2353	19.332	2.1683
18.36-38	1.170, 1.569,	19.345	2.1523
	3.2730	19.351	3.2319, 3.2353
18.37	3.2792, 4.3236	20	2.1679
18.38	2.1259	20.10-14	2.1739
18.55-59	1.166, 1.569,	20.46	4.3119
	3.2297, 3.2354,	20.97-98	1.632
	3.2355	20.97-99	3.2789

20.108	1.224	1.401	3.2334
20.118	1.433	1.405-406	4.3001
20.164-165	1.166, 4.3043	1.408-414	1.168
20.167-168	3.2789	1.420	4.3119
20.168-172	1.632	1.443-444	1.172
20.169-172	3.2536, 3.2789	1.473	4.3419
20.179-181	2.1226	1.479	4.3419
20.181	3.2582, 3.2730	1.536-551	4.3423
20.189	4.3119	1.550-551	1.172
20.197-203	2.1499, 2.1515,	1.561	2.1683
	2.1541	1.562	1.171
20.199	2.1497, 2.1506,	1.571	2.1618
	3.2415, 4.3145	1.577	4.3423
20.200	1.59, 1.335,	1.623	3.2320
	1.407, 2.1209,	1.640	2.1530
	2.1280, 3.2168,	1.646	1.171
	3.2204, 3.2439	1.648	2.1683, 3.2605
20.205-206	2.1226	1.648-655	3.2620
20.206-207	3.2582, 3.2730	1.650	1.502
20.208-210	1.166	1.664	1.171
20.216-17	2.1738	1.665	3.2315, 3.2379
20.228	2.1524	2	2.1504
		2.1-100	2.1680
War		2.2	2.1683
1-2	2.1669	2.4	4.3418, 4.3427
1.1-30	2.1527, 2.1813	2.8-13	2.1618
1.1-369	2.1531	2.14-38	1.171
1.2	2.1645	2.14-100	3.1911
1.2-3	2.1646	2.16-18	2.1529
1.3	2.1646, 2.1649	2.23	2.1529
1.6-8	2.1645	2.37-38	2.1528
1.8-10	2.1646	2.39-74	2.1528
1.9	2.1645, 2.1646	2.42	2.1618
1.13-16	3.2177	2.55-56	3.2393
1.17	2.1645	2.56	1.408, 4.3228
1.30	2.1645	2.65	2.1618
1.33	2.1508	2.68	1.169
1.67-68	2.1502	2.75	2.1529
1.78-80	2.1506	2.80-100	1.171
1.89	2.1618	2.86	4.3418
1.97	3.2395	2.93-95	3.2353
1.110	3.2605	2.98	4.3240
1.110-112	2.1683	2.110	2.1532
1.150	2.1618	2.111	3.2318, 4.3413
1.209	2.1683, 4.3227	2.117	3.2158, 4.3413
1.230	2.1656	2.117-118	1.644
1.282	2.1238	2.118	3.2365, 3.2578,
1.282-285	3.1911, 3.2315,	2.119-166	4.3416, 4.3427
	3.2317		2.1500, 2.1627,
1.340	2.1530		3.2224
1.349-352	3.2315	2.124	4.3114, 4.3115
1.351	3.2318	2.125	4.3120
1.369	2.1531	2.128	2.1537
1.393	4.3430	2.129	4.3117, 4.3119

2.131	3.2579	2.409-410	2.1665
2.135	3.2590	2.417	2.1618
2.136	4.3068	2.433	4.3230, 4.3427
2.143-144	3.2730	2.455	2.1632
2.147	2.1537, 3.2606	2.463	2.1202
2.150	4.3117	2.466	2.1618
2.150-158	2.1505	2.503	2.1530
2.154-155	1.502	2.540-545	4.3239
2.160-161	4.3122	2.568	4.3223
2.162	3.2623	2.614-619	2.1681
2.162-164	2.1504	2.614-625	2.1681
2.163	2.1496, 3.2260	2.626	2.1681
2.163-165	3.2452	2.627	2.1516
2.164-165	1.502	2.641	4.3119
2.166	2.1506	3	4.3002
2.167-168	4.2976	3.1-3	2.1656
2.168	1.170, 2.1533	3.35-40	4.3223
2.169-170	2.1618	3.55	4.3432
2.169-174	1.166, 3.2297, 3.2355	3.56-58	2.1279
2.169-177	1.569, 2.1661, 3.2157, 4.3147	3.95	1.165
2.171	2.1661	3.308	2.1632
2.174	2.1522, 2.1533	3.374-375	1.502
2.175-177	3.2355	3.377	3.2722
2.182-183	1.173	3.400-402	3.2169
2.184-203	4.3147	3.438-442	2.1647
2.185-203	1.166	3.463	4.3001
2.208	2.1683	3.515	4.3002
2.220	2.1534	3.515-516	4.3001
2.223	2.1618	4.130	4.3240
2.229-230	2.1618	4.135	2.1618
2.254-257	1.166	4.147-154	3.2582
2.258-264	1.632	4.197-207	2.1618
2.259	2.1192, 3.2789	4.310-318	2.1618
2.261	3.2789	4.314-333	2.1679
2.261-263	3.2536	4.316-321	2.1541
2.264	2.1631	4.317	3.2415, 3.2722
2.264-265	2.1618	4.319-321	2.1499, 2.1515
2.273	3.2311	4.378	2.1618
2.285	2.1725, 4.3120	4.408	4.3118
2.287	4.3120, 4.3123	4.444	4.3240
2.289	4.3120, 4.3123	4.509	2.1618
2.291	4.3120	4.601-604	2.1522
2.301	2.1739	5.2	1.166
2.318	2.1739	5.19-20	3.2582
2.331	2.1740	5.51	4.3002
2.336	2.1740	5.144	2.1460, 2.1739
2.344	2.1460	5.145	1.428
2.369-372	3.2221	5.195	2.1536
2.390	1.166	5.200	4.3281
2.405	2.1740	5.223	2.1214
2.407	2.1740	5.227	3.2716
2.408-409	2.1618	5.367	1.166
		5.378	1.166
		5.379-381	2.1531

5.400–402	2.1631	1.67	2.1683
5.419	2.1632	1.142	2.1631
5.433–444	2.1631	1.182	4.3318
5.438	3.2582	1.198	4.3119
5.449–451	3.2389	1.209	4.3119
5.545	3.2722	1.281	3.2715
5.566	2.1632	2	2.1679
5.567	2.1530	2.3	2.1631
6.12–314	3.2287	2.10	4.3114
6.110	2.1632	2.12	2.1631
6.201–213	2.1647	2.26	2.1631
6.249–253	3.2416	2.37	2.1631
6.250	3.2736	2.86	2.1631
6.288	2.1632	2.121	3.2579
6.288–300	2.1602	2.136	2.1631
6.300	3.2794	2.142	2.1631
6.300–301	1.77	2.145	4.3082
6.300–309	2.1192, 2.1194,	2.175	1.414
	2.1618	2.178	1.412, 1.428,
	3.2736		4.3124, 4.3138
6.301	2.1538	2.190	3.2695
6.311–312	1.166, 2.1521,	2.190–192	3.2579, 4.3142
6.312–313	2.1539, 3.2169	2.193–196	3.2735
	2.1739	2.204	4.3138
6.354	2.1726	2.206	4.3144
6.420–427	4.3120	2.218	1.502
7.43–44	4.3117	2.236	2.1631
7.139–148	4.3117	2.254	2.1631
7.144	4.3117	2.291	4.3144
7.148	3.2388
7.164	2.1232	Vita
7.180–185	3.2857, 4.3070	1–6	2.1684
7.185	4.3427	6	3.2377
7.253	2.1632	8	1.428
7.255–258	4.3119	9	2.1631
7.287	4.3119	11	4.2958
7.290	1.502	11–12	2.1760, 2.1762
7.343–346	2.1618	12	2.1504
7.367	2.1618	16	2.1684
7.409	3.2365	17–19	4.3239
7.409–410	3.2365	17–412	4.3239
7.416	2.1508	27	2.1639
7.423–425	2.1618	30–70	4.3239
7.437–441	2.1645	35–36	2.1683
7.454	2.1641, 2.1645	37	1.170
16		40	2.1650
		40–41	2.1649
Apion		61	2.1683
1	2.1679	65	1.170
1.6	2.1645	66–67	3.2303
1.9	1.490	69	4.3119
1.18	2.1683	85–103	2.1681, 2.1682,
1.28–36	3.2377		2.1685
1.50	2.1645, 2.1647		2.1685
1.60	4.3138	104–111	2.1685

122–125	2.1685	284	4.3119
128–144	2.1685	293	4.3114
134–135	2.1120	294	4.3118
170–178	2.1685	295	4.3119, 4.3123
189–195	2.1515	338	2.1650
190–191	4.3240	340	2.1649
191	3.2605	360–361	2.1645
197–203	2.1618	361–363	2.1647, 2.1649
208–209	2.1679	363	2.1683
216–231	2.1683	364–367	2.1645, 2.1646
234	3.2302	369–372	2.1682
271	4.3118	370	2.1683
271–308	2.1681, 2.1682	398–406	4.3002
277	2.1725, 4.3110, 4.3114, 4.3118, 4.3119, 4.3133	399	4.3002
		414–430	2.1684
		416	2.1647
277–279	3.2607	418–421	2.1684
279	4.3119	420	4.3239
280	1.411, 4.3114, 4.3119	425	2.1647

Apostolic Fathers and Ancient Christian Literature

Barn.		12.2	3.2132
2.5–6	4.3150	12.6	3.2132
2.6	3.2163
4.11	2.1215	Did.
6.13	3.2137	1.2–5	1.176, 4.3446
6.15	2.1215	1.3	1.357
7.4	3.2137	1.3–5	1.15
7.5	3.2138	1.30–31	3.2084
7.11	3.2138	2.3	4.3148
16.1–10	2.1215	2.9	3.2748
		3.1–6	4.3052
1 Clem.	3.2119	8.1	4.3331
1.1	2.1211	8.3	3.2678
2.1	3.1966	9–10	3.2014
2.4	2.1211	9.1–5	1.136
5.2–5	1.442	10.2	2.1215
13.2	1.15, 3.2126, 3.2146	11	4.3466
		11.1–6	4.3441
17.1	2.1775	11.4–12	1.180
29.1–3	2.1211	11.7	3.2482
46.2	3.2740	13.1–2	3.1941
46.3–4	2.1211	16	2.1814
46.8	3.2127	16.3–6	3.1916
49.5	2.1211	16.4–5	2.1325
59.2	2.1211
		Ign. Eph.
2 Clem.		20.2	3.2489
4.5	3.2133
5.2–4	3.2096, 3.2140	Ign. Magn.
8.5	3.2131, 3.2132, 3.2141	2	3.2163

Ign. Smyrn.		Vid.
3.1–3	3.2146	1	4.3265
3.3	3.2139	5	4.3265
Ign. Trall.		Anastasius Sinaitica
5	3.2145
Herm.		Viae dux
43.9	1.407	137.43–46	3.2337
Herm.		Aquinas
Sim.		Rom.
5.3.7	4.3331	4.3	3.2410
9.26.3	1.353	S.T.
Sim. 2	2.1768	III 56, 2	3.2410
Sim. 3	2.1768	Augustine
Sim. 4	2.1768	Catech.
Vis.		5	1.433
1.3.4	2.1211	Civ.
2.1.3	2.1211	6.10 (Seneca,	1.412
2.2.5	2.1211	De Superstitione )
2.4.2	2.1211	Cons.
3.5.1	2.1211	1.2.4	3.1824
3.8.3	2.1211	4.10.11	3.1824
3.9.10	2.1211	Quaest. ev.
4.2.5	2.1211	2.19	3.2555
4.3.5	2.1211	Serm.
Ign. Pol.		236.1	3.2410
4.2	1.407	Clement of Alexandria
Mart. Pol.		Exc.
12.2	2.1193	2.2	3.2142, 3.2147
Pol. Phil		67.2	3.2130
2.2–3	1.15	Hypotyp.
2.3	3.2127	7	3.2144
7.1	4.3448	Paed.
8.2	4.2967	1.52.2	3.2144
Ambrose		2.1.5–6	2.1126, 4.3246, 4.3260
In Luc.		2.11	4.3260
7.124	4.3265	Quis div.
Off.		33.1	3.2142
1.28	4.3265	40	3.2138
3.7	4.3265

Strom.		Epiphanius of Salamis
1.4.1	3.2143
1.5.1	3.2143	Pan.
1.7.1	3.2143	38.1.5	3.2112
1.11.1-3	3.2144	51.30	3.2336
1.15.2	3.2144
1.21.146	3.2335	Eusebius
1.24.158	3.1976
1.145.1-5	3.2122	Dem. ev.
1.145.6	3.2123	3	1.621
1.146.2-4	3.2123
1.158.2	3.2141, 3.2146	Hist. eccl.
1.177.2	3.2142, 3.2146	1.1.7-8	3.2170
2.45.4	3.2129	1.5.3	2.1649
2.45.5	3.2129	1.6.1	2.1521
2.91.2	3.2127	1.6.9	2.1649
3.30.1	3.2144	1.7.14	1.413, 4.3235
3.45.3	3.2130	1.8.5	2.1532
3.63.1-2	3.2130	1.10.2-6	3.2337
3.64.1	3.2130	1.11.1-6	2.1752
3.66.1-2	3.2130	2.1.4	3.2144
3.92.2	3.2132	2.23	4.3400
3.92.2-93.1	3.2130	2.23.1	3.2439
3.93.1	3.2129	2.23.3-4	2.1500
3.97.4	3.2142	2.23.5-6	4.3331
4.3.2	3.2144	2.23.10-16	2.1303
4.6	4.3260	2.23.13	3.2477
5.63.7	3.2129	3.9.1-2	2.1649
5.96.3	3.2129	3.9.3	2.1649
6.30.1	4.3080	3.9.10-11	2.1649
6.43.3	3.2146	3.10.8	2.1649
6.48.1-2	3.2146	3.11	1.432, 2.1333
6.61.1-3	3.2144	3.19-20	4.3377
7.55.6	3.2144	3.19.1	2.1303
		3.20.1-6	3.2309
Cyril of Alexandria		3.24.7-13	3.2004
		3.25.6	3.2059
Hom. Jo. 36		3.36.11	3.2146
54.1	3.2338	3.39.1-7	3.1823
		3.39.1-17	3.2136
Didascalia		3.39.2-4	3.2188
5	4.3331	3.39.3-4	1.425
5.12.16	4.3332	3.39.4	1.492, 2.1481, 3.1972
			3.1823
Didymus		3.39.14-17	1.429, 1.439, 1.442, 2.1492, 3.2197, 4.3343
		3.39.15	1.439
Comm. Eccl.			1.446
7.21-22	3.2117		(Quadratus, Apology )
		3.39.16	1.722
Comm. Ps.		4.3.1-2
88.8	3.2203
		4.5-6
Comm. Ps.
88.8	3.1976

4.5.3	2.1333	2.34.3	3.2131
4.6.1-4	2.1603	3.1.1	1.441, 1.442,
4.22.4	2.1333		1.444
5.1.44	2.1197	3.2.1	3.2143
5.8.1-5	4.3320	3.3.4	1.445
5.18.14	3.2146	3.9-11	3.2125
5.20.7	1.429	3.11.8	3.1824
5.23.1-25	4.3331	3.11.7-9	1.445
5.24.12	4.3332	3.11.8	1.98
6.12.1-6	3.2083	5.32	3.2785
6.14.6-7 (Clement, Hypotyposesis VI )	1.442	5.33.3-4	3.2137
6.14.7	3.1952	5.35	3.2785
20.7	2.1303	Jerome
Praep. ev.		Comm. Dan.
8.2-3	2.1752	9.24	3.2336
Hippolytus		Comm. Eph.
Haer.		5.4	1.24, 3.1976, 3.2203
5.7.20	3.2060	Comm. Ezech.
5.8.2 ( Naasaeen Tractate )	1.356	24.15	4.3138
Trad. ap.		Comm. Isa. 4	2.1751
25.1-4	4.3331	Comm. Matt.
Iamblichus		Prologue	3.2059
Myst.		23.5	4.3138
5.26	3.2532	Pelag. 3.2	2.1751
Ireneaus		Vir. ill.
Epid.		2	3.2477
3	3.2145	16.3-4	3.2146
9-10	3.2145	John Chrysostom
Haer.		Hom. Jo.
1.3.1	3.2143	36.1	3.2338
1.8.1	3.2143	Justin
1.8.5	3.2143	1 Apol.
1.11.1	3.2143	4	4.2967
1.20.1	4.3241	13.4	3.2389
1.20.2	3.2141	15	4.3246, 4.3263
1.21.1	3.2143	15-17	4.3263
1.24.6	3.2143	15.9-13	4.3446
1.25.5	3.2143	16.6	3.2683
1.30.14	3.2143	30	1.621, 2.1324, 4.3057
1.31.1	3.1990, 3.2112
2.22.3	3.2335, 3.2338
2.22.5	3.2335
2.22.5-6	3.2126

30.1	1.736	108.2	2.1191, 3.2179
31.5-6	1.722, 2.1200	108.3	3.2160
32.4-6	3.2160	111.2	1.475
33.5	1.475	113-120	3.2785
35.6	3.2133	113.1	1.475
40.5-6	3.2086	116.1	1.475
47-49	3.2160	120.3-4	2.1539
53.2-3	3.2160	141	2.1714
61.5	3.2139
66.3	1.137, 1.340	John Chrysostom
67	4.3120
Dial.		Adv. Iud.
7.3	3.2536	1.6.2	4.3120
19.6	4.3144	8.6.6	4.3120
25-26	3.2785
25.5	3.2160	Lib. pontiff.
33.1	1.475	7	4.3331
35	2.1196
35.3	3.2138	Melito
38	2.1196
46.1	1.475	Pasch.
47.5	3.2138	7	1.439
49	2.1752, 2.1777	93	3.2086
49.4-5	2.1780
50.2-5	2.1776	Opus imperf. in Matth.
51.2	3.2139	4.15	2.1784
69	1.621, 3.2536
69.7	1.736, 2.1191, 3.2122, 3.2399, 4.3057	Origen
70.2	3.2120	Cels.
78	4.3428, 4.3432	1.6	3.2866, 4.3057
78.5-6	3.2120	1.25	1.475
79	2.1196, 3.2373	1.28	3.2121, 3.2122, 3.2165, 3.2205, 4.3057
80	2.1196
82	2.1196	1.29	1.475
85	3.2857	1.33	3.2205
85.2-3	3.2530, 3.2532	1.38	1.621, 3.2866, 4.3057
88	2.1752
88.3	3.2121	1.38-39	3.2121
88.7	2.1774	1.39	3.2166
88.8	3.2120, 3.2121	1.45	3.2170
93.2	3.2683	1.46	4.3057
93.3	3.2683	1.47	2.1752, 2.1648
97	3.2390	1.51	4.3412
97.3	3.2134	1.62	3.2166
99.1	3.2133	1.63	3.2866
100.3	2.1341, 3.2489	1.68	1.621, 3.2122, 3.2536, 3.2857, 4.3057
102	1.621
103.6	3.2121
103.8	1.445	1.69	1.736, 3.2205
106-107	1.621	2.6	3.2166
108	1.621, 2.1200, 2.1209	2.13	3.2122
		2.13.68-85	2.1647

2.27	3.2122	Ps.-Clem.
2.32	3.2165	Hom.
2.44	3.2166	2.22.3	4.3084
2.46	3.2166	2.51.1	3.1976
2.49	1.736, 3.2122,	3.50	3.1976
	3.2165	18.20.4	3.1976
2.55	3.2166
2.74	3.2122	Ps.-Justin
3.22–23	3.2418	Res.
5.45	3.2857	9	3.2140
6.75	3.2165
7.29	3.2218	Ptolemy
8.41	3.2165	Flor.
		5.3	4.3135
Comm. Matt.
9.15	4.3332	Syriac Didascalia
10.17	2.1648, 3.2083,	21	3.2086
	3.2100, 3.2170
33	2.1233	Syriac Liber Graduum
Hom. Jer.		Serm.
3.3	1.408, 3.1976,	3.3	3.1976
	3.2203	15.4	3.1976
Hom. Luc.
1	3.2059	Tertullian
		Jejun.
		2.6	4.3332
Princ.	3.2221
1 praef. 8	3.2146	Marc.
4.1.5	3.2335	4.19.10	4.3422, 4.3429
Pachomius
		Pud.
Praecepta		20	1.440
139–140	1.428
Papias		Or.
frag 5.4	3.1972	18	4.3332
		Spect.
		30.6	3.2179
		Mishnah and Talmud
y. Abod. Zar.		y. Ketub.
2:2	3.2179	8:11 [32c]	1.411, 2.1696
2:40d	4.3080, 4.3143
y. Ber.		y. Meg.
1:5 [3c]	4.3140	3:1:III D	4.3113, 4.3121
5:3	1.16	4:5 fol. 75b	4.3139
9:13b	4.3080	4:10	1.16
y. Hag.		y. Ned.
2:2	3.2175	9:4	3.2699
2 [77a]	4.3310

y. Pesah.		b. Bek.
1:6	2.1696	7b	2.1776
6:1 p. 33a	4.3232
		b. Ber.
y. Rosh Hash.		12a	4.3140
1 [57b]	1.413	13b	3.2677
		17b	3.2175
y. Sanh.		19a	4.3067
7:16	3.2172	21a	3.2683, 3.2684,
23c	3.2175		3.2689
1.2:18d:12–19	2.1365	34b	4.3071
		51a	4.3338
y. Seb.		57b	4.3075
9:1	2.1225	61b	3.2689, 3.2696
		63a	3.2694
y. Shabb.		63b	1.421
1:4	2.1696	63b–64a	4.3242
12:13d	4.3084
14:3	3.2611	b. Besah
14:14d	4.3080	20a–b	1.136
16:8, p. 15d.	4.3241
		b. Erub.
y. Sotah		43a–b	2.1218
1:2	2.1721
1:16b	2.1721	b. Git.
1.16d	4.3080	36b	1.16
3:4	3.2832	56a	4.3327
		56b–57a	3.2172, 3.2173
y. Sukkah		57a	2.1235
5 [53a]	4.3310
		b. Hag.
y. Taan.		12a	2.1709
65b	2.1705	14a	2.1195
4:8 68a	2.1603	15a–b	1.412
68d	2.1200
		b. Ker.
y. Yom.		5a	2.1227
8:4 fol. 45b	4.3150
		b. Ketub.
b. Abod. Zar.		81b	2.1224
22b	4.3143	105a	4.3121
28a	4.3080	111a	2.1224
30a	4.3338	111b	2.1224
		b. Mak.
b. B. Bat.		5b	2.1228
9a	3.2670	24a	3.2694
21a	4.3123
75a	4.3313	b. Meg.
134a	2.1707	13a	4.3241
		b. Meil
b. B. Mesia		17	3.2857
59b	4.3080	17b	4.3078
b. B. Qam.
50	4.3071
83a	2.1704

b. Menah.		31a	3.2695
95b	4.3150	77b	4.3318
110	4.3242	88b	1.16
		97a	2.1224
b. Nid.		104b	3.2172, 3.2175,
13b	1.10		3.2399
20a	4.3310	108b	4.3080
		114a	4.3310
b. Pesah.		115a	2.1712
10:5	1.353	128a, b	4.3149
57a	2.1226	145b–146a	4.3143
66a	2.1227, 4.3232	150a	4.3120
112b	4.3071	153a	2.1709
b. Qidd.		b. Sotah
22a	2.1224	47a	3.2174, 3.2175
40a	2.1224
66a	2.1503, 1.411	b. Sukkah
81b	2.1224	25b–26a	4.3310
		28a	2.1707
b. Rosh Hash.		b. Taan.
22b	2.1215	4:5	4.3376
b. Sanh.		12a	4.3327
11a	4.3454	23a	4.3067
11b	2.1365	23a–b	4.3067
19a–b	4.3228	23b	1.412
38b	2.1195, 2.1706	24b	4.3071, 4.3272
43a	2.1190, 2.1235, 2.1617, 2.1700, 1.335, 1.621, 3.2023, 3.2174, 3.2175, 3.2176, 3.2205, 3.2341, 3.2399, 3.2866	b. Yebam.
	2.1704	37b	2.1714
45b	1.10	103b	4.3143
58b	3.2172, 3.2174	b. Yoma
67	2.1703, 2.1705	18b	2.1714
67a	2.1705	66	3.2173
67b	2.1705	85b	2.1700
89b	3.2874	b. Zebah.
97b	3.2874	13a	2.1498
101a	3.2611	t. Ahil.
103a	3.2175	18:6–12	3.2761
104b	2.1705	t. B. Bat.
106a	2.1705	8:14	4.3120
106b	3.2172	t. Ber.
107b	2.1190, 2.1703, 3.2174, 3.2175, 3.2399	2:10	4.3310
		3:20	4.3071
b. Shabb.		t. Hul.
12a–b	4.3076	2:22	2.1235
14b	2.1693, 2.1696	2:22–23	3.2179

t. Ketub.		t. Yebam.
5:1	2.1714	3:3-4	3.2173
t. Meg.		t. Zebah.
2:6	4.3113	11:16	2.1226
2:12	4.3113
2:17	4.3113	m. Abot
t. Menah.		1:1	1.429, 2.1223
13:18-22	2.1226	1:2	2.1499
t. Parah		1:4	1.420
3:6	2.1519	1:10-11	4.3232
t. Peah.		1:11	2.1223
3:8	2.1710	1:12	4.3231
4:18	2.1721	2:6	2.1632
t. Pesah.		2:8	2.1223
4:13-14	4.3232	3:5	2.1240
t. Sanh.		4:16	4.3313
2:6	2.1365	4:27	4.3338
7:11	2.1224	5:10	2.1632
9:7	2.1704, 3.2392	5:12	2.1223
10:11	2.1192, 2.1705, 3.2172	5:19	3.2172
t. Seb.		6:6	2.1223
1:5	2.1720	m. Ber.
t. Shabb.		1:1-4	3.2683
7:23	3.2611, 4.3075	1:3	3.2683
9:7	3.2392	1:4	3.2684
11:15	2.1705, 3.2172, 3.2175, 4.3084	2:2	2.1240
14 (15):3	4.3149	3:1	3.2722
15:16	2.1700	5:5	4.3071
16:22	4.3076, 4.3121	8:8	2.1632
16:22a	2.1699	9:5	3.2679, 3.2680, 3.2704
t. Sheqal.		m. Besah
1:6	3.2670	1:6	2.1226
t. Sotah		m. Demai
9.11	1.16	2:1-3	2.1697
t. Sukkah		3:4	2.1632
3:11	3.2253	5:9	2.1632
t. Ter.		m. Ed.
1:10	4.3120	1:2	2.1720
2:5	2.1721	1:3	4.3233
		1:14	2.1696
		m. Erub.
		4:3	3.2607
		6:2	3.2606, 3.2607
		m. Git.
		1:5	2.1632
		9:10	2.1141, 2.1721

m. Hag.		m. Parah.
2:4	3.2346	3:7	2.1519
		4:3	1.134
m. Hor.		5:5	2.1695
3:9	2.1632	m. Peah.
		1:1	2.1721
m. Kelim		m. Pesah.
1:6-9	3.2777	1:1-5	3.2349
10:1	2.1695	3:6	3.2349
26:2	4.3333	4:5	3.2349
27:12	4.3334	5:4	3.2349
28:6	4.3333	6:1-2	4.3232
m. Ketub.		10:9	3.2348
2:10	4.3124	m. Qidd.
m. Ma'as S.		4:3	2.1632
2:3-4	2.1721	4:14	2.1225
m. Meg.		m. Rosh Hash.
3:6	4.3119	1:1	3.2330
m. Menah.		m. Sanh.
10:3	2.1518, 3.2346	3:4	4.3317
65b	2.1518	3:8	2.1704
m. Miqw.		6:1	2.1704
1:7	4.3109	6:4	1.646, 2.1704
4:1	2.1695	6:5	3.2415
4:4	4.3109	7:4	1.621, 2.883
m. Naz.		7:5	1.632, 2.885,
7:1	3.2700	7:10	2.1195, 4.3145
6:5	3.2700	7:11	1.621, 2.883,
m. Ned.		10:2	2.1703, 2.1704
1:2	3.2807	11:3	2.1703, 2.1704
3:2	3.2807	11:4	3.2172, 3.2173
3:10	2.1632		2.1496, 4.3138
5:6	3.2807	m. Seb.
8:7	3.2807	1:1	2.1720
9:1	3.2751, 3.2807	2:1	2.1720
9:2	4.3121	8.10	2.1632
10:1-11:12	3.2831	m. Shabb.
m. Nid.		1:3	4.3124
4:1-2	2.1632	1:3-4	1.414
7.4	2.1632	7:2	2.1700, 3.2605
m. Ohal.		9:2	2.1717
5:5	2.1695	9:7	2.1717
6:1	2.1695	14:3-4	2.1699, 3.2611,
18:7-10	3.2761	18:3	3.2613
		22:6	4.3075
			2.1699, 4.3075

m. Sheqal.		m. Tehar.
1:1	1.634	7:6	3.2805
2:1	2.1721
6:5	2.1365, 2.1721, 4.3281	m. Ter.
		10:9	2.1776
m. Sotah		m. Yad.
1:2	3.2832	1:2	2.1695
5:3	3.2607
9:15	2.875, 4.2967	m. Yebam.
		4:13	3.2173
m. Taan.		m. Yoma
3:8	4.3067	8:6	2.1694, 2.1700, 3.2582, 3.2613, 3.2750, 4.3075
m. Tamid		m. Zebah.
5:1	3.2684, 3.2685, 4.3137, 4.3139, 4.3144	5:6	3.2715
7:4	4.3075	5:8	3.2348

Targumic and Other Rabbinic Works

Abot R. Nat.		Memar Marqa
2.6	2.1632	4:12	1.415
A.4	2.1719
5.10	2.1632	Midr. Ps.
[A] 37.10	2.1224	21 [90a]	1.415
		92:2	4.3075
Deut. Rab.		Num. Rab.
3:17	2.1218	19:8	3.2857
Exod. Rab.		Palest. Tg.
18:12	2.1218	Gen 3:15	3.2286
15:2 [79b]	4.3313	Gen 3:24	3.2253
32 [93d]	2.1777	Gen 15	3.2256
Gen. Rab.		Gen 49:1	3.2263
9:7 [6d]	4.3333	Gen 49:11–12	3.2286
18:5	2.1713	Num 23:23	3.2256
27:3	2.1227	Num 24:14–24	3.2286
31:8	2.1712	Deut 7:10	3.2256
56:4	3.287	Hos 6:2	3.2263
63:6	4.3193	Pes. Rab.
		4:2	2.1218, 2.1227
Lev. Rab.		35:3	2.1218
28 [126b]	4.3310	149a	4.3313
34:14	2.1226
57	2.1043	Pesiq. Rab. Kah.
Mek. Exod.		4:5	3.2533
16:4	2.1225	21:2–3	4.3144
17:10 [62a]	4.3333	22:4–6	4.3148
31:12–17	2.1227	Ruth Rab.
31:13	4.3075	6:4	4.3193

Sif.		Tg. Neb.
Lev.		Isa
195	3.2590	53:5	3.2400
200	1.16
		Zech
Deut.		6:12–13	2.1043, 3.2400
23:11	2.1143
24:19	2.1207	Tg. Neof.
37:76b	3.2310	I.	3.2246, 4.3139
39:30–40:7	2.1127	I Gen 3:6	4.3143
48:10	2.1160, 2.1292, 2.1771, 2.1778, 2.1779	Gen 3:19	3.2261
		Gen 3:24	3.2254
		Gen 22:6	3.2258
48:11	2.1779	Gen 22:10	3.2259
50:28	2.1632	Gen 22:14	3.2258, 3.2259
148	2.1228	Gen 35:3	3.2259
269	2.1721	Gen 38:25	3.2259, 3.2260
		I. Exod 20:17	4.3143
Sifre Dev.		Lev 22:27	3.2259
34	4.3138	Num 23:23	3.2263
35	4.3138	I. Deut 5:21	4.3143
46	4.3137	Deut 20:19	3.2259
		Deut 32:15	3.2259
S. Ekev		Tg. Onq.
48	4.3338	Num 2:19	3.225
Sop.		Tg. Ps.
15:6	4.3338	45:3	4.3314
		72:1	2.1218
Tanh. Jithro		Tg. Ps.-J.
90a	1.414	Gen 32:3	2.1715
		Gen 35:18	2.1715
Frg. Tg. Exod		Gen 45:27–46:4	2.1715
12:42	2.1218	Gen 46:4	2.1716
Tg. Cant.		Lev 22:28	1.16
8:1	4.3314	Num 22:5	2.1715
		Deut 30:4	2.1218
Tg. Isa.		Tg. Song
6:9–10	2.1155	4:5	2.1218
11:4	3.2820	Tg. Yer.
14:4	3.2820	Lev 19:13	2.1354
14:5	3.2820
28:5	4.3316	Tg. Zech.
28:24	3.2820	6:12	2.1199
28:25	3.2820
34:2	3.2820	Yal.
53:5	1.415, 2.1051	1 Sam 21:5 (130)	4.3150
53:11	1.415, 2.1051
54:17	3.2820
Tg. Joel
2:16	4.3315

Nag Hammadi Codices

I, 2 ( Ap. Jas )	3.1984, 3.1987, 3.2102, 4.3210	III, 5 ( Dial. Sav. ) 140	3.1984 1.459
2.29-33	3.2106
7-9	3.1987	V, 1 ( Eugnostos )	3.2084
7.22-25	3.2106
8.4-10	3.2104	V, 4 (2 Apoc. Jas ) 56.4-5	1.356
8.10-27	3.2106
12.21-31	3.2105
I, 3 ( Gos. Truth ) 31-32	3.2555	V, 5 ( Apoc. Adam ) 82.19-20	1.356
II		VI, 5 ( Plato Rep. )	1.460
32.10	4.3442	VII, 4 ( Teach. Silv. )	1.460
II, 2 ( Gos. Thom. )	1.455	XII, 1 ( Sent. Sextus )	1.460
II, 5 ( Orig. World ) 125.2.6	1.356	XII, 2 ( Gos. Truth ) 20.23-33	4.3035
127.10-15	1.356
II, 7 ( Thom. Cont. ) 144.14-36	3.2102 3.2106	XII, 1 ( Sent. Sextus ) 311	4.3203
145.14-15	1.356

Papyri And Inscriptions

CIG		IV. 1232-1233	4.3081
2053	4.3417	IV, 1239-1241	3.2530
		IV. 1242-1244	4.3078
CII		IV, 1245-1246	3.2530
744	4.3118	IV. 2081-2087	4.3061
766:3	4.3118	IV, 2145-2240	3.2533
		IV. 2449	4.3061
CIJ		IV. 2453	4.3061
II 332	4.3138	IV. 2492-2493	4.3080
		IV. 3007-3086	2.1233
CIJ		IV. 3013	4.3078
IJ 1404 ( Theodotus Inscription )		IV. 3019-3020	2.1235
	1.410, 4.3107	IV, 3025	3.2530
		IV. 3019-3078	4.3065
Cod. Berol. Gnost. 8502		IV. 3037-3041	4.3079
3.108.13	1.356	IV. 3039-3041	4.3071
		IV, 3079-3084	3.2531
OGIS		V. 158	4.3078
416	1.569	VII. 331	4.3079
417	1.569	VII. 795	4.3081
		XIa	4.3080
PGM		XII, 266	3.2531
III. 273-275	4.3067	XII, 270-350	3.2533
IV. 1038	4.3079	XII, 301-306	3.2632
IV. 1227-1264	3.2532, 4.3079	XIII	4.3081
IV, 1231-1239	3.2530	XIII. 242-244	4.3079

XXIX	4.3080	P. Oxy.
XXXVI, 275–283	3.2533	1	3.2060, 3.2076
		1.5	3.2076
P. Aberd.		1.6	2.1191
3	3.2097	31–33	3.2031
		654	3.2060
P. Berol.		654.1	4.3442
11710	3.2097	655	1.24, 3.1976, 3.2060, 4.3246, 4.3263
P. Cairo			1.252, 1.335, 1.722, 1.724, 3.1985, 3.2709, 3.2710, 3.2719, 3.2764
10735	2.1752, 3.2097	840
10759	3.1989, 3.2083, 3.2084, 3.2085
P. Cologne			1.24, 1.250, 1.252, 1.335, 1.357, 1.724, 3.1976, 3.1985, 3.2095, 3.2203
255	3.2088, 3.2089, 3.2090, 3.2091, 3.2092	1224
P. Dura			3.2095
10	3.2097	1224.2.1	3.1985
frg. 0212	3.2097	1228	3.1976
		1.654	3.2094
P. Egerton		II 210	3.2092, 3.2093, 3.2094
2	1.252, 1.335, 1.352, 1.724, 3.1985, 3.1986, 3.2088, 3.2089, 3.2090, 3.2092, 3.2203	V 840	1.722
		V 840. 32–35	3.2097
		XI 1384	3.1989, 3.2085
		XLI 2949	3.1989, 3.2096
		LX 4009
P. Fayum	3.1985	P. Ryl.
20.22	4.3430	III 463	3.2097
P. Hever		PSI XI 1200	3.2097
61	4.3415
62	4.3415	P. Vindob. G 2325	3.2096
P. London. Christ. 1	3.1986	P <sup>45</sup>	3.2006, 3.2090
P. Merton		P <sup>52</sup> (P. Ryl. 3.457)	3.2089
II 51	3.2095	P <sup>75</sup>	3.2026
P. Morg.		P. Yadin
569	3.2099	16	4.3415
P. Nash		16, I. 11	4.3427
I 16	3.2683, 3.2685, 3.2687, 3.2689, 4.3141	UBG
		98.63–99.3	3.2099
		102.6–9	3.2099

Classical Greco-Roman Literature

Aelius Aristides		Artapanus
Plat. Disc.		FGrHist
307.6	2.1629	III C.726.3	4.3082
307.15	2.1629	Frag. 3.4	2.1627
310.8	2.1629
Aelius Theon		Athenaeus
Prog.		Deipn.	4.3428
60	2.1642	Cicero
62–4	2.1680	Amic.
70	2.1642	45	4.3246
107–10	2.1680
Aelian		Inv.
Var. hist.		1.9	1.427
2.26	4.3063	Leg.
4.15	4.3067	1.6–8	2.1796
		2.23.59–60	4.3140
Apollonius Paradoxographus		Nat. d.
Hist. mir.		3.85	4.3183
1	4.3067
6	4.3063, 4.3071	Off.
Apollonius of Tyana		1.17.58	4.2948
Ep.		1.45.160	4.2948
16–17	4.3061, 4.3064	1.53–55	3.2397
23	4.3064
44	2.1220	Orat.
52	4.3064	2.36	2.1796
Appian		2.51–53	2.1796
Bell. civ.		2.54–56	2.1794
2.149	3.2329	2.62	2.1796
5.75	3.2317	Rab. Perd.
Apuleius		16	3.2389
Apol.		Cleitarchus of Alexandria
26	4.3061	FGrHist 137	2.1793
Aristotle		The First book of Cyranides
Eth. nic.		1.13.16–22	4.3070
4.1.19	4.3286	1.17.15–17	4.3070
4.3.1125.10–15	3.2564	1.19.9–17	4.3070
		4.13.2–3	4.3066
Poet.		4.55.5	4.3066
1449b 25–28	1.634	Dio Cassius
1450b 27–28	1.624	27.6	3.2317
1451b	2.1796	49.22	3.2317
1451a and b	2.1796	49.23.1	3.2317
1453b11/12	2.1795	49.24–31	3.2317
Rhet.		53.19.4–5	2.1796
2.20	3.2549	54.3.6–7	2.1197, 3.2392

