

Clinical Director Job Announcement

The Women's Therapy Center (WTC) is looking for a Clinical Director (CD) who is skilled at sustaining our mission to provide relational psychotherapy and integrate a social justice perspective into all aspects of our organization. WTC is both a training program and a clinic providing psychotherapy services. The CD is at the center of WTC, serving as clinical leader, mentor, and visionary for the training programs and the clinic.

The CD holds continuity of commitment to the relational process throughout the organization and oversees all clinical supervision and teaching provided by the volunteer faculty, working with the faculty to admit and train students, develop curriculum and clinical policy. The CD works in partnership with the Executive Director towards realizing the mission of the agency.

WTC is committed to excellent training in relational psychodynamic psychotherapy and to sustaining an environment that continually examines social location and the cultural forces that shape all aspects of life experiences. Our particular clinical focus is on the intersubjective space between therapist and client, holding themes of non-hierarchy, a radical understanding of transference and Countertransference and the cornerstone of addressing power, privilege and their impact on the therapeutic encounter.

WTC holds a standard of continuity of care for clients through developing and sustaining their therapeutic relationships during and beyond our program. Through a feminist lens, the CD models a relational stance as the primary training leader for staff therapists, and has a leadership role in creating effective communication across power and role differentials as well as engaging with and framing conflicts. This means fostering intersectional dialogue throughout the clinical process and addressing micro and macro aggressions interpersonally, intrapsychically and organizationally.

Background on the Women's Therapy Center:

Overview: WTC was founded in 1978 by two experienced psychotherapists who wanted to offer training to beginning therapists in a supportive environment where women were being trained by women. Their therapeutic orientation emphasized the clinical relationship and the impact of socio-cultural factors on behavior and psychological functioning, and their approach was based, essentially, on a feminist view of psychodynamic psychotherapy. Today, WTC has evolved to include a non-gender binary view of the theory and practice of psychodynamic, relational psychotherapy.

WTC presently has several programs:

- Two-Year Training Program - unpaid interns
 - The Two-Year Training Program is comprised of sixteen staff therapists, eight in the first year and eight in the second year. Therapists in the two-year program might still be in graduate school or registered as postgraduate interns.
- Advanced Training Program (ATP) - paid interns
 - The ATP program has eight staff therapists who have already had experience providing psychotherapy. They are generally registered as either LCSW or MFT interns, pre- or post-doctoral psychology students, or are licensed. The training focus in the ATP program is on work with couples and adolescents.
- Bridge Program - paid interns
 - The Bridge program has four to six staff therapists who have successfully completed a WTC program. They are generally advanced clinicians who are either licensed or in the testing cycle. The training focus in the Bridge program is on “bridging” to private practice or next phase of the work.

Staff therapists provide psychotherapy in WTC’s sliding scale clinic, which serves women, transgender people, adolescents, and couples. WTC has an excellent reputation in the community and a steady stream of referrals. It is primarily a volunteer organization with three paid administrative staff, twenty-eight therapists in training and over forty volunteer faculty members.
