You are responsible for acting in the interest of your own safety, for that of your fellow employees, and for protecting the environment. You are expected to understand and follow safe operating and waste disposal procedures to report any observed unsafe conditions to your supervisor or other designated person. It is also important that you promptly notify your supervisor of any job related accident, injury or illness. These rules and procedures have been developed to help prevent harm to you and others, as well as to avoid damage to machinery, buildings, and the environment. Implementation of these rules and procedures is everyone's responsibility and is a condition of employment.

Your questions and suggestions for continually improving the safety of company operations as well as protecting the environment are important and should be made to your manager.