54.7.4–6	3.2334	4 Regn. (Or. 4)
55.25.1	3.2318	4	4.3255
55.27.6	1.569	4.33	2.1628
56.18.5a	3.2356	4.38	2.1628
56.30	3.2329
57.22.1–4	3.2355	Serv. (Or. 10)
58.2.7–8	3.2356	10	2.1126, 4.3246
58.4.1	3.2356	10:12	4.3252
58.9–12	3.2356	10.15–16	4.3257
59.13.3	3.2393	10.16	4.3247, 4.3250,
63.1–7	3.2363		4.3251, 4.3252,
65.14.1	3.2356		4.3253, 4.3254,
77.18.4	4.3066		4.3255
Hist. Rom.		Tyr. (Or. 6)
54.9, 1	4.3417	6	2.1126, 4.3246,
69.12.1–2	4.3242		4.3250, 4.3251,
			4.3254, 4.3255,
			4.3256, 4.3265
Dio Chrysostom/Dio of Prusa
Alex. (Or. 32)		6.4–5	4.3251
32.9	2.1630	6.11	4.3249, 4.3250
32.10–11	2.1630	6.13	4.3251, 4.3253
32.30	2.1628	6.15	2.1123
		6.21	4.3251
Cel. Phryg. (Or. 35)		6.22	4.3247, 4.3250,
35.1	2.1630		4.3253, 4.3254
35.9–10	2.1628	6.25	4.3253
		6.28	4.3253
Cont. (Or. 47)		6.31	4.3254, 4.3256
47.6	2.1220	6.32–33	4.3251
		6.32–34	4.3250
Dei cogn. (Or. 12)		6.34	4.3247, 4.3253
12.12	2.1628	6.60	2.1123
		6.62	4.3253
Exil. (Or. 13)		Diodorus Siculus
13	2.1628	1.69.4–5	4.3084
Fel. sap. (Or. 23)		Diogenes Laertius
23.11	2.1628	1.109	4.3067
		1.110	4.3063
Hab. (Or. 72)		1.114	4.3063
72.11	1.429	6	2.1108
		6.104	4.3278
Hom. Socr. (Or. 55)		7.120	4.2948
55.7	2.1628	8.3	4.3084
		8.59	4.3066
Invid. (Or. 77/78)		8.60–62	4.3064
77/78	2.1630
77/78.27	2.1628
1 Regn. (Or. 1)		Empedocles
1.51	4.3251	Frag.
		101	4.3064
		102	4.3064
		132–133	4.3064

Epictetus		Galen
Disc.		11.859–860	4.3070
1.14.15	3.2550	12.207	4.3068
2.14.21–22	3.2550
		Puls. diff.
Diss.		2.4	2.1642
1.9	4.3246
1.9.7	4.3247, 4.3248	Heraclitus
1.9.7–9	2.1126, 4.3250, 4.3256	Frag. 81	4.3066
1.9.9	4.3251	Herodotus
1.9.19–21	2.1629	Hist.
1.14.3	4.3251, 4.3254	1.107	4.3061
1.14.5–6	4.3249	1.120	4.3061
2.4.1–11	2.1629	7.19	4.3061
2.13.11	4.3249, 4.3257	7.37	4.3061
3.7.21	2.1629	7.113	4.3061
3.13.13	4.3247, 4.3248	7.191	4.3061, 4.3080
3.22.67–76	4.3265
3.22.79	4.3254	Hippocrates
3.26.2	4.3249	Morb. sacr.
3.26.27	4.3248	1.39–40	4.3061, 4.3082
3.32	4.3263
4.1.22	4.3249	Horace
4.5.24	3.1944	Ep.
4.8.31	4.3252	1.16.48	3.2415
4.8.34	4.3254	1.18.12–14	1.427
Ench.		Iamblichus
15	4.3254	Vit. Pyth.
		4.18–19	4.3084
Epiphanius of Salamis		13.60–62	4.3063
Adv. Haer.		15.64	4.3063
19.3.6	2.1214	25.110–111	4.3063
		28.134–143	4.3063
Pan.		28.135	4.3080
20.2	2.1521	28.135–136	4.3063
30.13.4–5	2.1751	28.136	4.3080
30.13.6	2.1751	28.142	4.3071
30.13.7–8	2.1751
		Isocrates
Eupolemus		Soph.
Frag. 1	2.1627	12–13	1.427
Euripides		Juvenal
Frag. 968	2.1214	Sat.
		6.230	2.1197
FGrHist		14.101–102	1.428
231	2.1794
76 F1	2.1795	Lactantius
		Mort.
Gaius		23	3.2299
letter 96 book 10	3.2151, 3.2152

Livy		Prom.
Praef.		2	3.2164
1.13	2.1796	7	3.2164
10	2.1802	10	3.2164
Lucian		Timon
Alex.		84	2.1629
6	4.3066
22	4.3065	Lucretius
34	4.3065	Rer. nat.
43	4.3065	1.45–49	4.3254
		2.1–19	4.3248
Cat.		2.7–8	4.3249
23	2.1114	2.9–14	4.3252
		2.15–19	4.3254
Fug.		2.18	4.3248
15	4.3254	2.20–36	4.3251
17	4.3252, 4.3254	3.302–306	4.3250
		3.753	4.3251
Hist. conscr.		5.871–877	4.3250
8	2.1797	5.1251–1456	4.3252
43–45	2.1798	5.1354–1360	4.3251
34	2.1797	5.1361–1362	4.3250
38–39	2.1797
40	2.1797	Marcellus Empiricus
47	1.425, 2.1798	Med.
48	2.1798	8.43	4.3080
50	2.1798	8.166	4.3080
52	2.1798
56–57	2.1798	Maximus of Tyre
		Dialex. 24.4a	4.3143
Jud. voc.		Musonius
12	3.2164	Disc.
		15	2.1126, 4.3246, 4.3247, 4.3250, 4.3251, 4.3252, 4.3253, 4.3255
Men.
7	4.3067
Merc. cond.		Paulus Aegineta
26	4.3338	7.3	4.3080
Peregr.		Petronius
11	1.619, 3.2162, 3.2163, 3.2164	Satyr.
13	3.2163, 3.2164	111–112	3.2415
20	2.1630
28	2.1114	Philostratus
39	2.1131	Vit. Apoll.
42	2.1630	1.2	4.3083
		1.2–3	4.3082
Philops.		1.20	4.3065
16	4.3071, 4.3077, 4.3079, 4.3081	1.34	2.1630
		3.19.23	4.3064

3.38	4.3077	Plautus
3.51	4.3065	Cas.
4.3	4.3065	5-6	4.3338
4.45	3.1925
4.10	4.3065	Pliny the Younger
4.20	3. 2870, 3.2871,	Ep.
	4.3079	3.5	2.1642
4.44	4.3082	5.5.3	2.1793
5.42	4.3065	6.10.3	2.1197
6.21.43	4.3064	8.12.4	2.1793
6. 43	4.3065	9.19.3	2.1197
7.7.4	4.3064	10.96	1.335, 1.619
8.7.9	4.3082	10.96.1-5	2.1199
8.26	4.3065
32.216	4.3082	Pliny the Elder
		Nat.
Photius		7.24.88-89	2.1486
Bibl.		28.37	4.3080
33	2.1649	28.76	4.3080
238	2.1532	28.226-229	4.3061
		28.259-260	4.3061
Phylarchus		30.1-18	4.3061
1.1.2		30.6.16-17	3.2363
2.56.11-12	2.1795	37.169	4.3068
Plato		Plutarch
Alc. maj.		Alex.
1.22A	4.3061	1	2.1793
Apol.		Ant.
24B	3.2620	34.2-4	3.2317
42a	1.353
		Brut. an.
Euthyd.		985C-992F	4.3262
276D	1.427
		Caes.
Gorg.		16	3.1966
493-494	3.2550
		Luc.
Leg.		20	3.2299
1.642D	4.3063
		Mor.
Phaedr.		49-74	4.3246
274c-277a	3.2188	173D	3.1966, 3.2202
		1100C	2.1629
Resp.		1124C	2.1629
406d	2.1520	1129B	2.1629
6.487-489	3.2550	1086E	2.1629
9.592a, 2.b	2.1214
		Sol.
Theaet.		Frag. 13.61-62	3.2538
191 c-e	3.1933
		Superst.
Tim.		8	2.1629
30b	3.2221

Table-Talk		Ps.-Crates
4.4-6.2	2.1629	Ep.
		2.19.2	2.1124
Tranq. an.		2.19.22	2.1124
438b	4.3079	3	4.3247, 4.3249
465A	4.3247, 4.3248	4	4.3252
465B	4.3249, 4.3253	6	4.3249
465C	4.3248, 4.3250,	7	4.3251
	4.3252	8	4.3252
465D	4.3247, 4.3251	10.3	4.3249
466D	4.3254	13	4.3251
466DE	4.3248	16	4.3250
466F	4.3248	18	4.3248
467C	4.3248	28	4.3252
468D	4.3248	29	4.3250
469A	4.3251	30	4.3242
470B	4.3251	34.2	4.3249
470D	4.3253
470F	4.3248	Ps.-Diogenes
471A	4.3252	Ep.
471EF	4.3251	2	4.3250
472F	4.3253	7	4.3248, 4.3250
473A	4.3250	15	4.3249
473BC	4.3249	16	4.3250
474C	4.3254	31.4	4.3249
475BC	4.3248	34	4.3248
477CD	4.3251, 4.3253,	34.3	4.3253
	4.3254	36.4-5	4.3252, 4.3253,
			4.3257
Polybius		36.4-7	4.3249
Hist.		36.5	4.3248
2.56.7-9	2.1796	37.6	4.3252
2.56.11	2.1793	38.4	2.1124
3.59.3-5	2.1795
10.21.8	2.1793	Ps.-Heraclitus
12	3.2241	8.3	4.3252
12.25	3.2242
12.25-27	2.1796	Ps.-Lucian
12.25e1	2.1795	Cyn
12.8.1	2.1795	15	4.3143
16.14.3-10	2.1795
17.27.3	1.425	Ps.-Origen
26	4.2928	Comm. Matt.
		15:14	4.3143
Porphyry
Vit. Pyth.		Quintilian
23-29	4.3063	Decl.
30	4.3063	274	3.2390
33	4.3063
		Inst.
Ps.-Anacharsis		1.9.2	2.1680
9	4.3251, 4.3252	2.7.2-4	1.427
		3.3.2	4.3262
Ps.-Hegesippus		4.5.7	4.3262
De excidio		5.14.30-31	4.3262
2.12	2.1647

5.14.32	4.3262	16.2	4.3251
8.3.2	4.3262	17.3	4.3249
10.1.31	2.1796	17.8–11	4.3248
10.5.4–11	2.1680
13.2	4.3255	Sophocles
Rhet. Her.		Ant.
3.10.18	4.3262	454–455	1.351
Seneca		Strabo
Ben.		Geogr.
3.1.5	4.2949	16.2.39	4.3082
6.16.2	3.2538	753–756	4.3226
6.23.5	4.2949	Suetonius
7.10.6	4.3254	Aug.
Ep.		13.1–2	3.2415
17.9	4.3247	76.3	4.3327
17.9–10	4.3248	81.2	3.2329
33.7	1.429	100.1	3.2329
81.17	3.1966	Cal.
83.16	4.3338	32	3.2392
Lucil.		32.2	2.1197
101	3.2391	Claud.
Prov.		25	2.1541
1.1	4.3183	25.4	1.335, 3.2152, 3.2153, 3.2204
Rer. nat.		Dom.
2.18–19	4.3247	10	3.2392
		10.1	2.1197
Tranq.		Nero
1.6	4.3248	13	3.2363
1.7–10	4.3248, 4.3252	16.2	3.2153
1.8	4.3251	Tib.
1.10–12	4.3248	36	3.2356
1.11	4.3254	61	3.2356
1.12	4.3248	62.1	3.2355
1.14[13]	4.3254	65	3.2356
2.8	4.3247	Vesp.
3.9	4.3249	4	2.1522
5.4	4.3252	4.5	2.1201, 3.2287
6.2	4.3254	5.6	2.1646
8.3	4.3252	7	3.2538
8.4	4.3249	Tacitus
8.5	4.3253	Ann.
8.8	4.3248	1.1.2	2.1796
9.2	4.3253	2.42	3.2298
10.4	4.3249	2.42.5	3.2804
10.4–5	4.3254	2.85	3.2356, 4.3430
11.9–10	4.3248
12.3	4.3250
13.1–2	4.3248

3.65	2.1797	5.13	2.1201, 2.1522,
4.8	3.2355		2.1602
4.41	3.2355
5.13	3.2287	Thucydides	4.3026
6.29	3.2390, 3.2415	1.22	1.490
6.48	3.2356	1.22.2-3	2.1796
15.22	3.2154	2.97.4	3.1966, 3.2202
15.33.2	3.2156
15.38-45	3.2155	Ulpian
15.39	3.2158	Lib. censib.
15.44	1.619, 2.1190,	50.15.3	4.3419
	2.1199, 2.1201,
	2.1202, 2.1417,	Velleius Paterculus
	3.2155, 3.2156,	Hist. rom.
	3.2204, 3.2388	2.75.3	4.2975
15.44.3	1.335, 3.2156	2.121	3.2330
15.44.5	1.407, 3.2156,
	4.3403	Xenophon
15.60-62	2.1812	Mem.
		1.1.1	3.2620
Hist.		1.2.12	3.2620
4.81	3.2538	1.33.3	4.3286
5.4	4.3327
5.9	1.408, 3.2298,	Symp.
	3.2317	3.5	1.427

INDEX OF MODERN AUTHORS

- Aalen, S. 2.1049, 2.1050
 Abbott, T. K. 2.1344
 Abegg, M. G. 2.1236, 2.1246
 Abel, F.-M. 3.2215
 Aberbach, M. 3.2263
 Abesamis, C. 2.979
 Abrahams, I. 2.1446, 2.1057, 4.3317
 Abrahams, R. D. 4.3351, 4.3353, 4.3356
 Achtemeier, P. J. 3.1823, 3.1845, 3.2521
 Ackroyd, P. R. 1.434
 Adam, A. K. M. 1.777, 2.1383, 2.1395
 Adam, K. 2.1248
 Adam, K.-P. 2.1787
 Adan-Bayewitz, D. 1.269, 4.2996, 4.2997
 Adler, N. 4.2998
 Adna, J. 1.54, 1.411, 3.2636, 2.1042–1044, 2.1067, 2.1214, 3.2639, 3.2640, 3.2641, 3.2643, 3.2644, 3.2646, 3.2647, 3.2648, 3.2650, 3.2651, 3.2652, 3.2653, 3.2654, 3.2655, 3.2656, 3.2658, 3.2659, 3.2661, 3.2662, 3.2663, 3.2664, 3.2665, 3.2668, 3.2669, 3.2670, 3.2672, 3.2674, 3.2755, 3.2756, 3.2813, 3.2870
 Adriaen, M. 2.1343
 Aguirre, R. 1.746
 Aharoni, Y. 3.2215, 3.2216, 3.2220
 Ahl, F. 2.1682
 Aichele, G. 2.1395
 Aitken, E. B. 3.2385
 Aitken, J. K. 2.1366
 Aland, K. 1.410
 Albani, M. 2.1699
 Albeck, H. 2.1518
 Albertz, M. 1.424, 1.664
 Albright, W. F. 3.2034, 3.2685, 4.3139, 4.3340
 Aletti, J. 1.477
 Alexander, G. 2.862
 Alexander, L. 1.434, 2.1812, 3.1930, 3.2136
 Alexander, P. S. 3.2379, 3.2530, 3.2694, 3.2779
 Alföldy, G. 1.165
 Alkier, S. 4.2915
 Allegro, J. 1.151
 Allen, G. 4.2915
 Allen, W. C. 2.1345, 3.2364
 Allert, C. D. 3.2125
 Alliata, E. 1.763
 Allison, D. C. 1.3, 1.7, 1.10, 1.11, 1.12, 1.13, 1.15, 1.18, 1.21, 1.25–28, 1.103, 1.152, 1.279, 1.342, 1.518, 1.542, 1.543, 1.544, 1.560, 1.600, 1.601, 1.604, 1.606, 1.607, 1.635, 1.636, 1.638, 1.681, 1.696, 1.698, 2.880, 2.894–898, 2.907, 2.915, 2.920, 2.1116, 2.1226, 2.1127, 2.1132, 2.1139, 2.1145, 2.1151, 2.1157, 2.1219, 2.1225, 2.1322, 2.1325, 2.1398, 2.1438, 2.1443, 2.1447, 2.1565, 2.1604, 3.1847, 3.1868, 3.1875, 3.1876, 3.1882, 3.1884, 3.1886, 3.1890, 3.1891, 3.1893, 3.1894, 3.1895, 3.1896, 3.1897, 3.1940, 3.1941, 3.1944, 3.1945, 3.2038, 3.2053, 3.2192, 3.2198, 3.2234, 3.2270, 3.2324, 3.2408, 3.2418, 3.2419, 3.2522, 3.2523, 3.2537, 3.2680, 3.2691, 3.2695, 3.2697, 3.2704, 3.2706, 3.2782, 3.2790, 3.2796, 3.2835, 3.2845, 3.2873, 3.2880, 3.2881, 3.2888, 3.2891, 3.2892, 3.2893, 3.2894, 3.2895, 3.2896, 3.2897, 3.2898, 3.2899, 3.2900, 3.2902, 3.2903, 3.2908, 4.2960, 4.2967, 4.2968, 4.3128, 4.3129, 4.3130, 4.3190, 4.3293, 4.3312, 4.3342, 4.3450
 Alston, W. P. 2.1068
 Althaus, P. 1.302, 1.303
 Amiot, F. 2.1447
 Amphoux, C.-B. 4.3380
 Andersen, Ø. 1.673, 2.1466
 Anderson, C. C. 1.297
 Anderson, C. P. 2.1196
 Anderson, H. 1.92, 4.3273, 4.3290
 Anderson, J. C. 1.513, 1.620, 1.777, 1.787, 1.788, 2.882, 2.1433, 3.1823, 3.1832
 Anderson, P. 2.1377
 Anderson, P. N. 2.911, 3.1952, 3.1956, 3.1957
 André, G. 3.2712
 Ankersmit, F. R. 2.922, 2.1378, 2.1384, 2.1389, 2.1391, 2.1399
 Annan, F. N. 2.931
 Annen, F. 3.2870

- Anscombe, G. E. M. 2.934
 Apostolos-Cappadona, D. 4.3157, 4.3174
 Appadurai, A. 1.817, 1.819
 Appelbaum, S. 4.3234
 Appleby, J. 2.1379
 Appleby, R. S. 1.524
 Appold, M. 4.2978, 4.2980
 Aquinas, T. 2.1418
 Arav, R. 1.464, 3.2832, 4.2973, 4.2974, 4.2975, 4.2976, 4.2977, 4.2978, 4.2987, 4.2988, 4.2989, 4.2990, 4.2991, 4.2992, 4.2996, 4.2997, 4.2998, 4.3003, 4.3004, 4.3015, 4.3041
 Arens, E. 1.51
 Ariel, D. T. 4.3004
 Armstrong, W. P. 3.2316
 Arnal, W. E. 2.874, 2.1022, 2.1282, 2.1400, 2.1401
 Aschmann, B. 2.1381, 2.1384
 Ashton, J. 2.1612
 Assaf, D. 2.1236
 Assmann, J. 1.231, 1.815, 1.816, 1.818, 1.824, 1.835, 1.840–842, 2.1399, 2.1752, 3.1935, 4.2914
 Atkinson, K. 2.1241, 4.3107
 Attridge, D. 2.1377
 Attridge, H. 2.883, 2.1566, 2.1684, 2.1657, 2.1668, 2.1799, 3.1977, 3.2059, 3.2168, 4.3033
 Audet, J.-P. 1.176, 3.2127
 Augenstein, J. 4.3151
 Aune, D. E. 1.426, 1.487, 1.501, 1.621, 1.631, 2.860, 2.883, 2.1228, 2.1436, 2.1587, 2.1809, 2.1812–1814, 3.1971, 3.1980, 3.1994, 3.2083, 3.2203, 3.2417, 3.2518, 3.2519, 3.2530, 3.2532, 3.2533, 3.2534, 3.2536, 4.3060, 4.3062, 4.3179, 4.3188, 4.3313, 4.3454
 Aus, R. D. 2.1371
 Austin, J. L. 2.1117
 Avemarie, F. 2.1241, 2.1597, 2.1757, 2.1759, 2.1764, 3.2747
 Avenarius, G. 2.1797
 Avery-Peck, A. J. 1.133, 2.1583, 2.1737
 Avi-Yonah, M. 1.171, 3.2233, 3.2319
 Aviam, M. 2.1118, 2.1363, 2.1639, 2.1665, 4.3266
 Avida, U. 4.2998
 Ayayo, K. G. 2.1449

 Baarda, T. 3.2132
 Baasland, E. 1.40, 1.407
 Babut, D. 4.3245

 Bacchiocchi, S. 4.3076
 Bachmann, E. T. 2.856
 Back, S.-O. 2.1701, 3.2599, 3.2606, 3.2613, 3.2615, 3.2616, 3.2618, 3.2622, 3.2627, 3.2628, 3.2629, 3.2631, 4.3150, 4.3197
 Backhaus, K. 2.1753, 2.1757, 2.1759, 2.1763, 2.1767, 2.1782–1784, 2.1787, 4.3319, 4.3337
 Bacon, B. W. 1.634, 1.635
 Bagnall, R. S. 3.2321, 4.3420
 Bahat, D. 3.2219, 3.2227, 3.2640
 Bahrtdt, K. F. 2.1414, 3.2544, 3.2545, 3.2862
 Bailey, D. P. 4.3316
 Bailey, K. 1.194, 1.424, 1.680, 1.801, 2.1338, 2.1465, 2.1470, 3.1835, 3.1837, 3.1838, 3.1839, 3.1840, 3.1850, 3.2374, 3.2375, 3.2564, 3.2766
 Bainton, R. H. 3.2123
 Baird, J. A. 2.861
 Balch, D. L. 3.2433
 Ball, W. 3.2230
 Balla, P. 2.912, 4.2947, 4.2948, 4.2950
 Balz, H. 4.3282, 4.3299
 Bammal, E. 1.117, 1.264, 2.877, 2.1059, 2.1197, 2.1613, 2.1754, 2.1784, 2.1785, 3.2169, 3.2352, 3.2356, 3.2392, 3.2394, 3.2807
 Banks, R. J. 1.698, 2.1443
 Bar-Ilan, M. 3.2827, 3.2832
 Bar-Kochva, B. 2.1732
 Barag, D. 4.2998–2999
 Barbour, I. G. 2.1422
 Barbour, R. S. 1.364, 1.677, 1.696, 1.707, 1.848
 Barclay, J. 1.14, 2.1188, 2.1241, 2.1453
 Bardenhewer, O. 3.2084
 Barker, A. 3.2682
 Barker, M. 2.1593, 2.1594, 2.1595, 2.1600, 3.2144, 3.2145
 Barkun, M. 1.524
 Barnes, J. W. B. 3.2095
 Barnes, T. D. 3.2318, 3.2320, 3.2371
 Barnett, P. W. 2.893, 2.1214, 3.2190, 3.2674, 4.3076, 4.3077
 Baron, D. D. 1.512, 1.514
 Barr, J. 2.869, 2.1576
 Barraclough, G. 1.745
 Barré, M. L. 3.2265
 Barrett, A. A. 1.294
 Barrett, C. K. 2.1700, 3.1929, 3.1966, 3.2422, 4.3126
 Barrett, M. 1.511, 1.515, 1.516

- Bartchy, S. S. 1.746
 Bartel, S. S. 1.134
 Barth, C. 2.1277
 Barth, G. 2.1759, 2.1783
 Barth, K. 1.93, 1.304, 1.449, 1.683,
 2.865, 2.989
 Barthélemy, D. 3.2717
 Barthes, R. 2.1389, 1.781, 4.2915
 Bartlett, F. C. 1.809, 1.822-829, 1.831,
 1.838
 Bartman, E. 4.2975
 Barton, J. 1.650, 2.995, 2.1584, 2.1605,
 3.2518, 4.3190
 Barton, S. C. 2.885, 3.2441
 Bartsch, H.-W. 2.866, 4.3294, 4.3295
 Bartsch, S. 2.1682
 Baruch, J. Z. 4.3186, 4.3187
 Baslez, M. F. 1.478, 1.482, 1.486, 1.490
 Basore, J. W. 4.3245
 Bassler, H. 3.2749, 3.2750
 Bates, S. C. 2.955
 Batey, R. A. 4.3320
 Batten, A. 2.1001
 Bauckham, R. 1.253, 1.413, 1.425,
 1.429, 1.432, 1.687, 2.903, 2.973,
 2.1201, 2.1206, 2.1213, 2.1231, 2.1402,
 2.1471, 2.1674, 2.1811, 3.1843, 3.1915,
 3.1968, 3.1970, 3.1971, 3.2056, 3.2100,
 3.2101, 3.2192, 3.2200, 3.2201, 3.2426,
 3.2429, 3.2437, 3.2439, 3.2580, 3.2655,
 3.2700, 3.2751, 3.2790, 3.2799, 3.2847,
 4.3126, 4.3317, 4.3326
 Baudoz, J.-F. 4.3236
 Baudy, G. 1.567
 Bauer, D. R. 1.635
 Bauer, H. 3.2477
 Bauer, J. B. 3.2062, 3.2081, 3.2096,
 4.3035
 Bauer, W. 1.725, 2.992, 2.1264, 3.1975,
 3.1980, 3.2322, 4.3238
 Baugh, L. 4.3157, 4.3158, 4.3168,
 4.3169, 4.3170, 4.3175, 4.3176
 Baum, A. D. 1.419, 1.435, 3.2136,
 4.3344
 Baum, G. 2.962
 Baumbach, G. 2.1447
 Baumgarten, A. I. 1.412, 2.1625,
 3.2605
 Baumgarten, J. M. 2.1235, 2.1285,
 4.3117
 Baur, F. C. 1.434, 1.682, 1.683, 1.685,
 2.863, 2.1434, 3.2000
 Bayer, H. F. 2.1239, 3.2403
 Beard, M. 1.412
 Beardslee, W. A. 1.353
 Beardsmore, H. B. 1.374, 3.2456
 Beare, F. W. 1.388, 1.675, 3.2617
 Beasley-Murray, G. R. 1.264, 2.880,
 2.1219, 2.1759, 3.2836, 4.3310, 4.3345
 Beaton, R. 1.642, 2.1138, 2.1438
 Beatrice, P. F. 3.2128
 Beattie, D. R. G. 2.1364
 Beaty, J. 1.761
 Beavis, M. A. 3.1844, 3.2783
 Bebbington, D. W. 1.700
 Beck, H. 2.1791
 Beck, N. A. 2.1615
 Becker, A. H. 2.1183
 Becker, E.-M. 2.1766, 2.1782, 2.1787,
 2.1791, 2.1792, 2.1798-1800,
 2.1809-1812, 2.1814
 Becker, H.-J. 2.1267
 Becker, J. 1.5, 1.65, 1.69, 1.74, 1.79,
 1.83, 1.84, 1.89, 1.251, 1.450, 1.495,
 1.601, 1.602, 1.606, 1.607, 1.696,
 2.1030, 2.1031, 2.1142, 2.1147, 2.1150,
 2.1151, 2.1158, 2.1396, 2.1763, 3.1959,
 3.2473, 3.2476, 3.2485, 3.2496, 3.2497,
 3.2498, 3.2500, 3.2503, 3.2504, 3.2505,
 3.2506, 3.2507, 3.2508, 3.2518, 3.2519,
 3.2523, 3.2531, 3.2533, 3.2541, 3.2543,
 3.2611, 3.2621, 3.2647, 3.2648, 3.2752,
 3.2757, 3.2758, 3.2767, 3.2770, 3.2868,
 4.3073, 4.3074, 4.3106, 4.3125, 4.3133
 Becker, M. 2.1237, 2.1250, 2.1271,
 2.1281, 2.1283, 2.1770, 2.1774, 3.2527
 Beckmacht, A. 2.1397, 2.1596
 Beckwith, R. T. 3.2343, 3.2347, 3.2348,
 3.2350, 4.3331
 Begg, C. T. 2.1660, 2.1673
 Behm, J. 4.3327
 Beijer, E. 3.2620
 Beker, J. C. 2.1085
 Bell, A. J. 2.1648
 Bell, H. I. 3.1986, 3.2089, 3.2095
 Bellinger, K. D. 1.838
 Bellinger, W. H. 2.1163, 2.1164
 Bellizoni, A. J. 2.1324, 3.2124, 3.2128,
 3.2133, 3.2138, 3.2139, 3.2193
 Belsey, C. 1.531
 Ben-Amos, D. 4.3353
 Ben-Chorin, S. 1.506, 2.1055, 2.1057,
 2.1058
 Ben-David, A. 3.2308
 Ben-David, C. 4.3109
 Bendemann, R. 1.65
 Bendroth, M. L. 1.524
 Bengel, J. A. 2.1445

- Bengel, M. E. 2.1445
 Benko, S. 3.2151, 3.2153, 3.2154
 Bennett, C. 2.1000, 4.3165
 Bennett, T. 2.1385
 Bennington, G. 2.1377
 Benoit, P. 1.122, 1.435, 3.2193
 Berchman, R. M. 1.133
 Berdyaev, N. 2.945
 Berendts, A. 2.1525
 Bergemann, T. 1.435
 Berger, K. 1.54, 1.61, 1.427, 1.432,
 1.626, 1.665, 2.883, 2.1281, 2.1759,
 3.1946, 3.1956, 3.1993, 3.2130, 3.2711,
 3.2759, 3.2763, 4.3135, 4.3138, 4.3144,
 4.3259, 4.3273, 4.3274, 4.3275, 4.3283,
 4.3289, 4.3342, 4.3345
 Berger, S. 2.1378
 Bergmeier, R. 2.1237, 2.1658
 Berkhofer, R. F. 2.1378, 2.1387,
 2.1388, 2.1392
 Berlin, A. 1.785, 2.1639, 4.2996,
 4.2997, 4.3017, 4.3018
 Berlin, I. 2.930, 2.934, 2.945
 Bernabé, C. 1.746, 1.756
 Bernard, J. H. 3.2336, 3.2337, 3.2338
 Bernegger, P. M. 3.2318
 Bernett, M. 4.2974, 4.2977, 4.2990
 Bertram, G. 1.660, 1.664, 4.3293
 Bertrand, D. A. 3.2098, 3.2121, 3.2130
 Best, E. 3.1967, 3.2108
 Bethge, H.-G. 1.455, 2.1059, 2.1067,
 2.1071, 2.1105, 2.1106, 2.1140-1142,
 3.1990, 3.2112
 Betz, H. D. 1.35, 1.179, 1.375, 1.386,
 1.397, 1.640, 3.1889, 3.1893, 3.2162,
 3.2424, 3.2470, 3.2471, 3.2526, 3.2534,
 3.2646, 3.2656, 3.2657, 3.2662, 3.2755,
 4.3065, 4.3188, 4.3245, 4.3246, 4.3257,
 4.3259, 4.3264, 4.3266, 4.3293, 4.3295,
 Betz, O. 1.35, 1.244, 1.413, 1.446,
 1.622, 1.632, 1.633, 2.883, 2.885,
 2.1036, 2.1199, 2.1281, 2.1442, 3.2526,
 3.2527, 3.2882, 4.3316, 4.3325
 Beutler, J. 4.3280, 4.3281, 4.3287,
 4.3290, 4.3291
 Beyer, K. 1.444, 1.723, 4.3335
 Beyschlag, K. 1.550, 3.2086
 Beyschlag, W. 1.306
 Bickerman, E. J. 2.1460, 2.1508,
 2.1517, 2.1521, 2.1536, 3.2330, 4.3224
 Bieler, L. 3.2525, 3.2864
 Bienaimé, G. 3.2251
 Bieringer, R. 1.139
 Bietenhard, H. 3.2473, 3.2477, 3.2478,
 3.2481, 3.2487, 3.2492, 3.2856, 3.2859
 Bilde, P. 2.1668, 2.1807
 Billerbeck, M. 4.3263
 Billerbeck, P. 2.1687, 3.2345, 3.2346,
 3.2481, 3.2714, 4.3145, 4.3148, 4.3149,
 4.3282, 4.3283, 4.3286, 4.3310, 4.3313,
 4.3327
 Binder, D. D. 1.412, 2.1723, 2.1726,
 4.3105, 4.3110, 4.3111, 4.3113, 4.3114,
 4.3115, 4.3117, 4.3118, 4.3120
 Bird, M. F. 2.1197, 2.1199, 2.1204,
 2.1209, 2.1211, 2.1214
 Birkeland, H. 3.2468
 Birley, A. 1.294
 Bisha, R. 2.1387
 Bishop, E. F. F. 1.426, 2.1447
 Black, C. C. 1.779, 3.1824, 3.1825,
 3.1830, 3.1831, 3.1841
 Black, D. A. 1.435, 1.728
 Black, J. S. 1.700
 Black, M. 1.323, 1.366, 1.376, 1.416,
 1.418, 1.419, 1.428, 1.699, 1.719,
 2.1350-1352, 2.1374, 2.1422, 2.1431,
 2.1446, 2.1556, 3.2168, 3.2273, 3.2461,
 3.2628, 4.3333, 4.3335, 4.3413
 Black, S. L. 1.400
 Blackburn, B. L. 2.884, 3.2517, 3.2518,
 3.2519, 3.2525, 3.2526, 3.2538, 3.2539,
 3.2542, 3.2543, 3.2623, 3.2624, 3.2713,
 3.2864, 4.3081, 4.3194
 Blackman, P. 2.1692, 3.2805
 Blanc, M. H. A. 3.2457
 Blanchard, Y.-M. 3.2125
 Blank, J. 3.1937
 Blankenberg, B. 2.886
 Blass, F. 1.365, 2.1263, 2.1739, 3.2322,
 3.2727, 4.3270
 Blatz, B. 2.1815, 3.2102
 Bleicken, J. 2.1789
 Blenkinsopp, J. 4.3315, 4.3324
 Blinzler, J. 3.2157, 3.2159, 3.2160,
 3.2336, 3.2344, 3.2351
 Bloch, M. 1.475, 1.481-484, 1.486,
 1.499, 1.506, 1.556, 2.928, 2.936,
 2.946, 2.1422, 2.1658
 Blomberg, C. 1.419, 1.444, 1.681,
 1.687, 1.848, 1.850, 2.883, 3.1908,
 3.2000, 3.2343, 3.2546, 3.2699, 3.2862,
 4.3033, 4.3312, 4.3336, 4.3339
 Bloomquist, L. G. 2.1130
 Blount, B. K. 3.1834
 Blumenthal, F. 2.1794

- Boa, K. 3.2325
- Boccaccini, G. 2.1452, 2.1553, 2.1555, 2.1557, 2.1584
- Böcher, O. 1.151, 3.2532, 3.2856, 3.2858, 3.2859, 4.3082
- Bock, D. 1.405, 1.420, 2.885, 2.1041, 2.1194, 2.1415, 2.1450, 3.2398, 3.2399, 3.2733, 3.2871, 4.2958, 4.2960, 4.2968, 4.2970, 4.3190, 4.3292, 4.3293, 4.3294, 4.3296, 4.3297, 4.3298, 4.3299, 4.3307, 4.3345
- Bockmuehl, M. 1.446, 1.689, 2.874, 2.903, 2.956, 2.959, 2.973, 2.1070, 2.1209, 2.1397, 2.1401, 2.1443, 3.2519, 3.2749, 3.2750, 3.2751, 3.2763, 3.2766, 4.2961
- Bodnar, J. 1.817
- Boffetti, J. 2.921
- Boffo, L. 2.1459
- Bogaert, P. M. 3.2251
- Bohak, G. 2.1580, 2.1588
- Böhlmann, P. 4.3341
- Boismard, M. É. 1.435, 1.738, 2.1500, 2.1512, 3.2124, 3.2128, 3.2193, 4.3307, 4.3317, 4.3318, 4.3344
- Bokser, B. M. 3.2341
- Bolt, P. G. 1.626, 2.884
- Bolyki, J. 1.345
- Boman, T. 1.800, 1.801
- Bonanno, G. A. 1.809, 1.824, 1.827, 1.834
- Bond, H. K. 1.644, 1.648, 2.885, 3.2297, 3.2352, 3.2353, 3.2355, 3.2435
- Bonhoeffer, D. 1.93
- Bonner, C. 4.3068, 4.3079, 4.3080
- Bonner, S. F. 4.3140
- Boomershine, T. E. 1.791
- Booth, R. P. 1.629, 3.2726, 3.2727, 3.2730, 3.2817
- Borg, M. 1.xv, 1.36–38, 1.57, 1.94, 1.111, 1.120, 1.126, 1.244–246, 1.260, 1.261, 1.267, 1.268, 1.278, 1.279, 1.282, 1.283, 1.285, 1.286, 1.293, 1.321, 1.349, 1.510, 1.511, 1.528, 1.543–545, 1.547, 1.559, 1.682, 1.689, 1.804, 2.874, 2.882, 2.920, 2.922, 2.924, 2.925, 2.947, 2.957, 2.992, 2.1028, 2.1093, 2.1146, 2.1397, 2.1402, 2.1442, 2.1627, 3.2408, 3.2473, 3.2474, 3.2475, 3.2517, 3.2519, 3.2519, 3.2520, 3.2542, 3.2546, 3.2549, 3.2647, 3.2657, 3.2658, 3.2711, 3.2813, 3.2817, 3.2828, 3.2882, 3.2887, 3.2888, 3.2895, 3.2901, 3.2906, 3.2907
- Borgen, P. 2.1234, 3.2644
- Boring, M. E. 1.310, 1.311, 1.315, 1.317, 1.319, 1.330, 1.331, 1.342, 1.697, 1.707, 2.905, 2.1022, 2.1023, 2.1063, 3.2072, 4.2918, 4.3440, 4.3441, 4.3442
- Bornhäuser, K. 1.418, 4.3264
- Bornkamm, G. 1.34, 1.104, 1.185–188, 1.302, 1.303, 1.450, 1.640, 1.668, 1.669, 1.684, 2.867, 2.889, 2.1032, 2.1036, 2.1200, 2.1491, 2.1546, 3.1882, 3.2023, 3.2519, 3.2561, 3.2567, 3.2691
- Borret, M. 3.2121, 3.2165
- Bosworth, A. B. 1.293
- Botermann, H. 2.1200, 3.2152
- Botha, P. J. J. 3.1835
- Böttrich, C. 2.1809
- Bouchard, D. F. 2.1388
- Bourdieu, P. 1.526
- Bourgeois, P. 4.3036
- Bourgery, A. 4.3245
- Bousset, W. 1.6, 2.1026, 2.1749, 3.2525, 3.2575
- Bovon, F. 1.353, 2.1126, 2.1263, 2.1813, 3.1910, 3.1911, 3.1912, 3.1914, 3.1920, 3.1921, 3.2082, 3.2476, 3.2720, 4.2955, 4.2969, 4.2970, 4.3190, 4.3246, 4.3257, 4.3259, 4.3263, 4.3264, 4.3292, 4.3293, 4.3294, 4.3295, 4.3296, 4.3300, 4.3344
- Bowden, J. 2.865
- Bowersock, G. W. 1.395, 2.1808, 3.2459
- Bowie, E. L. 4.3064
- Bowker, J. 4.3184, 4.3189
- Bowman, J. 3.2338
- Boyarin, D. 2.1188, 2.1241, 3.2561
- Boyle, A. J. 2.1667
- Braaten, C. E. 1.300, 1.301, 2.867, 2.1417
- Bradley, J. E. 1.643
- Bradley, J. V. 1.20
- Brady, J. R. 3.2526
- Braithwaite, R. B. 2.1422
- Brandon, S. G. F. 1.38, 1.103, 1.104, 1.107, 1.108, 1.244, 1.352, 2.877, 2.1442, 2.1718, 3.2300, 3.2357, 3.2394, 3.2640
- Branham, R. B. 2.873, 2.1109, 2.1123
- Brankaer, J. 3.1990, 3.2112
- Branscomb, B. H. 2.1446, 4.3339
- Brant, J. A. 2.1438
- Bratcher, R. G. 3.2381
- Braude, W. G. 4.3314

