

Infectious disease

Become an everyday occurrence in the work place the transmission of an infectious disease from material, other workers or those in the area. There are thousands of infectious diseases transmitted everyday in every type of work environment. Depending on the severity of the infection there are several steps that maybe taken protect workers. If the disease is deemed serious OSHA allows employees to send workers home until a doctors note has been provided clearing the worker

The worker back to work. For less serious infections OSHA requires that the won't be wrapped in a medically approved bandage to allow the worker to move freely without the spread of infection. Workers that have an infectious disease should take the following steps. Advisor site foreman we're superintendent of the issue in the steps you have taken to protect yourself And others from infectious spread. Keep the wound won't wrapped dry and clean and ensure you

Wash any in all areas That you have been working in throughout the day with an approved antibiotic wipe. ensure that you throw all wipes away Seal trash bag so that no one else is exposed. And ensure you communicate with your doctor about the best treatment plan for your infection in fall any advice they give you regarding workplace safety. Walsh contracting Corp. As an infectious disease policy in place that can be viewed at your convenience if needed.

SDS during an incident

Some common ways to catch infectious disease virus on the jobsite cannot wash your hands readily and often while working and after use of on-site porta potty, to allow open wounds

To get dirty, and By not wearing proper protective equipment. Wearing your PB such as gloves, mask and eye protection will help you protect against transmission

Of common workplace infection. Washing hands often with either soap and water or approved antibiotic hand sanitizer

WALSH Safety News

GOOD SAFETY HABITS

Spotter used when backing a machine up in a heavy traffic area.

Proper flagging vehicles used to move oversize equipment

Soap and water mixture used in milling machine

BAD SAFETY HABITS

Excavator cab left open when breaking concrete.

Chemical storage inappropriate on jobsite.

