Play Therapy: Puppetry Arts

Come learn the art of using puppets to elicit the untold and sometimes unspoken story that frequently accompanies clients presenting with abuse, trauma, and domestic violence. Puppetry arts allow the clinician an effective intervention technique to assist the client with telling the story while distancing from the accompanying trauma. This training is designed to include an academic component, but also driven by an informative, experiential, interactive training process that includes hands on activities and research. Learn how to help you clients tell their own unique story in a way that can be heard and processed by the use of puppetry arts. This approach can be used with a variety of comorbid, co-occurring disorders: depression, anxiety, adult victims of childhood sexual abuse, anger/rage, family-relational conflicts, etc. This training is a great addition to your repertoire for family therapy groups. Puppetry arts are an excellent way to engage all family members while processing the hidden stories.
