

Biography

P.L. Hogan enjoys spending his summers at his cabin in Ketchikan, Alaska. Nice long hikes afford him the opportunity to think and lay out his writing endeavors. When at his place in Salem, Oregon he spends his extra time in the vegetable garden preparing it for the next year. Allowing him the time to just wander off in thought about his many books ideas.

He spent several of his years holding meetings with a local group that studied philosophy, each week they would discuss its relevance in today's society. Ancient history is another subject that peaks his interest and the two went hand in hand.

Both of his current books draw on his extensive studying of the past as we know it. He just wants to make a few changes to it. The possibilities are endless.