- Braumann, G. 4.3293
 Braun, F.-M. 3.2124, 3.2125, 4.3320
 Braun, H. 1.302, 2.1258, 2.1281, 3.2544, 4.3273
 Braun, M. 2.1669
 Braun, R. 4.3422
 Braund, D. C. 3.2229
 Bredin, M. R. 3.2637
 Breech, J. 1.308, 1.310, 1.311, 1.316, 1.331, 2.1429
 Breisach, E. 2.919, 2.1383
 Brentano, C. 2.1415
 Brewer, D. I. 2.1141, 2.1708
 Breytenbach, C. 1.57, 2.1471, 3.1940, 3.1971, 4.2914, 4.2916, 4.2937, 4.2942
 Bricmont, J. 2.1380
 Briend, J. 2.1723
 Bringmann, K. 2.1794
 Brinsmead, B. H. 2.1626
 Broadhead, E. K. 3.1845, 3.2076
 Brock, A. G. 3.2087
 Brock, S. P. 3.2279
 Brodersen, K. 2.1804
 Broer, I. 1.496, 1.507, 3.1935, 3.1996, 3.2745, 3.2750, 3.2769, 4.3295
 Brongers, H. A. 4.3327
 Brooke, G. J. 1.428, 1.454, 2.1153, 2.1253, 2.1281, 2.1562, 2.1580, 3.2271, 4.3331, 4.3343
 Brooks, J. A. 3.2129
 Brooten, B. J. 4.3109, 4.3110, 4.3118
 Broshi, M. 2.1266, 2.1281, 2.1665, 3.2216
 Brown, C. 1.620, 1.622, 1.624, 1.631, 1.632, 1.634, 1.643, 1.647, 1.698, 2.855, 2.856, 2.864, 2.881, 2.883, 2.991, 2.1015, 2.1025, 2.1194, 2.1197, 2.1205, 2.1229, 2.1414, 2.1420, 2.1423, 2.1425, 2.1434, 2.1435, 2.1437, 2.1442, 2.1762, 2.1775, 2.1758, 3.2856, 3.2859
 Brown, C. G. 2.1378
 Brown, D. 1.466, 1.849, 2.1414
 Brown, M. L. 4.3186, 4.3187, 4.3193
 Brown, P. 2.937
 Brown, R. E. 1.35, 1.434, 1.633, 1.637, 1.659, 1.664, 1.689, 2.885, 2.1084, 2.1169, 2.1170, 2.1190, 2.1209, 2.1617, 3.1881, 3.1883, 3.1885, 3.1887, 3.1901, 3.1903, 3.1921, 3.1989, 3.1990, 3.2000, 3.2011, 3.2023, 3.2050, 3.2170, 3.2175, 3.2196, 3.2200, 3.2277, 3.2324, 3.2328, 3.2361, 3.2364, 3.2365, 3.2368, 3.2377, 3.2378, 3.2382, 3.2384, 3.2411, 3.2412, 3.2413, 3.2415, 3.2416, 3.2417, 3.2418, 3.2420, 3.2421, 3.2430, 4.2956, 4.3095, 4.3122, 4.3414, 4.3423, 4.3424, 4.3427
 Brown, R. H. 1.511
 Brown, R. V. 1.18
 Brown, S. G. 3.1987, 3.1988, 4.3028
 Brownlee, W. H. 2.1750, 4.3315
 Brox, N. 3.2087
 Bruce, F. F. 2.876, 2.1224, 2.1617, 3.2149, 3.2152, 3.2157, 3.2159, 3.2169, 3.2338, 3.2341, 4.3148
 Brucker, R. 2.874, 2.890, 2.935, 2.1022, 2.1387, 2.1755, 2.1812, 3.2183
 Brueggemann, W. 3.2218, 3.2781, 3.2793
 Bruner, J. 1.838
 Brunner, E. 1.93
 Brunner, H. 4.2978
 Brunner-Traut, E. 4.2978
 Brunot, A. 2.1447
 Bruteau, B. 3.2769
 Bryan, C. 1.791
 Bryan, D. 2.1601
 Bryan, S. M. 2.1188, 3.2747, 3.2748, 3.2752, 3.2753, 3.2763, 3.2764, 3.2770, 3.2841, 3.2843, 3.2844, 3.2850, 3.2851
 Bubenheimer, U. 3.2830
 Buber, M. 2.1058
 Buchanan, G. W. 1.32, 2.1324, 2.1325, 2.1626, 3.2641, 3.2643
 Büchler, A. 3.2528, 3.2805, 3.2824, 3.2828
 Bühner, J. A. 3.1988, 4.3059
 Bultmann, R. 1.4, 1.33, 1.34, 1.40, 1.41, 1.46, 1.47, 1.51, 1.55, 1.71, 1.81, 1.93, 1.94, 1.95, 1.99, 1.102, 1.112, 1.125, 1.126, 1.185, 1.186, 1.192, 1.230, 1.249, 1.262, 1.268, 1.269, 1.280, 1.295, 1.301, 1.302-304, 1.306, 1.307, 1.328, 1.333, 1.405, 1.406, 1.414, 1.418, 1.424, 1.449, 1.471, 1.477, 1.504, 1.579, 1.651, 1.652, 1.654, 1.655-665, 1.667, 1.668, 1.671, 1.673, 1.679, 1.682, 1.683, 1.684, 1.685, 1.691, 1.698, 1.699, 1.706, 1.707, 1.715, 1.779, 1.801, 1.809-814, 1.820, 1.826, 1.827, 1.831, 1.832, 1.833, 1.836, 1.846, 1.847, 2.865-867, 2.869, 2.889, 2.987-989, 2.1009, 2.1026, 2.1027, 2.1029, 2.1032, 2.1036, 2.1039, 2.1082-1084, 2.1172, 2.1207, 2.1350, 2.1386, 2.1414, 2.1465, 2.1470, 2.1565, 2.1567, 2.1572, 3.1827, 3.1828, 3.1829, 3.1937, 3.1954, 3.2003, 3.2004, 3.2015, 3.2027, 3.2030, 3.2049, 3.2069,

- 3.2076, 3.2196, 3.2336, 3.2337, 3.2479,
 3.2519, 3.2525, 3.2540, 3.2542, 3.2546,
 3.2551, 3.2557, 3.2568, 3.2575, 3.2618,
 3.2619, 3.2620, 3.2621, 3.2645, 3.2646,
 3.2693, 3.2698, 3.2863, 3.2871, 3.2885,
 3.2886, 4.2980, 4.2984, 4.2985, 4.3072,
 4.3126, 4.3127, 4.3129, 4.3192, 4.3247,
 4.3253, 4.3261, 4.3264, 4.3274, 4.3281,
 4.3292, 4.3293, 4.3308, 4.3309, 4.3310,
 4.3337, 4.3374, 4.3444, 4.3445, 4.3448,
 4.3452
 Bundy, W. E. 1.388
 Burchard, C. 2.1248, 2.1269, 4.3463
 Burguière, A. 1.506
 Buri, F. 1.302, 1.580
 Burke, P. 2.1389
 Burkert, W. 4.3062, 4.3063
 Burket, W. 3.2531, 3.2532
 Burkett, D. 1.7, 1.436, 3.1854, 3.2888
 Burkill, T. A. 4.3308
 Burkitt, F. C. 1.699, 1.706, 1.712,
 4.3139
 Burnett, A. 4.2988, 4.3015
 Burnett, F. W. 2.1383, 2.1395
 Burney, C. F. 2.1349, 2.1374, 2.1446,
 4.3307, 4.3311
 Burns, R. M. 2.1423
 Burns, T. 4.3349, 4.3355
 Burrige, R. A. 1.441, 1.624, 2.860,
 2.1010, 2.1436, 2.1473, 2.1810, 3.2192,
 4.3247
 Burrows, M. 4.3315
 Busch, E. 2.865
 Busch, P. 4.3060, 4.3061
 Bussmann, C. 3.2086
 Butler, B. C. 3.2691
 Butler, H. E. 4.3262
 Butler, J. 1.510
 Buttrick, G. A. 2.1570
 Butts, J. R. 4.3040, 4.3043
 Bynon, T. 1.365
 Byrskog, S. 1.196, 1.344, 1.415, 1.425,
 1.492, 2.903, 2.1231, 2.1399, 2.1467,
 2.1470, 2.1471, 2.1474, 2.1475, 2.1487,
 2.1489, 2.1493, 2.1756, 3.1929, 3.1973,
 3.2185, 3.2188, 3.2191, 3.2192, 3.2195,
 3.2197, 3.2198, 3.2199, 3.2200, 3.2201,
 3.2206, 3.2207, 3.2209, 3.2620, 3.2699,
 3.2705, 4.3454, 4.3455, 4.3456
 Cadbury, H. J. 1.35, 1.551, 1.573,
 1.644, 2.1022
 Cadoux, C. J. 1.35
 Cahill, J. M. 4.2995, 4.2996, 4.3108
 Caird, G. B. 1.244, 2.878, 2.1442,
 3.2331, 3.2336, 3.2337, 3.2338, 3.2836,
 3.2900, 3.2901, 3.2902
 Calduch-Benages, N. 2.1800
 Calhoun, C. 1.746
 Callahan, T. 3.2383
 Calvert, D. G. A. 1.309, 1.696, 1.707
 Calvin, J. 1.622
 Cameron, R. 1.245, 1.255, 2.1750,
 3.1976, 3.1977, 3.1981, 3.1987, 3.2059,
 3.2060, 3.2074, 3.2105
 Champion, C. T. 2.865
 Campkin, B. 3.2709
 Camps, G. 4.3428
 Cancik, H. 2.1792, 2.1810
 Capes, D. B. 3.1940
 Capps, D. 2.909, 2.910, 2.1012,
 2.1013
 Capps, W. H. 1.524
 Caputo, J. D. 2.1395, 2.1396
 Caquot, P. A. 2.1556
 Caragounis, C. C. 1.423, 3.2531,
 3.2835
 Carlson, J. W. 2.871, 3.2682
 Carlson, S. C. 3.1987, 3.2131, 4.3058
 Carlston, C. E. 1.309, 1.321, 3.2552,
 3.2558, 4.3311
 Carmichael, J. 2.1058, 2.1374, 2.1588
 Carmignac, J. 4.3333
 Carney, T. F. 1.753
 Carr, D. 2.1421, 2.1481
 Carr, E. H. 2.926-928, 2.932, 2.936,
 2.937, 2.947, 2.1420
 Carroll R., M. D. 2.1454
 Carroll, J. T. 3.2386
 Carroll, M. 1.426
 Carruth, S. 1.472
 Carruthers, M. 1.427
 Carson, D. A. 1.435, 1.442, 2.1450,
 3.2249, 3.2343
 Carter, W. 1.637
 Cartlidge, D. R. 2.1325
 Cary, M. 2.1455
 Case, S. J. 2.945
 Casetti, P. 1.720
 Casey, E. S. 1.809, 1.816, 1.819, 1.824,
 1.825-828, 1.835
 Casey, M. 1.344, 1.368, 1.699, 1.719,
 1.722, 3.2000, 3.2048, 3.2346, 3.2457,
 3.2902
 Casey, P. M. 2.874, 2.881, 2.1129,
 2.1157, 2.1161, 2.1162, 2.1343-1345,
 2.1348-1350, 2.1352, 2.1353,
 2.1358-1372, 2.1431, 2.1549, 2.1556,

- 2.1567, 2.1597, 3.2641, 3.2642, 3.2643,
 3.2645, 3.2646, 3.2655, 3.2656
 Caspari, C. E. 3.2338
 Castelli, E. A. 1.777
 Caster, M. 3.2122
 Catchpole, D. R. 1.673, 1.686, 2.1075,
 2.1076, 3.1910, 3.1938, 3.2018, 3.2797,
 4.2912, 4.3261
 Cathcart, K. J. 3.2263, 3.2264
 Catto, S. 4.3114
 Caudill, S. 1.512
 Cavallin, H. C. 3.2274
 Cazelles, H. 1.445
 Ceming, K. 3.2082
 Cerfaux, L. 1.36, 4.3034, 4.3035,
 4.3041
 Certeau, M. 1.481
 Cézanne, P. 3.2213
 Chadwick, H. 3.2121, 3.2165, 3.2166
 Chancey, M. A. 1.394, 2.1118, 2.1259,
 2.1363, 2.1461, 2.1459, 2.1640
 Chapman, J. 3.2044
 Charles, R. H. 2.1516, 3.2243
 Charlesworth, J. H. 1.xv, 1.37, 1.59,
 1.95, 1.96, 1.100, 1.102, 1.109, 1.111,
 1.119, 1.121, 1.122–124, 1.128, 1.202,
 1.244, 1.246, 1.247, 1.253, 1.291,
 1.334, 1.351–353, 1.510, 2.869, 2.874,
 2.876, 2.937, 2.942, 2.1045, 2.1061,
 2.1064, 2.1234, 2.1254, 2.1282–1285,
 2.1453, 2.1554, 2.1560, 2.1564, 2.1576,
 2.1579, 2.1583, 2.1593, 3.1974, 3.1979,
 3.1990, 3.2009, 3.2025, 3.2034, 3.2081,
 3.2085, 3.2203, 3.2215, 3.2216, 3.2219,
 3.2225, 3.2229, 3.2244, 3.2277, 3.2278,
 3.2518, 3.2519, 3.2605, 3.2713, 3.2736,
 4.3090, 4.3184, 4.3185, 4.3194, 4.3316,
 4.3325, 4.3328
 Chartier, R. 2.1378
 Chatman, S. 1.783
 Chávez, E. G. 3.2637
 Chazon, G. 4.3114
 Chiala, S. 2.1552
 Chiat, M. J. S. 2.1727
 Childs, B. 1.151, 3.2576
 Childs, H. 2.1011–1014, 2.1018,
 3.2538, 4.3161
 Chilton, B. 1.xvii, 1.14, 1.36, 1.50,
 1.95, 1.101, 1.111, 1.124, 1.131, 1.132,
 1.149, 1.244, 1.248, 1.253, 1.267,
 1.268, 1.285, 1.369, 1.631, 1.699,
 2.870, 2.874, 2.881, 2.882, 2.888,
 2.920, 2.924, 2.942, 2.946, 2.947,
 2.951, 2.1002, 2.1032, 2.1060, 2.1064,
 2.1149, 2.1155, 2.1163, 2.1165, 2.1185,
 2.1187, 2.1214, 2.1219, 2.1223, 2.1224,
 2.1236, 2.1268, 2.1344, 2.1353, 2.1371,
 2.1374, 2.1397, 2.1425, 2.1429, 2.1431,
 2.1442, 2.1443, 2.1480, 2.1482, 2.1484,
 2.1718, 2.1748, 2.1751, 2.1754, 2.1762,
 3.2236, 3.2285, 3.2286, 3.2405, 3.2528,
 3.2640, 3.2658, 3.2710, 3.2730, 3.2735,
 3.2736, 3.2739, 3.2755, 3.2763, 3.2770,
 3.2807, 3.2808, 3.2809, 3.2811, 3.2813,
 3.2820, 3.2822, 3.2823, 3.2829, 3.2830,
 3.2860, 3.2861, 3.2906, 3.2907, 4.3030,
 4.3106, 4.3132, 4.3134, 4.3314, 4.3412,
 4.3434
 Christ, F. 2.1049, 2.1050
 Christie, W. M. 3.2345
 Christophersen, A. 2.1257
 Chubb, T. 1.92, 1.844
 Churgin, P. 3.2263
 Chwolson, D. 2.1445, 3.2344, 3.2345,
 3.3246
 Cichorius, C. 3.2331
 Clark, D. 3.2325, 4.2981
 Clark, E. A. 2.1384
 Claudel, G. 3.1918
 Claussen, C. 4.3121, 4.3137
 Clay, D. 2.1123
 Clayton, C. 2.1449
 Cleave, R. 1.629
 Clements, R. A. 2.1283, 2.1284
 Clifton, C. B. 1.779
 Clines, D. J. A. 1.133, 2.1380, 2.1395,
 3.2723, 3.2738
 Clippinger, D. 2.1382
 Coakley, J. F. 3.2028
 Code, L. 1.512
 Coggins, R. J. 2.1125
 Cohen, A. B. 1.834
 Cohen, G. A. 1.45
 Cohen, R. A. 2.1406
 Cohen, S. J. D. 1.271, 2.857, 2.1666,
 3.2832, 4.3117, 4.3125, 4.3239
 Cohn-Sherbok, D. 2.874, 2.1074,
 2.1075, 2.1227
 Cohon, S. 2.1057
 Colani, T. 2.1025
 Coleman, J. A. 1.745
 Colle, R. D. 2.886
 Collinge, N. E. 1.365
 Collingwood, R. G. 1.46, 1.568, 2.936,
 2.1422, 2.1670, 3.2292
 Collins, A. Y. 1.350, 2.1195, 2.1545,
 2.1552, 2.1566, 2.1568, 2.1581, 2.1584,
 2.1586, 2.1593, 2.1811, 3.1852, 3.2384,

- 3.2428, 3.2641, 3.2645, 3.2655, 3.2656,
 3.2657, 3.2694
 Collins, J. J. 1.29, 1.415, 2.876, 2.1024,
 2.1045, 2.1237, 2.1282, 2.1452, 2.1453,
 2.1454, 2.1460, 2.1548, 2.1552, 2.1558,
 2.1560, 2.1563, 2.1576, 2.1578, 2.1579,
 2.1583-1587, 2.1601, 3.2272, 3.2273,
 3.2277, 3.2278, 3.2281, 3.2284, 3.2409,
 3.2736, 3.2783, 3.2788, 3.2877, 3.2885,
 3.2889, 3.2890, 3.2891, 3.2892, 3.2900,
 3.2901, 4.3325
 Collins, P. H. 1.514, 1.516, 1.523
 Collins, R. 1.522
 Collins, R. F. 1.431
 Coloe, M. L. 3.2637
 Colpe, C. 2.1546, 2.1548, 3.2473,
 3.2477, 3.2478, 3.2481, 3.2483, 3.2489,
 3.2492, 4.3259
 Colwell, E. C. 1.373
 Colzani, G. 2.964
 Comrie, B. 3.2457, 3.2459
 Condit, C. M. 1.512
 Connerton, P. 1.816, 1.817
 Connolly, D. 3.2542
 Connolly, K. J. 1.751
 Conrad, C. 2.1378
 Conte, G. B. 2.1802
 Contessa, A. 2.1723
 Conway, M. A. 1.828
 Conzelmann, H. 1.93, 1.241, 1.302,
 1.450, 1.669, 2.867, 3.2335, 3.2386,
 3.2495, 3.2886, 4.3455
 Cook, E. 2.1562, 2.1587, 2.1593
 Cook, M. J. 4.3129
 Cook, S. A. 4.3139
 Cook, S. L. 2.1587
 Cooke, S. A. 3.2685
 Copan, P. 1.130, 2.874, 2.1062
 Cope, L. 1.435, 2.1328, 2.1340, 3.1825
 Coppens, J. 3.2248
 Corbo, V. C. 4.3113
 Corley, K. E. 1.510, 2.938, 2.947,
 2.1402, 2.1416, 4.3172
 Correns, D. 4.3327
 Corrington, G. P. 3.2526
 Corvisier, J. N. 1.476
 Coser, L. A. 1.815
 Counet, P. C. 3.2417
 Cournoyer, D. E. 1.743
 Court, J. M. 2.874
 Cover, R. C. 4.3182
 Cowdell, S. 2.860
 Cowley, A. 2.1731
 Cox, M. 2.926
 Cox, R. 3.2709
 Craffert, P. F. 1.540, 1.746, 1.748,
 1.765, 3.2538
 Craig, W. L. 3.2862
 Cranfield, C. E. B. 4.3322
 Crehan, J. H. 4.3331
 Cremer, F. G. 4.3310, 4.3330,
 4.3332
 Cremer, H. 3.2863
 Crenshaw, J. L. 4.3184, 4.3362
 Cribbs, F. L. 3.2018
 Cribiore, R. 2.1679
 Criddle, A. H. 3.2108
 Croce, B. 2.936
 Crook, Z. 1.746
 Crosman, I. 1.788
 Cross, A. R. 1.700, 2.1751, 2.1762
 Cross, F. L. 1.410
 Cross, F. M. 2.1549, 2.1562, 2.1576
 Crossan, J. D. 1.37, 1.60, 1.64, 1.84,
 1.95, 1.124, 1.130, 1.145, 1.160, 1.199,
 1.244, 1.245, 1.247, 1.250, 1.251,
 1.256, 1.261, 1.268, 1.275, 1.278,
 1.282, 1.288, 1.298, 1.339, 1.349,
 1.354, 1.408, 1.451, 1.464, 1.532,
 1.536, 1.542, 1.561, 1.602, 1.607,
 1.665, 1.735, 1.781, 1.792-794, 1.803,
 1.822, 2.871, 2.873, 2.908, 2.912,
 2.915, 2.919, 2.920, 2.924, 2.943,
 2.946, 2.947, 2.992, 2.1010, 2.1012,
 2.1013, 2.1028, 2.1106, 2.1131, 2.1213,
 2.1239, 2.1395, 2.1396, 2.1416, 2.1602,
 2.1606, 2.1616, 2.1627, 2.1640, 3.1847,
 3.1848, 3.1852, 3.1861, 3.1865, 3.1866,
 3.1867, 3.1868, 3.1872, 3.1911, 3.1978,
 3.1980, 3.1981, 3.1987, 3.1988, 3.1989,
 3.1994, 3.2000, 3.2063, 3.2070, 3.2074,
 3.2079, 3.2082, 3.2083, 3.2085, 3.2132,
 3.2134, 3.2208, 3.2301, 3.2302, 3.2384,
 3.2412, 3.2481, 3.2517, 3.2518, 3.2534,
 3.2538, 3.2539, 3.2541, 3.2544, 3.2552,
 3.2645, 3.2646, 3.2649, 3.2666, 3.2667,
 3.2698, 3.2700, 3.2732, 3.2733, 3.2764,
 3.2789, 3.2792, 3.2887, 3.2888, 3.2890,
 3.2894, 3.2895, 3.2898, 3.2900, 4.3023,
 4.3024, 4.3027, 4.3059, 4.3067, 4.3071,
 4.3155, 4.3171, 4.3178, 4.3179, 4.3191
 Crossley, J. G. 2.1145, 2.1148, 2.1209,
 2.1371, 2.1718, 3.1841
 Crum, W. E. 4.3039, 4.3040
 Crump, D. 4.3073
 Cryer, F. H. 2.1800
 Crystal, D. 1.365
 Cullen, C. 3.2324

- Cullmann, O. 1.38, 1.104, 1.431, 1.444,
 1.492, 1.493, 2.1816, 3.2062, 3.2436
 Culpepper, R. A. 2.1176, 3.2336
 Cummins, S. A. 2.1241
 Cupitt, D. 2.1395
 Cureton, W. 3.2159, 3.2160, 3.2161
 Currie, G. 4.3158, 4.3159
 Curtis, M. C. 1.778
 Cuvillier, E. 3.1845
- D'Arc, J. 3.1923
 D'Costa, G. 1.281
 Daecke, S. 2.1396
 Daele, W. 1.529
 Dafit, H. 4.2999
 Dahl, N. A. 1.35, 1.36, 1.49, 2.1190,
 2.1197, 3.2567
 Dalley, S. 1.147
 Dalman, G. 1.365, 1.371, 1.376, 1.385,
 1.416, 2.1347, 2.1374, 2.1446, 3.2172,
 3.2342, 4.3272, 4.3274
 Dan, J. 1.147
 Danby, H. 2.1692, 2.1742, 3.2611,
 3.2612, 3.2613
 Dancy, J. C. 3.2330
 Daniel-Rops, H. 2.1447
 Daniel, U. 2.1379
 Daniélou, J. 2.1447, 3.2144
 Daniels, J. B. 3.2090
 Danto, A. C. 2.1388
 Dar, S. 2.1459
 Darr, J. A. 1.785
 Daston, L. 1.761
 Daube, D. 2.1504, 3.2620, 4.3149,
 4.3150, 4.3292, 4.3309
 Dautenberg, G. 1.133
 Davenport, G. L. 3.2278
 Davey, N. 1.712
 David, M. 2.1004
 Davids, P. H. 2.1186, 2.1226
 Davies, J. 3.2429
 Davies, M. 1.263, 1.264, 1.266, 1.434,
 1.562, 2.1438
 Davies, P. R. 1.130, 2.1725
 Davies, S. 1.252, 3.1980, 3.2518,
 3.2524, 4.3025, 4.3036, 4.3316
 Davies, W. D. 1.681, 1.688, 2.1065,
 2.1066, 2.1200, 2.1225, 2.1297, 2.1322,
 2.1325, 2.1358, 2.1447, 2.1574, 2.1588,
 2.1760, 2.1808, 3.1875, 3.1876, 3.1882,
 3.1883, 3.1884, 3.1886, 3.1890, 3.1891,
 3.1893, 3.1894, 3.1895, 3.1896, 3.1897,
 3.2215, 3.2324, 3.2418, 3.2419, 3.2521,
 3.2522, 3.2680, 3.2691, 3.2697, 3.2704,
 3.2706, 3.2774, 3.2779, 3.2781, 3.2784,
 3.2786, 3.2788, 3.2789, 3.2845, 3.2873,
 3.2908, 4.2960, 4.2967, 4.2968, 4.3128,
 4.3129, 4.3130, 4.3140, 4.3190, 4.3293,
 4.3312, 4.3342
- Davila, J. R. 2.1208, 2.1282, 2.1595
 Davis, B. S. 2.1134
 Davis, C.S. 2.1072
 Davis, M. 2.1284, 2.1653
 Davis, S. T. 2.860, 2.914, 2.1068
 Davis, T. 4.3158
 Dawes, G. W. 1.xvii, 1.248, 2.991,
 2.993
 Dawsey, J. M. 1.785, 1.806
 Dawson, C. 2.945
 Day, J. 2.1549
 Day, P. L. 1.743, 4.2937
 de Boer, M. C. 2.1022, 2.1088 de Jonge, H. J. 1.156, 1.244, 2.1029,
 2.1030, 2.1193, 2.1445, 2.1580, 3.1952,
 3.2282, 3.2283, 3.2284, 3.2473, 3.2481,
 3.2484, 3.2495, 3.2496, 3.2641, 3.2642,
 3.2663
 de Moor, J. C. 4.3185
 de Ste. Croix, G. E. M. 3.2302 de Vaux, R. 4.3112
 Dean, L. 2.1077
 DeBerg, B. 1.524
 Debona, G. 4.3157
 Debrunner, A. 3.2322, 3.2727,
 4.3270
 DeConick, A. D. 3.1991, 3.2112
 Degenhardt, H.-J. 4.3285, 4.3296,
 4.3299, 4.3300
 Dehandschutter, B. 1.458, 4.3029
 Deines, R. 1.378, 1.412, 2.1210,
 2.1698, 3.2251, 3.2252, 3.2619,
 4.2996, 4.3070
 Deissmann, A. 1.372, 1.376, 3.2525,
 4.3078, 4.3079
 Delcor, M. 3.2275, 4.3315
 Delitzsch, F. 4.3337
 Delkurt, H. 4.3148
 Delling, G. 3.2378, 4.3440
 Delobel, J. 1.251, 1.254, 4.3126
 Demandt, A. 2.1794
 DeMaris, R. 1.746
 Deming, W. 1.11, 2.1128
 Denaux, A. 2.1471, 4.3126
 Denis, A.-M. 4.3203
 Denton, D. L. 2.871, 2.1419, 3.2538
 Deppe, D. B. 1.261, 3.1968, 3.1969
 Dérenbourg, J. N. 4.3232
 Derrenbacher, R. A. 3.1825

- Derrett, J. D. M. 1.629, 1.630, 1.648 ,
2.856, 2.883, 4.3284, 4.3338
- Derrida, J. 2.921
- Desjardins, M. R. 1.258, 1.281, 1.288,
1.289, 1.518, 1.528, 2.874, 2.1022,
2.1282, 2.1400, 2.1401
- Destro, A. 1.746
- Destroyer, K. 1.246
- Detwiler, A. 1.431
- Deutsch, C. 1.642, 3.2270
- Dewey, J. 1.327, 1.783, 1.785, 1.800,
3.1832, 3.1835, 3.1836, 3.1852, 3.2085,
3.2207, 4.3305
- Dexinger, F. 3.2701
- Deyon, P. 1.506
- Di Segni, L. 3.2235
- Dibelius, M. 1.34, 1.93, 1.405, 1.424,
1.651-654, 1.656-660, 1.662, 1.667,
1.668, 1.671, 1.698, 1.699, 1.810,
1.812, 1.846, 2.1026, 2.1350,
2.1490-1492, 2.1750, 2.1812, 3.1827,
3.2027, 3.2088, 3.2196, 3.2525, 3.2542,
3.2556, 4.2962, 4.3080, 4.3126, 4.3127,
4.3129, 4.3277, 4.3443
- Dickie, M. W. 2.873, 3.2537, 4.3068
- Dickson, K. A. 1.526
- Dietzfelbinger, C. 3.2190, 3.2543,
3.2601, 4.3076
- Diez Macho, A. 3.2246
- Dihle, A. 1.65, 2.1793, 2.1803, 2.1804,
4.3144
- DiLella, A. A. 2.1549, 2.1550
- Dill, S. 2.1106, 2.1628
- Dillon, J. T. 1.409
- Dilthey, W. 2.1422
- Dimant, D. 2.1235
- Dinkler, E. 1.458, 2.1026
- Diodati, D. 2.1344
- Dione, H. W. 3.2599
- Dittert, K. 4.3322
- Dockery, D. S. 2.1449
- Dockx, S. 3.2346, 3.2351
- Dodd, B. J. 2.885
- Dodd, C. H. 1.22, 1.35, 1.93, 1.104,
1.109, 1.111, 1.203, 1.255, 1.313,
1.712, 1.717, 2.1185, 2.1186, 2.1350,
2.1427, 2.1492, 3.1828, 3.1959, 3.2000,
3.2006, 3.2013, 3.2051, 3.2073, 3.2195,
3.2546, 3.2549, 3.2550, 3.2552, 3.2554,
3.2555, 3.2556, 3.2557, 3.2570, 3.2571,
3.2881, 4.3024, 4.3192, 4.3193, 4.3217,
4.3316, 4.3340
- Dodds, E. R. 4.3062
- Doering, L. 2.1284, 2.1699, 3.2602,
3.2603, 3.2604, 3.2605, 3.2606, 3.2607,
3.2608, 3.2610, 3.2611, 3.2612, 3.2613,
3.2618, 3.2620, 3.2621, 3.2628, 3.2631,
4.3076, 4.3149, 4.3150, 4.3154
- Doeve, J. 2.1225
- Doig, K. F. 3.2351
- Dolff, S. N. 1.371
- Dominik, W. J. 2.1667, 2.1682
- Donahue, J. R. 1.659, 1.777, 1.779,
1.782, 1.786, 1.787, 1.799, 2.1566,
3.1831, 3.1842, 3.1845, 3.2019, 3.2554,
3.2558, 4.2917, 4.3274, 4.3275, 4.3288
- Donaldson, T. L. 2.1282, 3.2707
- Donelson, L. R. 1.126
- Donfried, K. 2.1202, 2.1203, 3.1883,
3.2131, 3.2132, 3.2351
- Donnelly, D. 2.874, 2.1283
- Döpp, S. 2.1816
- Doran, R. 2.1799
- Dornmeyer, D. 1.65, 1.441, 1.442,
2.1792, 2.1793, 2.1810, 2.1812
- Dornseiff, F. 3.2169
- Doty, W. G. 1.673
- Douglas, K. B. 2.972
- Douglas, M. 3.2709, 3.2835
- Dowd, S. 3.1845
- Downes, W. 3.2457
- Downing, F. G. 1.8, 1.37, 1.260, 1.349,
2.873, 2.1105-1112, 2.1114-1118,
2.1123, 2.1127-1130, 2.1133, 3.2518,
4.3245, 4.3246, 4.3247, 4.3254, 4.3255,
4.3263, 4.3266, 4.3267, 4.3268
- Doyle, A. D. 3.2357
- Draaisma, D. 3.1933
- Drapela, V. J. 3.2344
- Draper, J. A. 1.176, 1.208, 1.841,
2.1465, 3.1977, 3.2127
- Dray, W. 1.700
- Drenth, P. J. D. 1.757
- Drewermann, E. 4.3058, 4.3059
- Drews, A. 1.336
- Driver, G. R. 3.2348
- Driver, S. R. 2.1345
- Droysen, J. G. 2.1788
- Dschulnigg, P. 1.737
- du Toit, D. S. 1.4, 1.82, 1.84, 1.490,
1.496, 1.505, 1.518, 1.528, 1.836,
1.839, 2.1060, 3.2104, 3.2209, 3.2517
- Dubberstein, W. H. 3.2316, 3.2330,
3.2331, 3.2353
- Dubois, J. D. 3.2137
- Dudar, H. 3.2213

- Dudley, D. B. 2.1106
 Duling, D. C. 1.543, 1.631, 1.746,
 1.766, 1.774, 2.1233, 3.2295, 4.3069,
 4.3070
 Dumoulin, O. 1.481
 Dunderberg, I. 1.65, 2.904, 4.2913
 Dundes, A. 1.194
 Dungan, D. L. 1.434, 1.435, 1.442,
 1.644, 2.1317–1319, 2.1325, 3.1940,
 3.2052, 3.2193, 4.2911, 4.3442
 Dunn, J. D. G. 1.48, 1.94, 1.161, 1.183,
 1.186, 1.270, 1.271, 1.334, 1.337,
 1.340, 1.363, 1.379, 1.424, 1.426,
 1.487, 1.492, 1.493, 1.500, 1.621,
 1.629, 1.639, 1.678, 1.691, 1.696,
 1.715, 1.718, 2.882, 2.885, 2.901–903,
 2.907, 2.908, 2.920, 2.924, 2.936,
 2.938, 2.942, 2.946, 2.1022, 2.1023,
 2.1036, 2.1037, 2.1052, 2.1053,
 2.1068–1073, 2.1089, 2.1140, 2.1149,
 2.1152, 2.1153, 2.1158, 2.1163,
 2.1169–1171, 2.1176, 2.1187, 2.1188,
 2.1196, 2.1197, 2.1205, 2.1208, 2.1212,
 2.1282, 2.1361, 2.1398, 2.1399, 2.1418,
 2.1419, 2.1433, 2.1442, 2.1465, 2.1470,
 2.1471, 2.1482, 2.1488, 2.1563, 2.1570,
 2.1594, 2.1597, 2.1777, 3.1838, 3.1847,
 3.1848, 3.1849, 3.1850, 3.1856, 3.1859,
 3.1906, 3.1937, 3.1940, 3.1943, 3.1944,
 3.1945, 3.1950, 3.1951, 3.1960, 3.1965,
 3.1984, 3.2063, 3.2064, 3.2065, 3.2069,
 3.2147, 3.2191, 3.2195, 3.2199, 3.2207,
 3.2270, 3.2292, 3.2298, 3.2299, 3.2519,
 3.2520, 3.2522, 3.2523, 3.2533, 3.2534,
 3.2540, 3.2541, 3.2545, 3.2546, 3.2633,
 3.2653, 3.2654, 3.2655, 3.2659, 3.2662,
 3.2707, 3.2711, 3.2713, 3.2716, 3.2723,
 3.2727, 3.2728, 3.2730, 3.2733, 3.2734,
 3.2736, 3.2742, 3.2747, 3.2748, 3.2749,
 3.2750, 3.2752, 3.2755, 3.2756, 3.2757,
 3.2758, 3.2761, 3.2763, 3.2766, 3.2767,
 3.2768, 3.2770, 3.2771, 3.2813, 3.2836,
 3.2839, 3.2841, 3.2844, 3.2845, 3.2846,
 3.2851, 3.2855, 3.2860, 3.2878, 3.2879,
 3.2882, 3.2888, 3.2889, 3.2891, 3.2892,
 3.2897, 3.2899, 3.2900, 3.2902, 3.2904,
 4.3106, 4.3179, 4.3180, 4.3197, 4.3261,
 4.3305, 4.3325, 4.3446
 Dupont, J. 1.84, 1.264, 1.309, 1.310,
 2.1264, 3.1915, 3.2044, 3.2265, 3.2629,
 3.2844, 3.2845, 4.3274, 4.3293, 4.3294,
 4.3296, 4.3299, 4.3329, 4.3335
 Dupont-Sommer, A. 4.3069
 Duran, N. W. 2.960, 2.981
 Durst, M. 2.1816
 Dwyer, T. 4.2962
 Dyer, K. D. 1.392
 Dyke, C. 4.3161
 Dyon, D. 2.1665
 Dysinger, L. 2.1010
 Dzielska, M. 4.3064
 Eagleton, T. 2.1377
 Easton, B. S. 1.651, 1.671, 4.3336
 Ebeling, G. 1.34, 1.356
 Ebner, M. 1.349, 1.486, 2.1107, 2.1109,
 4.2914, 4.3246, 4.3341, 4.3342
 Eckardt, A. R. 2.874, 2.1615
 Eckey, W. 4.3258, 4.3337
 Eckstein, A. M. 2.1795
 Eco, U. 1.741, 2.1377
 Eddelbüttel, A. 2.1395
 Eddy, P. R. 2.1107, 2.1121, 2.1123,
 2.1128, 4.3266
 Edersheim, A. 2.1445, 2.1730
 Edmondson, J. S. 2.1677, 2.1683,
 2.1808
 Edwards, D. R. 1.144
 Edwards, J. R. 3.1845
 Edwards, O. 3.2316, 3.2317
 Edwards, S. A. 1.5, 1.310
 Efron, J. 2.1743
 Egger, W. 4.3270, 4.3274, 4.3277
 Eggert, H. 2.1386
 Ego, B. 1.425, 1.427
 Ehrman, B. D. 1.732, 1.802, 1.822,
 2.880, 2.1175, 2.1415, 3.1990, 3.2082,
 3.2109, 3.2126, 3.2131, 3.2132, 3.2539,
 3.2835, 4.3028
 Eichler, J. 4.3275
 Eigler, U. 2.1811
 Eisenman, R. H. 1.454
 Eisler, R. 1.352, 2.1535, 2.1752, 3.2150,
 3.2351
 Eitrem, S. 3.2532, 4.3057
 Ekkehard W. S. 1.536, 1.537
 Elder, L. B. 2.1234
 Eliade, M. 4.3062
 Elizondo, V. 2.962
 Ellens, J. H. 2.909, 2.1282
 Elliot, K. 1.192, 1.310, 1.315, 1.329,
 1.420, 3.1974
 Elliott, J. H. 1.745, 1.746, 1.762, 1.764,
 1.774, 2.909, 2.1282
 Elliott, J. K. 1.729, 1.732, 1.1945,
 3.1986, 3.2120
 Elliott, M. A. 2.1211, 2.1282
 Ellis, E. E. 2.880, 2.1225, 2.1494, 3.1940

