Zephyrhills, Florida – There's no way to sugarcoat it, bullying and dangerous contact with strangers has become a fierce epidemic for modern young children and turns the lives of millions into a misery. Most victims find it hard to speak out and, acutely aware of young minds and their thirst for stories, one U.S. couple has found a novel way to reach out to them and their peers.

'What Would JeeMin Do' is the new series brought to market by Master martial arts instructors, Lori and Matthew Brown. The series' eight current volumes have a bold and clear-cut goal: to teach children what bullying and stranger danger really is, how it can plight their lives and what they can do to help themselves and friends who may be suffering.

'Stranger Near the Neighborhood' - JeeMin and her friends walk to school not aware they are being watched and followed by a stranger, later to be approached by the stranger. JeeMin shares with her friends what her parents had taught her about strangers.

"Our primary goal was to educate and empower those who have become victims of bullying or strangers," explain the authors. "Children find it very hard to reach out to anyone about such emotive subjects, so we wanted to create a character through which they could find a friend and draw comfort. Equally, the books are a vital tool for parents, schools and community groups to use for the prevention of bullying and other forms of abuse."

Continuing, "You'll notice that the situations JeeMin gets into are very eclectic and varied, and that's a deliberate attempt to show that bullying and strangers are two harrowing realities that know no boundaries – be it in school, at home or even just while out walking the streets. We need children to be aware of the constant need for vigilance.

The Browns' work has scored rave reviews. For example, Richard comments, "Should be in every school. Can't wait for other books in the series."

With bullying and other forms of danger on the rise, interested parents are urged to secure their copies without delay.
