Be inspired

Tring Reservoirs supply water to the Grand Union Canal and its two arms to Wendover and Aylesbury. The clear water attracts lots of plants, fish and insects, and large numbers of breeding, wintering and migrating birds. It's a nature lover's paradise.

Five things to do at Tring Reservoirs

- Sit in a bird hide and see how many birds you can name in 5 minutes.
- In the summer watch swifts and common terns swooping over the water. In the evening spot pipistrelle bats hunting for insects.
- Explore using way-marked circular walks. Or cycle along the canal towpath.
- Watch the boats: each time they cross Tring Summit water flows away through the locks on each side. In the peak season around 4 million gallons are needed each day to top up the canal.
- Walk to Tringford Pumping Station built in 1818 and still pumping water into the canal.

“ The Canal is where I bagged my very first pet, Tommy Tadpole. And today it's where I teach my grandchildren about the simple wonders of nature. We must all look after our canals and rivers. If we don't they'll be gone. Forever. What a waste. ”

Carol, aged 56 (and still on the hunt for frogspawn).