- Elster, J. 1.46
- Elton, G. R. 2.919, 2.922, 2.924,
2.926-931, 2.936, 2.940, 2.946, 2.947,
2.1379
- Elvert, J. 2.1381
- Emerton, J. A. 1.344, 2.1297, 2.1548
- Emmel, S. 1.353, 3.2098, 3.2099,
3.2102, 3.2106
- Emmerich, A. C. 4.3172
- Enelow, H. G. 2.1057, 2.1058, 2.1444
- Engberg-Pedersen, T. 2.899, 2.1449,
2.1484
- Ennulat, A. 3.2194, 4.3306
- Enslin, M. S. 2.1447
- Ensor, P. W. 1.444
- Enste, S. 2.1255, 2.1282
- Eph'al, I. 1.101
- Epp, E. J. 1.45, 1.698, 1.728, 1.731,
2.1318, 2.1443, 3.1833, 3.2085
- Erickson, R. J. 2.1448
- Eriksson, A. 2.1436
- Erlemann, K. 3.1986, 4.3312
- Ermarth, E. D. 2.1378
- Ernst, J. 2.1751, 2.1752, 2.1759,
2.1761, 2.1762, 2.1768, 2.1770,
2.1774-1777, 2.1780, 2.1782, 2.1784,
4.3272, 4.3274, 4.3280, 4.3281, 4.3282,
4.3283, 4.3284, 4.3296, 4.3298, 4.3300,
4.3306
- Eron, L. J. 2.1077
- Eshel, E. 3.2529, 3.2532, 4.3069
- Eshel, H. 2.1698
- Eskola, T. 2.876, 2.1235
- Esler, P. 1.746, 1.774, 2.903, 2.904
- Estevez, E. 1.746
- Evans, C. A. 1.viii, 1.xvii, 1.14, 1.36,
1.101, 1.129, 1.130, 1.133, 1.143,
1.246, 1.253, 1.297, 1.362-364, 1.369,
1.371, 1.395, 1.408, 1.409, 1.414,
1.417, 1.443, 1.487, 1.495-497, 1.569,
1.610, 1.623, 1.625, 1.628, 1.636,
1.639, 1.696, 1.698, 1.707, 1.708,
1.711, 1.716, 1.724, 1.728, 1.767,
2.870, 2.874, 2.876, 2.877, 2.881,
2.882, 2.888, 2.1017, 2.1022, 2.1032,
2.1060, 2.1062-1065, 2.1149, 2.1152,
2.1155, 2.1163, 2.1165, 2.1186-1188,
2.1200, 2.1208, 2.1212, 2.1213, 2.1219,
2.1224, 2.1236, 2.1237, 2.1268, 2.1282,
2.1344, 2.1397, 2.1425, 2.1429, 2.1431,
2.1436, 2.1442-1444, 2.1454, 2.1459,
2.1480, 2.1482, 2.1484, 2.1563, 2.1599,
2.1609, 2.1748, 2.1762, 2.1777, 2.1783,
3.1830, 3.1845, 3.1846, 3.1972, 3.1974,
3.1979, 3.1984, 3.1990, 3.2085, 3.2149,
3.2157, 3.2199, 3.2203, 3.2204, 3.2208,
3.2265, 3.2266, 3.2285, 3.2286, 3.2388,
3.2416, 3.2417, 3.2422, 3.2518, 3.2527,
3.2528, 3.2655, 3.2691, 3.2692, 3.2694,
3.2697, 3.2703, 3.2711, 3.2713, 3.2716,
3.2750, 3.2755, 3.2768, 3.2789, 3.2808,
3.2812, 3.2828, 3.2866, 4.2911, 3114,
3128, 4.3131, 4.3145, 3174, 3176,
3177, 4.3191, 4.3193, 4.3194, 4.3272,
4.3274, 4.3275, 4.3276, 4.3282, 4.3283,
4.3285, 4.3326
- Evans, C. F. 1.434, 4.2959, 4.2960
4.2969, 4.2970, 4.3422
- Evans, C. S. 2.1071, 2.1400
- Evans, R. J. 2.920, 2.922, 2.928,
2.932-934, 2.937, 2.938, 2.940, 2.946,
2.1379
- Eve, E. 2.873, 2.1228, 2.1231, 2.1250,
3.2518, 3.2523, 3.2527, 3.2528, 3.2529,
3.2547, 3.2807, 3.2857, 3.2860, 3.2865
- Eynikel, E. 4.3002
- Fabella, V. 2.972, 2.980
- Fabry, H.-J. 2.1251
- Fairweather, W. 2.1457
- Falcetta, A. 2.1282, 2.1615, 4.3325
- Faley, R. J. 4.3189
- Falk, D. K. 3.2683, 3.2686, 3.2687,
3.2688, 3.2689, 4.3112
- Falk, H. 1.247
- Falk, Z. W. 3.2807
- Fallon, F. T. 1.255, 3.1976, 3.1977,
3.1981
- Fann, K. T. 1.755, 1.756
- Fanning, B. M. 2.1450, 2.1718
- Fantham, E. 2.1642, 2.1643
- Fantin, J. D. 2.1450
- Farkasfalvy, D. 2.1341, 2.1342
- Farmer, R. R. 2.860
- Farmer, S. 1.841
- Farmer, W. R. 1.191, 1.259, 1.435,
1.442, 2.958, 2.1163, 2.1164, 2.1330,
2.1341, 3.2193
- Farrer, A. M. 1.801, 2.1287, 3.2194
- Farris, S. C. 3.2367
- Fascher, E. 1.660, 2.1469
- Fafßbeck, G. 3.2636, 4.3000
- Fausset, A. R. 2.1445
- Febvre, L. 1.482
- Fee, G. D. 3.2024
- Feldherr, A. 2.1787

- Feldman, C. F. 1.838
 Feldman, L. H. 2.1641, 2.1648, 2.1657,
 2.1660, 2.1673, 3.2154, 3.2168, 4.3232,
 4.3427
 Fenske, W. 2.1770
 Fentress, J. 1.231, 1.815, 1.817, 1.818,
 1.835
 Ferch, A. J. 2.1549
 Ferguson, E. 4.3209, 4.3210
 Fernando, S. 1.524
 Ferrari-D'Occhieppo, K. 3.2325,
 3.2364
 Fetterley, J. 1.790
 Feuillet, A. 4.3307, 4.3317, 4.3320,
 4.3323
 Fiddes, P. S. 4.3185
 Fidler, D. R. 4.2948
 Fiebig, P. 1.117, 1.133, 2.1446, 3.2527,
 3.2863
 Fiedler, P. 3.2647
 Fieger, M. 2.1254, 3.1977, 3.1979,
 4.3031, 4.3034, 4.3037, 4.3344
 Fiensy, D. A. 2.1132, 3.2302, 3.2303,
 3.2308
 Filmer, W. E. 3.2316, 3.2317, 3.2318,
 3.2320
 Fine, S. 2.1723, 2.1727
 Finegan, J. 3.2316, 3.2317, 3.2318,
 3.2326, 3.2328, 3.2330, 3.2331, 3.2332,
 3.2333, 3.2334, 3.2337, 3.2347, 3.2348,
 3.2350, 3.2352, 3.2364, 3.2371
 Finkel, A. 2.1225, 2.1447, 3.2347,
 3.2350
 Finkelstein, I. 4.2976, 4.3137, 4.3138,
 4.3338
 Finkelstein, L. 2.1808
 Finley, M. I. 1.124, 1.26, 1.269, 1.294
 Finnegan, R. 1.426, 1.427
 Fischer, D. H. 1.701, 1.711, 2.1450
 Fish, S. 1.787
 Fishbane, S. 1.194
 Fisher, L. R. 1.631
 Fisher, T. G. 4.2974
 FitzGerald, G. M. 4.3107
 Fitzgerald, J. T. 3.2434
 Fitzmyer, J. A. 1.35, 1.309, 1.310,
 1.323-325, 1.422, 1.720-724, 2.1149,
 2.1221, 2.1283, 2.1356, 2.1358, 2.1431,
 2.1562, 2.1566, 2.1813, 3.1914, 3.1921,
 3.1927, 3.1929, 3.2271, 3.2280, 3.2281,
 3.2282, 3.2409, 3.2410, 3.2417, 3.2419,
 3.2421, 3.2458, 3.2459, 3.2469, 3.2467,
 3.2469, 3.2522, 3.2615, 3.2716, 3.2869,
 4.3126, 4.3127, 4.3129, 4.3191, 4.3285,
 4.3286, 4.3287, 4.3292, 4.3293, 4.3295,
 4.3298, 4.3300, 4.3327, 4.3334
 Fjärstedt, B. 3.1940, 3.2045, 3.2052
 Flach, D. 2.1787, 2.1796, 2.1803
 Flannery, A. 2.953
 Flebbe, J. 4.3339
 Fleck, M. 2.1796
 Fleckenstein, K. H. 1.432
 Fleddermann, H. T. 1.435, 2.1251,
 2.1765, 2.1769, 4.2912, 4.2920, 4.2921,
 4.2933, 4.2939, 4.3129
 Flender, H. 1.500
 Flesher, P. V. M. 1.145, 2.1723, 2.1725,
 3.2533, 3.2812, 4.3106, 4.3110, 4.3111,
 4.3119, 4.3123
 Fletcher, J. 4.3055, 4.3056
 Fletcher, P. 3.2456
 Fletcher-Louis, C. H. T. 1.435, 2.1594,
 2.1595, 2.1597-1599, 2.1602,
 2.1604-1606, 3.2883, 3.2885, 3.2893,
 3.2896, 3.2897, 3.2898, 3.2902, 3.2904,
 3.2905, 3.2908, 4.3341
 Flickenschmidt, D. 1.65
 Flint, P. W. 2.1236, 2.1278, 2.1282,
 2.1285, 2.1455
 Flinterman, J.-J. 3.2526
 Flückiger, F. 4.3441
 Flusser, D. 1.94, 1.118, 1.122, 1.123,
 1.126, 1.127, 1.267, 1.417, 2.874,
 2.875, 2.1057, 2.1058, 2.1283, 2.1336,
 2.1396, 2.1447, 3.2128, 3.2131, 3.2507,
 3.2527, 3.2528, 3.2602, 3.2641, 3.2769,
 4.3069, 4.3075, 4.3312, 4.3333, 4.3335
 Focant, C. 2.1765, 3.1846, 4.3284,
 4.3291
 Foerster, E. 1.477
 Foerster, G. 4.3111
 Foerster, W. 3.2714, 3.2856, 3.2858,
 3.2859, 3.2860
 Fohrer, G. 4.3186
 Foley, J. M. 1.194, 1.233, 1.813, 1.821,
 1.841, 3.1836
 Ford, J. M. 1.544
 Ford, R. Q. 3.2558
 Formesyn, R. E. C. 3.2484
 Fornara, C. W. 2.1643
 Förster, H. 3.2122, 3.2123
 Fortna, R. T. 1.677, 2.1438, 3.1997,
 3.2019, 3.2027
 Fortner, S. A. 4.2974, 4.2977, 4.2978,
 4.2987, 4.2988, 4.2989, 4.2990, 4.2995,
 4.2996, 4.2997, 4.2998, 4.2999
 Foster, P. 3.1987, 3.2681, 3.2683,
 3.2685, 3.2687, 3.2697, 3.2758

- Fotheringham, J. K. 3.2352, 3.2353
 Foucault, M. 1.515
 Fowl, S. E. 1.133, 1.698, 2.914, 2.1443
 Fowler, R. M. 1.327, 1.788, 1.789,
 1.790, 3.1832
 Fox, R. L. 1.702, 1.703
 Fox, R. W. 2.855
 France, R. T. 1.38, 1.310, 1.364, 1.414,
 1.415, 1.676, 1.687, 1.696, 1.698,
 2.1443, 3.1846, 3.2328, 3.2341, 3.2362,
 3.2363, 3.2364, 3.2368, 3.2369, 3.2370,
 3.2371, 3.2379, 3.2381, 3.2382, 3.2690,
 3.2703, 4.3274, 4.3275, 4.3276, 4.3284,
 4.3286, 4.3290, 4.3322, 4.3345
 Francis, F. O. 2.1626
 Franke, Regina 4.2973
 Frankemölle, H. 2.1268, 2.1810,
 3.2869, 4.3293, 4.3294
 Frankfurter, D. 2.1593
 Franklin, E. 1.435
 Franzmann, M. 3.1984
 Fraser, R. S. 1.92, 2.862, 2.882
 Frazer, J. W. 4.3444
 Frede, D. 3.2188
 Fredriksen, P. 1.37, 1.95, 1.121, 2.875,
 2.1186, 2.1197, 2.1200, 2.1289, 3.2000,
 3.2002, 3.2003, 3.2018, 3.2037, 3.2400,
 3.2647, 3.2660, 3.2709, 3.2750, 3.2764,
 3.2769, 3.2813, 3.2835, 3.2846, 4.3133
 Freeborn, J. 2.1283
 Freed, E. D. 3.2361, 3.2367, 3.2377,
 3.2378
 Freedman, D. N. 1.313, 1.318, 1.623,
 2.1341, 4.3143
 Frenschkowski, M. 3.2198, 4.2917
 Frerichs, E. S. 1.133, 2.876, 2.1064,
 2.1560
 Fretz, M. J. 4.3041
 Freudenthal, J. 2.1800
 Freund, R. 2.1259, 4.2973, 4.2978,
 4.3000
 Frey, J. 1.353, 1.718, 1.733, 1.741,
 2.1022, 2.1040, 2.1241, 2.1247, 2.1254,
 2.1281, 2.1283, 2.1699, 2.1787, 3.1954,
 3.1958, 3.1985, 3.2098, 3.2099
 Freyberger, K. S. 4.2991, 4.3013
 Freyne, S. 1.37, 1.244, 1.281, 1.623,
 2.874, 2.1006, 2.1109, 2.1118, 2.1125,
 2.1259, 2.1630, 2.1640, 3.2215, 3.2247,
 3.2293, 3.2298, 3.2761, 3.2791, 3.2793,
 3.2812, 3.2906, 3.2907, 4.3224, 4.3228,
 4.3238, 4.3258
 Frickenschmidt, D. 1.442, 2.860,
 2.1436, 2.1473, 3.2192
 Fridrichsen, A. 1.36, 3.2542, 4.2984,
 4.2985
 Friedlander, G. 2.1692
 Friedlander, S. 2.1394
 Friedman, T. 4.3075
 Friedrich, G. 2.1296, 4.3341
 Friedrichsen, T. 4.2917
 Frier, B. W. 4.3420
 Frierichs, E. S. 3.2694
 Frijda, N. H. 4.3166
 Frühwald-König, J. 3.2637
 Frymer-Kensky, T. 3.2715, 3.2724,
 3.2726, 3.2736
 Fuchs, A. 1.436, 3.1957, 4.2918, 4.3306
 Fuchs, E. 1.34, 1.302, 1.355, 2.867,
 3.2507
 Fuchs, W. P. 1.39
 Fuglseth, K. S. 3.2637
 Fuhrmann, M. 2.1796, 2.1805
 Fuks, G. 2.1732
 Fuller, R. H. 1.5, 1.35, 1.310, 1.664,
 1.676, 1.669, 2.867, 2.1424, 3.2519,
 3.2543, 3.2546
 Funk, R. 1.11, 1.47, 1.131, 1.186,
 1.245, 1.246, 1.249, 1.256, 1.263,
 1.266, 1.267, 1.272, 1.273, 1.294,
 1.295, 1.408, 1.451, 1.511, 1.664,
 1.665, 1.670, 1.676, 1.781, 1.822,
 1.847, 2.870, 2.871, 2.957, 2.992,
 2.1022, 2.1031, 2.1053, 2.1137, 2.1153,
 2.1270, 2.1338, 2.1395, 2.1396, 2.1739,
 3.1847, 3.1983, 3.2046, 3.2082, 3.2208,
 3.2549, 3.2693, 3.2698, 3.2702, 3.2703,
 3.2706, 3.2728, 3.2890, 4.2941, 4.3025,
 4.3026, 4.3031, 4.3034, 4.3040, 4.3043,
 4.3054, 4.3337, 4.3344, 4.3349, 4.3367,
 4.3369, 4.3370
 Funke, H. 2.1129
 Furfey, P. H. 3.2375
 Furnish, V. P. 1.149, 3.1936, 3.2043,
 4.3437
 Fusco, V. 1.495, 4.3271, 4.3272
 Gabba, E. 1.125
 Gadamer, H. G. 2.1386, 2.1474, 3.2185
 Gaddis, J. 2.928, 2.929, 2.933, 2.937,
 3.2413, 3.2414
 Gaetz, H. 2.1444
 Gager, J. G. 1.543, 2.1609, 2.1615,
 2.1624, 4.3062
 Galil, G. 2.1781
 Gall, D. 2.1787, 2.1808
 Gallagher, E. V. 1.621, 2.883, 3.2165,
 3.2526, 4.3057

- Galling, K. 1.669
 Galvin, J. P. 1.247, 1.280, 1.282
 Gamble, H. A. 1.437, 1.731
 Gandell, R. 2.1445
 García-Martínez, F. 3.2244, 3.2245,
 3.2268, 3.2271, 3.2281, 3.2282, 3.2717,
 4.3325, 4.3340
 Gardiner, P. 1.46
 Gardner-Smith, P. 3.1959, 3.1998
 Garitte, G. 4.3034, 4.3035, 4.3041
 Garland, D. E. 1.675, 3.2450, 3.2692
 Garman, M. 3.2456
 Garrett, S. R. 1.645, 2.884, 3.2536,
 3.2856, 4.3196
 Garrod, H. W. 1.27
 Garrod, S. C. 1.750
 Garthwaite, J. 2.1682
 Gaston, L. 3.2648
 Gathercole, S. 1.358, 2.1207, 3.1991,
 3.2883, 3.2903
 Gaventa, B. R. 1.634, 3.2439
 Gay, P. 2.1651
 Geerlings, W. 2.1816
 Geffken, J. 3.2121
 Gehring, R. W. 1.420
 Gehrke, H. 1.50
 Geiger, A. 2.864, 2.990, 2.1057, 2.1058,
 2.1407, 2.1444
 Geldenhuys, N. 3.2343
 Geller, M. J. 3.2532, 4.3078
 Gemeinhardt, P. 1.731
 Gennette, G. 1.784
 Geoltrain, P. 3.2082
 Georgi, D. 1.35, 1.280, 1.523, 2.1003,
 2.1401, 2.1626, 4.3449
 Gera, D. 2.1732
 Gercke, A. 2.1799
 Gerhardsson, B. 1.36, 1.48, 1.78, 1.410,
 1.430, 1.492, 1.637, 1.639, 1.640,
 1.670, 1.679, 2.873, 2.1327, 2.1465,
 2.1468, 2.1469, 2.1480, 2.1482, 2.1485,
 3.2055, 3.2143, 3.2206, 3.2207, 3.2411,
 3.2412, 3.2679, 3.2680, 3.2681, 3.2699,
 3.2704, 3.2705, 4.3027, 4.3449, 4.3454
 Gerlitz, P. 4.3186
 Gerstenberger, E. S. 4.3186
 Gese, H. 2.1050, 2.1051, 4.2936
 Getraide, C. 3.2241
 Geva, H. 4.3109
 Geyser, P. A. 2.1396
 Ghiberti, G. 1.310
 Giannantoni, G. 2.1129
 Gibson, M. D. 2.1344
 Gibson, S. 3.2724, 4.3000
 Giesen, H. 4.3269, 4.3270, 4.3287,
 4.3292, 4.3293, 4.3294, 4.3296, 4.3298,
 4.3300, 4.3301, 4.3302, 4.3303
 Gigerenzer, G. 1.761
 Giglioni, P. 2.964
 Gill, C. 1.746, 4.3249
 Gillibert, E. 4.3036
 Gillis, J. R. 1.816
 Gilman, S. L. 1.520
 Gilmour, S. M. 2.861
 Ginzberg, L. 4.3150
 Giverson, S. 2.1234
 Glad, C. E. 4.3246
 Glare, P. G. W. 3.2151
 Glasson, T. F. 2.1574, 3.2891
 Glasswell, M. E. 2.1230
 Glazier, J. 4.3350, 4.3354
 Glazier, P. G. 4.3350, 4.3354
 Glénisson, J. 1.479
 Glenn, C. 1.512
 Glover, T. R. 1.701, 1.702
 Gnilk, J. 1.251, 1.257, 1.267, 1.272,
 1.280, 1.297, 1.696, 1.730, 2.1033,
 2.1049, 3.2073, 3.2473, 3.2495, 3.2498,
 3.2499, 3.2501, 3.2502, 3.2503, 3.2505,
 3.2519, 3.2542, 3.2544, 3.2654, 3.2839,
 3.2865, 3.2871, 4.2930, 4.2933, 4.2954,
 4.2966, 4.3279, 4.3280, 4.3281, 4.3283,
 4.3285, 4.3301, 4.3308, 4.3315
 Göbel, H. 2.1748
 Goehring, J. E. 1.179
 Goertz, H.-J. 2.1378, 2.1385
 Goetz, S. C. 1.848, 1.850
 Goff, J. L. 1.478, 2.928
 Goguel, M. 1.36, 1.668, 2.1750, 3.2149,
 3.2150, 3.2151, 3.2158, 3.2341
 Goldberg, A. 4.3313
 Goldingay, J. E. 2.1436, 2.1601
 Goldmann, S. 2.1486
 Goldstein, J. A. 2.1456, 2.1457
 Goldstein, M. 3.2023, 3.2172
 Goldstine, H. H. 3.2353
 Goltz, T. 2.1811
 González, J. L. 4.3265
 Good, R. S. 4.3339
 Goodacre, M. 1.435, 1.801, 2.1288,
 3.1854, 3.2097, 3.2194, 4.3156, 4.3171,
 4.3178
 Goodblatt, D. 2.1730, 2.1737, 2.1738
 Goodman, M. 2.868, 2.907, 2.1122,
 2.1248, 2.1667, 3.2168, 4.3122
 Goodnick Westenholz, J. 4.2998
 Goodspeed, E. J. 1.668, 3.2139
 Goody, J. R. 1.427, 1.492

- Goppelt, L. 1.35, 4.3462
 Gordon, C. H. 2.1233
 Gordon, R. P. 3.2263, 3.2264, 4.3314
 Goren, Y. 4.2977
 Görg, M. 1.413
 Goulder, M. 1.191, 1.802, 2.1155,
 2.1288, 2.1289, 2.1294, 2.1297, 2.1300,
 2.1301
 Goulet, R. 2.1105, 2.1113, 4.3263
 Goulet-Cazé, M.-O. 2.873, 2.1105,
 2.1109, 2.1113, 2.1123, 4.3249, 4.3263
 Gounelle, R. 4.3392
 Gowler, D. 1.274
 Grabbe, L. L. 2.1188, 2.1454, 2.1455,
 2.1583, 2.1584, 2.1587, 2.1593, 2.1594,
 2.1653, 2.1658, 2.1671, 2.1729, 2.1742,
 2.1731, 2.1733, 2.1737, 4.3122
 Graetz, H. 2.1057, 2.1058
 Graf, F. 3.2532, 3.2534, 4.3062, 4.3083,
 4.3180, 4.3187, 4.3188
 Graham, S. L. 2.1396
 Graham, W. A. 1.429
 Grant, M. 1.294, 1.308, 1.703–705,
 3.2328, 4.3132
 Grant, R. M. 1.324, 2.1023, 2.1228,
 4.3035
 Grappe, C. 3.2813
 Grashman, W. W. 4.3115
 Grass, K. 2.1525
 Grässer, E. 2.994, 2.995, 2.1081,
 3.2835, 4.3131
 Graupner, A. 4.3148
 Gray, C. G. 1.778
 Gray, R. 2.877, 4.3076
 Gray, T. C. 3.2637
 Grayston, K. 2.1241
 Grayzel, S. 2.1609
 Green, A. 2.1199
 Green, D. A. 3.2325
 Green, J. B. 1.130, 1.406, 1.432, 1.621,
 1.698, 1.777, 2.874, 2.885, 2.1192,
 2.1211, 2.1232, 2.1442, 2.1813, 3.2197,
 3.2215, 3.2235, 3.2384, 3.2385, 3.2386,
 3.2400, 3.2403, 4.3126, 4.3128, 4.3296,
 4.3299
 Green, T. A. 4.3350, 4.3353
 Green, W. S. 2.876, 2.1064, 2.1560,
 2.1693, 3.2694, 4.3067
 Greenblatt, S. 2.1384
 Greene, J. T. 4.2976
 Greenfield, J. G. 3.2273
 Greenspoon, L. 2.874, 3.2249
 Greeven, H. 2.1812, 3.2628, 3.2630
 Gregg, B. H. 4.2986
 Greig, J. C. G. 2.861, 3.2002
 Greimas, A. J. 1.781
 Grelot, P. 1.524, 4.3375
 Grenfell, B. P. 3.2092, 3.2094, 3.2095,
 3.2719
 Griesbach, J. J. 3.1825, 3.1875
 Griffin, D. R. 2.860
 Griffith-Jones, R. 2.1434
 Griffiths, J. G. 2.1725
 Grimm, W. 3.2526, 4.3322
 Grodal, T. 4.3162
 Groen, R. 4.3168
 Groh, D. 4.3225
 Gronewald, M. 3.1986, 3.2089
 Grosjean, F. 3.2456
 Grossberg, L. 1.524
 Grosskurth, P. 2.1388
 Grotius, H. 1.622
 Grözinger, K. E. 4.3069
 Gruber, C. 4.2988
 Gruber, M. I. 3.2331
 Gruen, E. S. 2.1808
 Gruenwald, I. 2.874, 2.1038, 2.1593
 Grundmann, W. 1.418, 2.1001, 2.1003,
 2.1005, 2.1006, 2.1201, 3.2531, 3.2627,
 4.3238, 4.3290, 4.3299, 4.3318, 4.3342
 Guelich, R. A. 3.1830, 3.1845, 3.2523,
 3.2627, 3.2711, 3.2714, 3.2715, 4.3130,
 4.3131, 4.3150, 4.3297, 4.3308
 Guggenheimer, H. W. 2.1692
 Guignebert, C. 2.1446
 Guijarro, S. 1.746, 3.2433, 4.2929,
 4.2941
 Guillaume, A. 4.3290
 Guillaumont, A. 4.3038
 Gundry, R. H. 1.395, 1.401, 1.438,
 1.457, 2.1194, 2.1199, 2.1207, 3.1842,
 3.1878, 3.1879, 3.1883, 3.1884, 3.1890,
 3.1894, 3.1895, 3.2691, 3.2703, 3.2714,
 3.2870, 4.3128, 4.3275, 4.3276, 4.3283,
 4.3284, 4.3285, 4.3287, 4.3334, 4.3345
 Gunkel, H. 1.650, 1.699, 2.1575,
 3.2525
 Gunn, D. M. 1.799
 Gutbrod, W. 2.1612
 Guthrie, D. 1.436, 3.2337
 Gutman, S. 4.3111
 Gutmann, J. 4.3105
 Güttgemanns, E. 1.48, 1.82, 3.1829
 Haacker, K. 1.264, 2.1059, 3.1943
 Haak, R. D. 2.1583, 2.1584, 2.1587,
 2.1593
 Haarhoff, T. J. 2.1455

- Haas, Y. 4.3036
 Haase, W. 2.1285, 2.1807
 Habel, N. 3.2773, 3.2778, 3.2780
 Haber, S. 4.3111, 4.3120
 Habermann, J. 1.13, 1.84
 Habermas, J. 2.1117
 Habicht, C. 2.1799, 2.1804
 Habinek, N. T. 2.1678
 Hachlili, R. 2.1459, 2.1725, 3.2231,
 4.2978, 4.3105, 4.3113
 Hadas-Lebel, M. 3.2458
 Hadot, I. 4.3245
 Haenchen, E. 1.675, 2.1812, 3.1927,
 3.1928, 3.1966, 3.2639, 4.3126, 4.3131,
 4.3280
 Haensch, R. 3.2297
 Häfner, G. 2.1778, 2.1787, 3.1935
 Hagedorn, A. C. 1.746, 1.774
 Hagner, D. A. 1.133, 1.410, 1.442,
 1.636, 1.681, 1.688, 2.874, 2.1057,
 2.1058, 2.1609, 3.1890, 3.2125, 3.2126,
 3.2127, 3.2131, 3.2132, 3.2692, 3.2704,
 3.2717, 4.2958, 4.2960, 4.2968, 4.3279,
 4.3336
 Hahn, F. 1.65, 1.511, 2.867, 2.1492,
 3.1968, 3.2473, 3.2474, 3.2475, 3.2476,
 3.2526, 3.2767, 3.2770, 4.2917, 4.3307
 Hahn, U. 4.2993
 Haider, P. W. 4.2991
 Halbwachs, M. 1.815-818
 Hall, C. 2.1599
 Hall, J. 3.2162
 Hall, R. G. 3.2038
 Hall, S. G. 4.3331
 Halliday, M. A. K. 1.231, 1.736, 1.748,
 1.749
 Halliday, W. R. 2.1106
 Halperin, D. J. 2.1235, 4.3071
 Halpern-Amaru, B. 3.2782, 3.2783,
 3.2787
 Hamdorf, F. W. 4.2989
 Hamers, J. F. 3.2457
 Hamerton-Kelly, R. G. 2.1049
 Hamilton, W. 2.1402
 Hamm, M. D. 2.874, 4.3299
 Hammet, I. 4.3353
 Hammond, N. G. L. 1.293
 Hampel, V. 3.2492, 4.3328
 Hannah, D. D. 2.1164
 Hans-Gebhard, B. 1.457
 Hansack, E. 2.1525, 2.1536
 Hanson, A. 4.3146
 Hanson, J. D. 2.877
 Hanson, J. S. 1.37, 1.208, 2.1626,
 4.3045, 4.3076
 Hanson, K. C. 1.171, 1.487, 1.746,
 1.759, 1.767, 3.2294, 3.2301
 Hanson, P. D. 2.1573, 2.1583
 Hanson, R. P. C. 2.857, 2.858,
 3.2144
 Harding, M. 1.102, 1.119, 2.869
 Hardwick, M. E. 2.1648, 2.1649
 Hardy, E. R. 2.858
 Hardy, H. 2.931
 Hare, D. R. A. 1.350, 1.847, 2.1618,
 3.2266, 3.2888
 Harmon, A. M. 3.2162
 Harnisch, W. 1.419
 Harrington, D. J. 1.316, 2.1063,
 2.1266, 2.1283, 3.1822, 3.1845, 3.1888,
 3.1895, 3.2251, 3.2252, 3.2268, 4.2917,
 4.3274, 4.3275, 4.3288, 4.3327
 Harris, H. A. 3.2228
 Harris, M. 3.2151, 3.2152, 3.2157,
 3.2158
 Harris, R. 1.705
 Harris, W. V. 1.194, 1.221, 1.412,
 2.1481, 2.1643, 3.1834
 Harrisville, R. A. 1.300, 1.301, 1.517,
 2.867
 Hart, H. St. J. 4.3147
 Hartel, G. 3.2121
 Hartenstein, J. 3.2101
 Harth, D. 2.1794, 2.1802
 Hartin, P. J. 1.261, 2.1485, 3.1968,
 3.1970, 3.2056
 Hartke, W. 3.2123
 Hartman, L. F. 2.1549, 2.1550
 Harvey, A. E. 1.39, 1.244, 1.316, 1.625,
 1.641, 1.688, 1.850, 2.1025, 2.1026,
 2.1206, 2.1300, 2.1438, 2.1442, 3.2392,
 3.2393, 3.2394, 3.2519, 3.2521, 3.2537,
 3.2537, 3.2538
 Harvey, G. A. P. 2.857
 Harvey, V. A. 2.1420
 Hase, K. 2.1749
 Hasitschka, M. 3.2021
 Haslam, J. 2.926
 Hassan, I. 2.1381
 Hastings, J. 1.397
 Hata, G. 2.883, 2.1641, 2.1648
 Hatch, E. 2.1106, 3.2820, 4.3203
 Hauck, A. 1.376
 Hauck, F. 3.2823, 4.3274, 4.3293
 Haufe, G. 1.354
 Haugen, E. 3.2457
 Haupt, E. 1.418
 Hausheer, R. 2.931
 Hauspie, K. 4.3002
 Häusser, D. 4.3321

- Havel, V. 1.177
 Havelaar, H. W. 1.133
 Havelock, E. A. 1.196
 Hawkins, J. C. 1.400, 1.402, 1.403,
 2.1287, 4.3131
 Hayes, M. A. 2.855, 2.885
 Haynes, S. R. 1.777
 Hays, R. B. 2.1488, 2.1489, 2.1610,
 3.2024, 4.2915
 Head, P. M. 2.1003, 2.1006, 3.2087,
 3.2088, 3.2193
 Headlam, A. C. 3.2546
 Hearon, H. E. 3.1835
 Heath, G. L. 3.1991
 Heawood, P. J. 3.2347
 Hebler, M. 1.50
 Heckel, T. K. 3.2038, 3.2091
 Heckel, U. 2.1605
 Hedrick, C. W. 1.179, 1.255, 1.310,
 1.458, 3.1934, 3.1982, 3.1993, 3.2082,
 3.2097, 3.2098, 3.2099, 3.2102, 3.2103,
 3.2104, 3.2107, 3.2111, 3.2131, 4.3024,
 4.3025, 4.3026, 4.3027, 4.3028, 4.3029,
 4.3030, 4.3031, 4.3032, 4.3033, 4.3038,
 4.3039, 4.3040, 4.3044, 4.3046, 4.3053
 Heichelheim, F. M. 3.2322, 4.3428
 Heidegger, M. 1.301
 Heil, C. 1.75, 1.447, 1.457, 4.2917,
 4.3259, 4.3261, 4.3263
 Heil, J. P. 1.629, 1.788
 Heiligenthal, R. 1.117
 Heinemann, J. 3.2222, 3.2684
 Heinrich, C. 1.151
 Heitmüller, W. 3.2525
 Helbig, J. 4.2915
 Held, H. J. 1.640
 Helfmeyer, F. J. 4.3076
 Heller, A. 2.1385
 Hellholm, D. 2.1576
 Hembold, W. C. 4.3245
 Hemer, C. J. 2.1228, 4.3113
 Hempel, C. G. 1.44, 2.1383
 Henaut, B. W. 1.192, 1.518, 2.1022
 Henderson, I. H. 1.176, 2.1284
 Hendin, D. 3.2319
 Hendrickx, H. 4.3193
 Hendriksen, W. 3.2337
 Hengel, M. 1.38, 1.50, 1.96, 1.244,
 1.280, 1.326, 1.378, 1.409, 1.411,
 1.417, 1.421, 1.424, 1.429, 1.431,
 1.438, 1.440, 1.442, 1.444, 2.877,
 2.879, 2.937, 2.1026, 2.1038–1042,
 2.1051, 2.1052, 2.1192, 2.1199, 2.1201,
 2.1210, 2.1213, 2.1238, 2.1240, 2.1251,
 2.1283, 2.1285, 2.1310, 2.1437, 2.1455,
 2.1458, 2.1460, 2.1605, 2.1606, 2.1801,
 2.1808, 3.1934, 3.1982, 3.1993, 3.2082,
 3.2097, 3.2098, 3.2099, 3.2102, 3.2103,
 3.2104, 3.2107, 3.2111, 3.2131, 4.2911,
 4.2917, 4.3068, 4.3076, 4.3107, 4.3109,
 4.3114, 4.3230, 4.3269, 4.3301, 4.3302,
 4.3316, 4.3318, 4.3320, 4.3328, 4.3343,
 4.3439
 Henke, P. 4.2973
 Henne, P. 3.2121
 Hennecke, E. 2.1570, 3.2082, 3.2436
 Hennessy, A. 4.3235
 Hennessy, R. 1.510, 1.517
 Henry, M. 2.933, 2.934
 Herder, J. G. 2.1465
 Herford, R. T. 2.1702, 2.1705, 3.2172,
 3.2175, 4.3122
 Hermann, R. 1.301
 Hermann, W. 3.2863
 Herr, M. D. 4.3242
 Herrenbrück, F. 3.2802, 3.2803,
 3.2804, 3.2805
 Herrmann, J. 4.3115
 Hershokovitz, M. 4.2998
 Herzer, J. 2.1809
 Herzog, W. R. 1.746, 1.767, 2.1219,
 3.2558, 3.2564, 3.2793, 3.2794, 3.2795
 Heschel, S. 2.864, 2.1005, 2.1425
 Hess, R. S. 2.1454, 2.1599
 Heyer, C. J. 2.1080
 Hezser, C. 1.221, 1.412, 2.1119,
 2.1481, 3.1834, 4.3137
 Hieke, T. 1.466, 3.2088, 4.3282
 Hiers, R. H. 2.861, 2.996, 3.2542,
 3.2835
 Higgs, A. J. B. 1.340, 3.2323, 3.2342,
 4.3034
 Hilhorst, A. 1.633
 Hill, C. E. 2.1195, 3.2125
 Hill, D. 3.1878, 4.3330
 Himmelfarb, G. 2.1379
 Himmelfarb, M. 2.1593–1595
 Himmelstein, J. 1.524
 Hinnells, J. R. 2.1564
 Hirsch, E. 4.3281, 4.3285
 Hirschfeld, Y. 2.1247
 Hirschsmüller, M. 4.3427
 Hoas, G. 4.3185
 Hobbes, T. 1.622
 Hobbins, J. F. 2.1595, 2.1606
 Hobbs, E. C. 1.280
 Hobbs, T. R. 1.746
 Hobsbawn, E. 3.2301
 Hock, R. F. 2.1124, 4.3255
 Hodgson, P. C. 1.92, 1.241, 1.844, 2.863

