

A native of Tallahassee, Oceo became impassioned with the desire to establish a non-profit geared toward human capital building. This idea stems from working closely with other non-profits who implement a service model to their clients.

Human capital building is about allowing each person an opportunity to re-create and re-write the script of their lives by allowing others to become “allies” and peer mentoring resources while they become more aware of their predicament and problems to necessitate change in their life.

Oceo achieved his Bachelor’s of Social Work at Florida A&M University and Master’s of Social Work at Florida State University.

Born into a family of 2-3 generations of poverty and working with various oppressed groups, Oceo is well familiar with the barriers and challenges oppressed populations encounter living to survive.
