Dear Louise

I have just spoken with Lindsey Caddy at Eversheds Sutherlands. I contacted the Mortgage enforcement unit, who rather disappointingly put me through to Lyndsey without any warning or notice of what they were doing?

Lyndsey on record, stated that you have refused our Promissory note as payment because "if it was acceptable everyone would be doing it".....absolutely bloody hilarious. Someone at the bank should at least tell Lyndsey that printing money out of thin air is the ingenious methodology that has kept the fractional fiat banking system in the air for the last 146 years.

During the taped telephone conversation Lyndsey sated that you have not accepted the payment as they believe that we got the information off an internet forum. Now why on earth would she think that? Have the bank or one of its contractors or partners being tracking our web activity an or emails. If they have they should also know that our information and documentation is 100% professional, legal and correct.

Lyndsey went on to confirm that the bank has not returned our Promissory notes because they don't have to. Lyndsey went on to say "they have to give a reason". Lyndsey Caddy is sadly being misinformed.

Further under the Data Protection ACT (DPA) 1998, the bank has failed to meets its obligations to provide details requested in our Subject access request, and disclose FULL details of documentation and communications linked to our alleged Mortgage and you unlawful and illegitimate claims against Charlotte and me.

Again we are not seeking to cause unnecessary difficulties for the bank but we will assert and protect our lawful rights by whatever means possible, so if now is the time to disclose the deal with Canada then just say the word and we will be make ourselves available.