- Hodgson, R. 1.458
 Hoehner, H. W. 2.1458, 3.2316,
 3.2318, 3.2319, 3.2320, 3.2324, 3.2337,
 3.2352, 3.2353, 3.2355, 3.2357, 3.2372
 Hoffman, Y. 4.3182
 Hoffmann, P. 1.75, 1.254, 1.447, 1.489,
 2.868, 3.1856, 3.1861, 3.1867, 3.1942,
 3.2198, 4.2913, 4.2915, 4.2919, 4.2922,
 4.2983, 4.3261
 Hoffmann, R. J. 1.448, 3.2165
 Hofner, H. A. 4.3183
 Hofius, O. 1.408, 3.1941, 3.1974,
 3.1975, 3.2062, 3.2093, 3.2203, 4.3440,
 4.3445
 Hofstede, G. 1.757
 Hogan, J. P. 2.1422
 Hogeterp, A. L. A. 2.1247, 3.1981
 Hogg, J. 3.1839
 Hogg, R. 3.1838, 3.1839, 3.1840
 Hoistad, R. 2.1108
 Højlund, A. C. 2.1023
 Holladay, C. R. 2.1787, 2.1789, 2.1790,
 2.1800, 2.1807, 3.2525, 3.2526
 Holland, D. L. 2.861, 2.996
 Holland, R. F. 3.2518
 Hollander, H. W. 1.304, 1.543, 1.626,
 1.773, 1.406, 2.1580, 3.1940, 4.2944
 Hollenbach, P. W. 2.1232, 4.3074
 Holloway, C. 3.2864
 Holloway, R. 4.3155
 Holm, N. G. 1.586
 Holmberg, B. 1.36, 1.39, 1.543, 2.908,
 2.1399, 3.2207, 3.2614
 Holmén, T. 1.5, 1.7, 1.99, 1.244, 1.247,
 1.443, 1.473, 1.497, 1.498, 1.533,
 1.698, 1.711, 1.716, 1.718, 2.904,
 2.905, 2.914, 2.938, 2.1032, 2.1033,
 2.1061, 2.1064, 2.1140, 2.1143, 2.1144,
 2.1148, 2.1159, 2.1258, 2.1266, 2.1397,
 2.1430, 2.1429, 2.1764, 3.1935, 3.1994,
 3.2104, 3.2209, 3.2527, 3.2536, 3.2614,
 3.2616, 3.2618, 3.2621, 3.2675, 3.2711,
 3.2712, 3.2725, 3.2726, 3.2727, 3.2728,
 3.2734, 3.2736, 3.2737, 3.2738, 3.2748,
 3.2749, 3.2750, 3.2752, 3.2753, 3.2754,
 3.2755, 3.2758, 3.2759, 3.2761, 3.2764,
 3.2765, 3.2766, 3.2767, 3.2769, 3.2774,
 3.2784, 3.2897, 4.3061, 4.3184, 4.3189,
 4.3191, 4.3200, 4.3312, 4.3327, 4.3345
 Holmes, B. T. 1.440
 Holmes, M. W. 1.732
 Hölscher, G. 2.1658, 3.2351
 Holtz, T. 1.344, 3.1940, 3.1941, 4.3452,
 4.3463
 Holtzmann, H. J. 1.61, 1.845, 2.863,
 2.987, 2.1026
 Holtzmann, H. S. 3.1826, 3.1857
 Holzbrecher, F. 3.1936
 Hooker, M. D. 1.5, 1.309, 1.315, 1.321,
 1.330, 1.366, 1.383, 1.564, 1.677,
 1.848, 2.870, 2.884, 2.1164, 2.1193,
 2.1206, 2.1219, 2.1241, 2.1304, 2.1306,
 2.1425, 3.1830, 3.1842, 3.1871, 3.2386,
 3.2648, 3.2711, 4.3145, 4.3284, 4.3288,
 4.3308
 Hoover, R. W. 1.4, 1.47, 1.131, 1.186,
 1.245, 1.263, 1.408, 1.451, 1.511,
 1.664, 1.676, 1.822, 1.847, 2.871,
 2.1031, 2.1106, 2.1137, 2.1270, 3.1847,
 3.1917, 3.1983, 3.2046, 3.2728, 3.2890,
 4.3025, 4.3026, 4.3031, 4.3034, 4.3040,
 4.3054, 4.3337, 4.3344, 4.3349, 4.3367,
 4.3369, 4.3370
 Hopkins, C. 3.2097
 Horbury, W. 1.133, 1.409, 1.621,
 2.876, 2.1052, 2.1066, 2.1188, 2.1198,
 2.1436, 2.1453, 2.1564, 2.1588, 2.1605,
 2.1703, 2.1726, 2.1760, 3.2249, 3.2527,
 3.2528, 3.2795, 3.2837, 4.3114
 Horden, P. 1.743
 Horn, F. W. 2.1252, 4.3295, 4.3299
 Horrell, D. 2.1036, 2.1206, 3.1927,
 3.1928
 Horrocks, G. 3.2457
 Horsley, G. H. R. 1.723
 Horsley, R. A. 1.37, 1.109, 1.117,
 1.145, 1.157, 1.165, 1.231, 1.244,
 1.247, 1.264, 1.285, 1.286, 1.523,
 1.528, 1.543, 1.596, 1.602, 1.607,
 1.624, 1.841, 2.877, 2.908, 2.912,
 2.919, 2.942, 2.946, 2.1001, 2.1002,
 2.1010, 2.1109, 2.1119, 2.1123, 2.1125,
 2.1131, 2.1283, 2.1459, 2.1465, 2.1626,
 2.1774, 3.1842, 3.1844, 3.1847, 3.1848,
 3.1849, 3.1850, 3.1852, 3.1977, 3.2292,
 3.2300, 3.2301, 3.2313, 3.2361, 3.2362,
 3.2363, 3.2365, 3.2367, 3.2377, 3.2378,
 3.2379, 3.2394, 3.2539, 3.2806, 3.2812,
 3.2844, , 4.3045, 4.3076, 4.3133,
 4.3224, 4.3266, 4.3268
 Horton, F. L. 2.1356
 Hose, B. 4.3273
 Hoskyns, E. 1.712
 Houlden, J. L. 2.994, 2.995, 4.3166
 Houston, J. 3.2518
 Howard, I. H. 1.130
 Howatson, M. C. 3.2155
 Hubbard, B. J. 3.2528

- Hübner, H. 3.1946, 3.1953, 3.2728
 Hübner, K. 1.66
 Hübner, R. M. 3.2137
 Hudson, R. 3.2457
 Huffman, N. 3.2563
 Hughes, C. 1.447, 1.465, 1.620, 2.856, 2.859, 2.883, 2.1434
 Hughes, D. 3.2325, 3.2326, 3.2327
 Hughes, J. H. 2.1770, 2.1772
 Huizing, K. 2.1406
 Hull, J. M. 2.1228, 3.2533, 4.3057, 4.3082
 Hultgren, A. J. 1.447, 1.465, 1.620, 2.869, 2.1200, 3.2551, 3.2558, 3.2571, 3.2691, 3.2700, 3.2888, 4.3024, 4.3034
 Hultgren, S. 2.1472, 3.1962, 3.2027
 Hume, D. 2.1423, 3.2862
 Humphrey, E. M. 2.1580, 3.2889
 Humphrey, H. M. 3.1841
 Humphreys, C. J. 3.2325, 3.2326, 3.2326, 3.2328, 3.2329, 3.2352, 3.2353
 Humphries, M. 4.2940
 Hüneberg, M. 4.2917, 4.2924
 Hunt, L. 2.1379
 Hunter, J. H. 2.873
 Hunzinger, C.-H. 3.1980, 4.3034, 4.3036, 4.3037, 4.3038
 Hurley, N. 4.3155
 Hurst, D. 2.1343
 Hurst, L. D. 1.385, 1.641, 2.878, 2.1343, 2.1431
 Hurtado, L. 1.409, 2.885, 2.944, 2.951, 2.1069, 2.1073, 2.1196, 2.1205, 2.1208, 3.2056, 3.2410, 3.2443, 3.2689, 3.2696
 Huschke, P. E. 4.3416, 4.3428
 Hutcheon, L. 2.1381
 Hüttenmeister, F. 4.2978
 Hyldahl, N. 2.1817
 Hyltenstam, K. 3.2456
- Idel, M. 1.147
 Iggers, G. G. 2.1379, 2.1421
 Ignatieff, M. 2.931
 Inbar, M. 4.2977
 Infante, R. 4.3329
 Ingraffia, B. D. 2.1395, 2.1688, 2.1721
 Instone-Brewer, D. 3.2346
 Irmscher, J. 2.1816
 Isaac, B. 4.3108
 Isenberg, S. R. 1.543, 1.787
 Israel, J. I. 2.1423
 Israeli, Y. 4.2998
 Istrin, V. M. 2.1525
- Jackson, F. 2.1446, 3.1927
 Jackson, S. 1.668
 Jacob, M. 2.1379
 Jacobs, A. 2.948
 Jacobs, L. 3.2677, 3.2682, 3.2696
 Jacobson, A. D. 4.2927
 Jacobson, H. 3.2251, 4.3115
 Jacoby, A. 3.2098
 Jacoby, F. 2.1804, 3.2149
 Jacquemin, E. 4.3295
 Jaffee, M. S. 1.221, 1.434, 2.1485, 3.2143
 Jakab, A. 3.2131
 James, E. O. 3.2225
 Janowitz, N. 2.873
 Janowski, B. 4.3182
 Jansen, M. A. C. 1.770
 Jardine, N. 4.3181
 Jarratt, S. C. 1.511
 Järvinen, A. 4.2917
 Jaspert, B. 1.477, 2.1082
 Jaubert, A. 2.1518, 3.2343, 3.2344
 Jauss, H. R. 2.1386
 Jebb, R. C. 1.699
 Jeffers, A. 4.3186, 4.3187, 4.3188
 Jeffery, P. 3.2131, 4.3058
 Jefford, C. N. 1.176, 3.2128, 4.3157
 Jenkins, K. 2.920-922, 2.924-929, 2.1378, 2.1387, 2.1388, 2.1390, 2.1394
 Jensen, M. 3.2791, 3.2792
 Jensen, P. P. 3.2777
 Jeremias, G. 2.1283
 Jeremias, J. 1.24, 1.35, 1.82, 1.115, 1.255, 1.304, 1.305, 1.325, 1.326, 1.356, 1.366, 1.418, 1.578, 1.664, 1.677, 1.680, 1.719, 1.720, 2.868, 2.869, 2.894, 2.924, 2.925, 2.1051, 2.1079, 2.1120, 2.1174, 2.1258, 2.1280, 2.1336, 2.1337, 2.1352, 2.1374, 2.1447, 2.1458, 2.1707, 2.1813, 3.1975, 3.1986, 3.2027, 3.2062, 3.2073, 3.2077, 3.2093, 3.2095, 3.2136, 3.2137, 3.2138, 3.2141, 3.2142, 3.2199, 3.2291, 3.2341, 3.2342, 3.2344, 3.2345, 3.2347, 3.2351, 3.2353, 3.2371, 3.2376, 3.2377, 3.2405, 3.2465, 3.2467, 3.2468, 3.2469, 3.2473, 3.2484, 3.2522, 3.2549, 3.2552, 3.2554, 3.2556, 3.2557, 3.2558, 3.2560, 3.2570, 3.2571, 3.2587, 3.2595, 3.2599, 3.2600, 3.2628, 3.2633, 3.2640, 3.2656, 3.2678, 3.2678, 3.2683, 3.2731, 3.2821, 3.2844, 4.2921, 4.3037, 4.3191, 4.3237, 4.3261, 4.3264, 4.3292, 4.3310, 4.3311, 4.3321, 4.3329,

- 4.3333, 4.3335, 4.3337, 4.3340, 4.3375,
4.3376, 4.3377, 4.3379, 4.3425
- Jervell, J. 1.441
- Jewett, P. 1.543
- Jobling, D. 1.743
- Jocz, J. 2.1057, 2.1446
- Joest, F. C. 1.429
- Johns, L. L. 1.100, 2.1284, 2.1285
- Johns, L. S. 2.874, 2.876
- Johnson, D. G. 2.1605
- Johnson, L. T. 1.126, 1.129, 1.253,
1.432, 1.452, 1.511, 2.871, 2.881,
2.923, 2.941, 2.1023, 2.1398, 2.1417,
2.1484, 2.1610, 2.1611, 2.1614, 2.1620,
2.1627, 2.1630, 2.1637, 3.1828, 3.1968,
3.2063, 3.2064, 3.2070, 3.2082, 3.2517,
4.3339
- Johnson, M. D. 1.637, 3.2270, 3.2377
- Johnson, S. E. 2.1447
- Johnson-DeBaufre, M. 1.544
- Johnston, R. K. 4.3172
- Johnston, R. M. 3.2550, 3.2561
- Jokiranta, J. 2.1285
- Jones, A. H. M. 1.395, 3.2328
- Jones, C. P. 3.2162, 4.3065
- Jones, G. V. 4.3034
- Jones, H. S. 3.2322
- Jones, J. L. 4.3308
- Jones, J. N. 4.3259
- Jonge, M. 2.1029, 2.1030, 2.1193
- Jongkind, D. 4.3263
- Joosten, J. 3.2097
- Joubert, S. 1.746
- Jöüon, P. 4.3329
- Joyce, P. 2.1378, 2.1379, 2.1387,
2.1407
- Judge, E. A. 2.1201
- Juel, D. H. 1.49, 3.1823
- Jülicher, A. 1.419, 3.2073, 3.2074,
3.2551, 3.2552, 3.2554, 3.2556, 3.2558,
3.2571, 3.2698, 4.3311, 4.3338
- Julkaisuja, S. 1.266
- Jungbauer, H. 4.2952, 4.2953
- Jüngel, E. 1.333, 1.349, 3.1937, 3.2500,
4.3464
- Kaestli, J.-D. 1.431, 1.487, 3.2082,
4.3029
- Kahl, W. 3.2517, 3.2525, 3.2527
- Kahle, P. 3.2246
- Kähler, C. 1.357
- Kähler, M. 1.189, 1.300, 1.302, 1.304,
1.306, 1.518, 1.676, 2.922, 2.923,
2.947, 2.1021, 2.1022, 2.1171, 2.1417,
2.1419, 2.1420
- Kaimakis, D. 4.3066, 4.3068
- Kaiser, W. C. 2.1449
- Kallai, Z. 3.2778
- Kalms, J. U. 2.1241
- Kalsky, M. 1.510
- Kalthoff, A. 2.1001, 2.1003, 2.1004
- Kampen, J. 3.2270
- Kandel, E. R. 1.825
- Kannaday, W. C. 1.732
- Kansteiner, W. 2.1388
- Kant, I. 2.1105, 2.1650
- Kanyoro, M. 2.972
- Karavidopoulos, J. 3.2087
- Karotemprel, S. 2.964
- Käsemann, E. 1.33, 1.34, 1.83, 1.94,
1.242, 1.268, 1.303, 1.310, 1.311,
1.334, 1.337, 1.496, 1.518, 1.665,
1.668, 1.684, 1.697, 1.707, 1.715,
1.847, 2.866, 2.1016, 2.1032, 2.1052,
2.1178, 2.1290, 3.2000, 3.2728, 3.2886,
4.3217, 4.3447, 4.3462
- Kasher, A. 2.1732
- Kasher, R. 2.1225
- Kasper, W. 1.334, 1.336
- Kasser, R. 3.1990, 3.2112, 4.3036,
4.3040, 4.3041
- Kattenbusch, F. 1.306
- Katzner, K. 3.2459
- Kaufman, S. A. 3.2263
- Kautsky, J. H. 1.163
- Kautsky, K. 1.352
- Kautzsch, E. 2.1276
- Kay, D. M. 1.365
- Kazen, T. 2.1148, 2.1261, 2.1283,
3.2094, 3.2700, 3.2711, 3.2714, 3.2719,
3.2724, 3.2746, 3.2749, 3.2752, 3.2761,
3.2762, 3.2763, 3.2764, 3.2765, 3.2767,
3.2770, 3.2771, 3.2798
- Kealy, S. P. 3.1824, 3.1825, 3.1826,
3.1827, 3.1830
- Keck, L. E. 1.129, 1.202, 1.297, 1.623,
1.639, 1.847, 2.865, 2.874, 2.913,
2.916, 2.1061, 2.1070, 2.1077, 3.2527,
3.2537, 3.2543, 3.2588
- Kee, H. C. 1.665, 2.861, 2.883, 2.884,
2.1207, 2.1228, 2.1282, 2.1580, 3.2284,
3.2285, 3.2378, 3.2518, 3.2526, 3.2533,
3.2534, 3.2539, 3.2883, 4.3077, 4.3107,
4.3117, 4.3122, 4.3133, 4.3186, 4.3187,
4.3197, 4.3200, 4.3311, 4.3339
- Keel, O. 3.2215, 4.2974, 4.2977

- Keener, C. S. 2.886, 2.1328
 Keim, S. 4.2973
 Keim, T. 3.2352
 Kelber, W. H. 1.75, 1.196, 1.231,
 1.327, 1.329, 1.511, 1.659, 1.661,
 1.680, 1.740, 1.791, 1.800, 1.814,
 2.871, 2.1401, 2.1465, 2.1470, 2.1471,
 2.1487, 3.1829, 3.1831, 3.1833, 3.1835,
 3.1843, 3.1850, 3.2071, 3.2072, 3.2196,
 3.2207, 3.2389, 3.2517
 Kelhoffer, J. A. 2.1776
 Keller, H. M. 1.465, 1.466, 1.510
 Keller, M.-L. 3.2545
 Keller, S. 1.746, 2.1009
 Kellerman, D. 3.2721
 Kellermann, U. 4.3135
 Kelley, S. 1.523
 Kellner, H. 2.1378, 2.1384, 2.1388,
 2.1391
 Kelly, C. 2.1379
 Kemper, P. 2.1381
 Kempter, M. 4.3317
 Kendall, D. 2.860, 2.914, 2.1068
 Kennedy, G. A. 1.418, 1.433
 Kennedy, H. A. A. 1.4
 Kepler, J. 3.2325
 Kermode, F. 4.3033
 Kern, G. 4.3311
 Kerr, A. R. 3.2637
 Kertelge, K. 1.41, 1.696, 2.1268
 Kessel, M. 2.1378
 Kefler, E. 2.1797
 Kessler, N. 4.2973
 Kidger, M. 3.2325, 3.2326
 Kiilunen, J. 4.3305
 Kilcourse, G. 1.512
 Kiley, M. 1.102, 1.119, 2.869
 Kilgallen, J. J. 3.1966
 Kilpatrick, G. D. 1.340, 1.732, 4.3445
 Kim, H. C. P. 1.804
 Kim, S. 1.430, 3.1940, 3.2051, 3.2190,
 4.3321
 Kimball, C. A. 2.1137, 2.1156, 2.1162
 Kindler, A. 4.2975, 4.2988, 4.3004,
 4.3015
 Kindstrand, J. F. 2.1112, 4.3255
 King, C. 3.2351
 King, K. L. 1.299, 1.353
 King, U. 2.1010
 Kingsbury, J. D. 1.327, 1.636, 1.805,
 2.1063, 2.1438, 3.2526
 Kinnard, R. 4.3158
 Kinney, D. 2.1105
 Kinukawa, H. 3.1834
 Kinzer, M. 3.2637
 Kiraz, G. A. 2.1344
 Kirchner, D. 3.2101, 3.2103
 Kirk, A. 1.231, 1.596, 1.815, 1.826,
 1.831, 2.1471, 4.2927
 Kirkpatrick, P. G. 2.1811
 Kissinger, W. S. 1.297
 Kister, M. 2.1283
 Kittel, G. 1.721, 3.2576
 Kitzberger I. R. 1.287
 Kitzinger, R. 2.1228
 Klatch, R. E. 1.525
 Klauck, H.-J. 1.408, 1.419, 1.426,
 1.623, 1.624, 2.877, 3.1946, 3.1974,
 3.1975, 3.1976, 3.1977, 3.1979, 3.1980,
 3.1984, 3.1986, 3.1987, 3.1989, 3.1990,
 3.1991, 3.2082, 3.2087, 3.2102, 4.2939,
 4.3188, 4.3193, 4.3278, 4.3298, 4.3312,
 4.3345
 Klausner, J. 1.246, 1.622, 1.757, 2.990,
 2.1057, 2.1058, 2.1184, 2.1444, 3.2172
 Klawans, J. 3.2726, 3.2777, 3.2811,
 3.2813, 3.2824, 3.2825, 3.2826, 3.2827,
 3.2828, 3.2829
 Klein, C. 2.1609
 Klein, H. 2.1813, 3.2018, 4.3192
 Klein, P. 4.3295
 Klein, W. 3.2456
 Kletter, R. 4.2977
 Klijn, A. F. J. 3.1992
 Kline, L. L. 3.2124, 3.2143
 Klinghardt, M. 4.3112
 Klink, E. W. 3.2192
 Kloppenborg, J. S. 1.75, 1.188, 1.191,
 1.194, 1.245, 1.246, 1.248, 1.254,
 1.255, 1.258, 1.261, 1.265, 1.266,
 1.274, 1.396, 1.436, 1.447, 1.456,
 1.489, 1.543, 2.868, 2.901, 2.1107,
 2.1108, 2.1131, 2.1289, 2.1338, 2.1727,
 3.1854, 3.1855, 3.1856, 3.1857, 3.1858,
 3.1859, 3.1860, 3.1861, 3.1862,
 3.1863, 3.1864, 3.1865, 3.1866, 3.1868,
 3.1869, 3.1870, 3.1871, 3.1873, 3.1916,
 3.1917, 3.1942, 3.1968, 3.2068, 3.2079,
 3.2098, 3.2265, 3.2616, 3.2888, 3.2889,
 3.2895, 3.2896, 4.2911, 4.2914, 4.2917,
 4.2919, 4.2921, 4.2940, 4.2982, 4.3029,
 4.3047, 4.3052, 4.3107, 4.3108, 4.3259,
 4.3261, 4.3442
 Klostermann, E. 3.1974, 4.3299
 Klumbies, P. G. 1.65
 Klutz, T. E. 3.2534

- Knabenbauer, J. 4.3322
 Knibb, M. A. 2.1553, 2.1557, 2.1558, 3.2265, 3.2273
 Knierim, R. 1.651
 Knigge, H. D. 1.450
 Knight, D. A. 1.651
 Knight, J. 2.1198, 2.1401
 Knitter, P. F. 4.3100, 4.3102
 Knoch, O. 3.2126, 3.2127
 Knöppler, T. 1.13
 Knox, W. L. 2.1705, 4.3071, 4.3078
 Kober, M. 2.1803
 Köbert, R. 4.3278
 Koch, D.-A. 3.1929, 3.2729
 Koch, K. 1.445, 2.1283, 2.1573, 2.1575, 2.1582, 4.3182, 4.3275, 4.3292
 Kocka, J. 1.741
 Kodalle, K.-M. 2.1400
 Koester, A. 4.2973
 Koester, H. 1.28, 1.35, 1.96, 1.176, 1.178, 1.251, 1.254, 1.343, 1.373, 1.436, 1.689, 2.887, 2.1086, 2.1091, 2.1465, 2.1810, 3.1870, 3.1940, 3.1945, 3.1946, 3.1954, 3.1955, 3.1965, 3.1972, 3.1977, 3.1978, 3.1980, 3.1983, 3.1984, 3.1986, 3.1988, 3.1989, 3.2008, 3.2015, 3.2062, 3.2063, 3.2088, 3.2090, 3.2102, 3.2124, 3.2127, 3.2128, 3.2131, 3.2132, 3.2133, 3.2137, 3.2138, 3.2139, 3.2140, 4.3344, 4.3345
 Koestermann, E. 3.2154
 Kohl, M. 2.859
 Kohler, K. 2.1058
 Köhler, M. 2.1381
 Köhler, W.-D. 3.1941, 3.2125, 3.2127, 3.2128, 3.2131, 3.2132, 3.2133, 3.2139, 3.2140
 Kokkinos, N. 2.1457, 2.1458, 2.1459, 3.2316, 3.2326, 3.2352
 Kolb, E. 2.1381
 Kollmann, B. 1.346, 2.1250, 3.1908, 4.2920, 4.2921, 4.2934, 4.2940, 4.2942, 4.3067, 4.3072, 4.3078, 4.3082, 4.3179
 Königä Maranda, E. 4.3351, 4.3352, 4.3353, 4.3355, 4.3358
 Konradt, M. 3.1968
 Konstan, D. 3.2434
 Korsch, D. 1.511
 Korte, M. 4.2914
 Körtner, U. H. J. 1.5, 1.490, 2.1406, 2.1770, 2.1812, 3.1972, 3.2134, 3.2136, 3.2137
 Kosch, D. 3.2627
 Koselleck, R. 2.1387
 Koskenniemi, E. 3.2526
 Köstenberger, A. 3.2338, 3.2343
 Kotansky, R. 3.2531
 Kowalski, B. 4.2915
 Kraeling, C. H. 3.2097, 3.2355
 Kraemer, R. 2.1580
 Kraft, H. 2.1491
 Kraft, R. A. 3.2137, 3.2138
 Krämer, K. 2.1260
 Krasovec, J. 2.1380, 4.3182, 4.3184
 Kraus, H.-J. 4.3146, 4.3293, 4.3314
 Kraus, T. J. 1.723, 1.731, 1.737, 3.1989, 3.2081, 3.2083, 3.2084, 3.2085, 3.2087, 3.2092, 3.2095, 3.2096, 3.2100, 3.2118
 Kraus, W. 3.2653, 3.2654
 Krauß, S. 2.1381, 3.2579, 4.3317
 Krentz, E. 4.3093
 Kreplin, M. 2.1023, 2.1034, 2.1035, 2.1053, 3.2473, 3.2477, 3.2479, 3.2482, 3.2485, 3.2487, 3.2488, 3.2493, 3.2496, 3.2497, 3.2499, 3.2506, 3.2510, 3.2511
 Kristen, P. 4.2960, 4.3212
 Kristeva, J. 4.2915
 Krueger, D. 2.873
 Krüger, L. 1.761
 Kruger, M. J. 3.2092, 3.2093, 3.2094
 Kruse, H. 3.2624, 3.2727, 4.3191
 Kselman, J. S. 1.297
 Kuchler, M. 3.2215, 3.2657
 Kuemmerlin-McLean, J. K. 4.3188
 Kugler, R. 1.133
 Kugler, R. A. 2.1281, 2.1460, 3.2277
 Kuhn, H. W. 1.18, 1.341, 2.1245, 2.1248, 2.1252, 2.1255-1257, 2.1259, 2.1260, 2.1263-1265, 2.1268-1270, 2.1273, 2.1274, 2.1276, 2.1278, 2.1279, 2.1283, 3.2050, 3.2196, 3.2392, 3.2627, 4.2974, 4.2975, 4.2976, 4.2978, 4.2979, 4.2983, 4.2984, 4.2986, 4.2988, 4.2989, 4.3000, 4.3004, 4.3015, 4.3193, 4.3271, 4.3305, 4.3328, 4.3331, 4.3438, 4.3444, 4.3449
 Kuhn, K. G. 2.1275, 3.2525, 3.2630, 3.2633, 3.2823, 4.3320
 Kuhn, T. 1.361
 Kühneweg, U. 1.731
 Kumar, R. 1.525
 Kümmel, W. G. 1.191, 1.201, 1.297, 1.348, 1.458, 1.488, 1.510, 1.848, 4.3074
 Kundsın, K. 1.192, 1.328, 1.652
 Küng, H. 1.298, 1.334, 1.524
 Kunin, S. D. 3.2775, 3.2776
 Künzi, M. 2.1080

- Kürzinger, J. 1.429, 3.2136, 3.2137
 Kushnir-Stein, A. 3.2316
 Küster, V. 4.3164
 Kvalbein, H. 1.411, 2.1284, 4.3326
 Kvanvig, H. S. 2.1555, 2.1559, 2.1560
- Laaksonen, J. 3.2301, 3.2788, 3.2789
 Laato, A. 1.133, 4.3185
 Labahn, M. 1.358, 1.490, 1.505, 1.518, 1.528, 1.718, 2.890, 2.904, 2.912, 2.1061, 2.1063–1065, 2.1076, 2.1107, 2.1228, 2.1237, 2.1250, 2.1282, 2.1429, 3.1953, 3.1955, 3.1958, 3.1959, 3.1963, 3.1964, 3.1970, 3.1988, 3.2009, 4.2911, 4.2912, 4.2915, 4.2916, 4.2917, 4.2922, 4.2925, 4.2940, 4.3192, 4.3197
 LaCapra, D. 2.1378, 2.1394
 Lachmann, K. 3.1825
 Lachs, S. T. 2.1225, 2.1226, 4.3286
 Lagrange, M. J. 1.722, 3.2322, 3.2345, 4.3333, 4.3420, 4.3426, 4.3427, 4.3428, 4.3429
 Laible, H. 3.2172
 Lakatos, I. 2.1428
 Lake, K. 3.1927, 3.2352
 Lambdin, T. O. 3.1946, 3.1982, 4.3344, 4.3345
 Lambiasi, F. 1.309, 1.310, 1.330
 Lambrecht, J. 1.397, 1.401, 3.1938, 3.2554, 3.2558, 3.2570, 4.2912, 4.2920, 4.2928, 4.2931, 4.2933, 4.2938, 4.2939
 Lamouille, A. 2.1500
 Lampe, P. 2.1203
 Landfester, M. 2.1787, 2.1804–1808
 Lane, A. N. S. 2.884
 Lane, M. 2.1389
 Lane, W. L. 1.326, 3.1845, 3.2809, 4.3271, 4.3272, 4.3275, 4.3277, 4.3282, 4.3283, 4.3287, 4.3288, 4.3290, 4.3322
 Lanfranchi, P. 2.1800
 Lang, B. 1.133, 1.147, 1.413, 2.1394
 Lang, F. 4.3448, 4.3449
 Lang, M. 1.718, 3.1954, 3.1958, 3.1961, 3.1966
 Lange, A. 1.358, 2.884, 2.1042, 2.1699
 Langenhorst, G. 2.1402
 Langewiesche, D. 2.1381
 Lantero, E. H. 2.866
 Lapide, P. 1.122, 2.1057, 2.1058, 4.3278
 Lapin, H. 1.130
 Laqueur, R. 2.1803
 Lasalle-Klein, R. 1.527
 Lasch-Quinn, E. 2.1379
- Lategan, B. 2.916
 Latourelle, R. 1.308, 1.309, 1.329, 1.330, 1.848, 3.2530
 Laufen, R. 4.2912, 4.2913, 4.2918, 4.2933
 Lauterbach, J. Z. 3.2172, 3.2175
 Lawler, M. G. 1.761
 Lawlor, H. J. 1.492, 3.1972
 Layton, B. 1.176
 Le Beau, B. F. 2.874
 Le Boulluec, A. 3.2131
 Le Déaut, R. 3.2257, 3.2368
 Le Goff, J. 1.479, 1.481, 1.483–486, 1.492, 1.506, 2.929, 2.933, 2.944
 Leach, E. 1.782
 Leander, P. 3.2477
 Lebeau, P. 4.3338
 Lee, A. H. I. 2.1154
 Leeman, A. D. 2.1796, 2.1797
 Leeming, H. 2.1525
 Leeming, K. 2.1525
 Légasse, M. A. 4.3285, 4.3286
 Légasse, S. 2.1759, 2.1769
 Lehmann, W. P. 1.365
 Leibniz, G. 1.522
 Leipold, H. 1.300
 Leivestad, R. 2.1547, 3.2473, 3.2479, 3.2481, 3.2484, 3.2487, 3.2492, 3.2493
 Leloir, L. 3.2121
 LeMarquand, G. 1.526
 Lembi, G. 2.1677
 Lemke, W. 2.1576
 Lemon, M. C. 2.1385
 Lendle, O. 2.1787, 2.1789, 2.1793, 2.1795, 2.1808
 Lenski, G. E. 1.163, 3.2302, 3.2303
 Lentricchia, F. 2.1377
 Lentzen-Deis, F. 1.309, 1.696
 Leon-Dufour, X. 1.36
 Lernoux, P. 1.524
 Leske, A. 2.1341, 2.1342
 Lessing, G. E. 1.57, 1.241, 1.242, 1.550, 1.552, 1.605, 2.1748, 2.1810, 4.3373
 Leutzsch, M. 3.2311, 3.2312, 4.3331, 4.3339
 Levenson, J. D. 2.1400, 2.1605, 3.2904
 Levertoff, P. P. 1.365, 2.1445
 Lévi-Strauss, C. 1.782
 Levick, B. 3.2322
 Levin, S. 3.1987
 Levine, A.-J. 1.287, 3.1832, 3.2760
 Levine, B. A. 3.2721
 Levine, D. S. 2.1796
 Levine, J. M. 1.770

- Levine, L. I. 1.170, 1.410, 4.3105,
 4.3108, 4.3110, 4.3111, 4.3112, 4.3115,
 4.3116, 4.3117, 4.3118, 4.3121, 4.3122,
 4.3123, 4.3124, 4.3125
 Levinskaya, I. 4.3114
 Levison, J. R. 1.527, 4.3164, 4.3458
 Levy, D. 1.817, 1.819
 Levy-Barzilai, V. 4.2992
 Lewis, A. S. 2.1344, 2.1346
 Lewis, D. 2.1420
 Lewis, G. S. 2.1208, 2.1595
 Lewis, R. G. 2.1802
 Lewis, S. M. 2.960
 Lichtenberger, H. 1.352, 1.358, 2.884,
 2.1045, 2.1250, 2.1284, 2.1453, 2.1597,
 2.1799
 Liddell, H. G. 3.2322, 4.3247
 Liebermann, S. 2.1498, 2.1519, 4.3241
 Lietaert Peerbolte, B. J. 2.1250, 2.1228
 Lietzmann, H. 2.1348
 Lieu, J. 3.2637
 Liew, T.-S. B. 3.1834
 Lifshitz, B. 4.3118
 Light, D. 1.746
 Lightfoot, J. 2.1445
 Lightfoot, R. H. 1.683, 3.1830
 Lilla, S. 3.2144
 Lim, T. H. 2.1775
 Linafelt, T. 2.1615, 2.1637
 Lincoln, A. T. 1.427, 2.1438, 3.1997,
 4.3320
 Lindars, B. 1.29
 Lindars, B. 2.1547, 2.1567, 4.3316
 Lindemann, A. 1.3, 1.63, 1.259, 1.491,
 1.503, 1.610, 2.890, 2.1394, 3.1938,
 3.1940, 3.1968, 3.1979, 3.1982, 3.2127,
 3.2131, 3.2132
 Lindemann, B. A. 2.1251
 Linder, M. 4.2990
 Lindeskog, G. 2.1057, 4.3279
 Lindley, D. V. 1.18
 Lindner, H. 2.1668
 Lindsey, R. L. 4.3335
 Lindsey, W. D. 2.1008
 Linnemann, E. 3.2196, 3.2554, 3.2558,
 3.2623, 3.2629
 Livingstone, D. 2.1004
 Livingstone, E. A. 1.131, 2.1283
 Llewelyn, S. R. 3.2323
 Loader, W. R. G. 2.1141, 2.1144,
 3.2745, 3.2746, 3.2751, 3.2752, 3.2753,
 3.2754, 3.2755, 3.2757, 3.2758, 3.2759,
 3.2761, 3.2762, 4.3135
 Locke, J. 1.92
 Lods, M. 3.2121
 Loehr, H. 4.3135
 Loewe, H. 2.1689
 Loffreda, S. 4.3113
 Lohfink, G. 1.49, 1.244
 Lohmeyer, E. 1.419, 2.1265, 2.1374,
 2.1750, 3.1830, 3.1842, 3.2639, 3.2869,
 4.3277, 4.3281, 4.3285, 4.3307, 4.3322,
 4.3329
 Löhr, W. A. 3.2123, 3.2136
 Lohse, E. 2.1269, 2.1730, 3.1943,
 3.2386, 3.2598, 3.2599, 3.2622, 4.3075,
 4.3296
 Loisy, A. 4.3126, 4.3264
 Lona, H. E. 3.2127
 Lonergan, B. J. F. 2.878, 2.885, 2.1398,
 2.1418, 2.1488, 3.2186
 Longenecker, R. N. 3.2423, 4.3182
 Longstaff, T. R. W. 2.1340, 3.1825
 López Rosas, R. 3.2637
 López, E. E. 1.743, 1.771
 Loprieno, A. 4.3188
 Lord, A. B. 1.194
 Losie, L. A. 3.2663
 Louhivuori, M. 1.432
 Louw, J. P. 3.2323
 Love, S. 1.746
 Lovering, E. H. 1.131, 1.134
 Lowe, M. 1.417, 2.857, 2.892, 2.1612
 Löwenstein, K. 1.357
 Lowrie, W. 2.861
 Lucaites, J. L. 1.512
 Luce, T. J. 2.1797
 Luck, G. 4.3062
 Lücke, F. 3.1952
 Lüdemann, G. 3.1939, 3.2543, 3.2544
 Ludwig, R. A. 1.245, 1.511, 2.871
 Lühken, H. 2.1787
 Lührmann, D. 1.59, 1.83, 1.258, 1.310,
 1.322, 1.491, 2.1022, 2.1255, 3.1857,
 3.1986, 3.1989, 3.1991, 3.2081, 3.2082,
 3.2084, 3.2090, 3.2093, 3.2095, 3.2096,
 3.2117, 4.2920, 4.2928, 4.2930, 4.2980,
 4.2983, 4.2984, 4.3212, 4.3272, 4.3285,
 4.3294
 Lullies, R. 4.2989
 Lund, J. A. 1.416, 4.3333
 Lundberg, M. J. 2.1245
 Lupieri, E. 2.1752, 2.1767, 2.1776,
 2.1780
 Luria, A. R. 1.824
 Lust, J. 3.2249, 4.3002
 Lütgert, W. 4.3448, 4.3449, 4.3450
 Lutthuizen, G. P. 1.633

