SPOTLIGHT ON HEARING LOSS AND DEMENTIA

Findings of a study at Johns Hopkins with the National Institute on Aging, show that brain shrinkage seems to be accelerated in people with hearing loss. Previous research from other studies had linked hearing loss with marked differences in brain structure compared to those with normal hearing, both in humans and animals. In particular, structures that process information from sound tended to be smaller in size in people and animals with impaired hearing. But shrinkage has also been noticed in those areas of the brain responsible for memory and sensory integration and have been shown to be involved in the early stages of mild cognitive impairment and Alzheimer's disease. Hearing loss also leads to social isolation. A loss of engagement and loneliness are risk factors for cognitive decline. Diagnosing and Treating hearing loss early, rather than ignoring it, is an easy way to slow down these negative changes.

Hearing tests should be a regular part of your overall health care. Call 845-395-0300 for more
