Chaos Guitars prototype guitars complete.

R&D will be put in the hands of actual local musicians.

Fogelsville, P.A.: Chaos Guitars has completed work on the first four guitar prototypes that they will be putting on the market. They have decided to let local musicians be a big part of the research and development phase of the project. Chaos Guitars believes this will not only encourage pre-sales but help to provide a better product. Musicians are encouraged to “sign up to test” on their website and if chosen and agree to the damage terms the musician will be given a prototype for an agreed upon length of time for gigs and in return will provide their honest feedback and changes they would like to see Musicians are encouraged to sign up to test on their website and if chosen and agree to a few terms the musician will be given a prototype for an agreed upon length of time and/or gigs and in return will provide their honest feedback and changes they would like to see. When asked why not do the R&D in house the founder of Chaos Guitars, Dave Kite said: “Doing it in house seems silly to me, I already know what I want out of a guitar but I’m not the one buying it”. While it will be our own brand it will not be manufactured! Each one will still be hand built and therefore no two will be identical. After all, that is the true meaning of custom”.

The first line of prototypes has been labeled the E.L. Series for now but that may change before final release. They are only being offered in four standard colors.

- ❖ Blight Blue – Gloss Blue
- ❖ Reactor Green – Gloss Neon Yellow/Green
- ❖ VioleNt – Gloss Violet
- ❖ Bludgeoned Brown – Matte Dark Red/Brown

They will also have the option of Three completely different electronic packages to choose from. Release to the public is planned for mid-2019 but Chaos Guitars is already taking orders.