- Luz, U. 1.68, 1.353, 1.635, 1.636,
1.681, 1.733, 2.912, 2.1140, 3.1878,
3.1882, 3.1883, 3.1884, 3.1890, 3.1895,
3.1910, 3.2499, 3.2717, 3.2844, 3.2845,
3.2869, 4.2919, 4.2920, 4.2921, 4.2959,
4.2966, 4.2967, 4.2969, 4.3128, 4.3141,
4.3145, 4.3148, 4.3246, 4.3257, 4.3261,
4.3264, 4.3292, 4.3293, 4.3294, 4.3308
- Lynch, G. 4.3167
- Lyon, C. H. 4.3167
- Lyon, D. G. 1.365
- Lyonnet, S. 4.3143
- Ma'oz, Z. 4.3111, 4.3112
- Maccoby, H. 1.108, 2.1058, 2.1129,
3.2048
- MacDonald, D. M. 3.2132
- MacDonald, G. J. 3.2383
- Mach, M. 3.1913
- Mack, B. L. 1.199, 1.244, 1.245, 1.258,
1.349, 1.523, 1.545, 2.1028, 2.1060,
2.1106, 3.1844, 3.1861, 3.1864, 3.1865,
3.1868, 3.2196, 3.2519, 3.2642, 3.2643,
4.2912, 4.2940, 4.3203, 4.3211
- Mackey, J. P. 1.297
- Mackowski, R. M. 3.2641
- Maclaurin, E. C. B. 4.2936
- MacLeish, A. 1.780
- MacRae, G. W. 1.698, 2.1443, 2.1623
- MacRae, J. D. 1.45
- Madden, F. W. 3.2319
- Madden, P. J. 3.2544
- Magen, Y. 2.1698, 4.2995
- Magesa, L. 2.972
- Magness, J. 2.1247, 2.1255, 4.3117
- Maier, G. 3.1967, 3.2519, 3.2862
- Maier, J. 1.59, 1.621, 2.1591, 2.1592,
3.2122, 3.2172, 3.2175, 3.2205, 4.3084
- Maier, P. L. 3.2316, 3.2328, 3.2352, 3.2357
- Main, E. 2.1503, 2.1508
- Majer, M. 2.1283
- Major, H. D. A. 1.35
- Malbon, E. S. 1.327, 1.777, 1.778,
1.780, 1.782, 1.783, 1.785, 1.787,
1.788, 1.804, 3.1832, 3.1852, 4.3133,
4.3284, 4.3286, 4.3290
- Malcolm, B. P. 1.743
- Malherbe, A. J. 2.1109, 2.1128, 2.1129,
2.1132, 3.2409, 4.3247
- Malina, B. J. 1.538, 1.541, 1.620, 1.743,
1.745, 1.746, 1.748, 1.750, 1.757,
1.758, 1.760-767, 1.769, 1.772, 1.773,
2.890, 2.904, 2.908, 2.909, 2.919,
2.1397, 3.2208, 3.2291, 3.2418,
4.3036
- Malinine, M. 3.2103
- Malkki, L. H. 1.829, 1.835, 1.838
- Malone, P. 4.3158
- Maloney, E. C. 1.324, 4.3334
- Maloney, L. M. 3.1842
- Mann, C. S. 4.3275, 4.3307, 4.3328,
4.3340
- Mann, M. 1.164
- Mannheim, K. 2.1392
- Manns, F. 1.763, 3.2217
- Mansfeld, J. 3.2136
- Manson, T. W. 1.35, 1.93, 1.423,
2.988, 2.1155, 2.1446, 2.1554, 2.1575,
3.2624, 3.2625, 3.2678, 3.2692, 3.2814,
4.3073
- Manson, W. 1.35, 1.668
- Mantel, H. 2.1730
- Marcovich, M. 3.2120, 3.2133, 3.2139
- Marcus, J. 1.6, 1.7, 1.13, 1.14, 2.1235,
2.1609, 3.1830, 3.1841, 3.1842, 3.1843,
3.1846, 3.2011, 3.2145, 3.2406, 3.2415,
3.2627, 3.2681, 3.2702, 3.2711, 3.2714,
3.2715, 3.2865, 3.2884, 4.2942, 4.3193
- Marcus, R. 2.1737
- Margalioth, M. 4.3071
- Marguerat, D. 1.431, 1.487, 1.498,
3.2081, 4.3380
- Marincola, J. 2.1642, 2.1644, 2.1645,
2.1795
- Markschies, C. 1.417, 2.1455, 3.2082,
3.2095
- Marmonstein, A. 3.2527
- Marquardt, G. 3.2862
- Marrou, H. I. 1.478, 1.480, 1.482-484,
2.1458
- Marsh, C. 2.881, 2.888, 2.916, 2.1005,
2.1009, 2.1401, 2.1443, 4.3163, 4.3166,
4.3167, 4.3170
- Marsh, F. B. 3.2355, 3.2356
- Marshall, I. H. 1.35, 1.406, 1.671,
1.673, 1.687, 1.698, 2.1211, 2.1442,
3.2342, 3.2345, 3.2365, 3.2405, 3.2629,
4.2959, 4.2960, 4.2970, 4.3129, 4.3190,
4.3294, 4.3295, 4.3296, 4.3299, 4.3307,
4.3429
- Marshall, J. T. 2.1345
- Marshall, J. W. 1.246, 1.248, 3.1865
- Martin Nagy, R. 1.170
- Martin, E. L. 3.2316, 3.2317, 3.2320, 3.2372

- Martin, R. A. 3.2156, 4.3259
 Martin, R. P. 1.528, 1.640, 1.687,
 2.885, 2.1015, 2.1186, 4.3322, 4.3331
 Martinez, F. G. 2.1251, 2.1284
 Marty, M. E. 1.524
 Martyn, J. L. 2.1193, 3.1997, 3.2001,
 3.2038, 3.2175, 3.2410, 3.2423
 Marwick, A. 2.1379
 Marx, F. A. 2.1811
 Marxsen, W. 1.330, 2.1176, 3.1829
 März, A. 1.338
 Maser, S. 1.457, 2.873, 2.1765
 Mason, S. 2.1653, 2.1666, 2.1667,
 2.1674, 2.1677, 2.1679, 2.1682, 2.1683,
 2.1769, 4.3119
 Massaux, É. 2.1324, 3.2124, 3.2125,
 3.2126, 3.2127, 3.2128, 3.2131
 Matera, F. J. 1.659
 Mathews, K. A. 2.1449
 Matson, M. A. 3.1957, 3.2018, 3.2644,
 3.2654
 Mattern, S. P. 2.1642
 Matthaïos, S. 2.1804
 Matthews, V. H. 4.3048
 Matthiae, K. 1.188, 1.421, 1.493, 1.579,
 2.1079
 Matton, S. 2.1105
 Maurer, C. 2.1816
 May, D. 1.745, 1.746
 May, J. R. 4.3155
 Mayer-Haas, A. J. 3.2603, 3.2604,
 3.2621, 3.2622
 Mayer-Schärtl, B. 1.536
 Mayordomo, M. 2.1386
 Mazar, B. 3.2224, 3.2640
 Mazumdar, S. 1.525
 McArthur, H. K. 1.xvii, 1.19, 1.273,
 1.309, 1.319, 1.329, 1.331, 1.848,
 3.2550, 3.2561, 3.2734
 McBride, D. S. 2.1583
 McCarthy, V. A. 2.864
 McCartney, D. 2.1449
 McCasland, S. V. 3.2265
 McCloskey, D. 1.511
 McClymond, M. J. 1.363
 McCollough, C. T. 1.144
 McCormick, M. 1.434
 McCown, C. C. 2.1233, 3.2375
 McCullagh, C. B. 1.294, 1.330
 McDonald, J. I. H. 2.1775, 2.1777,
 2.1782, 3.2823
 McDonald, L. M. 2.1318, 2.1442,
 3.2461
 McEleney, N. J. 1.309, 1.329, 1.363,
 1.696, 1.707, 1.847, 3.2734
 McGinn, B. 1.26
 McGrath, A. 2.1420
 McGuire, A. 1.455
 McIntyre, A. 2.1418
 McIver, R. 1.426
 McKay, H. A. 2.1723, 2.1728, 4.3114
 McKendrick, S. 1.732
 McKenzie, R. 3.2322
 McKenzie, S. L. 1.777
 McKnight, E. V. 1.503, 1.504, 1.698,
 1.707, 1.777, 1.778
 McKnight, S. 1.xvii, 1.130, 1.253,
 1.363, 1.364, 1.406, 1.500, 1.674,
 1.682, 1.696, 1.698, 1.777, 2.893,
 2.1071, 2.1192, 2.1193, 2.1204, 2.1211,
 2.1442, 3.2403, 3.2770, 3.2771, 3.2789,
 3.2790, 3.2791, 3.2799, 3.2832, 4.3132
 McLaughlin, J. F. 3.2331
 McLean, B. H. 3.1977, 3.1981, 3.1984
 McNamara, M. J. 2.1364,
 2.1711–1713, 4.3139
 McNeil, B. 1.549
 McNicol, A. J. 1.435, 1.644, 2.1328,
 2.1333, 2.1335, 2.1339, 2.1340, 2.1342,
 3.1825
 McRay, J. 4.3041
 Mead, A. H. 4.3339
 Meadors, E. P. 1.408, 4.3325
 Mealand, D. L. 1.310, 1.315, 4.2957,
 4.2958
 Mearns, C. L. 3.1946
 Mecklinger, A. 4.2937
 Medina, J. 3.2213
 Meeks, W. A. 1.407, 1.543, 1.721,
 2.1201, 2.1623, 2.1626, 4.3247
 Megill, A. 1.511, 2.1378, 2.1384
 Mehl, A. 2.1787, 2.1789, 2.1794
 Meier, J. P. 1.37, 1.84, 1.95, 1.124,
 1.126, 1.159, 1.173, 1.175, 1.200,
 1.244, 1.246, 1.253, 1.257, 1.260,
 1.265, 1.266, 1.272, 1.273, 1.275,
 1.280, 1.284, 1.291, 1.307, 1.346,
 1.350, 1.353, 1.364, 1.376, 1.385,
 1.408, 1.452, 1.487, 1.495, 1.500,
 1.502–505, 1.512, 1.611, 1.638, 1.670,
 1.676, 1.678, 1.689, 1.690, 1.696,
 1.707, 1.708, 1.734, 1.736, 1.738,
 1.792, 1.848, 2.856, 2.860, 2.875,
 2.876, 2.908, 2.915, 2.919, 2.920,
 2.924, 2.946, 2.962, 2.1000, 2.1023,
 2.1045–1048, 2.1068, 2.1070, 2.1116,
 2.1138, 2.1149, 2.1150, 2.1152, 2.1158,
 2.1161, 2.1175, 2.1209, 2.1231, 2.1256,
 2.1258, 2.1266, 2.1284, 2.1289, 2.1359,
 2.1360, 2.1397, 2.1412, 2.1416, 2.1429,

- 2.1433, 2.1442, 2.1478, 2.1617, 2.1627,
 2.1751, 2.1759, 2.1768, 2.1774, 2.1781,
 2.1782, 3.1847, 3.1848, 3.1861, 3.1885,
 3.1901, 3.1935, 3.1958, 3.1980, 3.2000,
 3.2001, 3.2003, 3.2004, 3.2009, 3.2010,
 3.2011, 3.2022, 3.2023, 3.2037, 3.2066,
 3.2067, 3.2070, 3.2083, 3.2100, 3.2101,
 3.2134, 3.2147, 3.2169, 3.2170, 3.2172,
 3.2184, 3.2219, 3.2332, 3.2351, 3.2384,
 3.2388, 3.2428, 3.2439, 3.2449, 3.2517,
 3.2518, 3.2520, 3.2521, 3.2534, 3.2544,
 3.2547, 3.2609, 3.2610, 3.2611, 3.2620,
 3.2623, 3.2693, 3.2696, 3.2713, 3.2715,
 3.2728, 3.2733, 3.2734, 3.2747, 3.2755,
 3.2759, 3.2790, 3.2836, 3.2863, 3.2864,
 3.2870, 3.2871, 3.2881, 3.2886, 3.2887,
 3.2891, 3.2892, 3.2892, 3.2895, 4.2921,
 4.3059, 4.3060, 4.3072, 4.3074, 4.3090,
 4.3124, 4.3126, 4.3134, 4.3140, 4.3152,
 4.3179, 4.3180, 4.3192, 4.3197, 4.3307,
 4.3325, 4.3373, 4.3404, 4.3412, 4.3414
 Meinecke, F. 1.565
 Meißner, B. 2.1788, 2.1789, 2.1791,
 2.1795
 Meister, K. 2.1787, 2.1791, 2.1793,
 2.1801, 2.1804
 Melanchthon, M. J. 2.980
 Melanchthon, P. 2.855, 2.1409
 Meliton, A. 3.2131, 3.2519
 Mell, U. 1.59, 4.3323, 4.3341
 Mellor, R. 3.2156, 3.2177
 Melzer-Keller, H. 1.465, 1.466, 1.510
 Ménard, J.-É. 4.3035
 Mendels, D. 1.108, 1.117, 1.126,
 3.2233
 Mendelsohn, E. 1.530
 Mendelson, A. 2.1625
 Menken, M. J. J. 3.1961, 3.2697
 Menn, E. M. 3.2260
 Merk, O. 1.504
 Merkel, H. 1.425, 1.427, 3.1987,
 3.1988, 3.2368
 Merkelbach, R. 4.3078
 Merklein, H. 2.1032–1034, 2.1762,
 2.1766, 2.1767, 2.1769, 2.1783, 3.2473,
 3.2475, 3.2495, 3.2496, 3.2497, 3.2499,
 3.2502, 3.2503, 3.2504, 3.2505, 3.2507,
 3.2641, 3.2664, 3.2665, 3.2669, 3.2727,
 3.2731, 4.3210, 4.3211, 4.3212, 4.3274,
 4.3292, 4.3293, 4.3318
 Merklein, M. J. J. 2.1052, 2.1053,
 2.1138, 2.1164
 Merleau-Ponty, M. 3.2233, 3.2234
 Merz, A. 1.33, 1.39, 1.95, 1.109, 1.270,
 1.407, 1.450, 1.487, 1.498, 1.518,
 1.531, 1.546, 1.549, 1.686, 1.688,
 1.708, 1.709, 1.712, 1.713, 1.715,
 1.717, 1.735, 1.849, 2.888, 2.890,
 2.899, 2.900, 2.1032, 2.1117, 2.1173,
 2.1175, 2.1177, 2.1190, 2.1191, 2.1293,
 2.1294, 2.1397, 2.1426, 2.1757, 2.1766,
 2.1770, 2.1782, 2.1783, 3.1965, 3.1977,
 3.1981, 3.1984, 3.1988, 3.2000, 3.2170,
 3.2187, 3.2198, 3.2204, 3.2399, 3.2400,
 3.2473, 3.2474, 3.2475, 3.2476, 3.2481,
 3.2484, 3.2485, 3.2486, 3.2492, 3.2495,
 3.2496, 3.2498, 3.2499, 3.2501, 3.2502,
 3.2503, 3.2504, 3.2505, 3.2507, 3.2509,
 3.2510, 3.2601, 3.2603, 3.2612, 3.2613,
 3.2614, 3.2616, 3.2618, 3.2621, 3.2631,
 3.2632, 3.2734, 3.2747, 3.2750, 3.2752,
 3.2756, 3.2763, 3.2764, 3.2788, 3.2878,
 3.2884, 3.2886, 3.2891, 3.2893, 3.2894,
 3.2904, 4.2921, 4.2961, 4.3074, 4.3179,
 4.3414
 Meščerskij, N. A. 2.1525
 Meshorer, Y. 1.569, 2.1010, 3.2319,
 4.2975, 4.2988, 4.3000, 4.3015
 Metzdorf, C. 3.2638, 3.2639, 3.2648,
 3.2654, 3.2659, 3.2660
 Metzger, B. M. 1.729, 2.1322, 2.1333,
 3.2380, 4.3306, 4.3328
 Meyer, A. 1.365, 2.1345, 2.1346,
 2.1375
 Meyer, B. F. 1.32, 1.37–39, 1.46, 1.246,
 1.256, 1.257, 1.272, 1.294, 1.308,
 1.309, 1.330, 1.414, 1.423, 1.446,
 1.670, 1.688, 1.710, 2.859, 2.869,
 2.878, 2.883, 2.890, 2.898, 2.907,
 2.920, 2.924, 2.932, 2.939, 2.942,
 2.943, 2.946, 2.1032, 2.1442, 2.1165,
 2.1199, 2.1418, 2.1428, 3.2186, 3.2512,
 3.2518, 3.2541, 3.2542, 3.2624, 3.2640,
 3.2659, 3.2660, 3.2662, 3.2663, 3.2735,
 3.2813, 3.2836, 3.2868, 4.3133
 Meyer, M. W. 1.447, 1.465, 1.620,
 2.856, 2.1010, 2.1434, 3.1988, 3.1990,
 3.2106, 3.2111, 3.2117
 Meyer, R. 3.2510
 Meyers, C. L. 1.170, 3.2721
 Meyers, E. M. 1.80, 1.170, 2.1259,
 2.1639, 3.2295, 3.2296, 3.2302,
 3.2721, 3.2811, 3.2812, 4.3124,
 4.3224, 4.3225
 Meynet, R. 3.1923
 Michaelis, W. 3.2081, 4.3041
 Michaud, J. P. 1.485
 Michel, O. 1.300
 Michie, D. 1.783, 3.1832, 4.2917
 Mickelsen, A. B. 2.1449

- Milavec, A. 1.176, 3.2128
 Milgrom, J. 1.622, 3.2699, 3.2719,
 3.2739, 3.2825
 Milhoc, V. 2.981
 Milik, J. T. 2.1258, 2.1577, 2.1604,
 3.2344, 3.2717
 Millar, A. 1.850
 Millar, F. 1.428, 2.868, 3.1961, 3.2168,
 4.3413, 4.3414
 Millard, A. R. 1.192, 1.412, 1.420,
 2.1481, 3.2469
 Miller, G. 3.2024
 Miller, G. A. 1.753
 Miller, J. 2.963, 2.1012, 2.1013
 Miller, J. W. 2.909, 2.910
 Miller, M. P. 4.3326
 Miller, N. P. 3.2156
 Miller, P. D. 1.634, 2.1576, 2.1583,
 4.3182, 4.3190
 Miller, R. J. 1.26, 1.27, 1.245, 3.1913,
 3.2642, 3.2643, 3.2887, 3.2890, 3.2892,
 3.2895, 3.2898, 3.2900, 4.3025
 Miller, S. S. 1.169, 1.170, 4.3106,
 4.3109, 4.3119, 4.3121, 4.3122
 Milligan, G. 1.373, 3.2525
 Mimouni, S. C. 4.3138, 4.3140
 Minear, P. S. 4.3271, 4.3295
 Mineshige, K. 4.3283, 4.3287, 4.3290,
 4.3292, 4.3293, 4.3294, 4.3295, 4.3296,
 4.3299
 Mingana, A. 2.1752
 Minnerath, R. 1.436
 Minois, G. 2.1814
 Mirecki, P. A. 3.2097, 3.2099, 4.3026
 Misztal, B. A. 2.1471
 Mitchell, C. C. 4.3331
 Mitchell, M. M. 3.2192
 Mittmann-Richert, U. 2.1800
 Moberly, R. W. L. 3.2695
 Modica, J. B. 2.1204
 Moehring, H. R. 2.1669
 Moessner, D. P. 1.644, 2.1438
 Moghadam, V. M. 1.525
 Mohr, T. A. 3.2384, 3.2644, 3.2646,
 3.2659
 Moles, J. H. 2.1113, 4.3253
 Mölle, H. 1.442
 Molnar, M. R. 3.2328
 Moloney, F. J. 3.1845, 3.1962, 3.2004,
 3.2201, 4.2917, 4.3277, 4.3284, 4.3287,
 4.3290, 4.3332
 Moltmann, J. 1.524, 2.859, 2.1414
 Momigliano, A. 2.1790, 2.1792,
 2.1793, 2.1798, 2.1799
 Mommsen, T. 3.2330, 3.2331, 3.2804,
 3.2805
 Mommsen, W. J. 1.741
 Mondésert, C. 3.2122
 Monson, J. 2.1458
 Montague, W. J. 2.866
 Montefiore, C. J. G. 2.990, 2.1057,
 2.1058, 2.1444, 2.1689
 Montefiore, H. 3.2062
 Montinari, M. 1.576
 Moo, D. J. 1.435, 1.442
 Moor, J. C. 1.133
 Moore, G. F. 1.365, 2.1133, 2.1452,
 2.1623, 2.1624, 2.1730, 3.2575
 Moore, R. L. 2.855
 Moore, S. D. 1.513, 1.620, 1.770,
 1.777, 1.779, 1.786, 2.882, 2.1384,
 2.1395, 2.1396, 2.1433, 3.1823, 3.1832
 Moreland, M. C. 3.1942
 Moreschini, C. 2.1787, 2.1815, 2.1816,
 4.3422
 Morgan, D. 4.3169
 Morgan, M. A. 4.3071
 Morgan, R. 2.995
 Morgan, T. 1.427
 Morgenstern, J. 3.2331, 3.2347, 3.2348
 Morray-Jones, C. R. A. 2.1595
 Morrice, W. G. 3.1974
 Morris, L. 3.2343
 Morrison, C. E. 3.2259
 Morrow, R. A. 1.512, 1.514
 Mosala, I. 1.532
 Moule, C. F. D. 1.35, 1.117, 1.372,
 1.376, 1.635, 1.675, 1.676, 1.705,
 2.877, 2.1197, 2.1230, 2.1465, 3.2393,
 3.2394, 3.2493, 3.2822
 Moulton, J. H. 3.2322
 Mournet, T. C. 1.435
 Mowinkel, S. 2.1546
 Moxnes, H. 1.539, 1.746, 1.767, 2.904,
 2.908, 2.919, 2.998, 2.1387, 3.2186,
 3.2292, 3.2797, 3.2798, 4.3178
 Moxter, M. 1.740, 1.837, 2.935,
 4.2945
 Moyers, B. 1.525
 Moyise, S. 2.1141, 2.1164, 2.1713
 Mrazek, J. 1.350
 Muddiman, J. B. 1.432, 3.1918, 4.3324
 Mueller, J. R. 3.2229
 Mugambi, J. N. K. 2.972
 Mulder, H. 3.2344
 Mulder, M. J. 2.1225, 2.1494, 2.1657
 Müller, B. 1.479, 1.482, 1.485
 Müller, C. D. G. 2.1816, 3.2150

- Müller, K. 2.1198, 3.2758
 Müller, K. E. 2.916
 Müller, M. 2.1476, 3.2473, 3.2476,
 3.2479, 3.2482, 3.2491, 3.2492
 Müller, P. 1.13, 2.1406, 3.1968
 Muller, R. A. 1.643
 Müller, U. B. 1.59, 2.1767, 2.1770,
 2.1772, 2.1782, 3.2145, 3.2626, 4.3074,
 4.3200
 Munoa, P. B. 2.1241, 2.1564
 Munslow, A. 2.1384
 Müntzer, T. 3.2830
 Murdock, G. P. 1.744
 Murgia, C. E. 3.2108, 3.2109
 Murphy, F. J. 3.2251, 4.3075
 Murphy-O'Connor, J. 1.171, 1.483,
 2.1010, 2.1781, 3.2423, 3.2639, 3.2641,
 3.2642, 3.2643, 3.2656
 Murray, E. B. 1.4
 Musgrave, A. 2.1428
 Mussies, G. 1.418
 Mussner, F. 1.36, 1.363, 1.407, 1.423,
 1.696, 1.716, 4.3320, 4.3322
 Must, H. 3.2374
 Mutschler, B. 3.2125
 Myers, C. 4.3285
 Myllykoski, M. 3.2384, 4.2913
- Naber, S. A. 4.3001
 Nagel, T. 1.249, 3.2091, 3.2098,
 3.2099, 3.2105, 3.2112, 3.2124, 3.2139
 Nagel, W. 4.3344
 Nagl-Docekal, H. 2.1399
 Najman, H. 1.269, 1.721
 Namer, G. 1.838
 Naveh, J. 1.101, 3.2530, 4.3069, 4.3078
 Neale, D. 1.622, 1.646, 2.1192
 Neesen, L. 4.3426
 Negev, A. 3.2724
 Neill, S. 1.405, 1.518, 1.683, 1.697,
 2.870, 2.889, 2.1177, 2.1406, 2.1442,
 3.2186
 Neiryneck, F. 1.342, 1.434, 2.1264,
 2.1288, 2.1765, 3.1831, 3.1875, 3.1918,
 3.1940, 3.1944, 3.1986, 3.1988, 3.2091,
 3.2194, 3.2598, 3.2599, 3.2615, 3.2622,
 4.2912, 4.2918, 4.2920, 4.2924, 4.2940,
 4.3306, 4.3443
 Nelis, D. P. 2.1796
 Neller, K. V. 4.3033
 Nelson, J. S. 1.511
 Nesselrath, H.-G. 2.1787, 2.1790
 Nestle, E. 1.365
 Netzer, E. 1.170
- Neufeld, D. 1.746
 Neugebauer, F. 1.342, 1.445, 4.3320,
 4.3438, 4.3440
 Neusner, J. 1.113, 1.129, 1.133, 1.149,
 1.248, 1.410, 1.547, 2.873, 2.874,
 2.876, 2.882, 2.1064, 2.1074, 2.1076,
 2.1133, 2.1184, 2.1185, 2.1199, 2.1214,
 2.1436, 2.1560, 2.1583, 2.1619, 2.1626,
 2.1672, 2.1689, 2.1692, 2.1694, 2.1719,
 2.1737, 2.1742, 3.2107, 3.2218, 3.2253,
 3.2534, 3.2694, 3.2710, 3.2712, 3.2718,
 3.2805, 3.2812, 3.2813, 3.2817, 3.2824,
 3.2828, 3.2829, 4.3068, 4.3180, 4.3188,
 4.3232, 4.3241
 New, D. S. 1.395
 Newman, C. C. 1.625, 2.881, 2.1208,
 2.1595, 2.1604, 2.1627, 3.2902
 Newman, J. H. 1.721, 2.859, 2.883
 Newport, K. G. C. 1.675
 Newsom, C. A. 1.785
 Newton, M. 3.2710
 Neyrey 1.761, 4.3146, 4.3367
 Nickel, R. 2.1787, 2.1804-1806
 Nickelsburg, G. W. E. 2.1209, 2.1341,
 2.1453, 2.1553, 2.1556, 2.1558, 2.1566,
 2.1568, 2.1571, 2.1583, 2.1585, 2.1587,
 2.1601, 2.1604, 3.2196, 3.2265, 3.2272,
 3.2274, 3.2406, 3.2885, 3.2890, 3.2907
 Nicklas, T. 1.718, 1.731, 1.737, 3.1974,
 3.1986, 3.1989, 3.2047, 3.2082, 3.2083,
 3.2084, 3.2085, 3.2086, 3.2087, 3.2089,
 3.2091, 3.2092, 3.2096, 3.2100, 3.2104,
 3.2112, 3.2114, 3.2115, 3.2131, 3.2136
 Nicol, W. 3.2526
 Nida, E. A. 3.2323
 Niebuhr, K.-W. 2.1237, 2.1284,
 3.1969, 4.3137
 Niehues-Pröbsting, H. 2.1105
 Nielsen, H. K. 1.310, 1.315, 1.321,
 3.2624, 3.2626
 Nielsen, J. M. 4.2992
 Niese, B. 3.2329, 4.3001
 Nietzsche, F. 1.576, 2.865, 2.1105,
 2.1383
 Nineham, D. E. 1.801, 2.994, 2.995,
 2.1287, 2.1471, 3.1828
 Nitzan, B. 2.1236, 2.1249
 Nixon, R. 1.292
 Nodet, É. 1.413, 1.487, 1.502, 2.1500,
 2.1535, 2.1540, 3.2169, 4.3231, 4.3234
 Noiriel, G. 1.479
 Nöldeke, T. 2.1357
 Nolland, J. 2.1230, 3.1902, 3.1905,
 3.1907, 3.1908, 3.1909, 3.1911, 3.1912,

- 3.1914, 3.1915, 3.1916, 3.1917, 3.1920,
 3.1923, 3.1925, 3.1927, 3.1928, 3.2374,
 3.2521, 3.2697, 3.2698, 3.2700, 3.2701,
 4.2925, 4.3127, 4.3190, 4.3300, 4.3309,
 4.3311, 4.3332, 4.3334
 Noller, A. 1.510
 Norden, E. 2.1799
 Nordhofen, J. 4.2973
 Nordsieck, R. 3.2751, 3.2753, 3.2758,
 3.2762, 4.3034, 4.3037, 4.3038, 4.3039,
 4.3046
 Norelli, E. 1.487, 2.1787, 2.1815,
 2.1816, 3.2091, 3.2122
 Norris, F. W. 1.621, 2.883
 North, J. L. 2.1713
 North, W. S. 2.1595
 Notley, R. S. 1.94, 1.118, 2.874, 2.1283,
 2.1447
 Novakovic, L. 1.640, 2.1284
 Novick, P. 2.929
 Noy, D. 2.1726, 4.3114
 Nun, M. 4.2990, 4.3003
 Nussbaum, M. C. 4.3143
 Nützel, J. M. 3.1910
 Nygren, A. 1.583

 O'Brien, J. M. 2.1356
 O'Brien, P. T. 3.2249
 O'Collins, G. 2.860, 2.914, 2.1068
 O'Donnell, M. B. 1.362, 1.728, 1.729,
 1.739
 O'Grady, J. F. 1.510
 O'Mahony, K. 1.529
 O'Neill, E. N. 4.3255
 O'Neill, J. C. 2.1284, 4.2957, 4.2958,
 4.2959, 4.2960, 4.3308, 4.3314
 O'Sullivan, O. A. 1.732
 O'Toole, R. F. 3.2341
 Oakman, D. E. 1.124, 1.244, 1.487,
 1.746, 1.759, 1.767, 3.2294, 3.2301
 Obler, L. K. 3.2456
 Oduyoye, A. 2.972, 2.976
 Oegema, G. S. 1.352, 2.1045, 2.1284,
 2.1453
 Oepke, A. 3.2531
 Oesterley, W. O. E. 2.1446, 3.2552
 Ogden, C. K. 4.3352
 Ogden, S. M. 2.867, 2.1386
 Ogg, G. 3.2322, 3.2330, 3.2337, 3.2338,
 3.2344, 3.2352, 3.2353, 3.2371
 Öhler, M. 2.1065, 2.1290, 2.1295,
 2.1777-1779
 Økland, J. 3.2786, 3.2787
 Okpewho, I. 1.194
 Okrent, D. 2.1660
 Okure, T. 2.955, 2.956, 2.958, 2.961,
 2.963, 2.964, 2.966
 Olbricht, T. H. 1.743, 2.1131, 2.1436
 Olender, M. 1.522
 Olick, J. K. 1.815, 1.817, 1.819, 2.1471
 Olmstead, A. T. 3.2351, 3.2850
 Olson, D. C. 2.1594, 2.1556, 2.1595
 Olson, K. A. 3.2521
 Olson, R. T. 2.1061
 Olsthorpe, M. F. 4.3246, 4.3258,
 4.3264, 4.3265
 Olyan, S. M. 3.2716
 Olympiou, N. 3.2107
 Omerzu, H. 3.2086
 Ong, W. J. 1.426, 1.791, 3.1835, 3.1837
 Onians, J. 3.2231
 Oppenheimer, A. 4.3231
 Orchard, B. 3.1825
 Orlov, A. A. 2.1558
 Orr, J. 1.844
 Orth, B. 1.442
 Ortisti, S. 4.2999
 Osborne, G. R. 1.676, 1.682, 2.893,
 2.1071, 2.1449
 Osiek, C. 3.2433
 Osler, E. J. 4.3245
 Østenstad, G. 3.2637
 Oster, R. E. 4.3107, 4.3115, 4.3117,
 4.3120
 Ostriker, A. S. 1.533
 Ottey, J. L. 3.2375
 Otto, E. 3.2641
 Otto, R. 1.585, 3.2527, 3.2545
 Oulton, J. E. L. 1.492, 3.1972
 Overman, J. A. 1.635, 2.1614, 2.1639,
 3.1897

 Padgett, A. G. 2.914, 2.1072
 Paesler, K. 3.2635, 3.2644, 3.2645,
 3.2648, 3.2649, 3.2650, 3.2651, 3.2652,
 3.2653, 3.2654, 3.2662, 3.2663, 3.2664,
 3.2666, 3.2667, 3.2668, 3.2669, 3.2672,
 3.2673
 Paffenroth, K. 3.1905, 3.2324
 Page, S. T. 1.693, 3.2403
 Pagels, E. 2.944, 2.1010, 3.1984,
 3.2063, 3.2102
 Paget, J. C. 2.959, 2.1397
 Paige, T. 1.648
 Painter, J. 3.2006, 3.2014
 Palme, B. 4.3420, 4.3428
 Palmer, B. 2.1228
 Pals, D. L. 2.861

- Panagiotou, S. 4.3064
 Panimolle, S. A. 3.2121
 Panizza, L. A. 4.3245
 Pannenberg, W. 1.280, 1.281, 1.334,
 2.1424
 Park, S. A. L. 2.980
 Parker, D. C. 3.1833, 3.1836, 3.2097
 Parker, P. 1.130
 Parker, R. A. 3.2316, 3.2330, 3.2331,
 3.2353
 Parker, T. M. 2.1609
 Parpola, S. 3.2325
 Parry, D. W. 2.1237, 2.1254, 2.1562
 Parsons, P. J. 3.2096
 Pascal, P. 2.1525
 Passamaneck, S. M. 2.1241
 Passmore, K. 2.1378, 2.1383, 2.1394
 Pastor, J. 3.2791
 Patai, R. 2.1325
 Pathrapankal, J. 4.3093, 4.3097,
 4.3102
 Patrich, J. 4.3110
 Patrick, D. 4.3048
 Patsch, H. 1.434
 Patte, D. 1.781, 1.782, 2.956, 2.1406,
 3.2558
 Patterson, S. J. 1.37, 1.178, 1.254,
 1.261, 1.455, 1.558, 3.1945, 3.1946,
 3.1978, 3.1979, 3.1981, 3.2059, 3.2060,
 3.2061, 3.2062, 3.2063, 3.2064, 3.2067,
 3.2649, 3.2887, 3.2888, 4.3036
 Pauck, W. 2.1411, 3.2806
 Paul, A. 2.1517
 Paul, S. M. 2.1284, 2.1285
 Paul, W. 2.864
 Paus, A. 2.1260
 Payne, P. B. 2.1206, 4.3342
 Peabody, D. B. 1.435, 1.644, 2.1316,
 2.1328, 2.1331, 2.1332, 2.1335, 2.1340,
 2.1342, 3.1825
 Pearson, B. A. 2.1617, 3.2199
 Pearson, B. W. R. 2.1186, 2.1213,
 3.2323, 4.3417, 4.3420, 4.3424, 4.3426,
 4.3428, 4.3429
 Pearson, L. 1.293
 Peat, F. D. 3.2213
 Pedersen, J. 3.2626
 Peláez, J. 1.723
 Pelikan, J. 1.127, 1.698, 2.855, 2.941,
 2.1023, 4.3164
 Pelling, C. 2.1681
 Penner, T. 2.1474, 2.1490
 Penney, D. L. 3.2530
 Pepicello, W. J. 4.3350, 4.3353
 Perdue, L. G. 1.178, 3.2433
 Perkins, P. 2.1480, 3.1883
 Perlman, I. 1.269
 Perowne, S. 3.2328, 3.2380
 Perrin, N. 1.15, 1.17, 1.102, 1.200,
 1.262, 1.268, 1.305, 1.306, 1.315,
 1.329, 1.337, 1.392, 1.408, 1.435,
 1.533, 1.546, 1.561, 1.666, 1.670,
 1.680, 1.684, 1.698, 1.707, 1.715,
 1.717, 1.847, 2.867, 2.889, 2.1424,
 2.1547, 2.1565, 3.1980, 3.2019, 3.2728,
 3.2734, 4.3046
 Perrot, C. 2.1723, 2.1727, 3.2251,
 4.3137, 4.3373
 Pesce, M. 1.746
 Pesch, R. 1.309, 2.1341, 3.2074, 3.2385,
 3.2405, 3.2416, 3.2519, 3.2526, 3.2533,
 3.2691, 3.2868, 3.2872, 4.3270, 4.3272,
 4.3273, 4.3274, 4.3275, 4.3280, 4.3281,
 4.3282, 4.3283, 4.3285, 4.3330
 Peters, F. E. 4.3121
 Peters, N. 4.3139
 Petersen, D. L. 3.2721, 3.2737
 Petersen, N. R. 1.804, 3.1831, 3.1832
 Petersen, S. 3.2130
 Petersen, W. L. 1.731
 Peterson, D. N. 3.1843
 Peterson, E. 3.1934
 Petracca, V. 4.3294, 4.3295, 4.3298,
 4.3299, 4.3300, 4.3301
 Petrakos, V. V. 4.2992
 Pettoirelli, J.-C. 3.2267
 Petzke, G. 1.320, 4.3126
 Petzold, K.-E. 2.1796
 Pfaff, K. 1.644
 Pfann, S. J. 2.1245
 Phillips, G. A. 1.777
 Philonenko, M. 1.721, 2.1038, 2.1284,
 3.2284
 Phipps, W. E. 1.119, 2.1223
 Pickl, J. 3.2346, 3.2347
 Pilch, J. J. 1.538, 1.745, 1.746, 1.748,
 1.757, 1.763, 1.765, 1.771, 1.773,
 1.774, 2.884, 2.1228, 3.2418, 3.2518
 Pilgrim, W. E. 4.3295, 4.3296, 4.3298,
 4.3300
 Pilhofer, P. 2.1042, 2.1760, 2.1814,
 3.2133, 3.2134
 Piñero, A. 1.723, 4.3377, 4.3379
 Pines, S. 3.2131, 3.2170
 Piper, R. A. 1.265, 1.746, 2.1131,
 2.1765, 3.2523, 4.2927, 4.3261

