TEMPER TANTRUMS

Temper Tantrums can range from whining and crying to screaming, kicking, hitting, and breath holding. They can be a common occurrence for both boys and girls between the ages of 1 to 3. Some children may experience tantrums regularly while other children will rarely have a tantrum.

Tantrums can be caused by a child's limited ability to express themselves through language skills. The child often becomes frustrated with the inability to say what they want, feel or need. As the child's ability to speak increases Her/his tantrums should decrease.

How to Avoid Tantrums:

1. Give plenty of positive attention.
2. Encourage your child to use their words.
3. Give toddlers the ability to make their own choices when possible. Would you like to wear the "blue or green shirt"?
4. Limit the child's access to items they can't have or touch. "Out of sight out of mind"
6. Don't push your luck. If your child is tired avoid running errands or visits. Sleep is important at this stage of life.
7. Keep activities to short time frames. A child's attention span is very short. Move the child to a new activity before they get frustrated or bored.

How to Cope With Tantrums

1. Ignore the tantrum when possible - You do not want your child to associate their tantrum with attention.
2. Stay calm or at least appear to
3. Acknowledge your child's feelings "I know you are frustrated you could not finish the puzzle"
4. Do not give in - No means NO

After The Tantrum

1. Praise your child for calming down
2. Never make fun or tease the child about their tantrum- Avoid the use of words such as "bad boy or girl"
3. Model good behavior, next time you are feeling frustrated say "Mommy is frustrated the tv is not working, so I am going to go read a book for a while and try the tv again later"
