5 Helpful Questions to Ask When Studying the Bible:

1. What does the text say?

- Make careful observations of the text
- Notice details

2. What does the text mean?

- Use the grammatical-historical method
- Identify the genre of the writing
- Understand the historical, cultural, and literary background
- Unpack the passage's syntax
- Outline the passage
- Understand what the words mean in context
- Pay attention to the context
- Locate the text in redemptive history

- Understand the text in light of the whole Bible
- Discern how the passage points us to Christ (eg. direct reference, type, predictive, preparatory, reflective—God's nature/human nature, resultant)
- Use tools: study Bibles, commentaries, dictionaries/lexicons, concordances, etc.

3. What concerns caused the text to be written?

- Grasp the main message of a biblical passage

4. What do I share in common with the original audience or human author of the text?

- Understand ourselves in light of Scripture
- Distill the timeless principles from the text
- Understand what the text teaches about God's character, purposes, and works, mankind, Jesus Christ, our response to Christ, our obedience, the church, the world, etc.

5. How should I now respond to the truths of the text?

- What, specifically, does God require of me?
- Where (i.e. in what specific situations) do I need to apply the truths of the text?
- How does the text encourage and motivate me to obey God?
- How does God enable me to respond to the truths of the text?
- How can I spur others on to respond to the truths of the text?