- Pitre, B. 1.696, 3.2675
 Pixner, B. 1.413, 1.428, 2.1258, 2.1285, 3.2214, 4.2990, 4.3115
 Pliesch, U.-K. 3.1987, 3.1990, 3.2082, 3.2098, 3.2101, 3.2102, 3.2103
 Plöger, O. 1.413, 2.1572, 2.1573
 Plümacher, E. 2.1812, 3.1966
 Pobee, J. S. 1.633, 2.972
 Poffet, J. M. 1.487
 Pohlenz, M. 2.1799, 2.1801
 Poirier, J. C. 3.2719, 3.2724
 Pokorný, P. 1.83, 1.342, 1.348, 1.352, 1.353, 1.355, 1.358, 1.359, 1.695, 1.724, 1.725, 2.1394, 4.3440, 4.3464
 Pola, T. 4.3341
 Polag, A. 3.2629, 4.2933
 Poland, L. M. 1.777
 Polkow, D. 1.12, 1.262, 1.266, 1.310, 1.319, 1.322, 1.331, 1.364, 1.696, 1.707, 1.708
 Pollefeyt, D. 1.139
 Pollitt, J. J. 3.2229
 Pope-Levison, A. 1.527
 Pope-Levison, P. 4.3164
 Popkes, W. 2.1120, 2.1483, 3.1968, 3.1969, 3.1970
 Popkin, R. 2.1423
 Porten, B. 2.1731
 Porter, S. E. 1.133, 1.244, 1.344, 1.362, 1.364, 1.369–371, 1.374, 1.376, 1.377, 1.381–383, 1.385, 1.389, 1.393, 1.395, 1.397, 1.400, 1.417, 1.443, 1.457, 1.495, 1.497, 1.498, 1.661, 1.695, 1.697, 1.699, 1.709, 1.710, 1.712, 1.716, 1.724–731, 1.736–738, 1.743, 2.855, 2.865, 2.874, 2.1131, 2.1138, 2.1186, 2.1208, 2.1213, 2.1252, 2.1344, 2.1361, 2.1362, 2.1397, 2.1430, 2.1436, 2.1442, 2.1443, 2.1480, 2.1563, 2.1751, 2.1762, 3.1935, 3.1991, 3.2081, 3.2087, 3.2094, 3.2095, 3.2209, 3.2316, 3.2321, 3.2323, 3.2337, 3.2455, 3.2457, 3.2460, 3.2461, 3.2463, 3.2464, 3.2466, 3.2468, 3.2469, 3.2734, 4.3181, 4.3263, 4.3413, 4.3415, 4.3428, 4.3429, 4.3430
 Porter, T. 1.761
 Poster, M. 1.516
 Potter, D. S. 1.700, 2.1643
 Potter, H. D. 3.2695
 Pounds, S. B. 3.2533
 Powell, M. A. 1.57, 1.405, 1.534, 1.635, 1.777, 1.778, 1.783, 1.804, 1.807, 2.870, 2.1132, 3.1847, 3.2082, 3.2519
 Powery, E. B. 2.1142, 2.1149, 2.1164, 2.1166
 Prabhu, G. M. S. 3.2368
 Praechter, K. 4.2948
 Pratscher, W. 3.1991
 Pregeant, R. 3.2270
 Preisker, H. 3.2255
 Preiss, T. 3.2341
 Preuschen, E. 3.2123
 Price, J. J. 2.1667
 Price, S. R. F. 1.165
 Priebe, D. A. 2.856
 Priest, J. 3.2273
 Prieur, J.-M. 2.1816
 Prigent, P. 3.2137, 3.2138
 Proctor, W. 3.2325
 Profitlich, U. 2.1386
 Prost, A. 1.476, 1.479–482, 1.484, 1.485, 1.495, 1.496, 1.499, 500
 Prostmeier, F. R. 3.2137, 3.2138
 Prothero, S. R. 2.855
 Pryke, E. J. 3.2108, 4.3130, 4.3131
 Pryor, J. W. 3.2091
 Puech, É. 2.1237, 2.1285, 2.1562, 3.2185, 3.2262, 3.2271, 3.2281, 3.2409, 3.2427, 3.2429, 4.3069, 4.3325, 4.3326
 Pui-Lan, K. 1.523
 Puig I Tàrrrech, A. 2.905, 4.3434, 4.3436
 Purcell, N. 1.743
 Pyta, W. 2.1381
 Qimron, E. 1.417, 2.1519
 Quarles, C. L. 2.1235, 3.2832, 3.2909
 Quesnel, M. 2.1723
 Quesnell, Q. 3.2107, 3.2109
 Quinónez, J. 2.1445
 Quispel, G. 3.2061
 Rabe, S. 2.928
 Rabinowicz, H. 3.2712
 Radcliffe-Brown, A. R. 1.521
 Radl, W. 4.3293, 4.3294, 4.3295, 4.3296, 4.3297, 4.3298, 4.3299, 4.3336
 Radway, J. A. 1.527
 Rahl, W. 3.1921
 Rahmani, L. Y. 2.1118
 Rahner, J. 3.2637
 Rainbow, P. A. 3.2578, 3.2579
 Räisänen, H. 3.2726, 4.2940
 Rajak, T. 2.1241, 2.1462, 2.1668
 Ramsay, W. M. 3.2322, 3.2330, 3.2331, 4.3417, 4.3420
 Ranke, L. 1.34

- Rapinchuk, M. 3.2247
 Rappaport, U. 2.1732, 4.3239
 Rasmussen, L. L. 4.3049
 Ratner, 4.3231
 Rau, E. 1.12, 2.1400, 3.1987, 3.2106,
 3.2109, 3.2131
 Rawlinson, A. E. J. 4.3328
 Rawson, B. 3.2433
 Raynor, D. H. 4.3064
 Rebell, W. 3.2087
 Redlich, E. B. 1.651
 Redmond, S. A. 2.1604
 Redpath, H. A. 3.2820, 4.3203
 Reed, A. Y. 2.1183
 Reed, J. L. 1.145, 1.170, 1.464, 1.486,
 1.487, 1.727, 1.736, 2.1213, 2.1259,
 2.1640, 3.2247, 3.2295, 3.2296, 3.2301,
 3.2303, 3.2306, 3.2309, 3.2314, 3.2646,
 3.2761, 3.2764, 3.2792, 4.3121, 4.3124,
 4.3266
 Reed, J. T. 2.1449
 Reed, S. A. 2.1245
 Rees, B. R. 3.2095
 Regazzi, M. B. 2.1319, 2.1320
 Regev, E. 3.2710, 3.2726
 Regner, F. 3.1937
 Rehkopf, F. 2.1263, 3.2727
 Reich, R. 3.2724
 Reicke, B. 3.2321, 3.2352, 4.3342
 Reid, B. E. 3.1913
 Reif, S. C. 3.2686
 Reifenberg, A. 3.2319
 Reiling, J. 3.2536, 3.2714
 Reilly, F. E. 1.755, 1.756
 Reim, G. 4.3317
 Reimar, H. S. 1.32, 1.57, 1.92, 1.241,
 1.297, 1.304, 1.697, 1.715, 1.844,
 2.862, 2.864, 2.1025, 2.1056, 2.1169,
 2.1748, 3.1952, 3.2543, 4.3373
 Reimer, A. M. 4.3181
 Reinach, T. 4.3108
 Reinbold, W. 3.2197, 3.2384
 Reinhard, W. 3.2830
 Reinhartz, A. 2.1186, 4.2949
 Reinmuth, E. 2.1395, 2.1406, 3.1948,
 3.1950
 Reiser, M. 1.83, 1.505, 2.907, 2.1219,
 2.1762, 2.1765, 2.1768, 2.1771, 2.1772,
 2.1778, 3.1872, 3.2584, 4.3274, 4.3277,
 4.3278, 4.3279, 4.3294, 4.3296, 4.3298,
 4.3301
 Reitz, C. 2.1787
 Reitzenstein, R. 2.1545, 3.2525, 4.2936
 Remus, H. 1.621, 2.883, 4.3057, 4.3180
 Renan, E. 2.864
 Rendtorf, R. 1.133
 Rengstorf, K. H. 3.2807, 4.3296, 4.3297
 Rensberger, D. 3.2204
 Resch, A. 3.1974, 3.1975, 3.2044,
 3.2049, 3.2126, 3.2127, 3.2132, 3.2133,
 3.2134, 3.2135, 3.2136, 3.2137, 3.2138,
 3.2139, 3.2140, 3.2141, 3.2142, 3.2146,
 4.3448
 Rese, M. 1.358
 Resenhöfft, W. 3.1911
 Reumann, J. 1.35, 1.45, 1.93, 1.303,
 1.698, 2.867, 2.1022, 2.1024, 2.1089,
 2.1174, 2.1443, 2.1748, 2.1753, 2.1784,
 3.1883
 Rhoads, D. M. 1.107, 1.620, 1.783,
 1.785, 1.786, 2.882, 2.1433, 3.1832,
 4.2917, 4.3045
 Richard, P. 2.978
 Richards, I. A. 4.3352
 Richards, K. H. 1.12, 1.131, 1.262
 Richardson, A. 2.884, 2.1420, 2.1461,
 3.2548
 Richardson, C. C. 2.858, 2.1458,
 3.2108
 Richardson, P. 1.168, 2.1196, 2.1202,
 2.1203, 2.1654, 3.2316, 3.2413, 3.2415,
 3.2645, 3.2656, 4.3110
 Riché, P. 1.480
 Riches, J. 3.2728, 3.2758, 3.2783,
 3.2794, 3.2795
 Riches, J. H. 1.38, 1.244, 1.628, 1.637,
 1.850
 Riches, J. K. 2.874, 2.884
 Richez, J. C. 1.506
 Ricker, S. P. 2.1284
 Ricks, S. D. 4.3073
 Ricoeur, P. 1.355, 1.359, 1.478, 1.482,
 1.484, 1.485, 1.741, 1.837, 2.936,
 2.937, 2.1389, 2.1399, 4.3101
 Ridderbos, H. N. 3.2542
 Riedweg, C. 4.3063
 Riemer, U. 4.3188
 Riesenfeld, H. 1.36, 1.48, 1.410, 1.492,
 1.670, 1.679, 2.1491, 4.3342
 Riesenfeld, R. 3.2699
 Riesner, R. 1.78, 1.93, 1.117, 1.309,
 1.324, 1.342, 1.344, 1.351, 1.364,
 1.406, 1.408–411, 1.413, 1.425, 1.428–
 432, 1.437, 1.440–442, 1.444, 1.446,
 1.679, 1.696, 2.1120, 2.1201, 2.1224,
 2.1281, 2.1282, 2.1474, 2.1480, 3.1905,
 3.1940, 3.1962, 3.2043, 3.2049, 3.2051,
 3.2057, 3.2152, 3.2189, 3.2190, 3.2215,

- 3.2620, 3.2641, 3.2699, 4.3108, 4.3109,
 4.3113, 4.3305, 4.3312, 4.3318, 4.3321,
 4.3322, 4.3324, 4.3326, 4.3330, 4.3343,
 4.3450
 Rietz, H. W. M. 2.1285
 Rigaux, B. 3.2505
 Riggans, W. 2.1058
 Riha, E. 4.2999, 4.3020
 Riley, D. 1.510
 Riley, G. J. 4.3035, 4.3344
 Riley, H. 1.435
 Rilla, P. 2.1056
 Ringe, S. H. 1.785, 1.804
 Ringgren, H. 3.2712
 Rist, J. M. 3.2193
 Rist, M. 2.1570, 2.1574
 Ristow, H. 1.187, 1.421, 1.493, 1.579,
 2.1079
 Ritmeyer, L. 3.2640
 Ritschl, A. 2.996
 Ritschl, D. 1.553
 Ritschl, O. 1.306
 Ritt, H. 3.1964
 Rives, J. B. 2.1677, 2.1683
 Rivkin, E. 2.1673, 3.2620
 Robbins, J. 2.1471
 Robbins, V. K. 1.327, 2.1681, 3.1832,
 3.2189
 Roberts, A. 1.371
 Roberts, C. H. 1.433, 2.1383, 3.2094
 Roberts, J. T. 1.512
 Robertson, E. 4.3050
 Robinson, J. M. 1.3, 1.33, 1.35, 1.201,
 1.254, 1.296, 1.302, 1.303, 1.334,
 1.343, 1.447, 1.454, 1.455, 1.458,
 1.465, 1.489, 1.642, 1.673, 1.676,
 2.861, 2.867, 2.868, 2.954, 2.1086,
 2.1090, 2.1016, 2.1174, 2.1251, 2.1268,
 2.1273, 2.1414, 3.1861, 3.1862, 3.1863,
 3.1864, 3.1865, 3.1872, 3.1942, 3.1945,
 3.1956, 3.1991, 3.2000, 3.2102, 3.2117,
 3.2192, 3.2198, 3.2546, 3.2695, 4.2919,
 4.2979, 4.2980, 4.3129, 4.3217, 4.3259,
 4.3261, 4.3263, 4.3448
 Rochais, G. 1.477, 1.499
 Rodríguez Carmona, A. 3.2263, 3.2264
 Roessli, J.-M. 3.2082
 Rogers, C. L. 2.1656, 2.1657
 Rogerson, J. W. 2.1594
 Roh, T. 4.2962, 4.2964
 Rohrbaugh, R. L. 1.745, 1.746, 1.748,
 1.757, 1.760, 1.765, 1.774, 3.1844,
 3.2303
 Roitman, A. 3.2217
 Rolfe, J. C. 3.2153
 Roll, S. K. 3.2123
 Rolland, P. 1.436, 4.3307, 4.3333,
 4.3344
 Roller, D. W. 2.1460, 2.1461
 Rollins, W. G. 2.909
 Roloff, J. 1.429, 3.2600, 3.2601, 4.3182,
 4.3192, 4.3308, 4.3321
 Römfeld, K. F. D. 1.358, 2.884
 Romm, J. S. 2.1642
 Ronald, R. 1.291
 Ronconi, A. 2.1811
 Ropes, J. H. 3.2133, 3.2134, 3.2135,
 3.2137, 3.2138, 3.2140, 3.2141, 3.2142
 Rordorf, W. 1.176, 3.2127, 3.2600,
 3.2617, 4.3154
 Rorty, R. 2.921, 2.1383
 Rosen, D. 2.1010
 Rosén, H. B. 1.724
 Rosen, K. 4.3415, 4.3428, 4.3432
 Rosenbach, M. 4.3245
 Rosenthal-Heginbottom, R. 4.2997
 Rosenzweig, R. 1.816, 1.837
 Roskovec, J. 1.359, 2.1394
 Rostovtzeff, M. I. 3.2804
 Roth, C. 2.1305, 3.2814
 Roth, S. J. 1.647, 2.883
 Rothschild, C. K. 2.1490
 Rottloff, A. 4.2978, 4.2989, 4.2990,
 4.2998, 4.2999, 4.3004
 Rouger, D. 3.2122
 Roukema, R. 3.2120, 3.2129, 3.2143
 Rouleau, D. 3.2101
 Rousseau, J. J. 1.464, 3.2531, 3.2832,
 4.3041, 4.3200
 Routledge, R. 3.2342
 Rowe, K. 3.1997
 Rowland, C. 2.1576, 2.1584,
 2.1588–1592, 2.1599, 2.1605, 3.2877,
 3.2882, 3.2885, 3.2891, 3.2892, 3.2900
 Rowley, H. H. 2.1570
 Rubenstein, R. L. 2.1184
 Rubin, D. C. 1.426, 1.823–826,
 1.828–831, 1.834, 1.838
 Rubinkiewicz, R. 2.1594
 Rubio, F. B. 2.1443
 Ruck, C. A. P. 1.151
 Ruckstuhl, E. 1.737, 3.2336, 3.2344,
 3.2351, 4.3331
 Rudich, V. 2.1682
 Rudolph, K. 2.1760, 3.2525
 Ruether, R. R. 2.1615

- Rüger, P. 1.417
 Runesson, A. 4.3105, 4.3110, 4.3111, 4.3112
 Rüpke, J. 2.1791
 Ruppert, L. 1.314
 Rösen, J. 1.40, 1.741, 2.916, 2.1400
 Russell, D. S. 2.1573–1575
 Ruster, T. 1.442
 Rutgers, L.V. 1.133, 2.1118
 Ruwet, J. 3.2129, 3.2130, 3.2141, 3.2142
 Ruzer, S. 2.1267
 Sacchi, P. 1.413
 Sacks, A. J. 3.2325
 Sade, M. 2.948
 Sáenz-Badillos, A. 3.2458
 Safrai, S. 1.118, 2.1688, 3.2635, 3.2735
 Safrai, Z. 3.2298, 3.2308
 Sahi, J. 2.1010
 Sahlin, J. 3.1908
 Sahm, P. R. 2.1396
 Saivites, T. 1.277
 Saldarini, A. J. 1.635, 2.1122, 2.1455, 2.1619, 2.1673, 3.1897, 3.2449, 3.2850
 Saler, B. 2.1229
 Saller, R. P. 2.1684
 Salles, C. 2.1642, 2.1643
 Sallmann, K. 2.1790
 Salvador, J. 2.1057, 2.1444
 Samartha, J. S. 4.3103
 Sand, A. 4.3279, 4.3301
 Sanday, W. 1.344, 1.371
 Sanders, E. P. 1.37–39, 1.48, 1.54, 1.94, 1.123, 1.126, 1.201, 1.202, 1.244, 1.248, 1.253, 1.257, 1.263, 1.264, 1.266, 1.267, 1.269, 1.274, 1.275, 1.282, 1.283, 1.287, 1.297, 1.310, 1.317, 1.321, 1.329, 1.350, 1.351, 1.354, 1.434, 1.491, 1.500–502, 1.504–506, 1.545, 1.562, 1.667, 1.670, 1.679, 1.689, 1.695, 1.848, 2.869, 2.878, 2.879, 2.906, 2.908, 2.912, 2.913, 2.915, 2.919, 2.920, 2.924, 2.925, 2.937, 2.942, 2.943, 2.946, 2.947, 2.1010, 2.1045, 2.1060, 2.1065, 2.1066, 2.1140, 2.1142, 2.1186, 2.1188, 2.1190, 2.1196, 2.1199, 2.1208, 2.1226, 2.1304, 2.1305, 2.1309, 2.1358, 2.1359, 2.1396, 2.1442, 2.1452, 2.1454, 2.1456, 2.1469, 2.1565, 2.1585, 2.1623, 2.1625, 2.1627, 2.1653, 2.1658, 2.1718, 2.1737, 3.1847, 3.1871, 3.1997, 3.2000, 3.2029, 3.2036, 3.2208, 3.2219, 3.2275, 3.2276, 3.2293, 3.2335, 3.2398, 3.2400, 3.2473, 3.2497, 3.2499, 3.2505, 3.2506, 3.2507, 3.2510, 3.2518, 3.2520, 3.2523, 3.2534, 3.2537, 3.2537, 3.2539, 3.2541, 3.2543, 3.2545, 3.2580, 3.2602, 3.2605, 3.2606, 3.2609, 3.2610, 3.2611, 3.2612, 3.2619, 3.2635, 3.2645, 3.2646, 3.2654, 3.2660, 3.2661, 3.2666, 3.2667, 3.2673, 3.2675, 3.2683, 3.2699, 3.2709, 3.2712, 3.2719, 3.2724, 3.2728, 3.2729, 3.2730, 3.2731, 3.2735, 3.2739, 3.2750, 3.2755, 3.2766, 3.2790, 3.2806, 3.2813, 3.2816, 3.2817, 3.2818, 3.2819, 3.2820, 3.2822, 3.2823, 3.2824, 3.2828, 3.2835, 3.2836, 3.2837, 3.2839, 3.2840, 3.2841, 3.2842, 3.2844, 3.2847, 3.2851, 3.2865, 3.2866, 3.2867, 3.2879, 3.2880, 3.2887, 3.2889, 3.2890, 3.2891, 3.2892, 3.2893, 3.2894, 3.2896, 3.2897, 3.2899, 3.2900, 3.2902, 4.3075, 4.3077, 4.3107, 4.3108, 4.3109, 4.3110, 4.3119, 4.3121, 4.3122, 4.3186, 4.3446, 4.3447
 Sanders, J. A. 2.1212, 2.1318, 4.3069
 Sanders, J. T. 1.179, 1.339
 Sandmel, S. 2.1057, 2.1447
 Sandy, D. B. 4.3324
 Sanford, A. J. 1.750
 Sängler, D. 1.59, 4.3137, 4.3273
 Sarasin, P. 2.1378, 2.1384, 2.1387
 Sarna, N. M. 3.2721
 Sarna, N. S. 1.133
 Sass, G. 1.348
 Sato, M. 4.2921, 4.2926, 4.3442
 Sauer, J. 1.15, 1.847, 3.1942, 4.3446
 Saunders, T. B. 2.864
 Saussure, F. 1.781
 Savage, C. E. 4.2974, 4.2987, 4.2989, 4.2993, 4.2995, 4.2996, 4.2997, 4.2998, 4.2999, 4.3004
 Savage, K. 1.816
 Sawicki, M. 2.1640, 3.2812, 3.2832
 Scalon, M. J. 2.1396
 Scarborough, J. 2.1228
 Scarola, J. V. 3.2326
 Schaberg, J. 1.528, 1.644, 2.1235, 3.2122, 3.2832
 Schadewaldt, W. 2.1791
 Schaefer, H. H. 2.1545
 Schaeffler, R. 1.583
 Schäfer, K. T. 4.3331
 Schäfer, P. 2.1602, 3.2172, 4.3187, 4.3188

- Schäferdiek, K. 2.1816
 Schalit, A. 3.2328, 3.2380, 3.2804,
 4.3417, 4.3419, 4.3420, 4.3421, 4.3423,
 4.3427
 Schaller, B. 1.354, 2.1267, 3.2601,
 3.2611, 4.3076, 4.3149, 4.3150
 Schama, S. 2.1387
 Scharbert, J. 4.3186, 4.3187
 Schechter, S. 2.1519, 3.2222
 Scheff, T. J. 1.754
 Scheid, J. 3.2189
 Scheidweiler, F. 2.1816
 Schelbert, G. 1.720
 Schell, J. 1.177
 Schendinger, R. F. 3.2683
 Schenk, W. 4.2912, 4.3311
 Schenke, H.-M. 2.1815, 3.1980, 3.1988,
 3.2098, 3.2102
 Schenke, L. 1.496, 2.1762, 2.1769,
 2.1782, 2.1783, 3.1846
 Schenkel, D. 2.988, 2.1749
 Scherpe, K. R. 2.1386
 Schiele, F. M. 1.651
 Schiffman, L. H. 2.1282, 2.1283,
 2.1285, 3.2605, 3.2736, 4.3138
 Schildgen, B. D. 3.1824
 Schillebeeckx, E. 1.293, 1.296, 1.299,
 1.309, 1.322, 1.334, 1.355, 1.670,
 1.696, 1.707, 1.734
 Schilson, A. 1.550
 Schlarb, E. 1.457, 2.873, 2.1765,
 3.1989, 3.1991
 Schlatter, A. 1.93, 2.1446, 3.2519,
 3.2524, 3.2527, 3.2546, 3.2963, 4.3264,
 4.3333
 Schlatterer, J. 1.353
 Schleiermacher, F. D. E. 1.184, 2.992,
 2.993, 3.1952, 3.1952, 3.1999, 3.2862
 Schlichting, G. 1.621
 Schlosser, J. 1.8, 1.347, 1.477, 1.503,
 1.504, 1.603, 1.607, 2.1032, 2.1049,
 3.2734, 3.2737
 Schmeller, T. 1.424
 Schmelz, G. 1.731
 Schmid, D. 1.434
 Schmid, J. 4.3278, 4.3293, 4.3294,
 4.3299
 Schmidt, A. 1.505, 1.518, 1.528, 2.890,
 2.904, 2.912, 2.1061, 2.1063–1065,
 2.1076, 2.1107, 2.1282, 2.1429
 Schmidt, C. 3.2098
 Schmidt, F. 3.2777
 Schmidt, K. L. 1.652, 1.698, 1.699,
 2.1468, 3.1828, 3.1863, 3.2196
 Schmidt, T. E. 1.633, 2.1125, 2.1295
 Schmidt, W. H. 4.3148
 Schmiedel, P. W. 1.562, 1.700, 1.706,
 1.734
 Schmithals, W. 1.28, 1.81, 1.406,
 1.436, 1.477, 1.490, 3.1939, 3.2620,
 3.2663, 3.2789, 4.2911, 4.2913, 4.2961,
 4.3281, 4.3282, 4.3285, 4.3296
 Schmitt, A. 1.490
 Schmitt, F. S. 2.859
 Schmitz, P. C. 4.3426
 Schnabel, E. J. 1.422, 2.1201
 Schnabel, N. C. 1.428
 Schnackenburg, R. 1.36, 1.251, 1.427,
 3.2336, 3.2338, 4.3125
 Schneemelcher, W. 2.1570, 2.1752,
 2.1787, 2.1816, 3.1986, 3.1991, 3.2004,
 3.2082, 3.2101, 4.3025
 Schneider, C. 1.408, 2.1106
 Schneider, G. 2.1201, 3.1908, 3.2392,
 4.3292, 4.3294, 4.3300
 Schneider, M. 4.2915
 Schneider-Lengyel, I. 4.2989
 Schnelle, U. 1.62, 1.433, 1.437, 1.718,
 1.741, 3.1934, 3.1940, 3.1948, 3.1949,
 3.1950, 3.1953, 3.1955, 3.1957, 3.1964,
 3.1967, 3.1969, 3.1971, 4.2912, 4.2914,
 4.2919, 4.2944, 4.2956, 4.2979
 Schniewind, J. 4.3328, 4.3330
 Schoenfeld, S. 1.194
 Schoeps, H. J. 2.1296
 Scholem, G. 1.147
 Scholtissek, K. 1.421, 1.493, 3.1949,
 3.1950
 Schonfield, H. J. 2.1057, 3.2352
 Schottroff, L. 1.465, 3.2313, 3.2314,
 4.3056, 4.3294, 4.3296
 Schrage, W. 1.250, 3.1946, 3.1979,
 3.2061, 3.2506, 4.3117, 4.3186, 4.3460
 Schramm, T. 1.357, 1.437, 4.3307,
 4.3308, 4.3309, 4.3334
 Schreckenber, H. 2.1647, 2.1660
 Schreiter, R. 1.527, 4.3164
 Schremer, A. 2.1266, 2.1285
 Schroder, J. F. 4.2977, 4.3001, 4.3003,
 4.3004, 4.3021
 Schröter, J. 1.4, 1.60, 1.68, 1.70, 1.259,
 1.345, 1.353, 1.355, 1.358, 1.405,
 1.435, 1.457, 1.488, 1.491, 1.493,
 1.716, 1.718, 1.740, 1.741, 1.810,
 1.813, 1.814, 1.820, 1.821, 1.837,
 1.839, 2.874, 2.890, 2.935, 2.1022,
 2.1387, 2.1394, 2.1395, 2.1400, 2.1401,
 2.1471, 2.1755, 2.1777, 2.1812, 3.1856,

- 3.1863, 3.1933, 3.1935, 3.1977, 3.1978,
 3.1980, 3.1982, 3.1983, 3.1984, 3.1996,
 3.2095, 3.2116, 3.2183, 3.2210, 4.2911,
 4.2913, 4.2914, 4.2915, 4.2918, 4.2919,
 4.2935, 4.2945
 Schüling, J. 4.2912, 4.2913, 4.2934,
 4.2939, 4.2941
 Schuller, E. 2.1246, 2.1281
 Schulthess, F. 2.1357, 3.2159
 Schulz, H. J. 1.436
 Schulz, S. 4.3292, 4.3293, 4.3293,
 4.3301
 Schuman, H. 1.840
 Schunck, K.-D. 2.1798
 Schürer, E. 1.428, 2.868, 2.1290,
 2.1458, 2.1460, 2.1495, 2.1653, 2.1663,
 2.1687, 2.1734, 2.1797, 2.1799, 2.1802,
 2.1804, 2.1805, 2.1807, 2.1809, 3.2315,
 3.2316, 3.2317, 3.2331, 3.2334, 3.2371,
 3.2379, 3.2699, 3.2804, 3.2805, 4.3123,
 4.3124, 4.3145, 4.3226, 4.3229, 4.3242,
 4.3413, 4.3414, 4.3417, 4.3419, 4.3426,
 4.3427, 4.3430, 4.3432
 Schürmann, H. 1.187, 1.201, 1.344,
 1.349, 1.353, 1.424, 1.458, 1.493,
 1.724, 2.1476, 2.1477, 3.1908, 3.2192,
 4.2940, 4.3129, 4.3211, 4.3292, 4.3294,
 4.3295, 4.3296, 4.3298, 4.3299, 4.3300,
 4.3452
 Schüssler Fiorenza, E. 1.37, 1.282,
 1.286, 1.511, 1.604, 1.607, 1.777,
 1.785, 2.860, 2.998–1000, 2.1002,
 2.1149, 2.1403, 2.1406, 3.1832, 3.2813
 Schwank, B. 1.444
 Schwankl, O. 1.504
 Schwartz, B. 1.817, 1.818, 1.826, 1.829,
 1.835, 1.837
 Schwartz, D. R. 2.1283, 2.1284,
 2.1658, 2.1661, 3.2316
 Schwartz, J. 2.1781
 Schwartz, R.M. 1.777
 Schwarz, G. 1.719, 2.1354, 2.1355,
 2.1374
 Schweitzer, A. 1.xv, 1.19, 1.31, 1.33,
 1.92, 1.93, 1.111, 1.279, 1.291, 1.297,
 1.303, 1.333, 1.363, 1.364, 1.447,
 1.477, 1.517, 1.665, 1.682, 1.695,
 1.699, 1.741, 1.845, 2.860, 2.861,
 2.863–865, 2.879, 2.889, 2.912, 2.954,
 2.960, 2.988, 2.992, 2.994–996,
 2.1000, 2.1004, 2.1012, 2.1015, 2.1017,
 2.1021, 2.1022, 2.1025, 2.1026, 2.1038,
 2.1042, 2.1056, 2.1058, 2.1079, 2.1170,
 2.1171, 2.1569, 2.1748, 2.1749, 3.1827,
 3.1831, 3.1851, 3.1858, 3.1952, 3.1999,
 3.2002, 3.2469, 3.2544, 3.2835, 3.2887,
 3.2891, 3.2892, 3.2896, 3.2901, 3.2903,
 3.2904
 Schweizer, E. 1.313, 1.355, 1.441,
 2.867, 3.2492, 3.2615, 3.2626, 4.2950,
 4.3274, 4.3277, 4.3279, 4.3280, 4.3281,
 4.3288, 4.3294, 4.3298
 Schwemer, A. M. 1.50, 1.431, 2.1026,
 2.1201, 2.1251, 2.1283, 2.1285, 2.1606,
 3.1939, 3.2641, 3.2651, 3.2652, 3.2662,
 3.2665, 3.2671, 3.2893, 3.2896, 4.3328,
 4.3341, 4.3439
 Schwienhorst-Schönberger, L. 1.427,
 3.2717
 Schwier, H. 4.3228
 Scobie, A. 3.1835
 Scobie, C. H. H. 2.1750, 4.3327
 Scott, B. B. 1.178, 1.245, 1.295, 1.502,
 2.1112, 2.1122, 3.2517, 3.2549, 3.2550,
 3.2554, 3.2558, 3.2889, 4.3024, 4.3025,
 4.3031, 4.3040, 4.3043
 Scott, J. 1.840
 Scott, J. C. 1.164, 1.222
 Scott, J. M. 1.133, 1.500, 1.625, 2.881,
 2.882
 Scott, J. W. 2.1378
 Scott, R. 3.2322, 4.3247
 Scroggs, R. 1.113
 Scurlock, J. A. 4.3187, 4.3188
 Searle, J. R. 2.1117
 Seccombe, D. P. 3.2522, 4.3295
 Seeley, D. 2.1107
 Segal, A. F. 2.1208, 3.2409, 3.2411,
 3.2417, 3.2418, 3.2424, 3.2425, 3.2426,
 3.2427, 3.2428, 3.2468, 3.2534, 3.2682,
 4.3062, 4.3180, 4.3181, 4.3188, 4.3195
 Segal, J. B. 3.2345
 Segal, M. H. 3.2468
 Segbroeck, F. 2.1769
 Segovia, F. F. 1.513, 1.524, 4.3087
 Segundo, J. L. 2.997, 2.1403
 Seifrid, M. A. 3.2249
 Sekeles, E. 3.2390
 Seland, T. 1.746, 1.764
 Selby-Bigge, L. A. 2.1423
 Seliger, H. W. 3.2456
 Sellin, G. 3.2701, 4.2935, 4.3448
 Selwyn, E. G. 1.431
 Semler, J. S. 2.1025, 2.1445
 Senior, D. 1.659, 3.1879, 3.1885,
 3.1886, 3.1887, 3.1888, 3.1891, 3.1897
 Setzer, C. J. 2.1200, 3.2168
 Sevenich-Bax, E. 4.2917

- Sevenster, J. N. 1.724
 Sevrin, J.-M. 1.251, 3.2102, 3.2104,
 3.2105
 Seybold, K. 3.2626
 Seymour, J. 3.2327
 Seymour, M. W. 3.2327
 Shaked, S. 2.874, 2.1038, 3.078
 Shanks, H. 3.2640
 Sharpe, E. J. 2.1564
 Sheets, D. D. 4.2936
 Shellard, B. 3.1957
 Shelley, P. B. 1.3
 Shephard, M. H. 3.1968
 Sheppard, G. T. 1.743
 Sherk, R. K. 3.2322
 Sherwin-White, A. N. 2.1613, 3.2151,
 3.2321
 Shiloh, Y. 4.3108
 Shils, E. 2.1077, 2.1466
 Shin, H. W. 1.363, 1.386, 1.728, 1.729,
 3.2209
 Shiner, W. T. 1.624, 1.785, 1.791,
 2.1437, 3.1835, 3.2197
 Shirock, R. 3.2531
 Shuler, P. L. 1.435
 Shutt, R. J. H. 2.1447
 Sider, J. W. 2.869
 Sieber, J. H. 3.1983
 Siegert, F. 2.1284, 3.2653
 Sievers, J. 2.1503, 2.1677
 Sigal, P. 2.1227
 Silberman, L. H. 3.2175
 Silberman, N. A. 2.1123, 4.2976,
 4.3268
 Siller, H. P. 1.567
 Silva, M. 1.373, 2.1295
 Sim, D. C. 1.635, 1.637
 Simiand, F. 1.482
 Simon, L. 4.3290
 Simon, M. 2.1609
 Simpson, J. A. 3.2555
 Sinclair, A. T. 1.699
 Sivan, H. 4.3143
 Skarsaune, O. 2.1023
 Skeat, T. C. 1.445, 1.457, 3.1986,
 3.2089
 Skupinska-Løvset, I. 4.2974, 4.2988,
 4.2989, 4.2993
 Slater, T. B. 2.1561
 Slingerland, H. D. 3.2152, 3.2205
 Sloan, R. B. 2.1449
 Slotkin, E. 4.3354, 4.3355
 Sloyan, G. 2.1077, 2.1613
 Small, J. P. 1.412, 2.1485, 2.1678,
 2.1679
 Smalley, S. 1.687
 Smallwood, E. M. 3.2357
 Smid, H. R. 3.2120
 Smit-Sibinga, J. 3.2128
 Smith W. C. 4.3100
 Smith, B. D. 3.2343, 3.2551, 3.2554,
 3.2558, 3.2568, 3.2570, 3.2646
 Smith, D. E. 1.139, 3.2739
 Smith, D. M. 3.1958, 3.1959, 3.1960,
 3.1964, 3.1987, 3.1988, 3.2001, 3.2021,
 3.2029, 3.2035, 3.2106, 3.2107, 3.2108,
 3.2109, 3.2115, 3.2122, 3.2130, 3.2131,
 3.2195, 3.2215, 3.2399, 3.2526
 Smith, D. W. 2.1049
 Smith, G. A. 1.371, 1.394
 Smith, J. Z. 1.245, 1.277, 3.2779,
 4.3081, 4.3180
 Smith, L. P. 2.866
 Smith, M. 1.310, 1.410, 2.1228, 2.1446,
 2.1455, 2.1653, 2.1718, 3.2321, 3.2520,
 3.2523, 3.2534, 3.2536, 3.2710, 3.2864,
 3.2865, 3.2906, 3.2907, 4.3028, 4.3045,
 4.3057, 4.3058, 4.3059, 4.3179, 4.3188,
 4.3349, 4.3428, 4.3433
 Smith, R. L. 3.2721
 Smith, R. S. 4.3246
 Smith, S. H. 3.2618
 Smith-Christopher, D. 2.1601
 Smolar, L. 3.2263
 Smyth, H. W. 2.1739
 Snodgrass, K. R. 2.1153, 3.2549,
 3.2647, 3.2665, 4.3312
 Soards, M. 2.1235
 Soards, M. L. 1.14, 3.2384
 Sobrino, J. 1.527, 2.961, 2.996, 2.997,
 2.1403
 Söding, T. 1.344, 1.733, 2.1285, 3.1935,
 3.1956, 3.1958, 3.2664, 3.2665, 3.2669
 Soetard, M. 2.1105
 Sokal, A. D. 2.1380
 Sokoloff, M. 3.2257, 3.2263
 Sommer, A. D. 3.2284
 Sommerfeld, W. 4.3062
 Son, S.-W. 2.1490
 Sonnabend, H. 2.1793, 2.1795
 Souček, J. B. 1.358, 4.3444
 Southgate, B. C. 2.1378, 2.1383
 Spencer, F. S. 1.774
 Sperber, A. 3.2820
 Sperber, D. 4.3071
 Sperling, S. D. 2.1436

- Spicq, C. 1.415, 2.1626
 Spiegel, G. M. 2.1379
 Spinoza, B. 1.622, 2.1169, 3.2862
 Spolsky, B. 3.2456
 Spong, J. 1.122, 1.796
 Squire, L. R. 1.825
 Stacklies, A. 4.2973
 Stählin, O. 4.3260, 4.3283, 4.3285
 Staley, J. L. 1.788, 4.3158
 Standhartinger, A. 1.458
 Stanford, M. 2.1386
 Stanley, D. M. 4.3450
 Stansell, G. 1.746
 Stanton, G. N. 1.434, 1.445, 1.621,
 1.634–636, 1.642, 2.874, 2.876, 2.883,
 2.885, 2.1188, 2.1192, 2.1205, 2.1231,
 2.1436, 2.1438, 3.1897, 3.2050, 3.2133,
 3.2165, 3.2169, 3.2176, 3.2388, 3.2399,
 3.2518, 3.2534, 3.2536, 3.2541, 4.3180
 Staples, B. D. 1.151
 Stark, R. 1.407
 Starr, J. 2.1484
 Starr, R. J. 2.1642
 Stassen, G. H. 1.637
 Stauder, J. 1.521
 Stauffer, E. 1.35, 1.622, 3.2341, 3.2350,
 3.2352, 3.2355
 Steck, O. H. 1.500
 Stegemann, B. H. 2.1254
 Stegemann, E. W. 1.124, 1.531, 1.535,
 1.746, 3.2293, 3.2299, 3.2301, 3.2302,
 3.2303, 3.2306, 3.2308
 Stegemann, H. 2.1246, 2.1263, 2.1274,
 2.1277, 2.1285, 2.1588, 2.1770, 2.1777,
 2.1779, 4.3073, 4.3295, 4.3296
 Stegemann, W. 1.124, 1.531, 1.535,
 1.536, 1.537, 1.746, 1.757, 1.773,
 2.890, 3.2291, 3.2292, 3.2293, 3.2299,
 3.2301, 3.2302, 3.2303, 3.2306, 3.2308,
 3.2310, 3.2313, 3.2314
 Stein, R. H. 1.310, 1.312, 1.318, 1.321,
 1.364, 1.418, 1.446, 1.676, 1.681,
 1.696, 1.707, 2.1443, 1480, 3.2552,
 4.3330
 Steinhauser, M. G. 4.3311, 4.3334,
 4.3337
 Stemberger, G. 2.1225, 2.1454, 2.1503,
 2.1673, 4.3135
 Stendahl, K. 1.635, 2.1324, 2.1469,
 2.1750, 3.2370
 Stenger, W. 4.3292, 4.3293, 4.3298
 Stenning, J. F. 4.3314
 Stepan, N. L. 1.520
 Stephenson, F. R. 3.2325
 Sterling, G. E. 2.1798
 Stern, D. 2.1336, 2.1337, 3.2550,
 3.2561, 4.3312
 Stern, E. 1.168
 Stern, F. 2.1421
 Stern, M. 2.1688, 2.1731, 3.2318,
 4.3071
 Stern, R. C. 4.3157, 4.3169
 Steudel, A. 2.1246, 4.3116
 Stevenson, G. H. 3.2321, 3.2635
 Stewart, E. 1.501
 Stinton, D. B. 2.972
 Stock, K. 1.426
 Stöckl Ben Ezra, D. 4.3331
 Stolz, F. 4.3076
 Stone, L. 2.1379, 2.1389
 Stone, M. 2.1453, 2.1558, 2.1560,
 2.1576, 2.1586, 2.1593, 2.1657, 2.1799,
 3.2273, 3.2418, 3.2429
 Stork, H. W. 1.50
 Strack, H. 2.1225, 2.1687, 3.2345,
 3.2346, 3.2481, 3.2714, 4.3145, 4.3148,
 4.3149, 4.3282, 4.3283, 4.3286, 4.3310,
 4.3313, 4.3327
 Strahm, D. 1.527
 Strange, J. F. 1.170, 3.2296, 3.2812,
 4.3105, 4.3110, 4.3111, 4.3112, 4.3113,
 4.3124, 4.3225
 Strange, W. A. 3.1926, 3.1928, 3.1966
 Straub, J. 3.1948, 4.2924
 Strauss, D. F. 1.57, 1.92, 1.112, 1.184,
 1.241, 1.488, 1.715, 1.810, 1.844,
 2.862, 2.1169, 2.1749, 2.1754, 3.1999,
 3.2000, 3.2524, 3.2862, 3.2863
 Strauss, J. F. 2.993
 Strauss, L. 1.506
 Strayer, J. R. 2.928
 Strecker, C. 1.746
 Strecker, G. 1.28, 1.431, 2.1255,
 2.1287, 2.1296, 2.1814–1816, 3.1938,
 3.2124, 3.2194, 3.2683, 4.3293, 4.3294
 Streeter, B. H. 1.191, 2.865, 3.1825,
 3.1836, 3.1858, 3.1875, 3.1880
 Strickert, F. 4.2974, 4.2975, 4.2976,
 4.2978, 4.2991
 Strinati, D. 4.3167
 Strobel, A. 1.622, 1.632, 2.883, 2.1192,
 3.2399
 Stroes, H. R. 3.2347
 Stroh, H. 1.93
 Stroker, W. D. 3.1974, 3.1982, 3.2105,
 4.3024, 4.3025, 4.3031, 4.3034

- Strothmann, M. 2.1805
 Stroumsa, G. G. 2.874, 2.1038, 2.1188,
 3.2107, 3.2131, 3.2144, 4.3028
 Strugnell, J. 2.1519
 Stuckenbruck, L. T. 2.1595, 3.2459,
 4.3067
 Stuhlmacher, P. 1.78, 1.82, 1.310,
 1.408, 1.415, 1.438, 2.1042–1044,
 2.1209, 2.1488, 2.1493, 3.1936, 3.1938,
 3.1939, 3.1940, 3.1942, 3.2402, 3.2473,
 3.2641, 3.2665, 3.2669, 3.2672, 4.3093,
 4.3324, 4.3440, 4.3451
 Sturdy, J. 2.1066, 2.1588, 2.1760
 Stutley, M. 4.3062
 Suarez, P. de 4.3035, 4.3036
 Suggs, M. J. 1.642, 2.1049, 4.3052
 Sugirtharajah, R. S. 1.527, 2.972,
 4.3164, 4.3286
 Suleiman, R. 1.788
 Sulzbach, A. 1.722
 Summerer, L. 4.2989
 Sundberg, W. 1.517
 Sung, C.-H. 4.3185
 Sutcliffe, E. F. 3.2336, 4.3188
 Suter, D. W. 2.1552, 2.1553, 2.1585,
 3.2273
 Sutherland, C. H. V. 4.3147
 Sutton, J. 1.511, 1.512
 Svenbro, J. 3.2189
 Sviták, I. 1.336
 Swanson, R. J. 1.729, 2.1318
 Swarat, U. 1.445
 Sweeney, M. A. 2.1593
 Sweet, J. 2.1241
 Swete, H. B. 1.376, 3.2807, 4.3323
 Swidler, L. 2.1077, 4.3102
 Swijtink, Z. 1.761
 Swinburne, R. 2.859, 3.2518, 4.3136
 Syme, R. 3.2322
 Syncellus, G. 3.2149
 Syon, D. 2.1118, 2.1666, 4.3111,
 4.3124, 4.3266
 Syreeni, K. 1.785, 1.786, 2.904
 Sysling, H. 2.1657

 Tabor, J. D. 1.147, 2.1237, 3.2261,
 3.2905
 Taharlev, Y. 3.2241
 Tajfel, H. 1.760
 Takaki, R. T. 1.520
 Talbert, C. H. 1.92, 1.644, 1.697,
 1.781, 1.806, 2.862, 2.1056
 Talmon, S. 2.1436, 3.2687
 Tan, E. S. H. 4.3166
 Tan, K. H. 2.1144, 3.2646, 3.2655,
 3.2658, 3.2673, 3.2698
 Tannehill, R. C. 2.1438, 3.1831,
 3.1832, 4.3051, 4.3127
 Tanner, N. P. 2.857
 Tarler, D. 4.3108
 Tarn, W. 2.1455
 Tatum, W. B. 1.33, 2.991, 2.1751,
 3.2517, 3.2543, 4.3155, 4.3157, 4.3161,
 4.3168, 4.3170
 Taussig, H. 2.1106
 Taylor, A. 4.3362
 Taylor, D. K. G. 3.2097
 Taylor, J. 1.413, 4.3234
 Taylor, J. E. 1.150, 2.1751, 2.1759,
 2.1762, 2.1766, 2.1767, 2.1781, 3.2812,
 3.2828, 4.3321
 Taylor, J. J. 2.1520
 Taylor, M. C. 2.1395
 Taylor, R. O. P. 1.371, 1.394, 1.429
 Taylor, V. 1.35, 1.326, 1.327, 1.651,
 1.652, 1.656–658, 1.663, 1.699,
 2.1381, 2.1382, 2.1409, 3.1828,
 3.1845, 3.1858, 3.2341, 3.2384,
 3.2810, 3.2872, 4.3131, 4.3271,
 4.3276, 4.3306, 4.3328
 Taylor, W. 1.746
 Tcherikover, V. 1.394, 2.1452, 2.1455,
 2.1458, 2.1639, 2.1643, 2.1739, 2.1808,
 3.2460, 4.3419
 Telford, W. R. 2.870, 2.888, 2.1060,
 2.1397, 2.1425, 2.1443, 3.1822, 3.2196,
 3.2517, 3.2519, 4.3158, 4.3160
 Temkin, O. 4.3070
 Tessaro, T. 4.2996, 4.3017
 Teugels, L. 1.133
 Thackeray, H. St. J. 1.373, 2.1446,
 2.1535, 2.1732, 2.1668, 3.2688,
 4.3001
 Thangaraj, M. T. 1.276, 1.277
 Thatcher, T. 1.826, 2.1438, 2.1471
 Theisohn, J. 2.1552, 1555
 Theissen, G. 1.7, 1.8, 1.33, 1.37, 1.39,
 1.83, 1.94, 1.95, 1.100, 1.109, 1.127,
 1.270, 1.244, 1.246, 1.338, 1.352,
 1.405, 1.407, 1.424, 1.433, 1.450,
 1.477, 1.487, 1.494, 1.497–499, 1.506,
 1.518, 1.531, 1.534, 1.543, 1.546,
 1.549, 1.554, 1.560, 1.575, 1.583,
 1.605, 1.607, 1.620, 1.627–629, 1.678,
 1.682, 1.686, 1.688, 1.697, 1.699,
 1.708, 1.709, 1.712, 1.713, 1.715,
 1.717, 1.735, 1.741, 1.746, 1.757,
 1.773, 1.851, 1.844, 1.849, 2.872,

- 2.883, 2.888, 2.890, 2.891, 2.899,
 2.900, 2.904, 2.905, 2.909, 2.915,
 2.935, 2.1032, 2.1044, 2.1064, 2.1106,
 2.1116, 2.1117, 2.1123, 2.1131, 2.1138,
 2.1173, 2.1175, 2.1177, 2.1190, 2.1191,
 2.1228, 2.1252, 2.1253, 2.1256, 2.1293,
 2.1294, 2.1397, 2.1406, 2.1425, 2.1426,
 2.1428, 2.1433, 2.1465, 2.1473, 2.1755,
 2.1757, 2.1766, 2.1770, 2.1773, 2.1782,
 2.1783, 2.1787, 3.1842, 3.1934, 3.1935,
 3.1965, 3.1977, 3.1981, 3.1984, 3.1988,
 3.1993, 3.1994, 3.2000, 3.2170, 3.2187,
 3.2198, 3.2207, 3.2209, 3.2240, 3.2291,
 3.2293, 3.2300, 3.2399, 3.2400, 3.2473,
 3.2474, 3.2475, 3.2476, 3.2481, 3.2484,
 3.2485, 3.2486, 3.2491, 3.2492, 3.2495,
 3.2496, 3.2498, 3.2499, 3.2501, 3.2502,
 3.2503, 3.2504, 3.2505, 3.2507, 3.2509,
 3.2510, 3.2518, 3.2533, 3.2601, 3.2603,
 3.2612, 3.2613, 3.2614, 3.2616, 3.2618,
 3.2621, 3.2622, 3.2631, 3.2632, 3.2713,
 3.2728, 3.2734, 3.2747, 3.2750, 3.2752,
 3.2756, 3.2763, 3.2764, 3.2788, 3.2799,
 3.2878, 3.2884, 3.2886, 3.2891, 3.2892,
 3.2893, 3.2894, 3.2904, 4.2924, 4.2925,
 4.2947, 4.2953, 4.2961, 4.2964, 4.2965,
 4.3074, 4.3077, 4.3079, 4.3179, 4.3200,
 4.3281, 4.3284, 4.3288, 4.3289, 4.3291,
 4.3374, 4.3383, 4.3384, 4.3406, 4.3414
 Theissing, J. 1.504
 Thelen, D. 1.816, 1.837
 Theobald, M. 1.364, 1.696, 2.1069
 Thiele, E. R. 3.2330
 Thiering, B. 1.796
 Thiselton, A. C. 2.947, 2.948, 2.1454,
 3.2386, 3.2419
 Thissen, W. 4.3305
 Thomas, J. C. 2.884, 2.1750, 2.1760,
 2.1761, 2.1800
 Thomas, R. 4.2944
 Thompson, M. B. 1.342, 1.430, 1.438,
 3.1944, 3.2045, 3.2051, 4.3450, 4.3460
 Thompson, M. M. 1.xi, 3.2024, 3.2580,
 3.2584, 3.2585, 3.2587
 Thompson, W. 2.1378
 Thompson, W. G. 3.1884
 Thorley, J. 3.2316
 Thornton, C. J. 1.441
 Thrall, M. 3.2420, 3.2425
 Thyen, H. 2.1759, 2.1770, 4.3145
 Tiede, D. L. 3.2526, 3.2864, 4.3339
 Tiedman, T. 3.2204
 Tigchelaar, E. J. C. 2.1250, 2.1594,
 4.3325, 4.3340
 Tillich, P. 1.93, 1.300, 2.989, 2.1417
 Tilly, M. 2.1764, 2.1774–1776, 2.1782
 Timpe, D. 2.1787, 2.1788
 Tindal, M. 1.92
 Tiwald, M. 2.1473
 Tobin, T. H. 2.1203
 Tödt, H. E. 1.201, 3.2479
 Toher, M. 2.1803
 Tolbert, M. A. 1.524, 1.785, 3.1832,
 3.2558
 Tolstoy, L. 2.930
 Tombs, D. 2.855
 Tompkins, J. P. 1.788
 Tomson, P. J. 3.2753, 3.2761, 3.2765
 Tonkin, E. 1.838
 Torrey, C. C. 1.365, 2.1349, 3.2343
 Totti, M. 4.3078
 Tournay, R. 4.3314
 Tov, E. 2.1245, 2.1246, 2.1318
 Tracy, D. 2.1395
 Tränkle, H. 2.1795
 Trautmann, M. 2.884, 3.2645, 3.2646,
 3.2654, 3.2664, 3.2666, 3.2667, 4.2927,
 4.2938
 Travers, P. 4.3168
 Travis, S. 1.671
 Treddici, K. D. 1.458
 Trever, J. C. 4.3315
 Triandis, H. 1.757
 Trilling, W. 1.36
 Trites, A. A. 2.1438
 Trocmé, É. 1.36, 3.1845, 3.2385,
 3.2694, 4.3273, 4.3274, 4.3279, 4.3280,
 4.3281, 4.3282, 4.3316
 Troeltsch, E. 1.339, 1.536, 1.682,
 1.845, 3.2187, 2.985, 2.1424, 3.2525,
 4.3163, 4.3165
 Tromp, J. 3.2084
 Tronier, H. 2.1476
 Trotter, F. T. 1.631
 Trumbower, J. A. 2.1777–1779, 3.1966
 Trunk, D. 3.2533, 4.2921, 4.2925,
 4.2933, 4.2936, 4.3082
 Tsafir, Y. 3.2235
 Tsumura, D. T. 2.1599
 Tucker, G. M. 1.651
 Tuckett, C. M. 1.60, 1.133, 1.253,
 1.254, 1.337, 1.397, 1.671, 2.873,
 2.904, 2.953, 2.1023, 2.1036, 2.1049,
 2.1093, 2.1106, 2.1123, 2.1175, 2.1206,
 2.1237, 2.1284, 2.1397, 2.1765, 3.1854,
 3.1856, 3.1860, 3.1866, 3.1867, 3.1868,
 3.1873, 3.1940, 3.1945, 3.1946, 3.1946,
 3.1976, 3.1977, 3.1979, 3.1980, 3.1981,

- 3.1984, 3.1992, 3.1994, 3.2047, 3.2127,
 3.2193, 3.2199, 3.2616, 3.2691, 4.2912,
 4.2941, 4.3261, 4.3264, 4.3265, 4.3266,
 4.3294, 4.3449
 Tuckman, B. W. 1.770
 Tuilier, A. 1.176, 3.2127
 Tully, M. 2.1010
 Turan, K. 4.3168
 Turner, C. H. 3.2351
 Turner, H. E. W. 1.35, 3.2546, 3.2548
 Turner, J. D. 1.455
 Turner, J. H. 1.746
 Turner, M. 1.432, 1.621, 1.644, 2.874,
 2.885, 2.1192, 2.1232, 2.1438
 Turner, N. 2.1344, 2.1739, 3.2322,
 4.3428
 Turner, P. R. 1.746
 Turner, S. 3.2786
 Tversky, A. 1.18
 Twelftree, G. H. 1.626, 2.876, 2.884,
 2.1071, 2.1207, 2.1228, 2.1229, 2.1235,
 3.2168, 3.2169, 3.2363, 3.2517, 3.2518,
 3.2519, 3.2520, 3.2521, 3.2522, 3.2523,
 3.2524, 3.2528, 3.2529, 3.2530, 3.2531,
 3.2532, 3.2533, 3.2534, 3.2534, 3.2538,
 3.2539, 3.2541, 3.2542, 3.2624, 3.2864,
 3.2865, 3.2870, 3.2872, 4.2921, 4.2927,
 4.2934, 4.3060, 4.3127, 4.3130, 4.3131,
 4.3134, 4.3179, 4.3180, 4.3200
 Tylloch, W. 2.1520
 Tyson, J. B. 1.644, 2.1320, 2.1438
 Tzaferis, V. 3.2390

 Übelacker, W. 2.1436
 Udoh, F. E. 2.1284
 Uelinger, C. 3.2215
 Uhlenbrock, J. P. 4.2989
 Uiginn, R. 2.1816
 Ulmer, 4.3144, 4.3148
 Ulrich, E. 1.221, 2.1237, 2.1254,
 2.1562, 2.1689
 Ulrichsen, J. H. 3.2637
 Urbach, E. E. 4.3140, 4.3144
 Urman, D. 1.145, 2.1723, 2.1725,
 3.2812
 Uro, R. 1.60, 1.266, 2.1765, 2.1769,
 3.1973, 3.1979, 4.2940

 Vaage, L. E. 1.37, 1.247, 1.289,
 2.1400, 4.3052
 Vaganay, L. 4.3307
 Vago, R. M. 3.2456
 Vaillant, A. 2.1525
 Valantasis, R. 4.3025, 4.3033, 4.3036

 Valla, L. 1.478
 Valsiner, J. 1.751
 van Aarde, A. 1.746, 3.2789, 3.2832
 van Amersfoort, J. 3.2143
 van Belle, G. 1.133, 1.254, 3.1954, 3.2027
 van Bruggen, J. 3.2316, 3.2318, 3.2371 van Cangh, J.-M. 2.1281
 van Goudoever, J. 3.2346 van Henten, J. W. 2.1241, 3.2429 van Iersel, B. M. F. 1.633, 3.1832,
 3.1841, 3.1842, 3.1843
 van Segbroeck, F. 1.133, 1.254, 2.1260, 3.1842
 van Selms, A. 4.3317
 van Thiel, P. 2.963
 van Tilborg, S. 2.1615, 3.2011, 3.2417
 van Unnik, W. C. 1.633, 3.2101
 van Voorst, R. E. 1.619, 2.860, 3.2149,
 3.2151, 3.2152, 3.2159, 3.2162, 3.2165,
 3.2168, 3.2172, 3.2183, 3.2204 van Zijl, J. B. 3.2820
 van de Sandt, H. 3.2128
 van den Oudenrijn, M.-A. 2.1816
 van der Horst, P. W. 1.133, 1.393,
 2.1727, 2.1728, 2.1809, 4.3114, 4.3115,
 4.3267
 van der Kooij, A. 4.3316 van der Loos, H. 3.2542, 3.2546 van der Vliet, J. 3.2083
 van der Watt, J. 4.3151
 van der Woude, A. S. 1.633, 3.2282
 Vandecasteele-Vanneuville, F. 1.139
 VanderKam, B. 2.1278
 VanderKam, J. C. 2.1255, 2.1282,
 2.1283, 2.1285, 2.1453, 2.1455, 2.1553,
 2.1554, 2.1596, 3.2686
 Vanhoozer, K. 2.947, 2.948, 2.1395
 Vanhoye, A. 1.342
 Vann, R. T. 2.1388
 Vansina, J. 1.194, 2.1466, 3.1838,
 3.1839
 Vardaman, J. 3.2316, 3.2326, 3.2351,
 3.2364, 3.2372
 Varmichael, C. 2.1715
 Venturini, K. H. 2.1414
 Verdin, H. 2.1793
 Verheyden, J. 1.133, 1.254, 1.447,
 4.2911
 Vermes, G. 1.37, 1.94, 1.123, 1.126,
 1.129, 1.244, 1.247, 1.287, 1.414,
 1.428, 1.453, 2.868, 2.875, 2.924,
 2.990, 2.1057, 2.1058, 2.1067, 2.1077,
 2.1121, 2.1139, 2.1140, 2.1142, 2.1149,

- 2.1158, 2.1167, 2.1179, 2.1187, 2.1190,
 2.1197, 2.1213, 2.1248, 2.1285, 2.1352,
 2.1358, 2.1391, 2.1495, 2.1519, 2.1537,
 2.1547, 2.1566, 2.1615, 2.1625, 2.1627,
 2.1687, 2.1718, 2.1734, 3.2168, 3.2170,
 3.2204, 3.2250, 3.2257, 3.2280, 3.2286,
 3.2287, 3.2483, 3.2484, 3.2521, 3.2527,
 3.2528, 3.2529, 3.2539, 3.2609, 3.2610,
 3.2611, 3.2626, 3.2769, 4.3059, 4.3060,
 4.3067, 4.3090, 4.3114, 4.3124, 4.3186,
 4.3187, 4.3413, 4.3414, 4.3417, 4.3419,
 4.3426, 4.3427, 4.3430, 4.3432
 Vernant, J. P. 1.522
 Verniere, J. 4.3168
 Verseput, D. J. 3.2682, 3.2687, 3.2688,
 3.2689, 3.2707
 Veyne, P. 3.2395
 Via, D.O. 1.781
 Vielhauer, P. 1.349, 2.1565, 2.1567,
 2.1570, 2.1571, 2.1576, 2.1814–1816,
 3.1972, 3.1974, 3.1975, 3.1986, 3.2477,
 3.2485, 3.2789, 3.2884, 3.2886
 Villarreal, P. 4.3168
 Vincent, J. J. 1.421
 Vines, M. E. 1.65
 Vinzent, M. 3.2083
 Virkler, H. A. 2.1449
 Viviano, B. T. 1.260, 1.414
 Vogel, M. 2.1809
 Vogt, E. 2.1790
 Vögtle, A. 1.36, 1.201, 3.2476, 3.2477,
 3.2479
 Voitila, A. 2.1285
 Volkmar, G. 2.1025, 2.1656
 Vollenweider, S. 3.2145, 4.3073
 von Albrecht, M. 2.1802, 2.1805, 2.1806
 von Bendemann, R. 3.1908
 von Campenhausen, H. 3.2125 von Destinon, J. 2.1658
 von Dobbeler, S. 2.1748, 2.1767, 2.1770
 von Haehling, R. 2.1793
 von Harnack, A. 1.185, 1.449, 2.864,
 2.888, 2.1027, 2.1170, 2.1201, 2.1214,
 3.1857, 3.1858, 3.1861, 3.2133, 3.2134,
 3.2806, 3.2824, 3.2862
 von Lips, H. 2.1048, 3.1940, 3.2081 von Martitz, P. W. 3.2526
 von Rad, G. 2.1570, 3.2563, 3.2859, 3.2903
 von Ranke, L. 2.1382, 3.2185, 3.2292
 von Soden, H. 2.1026
 von Wahlde, U. C. 2.857
 Vos, J. S. 3.2142
 Vos, L. A. 3.1971
 Voss, I. 3.2106
 Votaw, C. W. 1.397
 Wachob, W. H. 2.1484, 3.1968
 Wacholder, B. Z. 2.1800
 Wachsmann, S. 1.171
 Waddington, W. G. 3.2352, 3.2353
 Waegeman, M. 4.3068, 4.3070
 Wagner-Pacifici, R. 1.819, 1.837
 Wagner, F. 2.1421
 Wahlen, C. 2.1250, 3.2714
 Waibel, M. 4.3341
 Walbank, F. W. 2.1455
 Walch, J. 1.482
 Walck, L. W. 2.1556
 Walker, C. B. F. 3.2325
 Walker, N. 3.2344
 Walker, P. 3.2795
 Walker, W. O. 1.309, 1.311, 1.317,
 1.322–324, 1.326, 1.330, 1.363, 1.433,
 1.696, 1.698, 1.707, 2.1443
 Wall, R. W. 2.1195
 Wallace, R. C. 3.2518
 Walsh, R. 2.1402, 4.3158, 4.3176
 Walter, N. 1.341, 1.343, 1.349, 3.1940,
 3.2047, 4.3271, 4.3438
 Walter, U. 2.1791
 Walters, J. C. 2.1202
 Walz, R. 4.3245
 Wanke, J. 4.2921
 Wansbrough, H. 1.117, 1.176, 1.406,
 1.621, 1.673, 2.1466, 2.1475, 2.1480,
 4.2928
 Ward, G. 2.1395
 Ware, K. 2.1010
 Warner, R. 4.3026
 Warns, R. 3.2132
 Wassen, C. 2.1285
 Watson, A. 4.3149
 Watson, F. 2.947, 2.949, 2.959,
 2.1070, 2.1401
 Watt, J. M. 1.724
 Watts, R. E. 1.639
 Wazike, A. N. 2.976
 Weaver, W. P. 1.xv, 1.32, 1.92, 1.94,
 1.102, 1.109, 1.351, 1.697, 2.868,
 2.988, 2.1000, 2.1003, 2.1005, 2.1008,
 2.1009, 2.1443
 Webb, R. L. 2.876, 2.1254, 2.1285,
 2.1402, 2.1416, 2.1748, 2.1751,

- 2.1752, 2.1758, 2.1759, 2.1761-1767,
 2.1769-1771, 2.1774, 2.1780, 2.1782,
 2.1783, 3.2747, 4.3172, 4.3174
 Wechsler, E. 1.408
 Wedderburn, A. J. M. 1.341, 2.1189,
 2.1200, 2.1201, 2.1213, 3.1929, 3.1947,
 3.2647, 3.2651, 3.2653, 3.2655, 3.2663,
 3.2668, 3.2675, 3.2707
 Weder, H. 3.1937, 3.2473, 3.2496,
 3.2499, 3.2500, 3.2503, 3.2510, 3.2571,
 4.3292, 4.3296
 Weeden, T. J. 3.1830, 3.1838, 3.1840,
 3.1843
 Wegner, U. 3.2761
 Weill, R. 4.3107
 Weimar, K. 2.1386
 Weiner, E. S. C. 3.2555
 Weinfeld, M. 2.1781, 3.2218, 3.2688
 Weingart, P. 1.530
 Weinreich, O. 3.2525, 4.3065
 Weiser, A. 3.1908, 3.1915, 3.2739
 Weiß, B. 4.3336
 Weiss, J. 2.861, 2.996, 2.1021, 2.1026,
 2.1040, 2.1197, 2.1198, 2.1200, 2.1569,
 3.2525, 3.2728, 3.2835, 3.2903
 Weiss, W. 4.3306
 Weiss, Z. 1.170
 Weissengruber, F. 3.2087, 3.2088
 Weissenrieder, A. 1.441
 Weitling, W. 2.1001, 2.1003, 2.1004
 Welch, J. W. 3.2533, 3.2537
 Weldon, M. S. 1.838
 Welles, C. B. 3.2097
 Wellesley, K. 3.2156
 Wellhausen, J. 1.365, 1.449, 2.1026,
 2.1061, 2.1183, 2.1348, 4.3307, 4.3309,
 4.3310
 Wellmann, M. 4.3068
 Welsch, W. 2.1381
 Wendland, J. 3.2863
 Wendland, P. 2.1799, 2.1801
 Wendling, E. 3.2076, 4.3280, 4.3281
 Wendt, H. H. 3.1954
 Wenell, K. 3.2788, 3.2789, 3.2794
 Wenger, E. 4.3164
 Wengst, K. 1.348
 Wenham, D. 1.176, 1.253, 1.310,
 1.342, 1.364, 1.430, 1.676, 1.687,
 1.696, 1.698, 1.302, 2.883, 2.1134,
 2.1443, 3.1937, 3.1940, 3.2044, 3.2051,
 3.2056, 3.2191, 3.2342, 3.2546, 4.3321
 Wenham, G. J. 2.1599
 Werblowsky, Z. 2.1010
 Weren, W. J. C. 2.1152
 Werlitz, J. 3.2082
 Wernle, P. 1.429, 2.1026, 3.1826
 Werrett, I. C. 2.1262
 Wessel, L.P. 1.550
 Westcott, B. F. 3.1826, 3.2338
 Westerholm, S. 2.1141, 3.2600, 3.2601,
 3.2611, 3.2630, 3.2710, 3.2719, 3.2727,
 3.2731
 Westermann, C. 1.422, 4.3315
 Westhoff, J. 4.3168
 Wettstein, J. J. 2.1445, 3.1966
 Wevers, J. W. 4.3041
 Whibley, L. 1.699
 White, H. 1.41, 2.921, 2.924, 2.1012,
 2.1378, 2.1388
 White, J. 4.3324
 White, L. J. 1.297
 White, P. 2.1642
 Whitley, R. 1.530
 Whybray, R. N. 2.1125
 Wickham, C. 1.231, 1.815, 1.817,
 1.818, 1.835
 Wiebe, R. A. 2.876
 Wiedemann, T. 1.768
 Wiefel, W. 3.2495, 3.2615, 4.3299,
 4.3300
 Wienert, F. D. 3.1911
 Wieseler, K. 3.2338, 4.3416, 4.3427
 Wiesenberg, E. J. 3.2331
 Wilckens, U. 1.446, 3.2647, 3.2652,
 3.2672, 3.2759, 3.2770, 4.3322, 4.3324,
 4.3445
 Wilcox, M. 1.366, 1.723, 2.1285,
 2.1353, 2.1364, 3.2387
 Wilde, O. 3.2825
 Wilder, A. N. 1.305, 1.777, 1.780,
 4.3032
 Wiles, M. 2.857
 Wiley, T. 1.527
 Wilfred, F. 2.961
 Wilken, R. L. 1.466, 1.642, 3.2165,
 3.2217, 3.2779, 3.2780, 3.2785, 4.3120
 Wilken, R. W. 2.1201
 Wilkes, J. 2.1802
 Wilkins, L. L. 2.856
 Wilkins, M. J. 1.648
 Willaschek, M. 2.1388
 Willet, M. 4.3176
 Williams, B. 2.921
 Williams, F. E. 3.2101, 3.2102, 3.2103,
 3.2105
 Williams, J. F. 1.785, 4.2954
 Williams, J. T. 3.2682
 Williams, M. H. 2.1461

- Williams, R. 2.857, 2.973
 Williams, R. K. 4.3183
 Williams, R. M. 1.746
 Williamson, G. A. 2.1654, 1659, 1684
 Williamson, H. G. M. 1.133
 Willitts, J. 2.915, 1401
 Wilson, A. N. 1.796
 Wilson, B. 1.113
 Wilson, B. R. 3.2538
 Wilson, N. G. 2.1650
 Wilson, R. McL. 1.455, 3.2062, 4.3025, 4.3034, 4.3344
 Wilson, S. G. 2.1188, 3.1936, 3.2043, 3.2056
 Wimmer, J. F. 4.3327
 Wind, R. 4.3050
 Windelband, W. 1.583
 Windschuttle, K. 2.1379
 Wink, W. 2.1750, 2.1752, 2.1758, 2.1782
 Winkelmann, F. 2.1793, 2.1795–1797
 Winnige, M. 4.3185
 Winquist, C. E. 2.1381, 2.1382, 2.1409
 Winter, B. 1.84, 1.100, 1.268, 1.270, 1.494, 1.495, 1.497, 1.499, 1.506, 1.699, 1.851
 Winter, B. W. 3.2705
 Winter, D. 1.7, 1.8, 1.83, 1.94, 1.246, 1.405, 1.477, 1.534, 1.549, 1.554, 1.620, 1.678, 1.697, 1.844, 2.872, 2.905, 2.935, 2.1032, 2.1064, 2.1116, 2.1117, 2.1252, 2.1253, 2.1138, 2.1397, 2.1425, 2.1428, 2.1433, 2.1465, 2.1755, 3.1934, 3.1935, 3.1993, 3.1994, 3.2209, 3.2603, 3.2622, 3.2631, 3.2734
 Winter, P. 2.1058, 2.1447, 2.1613, 3.2158, 3.2168, 3.2351
 Winterhalter, R. 4.3036, 4.3037
 Wirsching, J. 1.300
 Wischmeyer, O. 2.1798, 2.1814
 Wischmeyer, W. 2.1791
 Wise, M. O. 1.453, 2.1237, 3.2261, 3.2530
 Wiseman, T. P. 2.1642, 2.1797, 2.1796
 Wiseman, W. J. 1.178
 Wisse, F. 3.2117
 Witherington, B. 1.36, 1.37, 1.113, 1.244, 1.245, 1.253, 1.256, 1.257, 1.264, 1.266, 1.284, 1.297, 1.363, 1.405, 1.423, 1.690, 2.870, 2.880, 2.1050, 2.1065, 2.1106, 2.1121, 2.1199, 2.1356, 2.1397, 2.1442, 2.1718, 2.1812, 3.1845, 3.1847, 3.1848, 3.1849, 3.2517, 3.2698, 3.2885, 4.3266, 4.3274, 4.3275, 4.3287, 4.3317
 Wittgenstein, L. 2.1111
 Wobbermin, G. 1.303
 Wolf, E. 2.1021
 Wolf, F. A. 1.699
 Wolff, C. 1.425, 3.1937, 3.2049, 4.3444, 4.3448
 Wolff, H. W. 3.2737
 Wolfson, E. R. 1.147
 Wolter, M. 1.345, 1.351, 2.1765, 2.1766, 2.1767, 2.1769, 2.1783, 2.1813, 4.2979, 4.3414
 Wong, E. K. C. 1.342, 3.2617
 Wong, S. H.-F. 3.2637
 Wood, H. G. 1.701
 Woodman, A. J. 2.1645
 Woods, E. J. 1.647, 2.884
 Wrede, W. 1.32, 1.185, 1.297, 1.779, 1.810, 2.862, 2.1025, 2.1027, 2.1029, 2.1036, 2.1039, 2.1041, 2.1056, 2.1170, 2.1197, 3.1826, 3.1830, 3.1858, 3.1939, 3.2002, 3.2007, 3.2048, 3.2049
 Wrege, H. T. 4.3293, 4.3295, 4.3297
 Wright, A. G. 3.2368, 4.3285, 4.3286, 4.3286, 4.3287, 4.3288, 4.3290
 Wright, C. J. 1.35
 Wright, D. P. 3.2715, 3.2716, 3.2719, 3.2726, 3.2824
 Wright, M. R. 4.3064
 Wright, N. T. 1.39, 1.94, 1.123, 1.158, 1.160, 1.161, 1.202, 1.243, 1.251, 1.257, 1.264, 1.272, 1.405, 1.408, 1.435, 1.441, 1.451, 1.452, 1.500, 1.518, 1.641, 1.678, 1.683, 1.685, 1.690, 1.692, 1.697, 1.708, 1.709, 1.716, 1.735, 1.792, 1.795–798, 1.800, 2.870, 2.880, 2.889, 2.890, 2.905, 2.907, 2.908, 2.911, 2.915, 2.924, 2.925, 2.933, 2.940, 2.946, 2.948, 2.988, 2.1010, 2.1017, 2.1018, 2.1127, 2.1028, 2.1068, 2.1069, 2.1071, 2.1073, 2.1138, 2.1147, 2.1159, 2.1163, 2.1164, 2.1177, 2.1191, 2.1197, 2.1198, 2.1200, 2.1207, 2.1212, 2.1396, 2.1399, 2.1406, 2.1418, 2.1419, 2.1425, 2.1441, 2.1442, 2.1571, 2.1602, 2.1627, 3.1837, 3.1838, 3.1847, 3.1848, 3.2000, 3.2083, 3.2184, 3.2186, 3.2187, 3.2208, 3.2336, 3.2409, 3.2418, 3.2425, 3.2426, 3.2429, 3.2430, 3.2517, 3.2518, 3.2539, 3.2540, 3.2576, 3.2647, 3.2661, 3.2689, 3.2712, 3.2747, 3.2770, 3.2790, 3.2791, 3.2813, 3.2865,

- 3.2882, 3.2884, 3.2888, 3.2889, 3.2894,
 3.2895, 3.2898, 3.2900, 3.2902, 3.2903,
 3.2904, 4.3180
 Wright, R. B. 3.2279
 Wurst, G. 3.1990, 3.2112
 Würthwein, E. 3.2685
 Wyschogrod, E. 2.1395

 Yadin, Y. 1.413, 4.2992, 4.3117
 Yamasaki, G. 2.1748
 Yamauchi, E. M. 2.883, 3.2316, 3.2324,
 3.2364, 3.2372, 3.2378, 3.2534
 Yardeni, A. 2.1731, 3.2604
 Yieh, J. Y.-H. 2.1476
 Yoder, J. H. 1.646
 Yoder, P. 3.2682
 Yoke, H. P. 3.2326
 Young, B. H. 1.417, 2.962, 2.1223,
 2.1336–1338, 2.1707, 2.1719, 4.3312
 Young, R. 2.1377

 Zacharias, D. 4.3325
 Zahn, T. 1.445, 2.1817, 3.2093, 3.2343
 Zahrnt, H. 1.847
 Zangenberg, J. 4.3000
 Zanker, P. 3.2229
 Zeitlin, S. 2.1225, 3.2347

 Zeller, D. 1.503, 1.567, 3.2641, 3.2645,
 3.2646, 3.2647, 3.2653, 3.2654, 3.2655,
 3.2658, 3.2659, 3.2669, 4.2955, 4.3261
 Zenger, E. 4.3314
 Zerubavel, E. 2.1471
 Zerubavel, Y. 1.815, 1.818
 Zerwick, M. 3.1911, 3.2322, 3.2727,
 4.3316
 Zetterholm, M. 2.1189
 Zias, J. 1.122, 2.1282, 3.2390
 Zick-Nissen, J. 4.2978
 Ziesler, J. A. 4.3321
 Zimmer, G. 4.2989
 Zimmerli, W. 4.3275
 Zimmerman, R. 3.1974, 4.3315, 4.3323
 Zimmermann, A. F. 1.415, 2.1484,
 3.2192
 Zimmermann, F. 2.1353
 Zimmermann, J. 2.1024, 2.1251,
 3.2509, 4.3325, 4.3326
 Zöckler, T. 1.250, 3.1979, 3.1981
 Zubibe, F. T. 3.2391
 Zumpt, A. W. 4.3426
 Zumstein, J. 3.1963, 4.2956
 Zwick, R. 4.3158, 4.3168, 4.3176
 Zwiep, A. W. 3.2444